On 26 April, a serious fight broke between the Kamajors and the SLA forces based at Mabaka (Imperi Chiefdom), which resulted in some SLA members being killed.[1233] Following this encounter, the SLA withdrew from Mabaka and went to their main headquarter at Mobimbi. Sometime in 1996, reports of actions carried out by "lawless" SLA forces reached the military headquarter in Freetown and those forces were removed from the mining site and brought by helicopter to Camp Charlie, an SLA base near Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili Chiefdom). Those forces who escaped this evacuation were believed to have gone to the Mokanji area (Banta Chiefdom, Moyamba District).

A few months after the 1996 general elections,[1234] a conflict arose between the SLA and Kamajors in Kpanda Kemo Chiefdom. The SLA forces fell in a Kamajor ambush at the village of Kebawana, where one of the SLA members was killed. In revenge, the SLA forces killed seven Kamajors at [1228] It was allegedly a lack of ammunition that prevented Kamajors from attacking the RUF stronghold in Mattru in 1995.

[1229] This rope, one foot long with small sticks at its edge, was used to tie people at the ankle by their backs. "FM" means "frequency modulation", because when somebody was tied with such a rope, he would talk and reveal a lot.
[1230] Those GS clerks fulfilled the same kind of tasks as the clerks appointed by the RUF.
[1231] This attack probably took place early 1996, before May.
[1232] This attack may have been carried out by Kamajors deployed in different chiefdoms.
[1233] This was however not the only conflict between Kamajors and the SLA in Imperi Chiefdom.
[1234] The exact date of this event could not be ascertained.

Kebawana and displayed their bodies on the Mattru-Bo highway. Two days later, the Kamajors regrouped and attacked the SLA forces. However, the SLA forces defeated them, killing 40 Kamajors and burying them in a mass grave in Mattru. The two groups continued to live as enemies for another month until an SLA officer came and settled the conflict.

Local authorities were among the people harassed by the Kamajors. In March 1996, the Paramount Chief of Sittia Chiefdom went into hiding, opposed to the Kamajors deployment in his chiefdom and their behaviour towards civilians. This did not go down well with the Kamajors who chased them, severely beating one of his relatives to know about his hiding place. The Kamajors eventually found him, seriously beat him, went to another relative of the Paramount Chief who had hosted him and fined her Le 300,000, which she subsequently did not have to pay due to a reverend's intervention. However, the Paramount Chief was so severely beaten that he was transported for medical treatment to Freetown, where he allegedly died.

Sometime in May 1996, the Kamajors continued to harass civilians, particularly businesswomen and other civilians who often went in search of food in Sittia Chiefdom on Sherbro Island. Some of the civilians were punished by being forced to carry loads for the Kamajors or were beaten and sometimes killed. People deserted the towns and villages to go into hiding in camps. However, the Kamajors followed them to the camps and forcefully brought them back to the towns. In the same month, the Kamajors attacked the village of Mobayeh (Sittia Chiefdom), where civilians were hiding. They burnt down the whole village and killed three people, namely one old woman who had given notice to the inhabitants of the village of the Kamajors coming was tied up and left to burn in one of the houses; a pregnant woman, whose womb was slit open; and that woman's four year-old daughter.

In June 1996, the Kamajor ground commander of Sogbini Chiefdom ordered the killing of four people on the grounds that they were enemy collaborators, who were arrested at night, taken to Talia (Yawbeko Chiefdom) and killed.

In September 1996, Kamajors, who were mainly from Imperi Chiefdom in the north of Bonthe District, arrested 28 civilians and killed many of them in Sittia Chiefdom. There were cases reported of human flesh being cooked and eaten by the Kamajors. SLA forces were given notice about these civilians held captive by the Kamajors and went to attack them and free the captives. In retaliation, Kamajors laid an ambush for the SLA at Mbockie (Sittia Chiefdom). During the attack, some civilians who ran to the river and could not swim across it were drowned, while others were burnt in their houses by the fire sparked by fragments of RPGs. Two members of the SLA were also killed by the Kamajors. Over 50 Kamajors attacked the town and overpowered the 10 SLA soldiers who were based there. A large amount of stolen property was loaded into boats and carried away to Gbangbatoke (Banta Chiefdom, Moyamba District) by the Kamajors.

By the end of the year, the main Kamajor base was at Talia (Yawbeko Chiefdom). After the 25 May events, it would be called "Base Zero".

g. Events in 1997

By 1997, the Kamajors together with the SLA forces had succeeded in removing the RUF forces from most of their strongholds in the District. This notwithstanding, there were several clashes between the Kamajors and the SLA forces. The Kamajors also wrecked a lot of havoc on the civilians, as the SLA and RUF had done previously and continued to do.

SLA forces continued to mistreat civilians in the few areas in the District where they were deployed. A group of SLA forces from the navy branch posted at York Island used to take food and other non food items away from civilians. Civilians accused of committing crimes like killing or raping were punished by the SLA forces without many investigations into the truth of these accusations. The main punishment was to tie the suspect up, hang them upside down from the roof of a house and beat them. The most senior SLA member in command used to mete out this type of punishment. Cases of sexual violence against women by SLA members were also reported, including harassing civilians in order to take their wives. In one incident, some SLA members locked a woman in one room of her house and assaulted her sexually. As they heard her husband was coming home, they went outside the house and fired in the air to make people flee the area. Those SLA forces however withdrew from York Island and went to Bonthe Town as reinforcements following the Coup in May 1997.[1235]

In March 1997, a combined force of Kamajors and SLA from Bonthe Town launched a fierce attack on the RUF position at Bendu, the headquarter town in the west of Bendu Cha Chiefdom. The combined forces had about 20 to 25 wounded, who were taken to Bonthe Town for medical treatment.[1236] The RUF forces continued to occupy the town and sent several messages to the SLA forces and the Kamajors in Bonthe Town threatening to attack them and the town. Nevertheless, despite this collaboration, fighting between the two factions continued. In one incident, an SLA member who had come to an area under Kamajor control was killed at Foinda-Madina (Imperi Chiefdom).

In May 1997, the military overthrew the Government and put in place a military regime called the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC). This brought a total change in the attitude of the SLA forces based in Bonthe Town and its environs, who then joined the AFRC government. Civilians were continuously harassed, property was taken and a large number of people were killed on the allegation that they were Kamajors. The RUF forces, then referred to as "Peoples Army", joined the AFRC forces and the combined forces continued to attack and mistreat civilians in the Town.[1237] The Kamajors in Bonthe Town moved out of Bonthe Town, which is part of the Sherbro Urban District, to Sittia Chiefdom and to Bendu (Bendu Cha Chiefdom), where they regrouped to attack the AFRC forces now in Bonthe Town. Furthermore, Kamajors had been deployed since 1996 in all the villages along the river from Mattru down to York Island, three nautical miles to Bonthe Town. Accordingly, the RUF/AFRC forces were surrounded by Kamajors.[1238] [1235] They would however come from time to time to patrol the island.

[1236] Casualty figures for the RUF forces could not be ascertained.
[1237] This would be the only time RUF managed to get a grip on Bonthe Town.
[1238] The Kamajors were however not deployed in York Island.

Following threats of attack by the Kamajors on Bonthe Town, the AFRC forces mounted checkpoints at various locations in the town around July/August. Civilian movement was restricted and all boats and other vessels were grounded. Fishing nets and boats were seized from the civilians by the RUF/AFRC forces. Civilians were beaten, molested and deprived of their daily food. The AFRC commanders often sent their forces to attack villages occupied by Kamajors and to kill civilians. Sometimes civilians, suspected of being Kamajor collaborators, were arrested and brought to Bonthe Town, where they were imprisoned; those who could not be identified were shot and buried by the seaside opposite the naval base.

People were evicted from their homes to accommodate the RUF forces when they began to arrive in Bonthe Town in May 1997 and were harassed. At this time, the actions carried out by the RUF/AFRC members were masterminded by the AFRC forces, because the RUF forces, who mostly came from outside the District, did not know the area.

The Kamajors occupied SLA and RUF positions in Bendu Cha Chiefdom soon after the overthrow of the Government in May 1997. By July 1997, RUF/AFRC forces were shooting at civilian locations in the area. People in villages like Momaya were under serious attacks and during one attack, a 15-year old girl was killed. People abandoned their villages in the area for camps in the bush. Those attacks carried out by RUF/AFRC forces also prompted many young people in the chiefdom to join the Kamajor society, in Nongoba Bullom Chiefdom and at Talia (Yawbeko Chiefdom). Reports however mention that as their number grew larger, they became out of control and created more havoc on civilians.[1239] In November 1997, two young boys from Bonthe Town coming to Bendu to bring their relatives to Bonthe Town were arrested at the wharf by the Kamajors posted at Bendu checkpoint. When they admitted they were coming from Bonthe Town, they were accused of being "junta" collaborators and were killed with cutasses.

Kamajor harassment and violence against civilians was reported in almost all the chiefdoms where they were deployed. In Bum Chiefdom, they targeted businessmen, especially if they were Fullah or Temne by tribe, and killed them.[1240] In one instance, one man from Moyia who was coming back from Bo District with food items was intercepted by Kamajors at Moyia who took away his food, locked him up in a guard room and subjected him to punishment, as a result of which he died. Punishments included starvation or tying the elbows behind the back and projecting the chest forward. The harassment of civilians increased when an embargo was imposed on Sierra Leone. At the checkpoints they mounted, Kamajors from Bum Chiefdom used to take whatever property the civilians had. If they resisted, civilians were beaten and put in a 2" x 2" cage made of thorns. In Kwamebai Krim Chiefdom, Kamajors were forcing civilians to work for them and were also taking away their property. They would load vehicles with the property they had stolen and take it to Talia (Kwamebai Krim Chiefdom). On another occasion, a group of Kamajors in Mattru amputated the ears of one civilian. He was also severely wounded on the arm and later died of the wound. Another Kamajor killed two civilians at the Keiga checkpoint (Imperi Chiefdom).

[1239] Around this period, it was suggested that there was "[…] a clear difference between newly-recruited Kamajors, who have access to automatic weapons and apparently operate outside the authority of chiefdom representatives, and the traditional Kamajors who are carefully screened and respect traditional chiefdom structures": Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 29 October – 18 November 1997. REG. NO. 97/0390.

[1240] It has to be remembered that the Kamajors were Mendes.

The situation for the civilians in Bonthe Town worsened when RUF/AFRC forces imposed an economic embargo on the civilians in Bonthe Township. No one was allowed to leave Bonthe Town for Freetown and those who attempted were beaten and molested. Civilians therefore found themselves caught between the Kamajors and the RUF/AFRC forces, with the RUF/AFRC forces threatening them for being relations of Kamajors and the Kamajors threatening them for being "rebel" collaborators. This situation became unbearable by August 1997, so the elders of Bonthe organised a peace deal between the Kamajors and the RUF/AFRC forces. The peace was initiated after the peacemakers met with the Kamajor High Priest and Chief Initiator who was based at Talia (Yawbeko Chiefdom). Their trip to Talia was, however, accompanied by many obstacles, most of them being the Kamajors checkpoints all along the road to Matru. Those civilian peacemakers were severely molested at a checkpoint at Momaya (Bendu Cha Chiefdom), where Kamajors opened fired into the air.[1241] They were also molested by Kamajors on their arrival at Talia. Nevertheless, they met the High Priest and Chief Initiator, who gave them a message for the RUF/AFRC based at Bonthe Town. In that message, the Chief Initiator asked those forces to stop killing civilians and Kamajors and, in return, he promised he would try to stop his men from launching attacks on Bonthe Town. The peacemakers went back to Bonthe, escorted by some Kamajors responsible for the security of the High Priest and the RUF/AFRC agreed to the peace plan.

However, the AFRC forces soon undermined the peace deal several times by attacking the positions of the Kamajors. For example, a few days after the return of the peacemakers from the negotiations, the RUF/AFRC forces attacked the Kamajor position at Gbangbatoke (Banta Chiefdom, Moyamba District). They were defeated and two members of the RUF/AFRC forces were killed. In September 1997, the RUF/AFRC forces attacked the Kamajors at Pembihun, north of Bonthe Town. The RUF/AFRC forces were again defeated and the Kamajors killed a lot of their number, including a very top RUF member. Soon after, the RUF/AFRC made another attack on Kamajor location in Bamaba, west of Bonthe Town, and were again defeated by the Kamajors. The RUF/AFRC forces continued to harass the civilians and killed people they suspected of being Kamajor collaborators in Bonthe Town. Dema Chiefdom, east of Sitia Chiefdom, was also affected by these attacks, as in December 1997, AFRC members went to Moyema by sea, over powered the few Kamajors posted there, looted some houses and a store and burnt down some houses before leaving.[1242] The AFRC members left for Bonthe Town but one of them proceeded to the village of Mokutu (Dema Chiefdom) and killed a youth, who allegedly tried to be "defiant". This AFRC member was later arrested on his way to Tissana and killed by Kamajors.

In the middle of 1997, newly initiated Kamajors settled at Mokossie (Nongoba Bullom Chiefdom), where they convened a meeting with the civilians to explain the new laws civilians would have to obey. These laws included no whistling in the town, no sitting on motorbikes by women, no trousers for women and no use of mortars at night. The penalty for the breach of one of these laws was the destruction of the civilian's house. The Kamajors decided on cases and tied people with a FM rope for various reasons.

[1241] This checkpoint was called "the gate of hell".

[1242] During the period of 1997 to 1999, Dema Chiefdom administration was entirely in the hands of the Kamajors, who presided over cases and served as chiefdom police sub chiefs and as Paramount Chief.

Around 10 and 11 September 1997, the AFRC commanders ordered that all the important personalities in Bonthe Town be arrested, in particular those who initiated the peace talks, alleging they did not negotiate in the interests of the AFRC. The arrested people were, however, released in the evening. On 15 September, the Kamajors launched an attack on Bonthe Town, which was unsuccessful, as the RUF/AFRC forces had a large amount of weapons in the town. Several Kamajors and a lot of civilians were killed during the battle, which lasted for four hours. The dead Kamajors were buried in a mass grave dug by the RUF/AFRC forces. After the battle, the RUF/AFRC forces conducted a house-to-house search in Bonthe Town, looking for Kamajors. Civilians were advised not to host any Kamajor and to report any case of a civilian harbouring a Kamajor. Information of imminent Kamajor attacks on the town continued to arrive in Bonthe Town, through the businessmen travelling back and forth to Sittia Chiefdom. This led many RUF/AFRC forces to leave the town on gunboats for Freetown, taking with them a lot of property they had previously stolen. Few civilians were authorised to board the RUF/AFRC gunships on that occasions but on subsequent trips and during a transfer to the boat, the sea car they boarded capsized and many civilians drowned in the ocean.

The RUF/AFRC forces who stayed in the town continued to take property and kill civilians in and around Bonthe Town. On 14 October, they arrested the SLPP secretary for Bonthe District, accusing him of being among the Kamajors who launched the attack on the town on 14 September. He was detained for three days, during which time physical violence was inflicted on him; the RUF/AFRC forces also burnt down his house. On 18 October, he was brought to the United Methodist Church, where he was mutilated and had his head cut off.[1243] The RUF/AFRC forces then dismembered the body, put his head on a stick and paraded across the town, asking civilians to give them money for the good work they did.[1244] Four days later, the civilians asked the RUF/AFRC members for authorisation to bury what was left of his body.[1245]

h) Events in 1998

In January, Kamajors went to York Island and stole a lot of property from civilians' houses, without killing anybody. They took their load and went back to Bendu Cha Chiefdom.

On 14 February 1998 the AFRC forces departed from Bonthe Town for Freetown.[1246] The Kamajors replaced them the next day, on 15 February. Two groups of Kamajors heavily armed with [1243] It was reported that his organs were cooked and eaten at the naval base.

[1244] It is reported that the officers in charge of the town did not take any action, which led civilians to think that they actually masterminded every action carried out by the junior staff.
[1245] Those responsible for this action would be court marshalled in September 1998 and the mother of the man killed testified she was forced to eat her son's heart by the men who had killed him: AFP, 16 September 1998.
[1246] In late March, over 500 decomposed bodies were discovered in two shallow graves on Sherbro Island. It was believed that these bodies were hurriedly buried by the RUF/AFRC forces before they pulled out of Bonthe Town. It is not clear whether those people had been killed by the RUF/AFRC forces just before they retreated or throughout their stay in the town: AFP, 1 April 1998.

AK47s, RPGs and LMGs under different commanders, one numbering about 30 members and the other of unknown size, entered Bonthe Town on that day. A meeting was held with the civilians in the township, where some people were killed, mostly on the grounds that they were identified as "rebel" or "junta" collaborators. One of the civilians killed was a tailor who had made the "Kamajors uniforms" the RUF/AFRC forces sometimes used to attack the Kamajors by surprise. In another instance, Kamajors arrested a man who used to live in York Island but was now hiding in Bonthe Town. He was put in prison where two civilians and two policemen were already detained. He was severely beaten by a young Kamajor around 13 years old, following the order of a commander; a few minutes later, five Kamajors entered the cell and told them they would be killed because they were collaborators. They were then taken to the Kamajors High Command, where they were tied up and beaten. It was only due to the intervention of a parish priest that their lives were spared. Instead, they were allowed to pay a fine, which – because the original punishment had been death – was set at Le 200,000, although the first civilian was allowed to leave on payment of Le 54,000.

More Kamajors from the mainland chiefdoms arrived in Bonthe Town, where they looted houses and public offices before going back to the chiefdom from which they had come. Businessmen and traders were continuously harassed by Kamajors who took all their property from them; sometimes, people were killed. Checkpoints were established at various locations at the entry points of the town through which civilians coming from the mainland or from Sherbro Island had to pass. In one instance, Kamajors went to Mania, a trading place for civilians. On their way, they met some civilians going to the nearby village of Ndainga to trade. Those civilians were flogged and one was wounded with a dagger on his back. The Kamajors took most of the items the civilians were about to trade and left for Jimi. On their way, they saw a canoe going towards Ndainga. They took away all the traders' property and took control of the speedboat with the traders still inside, leaving their canoe out at sea. The civilians were disembarked on a piece of land and the Kamajors continued on their way to Jimi, where they set one house on fire.

The Kamajors continued to harass civilians, killing people alleged to be "junta" or "rebel" collaborators and stealing property. They were totally dependant on civilians for their food and starting taxing civilians, as a contribution to their feeding and to the purchase of ammunition. This made life for the civilians very difficult in the township and surrounding villages. The Kamajors burnt down villages like Gbogboma, Puokie and many others in the Sittia Chiefdom and killed people who occupied positions of respect in the community.

Throughout the remainder of the year and those following, Kamajors victimised civilians in towns and villages across the District. They deposed or ignored all the chiefdom authorities and themselves acted in those positions, including as chiefs and policemen. They added to the suffering of the civilians with their prohibition laws to protect their powers and their mistreatment of civilians, applicable only to the Kamajors. Civilians were required to obey a set of different laws, which included no stealing, no fighting and no travelling from one village to another without a pass, each with different penalties depencing on their gravity. Furthermore, the Kamajors asserted that their authority was supreme and that the Town Commander called AG had the right to intercede between civilians and Kamajors.

While the Kamajor initiation was going on at Gambia (Jong Chiefdom) in 1998, one Kamajor commander raped a suckling mother at the market place in Goba town. He also threatened to kill the husband of the woman. On 27 March 1998, a one-year old boy was deliberately killed at Mowagor village near Mattru by a Kamajor commander.

i) 1999, 2000, 2001 and 2002[1247]

The Kamajors were not respectful to each other let alone to the civilians in the District, including instances of riots and fighting between different groups of Kamajors in the District. The High Priest would send his own men out on looting missions, but they would often encounter troubles with other groups of Kamajors in other chiefdoms. The Kamajor structure appeared blurred or non-existent to the civilians at this time: acts of violence against civilians and their property throughout the country led people to think that there was no more structural organisation, aside from the District Coordinator and High Priest.

In January 1999, a group of Kamajors from Sittia Chiefdom entered the island town of Timbima (Dema Chiefdom) and required the civilians to pay the sum of Le 1,000.00 and a quantity of fish for their feeding. Defaulters were tied up and made to lie down and look at the sun. Another group of Kamajors from Dema Chiefdom went to attack this first group,[1248] but could not find them in the town. This second group therefore required the civilians to pay for the cost of fuel used to visit the village. From September 1999 to the end of 2000, the administration of all of Dema Chiefdom was in the hands of the Kamajors, with the chiefdom ground commander assuming the responsibility and position of the Paramount Chief. They also made themselves into sub chiefs down to headmen and made additional laws, including prohibiting civilians from eating certain food, like bananas. Civilians were forced to obey their instructions and defaulters were always given severe beatings. Housewives were punished together with their husbands. The Kamajors continued these practices throughout the years of 1999, 2000, 2001 and the early part of 2002, when disarmament begun in the District, although on a lower scale.

Following the Freetown invasion by the RUF/AFRC in January 1999 and their subsequent defeat by ECOMOG and others, RUF/AFRC forces retreated hastily into the country and some arrived in Bonthe Town. While in the town, they raided villages in Sittia and Dema Chiefdoms, took property and burnt houses. Four months later, Kamajors from Dema Chiefdom agreed to regroup with those of Sittia Chiefdom to attack Bonthe Town. Civilians were requested to provide them with the items they needed, like food and cartridges. During a meeting with elders at the chiefdom headquarter of Tissana (Dema Chiefdom), the Kamajors were told that civilians could not gather the money to buy the ammunition, which did not please them. They molested the Paramount Chief and some began going around to collect money from civilians while others were chasing cattle. From Tissana, they moved to an island called Nyagai, where they found a man they accused of having been an attendant [1247] It is mentioned that Executive Outcome were based in the Moyamba District, and intermittently went into Bonthe District to give moral support to the Kamajors. However, Executive Outcomes left the country early 1997, therefore this information may refer to other forces.

[1248] This second group of Kamajors were from Dema Chiefdom and were ordered by their commander to drive the Kamajors from Sittia Chiefdom back to their chiefdom.

for the RUF/AFRC in Bonthe Town during previous years. The Kamajors amputated the man bit by bit, starting with his ears, before removing his eyes and internal organs and finally dumping him in the river. The people for whom the man was working for were obliged to pay a fine for having harboured and kept a collaborator. The Kamajors then launched their attack on Bonthe Town but were unsuccessful[1249] and about one month later, those Kamajors, now over 500 in number, launched a second attack on the town. In the meanwhile, the RUF/AFRC forces had started pulling out of the town, having learnt of this attack.[1250]

On 24 May 1999, the deputy task force commander of Bonthe District led a troop of Kamajors and attacked Mattru Police station at midday. Two police officers were killed. On 8 July 1999, the same commander led a group of Kamajors at night to launch a strong attack on Kortumahun village (Yawbeko Chiefdom). A pregnant woman was shot in the leg during the attack and later taken to Bo Government Hospital.

In Sogbini Chiefdom, the Kamajors had no regard for the Paramount Chief. They defied his authority and claimed that they were only accountable to the CDF National Coordinator. Civilians were physically and sexually harassed. Children below the age of fifteen were abducted and some were forcefully conscripted and initiated into the Kamajor society. More and more youths joined the society to protect their relations and families from the continuous harassment and havoc wreaked by the Kamajors. In the town of Semabu (Sogbini Chiefdom) a notorious Kamajor killed civilians, took property and burnt down civilian houses. Fear of the Kamajor atrocities forced civilians to go back into the bush camps for safety, abandoning their property behind them. The Kamajors took all of that property that had been abandoned, sometimes visiting the bush camps to steal property and harass civilians.

Following the signing of the Lomé Peace Agreement on 7 July 1999, the disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration program (DDR) was formally launched on 20 October 1999 by the President of Sierra Leone during a ceremony in Freetown. Very few combatants out of the estimated 45,000 combatants, however, laid down their arms at this time.[1251]

The DDR process was halted in 2000, due to the insecurity in the Northern and Eastern Provinces and the abductions of UN peacekeepers in May 2000. To reactivate this process, a ceasefire was signed in Abuja, Nigeria on 10 November 2000, which again had to be re-activated for the second time on 4 May 2001.[1252]

[1249] Some Kamajors and few RUF/AFRC members were killed but civilian fatalities could not be ascertained.

[1250] It could not be ascertained whether there had been any fighting at all between the RUF/AFRC forces and the Kamajors.

[1251] In November 1999, only 1,500 combatants had disarmed out of the total 45,000 estimated combatants: IRIN West Africa, 17 November 1999.

[1252] The security situation in the Northern and Eastern Provinces prevailing in 2000 urged the Government of Sierra Leone to negotiate a ceasefire with the RUF in November 2000. On 4 May 2001, the parties would meet again in Abuja, Nigeria to review the ceasefire. Further to the meeting in May 2001, they parties would hold monthly tripartite meetings under the Joint Committee on DDR. The final meeting took place in January 2002 when disarmament was declared complete and the war over.

Following a meeting between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF held at the UNAMSIL headquarters in Freetown, the parties agreed on the need to accelerate and complete the disarmament process, which included the opening of a DDR centre in Bonthe District.[1253] The second meeting of the Joint Committee on DDR took place in Magburaka (Tonkolili District) on 2 June 2001 and the parties agreed on an accelerated disarmament process meant to take place simultaneously in Kono and Bonthe Districts in June 2001,[1254] although the disarmament camp was not yet set up.[1255]

Disarmament finally began on 2 July 2001[1256] although at a slow pace, as only nine CDF members turned in their weapons on the first day of the opening of the DDR centres. In fact, CDF members from the mainland expressed their wish to disarm in Mattru (Jong Chiefdom) and not in Moyamba District, as was planned.[1257] Therefore, following a meeting attended by the Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General, UNAMSIL's Force Commander and Deputy Force Commander, the CDF coordinator and other officials and a member of the NCDDR, the parties agreed to establish another DDR camp in Mattru.[1258] This camp was opened around 13 July and from this time, the disarmament process began to accelerate in the District: as of 27 July, 813 CDF members had disarmed in the two DDR camps in Bonthe District. On this date, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General visited the two centres to assess the disarmament progress and to stress the importance of having this process complete by the end of July.[1259]
During a meeting of the Joint Committee on DDR, the parties formerly declared disarmament in Bonthe District complete in September.[1260] UN peacekeepers of the Nepalese contingent deployed in the District in late 2001.[1261]

3. Conclusion

Sharing a border with Pujehun District, Bonthe District was affected by the RUF/NPFL incursion into Sierra Leone as early as 1991. The effect of the conflict, however, differed slightly from the experience in Pujehun District. Until 1995 in Bonthe District, the conflict had only spread into the three chiefdoms of Kwamebai Krim, Bum and Nongoba Bullom, while in 1991, although only for a few months, RUF/NPFL forces had spread across the whole Pujehun District. After a first short stay in Kwamebai Krim Chiefdom in 1991, RUF/NPFL forces would visit the District sporadically,

---

[1253] In addition to the existing DDR camps in Port Loko, Bo, Moyamba, Kenema and Daru, the parties also agreed on the urgent need to open new DDR camps in the country, in the Northern Province (Lunsar, Makeni, Kamakwie, Masingbi and Alikalia), the Eastern Province (Koidu and Kailahun) and the Southern Province (Pujehun and Bonthe): UNAMSIL press release, 15 May 2001.
[1254] UNAMSIL press briefing, 5 June 2001.
[1255] UNAMSIL press briefing, 8 June 2001. The acceleration of the disarmament was meant to take place District by District.
[1256] UNAMSIL press briefing, 3 July 2001.
[1257] Kamajors wanted a fast-track disarmament to be able to return rapidly to their farming activities.
[1258] UNAMSIL press briefing, 6 July 2001.
[1259] UNAMSIL press briefing, 27 July 2001.
[1260] Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 01 - 30 September 2001. Disarmament would only be declared complete for the whole country in January 2002.
[1261] UNAMSIL press briefing, 16 November 2001.

often in small numbers, but would not establish a real presence there, except in Bum Chiefdom for six months in late 1991/1992.

The natural features of the District, particularly the swamp areas and rivers in the south, could explain the containment of the conflict to the three aforementioned chiefdoms during its early stage. This is reinforced by the fact that the major incursion penetrating the District in 1995 was carried out from the north of the District, where the road network is the more developed.

By 1995, the conflict had taken a new turn, as RUF forces spread across the whole country. The attacks on the east and south of Moyamba District and the north of Bonthe District in January 1995 was in fact preceded by a massive RUF operation in Bo District, where RUF forces launched attacks on camps and headquarter towns in the centre of the District all within a couple of days towards the end of December 1994. RUF forces then proceeded directly to Moyamba District and then to Bonthe District.

RUF forces attacked and thus paralysed the economically vital mining area, which spreads across the north of Bonthe District and the south of Moyamba District. This new development was dramatic for the Government of Sierra Leone, as the income from mining activities and the selling of cash crops produce had already dropped considerably following the previous occupation of Kono and Kailahun Districts. RUF forces spread across the mainland District, failing however to reach Sherbro Island.

Their progression and the violations they committed were hampered by the intervention of a special military unit in late 1995 and the continuous development and successes of the Kamajors. By the end of 1996, the RUF forces were dislodged from their positions across the District and the subsequent actions they carried out was the fruit of small pockets of RUF remnants.

Unlike Pujehun, Bo, Kenema and Kailahun Districts, after the overthrow of the Government and the establishment of the AFRC regime, the Kamajors did not withdraw from their positions and go underground, as the RUF/AFRC forces were concentrated in Bonthe Town and not in the rest of the District. Furthermore, most of the RUF forces who joined the AFRC members in the Bonthe Town did not originate from the District but came from Kailahun District.

From February 1998 and following the withdrawal of the RUF/AFRC forces from Bonthe Town, the pattern of actions in Bonthe District was similar to how the conflict affected the other Southern Districts of Pujehun, Moyamba and Bo. Free of RUF/AFRC presence, Kamajors actions, originally aiming at defend their chiefdoms against RUF attacks and violence, became oppressive for the civilians, as Kamajors affirmed their control not only of the security of District but also of the local administration, substituting themselves for the local authorities, and of the civilians living in Bonthe District.

After 1998, the conflict concentrated in the Northern Province and areas of the Eastern Province, where the CDF members were not able to put up a firm and continuous resistance to the RUF/AFRC advances and where the main mining areas were located.

Violations committed by Kamajors during this period were fewer reported than the violence carried out by the RUF/NPFL, RUF and RUF/AFRC forces. This is probably mainly due to the fact that key people mostly reported violence when carried out during an attack; from 1998 onwards, the Kamajors were in total control of the District, so the day-to-day violations were most of the time not reported, blurred in the memories of the key persons.

As RUF forces did not settle in the District for a long period and the intensity of fighting was generally lower than in the rest of the country, Bonthe District was one of the least affected Districts in term of destruction of property, displacement of people[1262] and violence against civilians.

c. Moyamba District

1. Introduction

Moyamba District is one of the four Districts in the Southern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone. It is bounded by Bo District in the east; Tonkolili and Port Loko Districts in the north; Bonthe District in the South; and the Western Area in the west. The headquarter town, Moyamba Town, is located in Kaiyamba Chiefdom, in the centre of the District.

There are 14 chiefdoms in the District:

Chiefdom	Headquarter
Bagruwa	Sembehun
Banta	Gbangbantoke
Banta Mokele	Mokele
Bumpeh	Rotifunk
Dasse	Mano
Fakunya	Gandohun
Kagboro	Shenge
Kaiyamba	Moyamba
Kori	Taiama
Kamajei	Senehun
Kongbora	Bauya
Kowa	Njama
Ribbi	Bradford
Timdel	Bomotoke

Having borders with both the Southern and the Northern Province, Moyamba District would be affected by the development of the conflict in those two Provinces, both of which were used to launch attacks on its borders, primarily from the south.

[1262] Although there was no massive displacement of population between towns inside the District and outside the District, civilians often took the bush, leaving in bush camps called "sorkoihun".

Two strategic roads pass through the District. The main highway leaving Freetown for the Provinces separates into two roads at Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District). The first road goes from the west to the north towards Magburaka (Tonkolili District) and Koidu (Kono District), while the second one reaches Bo and Kenema through Moyamba District. This second road reaches Moyamba District in the east, and runs in the District from the extreme north-east of Fakunya Chiefdom and its headquarter town, Moyamba Junction, Taiama (Kori Chiefdom), and Senehun (Kamajei Chiefdom) before arriving in Bo District in Gbo Chiefdom. From Moyamba Junction (at the border with Tonkolili District), a road leaves to the south-west to reach Moyamba Town. Accordingly, controlling Moyamba Junction would allow access to the north-west to Tonkolili District, to the south-west to Moyamba Town and to the south-east to Bo Town. When circumstances make using this highway impracticable, an alternate route to reach Bo from Freetown runs through Moyamba Town. It leaves the Western Area through Songo and goes south-east to Moyamba District, passing by the headquarter towns of five chiefdoms, before ultimately reaching Bo District through Bumpeh Chiefdom. The control of this road would be of a critical importance, as it makes Freetown reachable from Moyamba District.

Its main economic activities, besides salt production on the coast, are rutile and bauxite mining. The mining area is located in the south of the District, in Banta Chiefdom, and in the north of Bonthe District (Imperi Chiefdom). The headquarters of the bauxite company are in Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom), while the headquarters of the rutile company is in Imperi Chiefdom (Bonthe District). Those mining activities were of vital importance for the Sierra Leone Government, as mineral resources made up the bulk of its exports before the war.

Njala University College (south of Kori Chiefdom), by the Taia River that flows south-north in the east of the District, is part of the University of Sierra Leone and is the only University Campus in the Provinces.

The way the conflict affected the District can be divided into three distinct stages. The first stage was from 1991 to 1994, the period before the RUF forces entered the District. During this time, SLA forces were deployed in the District but harassed civilians, including taking away their property. Cases of rapes and killing were reported and the chasing of collaborators increased by the end of 1994 as rumours of imminent RUF attacks grew stronger.

The second stage ran from 1994 to 1998 and saw the progression and settlement of RUF forces in the District and the development of the Kamajor society. In early 1995, RUF forces made an incursion in the District and, shortly after, began to make their way towards Freetown. As this advance was stopped by SLA forces, the RUF forces settled in the District, progressively reaching all the chiefdoms and establishing a strong base in the north. The chiefdoms in the south of the District were less affected and most of the actions were concentrated in the north of the District. Civilians began organising themselves into Civil Defence Units (CDUs) and by early 1996, the first Kamajors deployed in the District and engaged RUF forces. They however also fought SLA forces who were asked by the civilians to leave in 1996. The following year was described as the peak of Kamajor activities in the District. RUF forces were still active in the north of the District but had been repelled from the south and centre.

During the AFRC regime, RUF/AFRC forces were only deployed in limited areas of the District and were strongly resisted by the CDF. This second phase was characterised by violence inflicted on civilians mainly by RUF forces but also by SLA forces and Kamajors. RUF forces, once stopped on their progression to Freetown, mainly carried out hit and run attacks, entering villages, taking away property and burning houses but also killing civilians, raping girls and capturing civilians to carry their loads, usually to their main base. They also killed number of civilians on the grounds they were Kamajor collaborators. During this period, the behaviour of the Kamajors towards civilians began changing, as they intensified their fight against the RUF and, later, RUF/AFRC forces and started gaining control over different areas. Civilians were initially requested to provide them with food and other basic items but soon, Kamajors began harassing civilians and taking their property. Kamajors did not recognise the authority and power of local authorities and other Government personnel, as they only had respect for those who had been initiated and they soon extended administrative authority over civilians in the areas they occupied. Their control of an area included physical violence against civilians in general, including sexual violence against women. Alleged RUF or AFRC collaborators were killed without first undertaking an investigation. The Kamajors made certain laws for the civilians and those who broke those laws were subject to various punishments, including imprisonment in a small cage made of sticks and thorns.

The third and final stage ran from 1998 to 2001 when disarmament was complete in the District. Following the retreat from Freetown, RUF/AFRC forces pulled out of the entire District, which was therefore in total control of the District. Only few and limited attacks were carried out in the north of the District by RUF/AFRC forces based in Tonkolili District. This period was however marred with a lot of atrocities, and most of the CDF actions described in 1997 also happened in 1998. Alleged RUF or RUF/AFRC collaborators were killed and traders and businessmen were particularly targeted for their belongings. Fighting between two factions of the CDF erupted in the District in 1998 and 1999.

However, by the end of 1998 CDF activities against civilians started to decrease and, gradually, civilians became free from attacks and harassment. People returned to their various towns and villages and started resettling. This continued until the disarmament of the CDF in the entire District by 2001.

2. Factual analysis

a) Events in 1991 – 1994

Sierra Leone Army (SLA) forces were deployed across the country in the District's headquarter towns and other sensitive areas soon after the coup d'état in 1992, with the aim of securing the country from the National Patriotic Front (NPFL) and Revolutionary United Front (RUF) forces, which had entered Sierra Leone from Liberia in 1991. Around this time, new SLA units emerged, such as Tiger Battalion, Scorpion Battalion and SLA Rangers. In Moyamba District in 1992,[1263] some [1263] The date is not clear from the record, but this was probably sometime in 1992.

SLA members deployed in Fakunya Chiefdom in the central north of the District, which shares a boundary with Tonkolili District. They deployed in two sensitive areas of the chiefdom, namely Moyamba Junction, 102 miles from Freetown on the Freetown-Bo highway, 22 miles to Moyamba and Njagbahun Junction, on the Moyamba Junction-Moyamba road, 8 miles from Moyamba Junction and 14 miles from Moyamba town.[1264]

At this time, the District was free of an RUF/NPFL presence, as those forces were confined to the south-east and north-east of the country. However, the war had already begun to affect civilians, who were harassed by SLA forces, mainly for their food and domestic animals. Food was often stolen at the checkpoints mounted by the SLA, but also when SLA forces would leave their checkpoints and visit towns and villages in the chiefdoms for the purposes of finding food. In addition, cases of physical violence, killings and rapes were reported. At the checkpoints, SLA forces took some women and girls away and sexually assaulted them. The forces also took aside civilians suspected of being "rebels", inflicting physical violence on them and sometimes killing them when they could not be identified by relatives or other civilians.[1265]

By the end of January 1994, the then Head of State declared "total war" against the RUF forces and launched a massive recruitment process, more than doubling the ranks of the SLA.[1266] In addition, in April 1994, an SLA captain visited Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom),[1267] in the north-east of the District, where he held a meeting with the people of the town. During that meeting, he instructed the people of the town to give their young men to be trained as vigilantes to help the SLA fight the RUF forces and to further protect their chiefdoms in the Districts. The trained youths formed a Civil Defence Unit (CDU).[1268] The people of the town were instructed to provide the CDU with food and logistics but as elders were reluctant to tax an already poor population, the Chiefs decided to tax themselves to support the youths. The CDU kept guard at certain locations in Rotifunk and the surrounding villages. Other units were formed in other chiefdoms in the District. Additional security was provided for the workers at the mining company[1269] in Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom) by SSD (State Security Division) forces, who arrived on 4 July 1994.[1270]

However, towards the end of 1994, the actions of the SLA against civilians continued to increase. For example, SLA forces who introduced themselves as SLA members went by military truck to the town of Rotawa (north of Fakunya Chiefdom) on 14 October 1994. Those men were dressed in full [1265] No more detail was available on this information, nor the precise year of its occurrence.

---

[1264] Whoever controlled these junctions would have open access to Moyamba Town (Kaiyamba Chiefdom), south-east of Fakunya Chiefdom.

[1266] In late 1993, RUF forces launched a massive operation in the south of Kenema District and rapidly spread across the District. By the end of 1994, they were all over Kenema, Pujehun and Bo Districts and continued their inland progression.

[1267] There is also a Bumpeh Chiefdom in Bo District.

[1268] A CDU was the most developed form of organisation the civilians put in place for the defence of their chiefdoms. This was the step prior to the initiation and development of the Kamajors.

[1269] Sierra Leone Ore and Metal Co. (Sieromco), a Swiss-owned mining company based in the southern area of Mokanji was the only bauxite producer in the country and was mining deposits within 4 km of the washing plant at Gondama, in the centre of the Chiefdom: The Mining Journal, 29 May 1994.

[1270] The year is uncertain, as the SSD may have deployed in July 1993.

military uniforms. They took civilian property, mainly food items and livestock, and proceeded to Falaba and Gbotima, in the north of Fakunya Chiefdom, where they carried out the same action. Another group of SLA forces, allegedly coming from Mofokoya (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District), five miles to the north of Rotawa, entered Rotawa on 16 December 1994. They entered the compound of an elder, once a Regent Chief, and took her 16-year daughter whom they began to beat up. When the girl's father and one of his guests pleaded for her release, the SLA killed them; the father was beaten with stick and the guest was shot and killed. On their way back to Tonkolili District, they came across a woman whom they raped before giving her Le 1,000. They further told her they were SLA forces from Camp Charlie at Mile 91.[1271] Also, the town of Kwellu (Fakunya Chiefdom) was raided on 11 December by the SLA forces, who took a lot of property from civilians living there.

On 14 November 1994 the SLA forces came to Mano (Dasse Chiefdom), situated on a highway leading Fakunya Chiefdom to Dasse Chiefdom, through Kori Chiefdom southwards into Bo District. They were fully dressed in military uniforms and armed with RPG and automatic riffles. The SLA forces established a base in the town and erected checkpoints in the town at roads leading out towards Taiama to the north, Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom) to the south and Bumpeh Chiefdom (Bo District) to the south.[1272] Soon afterwards the SLA forces started harassing civilians in the town, taking money from people at the checkpoints, and even went to other towns and villages in the chiefdom. Civilians were beaten and their property was taken. Following the attack on Bo Town in late December 1994, the SLA imposed a curfew from 6.00pm to 7.30am and started suspecting civilians of being "rebels" or "rebel" collaborators; several people were beaten, imprisoned in the guardroom and even killed.[1273]

By the end of 1994, news about possible attacks by the RUF forces began to be heard in the District. There were rumours that the RUF forces were fast advancing to attack the mining town of Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom) and make a base there. Around 28 December 1994, SLA forces coming from Freetown were airlifted to Mokanji as reinforcements for the SSD.

Civilians were very much disturbed by the presence of the SLA forces in the District as those forces were treating them roughly and although RUF forces had not yet reached the District, civilians began to mistrust the SLA.

b) Events in 1995

On 11 January 1995, SLA forces entered Njama (Kowa Chiefdom, in the east of Moyamba District) and their commander introduced them to the Paramount Chief as troops sent from the SLA Brigade headquarter at Bo Town to secure the chiefdom, as RUF forces were on their way to the chiefdom. The SLA forces erected checkpoints in the town but departed the town on the following day, led by civilians taken to lead the way, en route to attack RUF forces that were based at Momajoe (Bagbo [1271] Reports for Tonkolili, however, do not make mention of SLA troops based at Mile 91 around this time.

[1272] Around this time, RUF forces had spread across Bo District and were approaching Bumpeh Chiefdom, which adjoins Dasse Chiefdom to its west.
[1273] Massive attacks were carried out during the Christmas week in Bo District. RUF forces first attacked an IDP camp before attacking Bo Town and major cities in its environs.

Chiefdom, south of Bo District). However, they returned to Njama later the following day, overrun by the RUF forces at Momajoe; that evening, Njama was attacked by RUF forces.

This first RUF attack into Moyamba District was the prelude of a massive operation, at the end of which RUF forces attacked and spread across most of the District. There was, however, some confusion at the time of the attack on Njama, as the SLA present in the town appeared to put up no resistance to the RUF forces and some of them were seen outside the town, rubbing black and blue materials on their faces and putting on masks. RUF forces entered the headquarter town, shooting randomly and shouting at civilians to fight them with sticks and cutlasses.[1274] As they started to set houses on fire, civilians ran away from their houses. One hundred and six houses were burnt down that day and the houses that were not burnt were looted and the shops vandalised. RUF forces molested and beat civilians, raped seven girls, whose age could not be ascertained, and killed 10 civilians, including the Chiefdom Speaker and the Paramount Chief's son and younger brother. The RUF forces spent the night in town before departed the next day, early in the morning of 14 January, with some civilians whom they had abducted to carry the load. They arrived at Mokoya (Kowa Chiefdom), where they took property from the village. No casualties were reported, as all the civilians had deserted the village before they arrived. On the same day, an SLA gunship coming from the direction of Bo shot at Njama for two hours.

On 15 January 1995, RUF forces battled with SLA coming from Mano (Dasse Chiefdom) on their way to Njama. This battle took place at Pelewahun (Kamajei Chiefdom) some six miles to the north-east of Mano. The RUF forces overpowered the SLA, which forced them to retreat hastily to Mano. Before this battle, RUF forces had attacked some villages in the extreme south-east of Kori Chiefdom, west of Kamajei Chiefdom. RUF forces attacked Njala, including the University campus, and Mosongo, where they burnt 12 houses and killed some civilians. It appeared that RUF forces then separated,[275] with one group advancing north to Kamajei Chiefdom and one going south-westward to Dasse Chiefdom.

In Kamajei Chiefdom, RUF forces attacked villages in the south of the chiefdom, including Buma and Ngiyehun. At Buma, two civilians were killed and others abducted and taken to Njala (Kori Chiefdom). Although the RUF forces did not attack Senehun, the headquarter town, most of the civilians left the town and went to live in the bush or, for those who had money, to Bo Town. RUF forces established a base at Pelewahun Kenneh, where they would stay for 11 months and from where they would launch attacks on Kori and Kamajei Chiefdoms. For example, Pelewahun[1276] was attacked on 18 February, by RUF forces dressed in military uniforms, underneath which some of them had attire adorned with the RUF initials.

The RUF group that had advanced in the direction of Dasse Chiefdom pursued the SLA forces to Mano, where they discovered that the SLA had fled the town. The RUF forces captured eight civilians and introduced themselves as "freedom fighters", coming to redeem the Sierra Leoneans from the APC regime. The RUF forces spent six hours in the town but did not inflict harm on the civilians. They then attempted to take the Mokanji road but were ambushed by the SLA on the bridge over the Taia River. Sixteen RUF members were killed and two civilians, who had attempted to escape, drowned in the river. The RUF left the area and spent the night at Benduma.

[1274] This referred to the attack on Bo Town in late December, during which RUF forces were repelled by civilians equipped with sticks and cutlasses. See Bo District for further information.
[1275] It is not clear whether they divided before or after the battle at Pelewahun.
[1276] There are two Pelewahuns in the south of Kamajei Chiefdom.

SLA forces and civilians who were in hiding returned to Mano and the SLA continued to harass civilians. People were killed on the suspicion that they were "rebels" or "rebel" collaborators. More checkpoints were established throughout the town and youths were asked to work as vigilantes, which included running the checkpoints but also doing menial work for the SLA like fetching water or cooking. When an attack was imminent, those youths were given weapons to fight.

From Benduma, the RUF forces proceeded to the south to attack Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom), the location of the Sieromco Company, a Swiss-owned company that specialised in the mining of bauxite. Prior to this attack, some SLA forces who were stationed in Mokanji had left the town for Njama (Kowa Chiefdom) to fight the RUF but were repelled at Pelewahun on 15 January and came back to the town.[1277] On 17 January, 30 SLA members, allegedly from Daru (Jawie Chiefdom, Kailahun District), were airlifted as reinforcement to Mokanji.[1278]

On 18 January 1995, the RUF forces from Banduma passed by Kabiama (Banta Chiefdom), where they abducted a diamond dealer, his wife and other civilians and continued to Mokanji, three miles from Kabiama.[1279] In Mokanji, no houses were burnt, but several civilians, both locals and foreigners, were abducted, including the personnel manager of the Sieromco company and civilians were killed, including the Government representative to the mining companies, a retired Inspector of Police, a worker from the company, a Fullah man and two SLA members. SLA forces deployed at the Sierra Rutile Company (Imperi Chiefdom, Bonthe District) came to the town, in order to consolidate the SLA forces at Mokanji and thus to protect the security of the other mining company. However, the RUF did not stay long in Mokanji and by the end of the afternoon had left the town and proceeded further south to Tongor (Banta Chiefdom) where they took a lot of civilian property. From there, they moved to Imperi Chiefdom (Bonthe District), the location of the Sierra Rutile Company, which would be attacked on 19 January 1995. Military strategists in Freetown suspected that the RUF forces would use the Sierra Rutile area as a base to access the sea through the port of Nitti (Banta Chiefdom), where major shipments of mineral products from both Sieromco and Sierra Rutile companies were exported by sea to Europe.[1280]

[1277] It is likely that they regrouped with the SLA forces who were deployed at Mano (Dasse).

[1278] A strong SLA military base was located at Daru, called Moa Barracks. This base had been attacked many times during the first years of the conflict by RUF/NPFL forces but SLA forces always repelled them, which led civilians in Mokanji to say that those SLA forces "knew how to fight". It is also alleged that this reinforcement was not too much encouraged, as the SLA forces already stationed in the town were poorly dressed in half combat, were carrying cudasses and half of them were wearing bathroom slippers.

[1279] During the attack on Mokanji, it appeared that the RUF were "all over the town", as gunshots were heard from everywhere. This may suggest two things: either RUF forces were already in the town before the attack, disguised in SLA uniforms, or some SLA forces left their ranks and joined the RUF.

[1280] Xinhua News Agency, 24 January 1995.

More SLA members were again airlifted to Mokanji to reinforce the forces already in the area. Supported by Nigerian Alpha Jets, they fought the RUF forces who had not gone to Bonthe District and who were allegedly still in the Mokanji Hills area.[1281] The workers of the mining company and their families were evacuated to Freetown. SLA forces based in Mokanji, however, began to harass civilians and to chase them out of their villages to steal their property, forcing them to live in the bush. For example, around 13 February, the SLA forces went to a bush camp in order to take civilians and to make them work for them. During their escape, a woman and her four children drowned in the Taia River. They also killed civilians they accused of being "rebel" collaborators.

For two months, the RUF forces concentrated on Bonthe District[1282] and to a limited extent on the south of Moyamba District. In February, RUF forces entered Mokele, the headquarter town of Banta Mokele Chiefdom. They burnt down the Paramount Chief's compound and four other houses and stayed in the town for two weeks before leaving. During the time of their stay, the civilians had fled to the bush. The RUF forces were also scattered in villages throughout Banta Chiefdom, including Yebanna and Mogbomo Junction in the south of the chiefdom, and asked civilians whether any SLA forces had visited their villages at any time. In late February, RUF forces coming from the rutile area (Imperi Chiefdom, Bonthe District) launched an unsuccessful attack on Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom). Until August, RUF forces would make other unsuccessful attempts to dislodge the SLA forces and to take control over the mining company.

In March 1995, a massive RUF operation was launched in Moyamba District. The pattern of the RUF actions clearly demonstrated that their goal was Freetown and that they initially did not intend to settle in Moyamba District, which they used more as a transit towards the capital. RUF forces simultaneously attacked Moyamba Junction (Fakunya Chiefdom) and Moyamba Town, following the same pattern in each attack.[1283] The group that attacked Moyamba Town would then follow the Moyamba-Freetown road, attacking the major roads on its way, before being halted in Ribbi Chiefdom, in the north-west of the District.

Prior to the attack on Moyamba Town, RUF forces attacked the town of Mokele (Banta Mokele Chiefdom). On their arrival in the town, the commander informed the civilians that they were peace-loving citizens fighting to liberate the people of Sierra Leone, which was why they were called "freedom fighters." However, no sooner had the meeting ended than the harassment of civilians begun. The forces stole civilians' property and took away all the young men and women including girls between 13 and 16 years old. They looted the township and forced the young men and women to carry the loads. Another group of RUF forces entered the town of Mosekie (Banta Mokele Chiefdom) where they had a meeting with the civilians. At the meeting people were ordered to cook for the them, after which the town was looted and the property was carried for them by young men captured in the village. Some houses were burnt but no one was killed. Around the same time, the RUF forces also entered Mokepie village (Banta Mokele Chiefdom), where they introduced themselves as "freedom fighters" and took property from civilians. They burnt down some houses in the town and abducted youths, for the purposes of recruiting them into their fighting force.[1284]

[1281] AFP, 25 January 1995.

[1282] By February 1995, all the chiefdoms in the north of Bonthe District had been attacked by RUF forces.

[1283] It is probable that the RUF group who attacked Moyamba Junction, to the north of the District came from Tonkolili District, and the one who attacked Moyamba Town came from Bonthe District.

These RUF forces, dressed in military uniforms, reached Moyamba Town (Kaiyamba Chiefdom), close to the centre of Moyamba District, on 14 March 1995. At the time of the attacks, members of the CDU were deployed in the town but had to withdraw, as they could not withstand the heavy firepower of the RUF forces; the SLA forces, similarly overpowered, also had to retreat. Twenty-five civilians were killed in the town and several young girls and women raped. The RUF forces also burnt down 23 houses, including the Moyamba Police station and took away a lot of property from civilians and shops. Captured civilians were forced to carry property taken by the RUF forces, who also captured some children to be conscripted into the fighting forces. The RUF forces spent only one night in the town and continued their way on the Moyamba-Freetown road, passing by Yoyema (Kaiyamba Chiefdom).

Another group of armed men entered the town on 17 March 1995 and set up base in the compound of the Moyamba Boys Secondary School. They introduced themselves as SLA forces and encouraged civilians to come back to the town; civilians were convinced that these were SLA forces, as they were wearing military uniforms. Furthermore, the commander introduced himself as a famous SLA officer. However, three days later, those men began breaking into houses, shops and Government buildings and taking everything they could lay their hands on. They stayed in the town for one more month, during which they harassed civilians for their domestic animals and created more havoc, killing, raping and abducting civilians. They only left the town on hearing the rumour that SLA forces were on their way to the town. Civilians then identified those armed men as RUF forces.[1285]

At Yoyema (Kaiyamba Chiefdom), which they reached on 15 March. RUF forces also beat civilians, killing some, took away all the domestic animals and left the same day, continuing their journey westwards. Five days later, another group of armed men claiming to be SLA forces reached Yoyema and, as they did in Moyamba Town, persuaded people to resettle in the town; for one week, the town was calm. However, pandemonium broke out not long after, including the massive stealing of property throughout the town, and those forces were then identified by civilians as RUF forces. These forces also left on hearing that SLA forces were approaching Moyamba Town.

The next chiefdom to the west was Kongbora and Bauya, the chiefdom headquarter town, is located on the main road. RUF forces who had left Yoyema on 15 March attacked villages on the road but by-passed Bauya. They entered Morkorewo (Kongbora Chiefdom) on 16 March and burnt down the first house of the village. They killed some people, among them two elderly people, and abducted others. Those captured civilians were to carry their property while young boys, some of whom had weapons, were to fetch water. One old man who was captured at Yoyema the day before and who [1284] Although this action was reported to have taken place on 19 March, it is likely that it took place before the attack on Moyamba Town on 14 March, as it is located in the south of the District and RUF forces reached Moyamba Town from Bonthe District, which is further south.

[1285] It is however not clear whether those armed men where RUF forces or ex-SLA forces deserting their positions and acting like the RUF. Civilians however recounted that they were RUF forces in disguise.

told them he was tired to carry the load was killed. The RUF forces stole property from the old part of the village and stayed for three days, during which time they killed some civilians and took all the livestock. These RUF forces were accompanied by men and women fulfilling different missions, some of them being engineers, cooks, first aid men, load carriers or road map directors.

The headquarter town of Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom), which is also located on the main road, was attacked in the afternoon of 18 March 1995. Civilians were abducted and killed; people coming to the town one week later found a lot of bodies in the centre of the town, some already beginning to decompose. Many houses were burnt, mostly on City Road, and property was taken. The day before this attack, armed men introducing themselves as SLA forces had come to the town. However, on the day of the attack, those armed men took red pieces of cloth out of their pockets and tied them around their heads. This made civilians understand that those armed men were not SLA forces coming to protect them as they pretended but RUF forces.[1286] Before leaving the town, the forces wrote on some of the houses: "RUF heading for the city Freetown – we will be back soon".

RUF forces then attacked the headquarter town of Bradford (Ribbi Chiefdom), to the north-west of Rotifunk. All the civilians in the town ran into the bush while the forces burnt down many houses, killed 13 civilians and took a lot of property. They were however repelled by SLA forces who had come from Freetown on three trucks the day before. During the fighting, one RUF member and two SLA members were killed. Although they had defeated the RUF, the SLA forces did not stay in the town.

After the attack on Bradford and their encounter with SLA forces, RUF forces came back to Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom). They established a camp, known as "Camp Fol Fol",[1287] located in a strategic position on a hilly hideout at the border with four chiefdoms, Bumpeh, Ribbi and Kongbora Chiefdoms (Moyamba District) and Yoni Chiefdom (Tonkolili District). From this camp, they went on to attack villages, notably the villages surrounding Rotifunk, where they killed civilians and took property. At Berembu, a woman was killed and in Makombrabai the RUF forces killed three people, one woman and two men. At Mokeboi, five miles from Rotifunk, no one was killed but several people were captured and property was taken. Old men and women were forced to carry the stolen property, including mattresses, rice, palm oil, gari and cattle, while young boys and girls were taken to the RUF base for training and recruitment. One young boy who attempted to run in order not to be abducted was shot and killed by an RUF member. When they reached Levuma, in the north-west of Kongbora Chiefdom, near their base, RUF forces released the carriers, as they did not want them to know the location of their base. A guard place or second camp was established at Motokoh, two and a half miles from Camp Fol Fol, where civilians abducted to carry loads from the villages were released and told to return to their villages. RUF forces also made several visits to Rotifunk town, which was completely deserted by civilians for some weeks. All these attacks led many civilians to find refuge in the centre of the chiefdom, notably in Bumpeh, a village virtually only accessible by the Bumpeh River, which originates in the ocean.

[1286] The red headband was characteristic of the RUF forces who had worn it since the beginning of the conflict. This red headband distinguished them from the NPFL forces during the early stages of the conflict.

[1287] This camp was reported spelled in two different ways, the alternative one being "Camp Fall Fall".

More than 200 RUF members, armed with AK47s, RPGs and a Anti Aircraft gun mounted on a lorry, attacked Bauya (Kongbora Chiefdom) sometime in March.[1288] Several buildings were burnt, including the Chief's house, the Secondary School, the Court Barrie and the market. More than 30 people were killed and a lot of property was taken. From Bauya, they attacked the surrounding villages. Besides Camp Fol Fol, a secondary training base was opened at Levuma (north-west of Kongbora Chiefdom). The area soon became deserted, as the RUF forces were settled and in control of the area.

In the other wave of attacks occurring concurrently with the attacks on Moyamba Town, Moyamba Junction (Fakunya Chiefdom) was attacked on 14 March 1995, probably by RUF forces coming from Tonkolili District.[1289] Early in the afternoon, armed men with full military uniforms entered the town with sporadic shooting; giving no excuse for the shooting, they left the town towards Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District), where they claimed they came from.[1290] Late in the evening, those armed men came back and attacked the town again. At the time of the attack, the SLA forces posted there were nowhere to be found. The RUF forces burnt down nine houses and captured several people. These forces then went south, attacked Waterloo in the evening and proceeded on to Njagbahun Junction, where SLA forces were based. Although no fatalities are reported, RUF forces succeeding in capturing a lot of newly supplied arms and ammunition from the SLA. From Njagbahun, they headed back in the direction of Waterloo and, on their way, attacked Kpetema Fanday at midnight. Property was taken and several people were captured in the town.[1291] On 15 March, civilians who had been abducted from Moyamba Junction and surrounding villages were forced to carry the stolen property to an RUF camp called "Borkor One" near Lumleblu village.[1292]

In about mid April 1995, the RUF forces attacked Motobong (Bumpeh Chiefdom), 16 miles from Rotifunk. As they opened fire while entering the village, civilians ran into the bush. The RUF forces shot two cows and took away other domestic animals to Moshibara Junction, where they entered the town, killed one woman and wounded another civilian. They then advanced to Moshemoi, capturing many civilians without resistance or the need for gunfire during the night. They asked a girl to show them the direction of the Paramount Chief's farm and, as they realised she gave them the wrong direction on purpose, they raped her. They then gave her Le 10,000, telling her that they would come back for her, and left for their base at Camp Fol Fol.

The SLA forces who had earlier prompted RUF forces, disguised as SLA members, to leave Moyamba Town in late March/early April, arrived in Moyamba Town on or around 20 April 1995. The SLA forces defended the town from several more attacks by the RUF forces, who never [1288] Although it took place in March, this attack may have taken place before the establishment of Camp Fol Fol. It is also possible that some of the RUF forces had settled in villages in Kongbora Chiefdom, while the bulk of the RUF forces were heading to Rotifunk (Bumpe Chiefdom). Accordingly, the exact date of these events could not be ascertained. They took place either before or after the Rotifunk and Bradford attacks.

---

[1289] Around the same period, RUF forces attacked Mile 91, a strategic town on the highway to Freetown, in Tonkolili District.

[1290] At this time, SLA forces were deployed in Mile 91 in Tonkolili District.

[1291] No further information was available on this event.

[1292] Although the location of this camp could not be ascertained, it was probably a secondary camp.

succeeded in retaking the town. Their stay in the town was described as "peaceful" and no acts of violence against civilians were reported.

Probably coming from Camp Fol Fol, RUF forces came to Rotifunk (Ribbi Chiefdom) around 14 June 1995, although at that time, most of the people were living in the bush. On their way to Rotifunk, they came across a civilian at Mokaikono, whom they asked to lead them to the other civilians in the bush. As he did not want to disclose their location, he was hit with a bladed weapon and left for dead in the bush. The man however survived and after two days, managed to go back to his camp.

Sometime between June and July, Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom) was attacked for the fourth time by RUF forces probably coming from Bonthe District. They were repelled by SLA forces and 28 of them were killed. No SLA member or civilian was killed but SLA forces were actively engaged in stealing and vandalising the Sieromco Company.[1293]

During August 1995, the upper part of Bumpeh Chiefdom was under the control of the RUF forces. Villages in Bumpeh Chiefdom including Berembu, Topkumbu, Mosenesse, Kpamgbaya, Komrabai and Yenkissa were attacked. The RUF forces burnt a house at Tokpumbu and took the property of a civilian at Kpamgbaya. In that town, they also forced a man who was a Muslim and had never drunk wine in his life to drink alcohol; as his wife came out of the bush crying, she was shot and killed and acid was sprinkled on her body. The town of Mokebbi was attacked for the second time by the RUF forces and they proceeded to Mogbindi. Finding nobody in the town, they burnt all the houses there.

At that time, however, RUF forces were launching those attacks by group of 20 to 30 men, of whom only four to five had guns. It thus appeared that the progression force of the RUF as evidenced by their attacks on Moyamba Junction, Moyamba Town and the main towns on the highway had come to a halt during this period, and RUF forces were more engaged in looting.

In October 1995, another wave of attacks were carried out in Fakunya Chiefdom, by RUF forces coming from their main base at Camp Fol Fol. On 9 October 1995, they passed through the towns of Rotawa, Falaba Gbotima and arrived at Sembehun Kortuwabu, where they set up a temporary base. Many civilians were captured in the town on their arrival. The commander informed the people of the town that they were RUF forces and that both the town and all its surrounding villages were under their control. The RUF forces attacked neighbouring towns and villages and various items were stolen, including food products such as rice, groundnut, pepper and palm oil as well as personal effects, including tape recorders, radios, clocks, clothing and cameras. In those villages, some women were raped. On 10 October 1995, the RUF forces attacked the town of Kpangbama. After they entered the town, the RUF commander ordered the forces not to shoot, so they did not shoot. Over 100 people were captured, including women, including suckling mothers, and children. The captured civilians were forced to carry property stolen from the town to Sembehun Kortuwabu, escorted by one RUF group, while another group left intending to attack Njagbahun Junction but instead went back to Sembehun Kortuwabu, as they did not find any SLA forces at the Junction.

[1293] RUF forces carried out a fifth and last attack on Mokanji in August but were, once more, repelled by SLA forces.

Other attacks were launched in the surrounding villages of Ngandorhun, Kwellu, and Falaba. The attacks were successful and a lot of property was taken. Again, captured civilians were forced to carry the stolen property to Sembehun. SLA forces who had come from Moyamba Town staged an ambush for the RUF forces but, as they could not withstand the firepower of the RUF, they went back to Moyamba Town. Some captured civilians managed to escape during the crossfire. In retaliation for the attack, RUF forces burnt down Kpangbama, accusing civilians of having warned the SLA they were there. Over 100 goats from the surrounding villages were killed and smoked, for later consumption at Camp Fol Fol. During their six-day stay in Sembehun Kortuwabu, RUF forces raped women and many girls, sometimes aged below 11, and killed three civilians who attempted to escape.

On 14 October, the RUF commander sent a message to Camp Fo. Fol for the High Command to send more men, both captured civilians and RUF members, to collect the looted items, as he, and his troops, together with the civilians captured in the area were heading for Njala University (south-east of Kori Chiefdom). The commander told the civilians that this university would not function until the RUF took over government.[1294] RUF forces entered the town of Mokorewa (Fakunya Chiefdom) on 15 October 1995 and took property, mainly personnel items like tape recorders, radios and clothing, from several houses. Two civilians were killed and several more were captured. They told the civilians they came from Sembehun Kortuwabu and were heading for Njala University. Just over a week later, on 24 October, the forces visited the town again and attacked surrounding villages, stealing property, raping and sexually harassing women and young girls. They stayed at Mokorewa for four days, during which time they abducted many civilians, the majority of whom were children. Civilians were forced to carry stolen property for the RUF forces.[1295]

A subsequent attack was launched on Sembehun Kortuwabu and its environs around 2 December 1995. A large number of the RUF members were children between the ages of 12 and 15 years, who had been captured in schools in Lunsar, Port Loko Town (Port Loko District) or Kambia. Civilians were captured and maltreated by the RUF forces in an attempt to learn where the civilians were keeping their food and sexual violence was rampant.[1296] From December to March 1997, it appeared that the civilians in Fakunya Chiefdom suffered greatly, as both RUF and SLA forces raided their villages and camps in the bush, mainly to steal food and other property; some of the civilians were beaten and some women were raped.

On 15 December 1995, RUF forces coming from Camp Fol Fol reached the north of Kagboro Chiefdom, to the south of Bumpeh Chiefdom. At this time, an influx of people had arrived in Shenge, the headquarter town located by the ocean, south of Kagboro Creek. The RUF forces came [1294] Njala University was attacked by RUF forces on 27 December 1995. BBC Summary of World Broadcasts, 28 December 1995.

---

[1295] This attack on Mokorewa may have been carried out a few days earlier, before the RUF forces sent their message to Camp Fol Fol.

[1296] No more details were available on this information.

mainly for the purposes of finding food and, as they had done earlier in the beginning of 1995, introduced themselves as SLA forces. They entered Morkandor, where they took away domestic animals before continuing their journey to nearby villages, including Bandasuma and Mokana. In all these villages, they abducted civilians to carry the loads, mainly consisting of domestic animals, to their base at Camp Fol Fol. Civilians were warned by the RUF commander that they would be killed if they could not continue the journey. When they arrived near the base, those civilians were released and told to go back to their villages.

Following these attacks, a CDU comprised of civilians with cutlasses, swords and a few shotguns was formed in Kagboro Chiefdom. In addition, the attacks on Bumpeh Chiefdom led the elders to hold a meeting in Moyeamoh in December, at which they sought to find means by which they could repel the RUF forces. One Section Chief asked all the civilians with hunting rifles to surrender them to the Chiefs. Only nine guns could be gathered and 29 youths gave themselves up for training and to form a CDU.[1297]

On 28 December 1995, RUF forces attacked Senehun, the headquarter town of Kamajei Chiefdom, where they killed 28 civilians, burnt houses and took property, mainly money and other valuables. As a result of the attack, most of the civilians left the town and went to camps in Bo and Freetown.

e) Events in 1996

Kamajors from Bonthe District came to Moyamba District to assist the CDUs in the defence of their chiefdoms. At that time also, members of the CDUs and other young men progressively became initiated into the Kamajor society. They initially went to Bonthe District before initiation ceremonies began to be performed in Moyamba District. In February, the first Kamajors of Kagboro Chiefdom came back to the chiefdom from their initiation.

In early 1996, members of the newly formed CDU of Bumpeh Chiefdom had their first encounter with RUF forces between Moyah and Mogbainchain (Bumpeh Chiefdom). They staged an ambush, killing two RUF members, capturing one and taking two AK47s.[1298] Soon after, a few Kamajors from Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District) came to the chiefdom and started patrolling in the area, looking out for RUF members. They went to Moyah, where they joined the members of the CDU. In February, both the Kamajors and the members of the CDU went to attack Motokoh, the guard place or secondary camp near Camp Fol Fol. As they took the RUF forces by surprise, they succeeded in dislodging them. They killed some RUF members, took some arms and ammunition, destroyed the base and went back to Moyah. The relations between the Kamajors and the members of the CDU, however, began to deteriorate and they started to quarrel over the Kamajors behaviour. Their main complaints were that the Kamajors wanted the CDU to be their juniors, because the Kamajors had mystical powers; they were harassing civilians, beating them up whenever they did something wrong; and they were taxing civilians and treating the Chiefs and elders without respect.

Initiation ceremonies began to take place at Taninehun (Kongbora Chiefdom) in early 1996 at first only for men recommended by the Section Chiefs. Prior to this, in 1995, a few men had left the [1297] Those men were not initiated Kamajors.

[1298] It could not be ascertained what happened to the captured RUF member.

Chiefdom to be initiated as Kamajors and had come back to the chiefdom, chasing the RUF who were sporadically raiding small villages, taking away property, abducting young boys and girls and killing some people.[1299] As more and more men were initiated, the Kamajors established checkpoints across the chiefdom, notably three in Bauya, the chiefdom headquarter town. An administration for the Kamajors was set up in the chiefdom with the following positions: Supreme Leader and Initiator, Deputy Initiator and Battalion Commander, Deputy Battalion Commander, Chiefdom Ground Commander and Commanders. Kamajors, equipped with hunting guns, swords, spears, knifes and other bladed weapons did not initially attack identified RUF positions but began by staging ambushes, capturing small groups of RUF forces on food finding missions. They killed a lot of RUF members and took their arms and ammunition. As their number grew, the Kamajors began organising their deployment in strategic areas of the chiefdom.

Before the elections scheduled for 26 February, RUF forces entered Moyoka (Fakunya Chiefdom), and killed with bladed weapons eight civilians attending a church service. They then headed for Moyolo and on their way, killed a man and left the body in the bush. On approaching Moyolo, some entered the bush and encircled the town while others in military uniforms and Kamajors attire entered the town, telling people they had come to talk about the initiation process. Youths came from their different locations and the RUF forces disguised in SLA members and Kamajors[1300] ordered them to assemble at the Court Barrie. The civilians were told to undress and were kept locked in houses. Some 18 civilians were then taken out of the houses, were set on fire and died. As this was going on, three women were raped by many RUF members and were then mutilated, one being forced to sit in a solution of caustic soda and another had her breast cut off with a knife. The third woman was sexually assaulted with a stick, as a result of which she died. Five more civilians including two children aged 12 and 15 were taken out of their houses and, after they were told by the RUF forces to identify which was their predominant hand, this hand was cut off.

The RUF forces left the next morning and one day later, SLA forces from Njagbahun came to the town. They told civilians who were burying their relatives that they had come to assess the damage caused by the RUF forces. However, they took civilians' property, including domestic animals, rice, groundnut and clothing. Three days later, SLA forces came back to the nearby villages of Mobayngahun, Salima, Bembeh, Mopotey, Njala Gofor, Gbeworbu, Potehun and Batama, where they took property, forced civilians to carry the load to their base at Njagbahun and sexually harassed women.

After the February elections, RUF forces came back to Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom) and burnt down more houses, but by this time most of the civilians had deserted the town. RUF forces were described as being "totally out of control", as each time they went to a village, they burnt down houses, took away property and killed anybody that they came across.

The north-east of Kamajei Chiefdom was attacked by RUF forces coming from Valunia Chiefdom (Bo District), to the east of Kamajei Chiefdom. They established a base in Yelina Section in March [1299] It could not be ascertained where they went for the initiation ceremony.

[1300] It is also suggested that those RUF forces introduced themselves as officers of the Interim National Electoral Commission (INEC), coming to educate the people of the town about the electoral system.

1996 and abducted some young boys and girls to carry loads and to show them the various routes and passages through the chiefdom. In the same month, Kamajors arrived in the chiefdom to protect Gondama.[1301] The Kamajors attacked the RUF forces in Yelina section and rescued many civilians, who they then brought to Gondama. However, Gondama was attacked shortly after, with over 30 people being killed by the RUF forces, and the Kamajors left the town. Most of the people killed were civilians recently brought to Gondama by the Kamajors and, accordingly, did not know any escape routes. During this attack, the RUF forces did not burn any houses but took away property, mainly livestock.

In late March/early April 1996, RUF forces attacked the town of Mokainsay (Kagboro Chiefdom), in the south of the District. At first, the Kamajors put up a stiff resistance but they were soon forced to withdraw, as they ran out of ammunition. The RUF burnt some buildings, including a mosque. They left the town and two days later, killed an old man in his hammock and burnt houses at Mojana, in the east of the chiefdom. The RUF forces then retreated to their base at Camp Fol Fol.

Bagruwa Chiefdom, also in the south of the District, was attacked by RUF forces for the first time around April 1996. RUF forces coming from the north of Bonthe District through Banta Chiefdom arrived in the south of Bagruwa Chiefdom.[1302] At this time, the Paramount Chief hired Kamajors from Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District) to defend the chiefdom. RUF forces were dislodged in a fierce battle at Mogboi. The battle lasted for several hours and a large number of RUF forces were killed. At Matiru Bangay, one Kamajor killed a civilian on the allegation that he was an RUF collaborator.

In late May, RUF forces came back to Kagboro Chiefdom and attacked Mokobo (north-east of the chiefdom) for the second time, with the intention to establish a base there. They stayed in the town for two days, stealing civilians' property in the town and in the surrounding villages and forcing civilians to carry the load. These attacks led civilians to desert the town and go to live in the bush. The RUF forces then divided into four groups and scattered throughout the chiefdom, including at Tissana, Morkandor, Bandajuma, Mokana, Suen and Mohiteh, where they harassed civilians, stole their property and forced them to carry the load. They also made a rapid incursion into Timdel Chiefdom, east of Kagboro Chiefdom.

RUF forces attacked Sembehun, the headquarter town of Bagruwa Chiefdom, around 3 June. They broke into all the houses, took away property and captured four boys and four girls who cooked for the RUF forces at their temporary base at Kongonani.[1303] They then left the area, heading in the direction of Bonthe District. On their way, they stopped at Mokassie, where they released some civilians they had abducted but killed one man because he refused to go with them. Another man was killed for the same reason at Jondu. Following the attack on the town, CDUs were formed in Sembehun and young people, equipped with sticks, machetes and shotguns, established checkpoints.

[1301] This is a different Gondama Town from the one in Bo District, which hosted an IDP camp.

[1302] At the time of this attack, RUF force had already been dislodged from their positions in the north of Bonthe District and had scattered throughout the bush.

[1303] It is not clear whether those children were released after doing the cooking.

Around May or June 1996, a new wave of attacks were carried out in Fakunya Chiefdom and its environs by RUF forces using Falaba Gbotima village as their base. They raped women and took property in more than 30 villages in the area, capturing several civilians who were forced to transport their loads to Falaba Gbotima. Around the same period, Kamajors who went to be initiated came to Kwellu together with some Kamajors from Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District) and began engaging the RUF forces, who were continuing their attacks on the small villages of the area. Between June and July, Kamajors based at Kwellu heard that RUF forces were going on looting sprees in Kpangama, Gbengbedu and Mayendu. Four Kamajors met the RUF forces at Nyandehun and engaged them in battle, which left some civilians and some RUF forces, including their commander, dead. The following day, 45 RUF members came to Nyandehun to find their commander, as they could not believe four Kamajors had defeated them and killed their commander. They found the body of their commander displayed at the centre of the village and in retaliation, burnt the village. On their return to Falaba Gbotima, they captured a civilian whom they then mutilated and killed. While still alive, his genital organ was cut off and forcibly put in his mouth. His stomach was then slit open and his intestines tied across a stick by the side of the road. At the time of these attacks, the SLA forces were still based at Njagbahun, four miles from Nyandehun, but did not make any move. They would later comment on this by saying that the area was "divided" and as the RUF forces had not come to their area, there was no need for them to go and attack the RUF forces.

As Kamajors continued to attack RUF positions in Yelina Section (Kamajei Chiefdom), RUF forces launched a second attack on Gondama (Kamajei Chiefdom) around 28 June 1996. No casualties were reported, as most of the civilians were by then living in the bush, but the RUF forces burnt down the town. This attack was the last ones in the area, as the Kamajors started patrolling around Gondama. In the neighbouring chiefdom of Kori, Kamajors deployed at Wayima (north-east of the chiefdom), where they mistreated civilians and passers-by, notably by imprisoning them in cages made of thorns. On one occasion, they severely beat the Village Chief of Kerumah, near Wayima, on the grounds that he had made a statement against Kamajors. On another occasion, those Kamajors from Wayima killed three brothers who had travelled from Markoli to Kerumah to meet their mother, accusing them of being RUF members. When their father came to enquire about what had happened to them, he was hit with a bladed weapon and killed.

Around June, the Paramount Chief of Bagruwa Chiefdom sent 70 young men to be initiated at Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District). Prior to this development in the chiefdom, some members of the SSD had been sent to the headquarter town of Sembehun to protect the town from RUF attacks. However, those SSD members soon began to harass civilians, moving from village to village and taking away civilians' property, including domestic animals. On one occasion, they killed one young man at Gbangbatoke Junction. This harassment prompted the Paramount Chief to request the presence of Kamajors in the Chiefdom and to report the matter to the Paramount Chief of Kaiyamba Chiefdom. While the Kamajors did come back to Bagruwa Chiefdom, they also soon began harassing civilians.

On 13 July 1996, RUF forces entered Waterloo Town (Fakunya chiefdom) for the second time, from the direction of Rogboya (Fakunya Chiefdom). One of the RUF forces, described as a young boy, killed a civilian. On their arrival in the town, an old deaf man was in his garden, working with a machete, and as he did not drop his machete when told to do so by the RUF forces, a child soldier shot and killed him. During this attack on Waterloo, RUF forces burnt down 23 houses and attacked nearby villages, including Kondiama, Tombay Gbahama and Togbie. In those villages, a lot of property was taken away and civilians were abducted to carry the stolen property to the RUF base at "Camp Fol Fol".

Between June and August, RUF forces battled with Kamajors in Nyaogihun (Kagboro Chiefdom). Four members of the CDF were killed, including their commander. The RUF forces beheaded two of the bodies, cut their stomachs open and displayed their intestines across the road at a checkpoint. The RUF forces then burnt the village before crossing over to neighbouring villages in Timdel Chiefdom where they took property, mainly cattle, and harassed civilians. At this time, Timdel Chiefdom had no Kamajors, as it had never been attacked by RUF forces and the Paramount Chief paid for Kamajors to come from other chiefdoms, requesting subscriptions from the civilians to pay for their services.

As this harassment on Timdel Chiefdom grew, Kamajors from Kagboro Chiefdom went to Bumpeh Chiefdom to obtain reinforcements. They agreed with the Kamajors from Bumpeh that each would send reinforcements to the other chiefdom when it was under attack. Kamajors from the two chiefdoms went to Timdel Chiefdom and staged an ambush near Mokobo (Kagboro Chiefdom), killing many RUF forces. The remaining RUF forces fled the area but promised they would come back. More men from Kagboro Chiefdom were initiated, in Banta Chiefdom and in Kangahun (Kaiyamba Chiefdom) and deployed in different sections of the chiefdom in or around October. Men from Timdel Chiefdom were sent for initiation in Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District). No further RUF attacks took place in Timdel Chiefdom and the Kamajors established a base at Mosanda.

Around August, armed men claiming to be SLA forces arrived in Yoyema Town (Kayima Chiefdom), soon followed by another group composed only of women. Despite their claims, civilians understood that they were actually RUF forces, because the initials "RUF" were written on the weapons carried by the women. The RUF forces sent a message to the SLA commander in Moyamba Town. The SLA forces went to Yoyema and after a fierce battle, repelled the RUF forces out of the town.[1304] The SLA commander left some troops in the town and went back to Moyamba Town. The SLA forces left in Yoyema took away civilian's property and left for Moyamba Town three days later. RUF forces came back to Yoyema and stayed for five days, during which they maltreated and killed some civilians, raped some women and abducted about 20 children for conscription.

[1304] This event could, however have taken place in June, as around this period, Moyamba Town was under RUF siege and SLA forces thought the RUF were provoking them to violate the ceasefire, signed earlier that year following the elections: AFP, 7 June 1996.

Around the same time, SLA forces were asked to leave Moyamba Town by the people. It seems that following all the reports of SLA harassment across the District, the Paramount Chief of Kaiyamba asked the Government to withdraw the SLA forces, which he did. After the departure of the SLA forces, the people of the town decided to initiate themselves as Kamajors so that they could defend themselves, since they did not want any SLA forces in the town. The men in the town made it clear that the Kamajor society was only open to people who were Mende by tribe and taxed every household to pay a contribution of Le 1,000. Whoever did not pay the contribution was tied with a FM rope.[1305]

However, the Kamajors engaged in continuous harassment of civilians, including taking property, forcing women into marriage and sexually harassing them. The Kamajors also killed two SSD officers in Moyamba Town, taking their guns and uniforms. Those Kamajors went to Yoyema after the RUF departure from the town. They told civilians to call those who were hiding in the bush and "screened" them, looking for RUF members and collaborators. As in Moyamba Town, they taxed each household as a contribution to their feeding before leaving the town.[1306]

A large number of RUF forces returned to Kagboro Chiefdom in November. Having seen this large group, Kamajors from Mokobo asked for more reinforcements from the other sections. In the meanwhile, two Kamajors who had advanced on the RUF forces were killed. Their bodies were beheaded and their intestines were tied on two sticks across the road to act as a checkpoint. At Nyayagoihun, the RUF forces killed two pregnant women and three children, who were hiding under a bed, and burnt the houses of the village.[1307] Around the same period, RUF forces made another incursion in Bagruwa Chiefdom. They killed one man at Moseinongor and burnt three houses at Ngayebu. They also encountered SLA forces from Moyamba Town who were patrolling the area and some fatalities on both sides were reported. As they approached Gbangbatoke Junction, they burnt two commercial vehicles going to Shenge (Kagboro Chiefdom) but the passengers managed to escape by running into the bush. The RUF forces then left the area and went back up north.

At around this time, the Kamajors began increasing their numbers and, consequently, began putting in place structures for better coordination amongst themselves. Kamajors from Kagboro, Timdel and Bagruwa Chiefdom organised themselves and appointed one man as the Chief Kamajor for the region. Men from Banta Mokele Chiefdom were sent for initiation to Tihun (Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District). Around the same period, Kamajors from Bonthe District arrived at Mano, the headquarter town of Dasse Chiefdom. However, as time went on, Kamajors started harassing civilians and summary executions of alleged collaborators took place at the Kamajor base at Mosanda. On one occasion, a man was brought to Mosanda from Sembehun (Bagruwa Chiefdom), was beaten and put in a cage made of thorns for one full day before being released.

[1305] This rope had two sticks on its edges. "FM" means "frequency modulation", for it was believed that once tied with such a rope, anyone would talk.

[1306] No more information was available on these events.

[1307] Although it seems that the RUF forces were repelled from the chiefdom, there is no further report on fighting with Kamajors in the chiefdom. In the south of Bumpe Chiefdom (north of Kagboro Chiefdom), RUF forces battled for two days with Kamajors before being chased away.

By the end of the year, probably around November, the Kamajors from Kongbora Chiefdom launched their first attack on RUF positions at Levuma, north-west of the chiefdom. The Kamajors shot down a helicopter and succeeded in dislodging the RUF forces from their positions. A large cache of arms, ammunition and weapons that the Kamajors did not have so far – in particular AK47s and RPGs – was captured. Following this successful attack, Kamajors launched an offensive on Camp Fol Foi, the main RUF base in the area. The battle went on for two days and the RUF forces were eventually dislodged.[1308] Kamajors came back from this battle with a lot of arms and ammunition and other property, including televisions and fridges. These victories led more and more men to be initiated into the society, fighting the RUF stationed in the north-west of the chiefdom. Kamajors brought back a lot of RUF members and people they suspected of being RUF members or collaborators and killed them; civilians recounted that they regularly heard that a "rebel" had been captured and that they knew he was going to be "washed", meaning killed.

In December 1996, RUF forces entered Benge (Bumpeh Chiefdom) where they killed a civilian who refused to have sex with his mother. They proceeded to other villages like Mobainda and Nyadahun (Bumpeh Chiefdom) where they took a lot of property from civilians.

In late 1996 and probably after the Abidjan Peace Agreement of 30 November, civilians refused to allow deployment of SLA forces in the District. By 1996, the population of Moyamba had developed a complete distrust of SLA forces, since the RUF forces who came to the District were wearing military uniforms and the SLA forces deployed in the District, mainly in Kaiyamba, Fakunya and Banta Chiefdoms, were harassing civilians.

d) Events in 1997

At the beginning of the year, resettlement of displaced persons, which had began in late 1997, continued as the Government declared the Southern Province safe for resettlement.[1309] Nevertheless, the year continued to be marked by violence against civilians and between all the different fighting factions.

On 3 January 1997, SLA forces based at Taiama (Kori Chiefdom), together with SLA forces from Bo Town, attacked Kamajors at Taiama. Prior to this event, tension between the SLA and Kamajors deployed at Taiama had built up to the extent that both forces were controlling different checkpoints in the town. In late December, one SLA member destroyed a Kamajor checkpoint in the town; civilians were killed during the subsequent attack in January. SLA forces then headed to [1308] The RUF spokesman stated that the constant attacks on their main bases in the District from the air and the land around 9 and 11 November were undermining the peace process. Furthermore, conflicting information was reported about the crash of a helicopter in the Rotifunk area. According to the RUF, this was an SLA helicopter bringing reinforcements to strategic sites in preparation for a ground assault while it carried out aerial bombardment on RUF bases. The RUF claimed to have brought it down with an Anti-Aircraft weapon. However, military sources spoke about a helicopter bringing relief supplies, which had to undertake an emergency landing after developing engine trouble and was then set on fire by the Kamajors: AFP, 13 November 1996.

[1309] This resettlement went on in various areas in the south and at the same period, thousands of IDPs left the camps in Bo District and returned to Pujehun District.

Njala, south of Kori Chiefdom. On their way to Njala, those SLA forces stopped by Mokonde, where they ransacked the hospital. At Njala University, they went to a "customers store", broke into it and took everything they could carry away with them.

In January, villages in the Kovella Section (Fakunya Chiefdom) were tasked with sending men for initiation at Kwellu (Fakunya Chiefdom). On 30 January, Kamajors battled with the SLA troops based at Njagbahun for two hours before dislodging the SLA from the town, killing some SLA members during the battle. This battle was the last of a series of fights between the two fighting factions in the chiefdom.

On 26 January, Kamajors attacked the SLA forces based in Mokanji (Banta Chiefdom), allegedly because those forces had been stealing property. The Kamajors were defeated by the SLA forces and three SLA members, a lot of Kamajors, including the son of the High Priest and Chief Initiator, and some civilians were killed. Three days later, the SLA forces were transferred to Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District),[1310] leaving the way open for the Kamajors to settle in the town and erect checkpoints. Soon, they began harassing and ill-treating civilians; any person found having a link with a member of the SLA member was targeted and killed. Kamajors also cleared out what was left in the Sieromco Company during an operation they named "Operation clear all".[1311] Some months later in the south of the District, at Gbessebu (Kamajei Chiefdom), SLA forces killed a Kamajor while they were going to Pelewahun (Kamajei Chiefdom).

In February 1997, tired and hungry RUF forces entered Kawama (Kori Chiefdom) on a food finding mission. They asked civilians to cook for them and took away civilians' property. They also took with them five strong men to carry the load and three young girls between the ages of 15 to 18 years; since that time, their fate remains unknown.

Since they had taken control of Moyamba Town, in around August 1996, Kamajors had been mistreating the civilians in the town. Indeed, for the inhabitants of Moyamba Town, the only difference between the Kamajors and RUF forces was that the Kamajors were in the towns, while RUF forces were in the bush. In February 1997, Kamajors from Moyamba Town went to Korgbotuma, where they beat the Village Chief for two days and forced him to swallow stones, as a result of which he died. The villagers were then taxed Le 400 as a contribution to the Kamajors, who burnt the houses of those who did not pay. Kamajors also stole most of the remaining property in the town, including zinc from the houses and zinc recently provided by an International NGO. Civilians were forced to give money and rice every two weeks and whoever did not do so was killed.

Sometime between January and May 1997, RUF forces attacked Mano (Dasse Chiefdom) but were repelled by Kamajors from Bonthe District who had deployed in the chiefdom in late 1996. This attack prompted the chiefdom elders to initiate their own Kamajors and civilians were asked to contribute a small amount of money for the initiation ceremonies. A Kamajor administration was [1310] Around this time, SLA forces were deployed at Mile 91, where fighting with the CDF was also reported.

[1311] Later during the year, in November, the Sieromco Director contracted Executive Outcomes to protect a team sent to evaluate the damage at Mokanji: Africa Energy & Mining, 11 September 1996. Executive Outcomes was a mercenary company hired by the Government of Sierra Leone in 1995.

put in place in the chiefdom and the following positions were established and filled: Chiefdom Ground Commander, Deputy Chiefdom Ground Commander, Section Commanders, Patrol Commander and Welfare Officers (AG). The Welfare Officers were generally civilians appointed by Kamajors to act as a liaison between the civilians and the Kamajors.

Shortly after the Coup on 25 May, which saw the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council overthrow the government and seize power, RUF forces from Bumpeh Chiefdom left their camp and went to Freetown to join the AFRC regime.[1312] However, they later returned to Rotifunk, the headquarter town, and took away the zinc from the remaining houses. RUF forces brought the zinc to Waterloo (Western Area),[1313] where they met their business partners. All the Kamajors from the chiefdom assembled at Mokkebi, ready to attack RUF/AFRC forces if they came back, which they did two days later and were attacked by the Kamajors.[1314]

After the Coup, the AFRC forces made an announcement over the radio that Kamajors should lay down their arms and surrender to the nearest Police Station, which the Kamajors in Moyamba District did not do. RUF/AFRC forces established checkpoints from Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom) to Mabang (Ribbi Chiefdom, at the boundary with Port Loko District) and on the highway, as they knew there were Kamajors in Bumpeh Chiefdom. Nevertheless, the Kamajors continued their attacks, and after few months, they had succeeded pushing the RUF/AFRC forces beyond the Mabang Bridge, thus controlling Ribbi, Bumpeh, Kongbora and Kayima Chiefdoms.

From May 1997 until January 1998, the RUF/AFRC forces killed a number of civilians travelling on the Taiama (Kori chiefdom) to Bo (Kakua Chiefdom, Bo District) highway, during which time they also took a lot of property from the travellers. Men were particular targets, as the RUF/AFRC forces alleged that any man in Kamajei and Kori Chiefdoms was either a Kamajor or a Kamajor supporter. Kamajors from Kamajei Chiefdom, together with some Kamajors from Mongere (Valunia Chiefdom), also ambushed vehicles they claimed to belong to AFRC members. The stolen property was taken to Gondama (Kamajei Chiefdom) and to Mongere. Civilians in this area were therefore caught between the two fighting factions.

On 5 June 1997, RUF forces from Kailahun District and en route to Freetown to join the AFRC regime raided the town of Senehun (Kamajei Chiefdom). They took a lot of property from the civilians, as a result of which civilians fled the town. On 7 June, RUF/AFRC forces entered Moyamba Town, although it had been under Kamajor control since August 1996, when Kamajors forced the SLA forces out of town. RUF/AFRC forces killed 12 civilians and took away property, leaving the same day and promising they would come back.

Around 16 June, RUF/AFRC forces entered Yoyema (Kaiyamba Chiefdom), where RUF forces had been repelled around August 1996. They told civilians they had come to thank them for voting for [1312] It is not clear whether an attack on the camp took place in 1996 and, if it took place, whether the RUF forces went back to the camp afterwards.

---

[1313] There are two Waterloo Towns in Sierra Leone, one in the Western Area and one in the north of Fakunya Chiefdom.

[1314] The outcome of this battle and any casualties could not be ascertained.

the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP). They burnt down many houses in the town and killed a tremendous number of civilians.

Since the Kamajors had been in control of Kagboro, Timdel and Bagruwa Chiefdoms, in the south of the District, since late 1996, there was a shift in their organisation. At this time, the Kamajors were identified in two different categories: the "old" and the "new"; it was believed that most of the havoc on civilians was created by the new Kamajors, most of whom had been initiated after the RUF forces made their last attack on the chiefdoms. Thus at this time both old and new Kamajors from Kagboro reorganised themselves and, having taken control over an area, began to harass not only civilians but also their own colleagues. For example, starting in June, a base commander from Sembehun (Bagruwa Chiefdom) used to visit Shenge (Kagboro Chiefdom). On these occasions he and his men would loot the town and harass the inhabitants. On one occasion he killed two civilians visiting Shenge and left their bodies near a bridge at Sembehun. One of these civilians was a trader, carrying US dollars to the value of Le 11,000,000, which was taken away by this Kamajor commander. During these raids, this Kamajor commander also threatened some Kamajors from Kagboro Chiefdom at gunpoint. On another occasion, Kamajors based at Mossanda (Timdel Chiefdom) went to Mokobo in Kagboro Chiefdom where they took some cattle away.

Kamajors at Shenge and elsewhere also made cages constructed with different kinds of thorns, where suspected "rebel" collaborators and civilians or Kamajors who violated their laws were imprisoned. Civilians were flogged with sticks and forcefully pushed into the cages, the floors of which were also lined with broken bottles. The CDF forces also had another form of punishment for civilians known as "FM": a thin nylon rope was tied on two short equal sticks and then wrapped either on the two wrists or above the elbows. It was continually rolled until the nylon was squeezed into the body, injuring veins and muscles as the circulation of blood stopped in the affected areas. When the person was released, usually either their hands were broken or very swollen, which often led to partial deformity. These forms of punishment (FM and cages) were found in almost all the chiefdoms in the District where CDF were based. For example, at Mano Junction (Kagboro Chiefdom), two members of a church were accused of preaching against the Kamajors and were put in the cage into which hot ashes were poured; Kamajors referred to this as "a jet is bombing".

CDF members in other chiefdoms continued their harassment of civilians, inflicting sexual, physical and mental violence. In fact, this period was described by some civilians as the peak of the CDF activities in the District, with Kamajors being described as "having spoiled their mandate". People who defied the Kamajors' authority were often killed. For example, at Banta Chiefdom, three youths who went to purchase gari at Gbangbatoke were arrested for not paying due respect to the CDF command. Two of them were killed and the third was severely beaten before being released. This harassment led to an incident in Gbangbatoke in September, during which civilians threw stones at Kamajors and told them they would take care of their defence themselves.[1315] At Dodo Bridge (Bagruwa Chiefdom), summary executions were carried out. Checkpoints were established and travel cards issued to civilians. A civilian without such a card was considered to be an RUF member and was dealt with accordingly.

[1315] AFP, 26 September 1997.

In Banta Mokele Chiefdom, Kamajors also passed laws civilians had to abide by, presided over cases and acted as Chiefs. The Kamajors' behaviours in Kamajei Chiefdom (north-west of the District) also began to change after the signing of the Abidjan Peace Agreement and they were described as being the "chiefs". They decided cases and punished people they found guilty. Town Chiefs and Section Chiefs were molested by young Kamajors, civilians were maltreated and sometimes, were put the cages made of sticks and thorns. In other cases, women were beaten publicly, particularly when they refused to marry a Kamajor.

In Dasse and Kowa Chiefdoms, civilians recounted that the checkpoints, originally set up by the Kamajors to search for RUF members and weapons, were now used to harass civilians and drivers, asking them for money and taking their property. Cages made of thorns were built at these checkpoints and were used as prisons or guardrooms. On one occasion, a student coming from Bo had his shoes and his money taken away at Mano (Dasse Chiefdom). As he wanted to talk, he was a hit with a rifle one Kamajor was carrying.

RUF/AFRC activity in the second half of the year continued with numerous attacks on different towns and villages. During the night of 25 June 1997, RUF/AFRC forces attacked Mokonde, south of Kori Chiefdom near Njala University. As it was dark, it was difficult for people to see where they were going when they tried to escape and many drowned in the Taia River. Others were shot and killed by the RUF/AFRC forces. RUF/AFRC forces went to Njala College and stole a lot of property. Before leaving, they captured some civilians to carry the load; one of them was later shot and killed when he said he was too tired to carry the load. RUF/AFRC launched subsequent attacks on Mokonde and its environs throughout the year, almost without exception on a hit and run basis.

In the north of the Chiefdom, at the boundary with Yoni Chiefdom (Tonkolili District), RUF/AFRC forces entered Negeleboiya at night sometime in July. They gathered the civilians who did not manage to escape at the Court Barrie and began calling people's names. Those who were called had to lie down and then the RUF forces then cut their throats; 40 men were killed that night in this way.

On 28 June 1997, RUF/AFRC forces attacked Moyamba Junction (Fakunya Chiefdom) and villages on the road leading to Moyamba Town. Houses were burnt at Kpangbama and Ngandorhun while civilians were killed between Kpetema Junction and Waterloo. Sometime the next month, a large number of RUF/AFRC forces went from Moyamba Junction to Moyamba Town (Kayima Chiefdom). They captured 11 commercial vehicles at Moyamba Junction and mounted an anti-aircraft gun on one of the vehicles, which they used to fire at towns and villages they passed on their way to Moyamba Town. They burnt down several houses at Kpangbama and Ngandorhun (Fakunya Chiefdom). Kwellu (Fakunya Chiefdom) was fiercely attacked, as it was an important initiation centre. Despite stiff resistance from the CDF, between four to eight civilians and one CDF member were killed during the battle and eight houses were burnt down. The RUF forces reached Moyamba Town around mid to late July and dislodged the CDF forces after a stiff battle.

Moyamba District in a whole and Moyamba Town in particular, was a target for the AFRC when it came into power in May 1997 due to the earlier rejection of SLA forces by civilians in the District. During their short stay of eight days in Moyamba Town, the RUF/AFRC forces killed almost all the young men they found; women, children and even livestock were also killed. They hunted people who had fled into the bush and killed them. Section Chiefs and elders were targeted and killed, including one prominent Section Chief. His death terrified all the chiefdom elders as well as the young men, as a result of which many young men volunteered to join the Kamajor society to defend their chiefdoms.

After eight days in the town, RUF forces returned to Moyamba Junction with all the property they had taken. The RUF/AFRC settled in Moyamba Junction, which led to the harassment of civilians, who by then were mostly living in the bush. One group of RUF/AFRC members was everyday going to the bush to take away civilians' property. During this period, women and girls were constantly sexually harassed.

Two days after the RUF/AFRC forces had left, Kamajors returned to Moyamba Town, sending messages to people in the bush telling them to come back to town. Civilians were screened for RUF members or collaborators when they came out of the bush and every household was taxed Le 2,000 to contribute to the feeding of the Kamajors. The Kamajors conducted a house-to-house search and took away any property that had not been burnt or stolen by the RUF/AFRC forces. The Government agricultural office was also looted. As many civilians left the town and found refuge in the nearby village of Korgbotuma, the Kamajors went there and threatened to kill civilians who would not come back to the town. On their way back, two civilians were shot and killed by Kamajors.

Kamajors imposed their authority on everybody. They used a building on Coromboya Road as their secretariat and established laws and decrees. Chiefs were prevented from exercising their powers and were molested, beaten or tied up. Kamajors exercised all the powers normally vested in different official bodies and fulfilled the tasks of chiefs, judges and policemen. They set up tribunals and presided over cases. Civilians were continuously harassed, for all the non-initiates were treated with disrespect. Wealthy civilians were targeted and all their money and valuables were taken away, often at checkpoints. On one occasion, four Kamajors killed a trader and burnt down his compound. In another incident, a civilian was killed at a checkpoint for Le 500. Women were sexually harassed and forcefully became the "wives" of Kamajors. RUF/AFRC members, if captured, were killed. Kamajors also killed civilians, on the allegation that they were collaborators. The way they qualified the collaboration was so wide that relatives of RUF/AFRC forces were killed, even if they had nothing to do with their relatives in the RUF/AFRC: having the same name as an RUF or AFRC member was sufficient to be "washed", i.e. killed. On one occasion, an employee of the District Office was accused of being a "Junta" collaborator and beheaded at Sembehun Road.

Kweilu (Fakunya Chiefdom) became the centre of administration in the chiefdom and cases were directed to the CDF leaders based in the town. The head of the CDF initiation process and his assistants presided over all cases. RUF members captured at the war front were brought to the town and were killed. On one occasion, a civilian alleged to be a "rebel" collaborator was arrested at Falaba Gbondma and was hit with a knife and severely beaten before he was taken to Kwellu, where he died. Other civilians were killed on the same grounds, including one man from Madina and one man and his son from Monyanga. Cages made of thorns were built, where civilians and Kamajors who did not respect the laws the Kamajors had established were imprisoned. The local authorities, including Paramount Chiefs, Section Chiefs and Town Chiefs who did not want to be initiated no longer had any control or power.

On 10 December 1997, the CDF launched a successful attack on the RUF/AFRC forces at Moyamba Junction (Fakunya Chiefdom). Five RUF/AFRC forces were killed and the town was captured by the CDF. This attack was the first of series of battles for the control of Moyamba Junction, where RUF/AFRC forces were based and Waterloo, where Kamajors were based. Ultimately, Kamajors would keep the control of Waterloo and would also dislodge the RUF/AFRC from Moyamba Junction.[1316]

The RUF/AFRC forces launched a counter-attack on 16 December, reinforced by RUF/AFRC forces from Bo and Camp Charlie.[1317] A helicopter gunship was also brought by the RUF/AFRC forces, which they used to overpower the CDF, leaving one of them dead. The RUF/AFRC forces captured two other CDF and killed them. Nevertheless, the CDF captured a lot of weapons from the RUF/AFRC forces. On 25 December 1997, the CDF again attacked Moyamba Junction and captured the town. However, on 27 December the RUF/AFRC forces launched a counter-attack and recaptured the town, killing one member of the CDF. On 31 December, the Kamajors finally chased the RUF/AFRC forces out of Moyamba Junction, forcing them to leave a lot of arms and ammunition behind.

Once the Kamajors consolidated their control over the whole Fakunya Chiefdom (they already had control over Kwellu), they increased their pressure and harassment of civilians, establishing laws that civilians had to abide by. Those laws, among others, prevented civilians to pound food in mortars at night and forbad them from giving the Kamajors bananas or any food containing banana. As in Kwellu, cages of 2 ½ feet nigh and 3 ½ feet wide and made of thorns were built and used as prisons. The punishments for not obeying the laws were varied and ranged from being fined to receiving lashes, being imprisoned in the cage and going "round the kabba"[1318] seven times, asking for forgiveness, during which the Kamajors would encircle the violator and give them lashes while they went around seven times.

The last major attack on the town of Njala (Kori Chiefdom) was on 23 December 1997, while Kamajors were carrying out the operation "Black December". RUF/AFRC forces burnt houses from Mokande to the College and occupied Njala for seven days. They killed civilians and captured [1316] In December, an increase in Kamajor activities was reported, despite the declaration of a ceasefire on 22 October as part of the Conakry Peace Plan: Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 19 November - 2 December 1997.

---

[1317] This camp was located in the outskirts of Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District).

[1318] The kabba is a cube-shaped building in Mecca, which Muslims believe was built by Abraham for the worship of Allah. When going on Hajj, namely the journey to Mecca, pilgrims begin by going seven times around the kabba.

and raped a lot of young girls and women in the town. Surrounding villages like Pujehun and Bambubu (both in Kori Chiefdom) were also attacked at this time. The RUF/AFRC forces then went south along the main road to Mano (Dasse Chiefdom), chasing civilians who had found refuge in the bush. The "sorquehun", bush camps, were ransacked and property was taken away. On the walls of some houses, the forces wrote the names of some of their commanders in blood.

In December 1997, the CDF high command announced over the radio the commencement of the "Black December Operations", namely that no vehicle should travel to Freetown. This operation was designed to cut off the AFRC forces in Freetown from the rest of the country. The CDF in the District stopped all vehicles and boats from travelling to Freetown and severely punished those who did not obey the announcement. For example, a defaulting vehicle, which did not stop as requested was fired on at Bengeh (Bumpeh Chiefdom), killing two people.

e) Events in 1998 to 2001

After they were driven out of Freetown during the first week of February 1998, RUF/AFRC forces left Moyamba District, although little information was recounted on this departure, except the following incident. RUF/AFRC forces attacked Korgbonuma (Kaiyamba Chiefdom) from four different points and battled with the CDF in the town, defeating the CDF and capturing the town. The RUF/AFRC commanders informed the civilians that their mission was to carry out "Operation no living thing" in the town and its environs.[1319] The forces stayed in the town for eight days, during which they killed a lot of civilians, took property and burnt down houses in the town. Two days after their departure the CDF took over the town and ordered all the people in the bush to return to the town even when they had no where to sleep since almost all the houses were burnt.

In early 1998, Kamajors from Bo District came to Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom) and told the Kamajors from Bumpeh Chiefdom that they had received instructions from the CDF High Command to reinforce those already deployed at Rotifunk, in order to prevent the RUF/AFRC forces retreating from Freetown using the Mabang Bridge (Ribbi Chiefdom, at the border with Port Loko District). Those Kamajors soon took control of the township and the Kamajors from Bumpeh Chiefdom went under cover, for they had less arms and ammunition than the recently arrived reinforcements. One month after they had arrived, the elders of the chiefdom met at Moyamba Town to find a way to move out the Kamajors from Bo District. It was agreed that more men should be initiated, so an initiator was brought to perform initiation ceremonies at Bellentin. Within two weeks, he had initiated over 400 men and one woman. Those new initiates, equipped only with bladed weapons, drove out the Kamajors from Bo. Nevertheless, the new Kamajors established checkpoints on the highway and took money from drivers at those checkpoints. Drivers who did not want to pay would be beaten or their vehicle damaged. On one occasion, one driver who could not give Le 10,000 as requested had two of his tyres shot out.

ECOMOG forces deployed in various areas of the District in February 1998 and ensured the security of the District, notably by setting up checkpoints that they operated together with [1319] "Operation No Living Thing" was the name of the operation carried out by the RUF/AFRC forces retreating from Freetown, during which atrocities committed against civilians reached unprecedented levels. It was mostly carried out in the Northern Province and in Kono District.

Kamajors. In Kamaje. Chiefdom, for example, they set up checkpoints at the headquarter town of Senehun and at Lonporga. However, Kamajors who assisted the ECOMOG forces at those checkpoints were still mistreating civilians. Vehicles suspected of carrying RUF or AFRC members or goods without proper documents were detained at those checkpoints and passengers were forced to remain there and sleep on the ground. Women who openly opposed the activities carried out at those checkpoints were stripped naked and forced to lie on the ground. The situation worsened when the ECOMOG forces left the checkpoints in the hand of the Kamajors,[1320] who would only dismantle those checkpoints in November 2001.

Immediately after the RUF/AFRC forces were pushed out of power in early 1998, an internal fight occurred between different factions of the CDF. Kamajors operating in the Southern Province accused the Gbethies, who were active in the Northern Province, of supporting AFRC members in their fight against Kamajors. A group of Gbethies from neighbouring chiefdoms in Tonkolili District attacked the Kamajors base at Gondama and Fogbo (Kori Chiefdom). Nobody was killed during the attack but houses were burnt by the retreating Gbethies. Five days later, the Kamajors launched a counter-attack on the Gbethies at Pateful (Gbonkolenken Chiefdom, Tonkolili District). The situation was finally resolved through the intervention of the elders.

On 29 March, a letter issued by the CDF headquarter was circulated to all Kamajors in the District, ordering that since the Sierra Leonean President had now been reinstated, the Kamajors should let the Chiefs assuming their functions and stop presiding over issues. However, Kamajors from the chiefdoms in the south of the District, Kagboro, Timdel, Bagruwa, Banta and Banta Mokele Chiefdoms continued to affirm their authority and to maltreat civilians and authorities. CDF in Moyamba Town (Kaiyamba Chiefdom) also continued to rule as chiefs and to control the live of civilians, as they had done in 1997. For example, around 5 March 1998, a young woman moved from Foyah to Matta Gelema in Banta Chiefdom to sell cassava leaves. At a checkpoint on her way, she was asked by a Kamajor to show him her pass. The woman told the Kamajors that her father was a Town Chief and that they did not know about this system of pass. Kamajors replied by saying that Kamajors were now the chiefs and authorities and that they were not respected by the civilians, who treated them with over-familiarity. They took her cassava bag away and detained her for two hours before she was freed. Her father, the Town Chief, reported the matter to the Ground Commander to no avail, as the Ground Commander told him he had no time for reports, for he knew his men were doing a good job.

In Kagboro Chiefdom, by 1998, the CDF had established checkpoints along the road going through the middle of the chiefdom at Yoyema, Gondama Junction, Talia and Tawovahun. Vehicles were checked for guns and "rebels" or "rebel" suspects. Anyone caught as a "rebel" or "junta" soldier or who was suspected to be such by the Kamajors was immediately carried away and "washed", a term the CDF used for killing. People were killed at the checkpoints very often, sometimes for money or other property. In other places where the CDF had checkpoints, people who were not from that chiefdom were often singled out to be victims.

[1320] It could not be ascertained when ECOMOG forces exactly came in the District, nor when they left Kamajei Chiefdom.

The CDF frequently beat women and one commander in particular travelled around the chiefdom harassing young men and women and molesting the elderly. From Bauma to Blama and from Mamboma to Senehun, this commander was well known for this type of behaviour. On one occasion, he ordered his boys to torture a civilian whose daughter was alleged to have been in love with an RUF/AFRC member. In another incident in Mokebay Section, Kamajors killed a lady who had come from Bumpe to buy fish. They removed her body parts for rituals, as they allegedly believed that the ritual murder would prevent their "evil deeds" from been exposed. Several other civilians were killed afterwards. Other civilians killed included one man from Yorgborfore, one from Mbawoma, one from Metiba and one from Bumpetoke. A Kamajor cut off the ear of a woman from Bonthe District with a cutlass and chewed it. The woman latter suffered severe pain from the ear. Another Kamajor declared one day that any civilian not abiding by their laws would be killed and eaten raw. In Timdel Chiefdom, at Morkandor, one civilian was beaten with orange sticks covered in thorns, as he failed to be his contribution for the feeding of the Kamajors. He was them asked to contribute with three bushels of husk rice or would be killed. The deputy Town Chief of Morkandor was severely beaten because he refused to act as a town crier.

In April or May, a schoolteacher riding his bike between Mokonde (Kori Chiefdom) and Pelewahun (south of Kamajei Chiefdom) was caught by Kamajors who had established a checkpoint at Pelewahun. The man was dragged in the bush, had his stomach cut open and his intestines removed. The Kamajors then set the body on fire, taking his bicycle and his two months salary he had just received. This killing was carried out because one of the Kamajors wanted to take his revenge on this schoolteacher, the new partner of his ex-girlfriend. Police officers from Taiama (Kori Chiefdom) investigated the matter and the four Kamajors who killed the schoolteacher were arrested, put in prison and tried in the High Court in Bo. Following this arrest, the other Kamajors left Pelewahun.

In 1999, some incursions were carried out in the District by RUF/AFRC forces based in Tonkolili District. Those attacks were, however, limited to villages in Fakunya Chiefdom, along the border with the Northern Province. Sometime in March 1999, RUF/AFRC forces based in Tonkolili District launched a series of attacks on villages on the Fakunya/Yoni boundary, mainly for searching for food and other items. One serious attack was made at Mataradegba, one mile from Rogboya, by the RUF forces from Mile 91 in late March 1999. It was a silent attack and they entered the town without discharging their weapons. Sixteen people were locked in a house, which was then set on fire and set ablaze. The RUF forces also shot and killed another five people. They then went to Rogboya, where they met with stiff resistance from the CDF forces in the town. On their retreat, they fell in a CDF ambush, six of the RUF forces were killed and a lot of their arms and ammunition captured. On 13 April 1999, the RUF forces launched another attack on Rogboya and succeeded in capturing the town. They were, however, soon repelled from the town by CDF from other towns nearby. On their way back to Tonkolili District, they had a battle with some Kamajors, which left over 40 RUF/AFRC members dead. This was to be the last battle between the CDF and RUF forces in Fakunya Chiefdom.

During the same period, some RUF/AFRC forces coming from their base at Okra Hills (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) crossed into the north of Ribbi Chiefdom, mainly chasing civilians in the camps they had built in the bush.[1321] They took away the rice and burnt a farmhouse near Makabie before heading for Makabie, where they abducted one man. This man was told to deliver the message to the inhabitants of Makabie that they would come back again to the village, as one of their boxes of cigarettes had been stolen. They further added that anyone they caught would be either mutilated or killed, depending on their will. When they came back to the village, they took some property away, burnt the houses and abducted one man, who they later killed.

The inhabitants of Ribbi Chiefdom, north-west of the District at the border with Port Loko District, were in total disarray at this time because of one group of CDF, who were opposed to the Gbethies from Port Loko District and who were inflicting a lot of violence on civilians in the chiefdom. On 24 March 1999, Kamajors and Avondos came to Bradford,[1322] the headquarter town of Ribbi Chiefdom and began to shoot indistinctly.[1323] One civilian was caught escaping and was accused by the Kamajors of being a "rebel". Those Kamajors and Avondos told the civilians they had come to Ribbi because they knew they had been RUF/AFRC forces in the chiefdom. Some civilians were killed, accused by the CDF members of selling food to RUF/AFRC members. Throughout May and April, the two groups deployed in the town and went to the surrounding villages, killing civilians and burning houses. For example, they went to Rogbonkol, burnt 10 houses and killed 20 people; at Mothankey, they killed one woman and took away her two children and all her property. They also crossed the Ribbi River and went to Bathpon (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District). On their return to Bradford, the Kamajors and Avondos met a deaf woman in her garden and asked her what she was doing there. The woman told them that since they were "soldiers" – because they were wearing military uniforms – they should not disturb her. The CDF members told the woman they were going to kill her, as they said she was inhabited with devil spirits. The Avondo commander[1324] ordered his men to kill her, so she was shot and killed.

The CDF members then moved to Makabie, where they established a checkpoint on the highway leading to Freetown. Any civilian caught speaking Temne was accused of being a Gbethie collaborator, who were their targets at this time. Anybody thus accused was forced to lead them to the place where he was living and all his property was taken away. The inhabitants of Makabie were gathered, accused of being "rebels" and threatened with death; they were not, however, killed and the Town Chief was forced to pay Le 15,000 instead. Civilians were told that they could not go anywhere without the permission of the CDF members and that as long as they remained in the town, the civilians were responsible for their feeding. It was alleged that the main purpose of the CDF members was to steal their property and that the allegation of collaboration was a pretext. Some CDF members then left the town and went to Rosint Loko, where they abducted civilians, subsequently releasing all but one. The captured civilian who was not released was killed, as he failed to lead the Kamajors to the Gbethies. He was hit with a bladed weapon on his face and as he was [1321] Okra Hills was the base of the West Side Boys, a fighting faction that emerged from the RUF/AFRC forces in late 1998: see the analysis for Port Loko District for more information.

[1322] It is not clear where those CDF members came from. It seems that the Avondos came from Taima (Kori Chiefdom) while the group of Kamajors came from Kongbora and Bumpeh Chiefdoms.

[1323] It seems that there were no Kamajors operating in Ribbi Chiefdom before this incident.

[1324] Both the Avondos and the Kamajors had their own commanders, although they carried most of these actions together.

wiping away the blood, the Kamajor commander told him not to waste his blood as he was thirsty and wanted to drink it. The man was then shot and killed; he was later buried by civilians from Makabie. A report on this incident was made to the ECOMOG forces deployed at Songo (Western Area). ECOMOG forces arrested the CDF members but released them shortly after.[1325]

The CDF members returned to Ribbi Chiefdom and resettled first at Mo Lamina and then at Mo Goba, from where they raided the surrounding villages, harassing civilians for their property. One truck belonging to the International Labour Organisation was stolen in Moyamba village (Ribbi Chiefdom) and used by the CDF members to carry the property they were stealing. At Massampa, for example, they entered the town shooting their guns and killing one student. They looted the town and burnt five houses. At Sueu, they shot the Chiefdom Speaker, stripped him, tied him up and took him to Bumpeh Chiefdom, where they allegedly had their main base. At Ronfunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom), one of the commanders wore the fingers of the late Chiefdom Speaker on a necklace around his neck. The CDF members went back to Moyamba village (Ribbi Chiefdom), burnt 19 houses and captured two traders, whom they later killed. Other incidents included another attack on Bradford, where they took a significant sum of money from traders and another attack on Sueu, where they killed one woman and took away her property. CDF members also went to Mabang, after the RUF/AFRC forces had left the bridge,[1326] and killed a lot of civilians and harassed anybody using the bridge.[1327]
The Kamajors stayed in Bradford for a while, forcing civilians to bring them food and money and to work for them, harvesting palm nuts. These actions continued until the Government announced that all the fighting factions had to stop hostilities.[1328]

By May 1999, some commercial vehicles used the alternative highway from Freetown to Bo, through Moyamba, without encountering any attack, although the highway was not yet reopened for traffic.[1329]

Probably in 1999 or 2000, Kamajors from Bumpeh Chiefdom battled with Kamajors from Kagboro Chiefdom, for one lady trader from Bumpeh Chiefdom had been beaten and her money taken away by Kamajors at Ribbi (Kagboro Chiefdom). The Kamajors from the two chiefdoms were later reconciled through the intervention of the Paramount Chief of Bumpeh Chiefdom and elders of Kagboro Chiefdom.

Following the Freetown invasion in January 1999, a peace accord marking the end of the conflict and known as the Lomé Peace Agreement was signed on 7 July in the Togolese capital. Pursuant to this accord, the disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration (DDR) process was formally launched by the President of Sierra Leone on 20 October 1999 during a ceremony at Wilberforce [1325] No more details were available on this arrest.

---

[1326] RUF/AFRC forces were in Koya Chiefdom (Port Loko District), on the other side of the bridge.
[1327] No further information was available on this incident.
[1328] A ceasefire was signed in May 1999. No more information was available on what exactly happened in the chiefdom following this announcement.
[1329] Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 1 - 17 May 1999.

Barracks, Freetown and began properly on 4 November 1999.[1330] Five demobilisation centres were opened at Lungi (Port Loko District), Port Loko South, Port Loko North, Kenema and Daru (Kailahun District). In early 2000, UN peacekeepers from the Guinean contingent were deployed at Moyamba Town.[1331]

On 10 March 2000, the National Committee for Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (NCDDR) identified two more sites, one of which was at Levuma (north of Kongbora Chiefdom).[1332] However, disarmament started at a slow pace and was halted temporarily in May 2000, as fighting were still going on in the Northern and Eastern Provinces and peacekeepers were abducted by RUF/AFRC forces. Although Moyamba District was not directly concerned by these events, it seems clear that the CDF members would not disarm as long as the other fighting factions were still carrying out armed operations. The DDR process would be given a new start in November 2000 when the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF signed a ceasefire in Abuja, Nigeria on 10 November 2000. On 4 May 2001, those parties would meet again in Abuja, Nigeria to review the cease-fire. Further to this meeting, those parties held monthly tripartite meetings under the Joint Committee on DDR and decided on an accelerated schedule for the completion of the disarmament process. During the fourth meeting of the Joint Committee on DDR in Kenema on 10 August 2001, it was agreed that the next stage of disarmament was to take place simultaneously in Moyamba and Koinadugu District, between 15 and 30 August.[1333] However, disarmament was not complete by 31 August, mainly for logistics reasons.

In a symbolic disarmament ceremony in the town of Moyamba on 20 October 2001, CDF combatants and their senior commanders handed over more than 50 weapons to UN peacekeepers, in the presence of the Special Representative of the Secretary General in Sierra Leone.[1334] At the end of the seventh meeting of the Joint Committee on DDR on 9 November, disarmament was declared complete in Moyamba District.[1335] On 30 November 2001, a Nepalese Battalion of peacekeepers was deployed in Moyamba Town and Rotifunk (Bumpeh Chiefdom), at which time the war officially came to an end in Moyamba District.[1336]

3. Conclusion

Moyamba District was the last District of the Southern Province to be attacked by RUF forces. The first incursion into the District was launched in early January 1995, at a time when NPFL forces, originally fighting alongside the RUF from 1991, had long since withdrawn to Liberia. This first wave of attacks was carried out from Bo District and in the aftermath of a series of attacks on major [1330] The launch of the DDR process was delayed as it was meant to start within six weeks of the signing of the Lomé Peace Agreement.

---

[1331] IRIN West Africa, 12 April 2000. On 22 October 1999, the UN Security Council had adopted Resolution 1270 approving the deployment of 6,000 armed peacekeepers alongside the 260 unarmed military observers. Their number would increase over the subsequent months.

[1332] IRIN West Africa, 17 March 2000.

[1333] UNAMSIL press briefing, 14 August 2001. At that time, the disarmament was complete in Port Loko and Kambia Districts. As of that date, 1,500 CDF members had disarmed in Moyamba District.

[1334] UNAMSIL press briefing, 23 October 2001.

[1335] UNAMSIL press briefing, 9 November 2001.

[1336] Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 06 - 30 November 2001.

towns in Bo District. Attacks on Moyamba District were subsequently carried out by RUF forces who settled in the District but also from the neighbouring Districts of Bonthe and Bo in the Southern Province and Tonkolili in the Northern Province.

The spreading of RUF forces into Moyamba District was one of the latest developments of a new phase of the conflict, which started in late December 1993 in the south of Kenema District. From this date on, RUF forces took to the bush and adopted guerrilla warfare tactics, progressing to Districts so far unaffected and by 1995, had established positions in all the Districts.

In March 1995, it was clear that the ultimate goal of the RUF forces who attacked Moyamba District was to reach Freetown. To this end, they progressed through the District using the highway that leads to Songo in the Western Area, systematically attacking the major towns located on this highway. It was only when their progression to Freetown was stopped that they settled in the District and established a strong base in the north.

As in the other Districts of the Southern Province, Kamajors progressively halted the actions of the RUF forces from the beginning of 1996. The initiation of youths and local hunters, members or not of the CDUs, started in early 1996 and developed throughout the year. Bonthe District played an active role in the development of Kamajors throughout Moyamba District, as many men from Moyamba District went to Bonthe District for initiation also because Kamajors from Bonthe District went to Moyamba District to fight the RUF forces.

The chiefdoms in the south of the District were under Kamajor control earlier than the chiefdoms in the north. By late 1996, Kamajors had taken control of the southern chiefdoms and no more RUF attack was reported in those areas. This was probably also due to the fact that around this period, Kamajors had already dislodged RUF forces from Bonthe District. The situation for the chiefdoms in the north of the District was far different. Although their main base, Camp Fol Fol was destroyed in late 1996 by Kamajors, the RUF forces and, shortly after, RUF/AFRC forces were present in many of the chiefdoms in the north, wreaking a lot of havoc on civilians. At this time, both Port Loko and Tonkolili Districts, which adjoin Moyamba District to the north, were also infiltrated by RUF and RUF/AFRC forces.

Following the ECOMOG intervention in Freetown in early 1998, the actions of the RUF/AFRC forces were concentrated in the Northern and Eastern Provinces. Free from RUF/AFRC incursions, the Kamajors affirmed their control of the security of Moyamba District and expanded this control to civilians and local authorities. In this regard, the pattern of actions in Moyamba District at this time would converge with what happened in the other Districts of the Southern Province.

d. Pujehun District

1. Introduction

Pujehun District, with its headquarter of Pujehun Town, is one of the four Districts of the Southern Province, the other three being Bonthe, Bo and Moyamba Districts. It is bordered on the east by Liberia, on the northeast by Kenema District (Eastern Province), on the northwest by Bo District and on the west by Bonthe District. At its southern edge is the Atlantic Ocean.

There are 12 chiefdoms in the District:

Chiefdom	Headquarters
Barri	Potoru
Gallinas Peri	Blama
Kpaka	Massam
Makpele	Zimmi
Malen	Sahn
Mano Sakrim	Gbonjema
Panga Kabonde	Pujehun
Panga Krim	Gobaru
Peje	Futa
Soro Gbema	Fairo
Sowa	Bandajuma
Yekomo Kpukumu Krim	Kariu

The main rivers flowing through the District would prove to be of strategic importance during the conflict. The Mano River that flows on the eastern edge of Makpele and Soro Gbema Chiefdoms constitutes the natural border between Sierra Leone and Liberia. The entry point to the District is located in Soro Gbema Chiefdom, at the Mano River Union Bridge, Bo Waterside, which was a joint venture between Guinea, Sierra Leone and Liberia. Control of the bridge would be of great importance for the RUF/NPFL and later on for the RUF forces, as it allows easy penetration into the District and the transport of supplies from Liberia. Accordingly, throughout the conflict, the RUF forces would mainly be based in the east of the District. The Moa River originates from the ocean between Gallinas Peri and Soro Gbema Chiefdoms, following more or less the border between those two chiefdoms through Barri Chiefdom before reaching Kenema and Kailahun Districts, thereby isolating Soro Gbema and Makpele Chiefdoms from the rest of the District. Other rivers located in the south of the District and of lesser strategic importance would be used by the fighting factions, mainly the RUF forces, to move within the District.

Crossing the Mano River Union Bridge, there is only one motorable road linking Fairo (Soro Gbema Chiefdom headquarters) to Sulima in the south (Soro Gbema Chiefdom) and to Zimmi in the north (Makpele Chiefdom Headquarters). Furthermore, this road to Zimmi is the only way to reach Pujehun Town, other than by using bush paths. From Zimmi, it continues westwards to Potoru (Barri Chiefdom headquarters), Futa (Peje Chiefdom headquarters) and Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom Headquarters). Bandajuma is located on the main road that links Pujehun and Bo Districts, starting in Pujehun Town and leading to Koribondo and Bo Town (Bo District). From Potoru, an alternative road passing by Gallinas Peri and Kpaka, the two central chiefdoms, goes to Pujehun Town.

The small number of roads providing access to other Districts is an important factor in how the RUF/NPFL forces would attack surrounding Districts. To go to Kenema District in the north-east, there are only two alternative roads, through Makpele Chiefdom or through Peje Chiefdom. Two roads also allow the penetration of Bo District, the main one being a highway passing through Panga Kabone and Sowa Chiefdoms, while the second one leaves Pujehun Town to pass through Malen Chiefdom in the west. There are no motorable roads linking Pujehun District with Bonthe District in the south-east; accordingly, this District would not be affected during the first years of the war, as access was achieved only later through Bo District.

The main economic activities of the District consist of mining, fishing and cash crops, notably coffee and cocoa plantations. In some chiefdoms, primarily in Makpele Chiefdom, the main economic activity is diamond mining.

Pujehun District, at the border with Liberia was concerned by the conflict as early as March 1991 when Revolutionary United Front (RUF)/ National Patriotic Front for Liberia (NPFL) forces crossed the border at the Mano River Union Bridge into Soro Gbema Chiefdom. From this first incursion, the conflict would affect the District through three discernable phases.

The first phase, which ran from 1991 to 1993, was first marked by the first incursion in 1991, where almost all the chiefdoms and major towns, including Pujehun Town, were attacked by RUF/NPFL forces within one month. This first incursion was characterised by widespread violations committed by RUF/NPFL forces. Those forces would follow the same pattern upon entry to a village: they would gather the civilians, identify themselves as "freedom fighters" coming to redeem Sierra Leone from the corrupted All People's Congress (APC) regime and depose and replace the local authorities, setting up basic administrative structures. Their arrival and stay in a place was accompanied by the infliction of physical and mental violence on the people of the village, as well as the abduction of members of the population, including children, for use as forced labour, as soldiers, as cooks and as "wives". RUF/NPFL forces also engaged in widespread theft and property destruction, notably the burning of houses. However, from July to September 1991, SLA forces, assisted by foreign troops, dislodged the RUF/NPFL forces from most of their positions, pushing them back to the Liberian border. This SLA offensive and control of the District was nonetheless soon accompanied by violence inflicted on civilians, in particular those labelled as collaborators with the RUF/NPFL. Attacks, probably carried out by remnants of RUF/NPFL forces, were however still recorded at the end of 1991 and in 1992. At the end of 1992 and beginning of 1993, RUF forces launched a powerful attack from Liberia, established a stronghold in Soro Gbema Chiefdom and started spreading across the District. This second incursion was, however, less successful than the first one as they were soon defeated in most areas by SLA forces. While in control, SLA forces continued to inflict great havoc on civilians, killing a lot of alleged collaborators, chasing civilians for their property, destroying some property and engaging in mining activities in the east of the District.

The second phase spanned from 1994 to May 1997, during which time the RUF forces succeeded in spreading throughout the country, shifting their tactics away from direct confrontation with the SLA to bush warfare, during which they mainly staged ambushes. At this time, thousands of civilians had fled the District for a refuge camp in Bo District. Starting in 1996, newly initiated Kamajors, initially operating in collaboration with SLA forces, engaged the RUF forces and by 1997 had succeeded in taking control of most of the RUF positions across the country, which led thousands of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) to resettle in the District. However, their control was also accompanied by harassment of civilians, including constant requests for food and the taking of property. Physical violence was also inflicted, in particular on those they identified as being RUF collaborators.

The third phase of the conflict started in May 1997, when a military regime – the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) – seized power in the capital and concluded at the end of 2001, when the disarmament process was complete for Pujehun District. Shortly after the Coup, RUF forces who had been living in the bush for some months joined the AFRC and Kamajors in the District went underground. During their stay in the District, the RUF/AFRC forces imposed great harms on civilians in general and on alleged Kamajors collaborator in particular, including physical violence, killing, rape, abduction for use as forced labour, soldiers 'or "wives" and stealing and destruction of property. Starting in October, Kamajors regrouped and intensified their fighting against those combined forces, gaining more and more ground; by March 1998, following ECOMOG deployment in the District, the RUF/AFRC forces were repelled from the District. From this date onwards, the District remained under control of the Kamajors, who imposed their authority in all aspects of life, restricted the movement of the population by establishing checkpoints, replaced the local authorities and themselves administered the District, increased their violence against all civilians and engaged in mining activities. This would continue until the completion of disarmament at the end of 2001.

2. Factual Analysis

a) Events in 1991

On 28 March 1991, RUF/NPFL forces crossed the Mano River Union Bridge[1337] at Jendema (Soro Gbema Chiefdom), 7 miles from Fairo. They then headed for Malema, where they seized weapons from the SSD store, before heading for Fairo. From Soro Gbema Chiefdom, the RUF/NPFL forces would then head for Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom, in the east of the District), passing by Makpele, Barri, Peje, Sowa, Kpaka and Gallinas Peri Chiefdoms, leaving behind some forces to settle in each of those areas. A few days after the RUF/NPFL forces crossed the Mano River Union Bridge, the RUF and NPFL leaders paid them a brief visit at Bo Waterside, allegedly to check that the forces had crossed the river and to receive food items and furniture taken from the Police Barracks at Jendema.[1338]

At the time of this incursion, SLA forces were deployed in the District, chiefly in Fairo (Soro Gbema Chiefdom), Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom), Potoru (Barri Chiefdom) and Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom).

[1337] The control of the Mano River Union Bridge, a joint venture between Sierra Leone, Liberia and Guinea, would be of great importance as it allows penetration of the territory of Sierra Leone from Liberia.

[1338] During the first weeks of the conflict, many reports mention the visit of the RUF leader to Pujehun and Kailahun Districts, although it appeared that he spent more time in Kailahun District than in Pujehun District, while the NPFL leader is only mentioned as being present at Bo waterside.

At Fairo (Soro Gbema Chiefdom), a short battle took place with some SLA forces and SSD members who were posted there.[1339] The house of the Paramount Chief, occupied at the time by SLA forces, was burnt down and the first killings of civilians and taking of their property was recorded at this time. Gunshots were heard in the town until night fell. The following morning, the civilians were gathered in the Court Barrie and addressed by the RUF/NPFL forces, who told them they should not be afraid, as they had come to redeem the civilians from the APC regime. However, a few days later, the RUF/NPFL forces killed one civilian who refused to give them food at Jendema. At Sulima, in the south of the chiefdom, they also killed one civilian, allegedly because he questioned them about the previous killing. Following this incursion, civilians from Wai, a town located on the main Fairo-Sulima road in the chiefdom, fled the town; some went to Liberia, first hiding their property, as they had heard from fleeing civilians that the RUF/NPFL forces were stealing food and any other items that took their interest. However, those who fled Sierra Leone did not find a safer haven in Liberia, where a civil war was raging; while in Liberia, the people who had fled the war in Sierra Leone were harassed by NPFL forces, who took their property and sexually assaulted their daughters and wives.[1340]

After they took control of Malema and Fairo (Soro Gbema Chiefdom), two training camps were opened in those towns to train conscripts on how to use weapons. The RUF/NPFL forces first went from village to village to get people to join their movement, but when they realised that few young people were joining them, they forced villages as a whole to contribute and to give some of their inhabitants for training, threatening them with the destruction of the village if they refused. In this way, the RUF/NPFL forces recruited many young boys and girls and whoever refused to join or tried to hide during training was killed on the spot. Furthermore, those newly conscripted members were told to point out houses where young people had not volunteered to join, after which the RUF/NPFL forces looted and then burnt them. This situation led many families to give one of their family members to join the movement. RUF/NPFL forces also chased people who were hiding in farm huts in the bushes, raiding them at night, stealing their food and other valuable items and capturing young boys and girls. While the boys were conscripted into the fighting forces, the girls were used for sexual purposes. On one occasion, in the area of Malema, a five-months pregnant women was raped by five RUF/NPFL members and, as a result, had a miscarriage. In another incident, also in the Malema area, one girl was raped during a night raid. That same night, the commander of that RUF/NPFL forces told the people that the RUF leader had told them in Liberia that all the Sierra Leonean women were their wives and all the property they could find was also theirs.

The RUF/NPFL forces nominated a former candidate in the 1982 elections to be the chairman of their war council in the chiefdom. Following the 1982 general elections, a fight had erupted between [1339] The SLA forces were only 10, together with five SSD members, and had little ammunition, mainly only to defend themselves.

---

[1340] Since 1989, the NPFL had been waging war against the then President, Samuel Doe, who would be killed by a splinter group of the NPFL in 1990. Also in 1990, Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) sent some Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) forces to assist the Liberian Government to end the war. As part of this mission, ECOMOG based some forces at Lungi, Sierra Leone's international airport to the north of Freetown.

the partisans of the two political groups contesting the elections and many civilians were killed and much property destroyed. The nomination of the war council chairman for the chiefdom recalled these events in 1982 for the civilians of Soro Gbema, as the newly appointed chairman was the candidate in the 1982 election who had not been elected to represent the Pujehun east constituency in Parliament.[1341] Some supporters of the man who was elected chairman and leader of the Ndorgbowusui group, saw this nomination to the war council as an opportunity to take revenge for atrocities committed against their families almost 20 years ago. For this reason, they voluntarily nominated some of their children to join the RUF/NPFL forces. Thus, civilians who were not members of the Ndorgbowusui group were particularly targeted during the RUF/NPFL presence in the chiefdom in 1991.

In late March 1991, civilians fleeing the RUF/NPFL advance in Soro Gbema Chiefdom crossed the Moa River that flows on its west edge and took refuge in Gallinas Peri Chiefdom, at Gbanahun, returning to their chiefdom a week later.

Zimmi,[1342] the headquarter town of Makpele Chiefdom, and the surrounding villages are diamond-rich area. On 3 April, RUF/NPFL forces entered the town and established a base there that became their main one for the District. During their stay in the chiefdom, up to December 1991, the RUF/NPFL forces attacked many villages, where they followed the same actions upon taking control of the different villages. The RUF/NPFL forces would enter the town and gather the inhabitants at the Court Barrie, where they would introduce themselves as the Revolutionary United Front, their purpose being to remove the APC Government from power and liberate Sierra Leone. At this meeting, or soon after, they would depose the Town Chief and replace him or her with their own Town Commander, who was sometimes appointed from the civilian population. While in the town, the RUF/NPFL forces would destroy property; take food and other items; force civilians to work for them, such as by cooking and fetching water; tie civilians up; kill people; and abduct people, both adults and children. The following incidents are examples of the attacks carried out and the violence inflicted on civilians in the chiefdom, most of them taking place in April.

Between April and December, Gbaa was burnt three times, virtually all the property in the town was taken and some people were killed. On 9 April, the RUF leader visited the town, gathered hundreds of civilians for a meeting and stated that RUF were peacemakers, coming to free people from slavery. Zimmi became a main base in the District and beyond, in the south-east, and the RUF leader had a lodge reserved for him there. At Palima, on 25 April, RUF/NPFL forces fired on a car full of police officers being driven into the town, as a result of which the driver and one police officer were killed. Cattle and poultry were also taken from Palima and brought to Zimmi. In the same month, RUF/NPFL forces, nine in number, attacked Vaama Kortu and entered the town accompanied by gunfire. The sheep and goats of the village were taken away. During the same attack, two women were raped and three boys (two aged 18 and one aged 15) were taken away; their fate still remains unknown. At Sembehun, a group of 15 RUF/NPFL forces took property from houses, including furniture and other belongings, and forced inhabitants to carry the loads to the RUF base in Zimmi. Those who did not obey the order were beaten, tied up, forced to roll and look at the sun and eventually carried the load at gunpoint. Goats and sheep were taken away, as well as two sewing machines and a bailing machine belonging to a diamond dealer, carpentry tools and blacksmith's equipment. Fifteen houses were burnt down at this time.

[1341] It is accordingly not a coincidence if the RUF/NPFL nominated somebody who opposed at one time to the APC regime representative.

[1342] Zimmi is a strategic town for many reasons because, aside from its location in a diamond mining area, it is the first major town to be reached when crossing the border from Liberia and it allows further inland advances in the east of Kenema District.

At Njabaama, also in April 1991, a woman was raped in the presence of her husband and another woman was taken to be the "wife" of one of the RUF/NPFL forces coming from Liberia. That same day, the village was burnt down in retaliation for the inhabitants not welcoming the RUF/NPFL forces. Household property, furniture and money were taken. On 22 April, a group of seven RUF/NPFL forces entered the village of Gbahama and appointed a 24 year-old man as the Town Commander. This newly appointed Town Commander, who was unable to refuse this appointment, was told to mobilise the civilians to operate checkpoints. Women were told to cook for the RUF/NPFL and eight people were forced to carry a load comprised mainly of coconuts to Zimmi. This continued until June, by which time most of the civilians had managed to leave the town and found refuge in Liberia. At Gbeakor, 27 RUF/NPFL members entered the town, instantly killing seven people. The Town Chief was deposed and a new Town Commander was appointed. Before leaving, the forces took with them all the cattle and poultry they could find.

At Ngombu, in June 1991, 70 houses were burnt and 42 kitchens and 15 toilets were destroyed by a group of 30 RUF/NPFL members. Diamond mining towns were also visited, such as Gbahama in April 1991, where property was taken and civilians were used to carry the loads. In this town and others, such as Baguihun, the RUF/NPFL forces engaged in mining activities and stole everything that was in the offices of the mining company. Daar-es-Salaam, a town north of Zimmi on the bank of the Mano River, was at this time hosting a camp for thousands of refugees from the Liberian war. In April, the camp was attacked and all the property belonging to various NGOs and UNHCR was taken; fleeing civilians died, drowning in the Moa River.[1343] It appeared that the RUF/NPFL forces had registered in large numbers as refugees in the camp, so that they would have easier access. Daar-es-Salaam became a training camp, known as the second Camp Zogoda.[1344] Wonde, another border town hosting a refugee camp, was also visited in April 1991; the RUF leader came to the camp and asked civilians to join the RUF. It appeared that only few of them did in fact join and a lot of refugees left the camp, leaving their few belongings in the hands of the RUF/NPFL forces. Due to these constant attacks, many civilians left the chiefdom, the majority of them going to Liberia.

On their way to Pujehun Town, in early April 1991, RUF/NPFL forces[1345] coming from Zimmi passed by Moala (Barri Chiefdom), located on the west bank of the Moa River. After Moala, they [1343] No more information could be obtained on this event, either from the records or open source materials.

---

[1344] Zogoda, meaning "land of freedom" is a generic name given to training bases, like "Camp Lion" in other places. Other camps called Camp Zogoda were to be found at different times in Kenema and Kailahun Districts. This camp in Pujehun District was called "second Camp Zogoda", because the first one was established in Kailahun District.

[1345] These forces were armed with berretta guns, AK47s, single barrel rifles, RPGs and machetes and were dressed in military attire or with headbands with "RUF" written on it.

headed for Potoru (Barri Chiefdom headquarter), which is at a junction on the main road to Pujehun Town (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom) from Kenema District.[1346] In both towns, they introduced themselves as "freedom fighters" coming to save people from the corrupt APC regime. On arrival, they searched for SLA forces and gathered the civilians in the Court Barrie. While some of the forces were addressing the inhabitants, telling them they were not going to steal anything or take their women as wives, others were parading in the towns, entering houses in search of food and money. Local authorities were deposed and new Town Commanders were appointed. At Moala, three people were killed with berretta guns, allegedly because they were reconnaissance/spies, since they run from the RUF/NPFL forces. During one night, some women were taken from their husbands. At Potoru, a Fullah man was killed for refusing to give them his sheep. Ten other civilians were also killed, accused of being reconnaissance and, for two of them, for refusing to hand over their bags; at least one man was shot in the head with an AK47 and two were beaten to death with a bladed weapon. Checkpoints were mounted where cards called "pass" were issued, which allowed civilians to move through the chiefdom. During their stay in the town, women and underage girls were sexually assaulted. All this violence led many people to leave the town for Sowa Chiefdom and Bo District.

From Potoru, some of the RUF/NPFL forces (a group of 25 to 30 men) went to Waima, four miles from Potoru. After calling the inhabitants for a meeting, they undertook a house-to-house search, removing the people they found and shooting some of them. Those forces were speaking a number of different languages, but the majority language was Liberian. Before leaving the town, they abducted girls under 15 years-old and then headed for other villages in the chiefdom, including Korumahun and Dendegahun, where the same kind of attacks took place.

From Barri Chiefdom, some RUF/NPFL forces went to Peje and Sowa Chiefdoms, relatively small chiefdoms located to the west of Barri Chiefdom,[1347] while others probably went to Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom) through Gallinas Peri and Kpaka Chiefdoms.[1348] At Futa (Peje Chiefdom), on or around 17 April 1991, around 100 RUF/NPFL members gathered the civilians in the Court Barrie; those who refused were severely beaten with sticks and gun butts and some were killed. This first group of RUF/NPFL forces were joined the next day by another group,[1349] who merged before dividing into two groups: while one went to Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom, west of Peje Chiefdom), the other group went back to Potoru, allegedly to join other RUF/NPFL forces before their attack on Pujehun Town.

[1346] Potoru is the necessary entry point for Kenema District from the south-west, whereas Zimmi allowed penetration from the south-east.

[1347] Two main roads leave Potoru, one going to Peje and Sowa Chiefdoms and beyond to Wunde Chiefdom (Bo District) while the other one links Potoru to Pujehun (Panga Kabone Chiefdom), through Gallinas Peri and Kpaka Chiefdoms.

[1348] Information gathered concerning Kpaka Chiefdom tends to demonstrate that RUF/NPFL forces used this chiefdom as a transit point, using the main highway from Potoru to reach Pujehun Town. Accordingly, RUF/NPFL forces must have passed through Gallinas Peri Chiefdom where the highway lies in the north, although no information was recorded on this.

[1349] It could not be ascertained where this second group came from.

The RUF/NPFL forces then proceeded to Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom), where SLA troops were posted. Those SLA forces advised civilians to go indoors while RUF/NPFL forces were approaching. However, after a one-hour battle, RUF/NPFL forces entered the town, forced the inhabitants at gunpoint to gather at the Court Barrie, paraded in the town and killed some civilians who attempted to escape or who refused to go to the Court Barrie. Some civilians accused of being SLA members who would go and call their colleagues were killed, while others were beheaded. It appeared that the RUF/NPFL forces then left the town[1350] and SLA forces arrived in the town, but RUF/NPFL forces returned with a mounted anti aircraft gun while the inhabitants were busy burying their dead. The SLA and the RUF/NPFL fought all day, with some casualties being reported on both sides. The SLA forces were unable to repel the RUF/NPFL forces and ordered the civilians to leave the town and to go to Kenbondo (Jiama Bongor Chiefdom, Bo District[1351]) for safety. One week later, the SLA forces, reinforced by ULIMO, were eventually able to dislodge the RUF/NPFL forces from the town.

Repelled from Bandajuma, RUF forces concentrated on Futa (Peje Chiefdom) and Potoru (Barri Chiefdom), where they trained people who had joined willingly as well as those conscripted by force. They remained scattered in those two chiefdoms until the major SLA attack in August 1991. Some of the RUF/NPFL forces who had been repelled from Bandajuma went to Jeoma (Sowa Chiefdom). Civilians from the upper part of the village were gathered together and the men were forced to go into the veranda of the first house on the road from Bandajuma and Pujehun Town, while the women and children were put in a school compound. The RUF/NPFL forces shot at the men gathered in the veranda and 26 of them died; two managed to escape to the bush after pretending to be dead beneath the corpses.[1352]

In mid April 1991, a RUF/NPFL group, different from the one that took control of the aforementioned chiefdoms, entered Gbanahun (Gallinas Peri), two miles east of Bumpeh. This group was coming directly from Soro Gbema Chiefdom (located to the east of Gallinas Peri Chiefdom[1353]) and came mainly for the purposes of finding food, as they did not stay in the village nor did they go to Bumpeh, which is a bigger town. At Gbanahun, nevertheless, they appointed a Town Commander who was asked to provide food for them. After eating, the RUF/NPFL forces looted the shops of the village and forced young people to go with them to their base to carry the stolen property, which included domestic animals. Fullah people were targeted and two men were severely tortured. On their way back to their base in Soro Gbema Chiefdom, they passed by Bomi (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom), where they shot dead one man they accused of being a SLA member and again abducted young people to carry the property they had stolen. Those young boys from the two villages were then conscripted and when they came back to the chiefdom, they returned as members of the RUF/NPFL forces.

[1350] The RUF/NPFL forces apparently left the town when they heard the noise of a truck coming to the town, thinking it could be SLA reinforcements. The truck however did not pass by Bandajuma.

[1351] At this time, SLA forces were deployed at Kenbondo, their main base in Bo District.

[1352] No details could be obtained on what happened to the women and the children.

[1353] The Moa River is more or less the natural border between those two chiefdoms.

On their way to Pujehun Town on 17 April 1991, RUF/NPFL forces coming from Sowa Chiefdom passed by Koranko (Kpaka Chiefdom), reaching the headquarter town of Massam the following day. At Koranko, this RUF/NPFL group composed of 10 men dressed in black t-shirts and military trousers entered the town firing indiscriminately; they gathered the people and told them they should obey their laws forbidding raping and telling lies, which were punishable by death. The RUF/NPFL forces appointed a Town Commander and a secretary. Poultry from the village was taken and cooked for the forces. The next day, five of the RUF/NPFL members, followed by reinforcements from Potoru (Barri Chiefdom), went to Massam and, as in other villages, followed the procedure of holding a meeting in the Court Barrie, introducing themselves, appointing Town Commanders and so on. They slept in the town, mounting checkpoints to ensure their security. One man who was accused of being an APC sympathiser had his property taken away. One teenage girl was taken away to be a "wife"; her whereabouts remain unknown.

RUF/NPFL forces advanced further towards Pujehun Town, only a few miles from Massam, and laid an ambush between Massam and Yonni (Kpaka Chiefdom, at the border with Panga Kabone Chiefdom), killing one SLA member[1354] who was riding his bicycle to Massam to check about the rumour of an attack on the town. A reinforcement group of RUF/NPFL forces came from Potoru (Barri Chiefdom) to Yonni and headed for Pujehun Town, which they captured between 19 and 20 April 1991. By then, following the death of the SLA member in the ambush between Massam and Yonni, the few SLA members stationed at Pujehun Town had left the town. A Ministry of Social Welfare employee on his way home in the centre of Pujehun failed to stop when requested to do so by RUF/NPFL forces, so they followed him to his house. There, they asked for the keys of his motorbike and, when he refused, one of the RUF/NPFL members shot and killed him with an AK47 then took the key from his pocket. Other civilians were killed for trivial reasons, such as one man, killed because he was allegedly an APC sympathiser, although he was killed before he had time to answer the question whether he was or not. On another occasion, RUF/NPFL forces killed a petty trader who had refused to give them his motorbike. The petty trader's shop was also looted, together with other shops in the town that were broken into and looted.

Checkpoints were established to prevent civilians from escaping and the RUF/NPFL forces undertook the familiar gathering and address. Other meetings would be held during the time of their stay in the town, including one that took place four days after their arrival. At that meeting, the RUF/NPFL forces declared that the premises of a bank were now used to be as a "task force" office, revealing they were taking direct orders from the Head Office at Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) and requesting elders and other literates to work for them on administrative matters. One week later, as the elders complained about the starvation of the civilians, a system of "pass" was put in place, allowing civilians to move within the area under RUF/NPFL control.

Also in April, prior to the capture of Pujehun Town, Gallinas Peri Chiefdom was again visited by small groups of RUF/NPFL forces coming from the south of Barri Chiefdom. On their arrival in Bumpeh, they pointed guns at civilians, threatened to kill them if they did not join them and beat some of them, returning on the same day to Barri Chiefdom. As with the first incursion from Soro [1354] At this time very few SLA forces – 10 in number – were based at Pujehun Town.

Gbema Chiefdom, the elders decided to report the matter to the few SLA forces posted at Pujehun town, but no action was taken. RUF/NPFL forces came back to Bumpeh and Gbanahun, having learnt that the matter had been reported to SLA forces at Pujehun Town. At Konia (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom), one person suspected of having a link with the SLA forces was killed by the RUF/NPFL commander. Near Fonikoh, a man on his bicycle was killed after having refused to stop. Three people were killed at Blama Massaquoi and on his way back to Moala (Barri Chiefdom) with his men, the commander killed two more people at Fonima for running away when they saw the forces approaching.

From Pujehun Town, some RUF/NPFL forces boarded a car and a motorbike headed towards Gbandapi, a trade fair centre, passing through Najay. Gbandapi, in the south of Panga Kabonde Chiefdom, is located on the bank of Malemie River, which joins the Wanjei River flowing to Bonthe District. In all the villages along the road to Gbandapi that they visited, RUF/NPFL forces gathered the inhabitants, asked for weapons and enquired about the presence of SLA forces. They also established checkpoints, appointed a Town Commander, who was to send a daily report to the area commander,[1355] and told the civilians to bring food including rice, poultry, goats and sheep to Pujehun Town.[1356] Punishments for failing to bring food included beating with sticks and gun butts and the order to roll on the ground or swim in dirty water in a gutter.

The RUF/NPFL forces followed the Malemie River with speedboats to attack Benganie, which is the largest town in Mano Sakrim Chiefdom, albeit not the headquarter town. A meeting was summoned, checkpoints mounted, travelling passes issued, a Town Commander appointed and a green flag raised, meaning that the chiefdom was under RUF/NPFL control. The commander who mounted the green flag that day made it clear to the civilians that no other commander had the right to occupy the town and its environs without his consent, which would lead to internal fighting in May.[1357] Since it is located by the ocean, Benganie inhabitants were regularly asked to provide salt - a valuable and expensive commodity at this time - to forces stationed at Gbandapi and to those coming from time to time by boat.

Again in April, the RUF/NPFL forces from Pujehun Town proceeded further west to Malen Chiefdom, which shares boundaries with Bonthe District on the south-west and Bo District on the north-west. Before their arrival, people from the chiefdom had already fled to Bagbo Chiefdom (Bo District), upon hearing of the attack on Pujehun Town. The RUF/NPFL forces arrived in the chiefdom headquarter of Sahn on 24 April, when they summoned a meeting at the Court Barrie, asking for the Paramount Chief. When he arrived, the RUF/NPFL forces[1358] told the Paramount Chief that he should join them and exhort his people to do the same, while other RUF/NPFL members were looting property in the village and establishing checkpoints. An 11-year-old RUF/NPFL member called "child soldier" handcuffed the Paramount Chief. The first civilian to be [1355] This information was reported specifically for Najay town, but is illustrative of general practice at this time.

[1356] The civilians would carry the food on their heads to the next village, where new people would take the load to the next village until it reached Pujehun Town.
[1357] See below for more details on this infighting.
[1358] The commander of these forces was speaking a Liberian Creole, which led people to identify him as a NPFL member.

killed in this chiefdom was a man riding his motorbike from Jimmi (Bagbo Chiefdom, Bo District) to Taninahun (Malen Chiefdom) who did not stop and accordingly was considered to be a member of the SLA or SSD. The RUF/NPFL forces then departed for Pujehun Town, taking with them the motorbike of the man they had killed.

At this time, a place in Gadorhun (Malen Chiefdom) known as Kuwait, due to the valuable items that could be found in the town, was used to launch attacks on Bagbo Chiefdom in Bo District.

On 18 May, following the announcement over the BBC that the Paramount Chief from Malen Chiefdom had fled with his family between 9 and 10 May,[1359] RUF/NPFL forces came back to the chiefdom from Pujehun Town. Those RUF/NPFL forces coming in two trucks and armed with AK47s, bladed weapons and sticks, went straight to Taninahun in the north of the chiefdom, where they shot and killed the Town Chief with an AK47. They then went to Sahn, where they tied up prominent elderly people with bush ropes, forced six elderly women to sit on the floor in the Court Barrie, shot and killed some civilians, including women and children, raped one women and took her away, together with her son. Fifteen houses were burnt, including the Paramount Chief's compound. At Fonikor, near Sahn, nine civilians were killed with AK47s by RUF/NPFL forces looking for the Paramount Chief's mother. From that day until July 1991, the RUF/NPFL forces remained in control of the chiefdom.

During their stay at Massam (Kpaka Chiefdom), RUF/NPFL forces forced young men to manage checkpoints for them while others were used to carry their loads, as the forces were expanding their control to surrounding villages, like Manjama, Nyayahun and Bendu, stealing food and domestic animals. In May, a training base was opened at Gobaru, two miles from Massam, where a lot of school-going children were conscripted. A herbalist and fortune teller performed rituals during the training that were believed to make members invulnerable.[1360]

In May, an RUF/NPFL commander together with some of his forces arrived at Benganie and started stealing property. On hearing this news, the RUF/NPFL commander who had earlier warned civilians that no other commander should come to the town without his consent sent some troops, who captured the commander and the other members who carried out the looting. The captured commander tried to escape but was re-captured and brought back to Benganie, where he was publicly disgraced, tied up and seriously beaten. The other boys were taken to Gbandapi (Panga Kabone Chiefdom) for further interrogation, but their fate remains unknown. In late May, a similar incident took place and two commanders who had been stationed at Benganie were punished[1361] by the same commander as the previous time for sabotaging the administration he had set up in the village. In early June, another commander with his troops came to Benganie and, stating he was a [1359] The Paramount Chief allegedly fled through Bum Chiefdom (Bonthe District) to give information about what was happening in Pujehun District to the authorities in Bo Town.

[1360] It is reported that the belief in the powers of this person attracted many school children and other youths who decided to join the movement.

[1361] The two commanders were requested to fight bodily as enemies and as one was much younger, this one was then beaten by the commander. The two men were then undressed, ordered to dig two holes, which were filled with pepper, and ordered to put their genital organs in the holes.

good dancer, ordered the civilians to dance. Everybody was obliged to attend the dance, except the elderly, all doors had to stay open and the dance itself was organised so that the men were to lead the dance, followed by drummers and then by women at the end together with the RUF/NPFL forces. One man who defied the order and went to bed was severely beaten and tortured. When the dance started, the men at the front realised that the women at the back were being raped by the RUF/NPFL forces. This dance continued for four nights until the RUF/NPFL forces left the town.

By late June, SLA forces, together with United Liberation Movement for Liberia[1362] (ULIMO) forces, recaptured Dandabu (Panga Kabone Chiefdom), on the highway linking Pujehun Town and Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom) and then Bo Town (Kakua Chiefdom, Bo District). As this town was the first one to be recaptured in the chiefdoms located to the west of the Moa River and as this town is on the road that goes to Bandajuma, it is highly likely that the SLA forces, reinforced with ULIMO forces, who recaptured those chiefdoms came from Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom). Within two months, the SLA and ULIMO forces were able to dislodge the RUF/NPFL forces from all the chiefdoms located on the west bank of the Moa River.

On or around 14 July 1991, combined SLA and ULIMO forces successfully repelled RUF/NPFL forces from Pujehun Town and its environs, in particular Gobaru, Yonni and Massam (Kpaka Chiefdom). The RUF/NPFL forces withdrew to Bumpeh (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom). Following this attack on Pujehun Town, a curfew from 4:00pm to 6.00am was imposed in the south of Panga Kabone Chiefdom in the villages along the road leading to Gbandapi. Inhabitants from Najay saw a truck loaded with RUF/NPFL forces passing by their village without stopping. Two days later, SLA forces boarded a jeep and pursued the RUF/NPFL forces into Gbandapi, returning to Pujehun Town the same day. The retreating RUF/NPFL forces then passed by Benganie (Mano Sakrim Chiefdom), where one civilian had his slippers and tape recorder stolen. The next day, another batch of disgruntled and hungry RUF/NPFL forces previously based at Yonni (Kpaka Chiefdom) arrived in Benganie, requested civilians to cook for them, looted the houses and forced young men to carry the loads. One day, probably in August, youths from the chiefdom went to Pujehun Town to tell the SLA and ULIMO forces they had learnt that an RUF/NPFL commander who was hiding in the bush with his wife and daughter had recently asked a civilian for accommodation. ULIMO forces arrived in the chiefdom in search of the commander and killed the civilian who had hosted him. In late August, ULIMO forces tied up young people accused of being RUF/NPFL collaborators, as a result of which two of the young people died.

SLA and ULIMO forces successfully attacked RUF/NPFL forces at Gobaru (Kpaka Chiefdom, near Pujehun Town) on 14 July 1991. Some retreating RUF/NPFL forces passed by Largo (Kpaka Chiefdom) and one of them forced a woman to have sexual intercourse with him, threatening to kill all the other women of the house if she refused. While at Gobaru, the SLA and ULIMO forces requested the civilians to come to the town, for screening and registration purposes. However, molestation of civilians was at its highest peak during this time, as young people were undressed and beaten with gun butts; the screening test was so stringent, a lot of young men were killed accused of being RUF member without much investigation.[1363] Women and girls were also alleged to be the wives of the RUF/NPFL forces. Night searches for RUF/NPFL members were also instituted. In one incident, during such a search, a man who hid under his bed after SLA forces had knocked on his door was killed, on the allegation that he was a "rebel". In early August, as the number of civilians coming to the town was increasing and as a lot of people had already been killed during the screening process, SLA forces required civilians to assist in the screening process and established an action group composed of three SLA member and six civilians. As food coming from an international NGO was provided at Gobaru, Yonni and Massam, SLA forces mounted checkpoints at Massam to enhance security, particularly because RUF/NPFL forces were still present in the District, on the east side of the Moa River (Soro Gbema and Makpele Chiefdoms). At those checkpoints, young people were screened and on one occasion, on 21 August, one man was killed as documents were found in his bag demonstrating he was a secretary for the RUF/NPFL forces. Civilians were also required to operate checkpoints for the SLA forces, especially at night. As the SLA commander was replaced sometime between September and November, the situation changed slightly as civilians were no longer required to operate checkpoints and those suspected of belonging to the RUF/NPFL were thoroughly investigated.

[1362] This fighting faction, composed mainly of supporters of the late previous Liberian President, Samuel Doe, emerged in May 1991 to fight the NPFL.

On 18 July, four days after the recapture of Pujehun Town, 28 members of the SLA and ULIMO forces drove the few remaining RUF/NPFL forces out of Malen Chiefdom, with ULIMO forces killing one RUF member at Sahn. However, 47 men and children were also killed by ULIMO and SLA forces. Most of them were shot with AK47s and one man was killed with a knife, accused of having been trained by RUF/NPFL forces when they took control of the chiefdom after the Paramount Chief had left. Twenty members of the Sierra Leone Police (SLP) were then deployed in the chiefdom.

Repelled from Pujehun Town in July 1991, RUF/NPFL forces resettled in Bumpeh (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom). A checkpoint was established at Koni Junction, ¼ mile west of Bumpeh, and civilians from the surrounding villages were forced to operate it. During their one-month stay, RUF/NPFL forces harassed and beat civilians and raped girls. For example, civilians who refused to take their turn at a checkpoint were given 100 lashes each. The rate of killing increased at this time and there are reports of a practice whereby RUF/NPFL forces made people form a line and killed the 10th person in the line. A camp was opened to train young boys and girls who had been conscripted. It is reported that over 100 civilians were killed during the RUF/NPFL stay for not collaborating with them. Among those people killed were one woman who had come to buy palm oil and was accused of being a spy for SLA forces and a man who was killed because he was coming from an area behind the front line and accordingly was considered to be an SLA collaborator.

Those RUF/NPFL forces were reinforced in late July by two groups crossing the Moa River, both of whom killed civilians on their way to Bumpeh. At Gbanahun, the first group shot and killed six civilians who had previously quarrelled with an RUF/NPFL child soldier. The other group that crossed the Moa River near Saama killed one man who failed to offer them his cassava leaves.

[1363] It is however reported that the ULIMO were more abrupt in screening and killing young men than SLA forces.

On 3 August, RUF/NPFL forces resisted an attack from combined SLA/ULIMO forces who, after a fierce battle,[1364] went back to Pujehun Town, from where they had come. After this battle, the RUF/NPFL resettled in Saama, south of Bumpeh, where they frequently mistreated civilians at their newly-established checkpoints. These forces often sought out women and girls who were still virgins and raped them and civilians' valuable items and food were stolen. In one incident, all the inhabitants were told to undress, form two lines - one for men and one for women - and dance until nightfall. Women were later raped and those who refused to have sexual intercourse were killed. At this time, the forces were under the command of NPFL commanders. However, by the end of August 1991, combined SLA and ULIMO forces successfully dislodged the RUF/NPFL forces from the chiefdom, which was declared a "rebel- free area".

Until August, it is unclear who was in real control of Potoru (Barri Chiefdom), whether it was the RUF/NPFL forces or the SLA forces who, throughout April and May, claimed to have retaken the town from the RUF/NPFL forces.[1365] However, the only attack that is reported by civilians, possibly because it was the major one, took place in August in Potoru and other places in Barri Chiefdom; this freed the chiefdoms from any RUF/NPFL presence. Accordingly, although they may have been exchanges of control of the town and skirmishes between SLA forces and RUF/NPFL forces from April to August, because this period is characterised by the RUF/NPFL periodically crossing the Liberian border and both SLA and RUF/NPFL forces launching sporadic attacks on the other fighting faction, two periods can clearly be identified for Peje and Barri Chiefdoms: from April to August/September, when RUF/NPFL were present in the chiefdoms and from August/September, when SLA forces took control of the chiefdoms.

During the SLA attack on Potoru (Barri Chiefdom) in August, during which SLA forces were armed with anti aircraft guns, RPGs, hand mortars and AK47s, about 30 civilians and 42 to 45 RUF/NPFL members were killed and about 15 houses were burnt. From Potoru, RUF/NPFL forces were pursued to Moala, on the bank of the Moa River, where RUF/NPFL forces managed to cross the river towards Makpele Chiefdom, together with a number of civilians.[1366] SLA forces also went to Peje Chiefdom to dislodge the remaining pockets of RUF/NPFL forces, taking those forces they captured to Potoru.[1367] SLA forces began to patrol Barri and Peje Chiefdoms, sometimes falling into ambushes laid by the few RUF/NPFL small groups who had not been dislodged.

Under SLA control, any person suspected of being a "rebel" or a "rebel collaborator" was maltreated and some were killed. Youths from different chiefdoms, accused of being RUF/NPFL members, were brought to Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom), where they were killed. The Paramount Chief of Barri Chiefdom was arrested, stripped, beaten, thrown into a military truck and taken to the [1364] Both fighting forces had the same kind of weapons, including AK47s, AK56s, RPGs, hand grenades and "local" guns.

[1365] See, for example, BBC, 19 April 1991; there were also additional reports on this in April.

[1366] It is reported that the RUF/NPFL forces convinced civilians to go with them in Liberia so that they would not be killed by the SLA forces. This statement may also refer to what happened in other places such as Kailahun District where retreating RUF/NPFL forces succeeded in taking with them a large number of civilians by telling them they would be considered as RUF/NPFL collaborators by the SLA forces who would accordingly kill them.

[1367] It was not disclosed what happened to those captured RUF/NPFL members.

military base at Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom). At the base, he was accused of having harboured RUF/NPFL forces in his compound; his fate remains unknown. By the end of 1991, civilians who had fled to the bush and to the nearby District of Bo had resettled and resumed farming activities in Barri, Sowa and Peje Chiefdoms.

In September 1991, people staying at Bo Waterside were requested by the retreating RUF/NPFL forces to go onto the Mano River Union Bridge, which led to over 2,000 people gathering there. The civilians were forced to stay on the bridge for two days and nights, without access to food. Some children died and youths were killed when, authorised to leave the bridge, they headed for Sierra Leonean territory.[1368] It is believed that it was following this RUF/NPFL forces attempt to contain advance of the SLA and Guinean forces that those SLA and Guinean forces[1369] retook control of the bridge, thus cutting off the supply route for the remaining pockets of RUF/NPFL forces in the District. During their stay in Soro Gbema Chiefdom, SLA and ULIMO forces killed any suspected RUF collaborator, although they could escape death once arrested if their family gave money and/or women to the SLA forces. Valuable items were also taken from civilians during this period and transported to Freetown.

Activities resumed on 3 September 1991 in Gallinas Peri Chiefdom, when RUF/NPFL forces crossed the Moa River and came to Bopon, 15 miles south of Bumpeh, as they saw that there was no SLA deployment along the Moa River. In Bopon, they killed one prominent man, cut off his head and displayed it at the Gondema checkpoint in Soro Gbema Chiefdom. Three miles from Bopon village, they killed the 15 inhabitants of a farmhouse, including a pregnant woman whose stomach was split open and the foetus removed. After that killing in the farm, SLA soldiers took control of the whole chiefdom and reinforcements were sent to the various crossing points along the Moa River. No RUF/NPFL incursion was felt for the rest of the year, until April 1992.

In late 1991, as fighting on the east bank of the Moa River was taking place, SLA forces based on the west side appealed to the Paramount Chiefs of Kpaka, Panga Krim and Panga Kabonde Chiefdoms to give them young men to help them maintaining the security of the chiefdoms.

b) Events in 1992 –1995

The number of incidents for 1992 to 1994 drops considerably when compared to 1991,[1370] which is instructive of how Pujehun District was affected by the war. By 1992, SLA forces together with ULIMO forces had driven most of the RUF forces out of the District. The RUF, together with NPFL forces, nevertheless came back to the District from the Liberian border in late December 1992, when they established their stronghold in Soro Gbema chiefdom.

[1368] It is not clear from the records who killed those civilians, whether it was SLA or RUF/NPFL forces, and open source information does not clarify the matter. Accordingly, to say that the RUF/NPFL forces used the civilians to protect themselves from the SLA forces is an inference gleaned from the records, although it was not expressly stated.

[1369] According to the Agence France Presse, the bridge was retaken on 6 September 1991: 06 September 1991.

[1370] Thus, the number of records for 1992 represents 1/5th of the records for 1991, 1993 – 1/6th and 1994 and 1995 together 1/10th.

Therefore most of the fighting as such was concentrated in the east, at the Liberian border, which may account for the fewer number of incidents during this time period. In addition, in 1993, most of the residents of the District were advised to go to Gondama camp, which may also explain the scarcity of the incidents of this period. However, beginning in 1992, there were increasing incidents of violations committed by SLA forces.

Events in 1992

Although SLA forces claimed to have recaptured Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) in August 1991,[1371] it appears that Makpele Chiefdom came under SLA control only in January 1992, when SLA forces took over Daar-es-Salaam, the easternmost point of Pujehun District on the border with Liberia, and many other towns in the chiefdom. RUF/NPFL bases became SLA bases; Zimmi camp and Baquima were now under their control. SLA forces were also based at Gofor in the south of the chiefdom along the road that goes to Soro Gbema Chiefdom, where they brought poultry and other domestic animals they had found in the villages they had visited.

However, SLA forces began to harass and mistreat civilians from the beginning of 1992. Sexual assaults are reported, such as a woman from Joporwahun who was raped by an SLA member while she was at Zimmi. SLA forces chased civilians for their food, restricted their movement and forced them to work for them, including by hunting or fishing. SLA forces also engaged in mining and at Gbojibu, which became one of their mining villages, they set 13 houses on fire as they did not want to have civilians in their midst. This drove civilians to regional towns like Kenema or Bo or to Liberia.

In January 1992, following the appeal of the SLA commander to the Paramount Chiefs of Kpaka, Panga Krim and Panga Kabone Chiefdoms, youths[1372] from all these chiefdoms, some of them being local hunters, gathered in Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom) to receive summary training and some ammunition for their barrel guns. Shortly after, they were sent to Bumpeh (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom), located a few miles from the Moa River. SLA forces used underage children to carry arms and ammunition to the warfront. Furthermore, not only did the SLA forces take money and food items from the population in what they called the "war effort", they also took other property, including drums of palm oil, furniture and other household items. These items were believed to be transported to Freetown by SLA trucks and other trucks they had seized from civilians.

The killing of alleged collaborators was ongoing; the standard SLA practice was to tie up alleged RUF collaborators and to throw them off the Yonni Bridge (Kpaka Chiefdom) or to execute suspects at the Makibi Bridge in Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom). For example, SLA forces beheaded a man in the Sambo section, allegedly because he had given meat to the RUF forces.

In 1992, SLA forces were well established in Panga Krim Chiefdom, which forced the RUF forces into hiding. However the presence of the SLA forces was heavily felt by the civilians, as the SLA forces ill-treated the civilian population. For example, civilians who had previously been appointed to any position by the RUF, which they could not refuse or they would be killed, or who had been forced to join the RUF were punished by the SLA forces. Common punishments included amputations of the hands and ears, the plucking out of eyes, putting people in a bag and then setting the bag on fire, taking them to the river and drowning them and shooting and killing them.

[1371] AFP, 19 August 1991.

[1372] The term 'youths' in Sierra Leone could refer to anybody aged up to their mid to late 30s, although it probably does not include anyone under 14.

In May 1992, RUF/NPFL forces crossed the Moa River and launched a series of attacks on different towns in Gallinas Peri Chiefdom. By the end of the month, civilians reported that the chiefdom was under their control. However, it appeared that in 1992, most of the RUF/NPFL forces had been chased out of the District and only pockets of forces were still active, mainly laying ambushes. Indeed, following the successful attacks on RUF/NPFL positions by the SLA and ULIMO forces in 1991 and the SLA control over Makpele Chiefdom in January 1992, the major RUF attacks in the District took place in December 1992 and 1993. Accordingly, those attacks on Gallinas Peri could be considered not as highlighting a massive operation for the control of the chiefdom but rather as sporadic actions carried out by isolated pockets of RUF forces. Thus in May, apparently taking advantage of the disorganisation of the SLA forces,[1373] RUF forces attacked Kakayama, where they battled for two days with SLA forces. An SLA truck with human and logistical reinforcements fell into an ambush, but there were no fatalities. The SLA forces then retreated to their other base at Saama, which - overpopulated with civilians fleeing the previous fighting - was later attacked on 3 May 1992. Some civilians were killed in the crossfire and others were captured by the RUF forces. The Town Chief of a nearby village was captured and later killed by the RUF forces, who left his body at one end of the town. Within the same month, another RUF group attacked another SLA position at Njala.

Kpaka Chiefdom was fairly quiet during this period, with only two incidents reported. Probably before the overthrow of the Government of J.S. Momoh on 29 April, RUF forces who had crossed the Moa River attacked many villages, including Gedeyama, Saama Peri, Kpetema and Mamboma, looting, killing and abducting civilians.[1374] Similarly to what happened in Gallinas Peri Chiefdom, these actions were probably raids from some isolated groups of RUF forces. In June, unidentified armed men attacked Massam (Kpaka Chiefdom) in the early hours of the day but were repelled by some SLA forces who claimed that they fought armed men they could not identify.[1375]

In October 1992, SLA forces counter attacked and retook some positions in Gallinas Peri Chiefdom, although Saama remained an RUF base. SLA forces based at Bumpeh encouraged civilians to come back and resettle. Some civilians were killed, mainly for the purposes of taking their property. For example, one Fullah businessman was killed by an SLA member who took away his belongings, namely a gold wristwatch, a gold chain, some money and a bicycle. The SLA member who carried out this killing was arrested by the SLA commander to whom the killing was reported and sent to Freetown. In November, the youths gathered at Bumpeh to help the SLA forces repel the RUF forces from their chiefdom. Those youths, who brought single barrel guns and various [1373] Although SLA forces were based at Bumpeh, Kakayama and Saama, the command position on the SLA forces was just changing hands at this time.

[1374] No details could be obtained on these incidents.

[1375] Fatalities – if any – were not reported.

bladed weapons, were dispatched by the SLA commander in two groups, one heading to Saama where the RUF forces were based. On their way to Saama, they fell into an RUF ambush, during which some of them were killed while others were captured by the RUF forces.[1376]

RUF forces regrouped and returned in December 1992 to capture Soro Gbema Chiefdom, which became their stronghold. This attack led to a massive exodus of civilians crossing the Moa River. Towards the end of December 1992, inhabitants of Barri Chiefdom saw a large number of civilians from Soro Gbema Chiefdom crossing the Moa Rover and passing by their chiefdom. Those civilians, disclosing that an attack had taken place in Soro Gbema Chiefdom where many civilians were killed and houses were burnt, did not settle in Barri Chiefdom but continued their journey to find a safer haven. Civilians from Potoru heard three days later that the RUF forces were also in Makpele Chiefdom.[1377]

Events in 1993

In January 1993, RUF forces crossed the Moa River and launched attacks on all the chiefdoms located on the west bank of the river. Thus, they attacked Saaquehun village (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom), 12 miles north of Bumpeh, where they killed 12 people, burnt many houses and abducted many civilians.

On 13 January 1993, well-armed RUF forces attacked Potoru in Barri chiefdom,[1378] shelling the town. Over 30 people were killed, some having their throats cut with bayonets. The forces used Potoru to attack other villages in the chiefdom, such as Waima and Kundowahun, and to make raids on Peje and Sowa Chiefdoms. In Peje Chiefdom, villages like Bumpeh and Quiva came under attack and civilians described this wave of attack as a "full-scale offensive", "a fearful battle, worse than ever". Over 100 civilians were killed and 30 houses burnt in Bumpeh, most of which were populated with civilians. During these attacks, young girls were raped and a lot of civilians were abducted. Indeed, throughout their stay in these areas,[1379] the RUF forces raped women, including rapes by many men of girls under 15, killed people for not supporting them and abducted people on a daily basis, including young boys who were abducted for the purposes of recruitment. As a result, civilians left the chiefdoms and went to Gondama camp.

Also in January 1993, an unspecified number of RUF forces[1380] attacked Massam (Kpaka Chiefdom) and on the same day, moved on to Yonni (Kpaka Chiefdom) and to Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom). Since this attack took place on the day of the weekly trade fare at Gbandapi (south of Panga Kabone Chiefdom), most of the women were not in Pujehun Town and the surrounding villages, which led to the abduction of many children. The SLA forces based at Pujehun Town left the town and the RUF forces occupied the town.

[1376] It could not be ascertained where the second group went.

[1377] No more information could be gathered on these attacks.

[1378] Some of those forces were speaking in Liberian language.

[1379] As for Sowa Chiefdom, conflicting information concerning Bandajuma where the SLA was stationed did not allow us to ascertain what happened in this town.

[1380] It is reported that some of them had their faces masked for fear of recognition.

Civilians from the chiefdoms where these attacks took place were advised by the SLA forces to go to Koribondo (Jiama Bongor Chiefdom, Bo District), a major SLA base in Bo District. At Koribondo, an international NGO provided assistance to the displaced people who were advised by the SLA commander to go to Gondama, at the border between Kakua and Tikonko Chiefdoms (Bo District), where the Pujehun District Development Association had secured a land to build a camp. By March, registration started in the camp for proper food supply and each household was to build a booth before they could be registered. By the end of April, civilians from all the chiefdoms of Pujehun District were to be found in the camp.[1381] Again, in February 1993, the SLA forces exhorted the civilians from Gallinas Peri Chiefdom to go to Koribondo (Jiama Bongor Chiefdom, Bo District) for their own safety. When they arrived at Koribondo, the civilians were advised by the SLA base at Koribondo to go to Gondama.

However on 28 January, coming from the direction of Dandabu (north of Panga Kabone Chiefdom), SLA forces recaptured Pujehun Town, which by that time had been under the control of the RUF for two weeks. In March 1993, the SLA recaptured Blama Massaquoi (Gallinas Peri Chiefdom) and rescued over 260 civilians who were being held captives by the RUF forces after a fierce battle in Tongie. In late March, RUF forces retook Pujehun Town overnight, armed with heavy machine guns but SLA forces successfully counter attacked four days later on 30 March.[1382] In early June 1993, other unsuccessful attacks were launched on Pujehun Town, allegedly by hungry RUF members, which did not challenge SLA control over the area.[1383]

Civilians began having doubts about the SLA forces; starting in 1993, there appeared to be "much understanding" between the RUF forces and the SLA forces. Indeed, civilians found that any time there was a RUF attack on a village or settlement, the SLA forces based in Pujehun Town would not go there until they heard the RUF had left the area. On their arrival, they would take away the any property left by the RUF forces and bring it to Pujehun Town, sometimes by truck and sometimes by forcing civilians to carry the load. Civilians also understood that during attacks on SLA bases, the forces stationed there would only shoot in the air and then run away, leaving their arms and ammunition behind them. Civilians further noticed that those kind of incidents happened especially after SLA forces had received deliveries of arms and ammunition and food rations. Civilians who dared to question the behaviour of the SLA forces and their efficiency in repelling RUF attacks were killed.

In May 1993, SLA forces, SSD members and ULIMO forces launched a successful attack on Potoru (Barri Chiefdom). After a three-day battle, the RUF forces were repelled from the town and had spread throughout the chiefdom. During this attack, some civilians were killed. After they recaptured Potoru, ULIMO and, to a lesser extent, SLA forces killed up to 70 civilians whom they suspected of being "rebels" or "rebel collaborators" and burnt the houses of many people they [1381] This camp was made up of makeshift mud and thatch huts without sewage or proper ventilation. Living conditions would start becoming catastrophic and the death toll would soon be very high, between 50 and 80 deaths per month: BBC, 16 September 1993.

[1382] AFP 26 March 1993 and BBC 1 April 1993.
[1383] BBC, 3 June 1993 and 5 June 1993.

suspected of hiding suspected "rebels" or "rebel collaborators". Furthermore, civilians were used to carry supplies for the SLA and, accordingly, some of them were killed during ambushes laid by RUF forces. From May 1993 to 1994, SLA positions in these chiefdoms came under persistent attacks.

Those in the RUF High Command in Soro Gbema Chiefdom were members of the late Ndorgbowusui Group. However, others who were not members of this group volunteered to be recruited for the RUF, which led to dissention among the RUF ranks. When orders were given, they refused to follow them or, if they were forced to carry them out, it was not in the best interest of the commanders. The rivalries between these two RUF groups, each of them giving allegiance either to Solomon Demby or to Hon. Mannah Kpaka, led to much destruction of property and killing of civilians in Soro Gbema chiefdom. For example, one group carried out the massive destruction and burning of Malema and Fairo, the two major towns in the chiefdom, while the other group burnt down Wai and surrounding villages. In any village where either group felt there were supporters of the other group, they would wage war on those communities. Furthermore, as the Demby supporters were known for being wealthy, constant ambushes were staged along the main roads of the chiefdom.[1384]

The population of Makpele Chiefdom suffered continuous looting and property destruction by the SLA forces, who had begun to engage in mining activities that would continue until after the 1996 elections. For example, at Palima in 1993, the roofs were taken from the Court Barrie, the mosque and other houses. By early 1993, most of the civilians had fled to camps (including the Gondama camp in Bo District, which was opened in January 1993), to larger towns such as Kenema and to Liberia. The SLA forced those who remained to mine for diamonds, bring the SLA forces food and give them money for food.

Thus, by August 1993, RUF forces were entrapped in Pujehun District by SLA and ULIMO forces whose main bases where in Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom) and Gofor (Makpele Chiefdom). The remaining RUF forces controlled only a region of marshland and tropical forest on the Atlantic coast,[1385] where they staged ambushes. On 28 August, some RUF forces laid an ambush at Golahun, nine miles south of Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone or Kpaka Chiefdom), and opened fire on ICRC personnel. Two ICRC nurses were killed and a third one, together with the two Gambian drivers, was wounded.[1386]

Events in 1994

At the end of January and following the renewed RUF attacks, notably in Kenema District, the Government of Sierra Leone declared "total war" against the RUF.

Despite the SLA presence in Zimmi, RUF forces attacked Palima (Makpele Chiefdom, 1.5 miles from Zimmi) in April 1994, by passing the SLA forces. Thirty-two people were abducted and brought to their stronghold in Soro Gbema Chiefdom, where they stayed over two years, being trained as RUF member or used to work for the RUF forces, mainly as fishermen.

[1384] None of those events could be specifically dated and happened sometime between 1993 and 1995 when the Government of Sierra Leone sent a delegation to the Mano River Union Bridge.

[1385] AFP, 16 September 1993

[1386] AFP 28 August 1993 and 29 August 1993.

In 1994, RUF forces were occupying most of the villages in Barri Chiefdom, looting, raping, killing and abducting. These forces began spreading to Kenema District.[1387] However at that time, most of the population of these chiefdoms had fled to the bush or to Gondama camp.

Events in 1995

At the beginning of the year, the Sierra Leonean Government sent a delegation to the Mano River Union Bridge (Soro Gbema Chiefdom) to negotiate a cease-fire with the RUF. This was the second round of talks between RUF forces and the NPRC regime, the first one taking place in December 1994.[1388] For one of these meetings, the delegation composed of Government representatives and prominent people was airlifted to the crossing point at Bo Waterside from Monrovia and crossed the bridge towards the Sierra Leonean side, at Jendema (Soro Gbema Chiefdom) without seeing any RUF forces. RUF forces appeared shortly after and abducted them, threatening to kill them. It is believed that those people remained in the hands of the RUF forces until 1998 when the District was cleared of any RUF presence.

In 1995, SLA forces were still in control of Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) and harassment of civilians continued. In one incident, 25 people from Palima were undressed and taken to Zimmi, where they were forced to push a truck loaded with SLA forces.[1389] Palima (Makpele Chiefdom) was again attacked by RUF forces in October 1995 but this time, the forces came from Tunkia Chiefdom in Kenema District. Two people were killed and some houses looted.[1390] Thus, civilians from Makpele Chiefdom were caught between RUF attacks and SLA harassment. All the houses and other facilities (including kitchens and toilets that had been built by UNHCR) at Palima were destroyed by both the RUF forces and the SLA forces, although more destruction was done by the SLA forces.

Notwithstanding the relatively scarce information related to this period, it appears that Pujehun District together with the Mokanji Hills (Moyamba District) and the north of Bonthe District had become a stronghold of the RUF.[1391]

c) Events in 1996 – 1998 and beyond

These years are marked by the progressive initiation of Kamajors in the District. As with other Districts in the south, from the time of their initiation until the May 1997 Coup, the Kamajors together with SLA forces were successful in containing and repelling RUF forces from their [1387] More detail is needed on these incidents.

---

[1388] This second round of talks failed as the RUF turned down NPRC's offer of peace: Communiqué Inter Press Service, 3 January 1995 and 11 January 1995. In April, the NPRC Chairman proposed an immediate cease-fire and negotiations to the RUF, which was rejected by the RUF. Amnesty International Report 1996.

[1389] No more details could be obtained on this incident.

[1390] Although no more details could be obtained on this incident, it has to be borne in mind that Palima is 1½ miles from Zimmi and accordingly, the reported attacks on Palima, could reveal an attempt of the RUF forces to overrun the SLA forces based at Zimmi.

[1391] BBC, 20 February 1995.

positions. Shortly after the Coup on 25 May, the Kamajors went underground and reassembled; from the end of 1997, they were successfully engaged in driving the RUF/AFRC forces out of the District.

CDF initiations began in late 1995 or early 1996 in Gondama camp in Bo District. It is reported that the catalyst for the commencement of initiations was the attacks on Gondama Camp and the heavy casualties suffered there. In early 1996, the first CDF members moved to Pujehun District to reinforce the SLA forces stationed there. All chiefdoms represented in the camp were to appoint a certain number of men from their chiefdom as Kamajors, in proportion to their size and population. The initiation rite was performed in Bo Town. All the adults in the camp had to contribute Le 500[1392] or the equivalent in bulgur for the initiation to take place. In the early stages, the new initiates, equipped mainly with bladed weapons and single barrel guns, were under the command of the chiefdom authorities but they soon came under the command of a National Coordinator, with District Coordinators.[1393]

Following the general elections in February 1996, people started leaving the camps and the bush to resettle in their villages. Displaced people who had found refuge in Bo District and refugees from Liberia began to be repatriated in the District. However, in May, Kamajors found over 100 civilians dead in Bendu (north of Malen Chiefdom), mainly aged over 50 years old. The RUF forces who killed those civilians also captured teenagers from the town and took them to Camp Libya in Soro Gbema Chiefdom.[1394] In late August 1996, AFP reported that tens of thousands of people left Gondama Camp as the "rebel war dies down"[1395] and it was believed that people had returned to 10 out of the 12 chiefdoms of the District. Makpele and Soro Gbema Chiefdoms, at the Liberian border, were the two chiefdoms where resettlement remained impossible for security reasons. Those people who resettled in the District nevertheless still received food distribution in Bo District until this distribution began also in Pujehun District later in the year.

During the period leading up to May 1997, the Kamajors, together with SLA forces, repelled RUF forces in many areas, allowing for relative tranquillity and continuing resettlement. People tried to engage in farming activities, being supplied with seeds and basic agricultural equipments by NGOs and UN Agencies. However, this collaboration between SLA forces and the Kamajors soon started to deteriorate. In Barri Chiefdom for example, quarrels over the dismounting of checkpoints arose and checkpoints mounted by SLA forces were destroyed by Kamajors. This led the SLA forces to leave the chiefdom, which was then under Kamajor control only until the May 1997 Coup.

In Gallinas Peri Chiefdom, the first attack the Kamajors launched against the RUF was in Blama Massaquoi and they continued fighting until the chiefdom was declared a "rebel free area" around [1392] This should be placed in the context of Sierra Leone's position at the bottom of the Human Development Index: between 1991 and 2000, 57% of the population lived on less than 1 USD (2.000 SLL) per day and 74.5% lived on less than 2 USD (4.000 SLL) per day: see UNDP Human Development Report 2003, http://www.undp.org/hdr2003/indicator/cty_f_SLE.html, last visited on 30 December 2003.

---

[1393] See section [X] for a more detailed explanation of the formation of the Civil Defence Forces.

[1394] Xinhua News Agency and AFP: 9 May 1996.

[1395] AFP, 22 August 1996.

November 1996. Thus, from November 1996 until May 1997, the chiefdom was under Kamajor control. Kamajors from Soro Gbema Chiefdom passing through Gallinas Peri Chiefdom reached their chiefdom sometime between August and October 1996. In Barri Chiefdom, the Kamajors first joined the SLA forces based at Potoru, the chiefdom headquarters, while RUF forces were scattered mainly in the north of the chiefdom, between Vaama and Baiama. Following attacks on RUF camps, Kamajors obtained arms and ammunition that were more sophisticated than the ones they had so far.

However, the Kamajors in Makpele Chiefdom, in particular the 23 Kamajors based at Manjama, engaged in massive mining activities, the junior members undertaking mining for the most senior ones. Mining equipment was taken away from civilians, who were forced to feed the Kamajors, go hunting and fetch wood and water. No respect was paid to the chiefdom authorities and the Regent Paramount Chief had no control over the Kamajors. The movement of civilians was restricted and harassment of civilians was frequent; their houses were searched, property was confiscated and farms were harvested by the Kamajors for their own purposes. Civilians from this village went into hiding, as they could no longer withstand this situation. At Vaama in 1996, Kamajors argued with SLA forces, allegedly because both groups wanted to have access to the resources of the villages, namely food, money and women. The two groups fought, the Kamajors being equipped with single barrels guns and the SLA with automatic rifles and RPGs, as a result of which the Kamajors left town. SLA forces from Zimmi visited Ngombu, close to Zimmi, as they heard Kamajors had gathered there to fight them. As they arrived in the town, they started shooting, thus preventing people from giving explanations, as a result of which seven civilians were killed. Before leaving, those SLA forces took some furniture for Zimmi.

Kamajors based at Madina (Makpele Chiefdom) also engaged in the same behaviour towards civilians, who were forced to contribute to the Kamajor's activities by providing money, bulgur, rice and palm oil. Toobu (three miles from Zimmi) was also visited by Kamajors and in April 1997, they took away bicycles, bailing machines, a power saw, Le 1,000.000 and other property.[1396] Civilians made a report to the head Kamajor at Zimmi but no action was taken. Until the May Coup, more initiations took place for youth of the chiefdom and almost all the villages suffered similar kinds of harassment.

In late December 1996 following the signing of the Abidjan Peace Agreement, more than 8,000 people who had been captured two years earlier by RUF forces were released in Soro Gbema Chiefdom, allegedly on the directive of RUF High Command.[1397] During this period, it appeared that RUF forces were ordered by their High Command to regroup and encamp at Camp Libya, located in a dense rainforest on the Moa River, which was practically their only remaining stronghold in the District after the Mano River Union Bridge and Sulima (both in Soro Gbema Chiefdom) had been recaptured.

In Soro Gbema Chiefdom, before the May Coup in late 1996 or early 1997, Kamajors drove many RUF forces out of the chiefdom. At Felo Mano and other places in the chiefdom, the Kamajors discovered arms stores and an airstrip was also found at Felo Mano. This information was transmitted to the Sierra Leone Government through the SLA and SLP based at Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) and the arms and ammunition were airlifted to Freetown in 1997.[1398] The Kamajors fought to retake the whole chiefdom up to Jendema, at the Liberian border. Many RUF forces fleeing to Liberia were caught and killed on the Mano River Union Bridge, which has been described as the "Kamajor slaughter site", where many RUF members were tied up and thrown alive in the Mano River.

[1396] Those Kamajors "dressed carefully" and "behaved like RUF or SLA forces".
[1397] BBC, 28 December 1996.

After the Coup in May 1997 and the merging of the RUF with AFRC forces, the CDF were defeated in many areas and went into hiding. They operated from underground, refusing to obey the AFRC leader's general order to lay down their arms and to report to the nearest police station. Instead, initiations continued took place; in Sowa Chiefdom, for example, 150 young men were initiated.[1399]

From May 1997 until they were repelled from the District in 1998, the combined RUF/AFRC forces imposed great harms on civilian population in general and on suspected Kamajors or Kamajors collaborators/sympathisers in particular. For example, three days after the overthrow of the Government, AFRC forces burnt down compounds belonging to Kamajor commanders in Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom). Other houses were looted, including those of two Limba people. In Sowa Chiefdom, AFRC forces accused civilians of being Kamajors, killing many of them. The RUF/AFRC forces went on patrols in Sowa Chiefdom and established themselves in the chiefdom headquarters of Bandajuma. RUF/AFRC forces then commenced patrols in Bandajuma, as they knew the chiefdom was initiating Kamajors, attempting to prevent the Kamajors from establishing themselves in the chiefdom headquarter. The Bo-Pujehun Highway, which passes through Sowa Chiefdom, was constantly patrolled at night and houses along the highway were set on fire. Youths who were found during these patrols were killed by the combined forces, who accused them of being Kamajors. These constant patrols led civilians once more to flee their villages to go in their settlements in the bush, called "sorquehun".

Women were sexually abused and in Pujehun Town, one woman died as a result. The practice of padlocking the private parts of women is also reported.[1400] In Galinas Peri Chiefdom, in December 1997, RUF/AFRC forces coming from their main base in Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom) entered Blama Massaquoi, fully armed with automatic rifles and an anti-aircraft weapon mounted on vehicle. They burnt down the house of the CDF commander using an RPG, as a result of which other houses nearby were also burnt. The RUF/AFRC forces took supplies from returnees to the [1398] According to the records, ECOMOG from Freetown and Kenema would have come to the site of these discoveries and air lifted the ammunition to Freetown. However, no ECOMOG forces as such were to be found in these towns. The key person probably referred to foreign troops such as Guinean or Nigerian who have been fighting with SLA for a long time. Furthermore, the reference to Kenema should probably understood as Kenema District and not Kenema Town, as no presence of such foreign forces was reported for Kenema Town.

[1399] According to the OCHA report for 16-21 July 1997, in many parts of Pujehun District, "local military commanders have good relations with Kamajors and do not support AFRC" but from the information collected from key people, this could not be confirmed.

[1400] This information was related in such general terms and no more details could be obtained.

chiefdom, mainly seed rice and other seeds, and continued to steal property throughout the chiefdom, in particular at Saahn Massaquoi, before returning to Pujehun Town.

Whenever they lost men at the battlefront, RUF/AFRC forces killed a number of civilians similar to the number of men they had lost. For example, in late 1997, in Gofor (Makpele Chiefdom), RUF/AFRC forces placed 20 people in a house and set fire to it. The reason advanced for this was that these people were coming from a place where the Kamajors had previously ambushed and killed RUF/AFRC forces.

The Kamajors regrouped their forces and more initiations took place, initiating often children below the age of 15.[1401] Starting late 1997, Kamajors attacked RUF/AFRC forces' positions. In October 1997, RUF/AFRC forces in a four-truck convoy fell into an ambush near Fairo in Soro Gbema Chiefdom. Kamajors killed those caught in the ambush, together with the civilians who were travelling with them, because the Kamajors considered them to be collaborators. According to those Kamajors, those civilians used to lead the RUF/AFRC forces and show them the Kamajor hiding places. Between late 1997 and March 1998, many villages were burnt down in Soro Gbema Chiefdom by both Kamajors and RUF/AFRC forces to prevent the other fighting faction from settling there.

ECOMOG forces based in Liberia were carrying weapons sent by the CDF National Coordinator through the Mano River Union Bridge to the CDF District Coordinator, who in turn distributed the items to the Kamajors in the District. ECOMOG was also supplying the Kamajors with medicine and the wounded forces were transported to Tieni in Liberia by helicopter, where there was a base at that time.[1402] Whenever arms and ammunition were seized at battlefronts, they were taken to the District Coordinator, who reallocated them as required.[1403]

In November 1997, the Kamajors repelled most of the combined forces from Sowa Chiefdom. While fleeing, the RUF/AFRC forces burnt 30 houses in Bandajuma and set many villages along the Bandajuma-Koribondo (Bo District) highway on fire. Nevertheless, the Kamajors took control of the area and people came out of the bush where they had been hiding.

[1401] According to the Sierra Leone Humanitarian Report for 29 October-18 November 1997, "[…] insecurity in Bo, Pujehun and Bonthe districts has also increased due to clashes between the military and the Kamajors. It seems that there is a clear difference between newly-recruited Kamajors, who have access to automatic weapons and apparently operate outside the authority of chiefdom representatives, and the traditional Kamajors who are carefully screened and respect traditional chiefdom structures. Aid Agencies operating in the Southern province are being increasingly harassed by some groups of Kamajors and are currently being prevented from accessing areas to the South of Bandejuma on the Bo-Pujehun highway. This is a source of concern as there are known pockets of malnutrition in parts of Bonthe and Pujehun districts." Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 29 Oct - 18 Nov 1997. REG. NO. 97/0390.

[1402] Indeed, it seems that Kamajors had a base on the Liberian territory.

[1403] It is alleged that some of these weapons were sold for money by the CDF District coordinator and were thus kept out of circulation to the Kamajors. Furthermore, some weapons would have been given to civilians who were not Kamajors for them to benefit from the disarmament program. This information was also revealed during the TRC (Truth and Reconciliation Commission) hearings in Pujehun Town in June 2003.

On 20 to 22 December 1997, Kamajors from Gbandapi (south of Panga Kabone Chiefdom) moved to Pujehun Town in a bid to recapture the town from the RUF/AFRC forces. During this first attempt, the Kamajors were repelled and sustained heavy casualties. A few days later, on 27 December, RUF/AFRC forces from Pujehun Town went down to Gbandapi, burning houses and looting food items on their way; 23 houses were burnt down at Najay. This counter-attack would mark the first step of a series of reprisals against civilians by the Kamajors. On 8 January 1998, three Kamajors came to Najay, where they fired many shots, burnt down one house and arrested two men gathered for the morning prayer at the Mosque whom they accused of collaborating with the RUF/AFRC forces, taking them to Bonthe District.[1404] Other Kamajors later returned to the town, stripped naked six civilians and beat them, on the same grounds. On 15 February, Kamajors killed the Chief Imam of the District and the Section Chief at Bayama (Panga Krim Chiefdom) by tying a rope around his neck and stabbing him many times before shooting him. These events prompted inhabitants from Najay to leave the village for fear of further reprisals but Kamajors found them in their hiding places and took away all their belongings, including food, domestic animals and money. As they were unable to stay any longer in the bush and as many surrounding villages refused to host them, these civilians went to Bassaleh, east of Najay.

Over 20 fierce and repeated battles took place between 28 May 1997 and late February 1998 to establish and maintain control of Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom), which was a stronghold of the RUF/AFRC forces in the District. During the two first attacks[1405] launched by Kamajors coming from the direction of Gofor, civilians were killed. As the fighting intensified between Kamajors and the RUF/AFRC in June, the International Committee for the Red Cross (ICRC) sheltered over 1,000 civilians.[1406] In early July, Kamajors regrouped and launched a third attack, coming from the main road of the chiefdom, like the previous attack. This attack was unsuccessful although no casualties were reported. However, the RUF/AFRC forces burnt down houses of Kamajor supporters, which made them flee the town, leaving their belongings in the hands of the RUF/AFRC forces. During the fourth attack in early August, many civilians, RUF/AFRC members and Kamajors were wounded. Some of the wounded died in the bushes and the decomposing bodies were later discovered by civilians. While they took control, the Kamajors would control the town only for a very short period of time.[1407]

Inhabitants from Palima, half a mile from Zimmi on the road to Kenema District, deserted the town following the fourth attack and went to the bush for three weeks. They were discovered by the RUF/AFRC forces, who took the produce from the harvests to Zimmi. During the subsequent battles from September to December, houses were burnt down and civilians from Zimmi and the surrounding villages suffered heavy casualties; four Chiefs and 14 counsellors were killed, accused of being supporters of the Sierra Leone President. During this period, civilians also died from [1404] What happened to those civilians was not specified.

---

[1405] During the second battle on 17 June, the key person recounts that he had the impression that when it came time for the battle, the Kamajors did not have central command.

[1406] Sierra Leone Humanitarian Report 24-30 June 1997.

[1407] According to Africa News, 25 August 1997, ICRC had to withdraw from its office at Zimmi.

starvation while others drowned in Mahoi River, trying to seek refuge in other areas.[1408] On 6 January 1998, another Kamajor attack left a lot of civilians dead.[1409]

Also in January, Kamajors went to Vaama (east of Zimmi) where they stole all the household property they could find and took some money from civilians. Before leaving, they set some buildings on fire and took away one civilian.[1410] Starting on 23 January, there was another attack described as a 'no retreat battle' that lasted for four days. At the end of the battle, during which both fighting factions used RPGs, there was a great deal of property destruction and a large number of bodies, both civilians and members of the fighting forces, were left on the streets. Following this, the Kamajors went back to Gofor. During the battle that took place on 1 February, the Kamajors were again unsuccessful in dislodging the RUF/AFRC forces from the town. Thirteen RUF/AFRC forces were caught by Kamajors and killed opposite the R.C. School on the Zimmi Fairo Road. Three of their "wives" taken by the Kamajors to Gofor, where they were used as sex slaves before being killed.

The final battle in Zimmi, which took place on 17 February, saw the Kamajors being assisted by ECOMOG forces and some SLA forces. Those combined forces blocked all the roads leading to the town and battled for three days with the RUF/AFRC forces who had not fled the town, which some had on hearing that Freetown was no longer under their control. Over 1,500 civilians used by the RUF/AFRC forces as sex slaves or as workers to do petty jobs like brushing the town, bringing food or water were freed by the Kamajors, who then made Zimmi their base. From Zimmi, Kamajors raided surrounding villages, taking property including household items and bicycles. They also harassed civilians in these villages because for the Kamajors, any civilians near Zimmi were RUF/AFRC collaborators.

After the ECOMOG intervention in Freetown in February 1998, the District rapidly became free of RUF and AFRC forces as the Kamajors took control of it. In Kpaka Chiefdom, for example, as they were cut off from Koribondo which used to be a stronghold in Bo District (Jiama Bongor Chiefdom),[1411] the remaining RUF/AFRC forces left the chiefdom in March.[1412] In early 1998, Kamajors from Sowa Chiefdom battled with RUF/AFRC forces at Jeoma and successfully repelled them. From this time on, civilians were forced to feed the Kamajors, the burden of which increased when Kamajors opened a new initiation base at Foindu. In Panga Kabone Chiefdom, Kamajors attacked the remaining RUF/AFRC stronghold in the District three times before eventually driving them out in March 1998, when the RUF/AFRC forces were cut off from their headquarters in Koribondo.

[1408] Also in September, the fight for the control of Tongo Field (Lower Bambara Chiefdom, Kenema District) intensified.

[1409] Hundreds of fatalities are mentioned, but this figure could not be confirmed. Also in January, serious fighting took place at Tongo Field.

[1410] Those Kamajors were described as acting like the "junta" i.e. the RUF/AFRC forces.

[1411] Following the coup in May 1997, the SLA base at Koribondo had become a stronghold of the RUF/AFRC forces as part of the general "transfer" of SLA bases and property to the AFRC.

[1412] No information was obtained for Kpaka Chiefdom after the departure of the RUF/AFRC forces. Kamajor harassment of civilians is reported in the same general terms as for the other chiefdoms, without relating any precise event.

During this period, Kamajors looted Pujehun Town (Panga Kabone Chiefdom), Yonni and Gobaru (Kpaka Chiefdom). However, after 1998, it is reported that Kpaka Chiefdom was relatively quiet as was Mano Sakrim Chiefdom, which did not suffer much from the Kamajors after May 1997, because they were fighting RUF/AFRC forces in other parts of the District.[1413]

Kamajors controlled the District by conducting patrols and mounted checkpoints, imposing the pass system in search of arms and ammunition and alleged "enemies". In Barri Chiefdom for example, up to 1999, Kamajors issued passes to travellers for a fee of Le 500, as a way to control the movement of people and to search for their enemies. This pass was only valid for a limited period of time and had to be renewed at the expiration of that period.[1414] Kamajors from Potoru explained to civilians that only Kamajors could travel without such a pass.[1415] Civilians were requested to show their pass that proved they were civilians and not RUF/AFRC members at any Kamajors checkpoints they passed through. Those checkpoints were also used to request money from drivers and passengers and to search passengers' bags. For example, from Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) to Jendema (Soro Gbema Chiefdom, Liberian border), eight checkpoints were mounted and four were established between Zimmi and the border with Tunkia Chiefdom (Kenema District).

The Kamajors systematically ill-treated civilians across the District, mainly as a reprisal for their suspected collaboration with the RUF and RUF/AFRC forces. The District Coordinator used to go from chiefdom to chiefdom to visit the Kamajors on the ground; such visits were witnessed, for example, in Barri Chiefdom. In particular, relatives of RUF/AFRC forces were humiliated, punished and killed. The Mano River was used to drown alleged collaborators; Jijama and Jembe (Soro Gbema Chiefdom) were two towns where this practice was carried out. Traditional leaders were deposed and their power seized, some of them being molested. Prominent people were killed, such as the Assistant District Officer, who was mistaken for an AFRC lieutenant, and the Chief Imam of Soro Gbema Chiefdom. Looting was also frequently carried out and on one occasion, when this was being done and civilians were being chased into the bush, the Kamajors stated that when the RUF/AFRC forces took away their property, they never grumbled or did anything, but now they were complaining when the Kamajors were taking their property. Houses, compounds and communities termed "unfriendly" were burnt down, as happened, for example, in Nanjay (Panga Kabone Chiefdom). The killing of civilians for whatever reason was mostly carried out along the Liberian border.

[1413] It appeared that in 1997, Mano Sakrim Chiefdom did not sustain much the presence of the RUF/AFRC forces, who were concentrated in other areas in the District.

[1414] On one occasion, Kamajors told civilians that the pass would be valid only for four days. This is however not a fixed limit as information from other Districts notes that the passes issued could be valid for other periods of time.

[1415] It is interesting to note that this system of pass together with the harassment suffered at checkpoints led some civilians to be initiated within the Kamajors society. This type of initiation was however different from the one the fighters to be had to go through, it was among other things much quicker. Furthermore, this type of initiation was mostly carried out once Kamajors were in control of the District and not previously while they were fighting RUF/AFRC forces.

The houses of relatives of RUF and AFRC members were broken into, damaged and burnt down. It was common practice to send alleged collaborators to "wash" in the river, which was a euphemism for drowning, or to put them in cages where they were tied with FM ropes, which are nylon ropes wrapped around two short sticks and which often lead to loss of circulation to the hands. For example, in Sowa Chiefdom, during the Operation called "Black December" carried out in December 1997, two civilians who pleaded with the Kamajors authorities to let some vehicles come in were arrested and tied with FM ropes. Another example is a woman from Bandajuma (Sowa Chiefdom) who was killed and her head displayed on a sharp stick, as she was suspected of being a collaborator with the AFRC. Thirty people were killed in Bomborhun (Soro Gbema Chiefdom) for failing to report to the Kamajors that RUF/AFRC forces had crossed the Mano River.

Women were sexually abused and some of them had their heads shaved. In addition, women were also forcibly married to Kamajors, unable to refuse or they would be killed. This information was given in general terms for Soro Gbema Chiefdom but could most likely be extended to the other chiefdoms under CDF control. It is interesting to note that this was rather controversial among the Kamajors as they believed that once covered with their traditional attire and protection, they could not be approached by any woman or they would no longer be protected. Accordingly, this was used as an argument to deny the assertion that some of them had committed sexual offences against women.

The Kamajors established laws, both for Kamajors and civilians, and anyone caught breaking these laws was punished, including by public flogging, being locked in a guardroom and, for the Kamajors, being required to give up their weapons. Such incidents happened, for example, at Potoru, the CDF headquarter in Barri Chiefdom. Offices were established in the villages and Kamajors intervened in domestic affairs. They would settle cases of debts and other disputes, including marital affairs. Civilians reported cases to them and not to the Government authorities, who had no power or control over the chiefdoms at this time. Fines were levied on those civilians found guilty and other type of punishments were carried out, such as putting people in pens of two feet high and five feet long, built with palm stalks and sharp pointed materials.

One former Kamajor relates how children between the ages of 10 and 15 were initiated when the fight for Zimmi intensified towards the beginning of 1998. Those children were sent to enemy zones and battlefronts to act as spies and some became fighters. Others were also used to mine diamonds for the leaders. Kamajors also embarked on forceful conscription of men. When things started to become difficult for the Kamajors, they asked civilians to contribute with food and money to the movement. The food was for the forces and the money was used to pay initiators and to buy weapons. Civilians were also used to carry arms and ammunition, food and property stolen by the Kamajors. Those who refused to carry out these orders were arrested, beaten, put in cages, tied up or fined. Children were used to transport gravel from the mining areas to washing sites. RUF/AFRC forces captured alive during battle by the Kamajors were either initiated into the Kamajors or killed, depencing on the situation. Other punishments were applied to these captured enemies such as imprisoning them, stripping them, tying them up and putting them in cages.[1416]

Kamajors also engaged in mining in different chiefdoms such as Soro Gbema, Makpele, Gallinas Peri and Malen and it is reported that the District Coordinator was allocating forces for mining. It was said that these diamonds were given to ECOMOG to get ammunition, but doubt was raised over the destination of the gems as the District Coordinator was suspected of keeping diamonds for his own use. In 1998, at Famina (Soro Gbema Chiefdom), a group of five civilians caught by the Kamajors mining diamonds without their permission were killed.[1417]

In September 1998, at Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom), Kamajors seized seven big trucks loaded with rice, sugar and other items coming from Liberia and en route to Kenema District. The trucks were parked opposite the police station, the SLP being unable to do anything. The passengers abandoned their loads and continued their journey to Kenema.

On one occasion, in October 1998, the killing at Zimmi (Makpele Chiefdom) of a man from Koya Chiefdom (Kenema District) accused of being a "rebel" led to a fight between Kamajors from Koya Chiefdom (Kenema District) and those from Makpele Chiefdom. The dispute was resolved through the intervention of the two CDF chiefdoms coordinators. Other incidents of friction between Kamajors were reported and in November 1998, some young men from Gallinas Peri Chiefdom decided to form their own society, allegedly with the assistance of the son of the Kamajor's High Priest. This decision to form a separate group of Kamajors concluded rapidly as, following the initiation, three of the young men who were to queue to test their bullet proof ability were killed and many others wounded when the initiator fired at them. The matter was reported to the police but no action was taken.

In mid October 1998, serious clashes occurred between CDF assisted by ECOMOG forces and some RUF/AFRC members accompanied by Liberian armed men at the Mano River in the south of Soro Gbema Chiefdom. According to the CDF Coordinator for Pujehun District and ECOMOG forces, those armed men were members of the Liberian Army, which was denied by the Liberian President. To avoid further incursions, the Kamajors created a buffer zone at the Liberian border by strengthening their forces in the border villages.[1418]

Discussions on the disarmament process began in December 1999, when the CDF National Coordinator together with the District Coordinator convened a meeting for Kamajors at Potoru (Barri Chiefdom). By April 2000, UNAMSIL forces were deployed in Zimmi and Joru and shortly after, at Pujehun Town, following ECOMOG withdrawal from the country. Possibly as a result of this, Pujehun District also became a transit area for refugees coming back from Liberia and [1416] This was apparently done on the advice of civilians, which may refer to the fact that some civilians were appointed in the administration of the CDF in the Districts.

[1417] No further information is available on this incident.

[1418] This incident was related by AFP, 04 November 1998, and comes from Kamajors source; it was neither confirmed nor denied by independent sources.

originating from other Districts in Sierra Leone. A DDR camp was opened at Pujehun Town[1419] in May 2001 and in October, following a meeting of the Joint Committee on Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (DDR), comprised of the Government of Sierra Leone, UNAMSIL and representatives of the RUF, it was agreed that the remainder of the DDR process should be accelerated between 1 and 14 November.[1420]

At the end of 2001, SLA forces deployed alongside the Liberian border in Pujehun and Kenema Districts following intensified fighting of the Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD)[1421] forces in the west of Liberia.[1422]

Aside from this, there is almost no information available from the end of 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001, as the District was under the control of Kamajors and ECOMOG forces and, later on, UNAMSIL troops. It appears that civilians were able to resettle in their villages and were mostly engaged in farming activities.[1423]

3. Conclusion

Pujehun District was an entry point to Sierra Leone for RUF/NPFL forces as early as 1991 and all the RUF incursions in the District were carried out following an east-west pattern, RUF forces first settling into the two chiefdoms bordering Liberia, namely Soro Gbema and Makpele before proceeding further west by crossing the Moa River. Accordingly, those two chiefdoms were the most affected, particularly because Makpele Chiefdom is the main mining area of the District.

The first major incursion in the District, carried out by RUF/NPFL forces was done in concert with a northern flank in Kailahun District; the RUF/NPFL forces rapidly scattered throughout the chiefdoms of both Districts. From the very start of the conflict, the headquarters of the RUF forces was, however, established in Kailahun District. Three motorable entry points into Sierra Leone were thus clearly identified, two in Kailahun District and one in Pujehun District.

The RUF/NPFL forces were repelled from Pujehun District in the middle of 1991, while some chiefdoms in Kailahun District remained under RUF/NPFL control. At that time, Pujehun District came under SLA control, with the RUF/NPFL forces being limited to launching sporadic actions in the District.

[1419] Following a meeting between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF at UNAMSIL headquarters, Freetown, it was agreed between the parties that DDR camps should be opened as a matter of urgency in Lunsar, Makeni, Kamakwie, Masingbi, Koidu, Kailahun, Alikalia, Pujehun and Bonthe, in addition to the existing ones in Port Loko, Bo, Moyamba, Kenema and Daru: UNAMSIL press release, 15 May 2001.

[1420] IRIN West Africa, 12 October 2001. Furthermore, disarmament for the whole country was scheduled to be complete by 30 November 2001. During this disarmament period in November 2001, over 2,000 CDF members demobilised: UNAMSIL Press Briefing, 20 November 2001

[1421] The LURD was a fighting faction engaged in the Liberian conflict and challenging the authority of the Liberian Government. This group had been fighting the Liberian Government since 1998.

[1422] Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 01 - 31 December 2001.

[1423] The situation was radically different for the Districts of the Northern Province and for Kono District where RUF/AFRC activities were still ongoing, with high fatalities among the civilian population.

In late 1993 and in 1994, RUF forces launched a second massive incursion from the Liberian border and spread across Pujehun, Kenema and Kailahun Districts, before continuing further westwards, establishing positions in the whole country by 1995. As such, Pujehun District was for the second time under RUF control, although for a longer period this time. This RUF presence in the District led thousands of civilians to flee the District and go to IDPs camps in Bo District, encouraged by an SLA that was being gradually defeated in the District. Accordingly, Pujehun District was one of the most affected Districts in terms of displacement of population and of destruction of property.

From late 1995 and especially after February 1998 and the intervention in Freetown, the pattern of the conflict in Pujehun District differed from Kailahun District and was more similar to the other Districts of the Southern Province. This was due to the initiation and deployment of Kamajors, who were able to retake most of the RUF positions in the District, unlike Kailahun District, which was never completely under Kamajor control.

Following the ECOMOG intervention in Freetown in February 1998 and its deployment in the District, the RUF/AFRC who had stayed in the District during the AFRC regime pulled out and the retreating RUF/AFRC forces from Freetown did not settle at all in the District. Free from further RUF/AFRC incursions, the District was thus left under Kamajor control, as with the other Districts of the Southern Province, which deprived the RUF/AFRC forces of one of their main supply roads from Liberia. From 1998 until the completion of the DDR process, RUF/AFRC attacks were concentrated in the main mining areas of the District and in the areas where CDF members did not have constant and complete control, namely the Northern Province, Kono District, Kailahun District and the north of Kenema District.

Throughout the conflict, widespread violations were committed in the District, primarily by RUF/NPFL, RUF and RUF/AFRC forces, but also by SLA forces and Kamajors, especially once they firmly established their control and authority over the District. Those violations were directed against civilians and their property and included stealing and destruction of property, physical violence, sexual assault, killing and abduction for use as fighters, workers or "wives". Both the RUF forces and the Kamajors forces deposed and replaced local authorities and put in place basic systems of administration. Only a few cases of mutilation were however reported for the District, as most of the cases reported took place during a specific RUF/AFRC operation called "Operation No Living Thing" in the first months of 1998 and following the retreat of Freetown.

F. Western Area

1. Introduction

The Western Area is located in the far central west of Sierra Leone and adjoins Port Loko and Moyamba Districts on its eastern side; its western side is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean. Roughly two-thirds of the Western Area is a mountainous peninsula, along the north of which is located Freetown, the capital city of Sierra Leone. Freetown has been a major international port for merchant and military shipping for the best part of 150 years.

Unlike the rest of the country, the Western Area is not composed of chiefdoms, but is divided into four Rural Districts (RD) and a metropolitan area known as Greater Freetown.[1424]

Western Area	Main Settlements
Koya Rural District	Newton, Songo
Waterloo Rural District	Fogbo, Hastings, Kossoh Town, Newton, Tombo, Waterloo
Greater Freetown	Freetown and suburban areas
York Rural District	Goderich, Lakka, York
Mountain Rural District	Regent

Koya RD is in the far east of the Western Area and is bordered to the north by Koya Chiefdom (Port Loko District). Across the River Ribbi, which delimits the southern boundary of Koya RD, lies Ribbi Chiefdom (Moyamba District). The main motorable crossing point over the River Ribbi is located at Mabang, connecting the towns of Moyamba, Rotifunk and Bradford (all Moyamba District) to Songo, in the far east of Koya RD. This Moyamba route rejoins the main highway at Tiama Junction, giving travellers access to all major locations in the Southern Province. The RUF would use this route to enter the Western Area in 1995.

From Songo, moving inland, the main hard-surface arterial route from provincial Sierra Leone passes through the north of Koya RD and its main town, Newton. From Newton, the villages of Bath Comp and Fogbo are accessible by a road running south. Fogbo is a main transit point for goods and people westward across the swamp areas of the Calmont Creek and eastward to Shenge (Kagboro Chiefdom, Moyamba District) and to other locations up the Ribbi River. A large number of small settlements can be reached from the Newton-Fogbo road. Moving east from Newton, the main arterial route leads to Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) and on to all other major towns in Sierra Leone. Control of the stretch of road between Newton and Masiaka was a major strategic aim of all factions in the conflict.

Moving westward from Newton, the main highway leads to the town of Waterloo, and the Waterloo RD. The area between Newton and Waterloo is flat, highly fertile agricultural land. There is a large palm oil plantation at Banga Farm, also on the main highway. Waterloo is on the foothills of the mountainous Western Area Peninsula. It has a number of suburban areas, including Lumpa, Kossoh and Bassu Town to the south and Cole Town to the north. The Prince Alfred Road Bridge, over which the main highway runs, is a key point in the town. The harbour settlement of Pa-Loko is located directly north of Waterloo.

[1424] Along with the SUDC area of Sherbro Island (Bonthe District), the Western Area is administered directly by the Government of Sierra Leone without the traditional structures found throughout Sierra Leone. This is a result of the early British administration, which did not extend its control over the provincial areas of Sierra Leone until the late 1800s, at which time it exercised authority mainly through the traditional structures already in place: see General Overview.

The main highway into Freetown runs through Devil Hole, Rokel and Hastings. On the flat area north of Hastings town and running down to the Sierra Leone Estuary is a hard-surface airfield. The Sierra Leone Police Training School is also located at Hastings. On the Kossoh Town–Hasting axis, a number of different routes into Freetown converge. The main highway continues into the east of Greater Freetown through Wellington and Kissy. From Kossoh Town, two routes lead into Freetown. The first leads through Mountain Rural District from Grafton to Regent. This winding, cliff edge road is made of broken asphalt. At Regent, the road splits again allowing access to Freetown's civic centre through Mount Aureol and to Freetown's west end through Hill Station. The alternative route from Kossoh Town leads through Allen Town to Calaba Town, where it runs parallel to the main highway. This road is also of extremely poor quality and passes through the busy and densely populated areas of Wellington, Low Cost and Portee.

Another road leaves Waterloo and runs south around the Western Area Peninsula into west Freetown. The road passes through the SLA's Benguema Training Centre,[1425] through to the harbour town of Tombo, which marks the southern-most point of Waterloo Rural District. The peninsular road loops around along the coast through to York, Sussex and Goderich in the York RD. From Goderich, the road passes straight into the Lumley and Juba Hill areas of west Freetown. The peninsular road is of extremely poor quality and takes around three hours to get from Freetown to Waterloo in a regular vehicle. The main highway route, through Hastings, takes only 20 minutes.

In 1991, the conflict that was taking hold in other areas of Sierra Leone had little impact on the Western Area except for troop movements to other areas of the country and the establishment of checkpoints – at which there were incidents of harassment of civilians and stealing of their property by the SLA – and defensive deployments in strategic areas, particularly in Waterloo. Following the coup in 1992, which saw the NPRC take power, harassment of civilians and stealing of their property by the SLA increased as more checkpoints were established. This also marked the beginning of Cleaning Day, according to which on the last Saturday of every month, people had to stay home during the morning hours and clean their houses: those caught on the streets would be punished by the SLA. However, these incidents were relatively few and there would continue to be little impact on the Western Area throughout 1992 to 1994.

Starting in 1995, the RUF began to extend their presence westward, at one point cutting off the main highway linking Freetown with the rest of the country and occupying much of Koya RD. There were a number of battles between the RUF on the one hand and the SLA and foreign forces on the other hand, with the SLA establishing more checkpoints in sensitive areas. Throughout 1995 there was an increase in violations committed against civilians, including killing, raping, abduction and looting primarily committed by the RUF, with some violations by the SLA and the Nigerian forces. Elections were held in early 1996, the run up to which was marred by incidents of violence including the first amputations (of thumbs) in the Western Area by SLA, who believed there should be peace before elections. There was little fighting in the Western Area in 1996, with SLA, Guinean and Nigerian forces deployed in strategic areas and the SLA continuing to operate checkpoints along major routes. Civilians were routinely harassed at these checkpoints and were punished for failing to produce identity cards, including being beaten, primarily by the SLA and the Nigerian forces. Towards the end of 1996, peace talks between the RUF and the Government resulted in the Abidjan Peace Agreement on 30 November 1996.

[1425] The Benguma Training Centre was subsequently renamed the "Armed Forces Training Centre".

Nevertheless, the conflict only began to have a major impact on the Western Area on the magnitude experienced in the rest of the country in 1997. In May of that year, the AFRC launched a coup, as a result of which the elected government fled to Guinea. Soon after taking power, the AFRC invited the RUF to join them and a large number of RUF forces joined the AFRC forces already in Freetown and the rest of the Western Area. This period saw a massive increase in violations against civilians, with RUF/AFRC forces in particular targeting students representatives of civil society and journalists, especially after the commencement of broadcasting by the clandestine pro-government radio station, FM98.1 Radio Democracy. Civilians were beaten, raped, killed and arrested and detained without being charged, sometimes for up to a number of weeks. Despite the formation of an anti-looting squad by the AFRC, which saw the return of some stolen property to civilians, looting was widespread; civilians were searched and their property, most commonly food, was taken at checkpoints and in their houses. Civilians were also detained and forced to work for the RUF/AFRC forces, primarily undertaking domestic work such as cooking and cleaning. There was a large build up of foreign forces at this time and fighting between the RUF/AFRC and these forces would lead to massive internal population displacement as civilians fled the fighting. In the latter half of the year, first ECOWAS and then the UN Security Council imposed sanctions on Sierra Leone, including a travel ban on members of the RUF/AFRC.

Despite a ceasefire signed at the end of 1997, fighting continued with numerous violations of both the spirit and letter of the ceasefire. The instability in the city and the country at large prompted a military intervention by the Nigerian-led ECOMOG forces, reinforced by CDF and "loyal" SLA members, in February 1998, as a result of which the RUF/AFRC forces were driven from Freetown and the majority of the Western Area. The ECOMOG intervention continued to roll back the RUF/AFRC from every major town in Sierra Leone during March and April 1998. The Government returned from Guinea and sanctions were lifted, except those banning the import of weapons. For the most part, order was restored in the Western Area, although there were incidents of harassment of civilians, including the torture and killing of suspected RUF/AFRC members and collaborators by ECOMOG forces and the CDF. The middle of the year saw the commencement of a wave of treason trials against civilians and military personnel for their involvement in the coup in May 1997. The majority of those being tried were convicted, with death sentences and terms of imprisonment being imposed. Some of the military personnel, who had been court martialled, were executed in October while those who had been tried in civilian courts appealed their sentences and were still in detention awaiting the outcome of their appeals when the invasion of Freetown occurred on 6 January 1999.

Towards the end of 1998, RUF forces had begun attacking towns in the west of the Western Area, including the strategic town of Waterloo, which led to renewed fighting in these areas. This would be the prelude to the major attack on Freetown by the RUF/AFRC on 6 January 1999. Thousands of RUF/AFRC forces converged on Freetown, occupying various locations, killing and amputating hundreds of civilians, taking their property and burning their houses. ECOMOG forces with assistance from the CDF managed to repel the RUF/AFRC forces and by the end of January had regained control of the city, although the destruction wreaked on the city and the loss of human life during the brief RUF/AFRC stay would be tremendous. In the coming weeks, ECOMOG extended its control to the areas surrounding Freetown and in April, peace talks began in Togo that would lead to the Lomé Peace Agreement, signed on 7 July 1999. That Agreement included a power-sharing arrangement for the elected Government and the RUF as well as a blanket pardon and amnesty for all combatants for all acts committed in pursuit of their objectives. From the time the AFRC and RUF leaders returned to Freetown in October 1999 until May 2000, the Western Area was mostly quiet.

In 2000, UNAMSIL began deploying across Sierra Leone and implementing the disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration program agreed to during the Lomé peace talks. On 8 May, there was a large demonstration outside the house of the RUF leader, which resulted in the deaths of some of the protestors and the capture and detention of the RUF leader, accused of violating the spirit and letter of the Lomé Agreement. From then, UNAMSIL deployment continued in the Western Area, which remained quiet until the war was officially declared over in January 2002.

2. Factual Analysis

a) Events in 1991

At the beginning of 1991, around 2,000 members of the SLA were sent the southern border of Sierra Leone with Liberia to prevent the incursion of forces from the Liberian war into Sierra Leone. These would be reinforced by three truckloads of SLA forces dispatched from Freetown on 25 March 1991 and 1 April 1991.[1426]

In early 1991, the conflict broke out in the Eastern Province of Sierra Leone. The Government of Sierra Leone requested the assistance of Guinean and Nigerian troops to prevent RUF forces from entering Freetown and other large towns. Responding to this request, checkpoints were established between Waterloo and Tombo (both Waterloo RD) along the road running from the north to the south in the middle of the Western Area towards the border with Port Loko and Moyamba Districts. Waterloo is of strategic military importance, due to its location on the highway leading from Freetown to the rest of the country and its proximity to Freetown.

The Nigerian forces operated the checkpoint at Madina, whilst the others at Tombo and Russell (Waterloo RD) were operated by the Sierra Leone Army (SLA). SLA forces stationed at these checkpoints required people who were unable to produce their identity cards to pay them money. If civilians did not have money, SLA forces would punish them. For example, some were forced to clean up a particular area and others were forced to lie down on the ground and stare at the sun.

[1426] Xinhua General Overseas News Service, 25 March 1991 and UPI, 2 April 1991.

Following news of the first incursions, the Government of Sierra Leone – in 1991, the All Party Congress (APC) – was quick to mobilise political support for the war effort. The then President received gifts of food from representatives of the Fullah and Indian communities and entertained a gesture of solidarity from the Sierra Leone Judiciary.[1427]

In addition, the Government of Sierra Leone made requests for assistance to various foreign governments, including those of the US[1428] and the UK. Officials from both governments publicly stated they were considering how to assist.[1429] The US provided a variety of direct assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone. First, the US Government flew in an undisclosed amount of light weapons and ammunition.[1430] A further shipment of materials was reported as scheduled to arrive by US Air Force cargo plane by 9 August 1991. Also in August 1991, a 15-member US Army mobile training team commenced a program of training in communications, medical care, equipment maintenance and setting-up effective command structures for non-commissioned SLA officers at the SLA's Benguema Training Centre. In September 1991, the US Government also agreed to provide $500,000 to the Government of Sierra Leone to support the continuing involvement of the SLA in ECOMOG, then operating in Liberia. Freetown was one of the key logistic points for the 7,000-strong ECOMOG peacekeeping force stationed in Liberia.

On 13 April, the Governments of Guinea and Nigeria sent 700[1431] military personnel and accompanying hardware to Sierra Leone.[1432] The Nigerian forces arrived on 16 April 1991,[1433] at which time the Government of Sierra Leone cut air, sea and land transport links with Liberia, restricting incoming flights to Freetown to humanitarian and military traffic.[1434] Following the visit of delegation of Nigerian military officials to Freetown, a further 500 Nigerian forces arrived on or around 29 April 1991[1435] and were posted to strategic locations in the Freetown area including Lungi International Airport[1436] (Kaffu Bullon Chiefdom, Port Loko District) and the power station.

In May 1991 a camp for Liberian refugees was established near Waterloo town (Waterloo RD). On 6 May 1991, around 3,000 Liberian refugees were repatriated to Liberia from Freetown aboard the Nigerian vessel, the River Adada. Over the weekend of 4-5 May, the same ship had ferried an undisclosed number of Nigerian soldiers from Lagos.[1437]

[1427] BBC, 15 April 1991.
[1428] UPI, 9 April 1991.
[1429] Independent, 7 May 1991.
[1430] AFP, 8 August 1991.
[1431] Number initially undisclosed, reported as 700 by Xinhua on 29 April 1991.
[1432] Xinhua, 13 April 1991.
[1433] AP 16 April 1991.
[1434] AP, 16 April 1991.
[1435] These forces were under the command of the field commander of ECOMOG in Liberia: Xinhua, 28 May 1991.
[1436] A short distance away (7 minutes by helicopter) from Freetown, north over the Sierra Leone River.
[1437] AFP, 6 May 1991.

b) Events in 1992 - 1994

In mid-April 1992, a group of low-ranking members of the SLA Tiger Unit, armed with an anti-aircraft gun mounted on a military truck, moved from Kailahun District to Freetown. They by-passed the SLA base at Mile 38 (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) and used the Moyamba-Rotifunk-Mabang (Moyamba) route to Freetown through Songo town (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District), south-west of the Western Area. These forces continued along the main highway and when they arrived in Freetown., other SLA forces stationed at the Benguema Training Centre were made aware of this unusual military movement.

On 29 April, the Kailahun group of SLA members overthrew the APC Government and established a military junta known as the National Provisional Ruling Council (NPRC). Led by 25 year-old Captain Valentine Strasser, the NPRC suspended the Constitution of Sierra Leone and imposed a State of Emergency. An SLA Major from the Benguema Training Centre was arrested and detained in Pademba Road prison when he tried to persuade those leading the coup to reverse their actions. The ousted President fled to the Republic of Guinea, where he was later granted asylum, as 50 SLA troops acting for the NRPC stormed the presidential offices at State House, in the centre of Freetown. Lungi International Airport was temporarily closed to air traffic and international telex and telephone lines were reportedly disabled.[1438]

The US Government airlifted 300 expatriates out of Sierra Leone and issued a warning advising against travel to Sierra Leone. The French Government sent a frigate into Sierra Leonean waters to assist with further evacuation of expatriates should the situation in Sierra Leone deteriorate.

On 30 April 1992, the NPRC leader made a broadcast over national radio on the Sierra Leone Broadcasting Service citing corruption and incompetent governance as the reasons for the coup.[1439] Later in the day, around 700 students marched through Freetown in support of the NPRC coup.[1440] In Freetown on 5 May 1992, students and trade unionists staged a much larger march in support of the NPRC. [1441]

A number of foreign Governments, including Nigeria, Japan and Ghana, were quick to recognise the NPRC as the Government of Sierra Leone. Cooperation between Nigerian troops and the SLA against the RUF continued.

Following the NPRC coup, SLA forces in Waterloo (Waterloo RD) and surrounding areas broke into shops and residences on the Calmont Road, stealing civilian property and loading it onto military trucks. SLA forces attacked villages in the Koya RD near the boundary with Port Loko and Moyamba Districts. In these villages, which included Mafonikay, Nyamgba Town and Newton, SLA forces killed an unknown number of civilians, stole property and inflicted violence on many people.

[1438] AFP 30 April 1992.
[1439] BBC, 2 May 1992, transcribing SLBS, 30 April 1992.
[1440] BBC, 30 April 1992.
[1441] AFP, 5 May 1992.

SLA forces attacked the Waterloo Oil Palm Plantation and other farms in the Waterloo and Koya RDs, taking agricultural machinery, household furniture and other high value items.

During 1992, the SLA arrested an unknown number of people in Lumpa, near Waterloo Town. On a beach near Sussex village, along the peninsular road, the then Inspector General of Police and up to 12 other people were summarily executed on the suspicion of plotting a coup. It is alleged that their bodies were buried in a mass grave in that location.

During 1992, the NPRC declared that the last Saturday of every month would be National Cleaning Day. Between 06.00 and 10.00 only those on official business were excused the task of cleaning their compounds, residences and commercial properties.[1442] A variety of punishments were meted out to civilians who did not adhere to these rules. Civilians were beaten with belts, made to roll around on the floor, thrown into the gutter effluent and forced to quick-march 500 metres carrying a heavy rock on their heads. A common SLA punishment was termed Frog Jump, or "pumping". Civilians were made to perform squat jumps, crossing their arms one over the other and holding their earlobes between thumb and forefinger. This exhausting punishment could last for hours. Another gruelling SLA punishment was "making civilians fly"; civilians were forced to lie down on their backs with their legs held straight into the air, their arms outstretched across the ground.

Shortly after the coup, the SLA mounted five military checkpoints along a 15km stretch of the peninsula road running from Tombe to Waterloo Town (both Waterloo RD). SLA forces operating checkpoints continued to extort money from travellers.

In late December 1992, a special military tribunal created by the NPRC condemned to death an unknown number of people for their alleged involvement in a coup attempt in November 1992. The British Government condemned the executions[1443] and briefly suspended all economic aid to Sierra Leone.[1444] Between 9 and 16 January 1993, the NPRC declared a week of national repentance and prayers for those who had been executed.[1445]

On 18 March, NPRC security agencies arrested 7 civilians and 4 UK expatriates accused of plotting a coup. On 8 April, concerned with rumours of RUF movement towards the Western Area and a growing smuggling network, the NPRC banned movement of heavy vehicles on public roads between 19.30 and 07.00 every night. In Freetown, the ban stretched from 22.00 until dawn.

The Western Area was mostly quiet for the remainder of 1993 and throughout 1994.

[1442] Cleaning Saturday is still observed in Freetown to date.
[1443] AFP, 4 January 1993
[1444] AFP, 5 January 1993
[1445] Interpress, 7 January 1993

c) Events in 1995

In January 1995, the NPRC contracted Ghurka Security Guards,[1446] a private military company, to run a training program for the SLA and provide security at Camp Charlie, a key SLA base near Mile 91 (Yoni Chiefdom, Tonkolili District).

In March 1995, the RUF extended their reach further west, with RUF movement through Moyamba District towards the towns of Songo and Mile 38 (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) putting pressure on the Western Area. In late April, RUF forces targeted locations on the high quality, asphalt highway leading through Waterloo (Waterloo RD) to Freetown. RUF forces gained a foothold in the bush areas of the southern half of Koya RD and managed to create a frontline spanning Joe Town (Koya RD) to Pa-Loko (Waterloo RD). This had the effect of temporarily cutting off the main highway, or at least making it too dangerous for civilian traffic. Nevertheless, RUF forces were unable to penetrate or bypass Waterloo. RUF attacks on locations on the unsealed, southern route around the Peninsula to Freetown were also unsuccessful.

In February 1995, representatives of the NPRC Government held a meeting at the Waterloo Community Centre, requesting that the local community provide auxiliary support to the SLA in preventing the infiltration of RUF forces into the Western Area. Guinean forces moved from Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) to Bassa Town (Waterloo RD), less than a kilometre from Waterloo Town (Waterloo RD), establishing checkpoints and numerous mortar positions facing towards Newton (Koya RD). The Bassa Town Primary School was used as an ammunitions dump for the Guinean contingent. SLA forces armed with light weapons were based at nearby Lumpa (Waterloo RD), in addition to a heavily armed SLA Tiger Unit in the grounds of the Peninsular Secondary School in Waterloo. To prevent the RUF moving from Pa-Loko through Cole Town into Waterloo, SLA forces were also deployed at the Prince Alfred Road Bridge.

Between 21 and 30 March 1995, the SLA established checkpoints along the north-south Newton-Fogbo road at Newton–Fogbo Junction, Magbathi and Bath-Comp (all in Koya RD, on the border with Port Loko and Moyamba Districts). Fogbo (Koya RD) is near the mouth of the River Ribbi and is a trading centre for fish and salt. It is also a transit point for inland traffic along the river and to points further along Sierra Leone's coast, with a large wharf to handle the inland river traffic. Before 10 April, an unknown number of heavily armed SLA forces deployed on foot to Fogbo Wharf, escorted by a military helicopter. The SLA forces were equipped with a mobile anti-aircraft gun and numerous RPGs. They established a command point in the house of the then Town Chief and confiscated village livestock to use as food.

Newton is an agricultural centre on flat, fertile land between Songo (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) and Waterloo (Waterloo RD). The SLA forces stationed at Newton-Fogbo Junction patrolled the area between Newton (Koya RD) and Songo, mainly on a circular route running anticlockwise from Newton, through Makoibundo, Mabange, Garahun, Kwama[1447] and Mile 6 (all Koya RD).

[1446] For background information see Cilliers, J & Mason, P (eds), Peace, Profit and Plunder: The Privatisation of Security in War-Torn African Societies, pp 129-33: http://www.iss.co.za/Pubs/Books/PeaceProfitPlunder/Chap7.pdf [Link alive: 7 January 2004].

Between 8 and 11 April, RUF forces attacked villages in a triangular area sketched out by Songo to the east, Waterloo to the west and Fogbo to the south, establishing a base at Mashewureh (Koya RD), about 2 km north-west of Fogbo. There, they captured fleeing civilians, raped women and destroyed houses. RUF forces attacked and captured a number of villages adjacent to Songo, including Mokobech, Maferkalay and Mathonteh (all Koya RD). RUF forces attacked the village of Kwama to the north of the main Masiaka-Waterloo highway, killing 7 civilians and burning down an unknown number of houses. Shortly after this attack, SLA forces engaged a 58-strong RUF group on the main highway at Brima Junction (Koya RD).

RUF forces attacked Newton (Koya RD) on 9 April, moving from the villages of Ragberi and Magbafu to the south and Makoibundu and Garahun to the east, but were repelled by SLA forces stationed in Newton. On 11 April, RUF forces attacked Fogbo, where they raped a young mother, abducted an unknown number of civilians and stole civilians' livestock. The SLA forces deployed at Fogbo offered limited resistance; the RUF established a base and operated out from Fogbo and nearby Mashewureh.

Between 15 April and 20 April 1995, RUF forces advanced on Waterloo (Waterloo RD), moving through Nyamba Town[1448] and Joe Town (both Koya RD). They advanced to Pa-Loko, 10 km north of Waterloo, and to the Banga Farm palm oil plantation halfway between Newton and Waterloo. Between 21 and 22 April, RUF forces at Banga Farm came under heavy air attack from an Alfa Jet,[1449] which killed an unknown number of RUF members and civilians. On 21 April, RUF forces attacked Lumpa with RPG and AK-47s, but retreated to Pa-Loko following heavy mortar and other artillery fire by Guinean forces. During the RUF attack on Lumpa, civilians fleeing from Lumpa, Waterloo and surrounding areas were stopped by Nigerian forces operating a checkpoint at Rokel, about 4 km north-west of Waterloo on the main highway. At the checkpoint, Nigerian troops beat an unknown number of people with sticks and gun butts; saying "Let your brothers kill you", they turned the people back towards the Waterloo area, which was then under attack.

Over the weekend of 29-30 April, combined SLA and Guinean forces engaged the RUF in Pa-Loko and Joe Town, forcing their retreat by 3 May;[1450] shortly after, the corpses of RUF members could be seen floating in the Waterloo Creek. Between 3 and 7 May 1995, the NPRC Government contracted a South African based private military company called Executive Outcomes to replace the Ghurka Security Service.

In addition, around 600 demobilised Liberian militia, formerly from ULIMO-K, were concentrated in the area around Allen Town (Greater Freetown, Western Area), on the outskirts for Freetown's [1447] Also spelled Quama.

---

[1448] Also called Yamba Town.

[1449] It is unclear whether the Alfa Jet was SLA or Nigerian.

[1450] AFP, 1 May 1995, 3 May 1995.

East end.[1451] RUF forces retreating from Pa-Loko moved towards Newton, ambushing civilian traffic on the Waterloo-Newton stretch of highway. A joint Executive Outcomes and ULIMO-K "Special Task Force" cleared this road of RUF activity.[1452]

Nigerian forces were stationed at Madina, along the peninsula road between Waterloo and Tombo (both Waterloo RD). On or around 2 May, an unknown number of RUF forces attacked Kerry Town (Waterloo RD), a village on the peninsula road. Civilians fled 2 km northwards from Kerry Town to Macdonald (Waterloo RD). Although no direct contact was made between SLA-aligned forces and the RUF, Guinean and SLA forces bombarded the area.[1453]

The beach village of Tombo, which had a large wharf, had increased in significance as a trading and passenger transit point following the RUF attacks on Waterloo and the main inland highway as well as the strengthened RUF control of Fogbo jetty and the northern chiefdoms of Moyamba District. At this time, the SLA and SSD were seeking out suspected RUF members and collaborators with increasing vigour, often beating and killing those they found. After 2 May, residents of Kerry Town captured a suspected RUF member and took him to the SLA base at nearby Tombo. Following interrogation by the SLA commanding officer, SLA forces took the man onto the beach, shot him and cut off his head and genitals. Residents of Tombo and SLA members danced the severed head around the village. After failing to set fire to the corpse using petrol, two members of the SLA tied weights to it and dumped it out at sea. Also after 2 May, unknown perpetrators captured and killed two suspected members of the RUF by placing burning car tyres around their necks.

On 15 December in Tombo, an SSD Sergeant shot dead two teenage boys and severely injured one other. The boys were on a boat, the pilot of which had refused to pay the Le500 levied on all boats entering or exiting the wharf.

d) Events in 1996

In early January, Strasser accepted offers from both the Organisation of African Unity and the Government of Burkina Faso to mediate between the NRPC and the RUF. Soon after, Julius Maada-Bio, the then Deputy Head of State, overthrew Strasser, claiming that he was planning to cancel the elections planned for 26 February 1996. Maada-Bio continued a policy of dialogue with the RUF. A nighttime curfew was imposed in Freetown from 16 to 23 January. On 24 January, the NPRC and the RUF announced a ceasefire, which was quickly followed by a 2,000-strong civilian peace march through Freetown.[1454]

Doubts about the durability of the NPRC-RUF ceasefire, concerns about voter registration and whether the National Electoral Commission would be sufficiently well-resourced prompted calls for the postponement of the Presidential and Parliamentary elections scheduled for 26-28 February. Nevertheless, on 9 February, 5,000 protestors marched through Freetown in support of non-[1451] AP Worldstream, 11 May 1995.

[1452] It is not clear whether Executive Outcomes participated directly in hostilities.
[1453] Event reported by AFP, 2 May 1995
[1454] Xinhua, 24 and 26 January 1996.

postponement. A day later, grenades were thrown into the house of the Electoral Commission Chief, who was an advocate for non-postponement.

The Electoral Commission organised a national consultative conference at Freetown's Bintumani Conference Centre on the theme "Peace Before Elections or Elections Before Peace?". On 12 February, the majority of delegates participating in the conference voted in favour of non-postponement, while all 14 delegates from the RUF voted for postponement. On the same day, 43 Paramount Chiefs from the Northern Province adopted an 8-point declaration also supporting postponement pending substantive peace talks between the NPRC and the RUF. The SLA were generally in support of "Peace Before Elections" while the majority of the civilian population supported "Elections Before Peace."

Between 23 and 25 February, NPRC and RUF delegations commenced peace talks in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, chaired by the Ivory Coast's Foreign Minister. The talks were adjourned in the late hours of 25 February, the eve of elections, with RUF delegates still calling for their postponement.

Polling in the elections began at 07.00 on 26 February. A curfew was imposed overnight into the second day of polling. Shortly before the polling centres closed, at around 19.00, machine gun fire was reported on Pademba Road and at the Wilberforce Barracks in Freetown. News sources report that a 40-strong military unit dressed in blue uniforms assaulted the home of Maada Bio using RPGs and heavy machine guns.[1455] A polling station supervisor was shot dead while returning to his home. Also on 26 February, the National Reconciliation Commission was inaugurated. Polling continued on 27 February. The results of the Presidential election were inconclusive and a run-off election was planned for 15 March, despite RUF declarations on 1 March in Abidjan that they would not accept the results.

During and after the elections at Wilberforce Barracks and other military barracks, people's thumbs were held out by SLA forces and beaten because they voted. Heavy gunfire broke out near Kabasa Lodge to discourage the voting and have it cancelled, which was unsuccessful. The run-off election on 17 March, in which Alhaji Dr Ahmed Tejan Kabbah was elected President of the Republic of Sierra Leone,[1456] saw the cutting off of thumbs, marking the first amputations in the Western Area.

Meanwhile, Nigerian forces established a checkpoint at Jui Junction (Waterloo RD) in March 1996, since their commander was residing at the SSD quarters in the Jui SSD Barracks. At the same time, SLA forces established checkpoints between Waterloo and Freetown. Guinean forces established a base between Lumpa and Waterloo as a back up for SLA checkpoints mounted around that area. As in other places, both Nigerian ECOMOG and SLA forces harassed people passing through these checkpoints, inflicting punishment where people were unable to produce identity cards. Punishments included forcing civilians to clean up the checkpoint area and beating them with wooden sticks.

[1455] AFP, 28 January 1996.

[1456] President Kabbah was sworn in on 29 March 1996.

Peace talks continued in Abidjan. On 23 April, President Kabbah met with the RUF leader, continuing the peace negotiations commenced by the NPRC in late February 1996. Three joint working groups were established to draft the text of a peace agreement, hammer out details for encampment and disarmament and to work out the demobilisation process. On 15 May, talks yielded agreement on a ceasefire although by 19 May, the RUF leader was already calling for fresh elections during a visit to the Republic of Guinea. News reports indicate that removal from Sierra Leone of the South African private military company, Executive Outcomes,[1457] was an RUF precondition for a peace agreement.[1458]

On 3 July, around 20 senior SLA officers from the disbanded NPRC regime were removed from their positions in the SLA. On 10 July, the Sierra Leone Parliament re-activated portions of the Constitution that had been suspended by the NPRC in 1992. On 9 September, Government security agencies uncovered a coup plot against the SLPP government and arrested at least six SLA soldiers.

The Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF leadership signed the Abidjan Peace Accord on 30 November 1996. This provided for the immediate and total cessation of hostilities and the creation of a Committee for the Consolidation of Peace (CCP). Demobilisation of RUF and other militia would commence upon the identification of suitable sites and SLA units not required for the maintenance of general security would be returned to barracks. The CCP would examine options for restructuring the SLA and the SLP would be strengthened to ensure realistic police primacy. An international, neutral monitoring group would be deployed in the country and Executive Outcomes would withdraw within five weeks of the arrival of that group. By 30 May 1997, all other foreign troops would be removed from the country, consistent with the treaty obligations of Sierra Leone. The RUF would become a legitimate political movement and a blanket amnesty was granted to all RUF members in respect of actions taken in pursuance of the objectives of the RUF up until 30 November 1996. Provision was made to guarantee the civil rights of the RUF and for the creation of an independent National Commission on Human Rights to monitor and investigate alleged abuses.[1459]

e) Events in 1997

On 1 January, the Government commissioned into service a gunboat donated by the Chinese Government to combat poaching in Sierra Leone's territorial waters. The boat was able to carry around 200 security personnel and had been donated as part of a $20 million aid package agreed to by China in 1995.[1460] On 6 January, six SLA soldiers were sentenced to 10 years in jail for piracy,

---

[1457] The NPRC had contracted Executive Outcomes on or around7 May 1995 following the extension of RUF military operations into the Western Area.

[1458] Before 11 September, Executive Outcomes was reportedly contracted by Sierra Leone Ore and Mining Co (Sieromco) to secure bauxite mined in Moyamba: Africa Energy & Mining, 11 September 1996. The removal of Executive Outcomes from the country became a specific term of the Abidjan Peace Accord, signed between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF on 30 November 1996.

[1459] For the full text of the Abidjan Peace Accords, see http://www.usip.org/library/pa/sl/sierra_leone_10301996.html.

[1460] AFP, 2 January 1997 and Xinhua 1 January 1997.

having raiced a Spanish fishing vessel in 1996, attempting to abscond with $200,000 of fishing equipment.[1461]

On 30 January, Executive Outcomes completed a withdrawal that began with the signing of the Abidjan Peace Accord, removing around 300 personnel and heavy weaponry from Sierra Leone.[1462] Around a month later, Sierra Leone and Nigeria signed a new Status of Forces Agreement, redefining the legal status of Nigeria's forces in Sierra Leone and expanding Nigeria's training role from solely the SLA to other parts of the Sierra Leone armed forces.

In mid-March, there was a leadership struggle within the RUF, sparked by the arrest of the RUF leader in Nigeria on firearms charges. On 11 March, the Government of Nigeria confirmed the presence of the RUF leader in Nigeria, although they denied that he was under house arrest.[1463] They reversed this position a few days later, admitting that they had arrested him for the illegal possession of a firearm and detained him in a federal government guesthouse in Lagos.[1464] Spokespersons for the RUF leader insisted variously that he was in Nigeria on private business and also that he was discussing the Sierra Leone peace process with the Nigerian Government.[1465] Some days later, a senior RUF member declared himself to be the new interim leader, which was soon followed by the RUF taking into custody a number of its senior membership and the Sierra Leone Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea on 31 March[1466] and the issuance of a public statement that the RUF leadership had not been changed in any way.[1467]

On 7 April, 130 troops from Burkina Faso joined ECOMOG in Liberia. On 17 April, the UK agreed to train two battalions of SLA soldiers.[1468] On 28 April, it was announced that all civil militia groups in Sierra Leone were to be put under the command of the Nigerian-led ECOMOG force, reportedly to make them more effective and to facilitate their rapid demobilisation.[1469]

On 25 May 1997, elements of the SLA staged a coup d'etat and formed the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC). The AFRC released over 700 inmates from Pademba Road Prison, including their leader, who was formally sworn in as Head of State on 17 June 1997.[1470] The AFRC immediately suspended the Constitution of Sierra Leone. President Kabbah escaped to the Republic of Guinea by helicopter.

The AFRC moved quickly to draw close to it popular personalities, political and civil society groups and organised labour groups. However, this failed to stave off a month-long strike staged by the Sierra Leone Labour Congress. Additionally, 50 members of the 80-seat Parliament met despite the [1461] AFP, 6 January 1997.

[1462] AFP, 4 February 1997.
[1463] Xinhua, 11 March 1997.
[1464] He was later transferred to the Sheraton in Abuja.
[1465] AFP, 18 March 1997.
[1466] Including RUF delegates to the CCP, see AFP, 31 March 1997.
[1467] AFP, 31 March 1997.
[1468] APF, 17 April 1997.
[1469] AFP, 28 April 1997.
[1470] Xinhua, 17 June 1997, suspension of Parliament, condemning the AFRC's action and demanded the immediate restoration of democratic order.

Immediately after the coup, the AFRC invited the RUF to share power. On 28 May, the RUF leader appeared on SLBS Radio, encouraging RUF solidarity with the AFRC. Part of his statement is worth quoting: "You will always get instructions from me through [the AFRC leader]. They are our brothers. Let no one fool you. You have to work with them to put the situation under control, especially in the western area. As you [sic] the field commander, instruct your other Commander ... to stand by for any reinforcement needed by [the AFRC leader] for any eventualities. We have to defend our sovereignty. You are to act on these orders immediately."[1471] On 30 May, the RUF declared their support for the AFRC on SLBS television and radio and on 1 June, the AFRC declared the RUF leader to be the Vice President of Sierra Leone.

In anticipation of a Nigerian led military intervention, the AFRC was quick to secure strategic locations around Freetown. This included Hastings, which was adjacent to the pre-coup Nigerian base at Kossoh Town[1472] and near an airfield. Accordingly, around 200 AFRC members entered Hastings and took over the Hastings Police Station on 26 May 1997. In the wake of the coup, there was a large build up of predominantly RUF forces in the Hastings area. Hastings, Waterloo and the SLA's Benguema Training Centre were concentration points for RUF combatants entering the Western Area. RUF forces entering the Western Area camped in public building in Waterloo (Waterloo RD), because the town residents refused to lodge them. In Waterloo, RUF forces occupied the Commercial Secondary School, the REC Secondary School and the SDA Primary School.

On 29 May, a further 500 RUF members arrived in Hastings, bringing the total to around 2,000, taking over the expansive Police Training School complex and the Kelly's Rural Vocational and Agricultural Secondary School. That same day, the leadership of this RUF group met with the Hastings village authorities and complained that they had not offered the RUF/AFRC their support. On 30 May, RUF forces set up five large checkpoints throughout Hastings, each operated by around 20 people. Civilians trying to leave the settlement had to pass through each checkpoint, where they were searched for food. The RUF forces also conducted house-to-house searches confiscating prepared foods from civilians and held an unknown number of civilians at the Police Training School, forcing them to collect wood and fresh water for the RUF commanders.

There were a number of random shootings and extensive looting in the Freetown metropolitan area around this time. For example, a large number of armed robberies were committed in Freetown on 25 May. The National Treasury building was completely gutted, most foreign exchange bureaus were looted and the Central Bank was damaged by fire as AFRC forces unsuccessfully sought access to the vaults. As the armed men roamed the city, attacking and looting residences, many people were raped and otherwise assaulted, including girls under the age of 14 and the wives and daughters of foreigners. The son of a prominent businessman was killed when he refused or was unable to meet the demands from armed men for money. At an AFRC press conference on 28 May 1997, this was explained as an accidental shooting.

[1471] BBC Media Monitoring, 30 May 1997 transcribing SLBS, 28 May 1997.

[1472] Nigerian forces, and then ECOMOG, were based at Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD) from 1994 until 1999.

The AFRC took a number of largely inadequate steps to contain the widespread looting of civilian and government premises. These including creating an anti-looting squad with orders to shoot looters dead on sight and ordering the return to base of all SLA members who did not have proper deployment orders. On 9 June, the AFRC gathered property they had recovered at the Cockerill Defence HQ and invited civilians to search through it for their belongings.[1473]

On 25 May, AFRC forces looted tourist locations in the coastal York Rural District along the coastal, peninsula road. AFRC members from the SLA Juba Barracks in west Freetown and the SLA Engineering Mechanical and Electrical Battalion near the Guma Reservoir arrived in Sussex village and looted the Florence Diving Centre and Hotel. AFRC forces also confiscated boats from civilians at the Goderich fishing village and used them to transport looted fridges, TVs, fans and furniture from the Africana Hotel Complex at Tokeh Beach back to Freetown. The RUF would later lodge at Tokeh and Mama beaches, stealing fishing hauls and other food items from civilians. On 27 May 1997, RUF forces also entered villages in the Mountain RD, establishing checkpoints in Regent and Bathurst. On 29 May, RUF forces mounted a checkpoint at St Michael's lodge near Lakka Beach, extorting money and food items from passers-by.

The period immediately after the coup is also marked by a large military build-up of foreign forces within Sierra Leone, including Nigerian, Guinean and Ghanaian forces. A small Ghanaian contingent stationed in Monrovia entered Sierra Leone to evacuate Ghanaian nationals, referred to as "Operation Ogyefo". On 27 May, two boatloads of Nigerian forces arrived in Freetown also from Monrovia, reinforcing the Nigerian base at Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD). Additional troops were airlifted to Freetown from James Spriggs Payne Airbase, just outside Monrovia, Liberia.[1474] This build-up placed huge pressure on the AFRC, resulting in intense diplomatic activity to prevent further escalation.

The armoured vehicles attached to the Nigerian Army 2nd Mechanised Battalion had been loaded onto the NSS Ambe and previously shipped to Liberia.[1475] On 1 June, orders were given to the 2nd Mechanised Battalion and 231 Tank Battalion to perform two simultaneous actions in Freetown. The first was to move from Kossoh (in Waterloo Town, Waterloo RD) and take control of Hastings Airfield and the nearby Police College (Waterloo RD). The second was to capture the Kissy Port Terminal in east Freetown, which would allow the NSS Ambe to dock and offload the amour and supplies required by the Nigerians. The codename for operation would be "Sandstorm." However, the AFRC intercepted the transmission of the operational orders giving them ample prior warning of the Nigerian plans.

[1473] AFP, 9 June 1997.

[1474] AFP, 28 May 1997

[1475] This account of the Nigerian assaults on Freetown on 2 June 1997 owes much to Brig. Gen. R.A. Adeshina.

On 2 June, at 05.30, two ships[1476] anchored out at the Cape commenced mortaring the SLA Defence HQ at Cockerill in west Freetown. AFRC spokespersons were quick to dismiss this as a training exercise, but later announced that the Nigerian naval bombardment had caused between 40 and 100 deaths. However, the family of one person claimed by the AFRC to be a victim of the bombardment later revealed that he had in fact been ambushed and killed by unidentified armed men in another part of the city. His Peugeot car was stolen, his body dumped at the central mortuary and he was recorded as one of the victims of the day's fighting. Nigerian forces set up a command post at the Mammy Yoko hotel in Aberdeen,[1477] while US marines evacuated some 200 expatriates to the USS Kearsage,[1478] stationed in waters off Freetown.

Nigerian forces stationed at Mammy Yoko were isolated, overpowered and captured by the AFRC after running out of ammunition. On 4 June the AFRC released 300 Nigerian prisoners of war, after reportedly threatening to use them as human shields[1479] at the SLA Cockerill Defence HQ and Wilberforce in Freetown.[1480] RUF/AFRC forces were lodged in the Mammy Yoko complex until the ECOMOG intervention in Freetown in February 1998.

Meanwhile on 2 June, the Nigerian group moving towards Hastings (Waterloo RD) met with strong resistance from RUF/AFRC forces, who set up a defensive position at the Orogun Bridge and shelled Nigerian forces along their line of advance from Kossoh Town. With no mechanical support to clear debris dumped on the bridge by the AFRC, the Nigerian advance was delayed. Eventually, Nigerian forces moved further towards to Hastings, arriving at Allen Town. RUF/AFRC forces had taken positions in the surrounding hills and continued shelling. Without significant heavy weapons support and with ammunition supplies depleted, the Nigerians were unable to advance further. Nevertheless, it is probable that Nigerian advance units were briefly in possession of Hastings Airfield and with limited artillery support were able to damage RUF positions at the Police Training School and in the village itself. RUF casualties were evacuated to Benguema Training Centre.

In the evening of 2 June, the Nigerian advance was called off following successful negotiations between the AFRC, the ICRC and foreign governments. Nigerian forces retreated from Hastings Airfield and Allen Town, returning to their base at Kossoh Town. Nigerian forces continued to use Hastings Airfield to obtain supplies of medical provisions and food until 9 June, when the RUF took over the airfield completely. Between 3 and 9 June, Nigerian forces took full control of Lungi International Airport,[1481] although skirmishes with the RUF/AFRC continued throughout 1997. On [1476] The NNS Ambe and NNS Ekun, joined on or around June 11 by NNS Aradu and NNS Ekpe: Xinhua, 11 June 1997.

---

[1477] The seaside location of Freetown's main hotels. Mammy Yoko would later become the Freetown Headquarters of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL).

[1478] Marines on the USS Kearsage evacuated over 1,200 expatriates between 25 May and 2 June 1997 both from Aberdeen and a collection point on a beach to the south of Freetown. See US Defence Department Briefing, 3 June 1997.

[1479] AFP, 3 June 1997 reports: "Sierra Leonean state radio repeatedly broadcast reports of 300 Nigerian soldiers being held as 'lucrative targets which would be targets for any possible Nigerian bombardment' of the city."

[1480] AFP, 3-4 June 1997.

[1481] AFP, 9 June 1997.

21 June, Ghanaian-led mediation between Nigeria and the RUF/AFRC led to the withdrawal of the four Nigerian warships from Sierra Leonean waters.[1482]

Throughout June 1997, RUF/AFRC forces began targeting students and prominent people in Freetown, including journalists, lawyers, human rights activists and others for their perceived lack of support for the RUF/AFRC coup. For example, RUF/AFRC forces beat up a prominent journalist when he told another journalist that he did not support the coup, as a result of which he went into hiding. Two students were arrested and tortured for failing to support the coup. One was held for over two months without charge, while the other was cut with a razor blade for possessing a National Union of Sierra Leone Students (NUSS) card. NUSS issued a statement condemning the coup and called for the reinstatement of the elected government. Another journalist was severely beaten by armed soldiers who accused him of hiding a government minister in his house. This journalist later fled the country after receiving death threats.

Also in June, AFRC officials arrested 15 people – seven civilians and eight senior SLA officers – on allegations that they were involved in a coup plot to reverse the coup. The detainees were ill-treated in custody and held for over six weeks without charge. The same month, the AFRC anti-looting squad caught two civilians who were alleged to have broken the curfew, cut off their genitals and limbs and left their torsos on the road as a warning to others.

July 1997 was marked by similar events. In addition, this was the month when the pro-democracy pirate radio station FM 98.1 came to the air, beginning broadcasting on 7 July 1997 from locations in the Republic of Guinea and possibly from within the Nigerian base at Lungi International Airport.[1483] Seven media workers and visitors were arrested at offices of a Freetown newspaper on the suspicion of being connected to the clandestine station. A woman at the office, who was seven months pregnant at the time, was physically and possibly also sexually abused by her captors; she died three weeks later from a miscarriage and massive bleeding. The other detainees were released after over a week in prison. In addition, RUF/AFRC forces shot a 22-year-old woman when she defended her right to listen to the radio station, which often broadcast anti-AFRC statements and speeches from the exiled President.

The advent of Radio Democracy (FM 98.1) also saw increased attacks on journalists in general. Journalists accused of writing subversive stories were arrested, as were vendors who sold the offending editions. Many journalists were arrested, including one who was arrested and detained for several days, accused of sending messages to the Sierra Leonean President in Guinea, while others fled the country. At the time, the Sierra Leone Association of Journalists (SLAJ) issued a statement protesting against the arbitrary arrest and detention of journalists as four media workers were held for activities deemed subversive by the AFRC.

People were also killed during this period for other reasons, including for the purposes of taking their property. For example, a civilian was killed in Freetown when a member of the AFRC demanded he hand over an army belt that he was wearing. The RUF/AFRC forces killed another man when he told them that he had the right to move freely at night since there was no curfew in place. In addition, a trader was shot and killed near Kline Town on 6 July 1997 when a member of the RUF/AFRC opened fire at a person he was arguing with and missed. Youth in the area left the body in the road so that the AFRC Chairman could see for himself the work of "his boys".

[1482] AFP, 21 June 1997.

[1483] On 18 May 1998, UK Foreign Secretary, Robin Cook, announced that the Foreign Office had provided £60,000 to support the clandestine radio station. BBC, 20 May 1998.

In the Wellington area of Freetown, a businessman was robbed of thousands of dollars when armed men in uniform ransacked his home. He was then forced to watch as the RUF/AFRC forces raped his wife. In addition, a Ports Authority worker was arrested on 10 July 1997 on suspicion of being a supporter of the ousted government and was held for over four months at Pademba Road prison.

In the early evening of 12 July 1997, RUF/AFRC forces attacked Nigerian positions at Kossoh Town, but were overpowered and repelled by heavy gun and mortar blasts coupled with air support from an Alfa Jet. As a result of this attack, more civilians fled to the hilltop over looking Hastings and Kossoh Town. Around 450 houses were looted and partially destroyed by the contingent of the RUF based at Hastings village. Over 10,000 residents fled Hastings and sought refuge at nearby ECOMOG bases at Jui and Kossoh Town. Around Kossoh Town, ECOMOG expanded the territory under their control both to extend protection to these civilians and to block the main highway out of Freetown. Although most intense on 12 and 13 July 1997, skirmishes continued between ECOMOG and RUF/AFRC forces until 17 July 1997. ECOMOG's Kossoh Town and Jui positions were attacked again in August 1997. RUF forces moved from the Benguema Training Centre and attacked Jui, while others moved from Regent and attacked the ECOMOG base at Kossoh Town; both attacks were successfully repelled.

Between 17 and 18 July, a delegation representing the AFRC launched negotiations with the ECOWAS Committee of Five in Abidjan, resulting in a ceasefire. A second round of talks was held across 29-30 July 1997, after which the AFRC leader announced over SLBS that there would be a return to civilian rule in not less than four years.

The National Union of Sierra Leonean Students (NUSS) organised a pro-democracy demonstration on 18 August 1997. This met with an immediate and brutal response from the AFRC. Over 110 people, including 65 students, were arrested and detained for 12 days after the demonstration. Many of the detainees were seriously wounded with bayonets and cutlasses by the RUF/AFRC forces. In one case, the injuries were so serious that the prisons officials refused to accept the detainee for fear he might die. At least six female students were abducted and sexually abused by AFRC forces. One student was held captive for over a week and forced to go naked for the first two days of her captivity. In addition, the Secretary General of the Sierra Leone Teachers Union (SLTU) was arrested and beaten up, because striking teachers declared solidarity with the pro-democracy cause.

A Freetown lawyer and human rights activist was detained by the RUF/AFRC forces, beaten, tortured and forced to make a statement on the government radio, calling on students to go home. He was held incommunicado for over two weeks. A prominent female leader was also arrested a few days after the demonstration. She fled the country following her release from detention. RUF/AFRC forces captured a teacher who had participated in the 18 August demonstration at the ECOMOG camp at Jui when she strayed on the main road. She was sexually assaulted by at least eight soldiers on the first day of her captivity then held at the Benguema Training Centre for over a week, during which she was repeatedly raped.

AFRC forces killed at least six peaceful demonstrators. Two of them were students, one of whom was shot. After he died, AFRC forces mutilated and ate his body in what was described as "ritual cannibalism", according to which RUF/AFRC forces allegedly believed that eating human flesh would give them "more courage".

Following the suppression of the demonstration, hostile activity against the press in particular was stepped up. Journalists who attempted to demonstrate were injured and detained at Cockerill Military headquarters. Two journalists required stitches after they were cut deeply on the back and head respectively with a razor blade. The men were held in a freight container at Cockerill for over 24 hours without food, water or medical attention. One SLAJ Executive member was arrested and also held at Cockerill in a freight container for several days for alleged participation in the pro-democracy protest. Armed forces attacked another SLAJ Executive member in his house, who subsequently escaped and fled to Guinea. Arrests and detentions of so-called Kabbah supporters continued. Three people - a teacher, a trader and a student - were all held without charge at the Pademba Road prison for several days on this basis.

The AFRC banned all movement of commercial and relief food to the estimated 30,000 displaced people sheltering at the Jui ECOMOG camp. The death rate from disease and malnutrition rose from 22 in June to 35 by the end of August 1997. AFRC forces laid anti-personnel landmines around the ECOMOG base at the Hastings-Grafton (Waterloo RD) road. In August 1997, disgruntled RUF members started taking private property from civilians passing through their checkpoint at the Boys' Society Compound in Regent (Mountain RD). They claimed that this was in lieu of the monthly salary that soldiers of the AFRC were receiving.

Calls for a trade embargo against the AFRC had been repeatedly made since June 1997. Nigerian forces had imposed a naval blockade on the Port of Freetown between 25 May and 21 June 1997, but were forced to back down by the AFRC's diplomatic overtures concerning return to civilian rule. On or around 2 August a Ukrainian vessel, the Kapitan Modest Ivanov, docked at Freetown Kissy Terminal (Greater Freetown) carrying 6,800 tonnes of rice;[1484] a number of other ships carrying fuel also docked successfully in Freetown, including a Chinese vessel carrying 28,000 tones of fuel on 3 August[1485] and a Panamanian vessel on 1 and 10 August.[1486] This was unacceptable to the Nigerian Government, primarily since it took considerable pressure off the AFRC to continue immediate negotiations.

[1484] Lloyds List, 2 August 1997.
[1485] AFP, 3 August 1997.
[1486] AFP, 24 August 1997.

However, on 29 August, at its 20th Annual Summit, ECOWAS imposed sanctions on Sierra Leone, effective throughout all ECOWAS member States.[1487] The ECOWAS embargo included military hardware, supplies and spare parts, petroleum and petrol-derived products. An export ban was also imposed. A travel ban was imposed on AFRC members and their families, in addition to a freeze on their assets. Moreover, ECOWAS formally expanded the mandate of ECOMOG to include the use of force to impose sanctions against Sierra Leone.[1488] Effectively, this gave legal backing to a complete navel blockade of the Port of Freetown and the prohibition of air-freight traffic. From this date, the Nigerian forces present in Sierra Leone operated under an ECOMOG banner. On the same day that these sanctions were approved, ECOMOG artillery at Lungi (Kaffu Bullom Chiefdom, Port Loko District) fired on two cargo ships moored outside the territorial waters of Sierra Leone as a warning not to enter. Aside from shelling incoming ships, ECOMOG forces at Lungi enforced the sanctions by shelling the Kissy Terminal and the Government Wharf in east Freetown. East Freetown is very densely populated, particularly around the port area, where there are a large number of marketplaces and slum settlements.

On 3 September, ECOMOG gunners fired across the bows of the Greek-registered Proteus as it entered the Port of Freetown, forcing it to anchor out at sea. This artillery barrage reportedly killed 15 people at Dove Cote market.[1489] The AFRC claimed that 50 people were killed across the eastern Freetown ward of Mabella, although there was intense scepticism about this number. Following these deaths, AFRC forces added further security to the Kissy Terminal. In the wake of the shelling, at least two Nigerian nationals resident in Freetown were killed; their corpses were mutilated and put on display along the streets of Freetown on 9 September 1997. ECOMOG Alfa Jets air raided Kissy Terminal on 7 September, reportedly destroying 10 moored vessels.[1490] The Proteus eventually entered the port, prompting an ECOMOG air sortie, which partially destroyed the boat. On 13 September, SLBS reported that ECOMOG Alfa Jets had bombed the oil tanker Norvisco, killing two members of the crew.[1491] ECOMOG air activity was met with anti-aircraft gunfire from AFRC positions across Freetown.

Over 200,000 people fled the area following this escalation of hostilities between ECOMOG and the AFRC, amid warnings from ECOMOG that the bombing would continue. The bombings also led some AFRC forces deployed in the port and other strategic locations to withdraw from their positions to safer locations the hilltops, leaving behind many arms and ammunition of various types. Later in the month, ECOMOG also announced that they would be patrolling the harbour area with gunboats.

[1487] Decision on sanctions against the junta in Sierra Leone, Twentieth Session of the Authority of Heads of State and Government, Abuja, 28-29 August 1997. Source: ECOWAS

[1488] Ibid. "Article 7. The sub-regional forces shall employ all necessary means to impose the implementation of this decision. They shall monitor closely the coastal areas, land borders and airspace of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and shall inspect, guard and seize any ship, vehicle or aircraft violating the embargo imposed by this decision."

[1489] AFP, 4 September 1997.

[1490] Xinhua, 7 September 1997.

[1491] BBC, 15 September 1997.

On 8 October, the UN Security Council unanimously gave its support to the ECOWAS sanctions regime, extending its provisions to all UN member States.[1492] Between 8 and 14 October, ECOMOG Alfa Jets destroyed a number of structures in the SLA Cockerill Defence HQ and silenced SLBS TV and radio by destroying a transmitter located on Leicester Peak, in the peninsular area of Freetown.

Around 8 October, RUF forces attacked and occupied the villages of Bathurst, Mongema and Charlotte (all Mountain RD) along the mountain road between Freetown and Kossoh Town, where ECOMOG were stationed. Civilians were forced to prepare food for the RUF forces, who established checkpoints in all three villages. A few days later, RUF/AFRC forces attacked the Kossoh Town ECOMOG base from four flanks. The clandestine pro-democracy radio station, FM 98.1, announced the impending attack, giving civilians a chance to retreat to safer locations. Two ECOMOG soldiers were captured, killed and their corpses strung up on trees by the RUF/AFRC forces. ECOMOG forces went on the offensive in a bid to repel these forces and capture all the surrounding towns and villages, including Kossoh Town, Grafton, Jui and other nearby coastal villages. This expanded ECOMOG control over movement to and from Freetown. RUF/AFRC forces retreated east to Yams Farm (Waterloo RD). ECOMOG strengthened their position around Hastings, allowing civilians to return to the village.

AFRC actions against civil society continued throughout October. Armed AFRC members beat a university lecturer who was wrongly assumed to be a relative of the exiled President and looted his house. Another 18 men and two women were taken from a house and held in the container cell at Cockerill on suspicion of being informants for the exiled Government. AFRC forces shot a journalist when he went to investigate the AFRC-inspired burning of the Presidential residence, torturing him as he lay wounded on the ground. Another journalist was arrested and thrown in Pademba Road Prison for alleged anti-AFRC activities. His sister-in-law and her 13-year-old daughter were both raped by the AFRC forces during a raid of their residence. In addition, three journalists were arrested within 24 hours of each other, accused of subversive activities; all were beaten at time of their arrest and detained in Pademba Road Prison. No formal charges brought against them. On 15 October 1997, a newspaper editor was arrested and severely beaten by AFRC forces. According to the Committee to Protect Journalists, the journalist sustained rifle butt wounds on his head, was blindfolded and taken to the notorious Sahr Sandi Army Camp[1493] near Regent (Mountain RD) and detained incommunicado with hard labour.

The AFRC shut down one of Sierra Leone's most popular newspapers during October, raiding their offices, arresting the editor and detaining him in Pademba Road Prison. All the newspaper's equipment and vehicles were seized. The AFRC spokesman told journalists that the paper had been banned. The intimication and harassment of journalists continued into November 1997, during which the Committee to Protect Journalists posted a special action alert on the Internet warning that the AFRC was circulating a "wanted" list of 13 journalists and called on all to condemn the flagrant attacks on press freedom by the AFRC. Nevertheless, the editor of another well-known Freetown newspaper was arrested on 21 November, tortured and left at the SLP Criminal Investigation

[1492] UNSC Resolution 1132 (1997).
[1493] Also known as "SS Camp".

Division cells for subversive activities. Many other editors and publishers were also arrested and detained for a number of days for subversive activities. This clampdown on journalists continued until December, at which time some journalists went into hiding after receiving death threats from the AFRC.

Civilians fleeing ECOMOG shelling in Kissy and the east end were forced to use the poor quality peninsular road leading through Tombo to Waterloo. This movement resulted in a major road traffic accident at a place called Comfort Bridge near York, during which 67 people were killed. RUF/AFRC movement to the inland provinces was also limited to this route. Checkpoints and security points at major locations like Tombo and St Michaels Lodge on the route were maintained by the RUF/AFRC.

The continuous shelling of strategic locations in Freetown, the effects of the embargo and the AFRC's inability to dislodge ECOMOG from Kossoh and Jui prompted them to continue the negotiations started early in the year. ECOWAS mediators, led by the then Nigerian Foreign Minister, hammered out a peace plan. This led to a ceasefire on 21 October 1997, followed on 23 October by the signing of the Economic Community of West African States six-month peace plan for Sierra Leone (23 October 1997-22 April 1998).[1494] The central provisions of this agreement were the maintenance of a ceasefire and the return of the elected Government by 22 April 1998. Other provisions included the hammering out of nationwide demobilisation and disarmament plans across December 1997 and the return of internally displaced persons to their places of habitual residence. ECOMOG and UN observers would supervise the implementation process, effectively requiring the deployment of ECOMOG forces throughout Sierra Leone.

Throughout December, numerous of violations of the sprit and letter of the ceasefire occurred across Sierra Leone. The CDF High Command implemented "Operation Black December", during which Kamajor units in Boama Chiefdom (Bo District) cut off all the highways and roads leading to the villages, restricting the movement of RUF/AFRC forces. Kamajors from Gorama Mende (Kenema District) also took part, cutting off stretches of the Kono-Makeni highway. In Pujehun Distric, Kamajors engaged RUF/AFRC forces around Pujehun Town (Kpanga Kagonde Chiefdom, Pujehun District) and in areas of Gbondapi (Panga Kabone Chiefdom, Pujehun District). In Bombali District, ECOMOG jets bombed positions outside of Makeni (Makari Gbanti Chiefdom, Bombali District), claiming that the ARFC was constructing an asphalt runway to allow arms supplies to enter the country more freely in violation of ECOWAS and UN sanctions. RUF/AFRC forces conducted violent food-finding missions in Koinadugu District, attacking civilians and stealing from residences in the towns of Mansofenia and Kurobonla (Neya Chiefdom, Koinadugu District).

On 21 December, the exiled President flew from Conakry to the ECOMOG base at Freetown International Airport to spur on the implementation of the peace process.

f) Events in 1998

[1494] Full text available at http://www.usip.org/library/pa/sl/sierra_leone_09231997.html.

Despite the Conakry Accord, RUF/AFRC attacks on ECOMOG and their harassment of civilians, particularly businessmen and other high profile people, became frequent in the city and its environs. This instability in the city and the country at large provoked the February 1998 military intervention by the Nigerian-led ECOMOG forces.

ECOMOG began preparations for an invasion of Freetown in mid-January, reinforcing the ECOMOG field artillery and concentrating its forces at Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD), in addition to flying training sorties over selected positions in Freetown. On 5 February, operational orders were given to ECOMOG to break out of Kossoh Town and take control of Freetown. Three major movements were planned. The Nigerian 2nd Mechanised Battalion was to move along the main Freetown highway to capture Freetown. Protecting its flank, the Nigerian 5th Mechanised Battalion was to advance towards Freetown through Upper Allen Town, Calaba Town and Portee (Greater Freetown) along the old Freetown highway, which eventually joins the main Freetown highway through a series of junctions at Kissy. The Nigerian 5th Mechanised Battalion would disperse within Freetown and capture strategic governmental and security institutions. The Nigerian 231st Tank Battalion was ordered to seize Waterloo and the Benguema Training Centre (both in Waterloo RD), heading away from Freetown.[1495]

Shortly before dawn on 6 February, the ECOMOG intervention began on three fronts. One front moved from Jui (Waterloo RD) towards Freetown; a second front moved from Hastings Airfield towards Waterloo. ECOMOG also opened a third front and moved from Kossoh Town through the hills to Regent (Mountain RD) and down into the Mount Aureol (Mountain RD) and Hill Station (Greater Freetown) entrances to metropolitan Freetown.

RUF/AFRC forces had blocked the road across Orogun Bridge with a large container, delaying the ECOMOG advance. ECOMOG fought several battles along the route into Freetown. At Portee Junction, a fierce battle was fought, forcing the RUF/AFRC to retreat towards the west end of Freetown and giving ECOMOG forces the upper hand to flush them out of Freetown on to the villages via the peninsular, the only safe exit from the city. There is very little detailed information about the conduct of the battle within the Freetown metropolitan area. It is clear that the RUF/AFRC put up stern resistance at the Kissy Terminal and used gunboats to fire on some ECOMOG advance units that reached the Connaught and Wharf areas of central Freetown. Eventually retreating from Kissy Terminal, RUF/AFRC forces booby-trapped and vandalised a considerable amount of the harbour machinery and equipment.[1496]

The ECOMOG group moving from Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD) into Freetown along the mountain road encountered landmines between Mortema and Charlotte village (both Mountain RD). RUF/AFRC forces also placed a large cargo container filled with sand across the single carriageway road between Mangaba and Mortema village (both Mountain RD). ECOMOG forces assisted by local youths managed to dislodge this obstacle and entered Regent (Mountain RD) by midday on 6 February, securing the village. RUF forces stationed at Regent and Bathurst (both

[1495] This account of the advance plans is taken mainly from Adeshina, pp.22 ff.

[1496] The vandalism was comprehensive enough to delay the offloading of nearly 800 tons of humanitarian aid from a UN ship on 22 February 1998: AFP, 22 February 1998.

Mountain RD) withdrew with their possessions along the route from Regent through Gloucester into Freetown. AFRC forces positioned mortars at Regent and shelled ECOMOG along the mountain road.

Between 10 and 12 February, ECOMOG forces advanced into Freetown along two routes into the town: through the Mount Aureol (Mountain RD) campus of Fourah Bay College and through Hill Station (Greater Freetown). Mount Aureol is the highest point in Freetown and overlooks the entire Kissy area and all approach roads into Freetown from Kossoh Town. In addition, the road from Mount Aureol into Freetown leads directly to the civic quarter of Freetown. The Hill Station route leads directly to the SLA Wilberforce Barracks and into the west Freetown areas of Lumley and Aberdeen (Greater Freetown). Control of this road isolates the TV and radio transmitter at Leicester Peak (Mountain RD) and Freetown's second hospital.

Other auxiliary forces also fought alongside with the ECOMOG troops, namely the Organised Body of Hunters Society (OBHS) in addition to Kamajors and Gbethis from the CDF. These auxiliary troops were responsible for carrying ammunition for the ECOMOG forces and some few loyal[1497] SLA forces fighting alongside ECOMOG;[1498] they were also responsible for burying RUF/AFRC fatalities and civilians who were killed during the offensive. CDF forces advancing with ECOMOG through the Mountain RD villages of Charlotte, Bathurst and Regent were used to screen the many civilians who used bush tracks to flee the fighting on the main highway. The tactic was useful in preventing the RUF infiltration of territory only lightly occupied by ECOMOG throughout the main assault.

The ECOMOG advance westward into Freetown along the main highway left those RUF/AFRC forces stationed in Freetown only one option for retreat: east along the poor quality peninsula road. By 8 February, RUF/AFRC forces retreating along this route using hundreds of commandeered utility vans and jeeps started arriving at Tombo (Waterloo RD). RUF/AFRC forces threatened to kill every resident of Tombo (Waterloo RD) unless the owners of fishing boats gave them passage to Fogbo Jetty (Koya RD). The RUF/AFRC forces abandoned many of their vehicles at Tombo (Waterloo RD). Most were stripped down or burned, but vehicles in working order were taken to Waterloo between February and March of 1998 by the ECOMOG forces and parked in front of the Rural Education Committee School near the Post Office. A large cache of weapons abandoned by retreating RUF/AFRC forces was handed over to ECOMOG by the Tombo village (Waterloo RD) authorities. An RUF member who had failed to escape to Fogbo (Koya RD) shot dead a popular young man who had arranged the weapons collection.

The ECOMOG advance westward into Waterloo from Hastings (both Waterloo RD) along the main highway quickly dislodged the RUF/AFRC forces based at Yams Farm (Waterloo RD) and pursued them to Waterloo. These ECOMOG forces captured Waterloo without any resistance on 6 February 1998. All the villages on ECOMOG's route to Waterloo, including Lower Allen Town, [1497] Namely, those SLA forces that did not change their allegiance to the leaders of the AFRC and instead retained allegiance to President Kabbah.

---

[1498] ECOMOG reported that 84 "loyal" SLA soldiers had surrendered to them in early February, but it is not clear whether ECOMOG had under its command any full units of the SLA that were unaffiliated with the AFRC.

Rokel and Devil Hole (all Waterloo RD), were cleared of RUF/AFRC forces and lightly occupied. Residents of these villages fled towards Waterloo and onwards towards Newton (Koya RD) as ECOMOG advanced. Civil militia in Waterloo assisted ECOMOG in identifying the key locations in the town. During the shelling of Waterloo, ECOMOG levelled a two-story house.

At Waterloo, ECOMOG mounted a checkpoint at the Post Office, ordering local youths to dig trenches for them. ECOMOG forces shot a man with learning difficulties who had failed to identify himself promptly and executed a man alleged by villagers of Matanky (Waterloo RD) to be an RUF/AFRC collaborator. Throughout Waterloo and Lumpa, ECOMOG conducted house-to-house searches for RUF/AFRC members. Civilians were instructed to clear the streets and remain in their residences while ECOMOG searched for armaments.

In the afternoon of the ECOMOG capture of Waterloo, an Alpha Jet flew over the village and the camp. The ECOMOG forces then moved to Lumpa, where they established a base and a checkpoint near the Banga Farm palm oil plantation (straddling Waterloo and Koya RDs). ECOMOG forces executed a young man and maltreated an unknown number of others before advancing to Campbell Town (Waterloo RD), where they attacked the remnants of the RUF/AFRC forces, killing six. Three days after the capture of Waterloo, several unarmed SSD officers surrendered to ECOMOG at their Post Office checkpoint. Some were sent to Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD) while others remained at Waterloo.

Thousands of civilians, together with some of the RUF/AFRC forces based at the Benguema Training Centre, Waterloo, Lumpa and satellite villages moved towards the Waterloo Displaced Camp, east of Waterloo (all Waterloo RD). The RUF/AFRC forces stationed at the Benguema Training Centre offered resistance to ECOMOG until they were overrun on 9 February.[1499]

Over the next few days, the RUF/AFRC forces moved from the Waterloo Displaced Camp and counter-attacked the ECOMOG troops based at Lumpa. This led to the renewed shelling of the camp by ECOMOG and a mass movement of civilians and RUF/AFRC forces towards the main highway at Newton (Koya RD), where the other RUF/AFRC forces from Fogbo Jetty (Koya RD) joined them. This group of RUF/AFRC forces subsequently moved inland to Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) along the main highway. They took with them a large number of abducted civilians, allegedly to prevent the ECOMOG Alpha Jet from bombing them on their way to Masiaka.

By 12 February, ECOMOG had control over the majority of the Freetown metropolitan area and had commenced intense "mopping-up" operations. Between 12 and 24 February a curfew was imposed throughout areas occupied by ECOMOG. They established checkpoints all over the city and in villages through the York and Mountain RDs. At locations in York RD, a civil militia was trained by ECOMOG to maintain these checkpoints and assist them in identifying suspected RUF/AFRC members and collaborators. Other militia groups were trained by ECOMOG at Hamilton and Lakka (both York RD). The OBHS, who were armed, also assisted ECOMOG forces with screening and operating checkpoints. During this period, ECOMOG forces killed a lot of civilians without any form of trial[1500] and "cordon and search" operations were conducted as a mechanism for trapping suspected RUF/AFRC members and sympathisers.

[1499] ECOMOG claimed they had captured Benguema Training Centre (Waterloo RD) on 9 February: AFP, 9 February 1998.

Between 16 February and 3 March, ECOMOG mounted checkpoints at Goderich, Lakka, Hamilton, Sussex, Bawbaw, Tokeh, York, Kissy Town (all York RD), Tombo, Russell and Madina (all Waterloo RD). The Nigerian 232nd Tank Battalion operated the checkpoint at Long Beach in Hamilton. ECOMOG forces based at Lakka imposed a fish tax on the villagers: every fishing day, a large basket was passed around among the fishers, into which everyone was supposed to contribute a minimum of four fish to feed the Nigerian contingent. These fish were demanded as a contribution to ECOMOG's daily food ration, although sometimes they were sold and the ECOMOG forces kept the money.

Between Freetown and Newton (Koya RD), ECOMOG erected several checkpoints. At each of these checkpoints, ECOMOG forces intimidated civilians, took their money and beat and killed people, among other things. For example, people were killed for failing to produce an identity card or for being suspected of being a relative of any member of the AFRC, RUF or SLA forces.

While Nigerian ECOMOG forces were generally welcomed, there were many instances of apparently arbitrary punishment and cruel treatment of civilians. In March 1998, ECOMOG soldiers from the Nigerian 192nd Battalion were stationed at York village (York RD). On finding a vehicle burned-out by retreating RUF/AFRC forces, the ECOMOG platoon commander demanded that all the men of the village gather at the Hospital compound so they could identify who was responsible for the burning. The village elders were made to sit on the floor, which symbolically is extremely demeaning. The gathered men were divided into groups according to their age and interrogated by ECOMOG forces. When they failed to obtain information about the vehicle, ECOMOG forces beat the gathered men with doubled-up length of electrical cable. Starting with the Head Man and moving from eldest to youngest, ECOMOG forces hit each man at least 12 times before deciding that three young men had the information they sought. These three youths were left out in the sun for a day and then beaten with sticks.

After 2 March, ECOMOG forces began running night and day patrols between the villages of Sussex and Baw-Baw (both York RD). Local youths were trained to run patrols between Baw-Baw and Number Two River (York RD).

In early March 1998, there was also an influx of Kamajors into York RD from Kagboro Chiefdom (Moyamba District), establishing bases in and around Tokeh (York RD). Between 8 and 10 March, a Kamajor commander order a local youth group to mount a checkpoint at the Number Two River Road Junction (York RD). ECOMOG later ordered them to dismantle the checkpoint. In Tombo (Waterloo RD), Kamajors took up residence in the village, claiming to be providing security. The Kamajors took property from the houses of two suspected RUF/AFRC collaborators and ill-treated a number of residents who complained. Following requests from the village authorities, ECOMOG ordered the departure of all Kamajors from the Tombo area. Kamajors also deployed to provide security in Regent and Bathurst villages (Mountain RD).

On 17 February, a supervisory task force was set-up to provide joint leadership between ECOMOG and the exiled Government during the immediate post-intervention period. The task force met with representatives of key civil society groups and governmental institutions. British and Nigerian military vessels docked in water off Freetown on 1 March 1998 to provide technical assistance on a range of unspecified matters.[1501] On 10 March, the President returned to Freetown, which was followed a few days later by the UN Security Council lifting the ban on fuel imports to Sierra Leone and deciding to review other sanctions provisions.[1502] Nevertheless, the prohibition on the importation of arms remained in force.

Successful ECOMOG interventions in Bo (Kakua Chiefdom, Bo District) and Kenema (Nongowa Chiefdom, Kenema District) took place between 12 and 17 February, coinciding with operations in the Western Area. Following their successful offensives against RUF/AFRC forces in the Western Area and Southern Province, ECOMOG focussed on operations in the Northern and Eastern provinces of Sierra Leone. In brief, between 1 March 1998 and 5 March, ECOMOG forces took control of Lunsar (Marampa Chiefdom, Port Loko District), Makeni (Makari Gbanti Chiefdom, Bombali District) and Magburaka (Kholifa Rowalla Chiefdom, Tonkolili District) and locations in Koinadugu District thereafter. ECOMOG moved into Kono District, taking full control of Koidu (Gbense Chiefdom, Kono District) in early April 1998. ECOMOG forces had also moved as far east as Daru (Jawie Chiefdom, Kailahun District) by April 1998.

On 17 April, the UN Security Council authorised the deployment of a 10-strong team of military and security observers to Sierra Leone, who arrived in May 1998.[1503] The UN Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL), comprising around 70 military observers and accompanying logistic support, was established on 13 July 1998.[1504]

Immediately after the reinstatement of the President, criminal investigations into hundreds of alleged RUF/AFRC collaborators and surrendered SLA soldiers detained at the Pademba Road Prison commenced, ending in a wave of treason trials. Between 21 March and 14 April 1998, 35 civilians who were alleged members of the AFRC regime were charged in three separate trials with treason, a crime punishable by death in Sierra Leone. On 24 August, all 35 were found guilty by jury trial and the court handed down sentences of death to 16 of these 35. All appealed the death sentence and were still in prison awaiting their appeals when the RUF invaded Freetown in early January 1999; they were later pardoned as part of the Lomé Peace Agreement. On 24 July 1998, 34 members of the SLA accused of carrying out the AFRC coup faced a court martial. On 12 October, all were found guilty of treason by a military court and 24 were executed by firing squad on 19 October at [1501] AP, 1 March 1998.

[1502] UN Security Council Resolution 1156 (1998), 15 March 1998.
[1503] UN Security Council Resolution 1162 (1998), 17 April 1998.
[1504] UN Security Council Resolution 1181 (1998), 13 July 1998.

the SLA Juba Barracks in west Freetown.[1505] The remaining 10 had their sentences commuted to long prison terms. Some 300 SLA members under investigation for their suspected involvement with the AFRC were released from government custody on or around 3 September. A final set of treason charges were brought against 22 civilians on 14 December.

The RUF leader was repatriated to Sierra Leone from Nigeria on 25 July and charged with treason on 4 September. Despite efforts to locate counsel for him, he represented himself throughout the trial, which began on 4 October. A jury found him guilty and the court sentenced him to death on 23 October; the RUF leader appealed the sentence and remained in custody until he was pardoned as part of the Lomé Peace Agreement. In September, ECOMOG formally moved its headquarters from Monrovia, Liberia to Freetown.

On 21 December 1998, RUF/AFRC forces attacked Songo and Six-Mile (Koya RD) and, by the early afternoon, had arrived at Newton Village (Koya RD), resulting in a mass movement of civilians to Waterloo (Waterloo RD). The swell of people into Waterloo caused widespread panic-buying of food and palm wine. Later that same day, residents of Waterloo heard small arms fire coming from Banga Farm, on the main highway between Waterloo and Newton. Late that night, ECOMOG forces based at the Waterloo Post Office and Peninsular Secondary School launched several mortars towards Banga Farm, followed by an aerial bombardment by the Alpha Jet at the same location.

Heavily armed RUF/AFRC forces attacked Waterloo (Waterloo RD) before dawn on 22 December 1998. During this attack, they killed between 15 and 19 civilians, looted extensively and burnt down at least 53 houses. AFRC forces identified as being comprised predominantly of ex-SLA members marched down Calmont Road with powerful flashlights, targeting the houses of prominent people in Waterloo. A large RUF Small Boy Unit accompanied them, sprinkling petrol on doorframes and around houses. The AFRC forces ignited the petrol with gunfire, setting fire the to the houses. A Guinean ECOMOG unit entered Waterloo and commenced shelling the RUF/AFRC forces from an armoured car, resulting in their onwards advance to the Benguema Training Centre (Waterloo RD). The RUF/AFRC forces captured a large cache of arms and ammunition before destroying the base's main ammunition dump. A prominent AFRC commander was killed in the explosion and buried nearby Koba, a few kilometres south of Benguema.

RUF/AFRC forces continued advancing southward along the peninsular road, moving from the Benguema Training Centre through Koba, During Town, Boyah Village and Russell (all Waterloo RD). At Russell, RUF/AFRC forces dislodged the small ECOMOG contingent stationed there. Not long after midnight on 24 December, RUF/AFRC forces entered Tombo through Worlai Village (both Waterloo RD), to the immediate east of Tombo. The day before, the village authorities of [1505] Those sentenced to death in the court martial had submitted a complaint to the Committee on Human Rights under the procedure in the First Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, alleging that their right to appeal, guaranteed in article 14(5), had been violated. Communication Nos. 839/1998 & 840/1998 & 841/1998. Despite the Committee requesting a stay of execution, they were executed a week after they had lodged their complaint. The Committee subsequently found that their rights had in fact been violated, as there was no right of appeal from a court martial: Anthony B Mansaray et al; Mr Gborie Tamba et al; Mr Abdul Karim Sesay et al v Sierra Leone, decision of 16 July 2001.

Tombo had received warning of the coming RUF/AFRC attack from an SLA soldier who escaped the attack on Benguema Training Centre.

At that time, the RUF were accompanied by a large number of civilians, some carrying ammunition and other supplies and some banging drums and chanting about celebrating Ramadan in Tombo (Waterloo RD). To help identify each other in night attacks, RUF/AFRC forces stuck the transparent cellophane wrapping from popular boiled sweets called "Diamonds" over their torch lenses, giving the beams a red tint. The Nigerian ECOMOG contingent was outnumbered and immediately retreated towards Freetown along the peninsula road through Kassi to Kissy Town (Waterloo RD), together with thousands of civilians. Many civilians escaped by boats to Shenge (Kagboro Chiefdom, Moyamba District), Banana Island[1506] and villages inland along the Ribbi River, while others moved to Lakka Village (York RD). RUF/AFRC forces left Tombo, having taken the contents of many abandoned homes, and burned down at least 20 others without attempting to occupy the township.

Between 22 and 25 December 1998, Nigerian ECOMOG reinforced Waterloo. On 24 December, Hastings was reinforced by around 500 Kamajors, who immediately imposed a curfew between the hours of 18.00 and 07.00. Two days later, Kamajor members arrested two suspected RUF/AFRC collaborators, who were tied up, their heads forced into a large white plastic bowl and their throats cut; civilians were forced to bury the corpses. Kamajors also killed four other civilians at Jui Junction, near Kossoh Town (Waterloo RD), leaving a severed head on a pole at their checkpoint.

Waterloo Town was bombarded by ECOMOG on 26 December 1998, causing further civilian flight from the town. A Guinean ECOMOG contingent from Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) reinforced ECOMOG stationed at Waterloo (Waterloo RD) and set up a base at the SDA School compound, moving later to the PSS School compound. Guinean ECOMOG provided limited security around the market area of Waterloo, where traders remained at work until the RUF/AFRC raided Lumpa (Waterloo RD). Members of the Guinean ECOMOG contingent mistakenly killed eight traders who were running towards the PSS Compound to escape an RUF/AFRC ambush at Lumpa. The RUF/AFRC occupied Lumpa and other parts of Waterloo, effectively dividing the town in two. RUF/AFRC forces stole medical supplies from the Waterloo Health Centre. The RUF/AFRC stayed in Lumpa throughout January, forcing civilians to perform domestic services for them; they would not allow civilians to close their doors and performed frequent house-to-house searches for food. The RUF commanding officer in Lumpa personally executed at least three civilians, dumping the body of one victim in a pit latrine and cutting out and eating the heart of another. At this time, the RUF and AFRC forces were not lodging together.

Between 25 and 28 December, RUF/AFRC advance units continued from Tombo around the peninsula towards Freetown. The villages of Black Johnson and Big Water (both York RD), on the approach road to York, were infiltrated by small numbers of RUF/AFRC. RUF/AFRC forces exchanged heavy machine gun fire with Nigerian ECOMOG forces at the York Grass Field area of York town. ECOMOG gunners killed three members of the RUF/AFRC. Following these attacks around the peninsula road, Nigerian ECOMOG redeployed at Tombo (Waterloo RD) in greater force. A Kamajor detachment was sent to guard the bridge at MacDonald (Waterloo RD). Nigerian ECOMOG imposed a strict security regime around the York Town area, organising local youth into groups to accompany them on a continuous day-and-night patrol routine. ECOMOG also began collecting and, in collaboration with locals, screening for RUF/AFRC infiltrators displaced by the fighting on the peninsular at locations. These screening centres included the Cotton Club and St. Michaels Lodge in Lakka and the Hamilton Community Centre (all York RD). After 6 January, villagers in Tombo burnt alive an RUF/AFRC member at the Tombo Grass Field area. An unknown number of other suspected RUF/AFRC members were killed with bladed weapons by the Tombo youth.

[1506] Also called Plantain Island.

g) Events in 1999

Between 30 December and 5 January 1999, RUF/AFRC forces staged attacks on Hastings and Kossoh Town (both Waterloo RD). Using bush tracks through the hills from Waterloo (Waterloo RD), RUF/AFRC forces staged major attacks on Hastings, Allen Town and Jui on 5 January. They encountered sporadic resistance from ECOMOG forces who, considerably reduced in number, progressively retreated towards Freetown. On 4 and 5 January, RUF/AFRC forces, hardware and vehicles were moving continuously through Newtown and Four Mile (Koya RD) towards Waterloo, gathering in the Ibo Town area (Waterloo RD).

Just after midnight on 6 January, RUF/AFRC forces began their assault on Freetown. An advance RUF/AFRC unit, numbering around 300, moved quickly to engage ECOMOG at their Kissy Roundabout security point. Meanwhile, RUF/AFRC forces in Waterloo started round the clock attacks on the Guinean ECOMOG contingent at PSS in Waterloo. On 9 January, the RUF/AFRC granted the Guineans safe passage from the town only in return for their remaining stock of ammunition.[1507] From Ibo Town, the RUF also began sending out units to Yams Farm (Waterloo RD), from where throughout the night they laid down heavy machine gun fire on ECOMOG positions at Hastings. Civilians were often used in these attacks.

The advancing RUF/AFRC forces were reinforced by thousands of others, who entered the Wellington and Calaba Town areas of eastern Freetown. On 7 January, RUF/AFRC forces occupied a petrol station near Kissy Road roundabout and started burning every solid structure in its immediate vicinity. The exact chronology of the movement of RUF/AFRC forces through east Freetown is not completely clear. One of their first successes, on either 6 or 7 January, was a raid on Pademba Road Prison, releasing many RUF/AFRC members captured by ECOMOG and pro-government forces over the previous year. Pademba Road Prison is to the west of central Freetown in Brookfields at the end of Pademba Road, which is also an access route through to the New England and Wilberforce areas of western Freetown. That RUF/AFRC forces made it to Pademba Road so quickly suggests that they had free movement through both the centre of Freetown, through the "PZ" junction and also through the Mountain Cut route from Kissy through to New England.

[1507] The Guineans actually handed the RUF/AFRC a haul of blank ammunition.

However, the brunt of the RUF/AFRC assault was in east Freetown. RUF/AFRC forces quickly occupied the Clay Factory IDP camp in Kissy, killing at least 20 people. ECOMOG commenced shelling into the hills behind the Clay Factory. By the early afternoon of 6 January, RUF/AFRC forces had occupied the main Kissy Terminal, killing eight ECOMOG soldiers in the Terminal's security office. The Kissy Police Station and the Kissy Mental Hospital were set on fire and a number of churches including the Holy Trinity and the Trascott Church were burned down.

Behind their line of advance, RUF forces made every civilian in the Eastern part of Freetown hoist white pieces of cloth in front of their houses and tie white ribbons on their heads and wrists to signify their support for peace. Each night, civilians were forced to burn old tyres in order to light up the city and to sing peace songs. Some beat drums while others clapped their hands or banged empty tins together. Some were even forced to dance, especially old people. Those who failed to obey these orders were shot and killed or had their houses set on fire; many civilians were burnt alive in their houses.

At irregular intervals, ECOMOG Alpha Jets bombed various locations in Freetown including "PZ", a busy business district centre, killing an unknown number of civilians who had been forced onto the streets by the RUF/AFRC.

Between 8 and 9 January 1999, the RUF/AFRC forces advanced into the west end of Freetown and were prevented from crossing the Congo Cross Road Bridge by the combined forces of ECOMOG, "loyal" SLA and CDF. The Congo Cross Road Bridge carries a dual carriageway (dubbed "main motor road") from Brookfields through to Congo Cross, Wilkinson Road, Murray Town, Lumley and Juba. It is the only way of quickly moving a large force from central to western Freetown; alternative routes into west Freetown are longer and far easier to secure. One route moves from New England to Hill Station up a steep winding mountain road in full sight of ECOMOG's main base at Wilberforce. Other routes to Congo Cross move from King Harmon Road up the winding Old Railway Line through Tembah Town and also through Congo Town along a poor quality road and a decrepit old bailey bridge. Combined with artillery from Wilberforce and the defence of the Hill Station route into west Freetown, RUF/AFRC movement westwards was halted at Congo Cross Road Bridge, from where the RUF/AFRC forces launched missiles into Congo Cross.

ECOMOG forces fought with RUF/AFRC forces for control of a key roundabout called Eastern Police between 8 and 9 January. By 10 January, ECOMOG were putting pressure RUF/AFRC forces stationed at Waterloo Town. By 11 January, the RUF/AFRC had begun their retreat east from the civic centre of Freetown, burning down the Law Courts, the telephone exchange and many government buildings.

Behind ECOMOG lines, a curfew was imposed from 15.00 to 06.00. Ahead of ECOMOG lines, a 24-hour curfew was then announced by the Government on Radio Democracy 98.1 FM. Anyone caught violating the curfew would be perceived as hostile and would be executed on the spot by the ECOMOG forces. By 13 January, ECOMOG had pushed the RUF/AFRC forces back from the Congo Cross Road Bridge and had taken control over the densely populated, central-west Brookfields area. The RUF/AFRC forces started burning houses as they retreated eastwards.

ECOMOG advised civilians to move into the National Stadium,[1508] where ECOMOG in collaboration with the Kamajors and OHBS screened civilians. An unknown number of suspected RUF/AFRC members were lined up against the walls of the National Stadium and shot dead by ECOMOG. Other collection points for displaced persons included the National Workshop by Pademba Road Prison and the Parade Group on Fourah Bay Road. ECOMOG also began confiscating satellite telephones and radio communications equipment from international NGOs, reportedly to prevent them falling into the possession of the RUF/AFRC.

On 18 January, the HMS Norfolk arrived in Freetown carrying medical supplies and a 200-strong liaison and reconnaissance group. The UK denied that it was taking any military part in the conflict, but had earlier in January released over $1.6 million for humanitarian supplies and logistic support for ECOMOG.

RUF/AFRC forces started mutilating civilians on 19 January 1999 at Black Hall Road in Freetown, as ECOMOG forces steadily forced them out of the city. At that time, ECOMOG forces had control over the Ferry Junction at Kissy eastward to Waterloo (Waterloo RD). Civilian volunteers used carts to transport the corpses of those killed in the conflict to the Kissy Road cemetery. On 16 January, RUF/AFRC forces they had befriended warned civilians remaining in Waterloo that an order had been given to amputate the arms of any non-RUF/AFRC found in the town. The ECOMOG Alpha Jet bombing of numerous RUF/AFRC positions in the east end of Freetown and Waterloo pushed RUF/AFRC forces eastwards to the outskirts of the city. As they retreated via the hills, avoiding the ECOMOG checkpoint at Kossoh Town, RUF/AFRC forces abducted hundreds of civilians, many of whom were given narcotics to make them compliant.

Although most of Greater Freetown area had come under ECOMOG control by 20 January, RUF/AFRC forces continued to stage attacks and attempt to infiltrate locations in the east of the town. ECOMOG reported having trouble with large numbers of snipers remaining in hillside locations overlooking their positions following the main RUF/AFRC retreat. Across February and March, RUF/AFRC occupied Waterloo (Waterloo RD), evading ECOMOG Alpha Jet bombardments by using bush paths and moving mainly during the nighttime from Waterloo to attack surrounding villages. For example, one night they attacked Susu Town near Devil Hole (Waterloo RD) at a location called Compound, where they raped and killed a policewoman. Many civilians escaped across the Madonke creek to villages in Koya Chiefdom (Port Loko District). In addition, RUF/AFRC patrols rounded up civilians hiding in the Waterloo area and returned them to the town.

At the end of January, Nigeria announced that it wished to remove its troops from Sierra Leone by May 1999.[1509] On 2 February, ECOMOG continued to reinforce with the arrival of over 400 Malian troops[1510] and around 1,000 Ghanaian troops by 8 February.[1511] A general mobilisation of [1508] At the highpoint of the invasion, UN World Food Program estimated that around 40,000 civilians sought security in the National Stadium by 21 January 1999.

[1509] BBC, 28 January 1999.
[1510] IRIN West Africa, 2 February 1999.
[1511] IRIN West Africa, 8 February 1999.

ECOMOG throughout Freetown was announced on 5 February 1999.[1512] The Chief of Staff of the SLA reportedly announced that ECOMOG would not hesitate in firing on civilians should the RUF/AFRC use them as human shields.[1513] The ECOMOG general mobilisation was followed by an intensification of cordon and search operations throughout the city.[1514] ECOMOG restructured its operations to include a specific garrison and force for the Freetown area. The UK Government stated that it would be providing a package of comprehensive logistic and other support to ECOMOG,[1515] followed soon after by the announcement that it would be providing around $16 million in military and training support for Sierra Leone and ECOMOG.[1516]

Between 20 and 25 February, ECOMOG launched an attack on Waterloo by continuously shelling the town. Some of the shells landed at the creek at the Christian cemetery. The remnants of RUF/AFRC forces, who were mainly ex-SLA, pulled out of Waterloo and Campbell Town along the Prince Alfred Road towards Cole Town (all Waterloo RD) and proceeding along bush tracks to the Waterloo Displaced Camp. By nightfall, all of them had left and headed towards Newton (Koya RD). In Waterloo, around 700 houses had been burnt down during the RUF/AFRC occupation. ECOMOG and Kamajor forces secured the town, with approximately 50 Kamajors deploying to Waterloo. They were shown around town by a local man who identified suspected RUF/AFRC collaborators, of whom at least two were tortured and executed by the Kamajors. The Kamajors also deployed at Bath-Comp (Koya RD), where they looted and burnt down an unknown number of civilian residences. At Kissy Town, near the IDP camp, combined "loyal" SLA and CDF on the one hand and ECOMOG on the other, erected checkpoints.

Responding to demands made by the RUF/AFRC, on 15 April the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone temporarily released the RUF leader from prison,[1517] where he had been awaiting appeal from his treason conviction, allowing him to meet with the High Command of the RUF/AFRC and engage in peace talks in Togo, Lomé.[1518] Preliminary discussions between representatives of the RUF/AFRC and the Government of Sierra Leone yielded a ceasefire, which entered into force on 24 May. Full talks commenced on 25 May, leading to the signing of the Peace Agreement Between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone on 7 July 1999 (the Lomé Peace Agreement).[1519] The Lomé Peace Agreement provided for a number of joint RUF-GOSL processes for the provision of humanitarian assistance, return of displaced persons, demobilisation, management of natural resources and other matters related to the consolidation of the peace process. Additionally, it contains provisions for a governmental power-sharing arrangement between the RUF and the Government. The Lomé Peace Agreement also pardoned

---

[1512] AFP, 4 February 1999.
[1513] IRIN West Africa, 5 February 1999.
[1514] BBC, 6 February 1999.
[1515] IRIN West Africa, 22 February 1999.
[1516] IRIN West Africa, 3 March 1999. The UK starting exporting ammunition and military equipment to Sierra Leone after 7 October 1999.
[1517] The RUF leader was reportedly taken from Pademba Road prison into protective custody in the Republic of Guinea prior to the RUF/AFRC 6 January 1999 assault on Freetown.
[1518] BBC, 15 April 1999.
[1519] The full text is available at http://www.usip.org/library/pa/sl/sierra_leone_07071999_toc.html.

the RUF leader and others and granted a blanket amnesty to all combatants and collaborators for acts done in fulfilment of their objectives.

The RUF and AFRC leaders arrived back in Freetown on 3 October 1999 from Liberia, where they had gone following the conclusion of the peace talks.[1520] On 22 October, the United Nations Security Council authorised the deployment of a 6,000-strong peacekeeping mission to Sierra Leone to replace the previous observer mission.[1521]

h) Events in 2000

Between January and May 2000 no violent incidents are recorded for the Western Area. By 12 April 2000, the DDR program had taken on over 22,000 ex-combatants, comprising 4,227 RUF; 7,474 CDF; 5,590 AFRC; 3,804 SLA; and 1,463 unaffiliated combatants.[1522]

On 1 May, the United Nations reported that RUF forces had attacked its positions near Newton (Koya RD), a few miles east of Waterloo (Waterloo RD),[1523] that there had been a number of RUF attacks near Waterloo and that RUF forces had been seen moving towards Hastings (Waterloo RD). However, the BBC reported on 6 May that UNAMSIL had retracted the latter statement and that in an "unfortunate reporting error on our part" they had confused this with RUF activity near Lunsar (Marampa Chiefdom, Port Loko District).[1524] Nevertheless, while information gathered for this report confirms that there were no RUF attacks on locations in the Western Area at this time, rumours of RUF attacks sparked at least 20,000 civilians to leave Songo, Newton (both Koya RD), Waterloo and Hastings (Waterloo RD) and move into the Greater Freetown Area.[1525]

However, UNAMSIL faced a serious crisis between 5 and 28 May: nearly 500 troops from different UNAMSIL contingents were disarmed and held hostage by RUF forces. On 8 May, the UK military commenced "Operation Palliser", deploying to Sierra Leone the HMS Ocean and other vessels with around 800 soldiers from the Parachute Regiment.[1526] Initially, UK forces secured the airport at Lungi and commenced the evacuation of UK nationals and other expatriates. Also on 8 May, civilians in Freetown held a large demonstration outside the Spur Road residence of RUF leader. The details are not clear, but a number of gunshots were fired, reportedly by RUF members guarding the residence.[1527] Nineteen civilians were killed during the rally and were buried on 13 May.[1528] The RUF leader apparently disappeared, but was apprehended by civilians on 17 May whilst travelling in a civilian vehicle through the Lumley area of Freetown. The UK Secretary of Defence

---

[1520] Both reportedly held talks with the Liberian President in Monrovia during this time: http://www.sierra-leone.org/slnews0999.html.

[1521] UN Security Council Resolution 1270 (1999).

[1522] From National Commission from Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (NCDDR), quoted in IRIN West Africa, 18 April 2000.

[1523] IRIN West Africa, 1 May 2000.

[1524] BBC Online News, 7 May 2000 (06:40 GMT 07:40 UK).

[1525] OCHA Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report, 12 May 2000.

[1526] On 24 May, soldiers from the 42 Commando Royal Marines replaced the paratroopers.

[1527] BBC Online News, 8 May, 2000, (17:13 GMT 18:13 UK).

[1528] BBC Online News, 13 May 2000 (01:53 GMT 02:53 UK).

subsequently stated to the BBC that the RUF leader was being held in "protective custody" by UK forces.[1529]

Between 8 and 14 May, RUF forces unsuccessfully attempted to gain control of Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) from pro-Government forces. During the same period, UK forces bolstered security at strategic locations on the main highway at Hastings and Waterloo. On 19 May, UK Royal Marines rehearsed amphibious landings in the Freetown area[1530] in preparation for replacing the Paratroops deployed on 8 May.[1531] In addition, the UK announced its decision to provide an ongoing series of six-week training courses for around 8 battalions of the SLA.[1532] The 180-strong team began arriving in Freetown on 10 June 2000,[1533] dovetailing with the withdrawal of the Royal Marines after 15 June 2000.[1534] On 24 July, nearly 1,000 SLA members graduated from the UK-run training course,[1535] the first group of a total of around 8,000 who would eventually be trained this way. Various rotations of the UK military teams occurred between August and December 2000. The overall number of UK service personnel in Sierra Leone was around 550, operating from the headquarters of the 1st Mechanised Brigade in Freetown.

On 14 August, the AFRC leader announced that he had formally disbanded the AFRC,[1536] which had seized power in the coup on 25 May 1997. On 22 August, a senior RUF member replaced the RUF leader, who remained in custody.

The West Side Boys apprehended 11 UK soldiers from the Short Term Training Team near Masiaka (Koya Chiefdom, Port Loko District) on 27 August 2000. Although UK negotiators secured the release of five of the captives, UK Special Forces and Paratroopers arrived in Freetown and executed "Operation Barrass", freeing the remainder on 10 September.[1537] In the Western Area, no further significant incidents are reported for 2000.

i) Events in 2001 and beyond

In January 2001, the Ukrainian contingent of UNAMSIL deployed from Freetown, contributing 534 men, 220 Armoured Personnel Carriers and 220 trucks to the peacekeeping mission.[1538] Ukrainian troops were based at Hastings (Waterloo RD). The RUF, the CDF and the Government of Sierra Leone commenced tri-partite peace talks on or around 16 May 2001.[1539] Disarmament proceeded at the Hockey Pitch at Wilberforce Barracks. At Waterloo the OBHS who used to patrol the village disarmed at the IDP Camp. By 30 September 2001, the UK had reduced its military presence in [1529] BBC Online News, 17 May 2000 (18:03 GMT 19:03 UK).

[1530] BBC Online News, 19 May 2000 (15:48 GMT 16:48 UK).
[1531] IRIN West Africa, 24 May 2000.
[1532] The UK Military handed over to a UK-led International Military and Advisory Training Team (IMATT) in September 2001.
[1533] BBC Online News, 10 June 2000 (19:28 GMT 20:28 UK).
[1534] IRIN West Africa, 14 June 2000.
[1535] IRIN West Africa, 24 July 2000.
[1536] BBC Online News, 14 August 2000 (03:40 GMT 04:40 UK).
[1537] See Port Loko District: West Side Boys for more details.
[1538] IRIN West Africa, 10 January 2001.
[1539] BBC Online News, 16 May 2001 (00:26 GMT 01:26 UK).

Sierra Leone to around 360[1540] and UNAMSIL reached the ceiling of its authorised deployment strength of 17,500 personnel on 20 November 2001.

Following disarmament and demobilisation of members of all the different fighting factions, on 18 January 2002 President Kabbah declared that the war was over and held a symbolic "Arms Burning Ceremony" at Lungi (Kaffu Bullom Chiefdom, Port Loko District).

3. Conclusion

 TO BE COMPLETED ON COMPLETION OF ANALYSIS FOR THE NORTHERN PROVINCE

[1540] OCHA Sierra Leone Humanitarian Situation Report 01 - 30 September 2001.

Annex I: List of Acronyms

AFRC	Armed Force Revolutionary Council
APC	All Peoples Congress
CDF	Civil Defence Force
ECOMOG	Economic Community of West African States Cease Fire Monitoring Group
EO	Executive Outcomes
NPFL	National Patriotic Front for Liberia
NPRC	National Provisional Ruling Council
RUF	Revolutionary United Front
SLA	Sierra Leone Army
SLPP	Sierra Leone Peoples Party
UNAMSIL	United Nation Mission in Sierra Leone
ULIMO	United Liberation movement for Democracy in Liberia.

NO PEACE WITHOUT JUSTICE

Annex II: Acknowledgments

This report is the result of a program carried out in Sierra Leone over many months and in which many people took part. Although it is not possible to name each and every person who participated at one point or another, the following list of people reflects the dimension and importance of the No Peace Without Justice Conflict Mapping Program in Sierra Leone.

Conflict Mapping Program

The following persons took part in the Conflict Mapping Program in Sierra Leone. All have worked with unwaring commitments to the goals of the program and each has contributed their professionalism and dedication to their respective areas of work.

Program Director

Niccolò FIGÀ-TALAMANCA

Country Director

Alison SMITH

Conflict Mapping Coordinator

Catherine GAMBETTE [Feb2003 onwards]
Andrew SWINDELLS [Sep2002-Feb2003]

Conflict Mapping Officer

Kizito G. BANGURA

Conflict Mapping Recorders

Patrick ADU
Joseph J. ALPHA
Roland ALPHA
Francis AMADU
Paul K. AMARA
Aiah A.Y. AROUNA
Sahr S. AROUNA
Joseph I. BABAO
Florence BAION
Bentson M. BAKOOI
Francis A. BANGALI
Ibrahim G. BANGURA
Mohamed R. BANGURA
Santigie BANGURA
Sherbora BANGURA
Sulaiman H. BANGURA
Thaimu S. BANGURA
Mohamed L. BARRIE
Sahr J. BENDU
Alpha A. KANU
Idrissa KENDOR †
Joseph KOBBA
Kabba S. KOITA
Alusine S. KOROMA
Hassan K. KOROMA
Joseph M. KOROMA
Komeh A. KOROMA
Magdalene KOROMA
Milton KOROMA
Osman KOROMA
Sembu KOROMA
Syl S. KOROMA
James B. LAHAI
John A.S. LAHAI
Alpha M. LALUGBA
Andrew LISSA
Mathew T.J. LORH
Philip C. MACFOY

Mohamed BLAKE
Munda D. BOCKARIE
Samuel K. BOCKARIE
Joseph O. BUREH
Samuel CAULKER
Alfred COLE
Christiana CONNEL
Ibrahim B. CONTEH
Magnus CONTEH
Morlai CONTEH
Sallieu A. CONTEH
Samuel S. CONTEH
Thomas M. CONTEH
Mustapha DABENI
Ann-Marie DARAMY
Ibrahim DARAMY
Lennox DEIGH
Foday S. DUMBUYA
Yusufu T. FABU-KANJA
A. P. FOMBA
Alex K. FOMBA
Allieu K. FOMBA
Neneh A. FULLAH
William T.P. GBANABOME
Tamba B. GBENDA
Hassan M. GIBATEH
Esther HARDING
Richard HOWARD
Biah Y. IDRISS
Abdul R. JALLOH
Mohamed B. JALLOH
Joseph B. JUSU
Paul JUSU
Alims KABIA
A.S. KAIFINEH
Andrew S. KALIVA
Sylvestre KALLON
Abdul K. KAMARA
Alie B. KAMARA
Ambrose KAMARA
Bamba S. KAMARA
Catherine K. KAMARA
David S. KAMARA
Mohamed A. KAMARA
Moses MANDO
Alieu B. MANSARAY
Mohamed MANSARAY
Zainab MANSARAY
Janet MASSAQUOI
Mustapha S. MASSAQUOI
Tamba D. MOIWO
Brima M.S. MOMODU
Harriet M. MYERS
Alfred S. NABIEU
David A. NGOMBU
Sahr NJAAMA
Alpha B. ONEIL
Jonathan PEARCE
Susan PESSIMA
Julrick PRATT
Sylvanus O. PRATT
Sawudatu SAMAI
Sandi SAMURA
Hindolo A. SANDI
Abdulai G. SANKOH
Augustine SANNOH
Dominic SEBBEH
Abu B. SESAY
Alfred K. SESAY
Brima SESAY
Edward B. SESAY
M.S. SESAY
Mohamed A. SILLAH
Mohamed SIMBAY
Andrew SIMBO
Wilfred O. SOLOMON
Ahmed B. SOMBIE
Rosetta M. SOVULA
Augustine K. SUMAILA
James M.B. SUMAILA
Abu B. TAILU
Sorie Bala TARAWALIE
Abdulai THORONKA
Faith G. TUCKER
Dominic VANDI
Patrick S. VANDY
John C. VANJAH
Matthew M. YAMBA

NO PEACE WITHOUT JUSTICE

Mohamed B. KAMARA
Momodu B. KAMARA
Osman KAMARA
Theresa F. KAMARA
Yakoya KAMARA
Amara KANNEH

Moses L. YANGUBA
Andrew YAVANA
Mohamed M. YEMOH
Francis YONDA

Conflict Mapping Trainers
Abdul BANGURA
Andrew SIMBO
Patrick FATOMA

Conflict Mapping Reviewers
Abdul BANGURA
Alieu MANSARAY
Andrew SIMBO
Idriss TARAWALLIE

Typists
Melody MARTIN
Annette NICOL
Letitia SESAY
Violetta STANLEY

Data Entry Processors
Andrea BROGGI
Sharon CARROLL
Martin EBERT
Ilario FUSARO
Patrick JOHNBULL
Yvonne JOHNSON
Mohamed KALIL
Julianna KAMANDA
Nicole NADIA
Stefano PANTALEONE
Letitia SESAY
Violetta STANLEY
Rachel TAYLOR
Margaret TURAY
Hubert TSHISWAKA

Some of these Data Entry Processors also took part in the analysis of the initial draft, namely Andrea Broggi, Sharon Carroll, Martin Ebert, Ilario Fusaro, Patrick Johnbull, Nicole Nadia, Stefano Pantaleone and Hubert Tshiswaka.

The implementation of the program in the Provinces was made possible thanks to the invaluable assistance of an array of dedicated persons, including Focal Points and members of the SCWG District Chapters.

No Peace Without Justice Sierra Leone Project
As members of the NPWJ Sierra Leone Project, the following persons played an active part in the Conflict Mapping Program.

Outreach Program

Thomas	LONGLEY
Isha	WRIGHT
Abdul Rahim	KAMARA
Josephine	KOROMA
Bailey	HAND

Legal Profession Program

John	STOMPOR
Ibrahim	KOROMA

Judicial Assistance Program

Pascal	TURLAN

Library

Avril	ROWE
Eldred	DURING

Operations Officer

Matilda	KOROVESHI

Intern-Project Assistant

Edward	PLEETH

Drivers

Mamadu	JALLOH
Mohamed	JALLOH
Sam	ALLIE, Jr.

Logistics

Yah	AMOH
Sahr	ANSUMANA

NO PEACE WITHOUT JUSTICE

Joseph	BANGURA
Pa	ISSA
Mr	JAMES
Brima	TARAWALLIE

Additional thanks also go to Sensible Data, particularly Stefano Figa-Talamanca and Francesco Burragato, for their technical assistance and 24-hour (frequently used) hotline. Special thanks go to Richard Bednarek, who laid the groundwork for the successful implementation of this project as NPWJ's Outreach Coordinator in 2001.

Partners

The following persons have been of an invaluable help for the time they dedicated to our program, through providing assistance and advice:

The members of the Special Court Working Group (SCWG), both in Freetown and in the District Chapters, for their assistance in the planning, implementation and organisation of the Conflict Mapping tour; the Campaign For Good Governance (CGG), in particular the Coordinator, Mrs Olayinka Creighton-Randall, and the Field Monitors for their initial comments on our preliminary findings; Students from Fourah Bay College for research assistance and for their participation in the cross-checking stage; Peter and Gillian Arnot Smith, for the time they spent proofreading our drafts and helping in the design of the open sources database; Annette Rolfe and her team in Freetown at the GIS unit of the Development Assistance Coordination Unit Sierra Leone; Nabil Bahsoon and the team at NabsTech for solving unsolvable problems; the Government of Sierra Leone, in particular H.E. Solomon E. Berewa, Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, The Hon Eke A. Halloway, Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, and Ambassador Allieu I. Kanu, Deputy Permanent Representative of the Republic of Sierra Leone to the United Nations; Corinne Dufka, Theresa Kordeczk and all the other people in Sierra Leone and elsewhere we cannot name individually but who have contributed to this program and whose friendship and support were invaluable.

During the drafting of the legal analysis, we were fortunate to have the assistance of several people, whose knowledge, experience and expertise contributed greatly to this report. We would like to thank the following people for giving so generously of their time to review the drafts and to help us ensure the legal analysis is as accurate as it can possibly be: Stuart Alford, Olympia Bekou, Sylvia de Bertodano, Andrea Carcano, John Cerone, Robert McCorquodale and Gerry Simpson. Of course, No Peace Without Justice takes full responsibility for any errors or omissions

Key Persons

The Conflict Mapping Program was based on collecting information from identified key persons; this report would not have been possible without their involvement. We therefore address a special thanks to the 402 key people across the country, including Oscar, who gave so freely of their time and themselves to share with us their information on the violations of international humanitarian law committed during the conflict.

Address by Major Johnny Paul Koroma
Head of State and Chairman of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council
Freetown - 28 May 1997

My fellow countrymen: This is Major Johnny Paul Koroma, the Chairman of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, AFRC, of Sierra Leone. Since my last broadcast to the nation announcing the overthrow of former president Tejan Kabbah and his government, I now wish to apprise you of the following:

As already explained to the nation, developments in the country just before AFRC intervened, were threatening the cohesion of the country. The policies in the country had polarized into regional and tribal factions. The former president had lost total control of the situation as atrocities spread throughout the country. The overthrown government made only half-hearted moves; but more disastrously was the fact that the former armed civilians from only one part of the country to harassed servicemen and members of the civil society. The rebel war, which started in the country, was fought gallantly by our forces, seriously aided by the Guinean troops, Nigerian troops, the special task force, and the SSD (Special Security Detachment).

My countrymen and countrywomen: In our effort to liberate our fatherland, the only civilians who volunteered to fight during the difficult days were the Kamaboys, who were fighting alongside the Army as an auxiliary force, and the cooperation between the Army and the Kamaboys was extremely cordial as the Kamaboys defended mostly their localities. Some time in January 1994, a group called Hindu-Hindu was organized in Kenema, and the formation of Hindu-Hindu led to a series of breaches of the peace, causing the organization to be disbanded.

In 1996, the same group that had been disbanded re-emerged as the Kamajors, and like in the days of the Hindu-Hindu, the Kamajors instantly targeted the Army as their perceived enemy. However, the military overlooked the activities of the Kamajors and fought alongside them as local forces, but when the SLPP came to power, the SLPP government emphasized that the Kamajors should be given ante-military training which caused serious confrontation between the soldiers and the Kamajors. While the Army was only made up of 14,000 men, the number of Kamajors has swelled up to 37,000 men, vastly outnumbering the constitutional Army.

Welfare of the Army: The SLPP, which got the full support of the Army after the election, suddenly became very partisan in handling the security of the state. Welfare of the Kamajors was treated more seriously that the welfare of the Army. It was not surprising that a one time chief Kamajor was appointed Deputy Minister of Defense who spent all his energy organizing the Kamajors. Even though the military had fought the war for five years, the SLPP spent all its time providing logistics for the Kamajors, and totally forgetting the welfare of the Army. The Kamajors in the eyes of the SLPP suddenly because a superior force, even though the Armed Forces in constitutionally responsible for the security of the state. The Kamajors started to engage the Army in battles causing the death of many soldiers.

Even though the SLPP claimed to have spent between 2 billion and 3.5 billion leones on the Armed Forces every month, this was not reflected in the status of the ordinary soldier. The Kamajors, on the other hand, were well catered for as Deputy Defense Minister Hinga Norman alone collected 35 million leones on behalf of Kamajors every month. This does not cover the amount Hinga Norman collected from government to cover logistics for the Kamajors. Salaries for soldiers are delayed for long periods whereas monies to Kamajors are paid instantly on demand. Ration for the fighting men was reduced thereby putting a lot of pressure on the commanders who feel hard to handle the same number of men.

The public service: My countrymen, the SLPP government launched an all-out war against members of the civil service who were suspected to be non-SLPP supporters. Many permanent secretaries and heads of department were sent on leave just because they were not members of the SLPP. The civil service came to a standstill when important officials such as the Establishment Secretary, the Accountant General, and other heads of department were forced on leave without explanation. Even though the former head of state promised a 20 percent increase in the salaries, no such increase took place. Instead, government went ahead to retrench more workers from the civil service. The teachers remained unpaid for a long time to the extent that many teachers would no longer pay their way to work. This situation is not tenable, and we promise to change this immediately.

Address by Major Johnny Paul Koroma
Head of State and Chairman of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council
Freetown - 1 June 1997

My fellow countrymen, friendly nations and members of the international community. The big question at this moment on the lips of everybody inside and outside the country is what prompted us to oust former President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and his government from power.

Before dwelling on the main above-mentioned theme of my address, I want first and foremost on behalf of my colleagues avail myself o this opportunity to solemnly extend our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and expression of regret for the unfortunate incidents that occurred during the takeover operation in which some of our brothers and sisters, as well as foreign nationals, lost their lives and property.

In this regard, the AFRC, as you have been informed through the media, has taken appropriate measures to prevent the recurrence of such unfortunate incidents. My address this evening is not only directed to fellow Sierra Leoneans. It is also meant to enlighten concerned non-nationals and the international community about the welfare of our beloved country, on the main motive of our action.

I have already emphasized in my last two addresses that our action was not motivated by selfish [as heard] and greed for power. The main objective of the AFRC to seize power is to restore lasting peace and political stability in this country, which has been ravaged and continues to be shattered by a senseless war.

On this vital issue of restoring peace and political stability in our country, I would like on behalf of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council and the entire nation to pay a special and fitting tribute to the Ivorian head of state, His Excellency President Henri Konan Bedie, with special mention to his Foreign Minister Amara Essy, the government and people of La Cote d'Ivorie for the very important role they played in getting Corporal Foday Saybana Sankoh, the charismatic leader of the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone around the negotiating table, that resulted to the signing of the Abuja peace accord last November. But for the relentless efforts of the authorities of this great African country, in the true state of African solidarity, we will not even have been thinking about...[pauses] talking about inviting the RUF leader to command his fighters to (?cease) hostilities and to join the revolution with the sole objective of bringing lasting peace to our beloved country.

The AFRC would also like to seize this opportunity to thank friendly sister countries in the subregion, namely the Federal Republic of Nigeria, the Republic of Guinea, and Ghana for their effective and invaluable role in averting irreparable destruction of our fatherland at the height of the rebel war. The AFRC would also like to behalf of the entire nation to thank the international community and NGO's [words indistinct] to the United Nations Organization, the Commonwealth, the OAU, the International Alliance, the International Community of the World Force for the very important roles they played toward the success of the Abidjan peace process.

Fellow countrymen, friendly nations, members of the international community, I would now like to dwell on the main theme of my address this evening. The main reason that prompted us to take the [word indistinct] and timely decision to overthrow the former regime and to extend an invitation to RUF Cpl. Foday Sankoh and the RUF to operate with us.

It is true the wind of democracy has blown and continues to blow around the world. Patriotic and national Sierra Leoneans, old and young, put in everything, sometimes at the expense of their lives, during the transition process to democratic rule with the objective of being in tune with progressive nations around the globe and restoring lasting peace and political stability in Sierra Leone. After five years of military governance, our country was returned to democratic rule with great pains, but due to lack of political ingenuity and sincere commitment on the part of former President Tejan Kabbah and some of his lieutenants, the hard-won democracy was being gradually jeopardized by the flagrant antidemocratic and unpatriotic practices of the lat regime. The unanimous vote in favor of the new president by SLPP parliamentarians and the appointment of ruling party stalwarts to most of the key positions of the state's administrative machinery is a palpable truth of such tendencies.

In an exclusive interview granted to the West African magazine of March this year in Washington, OAU Secretary General Dr. Ahmed Salim Ahmed (sic.) rightly opined, and quote, "Progressive African leadership must now operate, above all, on the clear knowledge that the question of peace, security, and political stability of their respective continent is of primordial importance. Without peace, security, and political stability, it is not possible that any country will achieve the type of democratic and economic growth, the type of social development that we aspire to," quote. [as heard]

This is why my colleagues and I on the AFRC have decided to focus on the question of resolving our internal conflicts. The war that has shattered our once flourishing economy, with much more of [word indistinct] efforts and reality. [words indistinct] this priority of priorities--the return of lasting peace and political stability in our country--is achieved, we will then focus on the whole question of democratization and greater respect for human rights. Military issues, the question of economic and social development, the question of security and stability, and the issue of democratization and human rights are related. If we are to achieve the objective the AFRC will set for itself and address the new challenges that face our country [sentence as heard]. The AFRC will endeavor to address each of these goals and their [word indistinct] within the present context of the social and political situation prevailing in the country.

Our brother Cpl. Foday Saybana Sankoh is quick to understand this when he emphatically stated in his radio message to the nation from Abuja that a democracy without peace, security, and political stability is baseless. The remarkable economic growth and social development achieved by our sister and friendly Republic of La Cote d'Ivoire is due to the legendary peace, security, and political stability in that country. Foreign investors and economic operators will only pour in their money into countries that will guarantee their personal security and that of their investment.

Fellow countrymen, you will surely agree with me that the unseated president and some of his round pegs in square holes collaborators dragged their feet in implementing the priority clauses stipulated in the Abuja peace accord related to developments of mutual forces to carry out encampment and disarming of combatants. The Commission of the Consolidation of Peace, PCP, was never given the attention needed to carry out its functions.

Fellow countrymen, I will not dwell much on the negative [word indistinct], but let me touch on some of its saddest aspects. The death toll could be estimated at about 15,000 troops. Damaged property could easily amount to several billions of leones. The economy has been completely crippled. Thousands of families which once enjoyed the warmth of living together have been separated. Innocent citizens, mainly comprised of agricultural workers in rural areas, were mutilated and maimed, rendering them physically handicapped and useless throughout the rest of their lives. The brain drain in the country during the war reached unprecedented proportions with its negative effects on the standard of education in our university and other institutions of higher learning. Children in their thousands have become homeless, orphans, and street-beggars. Persons traumatized by the atrocities of the war have become mentally unbalanced. Fellow countrymen, the negative spoils of the war cannot be fully exhausted in this address.

Nationalistic and patriotic Sierra Leoneans as well as well-meaning non-nationals and the international community will now understand why the AFRC deem it at this point in time to drive away the enemies of this nation and to call upon Cpl. Foday Sankoh and the RUF to join the revolution so as to bring about lasting peace and to arrest the unmerited and unwarranted sufferings of our people.

With the return of lasting peace and political stability in this country, Sierra Leoneans will regain their lost personality and integrity, but more especially our shattered economy [words indistinct] foreign investment. Our country will once more regain its rightly place among the progressive nations of the world.

My fellow countrymen, we are undergoing a very crucial stage in the history of our country. Our destiny and that of generations yet unborn is in our hands. Shakespeare rightly put, quote, "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken on the tide (sic.) leads on to fortune, omitted all their voyage is bound in shallow waters," unquote.

We should not leave the fate of this only country that we have to be determined by other people for their own personal aggrandizement. The Lord Almighty, our creator, loves this country. He has made it possible for us to know our enemies at the right time. The Biblical saying "God's time is the best" should be an eye opener for us. Prayers said in our numerous churches and mosques on Sundays and Fridays throughout the national territory for the return of lasting peace to our beloved country have not gone in vain. My fellow countrymen, our priority of priorities today is peace. Peace is an inseparable factor for human development. We have been longing for it for the past six years. Thanks to God, it is here. The Armed Forces Revolutionary Council and true patriots of this country are therefore solemnly appealing to all Sierra Leoneans, irrespective of their ethnic grouping, creed, social standing, and political affiliation, within and outside our national territory to join the God-inspired revolution for the ultimate salvation of our beloved fatherland.

I will end my address by declaring three days fasting and prayers throughout the country, from Sunday, 1 to Tuesday 3 June 1997. United We Stand, Divided We fall. I thank you very much.

SPEAKER: Press release, dated from the movement for the restoration of democracy, MRD, civil defence secretariat, Freetown.

To all peace-loving citizens of Sierra Leone:

Fellow citizens, the Civil Defence Force of Sierra Leone, CDF/SL, has been watching closely with keen interest into all the peace deals between the AFRC/RUF and ECOWAS on the peaceful settlement to the Sierra Leone political crisis as from the 25th of May, 1997 to date. According to CDF observation and understanding from all the so-called negotiations, CDF strongly believes that the junta only wants to buy more time to continue its hegemony over this nation. As such, the junta has no genuine intention to develop this country or to return this country to the democratically elected president and his government, but to destroy it economically, educationally, socially, and morally.

It is clearly seen that they set their own conditions at every meeting, which they will not adhere to afterwards. CDF, as a civil organization which comprises well-meaning Sierra Leoneans, will not sit by to allow the barbaric idlers, thieves, killers, to dump this nation into the drainage. In this connection, therefore, the CDF is left with no alternative but to give the following orders:

As from the 20th December, 1997, if a system is not established that can indicate the immediate reinstatement of the democratically elected president, Alhaji Dr. Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, such as the deployment of ECOMOG troops and commencement of disarmament, the following orders will be executed throughout the length and breadth of Sierra Leone:

1) that all roads within the borders of Sierra Leone should be made inaccessible to all traffic;

2) that anyone working in the interests of the junta, from local to national executive level, will be considered an enemy of the state, and therefore, a target, with the exception of health workers;

3) that any government employee who resists the junta shall receive his or her denied benefits on the return of His Excellency, the president, Alhaji Dr. Ahmad Tejan Kabbah.

Therefore, all well-meaning citizens and non-citizens should desist forthwith from working for and in the interests of the junta. All those in the health sector should be careful from becoming imposters.

Fellow Citizens and Friends,

Greetings from Sierra Leone. I wish to enjoin the recent speech by H.E. the President that the military junta has deliberately upset the timetable for the implementation of the Conakry Peace Plan as a pretence to hold on to power illegally. It is, therefore, my duty to accept the responsibility as Deputy Minister of Defence to bring this matter to a just and final conclusion by every available means at my disposal. In consultation with ECOWAS and at the behest of the President, the Civil Defence Forces (CDF) have outlined the following courses of action in order to install the constitutionally elected government of Sierra Leone and bring to and end the suffering of our people.

- The CDF has declared Saturday, 20 December, 1997 as Black Saturday (pardon the expression);
- As of that day, all roads and highways in Sierra Leone are to be blocked and any movement by junta forces anywhere in the country will be considered hostile and repelled by force of arms;
- Mechanized units of the CDF have taken positions in the East of the country and in locations within striking distance of Freetown, including the international airport at Lungi;
- To prevent the ensuing conflict from spilling into Liberia, ECOMOG troops have taken command of the strategic Mano Bridge;
- The CDF henceforth considers any and all persons or groups who have voluntarily assisted or collaborated in any way with the junta to be in active rebellion against the State.
- Ground, air and naval forces of ECOMOG will continue to monitor and repel any attempt by the junta to circumvent the international embargo in violation of ECOWAS sanctions and UN Resolution 1132.

I wish to thank all our friends and citizens who have placed their confidence in us to resolve this matter, for your prayers and goodwill. Such is the gravity of this matter that I have relocated myself, my staff and my family back inside Sierra Leone for the duration of this endeavour. We ask you to keep me and my men in your prayers and I look forward to reporting to you on regular basis.

Merry Christmas and God Bless you all.

Samuel Hinga Norman
Civil Defence High Command
23 December, 1997

SUMMARY OF CONVERSATIONS HELD WITH CIVIL DEFENCE FORCE LEADER SAM HINGA NORMAN, 10 JANUARY 1998

Submitted by Alfred SamForay

CAPTAIN NORMAN:

The High Command of the Civil Defence Force wishes to make known to all interested parties that Phase I of the Operation Black December has just concluded. This phase of the operation involved the occupation and/or domination of all major roads and highways in the country by the CDF. The main objectives of this phase are:

1. to deny freedom of movement by junta forces throughout the country;
2. to isolate junta brigades in Bo, Makeni and Kenema;
3. to deny access to the diamond mines to junta forces

As part of this phase, large quantities of cars and trucks some containing large quantities of ammunition as well as cash crops headed for the international market have been confiscated by the CDF from junta forces. These include a brand new Mercedes Benz sedan now sitting outside my office. As reported in the international press, these objectives have now been sufficiently met and we are now set to begin Phase II of Operation Black December the week of 12 January, 1998.

Phase II of the operation involves the encirclement of all major towns and cities throughout the country. The objective of this phase is to restrict junta forces to their primary domains and keep them from regrouping or transporting reinforcements from one area to another. We would hope that they will venture from the cities and highways and join us in the bush where we can settle this matter once and for all. Efforts are also being made to neutralize construction of airfields in the country by junta forces.

As soon as Phase II is in full force, the CDF intends to offer its last ultimatum to the junta to vacate the seat of government or be crushed. This will constitute the final phase, Phase III of our operation.

We urge all our citizens abroad to continue to be vigillant on the diplomatic and political front even as we are vigillant on the resistance front and to maintain the unity of all Sierra Leoneans abroad. As many of you are aware, ground operations in the North and the West are conducted jointly by Northern militia forces (Tamagboros, Donsas, Kappras) along with the Kamajors of the South and East.

We look forward to a speedy and final conclusion to this matter.

Best Wishes,

Sam Hinga Norman,
CDF High Command,
Sierra Leone.

22 March, 2000

CARITAS MAKENI

STOP THE USE OF CHILD SOLDIERS CAMPAIGN

DECLARATION OF COMMITMENT TO THE RELEASE OF CHILD COMBATANTS AND CHILD ABDUCTEES BY THE VARIOUS FACTIONS.

HAVING regard to the provision of the said Lome Peace Accord, the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, 1989 to which Sierra Leone is a State Party.

MINDFUL of the need to create conditions of stability where the children of Sierra Leone in particular can enjoy a secure environment and develop to their fullest potential.

BEARING IN MIND that to achieve the objective enunciated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989, children need to grow up in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding, RE-AFFIRMING our commitment to the Peace Process in Sierra Leone, respectively, to the intent that the country shall return to normalcy within the minimum of time to enable the implementation of development programs

HEREBY ADOPT THIS DECLARATION OF COMMITMENT this 22nd day of March 2000

ARTICLE 1

The parties hereto shall forthwith facilitate the disarmarrent of all child combatants that is to say, children under the age of eighteen years and bearing arms and shall take immediate steps to prevent the use of child combatants in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE 2

The parties hereto shall in tandem with the actions contemplated in Article 1 above, release, free and cause to be released, all children and other persons abducted both during the conflict and after the signing of the Lome Peace Accord.

ARTICLE 3

The parties shall in utmost good faith facilitate the return and/or handing over of child combatants and abductees to UNAMSIL, DDR Camps and other Humanitarian Agencies by May 15th, 2000 (the International Day of the Family), to enable them receive care and attention and ultimately to be reunited with their families and relatives.

ARTICLE 4

The parties in this regard undertake to co-operate with UNAMSIL, all agencies concerned with the welfare of children and the war affected and shall assiduously work towards the attainment of the goals enumerated in the Declaration.

DONE AT FREETOWN THIS 22ND DAY OF MARCH 2000.

CHIEF SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN DEPUTY MINISTER OF DEFENCE AND LEADER OF CDF

CHAIRMAN FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH
CHAIRMAN, STRATEGIC MINERAL RESOURCES COMMISSION AND LEADER OF RUFP

3/3/00

CHAIRMAN JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA
CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE FOR THE CONSOLIDATION OF PEACE

BRIG-GEN. MITIKISHE MAXWELL KHOBE
CHIEF OF DEFENCE STAFF,
SIERRA LEONE MILITARY ARMED FORCE

WITNESSES:

MD. JO ANNA VAN GAPEN
UNICEF REPRESENTATIVE
SIERRA LEONE

MR. JOSEPH RAHALL
CHAIRMAN,
NATIONAL FORUM FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

MINISTRY OF INFORMATION AND BROADCASTING

GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

WEDNESDAY MAY 24 2000

It has been brought to the attention of Government that there are some children who are either fighting alongside forces loyal to the Government of Sierra Leone, or are being allowed to remain in front line positions with the loyal forces. Government wishes to state that this practice is totally against Government policy which stipulates that 18 years is the minimum age for bearing arms in Sierra Leone.

It is the view of Government that children should not be involved in conflict, and it is the responsibility of the Government and all forces loyal to it to ensure that children are protected from the horrors of armed conflict. While it is acknowledged that some children may be voluntarily involved in fighting, and in some cases insist on being involved, even such children should not be allowed to carry arms or stay in areas of active conflict. They should be protected from themselves.

In the light of the above, the Acting Chief of Defence Staff has been instructed to ensure that all those below the age of 18 years currently involved in fighting on the side of Government should be immediately withdrawn, demobilized and handed over to competent institutions for rehabilitation. Henceforth, any commander who allows a child below 18 years to carry arms within his area of operations or allows children to remain in areas of active conflict will face severe disciplinary action.

REGIONAL RECONCILIATION COMMITTEE (RRC) SOUTHERN REGION

RRC Membership:
PC B.Hindowa, PC Parliamentary Representative, Bo District
Eric Jumu, Regional Programme Coordinator South, NCRRR
I.B. Kamara, Regional Coordinator South, NCDDR
Director of War and Operations CDF (SL)
Office of the Commissioner of Police Southern Region
Simon Arthy, Regional Programme Coordinator South, EC/SLRRP
Umaru Koneh, Regional Secretary, Associated Transport Workers Union
Chairman Petty Tracers Union South
Chairman Peace Building and Reconciliation Committee South
Representative, Sierra Leone Teachers Union South
Chairman Child Protection Committee South

From: RRC Southern Region

To: Honourable Albert Joe Demby, Chairman National Coordinating Committee CDF
CC: Honourable Hinga Norman, Deputy Minister of Defence
Honourable Charles Margai, Minister of Safety and Security
Honourable Foday Sesay, Resident Minister South
Chairman, Joint Coordinating Committee
Commander, Guinean UNAMSIL Detachment, Bo

Dated: 8 August 2000

REPORT ON UNACCEPTABLE BEHAVIOUR OF CDF IN THE SOUTHERN REGION, AUGUST 2000

1. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

In June 1999, it was noted that the relationship between the CDF and civil society had become excessively strained. CDF/Community Reconciliation Workshops were conducted in Bo and Kenema, and these helped stimulate a gradual improvement in this relationship. Through great efforts on the part of the CDF, as well as other parties, by April 2000 the situation had improved remarkably. General behaviour of the CDF was commendable, and public trust and confidence in the organisation was high. Check points were few and associated harassment was infrequent. CDF respect for chiefdom authorities and judicial and law enforcement bodies was returning. Indeed, when disarmament began in the Southern Region in April 2000 it was embraced by the CDF, and the kamajors' rate of disarmament was constrained only by the capacity of DDR staff. By the end of April, 600 kamajors had disarmed in Bo and Moyamba, and the remainder were eagerly awaiting their chance to disarm and re-~~continue~~ a normal civilian life style.

When in late April 2000 the RUF resumed hostilities and again threatened Freetown and other government held areas, the CDF understandably remobilised to face this threat. Check points inevitably sprung up again all over the Southern Region, and many of those who had disarmed were armed again. For this swift response to the RUF threat and the protection provided to the region, the Southern Region community were nothing but grateful.

However, in the short period since remobilisation, CDF behaviour has rapidly deteriorated. With alarming speed, kamajors have reverted to committing crimes against the general public and peaceful citizens. Most worryingly, crimes and unacceptable behaviour have been and continue to be committed by senior members of the CDF, as well as junior ranks, and all have gone unpunished. The actual and perceived involvement and condoning of unacceptable practices by senior CDF members, and the unwillingness or inability of the organisation to hold its members accountable for gross malpractice, has shaken public confidence in the CDF to the core.

On the roads of the region, drivers and traders are once again subjected to harassment and intimidation. Commandeering of vehicles has been rampant, and recovery of such vehicles has often been blocked by the apparent involvement of senior members of the CDF. Raids on towns and villages in the region and looting of properties by the CDF have occured. More shooting incidents (CDF/CDF or CDF/Community) have occurred in the region in the last 2 months than in the previous 2 years. Armed robbery in Bo Township is at an all time high, with the public convinced of CDF involvement. Two recent incidents involving a grenade blast and indisciplined firing by a night patrol has resulted in 6 deaths, and has provoked public anger and heightened fear of the CDF. Arbitrary arrests, beatings and detention of civilians, including chiefdom authorities, by the CDF have also lec to increased public bitterness, condemnation and fear.

Against this background, the CDF initiators have resumed their initiation activities, supposedly to 'top up' the power of kamajors ready for the war front. However, because of a lack of reference to chiefs and authorities to assist in screening procedures, many new members have been initiated, and children, criminals and law breakers have joined these numbers. In addition, while the charging of a fee for these 'topping up' ceremonies has brought millions of leones worth of revenue to the initiators, the repercussions in the communities has been an increase in taxation, and greater efforts at check points to extort money from the public to meet these 'initiation' payments.

The continued lack of transparency and accountability in the process of distribution of supplies from government to the CDF at chiefdom level has led to increasing frustration and anger within the CDF. Indeed, on several occasions in the last month, shooting incidents have occurred in the region over this issue.

With all this occurring, very little or no action appears to have been taken by the CDF High Command or CDF National Coordinating Committee to control the situation. This silent stance has merely served to actively encourage further crimes, and to widen the gap of community mistrust and lack of confidence in the CDF.

It saddens this committee to see the reputation of the CDF sinking to such a low ebb, and the region's population suffering so unnecessarily. There is no doubt that if it was not for the positive actions of the CDF in the Southern Region in the last few years, the region would not have enjeyed the peace and security which are now associated with the South. For this action in time of need, the CDF will always be held in the highest esteem. It is this Committee's fervent wish that today's CDF regain that position of trust and esteem. Sadly, this will not happen without firm leadership and the proper exercise of authority, responsibility and accountability within the organisation.

This report is submitted to bring to the attention of the CDF hierarchy and National Coordinating Committee incidents and patterns of behaviour that have now become common place in the Southern Region. The Regional Reconciliation Committee Southern Region respectfully requests an audience with the NCC to learn its response to this report, and what action is being or will be taken to improve the situation, and bring peace and security back to the region. At this meeting, the RRC will be happy to discuss what it too can do to contribute to this process. While this could include sensitisation workshops and meetings at grassroots level, it is nonetheless felt that such initiatives alone will be ineffective, unless strong action is first taken by the CDF leadership.

2. UNCHECKED BEHAVIOUR OF INITIATORS

General:

Since the resumption of hostilities by the RUF in May 2000, CDF initiators have once again begun initiation activities. The rational given has been that since kamajors have been in contact with normal civil society and have broken society rules since last being initiated, they need to have their powers 'topped up' before being ready for the war front. However, due to a lack of involvement of chiefdom authorities or even CDF commanders in the screening of those coming forward for 'topping up', new members have certainly been initiated. As happened in 1999, amongst these have been children and criminal elements. Having been initiated, they then 'attach' themselves to a battalion (a practice that even the Battalion Commanders are complaining about), join check points and start making money. This can clearly be seen today in all areas where initiation / 'topping up' activities are occuring, in the increasing number of check points and increasing numbers of kamajors at each check pount. In addition, the charging of a fee for the 'topping up' or initiation ceremony has led to increased taxation of communities, and encouraged and even forced kamajors to harass civilians to extort the money necessary for their ceremonies. At the same time, this has of course netted the initiators millions of leones.

The continued policy of initiators to demand the sole and total loyalty of their initiates, over and above any loyalty to commanders, leaders, or the CDF as an organisation, continues to undermine CDF organisational control of its members. Just as initiators are seen to be unaccountable and above the law, so too their initiates believe themselves to be, as their behaviour too often reflects. In such a situation, senior commanders are often left impotent to enforce discipline and hold individual kamajors accountable for their behaviour

Whilst this resumption of unchecked and uncontrolled initiation activity has caused general problems through the region, the behaviour and activities of one initiator in particular is causing widespread mayhem and fear. This individual is High Priest Kondowa, the head initiator of the CDF.

High Priest Kondowa:

In early 1999, High Priest Kondowa began initiating new kamajors in Bathurst, Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District. Initiation activities subsequently continued in Bumpe Town, Bumpe Chiefdom, Bo District. Initiates were charged up to Le50,000, and estimates of how many kamajors were initiated range from 5,000 to 10,000. In order to entice even those kamajors who had already been initiated, Kondowa claimed that this new initiation gave the individual even greater powers than normal initiated kamajors. These new kamajors were called 'Avondos', and they were identified by the wearing of an ear ring in one ear. Within the general public, this move was seen primarily as an economic, money-making exercise. There was no involvement of chiefdom or other authorities in the selection of new initiates, resulting in numerous children and criminal elements entering the society. The behaviour of the Avondos caused such disruption in the region that Kondowa was finally arrested in Bo by ECOMOG, and held until he made a public announcement that the Avondos' powers were actually no greater than those of other kamajors, and that they should be law abiding.

Since May of this year, Kondowa, like the other initiators, has again been conducting initiation activities. However, unlike the other initiators, Kondowa has again given his newly initiated or 'topped up' men a separate identity to other kamajors ('Banya Moli'), and claims that their powers are greater than that of other kamajors. The separate identity is reinforced by the wearing of red bandanas, or the tying of red material onto the barriers at check points. This active policy of creating a supposedly superior group of kamajors within the wider CDF has already led to tension and conflict. In addition, the behaviour of this new group towards the civilian population is causing fear and apprehension. Of interest, Banya Moli is Mende for 'Don't ask me'. This is in the context of 'Be silent', not, 'I don't know the answer'. In other words, 'I take your rice and palm oil and demand payment from you, but don't dare ask me why I'm doing it – stay silent'. This name in itself sends a strong message to the very civilian population these kamajors purport to protect.

Kondowa was conducting his initiation activities during May-July at Waterloo, Fakunya Chiefdom, Moyamba District. However, the behaviour of himself and his men led to a climate of 'fear and intimidation' (words used by the Chief at Waterloo in a letter of complaint to government) in the local population, and vehicle commandeering became rampant. The pattern of behaviour culminated in the 11 July ambush by Kondowa's men of the SLA purser travelling to Masiaka to pay the ex SLA. This incident almost led to armed hostilities between the ex SLA and CDF, and Kondowa was ordered to leave Waterloo. He returned to his home village of Balehun in Bumpe Chiefdom, Bo District. Of interest, the Banya Moli kamajor who initiated the ambush had reportedly been an SLA soldier up to a month before (quite clearly, therefore, newly initiated). He had previously worked with the SLA purser, and hence recognised him on the road, and guessed that he must be transferring pay up country.

In the last few days of July, Kondowa has again resumed initiation / topping up activities, this time at his home village of Balehun in Bumpe Chiefdom. Hundreds of kamajors each day are converging on the site, paying their money and becoming Banya Molis. Incidents of enforced lifts have increased, the increasing numbers of kamajors at the check points in the chiefdom are becoming increasingly aggressive and demanding, and the public is once again growing wary and afraid of travelling through Bumpe (which of course lies on the main route from Bo to Matru).

The civil populace of Bumpe Chiefdom of course have to live with Kondowa amongst them, and their situation is a particularly difficult one. During April and May 2000, a series of consultations were held in Bumpeh Chiefdom with a broad representation of stakeholders from the chiefdom. These were facilitated by a group which included senior CDF and civic society members and staff of the NGO Conciliation Resources. In public, the population was not prepared to openly complain about Kondowa, due to fear of the violent reaction they would receive from Kondowa and his group of heavily armed kamajor followers. The Regent Chief himself denied there is any problem at all. However, during private discussions, it rapidly became clear that major problems are faced. Indeed, even some chiefdom authorities were prepared to talk about this, but only on the condition of anonymity. In essence, the presence of Kondowa is seriously undermining any leadership in the chiefdom and seriously disrupting the lives of numerous people. Serious human rights abuses are reported to be taking place regularly, especially in terms of punishment meted out by Kondowa on people who cross his path or he perceives as enemies. He fines people as if he were a chief, and they are intimidated into paying by the gang of heavily thugs who follow him. Some people are even reportedly leaving the area because they cannot live in peace around him. But although Kondowa continues to be a serious scourge on their society, people are simply too afraid to handle him – especially the very chiefdom authorities who should handle him.

A concrete example of Kondowa's excesses is the incident of 21 July 2000 at Gbangbatok, Banta Chiefdom, Moyamba District. On 20 July 2000, the Chiefdom Security Officer (CSO) at Ggangbatok saw a well known looted truck at the local trade fair. In response to strict orders sent down from the Deputy Minister of Defence and Director of War and Operations to all commanders to seize and return all looted vehicles, the CSO apprehended the truck. The truck was full of Kondowa's men, the Banya Molis, who demanded that as it was Kondowa's truck it should not be taken. As the truck was a looted one, the CSO confiscated it regardless.

When Kondowa heard that evening that the truck had been taken, he travelled with several hundred of his men to 'teach a lesson' to the people of Gbangbatok. At 0530 on 21 July, he and his men entered Gbangbatok fully armed. Shots were fired, and seven commercial shops were fully looted (one shop alone is reported to have had Le9m cash taken). The CSO and everyone found in his compound (including the local societal head, Baba Musa) were beaten mercilessly. When all this mayhem had been completed, Kondowa is reported to have called the Regent Chief and community elders and instructed that they and the population should now pay him for his troubles ('Pour Libation', with Kondowa taking away the 'offerings'). A large quantity of palm oil, rice and even goats are reported to have been taken as 'payment'.

Such behaviour is outrageous. That it is conducted by the senior initiator of the pro government CDF, an individual who receives a monthly supply of around 200 bags of rice and pay directly from government, makes it all the more appalling. How the CDF hierarchy and Government can allow such behaviour to continue in the Southern Region without any course of action being taken against the guilty party is worrying to the extreme. Equally worrying to the general public is the rate at which Kondowa is initiating these new Banya Molis. They are now found throughout Moyamba and Bonthe districts, in large areas of Bo district, and even in Pujehun District. Because of the impunity with which their Initiator, Kondowa, is seen to be able to conduct excesses, their behaviour reflects their belief that they too are immune from any disciplinary measures (see 'Vehicle Commandeering' below for further examples of Kondowa's behaviour). Their increasing numbers, their fanatical loyalty to Kondowa and the appalling track record of Kondowa himself have all combined to raise great concern and fear amongst the region's public.

Reference is made to the following commitments made by the Deputy Minister of Defence on behalf of the CDF last year:

CDF members who break the law of Sierra Leone and CDF Regulations will face appropriate disciplinary procedures.

In Bo, before the signing of the Lome Peace Accord, Chief Norman said the following:

Initiators get their powers free from God. They must therefore pass them on freely. Therefore no fees should be paid for initiation.

Formal screening procedures (for new initiates) by chiefs should be reinstated.

Cease initiation of children into the CDF.

In Kenema, after the signing of the peace process, Chief Norman said the following:

All initiation must stop.

The RRC requests confirmation that the CDF Hierarchy and NCC stand by these commitments. If they do, the RRC would like to know how they will be enforced with reference to the above cases.

3. VEHICLE COMMANDEERING

The incidence of vehicle commandeering in the Southern Region has increased markedly in the last 2 months. Both commercial and NGO vehicles have been affected. Most have been returned: for example, the CRS Land Cruiser commandeered in early July in Bumpe Chiefdom by kamajors who used it to travel to Waterloo to be re-initiated by Kondowa; the UAC Christian Brothers Land Cruiser commandeered in Moyamba town in June; the MCSL truck commandeered by Kondowa's Banya Moli kamajors at Waterloo in June. But of note, the 4 vehicles belonging to the NGO Lutherian World Services (LWS) commandeered by the Pujehun District Initiator Sualiho Sherif in Sorogbema Chiefdom in mid July are still to be returned.

For commercial drivers, the seizure and holding of commercial trucks in Bo North remains a serious problem, and the Drivers Union have several times had to consider halting all commercial traffic into the area.

- In early July, a commercial truck was seized in Mandu by the initiator Mame Munda when it was discovered it was on route to RUF areas to the north to sell fuel and food.
- A small time later, High Priest Kondowa sent men to take the truck, saying they had orders to do so from Chief Norman. The truck and its contents were taken. Soon after, the truck was repainted and seen undertaking commercial activities on behalf of High Priest Kondowei. Following complaints, the PRO, Charles Moiwo, reportedly sent a delegation to retrieve the truck, with a letter of instruction from both Chief Norman and the Vice President. The delegation and letter were reportedly ignored by Kondowa, who is still using the truck for his own purposes.

- In early July, a truck was seized at Mongeri for attempting to conduct illegal trading activity with the RUF (large consignment of stores being transported northwards). Despite attempts to retrieve the truck by 19 Battalion Commander, the CDF Transport Officer, and the Director of War's Office, the truck is still being held by Hassan Sherif, the local battalion commander. His excuse is that 'Chief Moiwo' (Charles Moiwo, CDF PRO) has given the truck to him, and that he will therefore not release it.

- On about 24 July, another commercial truck was seized in Bo North (AAK 417). It was an ex Swiss military truck, painted blue with yellow stripes, and being an ex military truck appears to be the only reason it was commandeered. It was held in Gbangba village, 4 miles from Damballa, by one commander Francis Yaja. Again, for some time attempts to retrieve this truck were fruitless, with the commander stating that it had now been assigned to him by 'higher authorities'. It was eventually released at the end of July, but of interest, within 24 hours it was involved in trading of goods to RUF territory, with senior CDF involvement and approval (see section 5 below, Trade of Food and Fuel from Bo to RUF Areas).

In all the above cases, the trucks are either being held by senior members of the CDF hierarchy (High Priest Initiator), or the consent of senior members of the CDF hierarchy is being given as the reason for not returning them. Whilst it is agreed that vehicles and individuals involved in trade with RUF must be arrested, it is clear that the trucks should be handed over to the police, not held by individual commanders. The perceived or actual support and involvement of members of the CDF hierarchy and senior initiator merely sends the message to the CDF as a whole that commandeering is acceptable, and that those involved will not be punished.

Reference is made to the following commitments made by the Deputy Minister of Defence on behalf of the CDF last year:

Vehicle Commandeering of any kind is unacceptable (.....except in a life and death emergency situation...) ... ... and guilty members would be punished.

CDF members who break the law of Sierra Leone and CDF Regulations will face appropriate disciplinary procedures.

The RRC requests confirmation that the CDF hierarchy and NCC stand by these commitments. If they do, the RRC would like to know how they will be enforced with reference to the above cases.

4. DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT RICE TO CDF

Lack of control and accountability of rice distribution from government to CDF continues to cause serious problems. Contrary to the commitment made by the CDF last year, chiefdom authorities are still not informed of what is supposedly being delivered to kamajors at chiefdom level, and when. As a result, kamajors at chiefdom level all over the region are disgruntled and angry, believing they are being cheated of their just allocation. Anger is directly at both the CDF hierarchy and government as a whole. In fact, the belief that their own commanders are misappropriating supplies with impunity leads many to ask what is wrong with them harassing and appropriating community supplies at a local level.

Of particular concern is the fact that this anger and disgruntlement has recently led to several incidents of shooting:

In mid July in Tihun, Sogbini Chiefdom, Bonthe District, kamajors believed their commander was misappropriating rice meant for them, and tied and held him for some time. On his release, he left, collected reinforcements and returned to the town. Shooting took place, during which a pregnant woman was reportedly shot in the leg.

In late July, kamajors demanding their food supply attacked the house of the Bonthe District Administrator in Bonthe Town. Shots were fired, but there are no reports of casualties.

Reference is made to the following commitments made by the Deputy Minister of Defence on behalf of the CDF last year:

CDF will ensure logistical distribution is monitored, transparent and accounted for to Chiefdom Authorities.

The RRC requests confirmation that the CDF hierarchy and NCC stand by this commitment. If they do, the RRC would like to know what has been or will be done to enforce it.

5. TRADE OF FUEL AND FOOD ITEMS FOM BO TO RUF HELD AREAS

In July, public concern was raised about the trade in fuel and food items passing from Bo, through Bo North and Gorama Mende, to RUF held areas around Makeni and Kono. Trading with the RUF is a lucrative business. In northern Goram Mende, fuel can be sold at Le100,000 for a 5 gallon container, a bag of rice fetches Le70,000, and a bag of flour Le150,000. Trade is normally conducted at the village of Mondema, with trucks coming from Kono and Makeni to collect the goods and transport them back to RUF forces.

In particular, concern was raised by both the public and kamajors on the ground that this activity was only being allowed to happen because drivers were receiving written security clearance from senior CDF members (Bo District Administrator and Transport Officer were reported to be signing these clearances). At the RRC meeting of 7 July 2000, the CDF answered these concerns by saying that Chief Norman had recently decreed that this trade should cease. However, even after this order, security clearances are reported to have been issued by senior CDF members from Bo District Administration and some trucks were still plying the route. Two trucks guilty of this offence were arrested in mid July, and an investigation was reportedly launched into the involvement of senior CDF members in issuing security clearances. While it was reported that the situation was thereafter brought under control, it was clear that no action had been taken against those involved in the trade.

In the last few days of July, the initiators Kamoh Lahai Bangura, Lahai Massaquoi and Mohamed Mansaray began this trade again, through Gorama Mende. Not only did they sell several truck loads of fuel and food to the RUF, but in addition, because their own trucks broke down on the way, they commandeered several trucks locally and forced the drivers to carry the loads.

All such activity described above clearly constitutes collaboration with the enemy. Most armies would shoot anyone found guilty of this, or at the least lock them up until the end of the war. The fact that senior members of the CDF have been, and continue to be, involved in this activity, and that no action is taken against them, totally undermines the credibility of the CDF in the public's eye.

The RRC therefore requests confirmation of what action the CDF hierarchy and NCC is taking to stop this activity, and to hold those guilty of supporting it accountable.

6. INSECURITY IN BO TOWNSHIP

In the last few months, the incidence of night robberies occurring in Bo town have rocketed. Few nights have gone by without reports of either actual robberies occurring, or of doors and windows being knocked at in the early hours and orders being given to open up for 'night patrol inspection'. CDF and Police are the only ones patrolling the town at night, as UNAMSIL has declined from conducting such activities. Inevitably, therefore, public suspicion of who is involved in this widespread practice of armed robberies has fallen on the CDF.

Public confidence in the CDF's ability to control the situation effectively has been further deteriorated by the tragic events of late July which led to the death of 6 individuals and 13 injured. The grenade explosion at the Bo Town Hall on 16 July caused when Bo kamajors were preventing the entry into the hall of another armed kamajor (apparently recently returned to Bo from Freetown) was a terrible tragedy, and highlighted the dangers of untrained young men being free to roam within the township with weapons. The second incident on 22 July which led to the death of the MSF Belgium Bo Administrator is less clear cut. A CDF night patrol supposedly came across him when he was urinating in the early hours outside his house, and opened fire. Exactly when they opened fire, and whether it was at him or into the air is unclear. What is clear is that in trying to get into a house to take refuge he smashed a window and cut himself, and that when he was found in the morning and eventually taken to hospital, he died soon after from blood loss. The rumours of foul play have been further stoked by the fact that doctors at the hospital refused to conduct an autopsy (reportedly because of intimidation), and that on the second night after the body was buried, a group of men were caught trying to dig up the body (they escaped capture).

Regardless of the exact circumstances of the case of the MSF(B) administrator, the combined effect of numerous robberies and the deaths of Bo citizens has produced great anger, frustration and fear amongst the town's population.

7. INEFFECTIVENESS OF UNAMSIL

One of the contributing factors to the insecurity in Bo Township is perceived by the public to be the ineffectiveness of the Guinean UNAMSIL contingent stationed at Bo. Last year's Bo ECOMOG contingent conducted visible day and night patrols, as do UNAMSIL contingents in other major towns and cities (eg. Kenema and Freetown). A strong and active presence from a recognised and capable external security organisation has been shown to deter criminal activity, and to subdue some of the problems which occur within the CDF or between the CDF and the civil community. Unfortunately, the current Guinean UNAMSIL contingent appears far from active. Indeed, the combination of their inactivity and the increased availability of UN food items and supplies now for sale in Bo markets has led them to be viewed by the public as at best ineffectual, and more commonly with disdain. Following concerted pressure from government administration and civil society, the contingent commander agreed at the end of July to start patrolling.

The RRC will carefully monitor the regularity and effectiveness of the UNAMSIL contingent's patrol activities, and hope that it will at last begin to make some contribution to the security of Bo Township and the environs. If it proves unable to do so, the committee will not hesitate to ask that it be reinforced or replaced by troops able to achieve these objectives.

8. HARRASSMENT AT CHECK POINTS

As part of the CDF response to the renewed RUF threat in May, numerous armed check points have sprung up all over the region. While it is accepted that the security threat must be met accordingly, the following points are made:

- Harassment, intimidation and extortion of money is again common at check points. This is particularly so for traders and commercial drivers.

- Numbers and locations of check points do not appear to reflect the security threat. Rather, in many areas kamajors appear to have restarted check point activity purely for commercial reasons.

- Vehicles are rarely checked properly at check points. Rather, money is collected and the vehicle moves on. If money is not handed over, the vehicle and occupants are forced to park and are held until such time as the occupants change their mind.

Reference is made to the following commitments made by the Deputy Minister of Defence on behalf of the CDF last year:

CDF will educate personnel at check points on duties and responsibilities.

CDF will sensitise members that money given by drivers and traders at check points etc is a voluntary contribution and must not be coerced.

The RRC requests that the CDF hierarchy increases its efforts to instil disciplined and reasonable behaviour at check points, and reviews the question of the number and location of check points. Check points which contribute to the security of the Southern Region are actively encouraged and supported; those which are there purely to extort money from drivers are not.

9. CDF / CHIEFDOM AUTHORITIES RELATIONSHIP

Sometime in June, CDF Battalion Commander Joe Timidale arrested the Paramount Chief and Chiefdom Speaker of Lugbu Chiefdom, Bo District, and took them to Koribundo where they were locked up. The intervention of the SDO and CDF District Administrator secured their release within 24 hours, but no action was taken against the commander beyond asking him to apologise.

The public and the region's chiefs were horrified that such an act could go unpunished. Merely asking the guilty party to apologise sends entirely the wrong message to all kamajors, indicating that kamajors are above all laws and codes of customary behaviour.

Reference is made to the following commitments made by the Deputy Minister of Defence on behalf of the CDF last year:

Every member of the CDF must respect Chiefdom and government authorities
CDF members who break the law of Sierra Leone and CDF Regulations will face appropriate disciplinary procedures.

The RRC requests confirmation that the CDF hierarchy and NCC stand by these commitments. If they do, the RRC would like to know how they will be enforced with reference to the above case.

SUMMARY

In summary, the RRC once again respectfully asks the NCC and CDF hierarchy to examine the incidents and patterns of behaviour detailed above, and to determine what they will do to rectify this unacceptable situation. While it is recognised that the control of a non professional civil militia is no easy task, the fact remains that the responsibility for the behaviour and actions of the CDF lies squarely with the NCC and CDF hierarchy. We and the public therefore look to this leadership to use its authority decisively to enforce discipline and accountability within the CDF, so that the organisation's reputation may be restored and once again the region's civil community and the CDF can live together harmoniously.

The RRC respectfully requests an audience with the NCC, either in Freetown or Bo, to learn its response to this report. At this meeting, the RRC would like to discuss what it too can do to contribute to the improvement of the current situation. But as stated above, while this could include sensitisation workshops and meetings at grassroots level, it is nonetheless felt that such initiatives alone will be ineffective, unless strong action is first taken by the CDF leadership.

If the meeting is to be held in Freetown, it is asked that at least a week's notice may be given. Please contact the Committee through NCRRR South.

Simon Arthy
For and on behalf of the Regional Reconciliation Committee Southern Region.

Communiqué

MEETING OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT, DEMOBILISATION AND REINTEGRATION Government of Sierra Leone - RUF -- UNAMSIL

15 May 2001

1. In furtherance of the agreement reached in Abuja on 2 May 2001, a meeting of the Joint Committee on Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (DDR) comprising UNAMSIL, the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF was held at UNAMSIL Headquarters in Freetown on 15 May 2001.

2. The meeting was chaired by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Oluyemi Adeniji. The delegation of the Government of Sierra Leone was headed by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, Mr. Solomon Berewa. The Chairman of the Political and Peace Council, Mr Omrie Golley, led the RUF delegation. Representatives of the CDF attended as part of the Government delegation. A full list of the delegations is attached as Annex 1.

3. In view of the urgency of addressing the continuing fighting between the CDF and the RUF in the Eastern Province, the leaders of the CDF and the RUF issued a joint communiqué undertaking to ensure the immediate cessation of all hostilities and instructing their combatants forthwith to desist from any hostile activity. UNAMSIL was requested to ensure the observance of this undertaking as well as the unimpeded movement of persons, goods and services throughout the country.

4. The meeting examined the key issues relating to the DDR programme, including timetable and modalities for disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of ex-combatants, responsibilities of the parties, monitoring mechanisms, sensitisation of combatants and communities.

Disarmament:

5. The two parties agreed on the following:

a. the immediate recommencement of the DDR programme with a fixed timetable;
b. implement the simultaneous disarmament of CDF and RUF combatants;
c. to release to UNAMSIL all child combatants and abductees, particularly young women and children, starting on 25 May 2001;
d. that the CDF and the RUF shall disclose the number of combatants and weapons by location to UNAMSIL. Global figures and types of weapons in the possession of RUF and CDF were communicated to the meeting by them;
e. criteria established by the NCDDR for the eligibility of ex-combatants into the DDR programme;
f. to consider, as a matter of urgency, the establishment of DDR camps in Lunsar, Makeni, Kamakwie, Masingbi, Koidu, Kailahun, Alikalia, Pujehun and Bonthe, in addition to the existing facilities in Port Loko, Bo, Moyamba, Kenema and Daru;
g. an encampment period of maximum four weeks for combatants during which they will undergo orientation and counselling programmes;

h. the principle of a cordon and search after the established period for disarmament;
i. include the RUF and the CDF in the planning and implementation of the entire DDR programme.

6. In connection with disarmament in Kambia and Port Loko districts, the two parties agreed on the following:

a. disarmament process for both RUF and CDF in Kambia district to begin on 18 May 2001 and to be completed not later than 28 May 2001;
b. disarmament in Port Loko will also start during this period;
c. Port Loko DDR camp will be used as a common facility for demobilisation of RUF and CDF ex-combatants disarmed in Kambia district;
d. NCDDR will immediately begin the preparation of a DDR camp in Lunsar;
e. the RUF provisionally estimates 1000 combatants in Kambia; the precise figure will be confirmed by Friday 18 May 2001. The CDF estimates 350 combatants in the Kambia district plus 735 in Port Loko district.

7. By the end of May 2001, recommendations will be made by the joint Technical Committee on the next locations by district for the country-wide implementation of the DDR.

Reintegration

8. In addition to the existing integration programme of NCDDR, the two parties:

a. proposed the establishment of a Trust Fund, with the assistance of the international community, to support the reintegration of ex-combatants. The modalities for the Fund will be worked out by the two parties and interested partners through a working group;
b. agreed to open access to all identifiable Government positions, including SLA and SLP, on the basis of existing criteria for recruitment shared during the meeting;
c. agreed that special attention be accorded to dependants of ex-combatants.

Monitoring mechanisms

9. The two parties agreed to:

a. use the Ad-hoc DDR Committee, comprising the Government of Sierra Leone, RUF, UNAMSIL and the CCP to monitor the overall implementation of the DDR programme;
b. use the existing NCDDR structure, with the participation of the RUF and the CDF, to review technical issues relating to the DDR programme;
c. include RUF and CDF representatives in NCDDR regional structures to monitor implementation of the programme in the various regions.

Sensitization

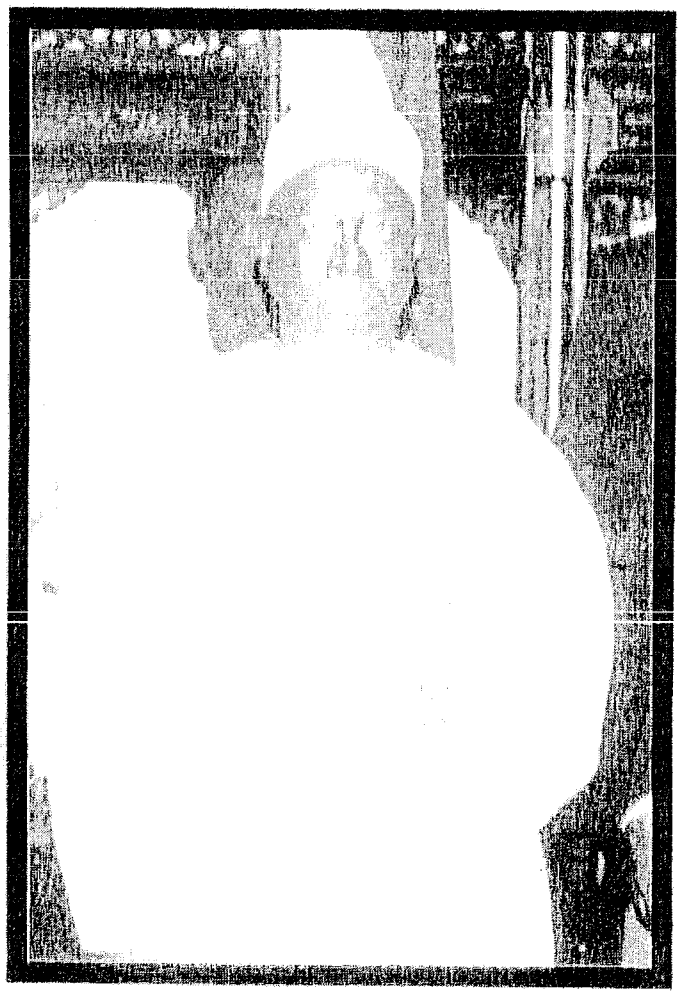
10. The two parties agreed:

a. to form joint sensitization teams to visit various parts of the country to educate the combatants about the present decisions;
b. to arrange visits of joint teams to witness disarmament processes, starting in Kambia and Port Loko districts on 18 May 2001;

c. to promote country-wide community reconciliation processes.

Other matters

11. The RUF requested the release of its members currently detained by the Government as a confidence-building measure. It also enquired about the alleged deaths of some of them under custody. The Government assured the meeting that no RUF detainee had died in custody and reaffirmed its commitment to consider the release of detainees especially in the light of progress being made in the peace process.



12. In connection with the RUF's request for Government assistance in the provision of public buildings in Freetown and in the provinces for party offices, the Government invited the RUF to identify such premises and to bring the information to Government's attention.

Freetown, 15 May 2001.

CDF Calendar 2001

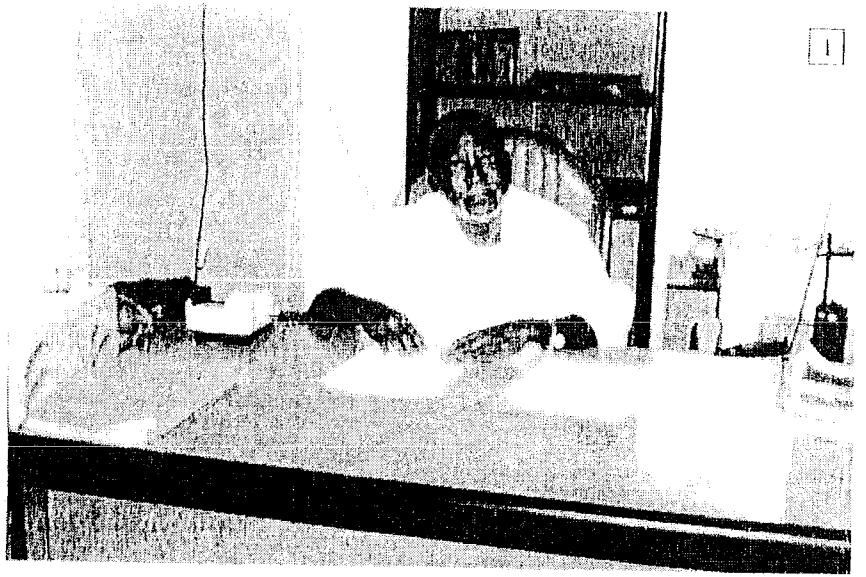
H.E. Alhaji Ahmad Tejan Kabbah
President and Commander in Chief
Republic of Sierra Leone



H.E. Joe Demby
Vice President
Republic of Sierra Leone

AR600000

24.9.1

Hon. Samuel Hinga Norman, Deputy Minister of Defence and Regent Chief of Jaiama-Bongor Cheifdom, Bo District, is the founder of the Kamajors and the National Coordinator of the Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces. Chief Norman was born in Valunia Chiefdom, Bo District in the Southern Province of Sierra Leone and educated at various colonial military schools in Sierra Leone. He is a graduate of the Royal Military Academy at Mons in the United Kingdom and a retired captain from the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces.

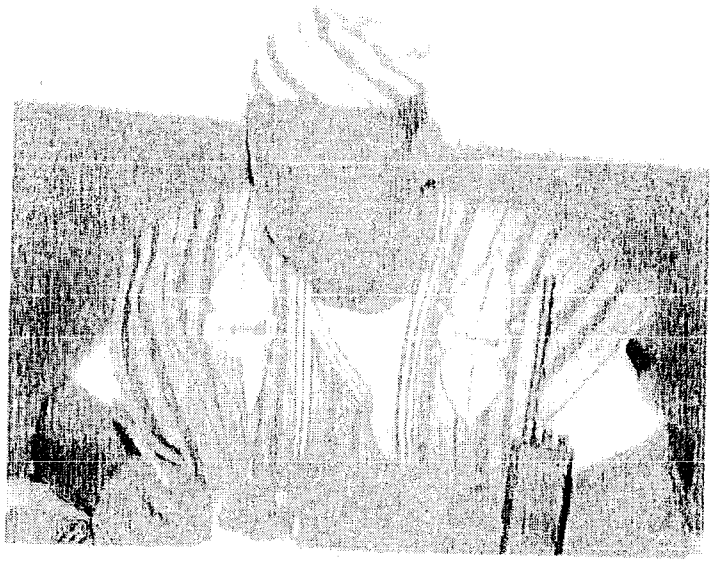
1. Chief Norman, in his State Avenue Office, Ministry of Defence

2. Norman at Passout for CDF trainees. Behind him is Allieu Kondowa, Chief initiator and other initiators

0000536

January 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
	1	2	3	4	5	6
7	8	9	10	11	12	13
14	15	16	17	18	19	20
21	22	23	24	25	26	27
28	29	30	31



Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

Copyright
SLCDF Photo Album 2000

2193

Moinina Fofanah
National Director of War

As far as the Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces are concerned, they don't say war unless he says they say war. Moinina Fofanah (above left), popularly known within the CDF as Director, is the man who overseas the mobilization and deployment of the volunteer fighters of the CDF. When his men are not engaged in combat against the rebels, Fofanah refers to himself as Director of Peace.

The Late Prof. Alpha Lavalie

One of the earliest victims of rebel atrocities includes Prof. Alpha Mohamed Lavalie (shown right), historian and founder of the Hindo-Hindo movement, a predecessor to the Kamajor movement of the CDF. He was assassinated February 8, 1994. To him this first edition of the CDF calendar is solemnly dedicated. "Greater love has no man ...than to lay down his life for his friends." (Jesus of Nazareth)

February 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
				1	2	3
4	5	6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15	16	17
18	19	20	21	22	23	24
25	26	27	28

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

Copyright
SLAM Publication 2000

2495.

Hon. Alieu Kondowa

1. Alieu Kondowa, the Chief Initiator of the Kamajors and allied militia forces, is the embodiment of the legend and mystery of the Kamajors. He is decked in his ceremonial attire above as High Priest.

2. Initiators and Priests of the Kamajors in their ceremonial uniforms.

3. Kamoh Lahai Bangura (center) is a high priest of the Kamajors. With him are initiators Kamoh Alie Sesay (L) and Mohamed Mansaray (R).

24016

March 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
				1	2	3
4	5	6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15	16	17
18	19	20	21	22	23	24
25	26	27	28	29	30	31

EXHIBIT SG-6

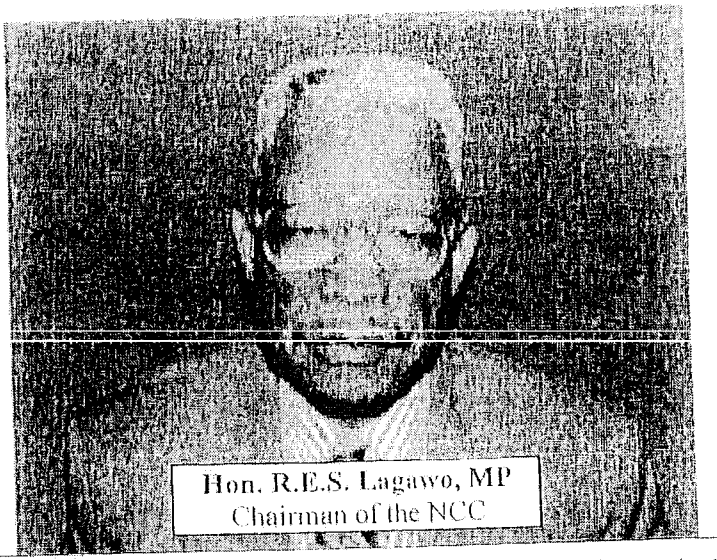
Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SEAM PUBLICATIONS 2000



Col. M. S. Dumbuya (center), Commander of the Tamaboro wing of the Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces. Dumbuya, an undisputable leader of the Northern resistance to the AFRC/ RUF rebels, is believed to be one of the leading experts on bush warfare. He is show here with his Commanders, Initiators and Directors.

CDF personnel at the Monghere Training Center, Valunia Chiefdom, Bo District. Battalion Commander, Alhaji Sherriff, third from right. "Mua mu luma sokee ti gaula, ke mu lumai e teh teh." Mende Proverb

Hon. R.E.S. Lagawo, MP
Chairman of the NCC

He is believed to be the oldest member of the oldest political party in West Africa - the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP). Undeniably, he is the glue that has held the presidency and the nation together during these uncertain days of our national quagmire. "Hon. Richard Lagawo is a man whose support for the CDF is unlimited," says the CDF. He is the Chairman of the National Coordination Committee for the Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces.

TRC 000094

April 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
1	2	3	4	5	6	7
8	9	10	11	12	13	14
15	16	17	18	19	20	21
22	23	24	25	26	27	28
29	30

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SEANY PUBLICATION 2000

250

00000846

When they are not in combat defending their towns and villages against the rebels, members of the CDF are engaged in various restoration and security duties around the country. Above left, Security Officer, Bobor Sandy on guard at a market place. Above right, Field Commanders of the Gbetbu, Tamaboro and Kapra Militia in battle uniform. Bottom right, the strategic Mabang Bridge between Moyamba and Freetown which was captured and destroyed by the rebels, has now been reconstructed by UNAMSIL and the CDF.

May 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
		1	2	3	4	5
6	7	8	9	10	11	12
13	14	15	16	17	18	19
20	21	22	23	24	25	26
27	28	29	30	31

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SLAM PUBLICATIONS 2000

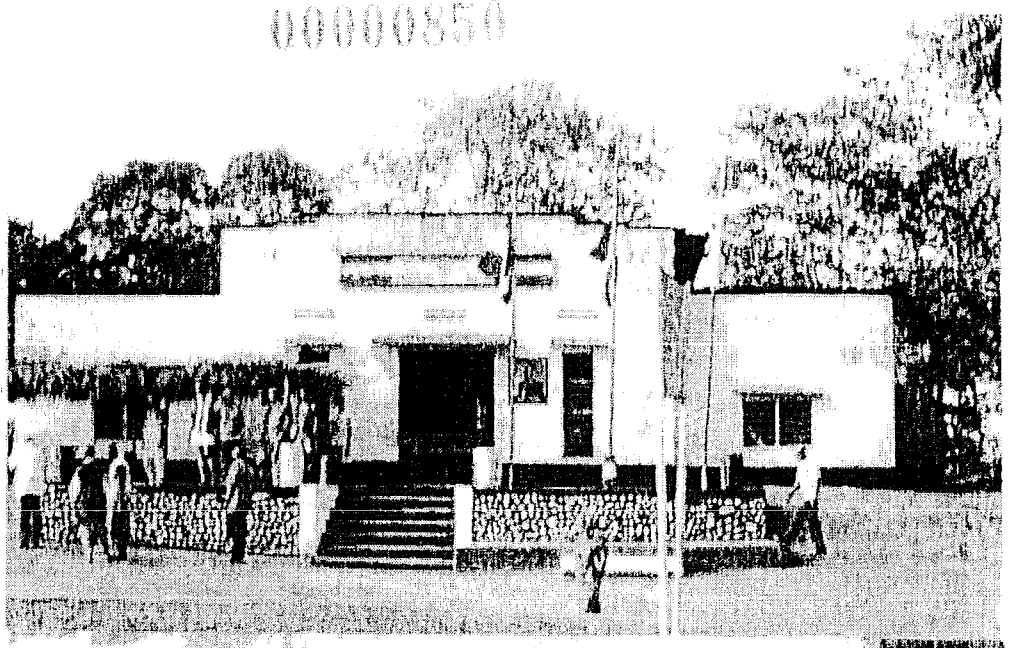
1. Above left, CDF personnel await their allowance following disarmament at their base at Brookfields Hotel in Freetown.
2. Above right, Director of Welfare, M.K. Harding, must have the most unenviable job in the country.
3. Caring for the sick and wounded, is the responsibility of the Medical Director of the CDF, Mustapha Vonu, who operates mostly from make-shift clinics and unfurnished wards around the country. To his left, are wounded fighters of the CDF.

SECURITY

June 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
					1	2
3	4	5	6	7	8	9
10	11	12	13	14	15	16
17	18	19	20	21	22	23
24	25	26	27	28	29	30

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces



Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

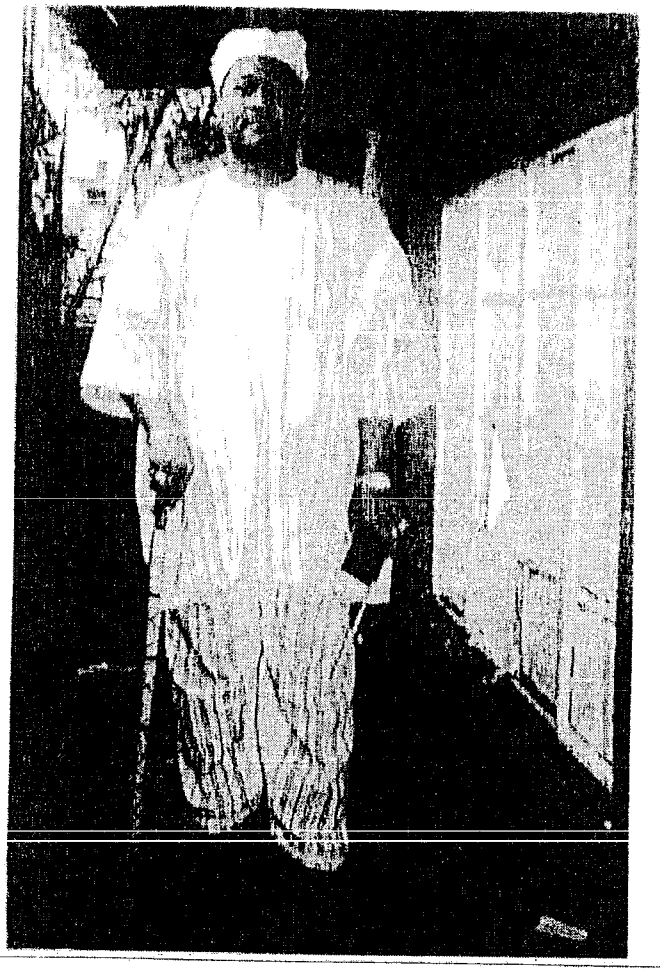
COPYRIGHT
SLAM PUBLICATIONS 2000

2503

Keeping a close eye on our boarders with Liberia, is the job of Pujehun District Director, Eddie Massalay. He is the man often in hot water when his judgements are questioned by government leaders in Freetown and Monrovia. Above right, is the Pujehun District CDF Headquarters. Below right, Field Commanders of Pujehun District. They include the ever vigilant, Boarder Battalion of the CDF.

July 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
1	2	3	4	5	6	7
8	9	10	11	12	13	14
15	16	17	18	19	20	21
22	23	24	25	26	27	28
29	30	31



SLAM

Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces

Sierra Leone Action Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SLAM PUBLICATION 2000

LEFT: OBHS Field Commander, Charles I.I.S. Harding, oversees security personnel in Freetown and the Western Area.

RIGHT: OBHS leaders

Following the unparalleled success of the Kamajors and allied forces in the Provinces, Western Area Hunting Societies organized themselves into the Organized Body of Hunting Societies (OBHS). They are the vanguards of the city of Freetown and the surrounding Mountain Area. The OBHS includes the Ojeh, Ogugu and the Hunting Society, a federation of former traditional cultural organizations in the Western Area.

CSO0000

August 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
			1	2	3	4
5	6	7	8	9	10	11
12	13	14	15	16	17	18
19	20	21	22	23	24	25
26	27	28	29	30	31

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

Copyright
SLAM Publication 2000

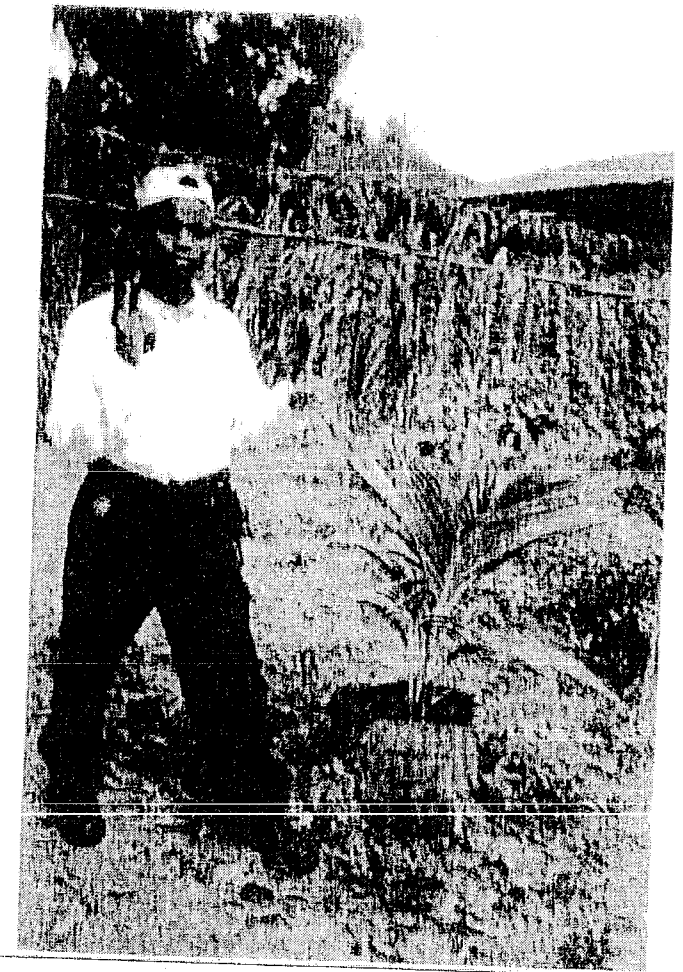
Basic combat training is at the heart of the CDF success against the rebels of the Revolutionary United Front and AFRC allies. Above left, CDF recruits undergo weapons training. Below right, recruits undergo obstacle training. Above right, National Director of Training and retired Sierra Leone army officer, Mohamed B. Jawara, oversees training activities for the CDF.

TRC 000004

September 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
						1
2	3	4	5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12	13	14	15
16	17	18	19	20	21	22
23	24	25	26	27	28	29
30

Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces



Sierra Leone Action Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT SLAM PUBLICATIONS 2000

2509

00000856

Knowing what the enemy is going to do before he does it, is the art of military intelligence. Top left, Chief Security Officer, Alie Katta, takes no chances. He and his staff are on duty twenty-four hours a day throughout the country. Top right, Director of Communications, Joseph Massalay, keeps track of rebel and CDF movements throughout the country. Bottom right, Director of Inteligence, Augustin Gombi, tries to stay ahead of enemy activities from his office at CDF High Command.

October 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
	1	2	3	4	5	6
7	8	9	10	11	12	13
14	15	16	17	18	19	20
21	22	23	24	25	26	27
28	29	30	31

Sierra Leone Civil Defence Forces

Sierra Leone Action Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

Copyright SEAM Publications 2000

00000858

TRANSPORTATION: Moving CDF personnel from one end of the country to the other is the responsibility of CDF Director of Transportation, Ahmed Koroma. Above right, CDF personnel are on ferry from Tagrin to Freetown during the January rebel incursion into Freetown. DDR: Under the United Nations sponsored Disarmament, Demobilization & Reintegration program known as the DDR, former combatants who turn in their weapons to the UN peace keeping forces, receive monetary compensation and are reintegrated into civil society. Above left, CDF liaison on the DDR program, and administrative assistant to the National Coordinator, Baimba Zorokon

25.12

November 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
				1	2	3
4	5	6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15	16	17
18	19	20	21	22	23	24
25	26	27	28	29	30

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

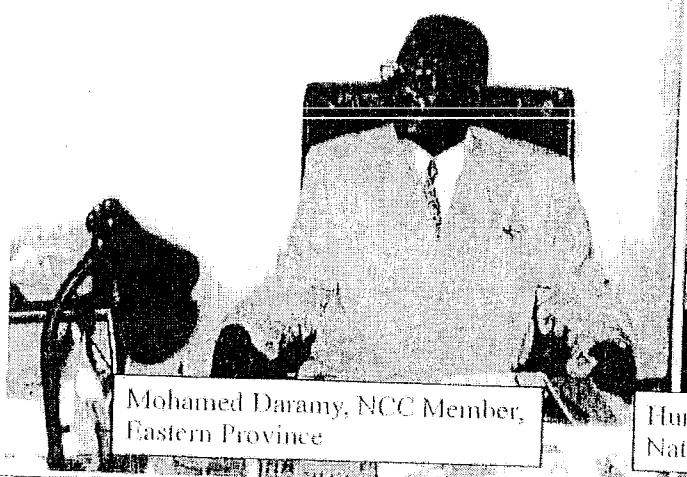
Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SLAM PUBLICATIONS 2000

Charles Moiwo, NCC Member and National Public Relations Officer, CDF.

Mustaph Lumeh, NCC Member and Director of Logistics, CDF.



Mabel Rollings, NCC Member and Secretary to the Secretariat.

Sahr Matturi, Secretary General, NCC Secretariat.

0000867

Above Left to Right: Moiwo, Lumeh, Rollings and Matturi

Mohamed Daramy, NCC Member, Eastern Province

Humphrey Swaray, NCC Member, National Security Advisory

Hon. A.O. Bangura, NCC Member, Northern Province, Chairman of the Defence Council

The National Coordinating Committee of the Sierra Leone Civil Defence Force is the government's oversight committee for the CDF. Its membership includes representatives of government, the CDF and other civic leaders. The [illegible] Coordinator of the CDF, Chief Hinga [illegible]. The four members of the NCC Secretariat above are the only [illegible]

December 2001

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat
						1
2	3	4	5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12	13	14	15
16	17	18	19	20	21	22
23	24	25	26	27	28	29
30	31

EB00008

Sierra Leone
Civil Defence
Forces

Sierra Leone Action
Movement
P.O. Box 832125
Stone Mountain, GA 30083
USA

We Fight For Democracy

COPYRIGHT
SLAM PUBLICATION 1998

2515

2516

00000362

2517

Speech by the President of Sierra Leone
His Excellency, Alhaji Dr. Ahmad Tejan Kabbah at the ceremony marking the conclusion of disarmament and the destruction of weapons
Lungi, 18 January 2002

Never before since March 1996 when I took the solemn oath of office to lead this nation have I been so moved by a public ceremony as the one we are witnessing here today. It is indeed an honour and a great privilege for me to stand here and serve as host for this awe-inspiring declaration of peace in Sierra Leone.

Not too long ago, the flames of war were mercilessly consuming thousands of innocent lives and countless property in several parts of our country. Today, we are happy that those flames of war have been extinguished, and that now we are about to watch the flames of peace, destroy some of the implements of war. What a relief! The ceremony marks the symbolic conclusion of the disarmament process, and an historic expression of our deep sense of national triumph.

The presence of some of my colleagues, President John Kufour and so many Foreign and Defence Ministers underscores the significance of the occasion. I should, therefore, on behalf of the people of Sierra Leone, and on my own personal behalf, start by extending a warm welcome to you all. We also welcome the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS, Dr. Mohamed Chambers, and high level representatives of other leaders and heads of organizations who would have also liked to join us here today, but were unable to do us because of pressing commitments. I have no doubt that they also associate themselves with the spirit of this ceremony.

The conflict that has just formally ended was essentially an internal conflict. However, no one should underestimate its regional and international dimensions and implications. So let me touch briefly on the roles of ECOWAS, the United Nations and the rest of the international community.

Today, as we celebrate the dawn of lasting peace and security in Sierra Leone, we are also symbolically erecting a new milestone on the road to peace and stability in the West African sub-region. The events in the past ten to twelve years have shown that the proverbial 'we are our neighbour's keeper' has become more relevant to the situation in our sub-region.

To our sister states of ECOWAS, it is an understatement to say that you have given true meaning to the concept of collective regional security. The mandate that ECOWAS received from the UN Security Council in resolution 1132 (1997), under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, to enforce and monitor implementation of the arms and oil embargo against the rebel-military junta, was a landmark decision. It was an acknowledgement of the capacity of ECOWAS as an instrument of conflict resolution in the international system. It turned out to be one of the stepping stones towards the peace process in Sierra Leone.

I should like to pay special tribute to those States, members of ECOWAS, that have advanced the cause of peace in Sierra Leone, as troop contributors to ECOMOG; in particular, Nigeria, Guinea, Ghana and Mali; or as facilitators and hosts of peace talks, especially Cote d'Ivoire and Togo. To other states of the Community that demonstrated their solidarity with the people of Sierra Leone throughout the conflict, we salute you.

We remember those ECOMOG soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice of giving up their own lives so that our children can live in peace. We renew our assurances to their families and respective governments that their memories will for ever remain in our hearts. I would like to reassure you that every Sierra Leonean knows that without ECOWAS and its monitoring group, ECOMOG, the prospects for disarmament and peace would have been extremely bleak.

Let me however, point out, that notwithstanding the resounding success of ECOWAS in Sierra Leone, the organization is facing a serious challenge to its principal mission, namely "to promote regional integration in all fields of economic activity." There are still elements of threats to peace in our sub-region. These include the illicit transfer of arms and ammunition, the illicit trade in diamonds and other natural resources to fuel or prolong armed conflict and in the process reek havoc on innocent and defenceless civilians. These cruel and destabilizing activities are an anomaly. They continue to impede development. They must be eliminated so that we can devote all our energy, collectively, to the task of lifting our peoples out of the bondage of abject poverty.

As we watch a collection of arms and ammunition go up in flames, we must remind ourselves of the need to faithfully respect the ECOWAS Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Light Weapons in West Africa. We must see the Moratorium as both a security mechanism, and a catalyst of economic and social development in West Africa. Sierra Leone wholeheartedly endorsed the action taken last July to extend the Moratorium for another three years.

Excellencies, please allow me on this occasion to appeal to all members of ECOWAS and the inter-state groupings within the Community, for a new commitment not only to the principles of good neighbourliness, but more importantly to the ideals of brotherhood. We, the leaders of our respective nations in the sub-region often refer to each other as brothers. Let us use the success that we are celebrating today as a source of inspiration to work harder in strengthening the family and other ties that bind us as one great community of peoples.

Excellencies, distinguished guests:

The people of Sierra Leone are equally grateful to the United Nations and the rest of the international community, for their support in making this celebration possible. We acknowledge that long before the outbreak of the rebel war, many of your representatives were here in this country as partners in development, helping us to take care of the health and welfare of our children; working hand in hand with our own nationals to construct roads and bridges, equip schools and hospitals, develop high yielding seeds for greater food production; and building the capacity of Sierra Leoneans to be economically self-sufficient.

In the course of the war, international organizations provided essential humanitarian relief to thousands of Sierra Leonean refugees and the internally displaced. They have also lent their support in rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes. We must confess though that there were times in the course of the armed conflict when many of our people thought that we were being abandoned, or that our cry for help was perhaps not loud enough to prod the world to provide the quality and quantum of response that our precarious situation required. There were other occasions when the average Sierra Leonean felt that repeated requests for urgent international assistance to enable ECOMOG to do the job would never materialize. Secretary-General Kofi Annan once had to make a plea that the international community must not fail the people of Sierra Leone.

However, as I often observe, Sierra Leone has tested the capacity of the United Nations, and indeed the international community, to respond to the major challenges of our times in the areas of peacekeeping, humanitarian relief, the protection of human rights and the administration of justice. Your overall response to those challenges has been extraordinary. This is reflected in the operations of UNAMSIL, in the activities of such agencies as UNHCR and UNICEF, and more recently in the decision to establish the Special Court. For these and other forms of assistance, we are profoundly grateful. Without the contribution of the various organizations and agencies, governmental and non-governmental, most of us would not have lived to see this glorious day.

In thanking all countries that have contributed troops and to UNAMSIL, let me also on this occasion renew our expression of deepest sympathy to the families and governments of the UNAMSIL peacekeepers who lost their lives in the service of the United Nations on our soil.

To the United Nations and the international community, I must reiterate that the process of disarmament is formally over. However, the equally formidable tasks of reintegration and rehabilitation have only just begun. In this connection, I wish to draw your attention to the recent observation by Secretary-General Kofi Annan that "the limited availability of reintegration opportunities for ex-combatants, as a result of inadequate funds, remains a source of serious concern." We could not agree with him more.

The international community cannot afford to create another feeling of abandonment in the minds of Sierra Leoneans, especially the young ex-combatants and those who could be described as non-combatants. We therefore appeal to the international community to remain engaged in our efforts to consolidate the peace in Sierra Leone. We know from experience that the timeliness and level of international assistance often determine the course of events in conflict and post-conflict situations. We continue to count on your support.

Excellencies, distinguished guests:

Sierra Leone has many friends within the international community. But we also have some very very good and faithful friends; friends whom we are obliged to single out for special commendation by name on an occasion such as this. I refer to the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Nigeria, the United States of America and the Peoples Republic of China. The Governments and peoples of these friendly States deserve separate chapters in the history of our transition from war to peace. As the old adage goes, "a friend in need is a friend indeed."

Now, to you my compatriots, this is the day we have all been patiently waiting for. As I told you two Sundays ago, the rest of the world has been impressed by our resilience. Your courage has been exemplary. You fought hard, not merely to defend your right to live but also to uphold the principles of democratic governance and the rule of law. A few individuals declared war and used others to wage and prolong the senseless war. We continue to maintain that your response was an act of legitimate self-defence.

We have learned the hard way that the paths to disarmament and peace are not paved with gold. There was considerable loss of life and destruction of property. We encountered obstacles of various dimensions, such as intransigence, bad faith, greed, fear, apprehension, and in some instances financial constraints. There were inordinate delays and detours on the road. Today, we can take pride in the fact that we have at last arrived at a stage where for the first time in more than ten years, we can confidently speak about real peace and security.

This ceremony marking the symbolic conclusion of disarmament, and in celebration of peace, is so important for every one of us, that we intend to replicate it in other parts of the country over the next several days. Many of those who are not present here today will also have the opportunity to witness and be part of the celebration of this dramatic change in the history of Sierra Leone.

Fellow compatriots as the celebration continues, we are about to face our first major challenge in the area of peaceful political transition, namely Presidential and Parliamentary elections. The elections will test our ability to apply the new culture of peace that we recently embraced in our relations with each other. The forthcoming electoral process will test our patriotism, our determination to put armed conflict behind us, to renounce violence as a means of bringing about political or any other change in this country. If we really appreciate peace, we should live and practice peace.

Let me take this opportunity to reiterate that election is not a war. The war is over. What we are about to embark upon on is a friendly contest. Election is a process by which we should freely and peacefully choose those who we believe are qualified to assume the heavy responsibility of serving this nation.

I am confident that guided by the lessons of the past ten years, and inspired by this symbolic but momentous occasion we are witnessing today, the forthcoming elections will be free and fair, and will be the most peaceful in the history of our beloved country.

Fellow compatriots, another test that we must pass is in the area of reconciliation and justice. We must recognize that justice and reconciliation are major components of peace. Furthermore, the administration of justice is an integral part of the process of national reconciliation. If we really want to consolidate the peace, if we really want to facilitate the process of national reconciliation, we must be prepared to deal effectively with the trauma, the emotional pain resulting from that bitter conflict. One principal institution designed for this purpose is of course the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC). We should all look forward to its proceedings, and the outcome of its work.

And speaking of reconciliation brings me to the issue of the Special Court which, I must emphasize, is part of the process of national reconciliation. One cannot speak about the need for national reconciliation, and at the same time ignore or dismiss the moral and constitutional imperative of upholding the rule of law. The Special Court is about accountability. It is about justice. I should add however, that justice is not merely an act of punishment, of revenge or of retribution. In our situation it is a means of dealing with impunity. It is also a means of ensuring that at all times, the human rights of every individual, including those who are caught up in armed conflict, are respected and protected.

Excellencies, distinguished guests, fellow Sierra Leoneans,

On this auspicious occasion, I have spoken about peace in Sierra Leone and the roles of our sub-regional organization, the United Nations and the rest of the international community, as well as our own effort in securing the peace that we are here to celebrate. I spoke about arms, about war, and about the need for peaceful political change through free and fair elections. I also dwelt on what I consider our collective responsibility to cooperate in consolidating the gains we have made through, among other things, such components of peace as justice, the rule of law, protection of human rights, national reconciliation and the maintenance of an open society.

I must pause here to explain the concept of an open society. An open society and civil society are often confused with each other. Actually, a healthy civil society is part of an open society, but only a part. We are told that an open society also needs a democratic government and a private sector that is independent of the government. To safeguard these elements it needs the rule of law.

We must note however, that peace and reconciliation cannot be imposed, it cannot be decreed, and it cannot be established by legislation or by commission. Peace and forgiveness must come from the hearts and minds of the people concerned, namely, us Sierra Leoneans.

Excellencies, distinguished ladies and gentlemen:

The main thrust of my remarks could be summarized in the following profound words of wisdom from His Holiness Pope John Paul II. They were addressed to the diplomatic corps accredited to the Holy See four years ago this month. His Holiness said:

> "If violent attainment of power becomes the norm, if insistence on ethnic consideration continues to override all concerns, if democratic representation is systematically put aside, if corruption and arms trade continue to rage, then Africa will never experience peace and development, and future generations will mercilessly judge these pages of African history."

The message was for Africa, from someone of high repute who sees himself as a friend of Africa. I believe that it is also appropriate for this particular gathering.

Thank you once again for your presence and support in our continued search for sustainable peace, security and the development of this country.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

1. Prosecutor v. Semanaza ICTR-97-20-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Presumption of Facts Pursuant to Rules 94 and 54, 3 November 2000.
2. Prosecutor v. Simic et al., IT-95-9-PT, Decision on the Pre-trial Motion by the Prosecution Requesting the Trial Chamber to take Judicial Notice of the International Character of the Conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina, 25 March 1999.
3. Prosecutor v. Sikirica et al., IT-95-8-T, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, 27 September 2000.
4. Prosecutor v. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali (ICTR-97-21-T), Prosecutor v. Nsabimana and Nteziryayo (ICTR-97-29A and B-T), Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi (ICTR-96-15-T), Prosecutor v. Ndayambaje (ICTR-96-8-T), 98-42-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence, 15 May 2002.
5. Prosecutor v Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, Judgment, 2 September 1998.
6. Prosecutor v. Mirloslav Kvocka, Milojica Kos, Mlado Radic, Zoran Zigic, Dragoljub Prcac, Decision on Judicial Notice, 8 June 2000.
7. Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi, ICTR-96-15-T, Decision on Jurisdiction, 18 June 1997.
8. Prosecutor v. Kayishema & Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, Judgement, 21 May 1999.
9. Security Council Resolution 1315.
10. Charter of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Article 21.
11. Prosecutor v. Bagosora et al., ICTR-98-41-T, Decision on Admissibility of Proposed Testimony of Witness DBY, 18 September 2003.
12. Prosecutor v. Blaškić, IT-95-14-T, Judgement, 3 March 2000.
13. Prosecutor v. Delalić et al., IT-96-21-T, Decision on the Motion of the Prosecutor for the Admissibility of Evidence, 19 January 1998.
14. ICTR Press Release ICTR/INFO-9-13-22.EN dated 8 July 2002.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

1. Prosecutor v. Semanaza ICTR-97-20-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Presumption of Facts Pursuant to Rules 94 and 54, 3 November 2000.

2524

TRIAL CHAMBER III

Original: English

Before:
Judge Lloyd George Williams, Presiding
Judge Yakov Ostrovsky
Judge Pavel Dolenc

Registrar: Agwu U. Okali

Date: 3 November 2000

THE PROSECUTOR
v.
LAURENT SEMANZA
Case No. ICTR-97-20-I

DECISION ON THE PROSECUTOR'S MOTION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE AND PRESUMPTIONS OF FACTS PURSUANT TO RULES 94 AND 54

The Office of the Prosecutor:
Chile Eboe-Osuji
Frédéric Ossogo
Honoré Tougouri
Patricia Wildermuth
Holo Makwaia

Defence Counsel for the Accused:
Charles Achaleke Taku

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III, composed of Judge Lloyd George Williams, Presiding, Judge Yakov Ostrovsky and Judge Pavel Dolenc (the "Chamber"); BEING SEIZED of the Prosecutor's Notice of Motion for Judicial Notice and Presumptions of Facts Pursuant to Rule 94 and 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, filed on 19 January 1999 (the "Motion").

25-25

CONSIDERING the Prosecutor's Memorial in Support of Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Presumptions of Facts together with Appendix A and Appendix B (the "Memorial")[1];

CONSIDERING the Prosecutor's Book of Authorities in the Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice (Rules 54 and 73), filed on 17 July 2000 (the "Prosecutor's Book of Authorities");

CONSIDERING the Prosecutor's Revised Memorial in the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice (Rule 54 and 73) filed on 14 July 2000 (the "Revised Memorial");

CONSIDERING Appendix A and Appendix B to the Revised Memorial;

CONSIDERING the Defence Notice to File Further Written Replies to Prosecutor's Response in the Defence Motion for Dismissal of the Entire Proceeding Filed on the 30 June 2000 and 14 July 2000 and Prosecutor's Revised Memorial in the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice (Rules 54 and 73), filed on 17 August 2000 (the "Defence Notice");

CONSIDERING the Preliminary Response of the Defence to the Prosecutor's Revised Memorial in the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice, filed on 1 September 2000 (the "Preliminary Response"); and

CONSIDERING the Preliminary Reply to Prosecutor's Supplementary Appendixes to Motion for Judicial Notice Filed on 15\8\2000, filed on 5 September 2000 (the "Defence Preliminary Reply").

NOW CONSIDERS the matter pursuant to Rule 73(A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules") without a hearing, solely on the basis of the written submissions of the parties.

I

THE PARTIES' SUBMISSIONS

A. The Prosecutor's Submissions

1. The Prosecutor submits that she served on the Defence a Request to Admit Facts and Documents, including some facts and documents of a general nature relating to the general events in Rwanda at material times, with the aim of conducting a trial without undue delay. The Defence has not admitted any facts or documents, as requested.

2. By the instant motion, the Prosecutor seeks a declaration by the Tribunal taking judicial notice of factual matters described in Appendix A and of documents listed in Appendix B to the Motion. In the alternative, the Prosecutor urges the Chamber to accept the presumptions of fact as they are stated in Appendix A and in the documents listed in Appendix B. The Prosecutor requests that the Chamber upon taking judicial notice of the facts in Appendices A and B accept such facts as established in the trial of the Accused.

3. The Prosecutor cautions, however, that she does not request that the Chamber take judicial notice of the ultimate facts at issue in this case with regard to the specific conduct of the Accused and his alleged responsibility for committing the crimes charged in the indictment. The Prosecutor insists judicial notice notwithstanding, the burden of adducing formal proofs of the facts supporting the alleged guilt of the Accused remains with the Prosecution.

4. In Appendix A to the Motion, the Prosecutor prays that this Chamber takes judicial notice of a panoply of facts, which collectively may fairly be characterised as socio-political historical background facts relating to the existence of "genocide" "armed conflict" and "widespread systematic attacks" against the Tutsi civilian population in Rwanda during the months of April through July, 1994. By submitting Appendix B to the Motion, the Prosecutor argues for admission into evidence by judicial notice of certain documents that comprise legislative and administrative regulations and governmental investigative reports of the genocide in Rwanda, including among others, United Nations reports.

2526

5. The Prosecutor's request for judicial notice rests on the following principal legal grounds. Notably, the Prosecutor submits that the facts in Appendix A belong to the category of facts of common knowledge, which, under Rule 94, are entitled to judicial notice. Pursuing her thesis, the Prosecutor maintains that the Chamber may equally take judicial notice of the facts pursuant to Rule 89. Moreover, the Prosecutor cites Rules 54 and 89 as providing support for the Chamber to take judicial notice of, or accept presumptions of facts contained in Appendices A and B. More specifically, citing Rule 94, the Prosecution contends that the factual matters delineated in Appendix A belong to the category of facts of "common knowledge around the world, facts which are not subject to reasonable dispute, matters which are within the knowledge of the Tribunal, or matters which are self-evident in the circumstances." Alternatively, the Prosecutor argues, without the benefit of Statutory authority or support in the Rules, that the facts in Appendix A qualify to be treated as presumptions because the facts are the logical consequences of basic established facts.

6. With respect to the documents listed in Appendix B to the Revised Memorial, the Prosecutor contends that the documents eminently qualify for judicial notice inasmuch as they are "public documents," created by public officials acting in pursuance of their designated public functions. Further, the documents in Appendix B, the Prosecutor argues, are the proper subject of judicial notice because the facts contained therein have been established in previous proceedings before the Tribunal either through judicial notice or by the formal introduction of positive proof. In this regard, the Prosecutor notes that the Tribunal took judicial notice of United Nations documents previously in, among other cases, Prosecutor v. Akayesu, ICTR-95-1-T, at ¶¶ 157, 165 and 627 (Judgement) (2 September 1998). Among a myriad of other legal arguments and authority, the Prosecutor also invokes Article 21 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg as additional authority to take judicial notice in the instant case.

7. Finally, the Prosecutor maintains that taking judicial notice or accepting the presumptions of fact it urges will not encroach upon the ultimate question of the guilt or innocence of the Accused in this case. The Prosecutor contends that the taking of judicial notice or the acceptance of factual presumptions she advocates will significantly reduce the length of the trial of this matter without visiting unfair prejudice upon the rights of the Accused to a fair trial.

B. The Defence's Submissions in Opposition To the Motion

8. In its Preliminary Response to the Motion, the Defence submits the Defence Notice in which, among other things, he asks this Chamber to grant him additional time to file a written response to the Motion on the grounds that the Motion was filed while lead counsel for the Defence, Mr. Taku, was on mission in Europe pursuant to a mission order. Additional time is necessary, argues Mr. Taku, because filing a written response would entail extensive references to several of the transcripts of this Chamber and decisions.[2]

9. In the Preliminary Response, the Defence advances the following arguments. First, the Defence contends that the Chamber should deny the Motion because it was brought pursuant to the authority of Rules 54 and 73, Rules which merely provide authority for directing the parties to make admissions of fact, and therefore do not allow for the judicial notice and presumptions of facts the Prosecution seeks in the instant Motion. In this regard, the Defence claims that the Chamber should not permit the Prosecutor to rely upon the authority of Rules 94 and 89(b) as it does in the table of contents to the Revised Memorial.

2527

10. The Defence next expostulates that the Motion should be denied because it is premature. Thus, even if it were proper for the Chamber to take judicial notice or recognize presumptions of fact, the proper time for such an order would be during the course of the trial of this matter but, not before. In addition, the Defence argues that the Motion should be dismissed because it suffers from certain internal inconsistencies, namely the point made in Part III of the table of contents is at odds with points 12 and 15 of the Prosecutor's submissions because the Defence has consistently refused to make admission of fact in this matter since such was never ordered by the Chamber. Similarly, the Defence submits that the Motion must fail because it contradicts the not-guilty plea entered by the Accused and is therefore an impermissible attempt to relieve the Prosecutor of the burden of proof on contested issues of fact which rest exclusively upon the Prosecutor throughout the trial of this matter. More significantly, the Defence claims that granting the Motion at this juncture would constitute a violation of Article 20 of the Statute and result in gross unfairness and prejudice to the Defendant by rendering nugatory the full scope of the testimony of several witnesses appearing on the Prosecutor's Supplementary List of Witnesses, filed on 19 April 2000. Consequently, argues the Defence, the request for judicial notice is premature and should be allowed only when and if such witnesses are called to testify under oath at trial.

11. The Defence further submits that the Chamber should dismiss the Motion because it calls upon the Chamber to take judicial notice of facts that are contrary to the Statute of the Tribunal and to abdicate its role as an impartial arbiter of the facts. As an example of this alleged contradiction, the Defence notes that the Statute never sanctioned the prosecution of Hutus for committing genocide and other violations against Tutsis as insinuated in Point 4 of the Revised Memorial. In effect, claims the Defence, taking judicial notice of such facts would be tantamount to foreclosing in futuro the indictment of any Tutsi or non-Rwandans for committing the very same offences against Hutus, Tutsis, Twas or any other protected persons. In further support of this argument, the Defence claims that judicial notice does not lie because the Defence possesses documents evidencing that the RPF and mercenaries employed by them committed genocide and other serious violations against Rwandan citizens during the temporal jurisdiction of this Tribunal. As evidence of such contradictory facts, the Defence submits copies of certain excerpts from books, pamphlets and United Nations reports.

12. The Defence next attempts to lay waste to the Prosecution's principal argument in support of the Motion by stating that the facts for which judicial notice is sought or the recognition of a presumption are not of such an indisputable character as would qualify them for admission through judicial notice. For example, the Defence argues that the Chamber should not take judicial notice of the fact placing the death toll at between 500,000 and 1,000,000. Similarly, the facts relating to the general political circumstance extant in Rwanda do not belong to the genus of indisputable facts. In the same vein, but perhaps more fundamentally, the Defence is vehement in his argument that the Chamber cannot take judicial notice that certain elements of Hutus committed acts of genocide targeting Tutsis, as alleged in Point 4 of the Revised Memorial. Indeed, claims the Defence, the United Nations resolution and other documents cited by the Prosecutor mandates that all who are believed to have committed the subject offences and violations be tried by the Tribunal, rather than only "certain elements of the Hutu ethnic group," as urged by the Prosecutor.

13. The Defence contends that the Prosecutor's Motion is without legal authority. It is neither supported by the Statute of the Tribunal nor by the previous decisions rendered by the Tribunal. Significantly, the Defence maintains that the fact that matters may have been judicially noticed in other cases does not authorize the same result in the instant Motion since those previous decisions are limited to their particular underlying circumstances. Moreover, the Defence underscores that the Prosecutor has failed to cite to any specific ratio decidendi in the Tribunal's previous cases in which judicial notice was taken as would authorize the same result to obtain under the circumstances in this case. In any event, argues the Defence, the Chamber should not predicate judicial notice in the instant matter upon the precedents set in previous decisions since those matters are still being reviewed by the Appeals Chamber and are therefore inconclusive.

14. When countering the Prosecutor's arguments for the admission of the documents listed in Appendix B, the Defence submits that the documents likewise lack the requisite indisputability as would entitle the Prosecutor to admit them through judicial notice. Moreover, states the Defence, the documents contain statements on political issues that are beyond the parameters of the Tribunal's mandate.

15. Finally, the Defence cautions the Chamber to avoid confounding, as did the Prosecutor, the similar but very discrete concepts of judicial notice and admissions. In this regard the Defence submits Exhibit E, an excerpt from Sakar's Law of Evidence in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Burma and Ceylon, 15th ed. (India, 1999). Relying on Sakar's Law of Evidence, the Defence stresses that even if a court takes judicial notice of a fact, such a ruling cannot deprive the opponent of its opportunity to present contradicting evidence on that fact.

II.

DELIBERATIONS AND FINDINGS

A. The Defence Motion For Additional Time To File Written Submissions In Opposition To The Motion

16. As a threshold matter, the Chamber finds that it is neither necessary nor proper for it togrant the Defence additional time to submit more written submissions in opposition to the Prosecutor's Motion. Indeed, since the filing of the Motion the Defence availed itself of the opportunity to make not less than three submissions, complete with supporting legal authorities and exhibits, in opposition to the instant Motion. Notwithstanding its protestation that additional time was necessary to enable it to fully address the issues raised by the Motion, the Chamber finds that the Defence itself concedes that it has adequately, in its own estimation, responded to the Motion. Notably in this regard, at the Pre-Trial Conference in this matter, the Defence upon being denied its motion to postpone the trial asked the Chamber to render decisions on all pending motions. Surely, the Defence would not have insisted on issuance of a decision on the Motion if it still believed that it had not adequately and fully addressed the issues raised in the Motion. See Transcript of 25 September 2000, at 66:18-25--67:1-6. Consequently, the Chamber denies the Defence request for additional time to submit written opposition to the Motion. There must be some closure and finality with regard to submissions on pending motions. There must be some finality to litigation.

B. The Prosecution's Motion For Judicial Notice

17. The Chamber notes the importance of the issues raised in the Motion and the Defence's opposition to the Motion. These matters merit full discussion inasmuch as the Defence cogently argues that none of the previous decisions of this Tribunal reveals the ratio decidendi by which judicial notice was taken or denied. Consequently, none of the decisions seems to disclose principled guidance as to what genre of facts properly allow a trial court to take judicial notice thereby relieving the Prosecutor of her burden of formally adducing evidence at trial.

18. As a point of departure, it is imperative that the Chamber identify the issues and interests it must balance in rendering its decision on the Motion. As is plainly evident in the Prosecutor's Motion, the Chamber must contend with the issue of whether the Rules, Statute and previous jurisprudence of the Tribunal properly permit taking judicial notice of the facts contained in Appendix A and of the documents listed in Appendix B. The Chamber must assess whether it may take judicial notice of the reasonable inferences and conclusions that may be drawn from the noticed facts. Under the same rubric, the Chamber must determine whether the noticed fact is to be given conclusive effect, i.e., to be taken as proving a particular relevant fact beyond a reasonable doubt, consequently foreclosing the opportunity of the Defence to present evidence disputing the noticed fact. In addition, the Chamber must consider when is the proper time for taking judicial notice. Finally, the Chamber must assess all of the foregoing issues, against its momentous countervailing mandate to ensure a fair and equitable trial for the Accused.

1. Judicial Notice Under the Rules

19. The Defence invites the Chamber to restrict consideration of the Motion solely on the basis of Rules 54 and 73, as indicated in the title to the Motion. Rule 73(A) invests the parties with the power to make motions for appropriate relief before the Chamber. Rule 54, which is also cited by the Prosecutor as supporting the grant of the relief it seeks in the Motion, reinforces the mandate of Rule 89 by authorising the Chamber, upon the request of a party or sua sponte, to issue such orders and other measures as are necessary for purposes of preparation or conduct of the trial. Inasmuch as the Motion and the Revised Memorial correctly invoke Rule 94 and Rule 89, in addition to Rule 54 and Rule 73, the Chamber declines the Defence's invitation to restrict consideration of the Motion to Rules 54 and 73.

a. Policy Reasons for Doctrine of Judicial Notice

20. Legal scholars invariably recite two reasons justifying the application of the doctrine of judicial notice. First, resort to judicial notice expedites the trial by dispensing with the need to formally submit proof on issues that are patently indisputable. Second, the doctrine fosters consistency and uniformity of decisions on factual issues where diversity in factual findings would be unfair. See Cross and Tapper on Evidence, 8th ed., Colin Tapper (United Kingdom, 1995) p. 78.

21. One learned legal authority, Bin Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, p. 303 (England, 1993) (emphasis added) has described judicial notice as follows:

> [C]ertain allegations of the parties that are within the knowledge of the tribunal need no evidence in support. 'Judicial notice' is taken of the facts averred. Proof may be dispensed with as regards facts, which are of common knowledge or public notoriety . . .

b. Judicial Notice of Facts of "Common Knowledge:" Rule 94

22. Rule 94 entitled "Judicial Notice," provides "A Trial Chamber shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof." Rule 94 (emphasis added). Thus, following Rule 94, a Trial Chamber is permitted to take judicial notice of facts if such facts are "of common knowledge." Rule 94, however, provides no guidance as to what manner of facts constitutes "common knowledge." For an understanding as to what is encompassed under the broad rubric "common knowledge," the Chamber resorts to the learned legal treatises for guidance.

23. The term "common knowledge" is generally accepted as encompassing ". . . those facts which are not subject to reasonable dispute including, common or universally known facts, such as general facts of history, generally known geographical facts and the laws of nature." M. Cherif Bassiouni & P.

2533

Manikas The Law of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, (United States of America, 1996) p. 952. See also; Phipson on Evidence, 14th ed., §2-06-2-16 (England, 1990); Sakar's Law of Evidence in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Burma and Ceylon, 15th ed. (India, 1999) p. 1015; Hon. Roger E. Salhany Criminal Trial Handbook, (Canada, 1994), § 9.5. A common example of a fact of common knowledge are the days of the week. In addition, and perhaps more importantly for the present purposes, "common knowledge" also encompasses those facts that are generally known within a tribunal's territorial jurisdiction. The Law of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, at p. 952.

24. Once a Trial Chamber deems a fact to be of "common knowledge" under Rule 94, it must determine also that the matter is reasonably indisputable. A fact is said to be indisputable if it is either generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of a court or capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be called into question. See General Principles of Law as Applied by International Tribunals, pp. 303-304; 29 American Jurisprudence §33 (United States of America, 1994).

c. Judicial Notice of Notorious Facts of History

25. Under the rubric matters of "common knowledge," a court may generally take judicial notice of matters " . . . so notorious, or clearly established or susceptible to determination by reference to readily obtainable and authoritative source that evidence of their existence is unnecessary . . . ." Archibold Criminal Pleading, Evidence & Practice § 10-71 (England, 2000); see also Phipson on Evidence, at § 2-06; United States of America Federal Rule of Civil Procedure § 201(B).

26. Article 21 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, which provided for judicial notice of certain matters of common knowledge, further bolsters the propriety of taking judicial notice of some of the facts contained in Appendix A and the documents in Appendix B. In this connection, Article 21 of the Charter provided, in relevant portion:

> The Tribunal shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof. It shall also take judicial notice of official governmental documents and reports of the United Nations, including the acts and documents of the committees set up in the various allied countries for the investigation of war crimes, and of records and findings of military or other Tribunals of any of the United Nations.

27. Perhaps the best support of the propriety and fairness of taking judicial notice of certain matters stated in Appendix A and documents in Appendix B comes from the Bangladesh International Crimes (Tribunal) Act of July 19, 1973 because its language coincides with that of Rules 89 and 94. In April of 1973 the newly emerged state of Bangladesh announced its intention to try Pakistani nationals for "serious crimes," including genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity, breaches of Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions, murder, rape and arson. To facilitate the trials of the accuseds, the Act permits a tribunal to take judicial notice of common knowledge facts. The Act provides in relevant respect:

> (1) A Tribunal shall not be bound by technical rules of evidence; and it shall adopt and apply to the greatest possible extent expeditious and non-technical procedure, and may admit any evidence, including reports, and photographs published in newspapers, periodicals and magazines, films and tape-recordings and other materials as may be tendered before it, which it deems to have probative value. . . .
>
> (3) A Tribunal shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof.

(4) A Tribunal shall take judicial notice of official governmental documents and reports of the United Nations and its subsidiary agencies or other international bodies including non-governmental organisations.[3]

28. A prominent legal treatise, Sakar's Law of Evidence, upon which the Defence heavily relies, states the matter more categorically still. "No court insists upon formal proof by evidence of notorious facts of history past or present." Sakar's at p. 1016. To the extent that the matters in Appendix A are matters of public history, the Chamber may properly dispense with formal proof of such notorious matters. In addition, to illustrate the type of facts that are the proper subject of judicial notice, Sakar's, provides a list of thirteen matters that are so notorious and indisputable that one ought to take judicial notice of them. Sakar's, at p. 999, f.n. 15. According to Sakar's, among the facts that a court is compelled to recognise are facts evidencing: (1) accession to office, names, titles and functions of public officers; (2) commencement or continuation of hostilities between the State and a body of persons; (3) constitutional and political matters; (4) that a government is run by certain political parties. Sakar's, at pp. 1005, 1007-1009.

2. Judicial Notice of Certain Facts in Appendix A

29. Some of the facts the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice of in Appendix A belong to that genus of "common knowledge " or "notorious historical facts" permitting a court to dispense with the submission of formal proofs. For example, the Prosecutor first calls on the Chamber to take judicial notice of the fact that Rwandan citizens were classified into three ethnic groups, namely, Hutu, Tutsi and Twa. Similarly, the fact that during the period from 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994 there existed throughout Rwanda "widespread and systematic attacks" against the civilian population based on certain invidious classifications including Tutsi ethnic identity, is a notorious historical fact of which this Chamber may take judicial notice. Moreover, the powers of the office of Bourgmestre is a proper subject of judicial notice because it falls squarely into the category of matters that are of common knowledge within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal and which may readily be determined by reference to such reliable sources such as the written laws of Rwanda.[4]

30. It also bears noting that within the area of its territorial jurisdiction[5] and within the sphere of its specialised competence, a court is allowed to take judicial notice of an even wider scope of facts of common knowledge and notorious history. Phipson on Evidence, §2-21. See also, Sakar's, at p. 1015. Thus, the Chamber may take judicial notice of facts that are notorious within the territories of Rwanda, Burundi and other neighbouring states. Prosecutor v. Tadic, IT-94-1-AR72, Transcript of Hearing on Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdictional Challenge at pp. 107-10 (ICTY Appeals Chamber, 7 September 1995) (finding that that Tribunal must in the interest of fairness take judicial notice of notorious facts). Accordingly, this Chamber may properly take judicial notice of the factual elements constituting the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of certain provisions of the Geneva Convention with respect to the large number of deaths of civilians in Rwanda during 1994.

31. Disputed facts, necessarily do not belong to that realm of indisputability as historical facts, and other matters of common knowledge as would properly place them within the reach of the Chamber's power to take judicial notice. Having entered a plea of not guilty to all the counts in the indictment, the Accused has placed even the most patent of facts in dispute. However, this alone cannot rob the Chamber of its discretion to take judicial notice of those facts not subject to dispute among reasonable persons. There is no requirement that a matter be universally accepted in order to qualify for judicial notice. See Sakar's at 1015.

32. In the instant case, some of the matters the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice of do not appear to be disputed by the Defence. Rather, the Defence disputes Semanza's personal involvement in the offences cited within the facts. Palpably absent from the Defence submissions, is any argument or authority negating the existence of either the "widespread or systematic attacks" or the elemental components of the crime of genocide against Tutsis. Consequently, there is no impediment to taking judicial notice of those matters which are of common knowledge and reasonably indisputable contained in Annexes A and B to this Decision.

3. Previous Tribunal Cases Taking Judicial Notice

33. Although no additional authority is needed to support the propriety of taking judicial notice of facts in the instant matter, additional authority may be found in the jurisprudence of this Tribunal. See e.g., Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi, ICTR-96-15-T, (Decision on Jurisdiction) (18 June 1997). In rendering a decision on a defence pre-trial motion challenging the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, a unanimous Chamber in Kanyabashi rejected the Defence arguments that the Tribunal lacked the jurisdictional predicate under Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, by, among other things, taking judicial notice of the fact that the Special Rapporteur for Rwanda, the Commission of Experts on Rwanda and the Security Council had all concluded that the conflict in Rwanda as well as the stream of refugees had created a highly volatile situation in the neighbouring states. Prosecutor v. Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, (Judgement) at ¶ 627 (2 September 1998); (taking judicial notice of United Nations reports); Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, (Judgement) at ¶¶ 273-274 (21 May 1999) (finding that Article 2 of the Statute which defines genocide is not aimed at determining individual responsibility or guilt, rather a finding that genocide occurred merely provided a context in which the crimes alleged in the indictment may have been perpetrated).

34. The Chamber is mindful not to confound the related but discrete concepts of admissions and judicial notice. Thus, the Chamber notes that the Prosecutor's reliance on those cases in which the accused entered a plea of guilty pursuant to a plea agreement or in which the accused voluntarily admitted facts, thereby relieving the Prosecutor of its burden to prove such facts by formal proof, is misplaced. That an accused admits a fact pursuant to a plea agreement reveals nothing about the nature of the facts as either common knowledge or as indisputable. Similarly, facts that are voluntarily admitted by a an accused in the context of a proceeding are not the proper subject of judicial notice because such admissions speak neither to the general currency of the fact nor to its indisputable character. For these reasons, the Chamber is not persuaded to take judicial notice of the facts at issue in the instant Motion on the basis of the jurisprudence in the cases cited by the Prosecution.[6] Accordingly, the Chamber shall not take judicial notice of the matters in Appendix A at ¶¶ 8(e), 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14.

35. In addition, the Chamber cannot take judicial notice of matters, which are unadorned legal conclusions. Accordingly, the Chamber shall not take judicial notice of the matters in ¶¶ 3(a) (ii), (iii); (e), (d) (f), (g), (i), (j), (k), and (l) in Appendix A because these paragraphs do not contain facts of common knowledge or matters of public notoriety. Rather, they merely recite bare legal terminology borrowed verbatim from Article 3 of Statute of the Tribunal, which lists Crimes Against Humanity. In order to make the matters stated in the foregoing paragraphs eligible for judicial notice, the Prosecutor must state the specific acts or factual matters of which the Trial Chamber is being asked to take judicial notice. Moreover, the Chamber shall not take judicial notice of those facts recited in ¶¶ 4, 5(a), 8(e), and 9-21 in Appendix A because such matters are not reasonably indisputable.

4. Judicial Notice of enumerated Acts Comprising Crime of "Genocide"

36. A fundamental question in this case is whether "genocide" took place in Rwanda.

2533

Notwithstanding the over-abundance of official reports, including United Nations reports confirming the occurrence of genocide, this Chamber believes that the question is so fundamental, that formal proofs should be submitted bearing out the existence of this jurisdictional elemental crime. Kayishema, Judgement at ¶ 273 (referring to "genocide," and holding "the question is so fundamental to the case against the accused that the Trial Chamber feels obliged to make a finding of fact on the issue"). The Chamber shall take judicial notice of the existence of the enumerated acts comprising the crime of genocide as provided in Article 2 and recited in ¶3(a) of Appendix A, including killing or causing serious bodily harm to members of a group.

37. In the interest of safeguarding the Accused's right to a fair trial and in the interest of fostering judicial economy and consistency, this Chamber takes judicial notice of some of the facts contained in Appendix A to the Revised Memorial, as indicated in Annex A to this Decision.

5. Judicial Notice of Documents in Appendix B

38. Similarly, concerning the documents listed in Appendix B, there is ample precedent in this Tribunal to take judicial notice of the existence and authenticity of such documents without taking judicial notice of the contents thereof. The Chamber, nevertheless, shall take judicial notice of the contents of resolutions of the Security Council and of statements made by the President of the Security Council because it is an organ of the United Nations which established the Tribunal. In addition, the Chamber takes judicial notice of the contents of Décret-Loi no. 01/81 and Arrete ministeriel no. 01/03, which are the copies of certain portions of the laws of Rwanda and properly qualify for judicial notice. The Chamber stresses, however, that by taking judicial notice of the existence and authenticity of the other documents in Appendix B, the Chamber does not take judicial notice of the facts recited therein.

39. It bears noting that the Tribunal has previously taken judicial notice of the very documents listed in Appendix B for purposes of providing an historical and political context for the offences with which an accused is charged. Prosecutor v. Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, (Judgement) at ¶¶ 157, 165 (2 September 1998). The Defence provides no principled reason why this Chamber should depart from the authority of Akayesu. The Tribunal having previously adjudicated the existence of the very documents and facts of which the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice, it would be wasteful of the Tribunal's resources for this Chamber to now insist upon formal proof of matters of notorious public history. To adopt such an approach would flout the very principles underlying the doctrine of judicial notice: judicial economy and consistency of judgements.

40. Accordingly, this Chamber takes judicial notice of the documents listed in and appended to Appendix B to the Revised Memorial, without modification, as indicated in Annex B to this Decision.

6. Judicially Noticed Facts Serve as Conclusive Evidence

41. In the case before this Chamber, in exercise of its sound discretion under Rules 94 and 89(B), the Chamber holds that the judicially noticed facts shall serve as conclusive proof of the facts recited in Annexes A and B. The taking of judicial notice of those facts in Annexes A and B will end the evidentiary inquiry. To permit the Defence to submit evidence in rebuttal of the judicially noticed facts would undermine the very nature of the doctrine which is aimed at dispensing with formal proofs for matters that are of common knowledge and reasonably indisputable. The facts in Annex A that the Chamber has judicially noticed are of common knowledge or public notoriety and reasonably indisputable. Such an approach safeguards the right of the Accused to a fair trial without undue delay, as is his due pursuant to the Statute and the Rules. See Article 20; Rule 87(A).

2534

7. No Judicial Notice of Inferences

42. The Prosecutor requests that the Chamber take judicial notice of the inferences, without elaboration, that may be fairly drawn from judicially noticed facts. In this regard, Rule 89 permits this Chamber to determine whether it may properly take judicial notice of the logical inferences that may be drawn from the judicially noticed facts in Appendix A and documents in Appendix B. In the interest of protecting the rights of the Accused, the Chamber finds that pursuant to Rule 94 it cannot take judicial notice of inferences to be drawn from the judicially noticed facts in Appendix A. If and when those facts are presented in evidence, that will be the appropriate time for the Chamber to draw the relevant conclusions.

43. It must be stressed, at this time the Chamber draws no impermissible inferences regarding the Accused's involvement in those matters of which it takes judicial notice. The burden of proving the Accused's guilt, therefore, continues to rest squarely upon the shoulders of the Prosecutor for the duration of the trial proceeding. The critical issue is what part, if any, did the Accused play in the events that took place.

8. Time for Taking Judicial Notice

44. The Chamber finds that the proper time for taking judicial notice of the matters contained in Appendices A and B is at this stage of the proceedings. In the interest of aiding the parties in preparing their respective trial presentations the Chamber is constrained to take judicial notice of some of the facts contained in Appendix A, as modified, and of the documents in Appendix B at this time. This Decision shall become part of the trial record of this case.

9. No Presumptions of Fact

45. Having found that Rule 94 adequately provides for the judicial notice of some of the facts sought to be admitted in Appendix A and the documents in Appendix B, the Chamber need not reach that portion of the Prosecutor's Motion requesting the Chamber to create evidentiary presumptions on the basis of the facts stated in the two appendices. Rule 89(B) already provides for the particular matter under consideration, There is, therefore, no need for the Tribunal to apply any other evidentiary rules or principles.

Conclusion

46. In conclusion, the Chamber considers that it is appropriate to apply the doctrine of judicial notice in the context of this case in some of the instances requested by the Prosecutor because to do so will ensure the Accused a fair trial without undue delay rather than one unnecessarily drawn out by the introduction of evidence on matters which are patently of common knowledge in the territorial area of the Tribunal and reasonably indisputable. The facts of which the Chamber takes judicial notice will not place even the smallest chink in the armour of presumed innocence in which the Accused is cloaked throughout the proceeding. In this regard the Tribunal's pronouncement in Prosecutor v. Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, (Judgement) at ¶129 (2 September 1998), with respect to the "general allegations" of which it took judicial notice, is particularly instructive. The Akayesu Chamber stated:

> [T]he Chamber holds that the fact that the [enumerated crimes constituting] genocide [were] indeed committed in Rwanda in 1994 and more particularly in Taba, cannot influence its decision in the present case. Its sole task is to assess the individual criminal responsibility of the accused for the crimes with which he is charged, the burden of proof being on the prosecutor. [Footnote omitted] In spite of the irrefutable atrocities of the crimes committed in Rwanda, the judges must examine the facts adduced in a most dispassionate manner, bearing in mind that the accused is presumed innocent.

2535

47. By taking judicial notice of some of the facts in Appendix A and the documents in Appendix B, the Chamber merely provides a backdrop -- a blank canvas-- against which the Prosecutor is still saddled with the daunting burden of adducing formal evidence to paint the picture establishing the personal responsibility of the Accused for the offences with which he is charged in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt.

48. FOR THESE REASONS THE CHAMBER:

(a) DENIES those portions of the Defence's Notice to File Further Written Replies to Prosecutor's Response in the Defence Motion For Dismissal of the Entire Proceeding Filed on the 30 June 2000 and 14 July 2000 and the Prosecutor's Revised Memorial in the Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice (Rules 54 and 73), seeking additional time to file written responses to the instant Motion.

(b) GRANTS the Prosecutor's Motion and takes judicial notice of the facts and documents described in Annex A and Annex B, attached hereto.

(c) ORDERS that this Decision become part of the trial record of this case.

(d) DENIES the Prosecutor's requests made in the Motion: (i) to create evidentiary presumptions on the basis of the facts in Appendices A and B and (ii) to take judicial notice of inferences that may be drawn from the judicially noticed facts.

Arusha, 3 November 2000.

Lloyd George Williams	Yakov Ostrovsky	Pavel Dolenc
Judge, Presiding	Judge	Judge

[Seal of the Tribunal]

ANNEX A

1. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, citizens native to Rwanda were severally identified according to the following ethnic classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa.

2. The following state of affairs existed in Rwanda between 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994. There were throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks, some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to persons perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there was a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity.

3. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994 in Rwanda there was an armed conflict not of an international character.

2536

4. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a state party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948), having acceded to it on 16 April 1975.

5. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a state party to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their additional Protocol II of 8 June 1977, having succeeded to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on 5 May 1964 and having acceded to Protocols additional thereto of 1977 on 19 November 1984.

6. Before the introduction of multi-party politics in Rwanda in 1991, the office of the Bourgmestre was characterised by the following features:

(a) The Bourgmestre represented executive power at the commune level.

(b) The Bourgmestre was appointed and removed by the President of the Republic on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior.

(c) The Bourgmestre had authority over the civil servants posted in his commune.

(d) The Bourgmestre had policing duties in regard to maintaining law and order.

ANNEX B

i. Décret-Loi no. 01/81 du 16 janvier 1981 relatif au recensement à la carte d'identité, au domicile et à la residence des Rwandais.

ii. Arrete ministeriel no. 01/03 du 19 janvier 1981 portant mesures d'execution du décret-Loi no. 01/81 du 16 janvier 1981 relatif au recensement à la carte d'identite, au domicile et à la résidence des Rwandais: J.O. no. 2 bis du 20 janvier 1981.

iii. Commission pour le memorial du génocide et des massacres au Rwanda, "Rapport préliminaire d'identification des sites du génocide et des massacres d'avril–juillet 1994 au Rwanda."

iv. UN Secretary-General, "Report on the situation of Human Rights in Rwanda" submitted by Mr. R Degni-Ségui, Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, under paragraph 20 of commission resolution E/DN.4/S-3/1 of 25 May 1994, 28 June 1994, pages 5, 6, 7, 8 and 17. UN Document E/CD.4/1995/7.

v. UN Secretary General, 'Report on the situation of Human Rights in Rwanda' submitted by Mr R. Degni-Ségui, Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, under paragraph 20 of commission resolution E/DN.4/S-3/1 of 25 May 1994, 18 January 1995. UN Document E/CD.4/1995/7.

vi. UN Secretary-General, "Final Report of the Commission of Experts Established Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994)". UN Document S/1994/1405, 9 December 1994.

vii. Report of the Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions on his mission to Rwanda, submitted by Mr. Bacre Waly Ndiaye, 8–17 April 1993, including as annex II the statement of 7 April 1993 of the Government of Rwanda concerning the final report of the independent International Commission of Inquiry on human rights violations in Rwanda since 1 October 1990. UN Document E/CN.4/1994/7/add.1, 11 août 1993.

viii. Rapport spécial du Secrétaire Général sur la Mission des Nations Unies pour l'assistance au Rwanda (MINUAR), le 20 avril 1994. UN Document S/1994/470.

ix. Report of the United Nations High Commission for Human Rights on his Mission to Rwanda of 11–12 May 1994, dated 19 May 1994. UN Document E/CN.4/S-3/3.

x. The United Nations and Rwanda 1993–1996. The United Nations Blue Books Series, Volume X (New York: Department of Public Information, United Nations, 1995).

---

[1] By memorandum dated 14 July 2000 and filed on the same date, the Prosecutor transmitted the Revised Memorial including Appendices A and B with the express intent that the Revised Memorial supersede and replace the Memorial. Accordingly, the Chamber did not consider the Memorial together with its Appendices A and B in its deliberations on the instant motion.

[2] Appended to the Defence Notice, is a copy of letter dated 10 July 2000 from the Registry informing the reader that Mr. Taku "will be on mission in Tanzania, France, Belgium, Holland, Norway and Germany during the moth of July, August and September 2000." (Emphasis in original). The letter does not indicate what portion of Mr. Taku's mission was to be spent in Tanzania.

[3] Prominent legal commentators have hailed the Bangladesh International Crimes (Tribunal) Act as a model of international due process. See Jordan J. Paust, M Cherif Bassiouni, et al., International Criminal Law: Cases and Materials, p. 751 (United States of America, 1996).

[4] The powers of the Bourgmestre of which the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice are described in the following Articles of Loi du 23 November 1963 (reprinted in Code et Loi du Rwanda, Reyntjens, F. et Gorus, J. eds. (1995): Art. 57 (the Bourgmestre is charged with the execution of the laws and regulations at the commune); Art. 38 (the Bourgmestre is nominated by the President of the Republic on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior); Art. 58(11) (the Bourgmestre is charged with exercising administrative control over civil servants or agents of the government assigned to the commune); and Art. 62, 103 and 104 (The Bourgmestre hire and is the sole authority over communal police. In addition, he may incarcerate anyone causing public disorder).

[5] Article 7 of the Statute of the Tribunal provides, in relevant portion: "The territorial jurisdiction of the [Tribunal] shall extend to the territory of Rwanda including its land surface and airspace as well as the territory of neighbouring States. . . . "

[6] See, Prosecutor v. Kambanda, ICTR-97-23-S, Judgement and Sentence, (4 September 1998) (defendant made wide variety of admissions of disputed facts in indictment as part of plea agreement); Prosecutor v. Serushago, ICTR-98-39-S, Sentence (5 February 1999) (defendant made many admissions incident to a plea agreement); and Prosecutor v. Musema, (ICTR-96-13-T), Judgement and Sentence (defendant made several admissions before trial, including admissions of existence of genocide, armed conflict and Tusti extermination) (27 January 2000).

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

2. Prosecutor v. Simic et al., IT-95-9-PT, Decision on the Pre-trial Motion by the Prosecution Requesting the Trial Chamber to take Judicial Notice of the International Character of the Conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina, 25 March 1999.

2539

IN THE TRIAL CHAMBER

Before:
Judge Richard May, Presiding
Judge Mohamed Bennouna
Judge Patrick Robinson

Registrar:
Mrs. Dorothee de Sampayo Garrido-Nijgh

Decision of:
25 March 1999

PROSECUTOR

v.

BLAGOJE SIMIC
MILAN SIMIC
MIROSLAV TADIC
STEVAN TODOROVIC
SIMO ZARIC

DECISION ON THE PRE-TRIAL MOTION BY THE PROSECUTION REQUESTING THE TRIAL CHAMBER TO TAKE JUDICIAL NOTICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CHARACTER OF THE CONFLICT IN BOSNIA-HERZEGOVINA

The Office of the Prosecutor

Ms. Anne-Birgitte Haslund
Ms. Mary MacFadyen
Ms. Nancy Paterson

Counsel for the accused

Mr. Branimir Avramovic for Milan Simic
Mr. IgorPantelic, for Miroslav Tadic
Mr. Deyan Ranko Brashich, for Stevan Todorovic
Mr. Borislav Pisarevic, for Simo Zaric

THIS TRIAL CHAMBER of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia Since 1991 ("the International Tribunal"),

25440

BEING SEISED of the Pre-Trial Motion by the Prosecution Requesting the Trial Chamber to Take Judicial Notice of the International Character of the Conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina ("the Motion"), filed by the Office of the Prosecutor ("the Prosecution") on 16 December 1998, and the Defence Response to the Motion filed by counsel for the accused Simi}, Tadi} and Zari} on 3 February 1999,

NOTING the written submissions of the parties and their oral arguments heard on 23 February 1999,

NOTING that, pursuant to Rules 73 and 94 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules"), the Prosecution requests the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of the international character of the armed conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina ("BiH") at least for the period starting on 6 March 1992 or at the latest by 6 April 1992, and ending at the earliest on 19 May 1992 ("international character of the conflict").

NOTING that the Prosecution submits that the international nature of the conflict is based on the facts that BiH declared its independence on 6 March 1992, which was internationally recognised in April 1992, and that at that time there was an armed conflict taking place on the BiH territory, in which the National Yugoslav Army (JNA), and the armed forces of another state, the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, was involved,

NOTING that the Prosecution bases its request alternatively on Rule 94(A) (facts of common knowledge) or Rule 94(B) (adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal),

NOTING FURTHER that as to Rule 94(A), the Prosecution submits that "because of the unanimous jurisprudence" of the Tribunal, the international character of the conflict is a fact of common knowledge or "at the very least" a fact of common knowledge "within this Tribunal", and that the international character of the conflict also is a historical fact of common knowledge,

NOTING that as to Rule 94(B), the Prosecution argues that the international character of the conflict is an adjudicated fact that was already determined in other proceedings before the Tribunal, that the judgements in the Tadic[1] and Celebici[2] cases addressing this issue fall within the scope of Rule 94(B), that if the issue at hand in both cases is not under appeal, it can be considered as final and thus be considered as an adjudicated fact,

NOTING that the Defence opposes the Motion and submits, based on a review of international and national practice, that a Trial Chamber may only take judicial notice of notorious facts which cannot be reasonably disputed, "or capable of immediate and accurate demonstration by resorting to readily accessible sources of indispensable accuracy", and that the issue of judicial notice should be approached in criminal proceedings "with great caution and care",

NOTING that the Defence contends that the character of the conflict in BiH is a controversial issue,

NOTING FURTHER that the Defence contends that the Tadi} and Celebici judgements cannot be considered as adjudicated facts under Rule 94(B) as the issue of the international character of the conflict is, or likely to be, under appeal in both judgements,

NOTING that the Defence further submits that judicial notice of the international character of the conflict would jeopardise the rights of the accused under Article 21 of the Tribunal's Statute, in particular their right to a fair trial and right to examine or have examined the evidence presented by the Prosecutor, and that the accused have a right to an independent determination of the facts at issue,

25L-1

NOTING that the Defence argues that the characterisation of the conflict is an issue of interpretation of historical facts which requires inter partes discussion, and that a Trial Chamber may not take judicial notice of legal conclusions by other Trial Chambers based on their interpretation of facts,

NOTING that during the hearing the Defence also made an oral offer of proof which was rejected by the Trial Chamber,

CONSIDERING that Sub-Rule 94(A) of the Rules provides that a Trial Chamber shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof, and that pursuant to Sub-Rule 94(B), a Trial Chamber, after hearing the parties, at the request of a party or proprio motu, may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to matters at issue in the current proceedings,

CONSIDERING that the issue is whether the Trial Chamber may take judicial notice of the international character of the conflict, i.e. whether the character of the conflict may be considered as either a fact of common knowledge, or an adjudicated fact for the purpose of judicial notice under Rule 94, and that this issue does not warrant, at this stage, examining the evidence on the character of the conflict,

CONSIDERING that the purpose of judicial notice under Rule 94 is judicial economy, that Rule 94 should be interpreted as covering facts not subject to reasonable dispute, and that a balance should be struck between judicial economy and the right of the accused to a fair trial,

CONSIDERING that the request is aimed at permitting the application of the counts of the indictment based on the grave breaches regime of the Geneva Convention (Article 2 of the Statute), as, according to the Tribunal's jurisprudence, the Prosecution must inter alia prove the existence of an international armed conflict for this purpose,

CONSIDERING as to the issue of the characterisation of the conflict, that the Appeals Chamber in its Jurisdiction Decision in the Tadi} case held that different conflicts of different nature took place in the former Yugoslavia and that it would be for each Trial Chamber, depending on the circumstances of each case, to make its own determination on the nature of the armed conflict upon the specific evidence presented to it,

CONSIDERING that along the lines of the Tribunal's jurisprudence on the binding character of other Trial Chambers' finding as to the international character of the conflict, these findings have no binding force except between the parties in respect of a particular case ("effet relatif de la chose jugée" in French), that the circumstances of each case are different, and that as regards the controversial issue of the nature of the conflict, which involve an interpretation of facts, both parties should be able to present arguments and evidence on them,

CONSIDERING FURTHER that Rule 94 is intended to cover facts and not legal consequences inferred from them, that the Trial Chamber can only take judicial notice of factual findings but not of a legal characterisation as such,

CONSIDERING however that (1) BiH's proclamation of independence on 6 March 1992, and (2) its recognition by the European Community on 6 April 1992 and by the United States on 7 April 1992, are facts of common knowledge under Sub-Rule 94(A) of which the Trial Chamber will proprio motu take judicial notice[3],

2542

PURSUANT TO Rules 73 and 94 of the Rules of the International Tribunal,

HEREBY DISMISSES THE MOTION as to judicial notice of the international character of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and proprio motu takes judicial notice of the following facts

1. Bosnia and Herzegovina proclaimed its independence from the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on 6 March 1992;
2. The independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a State was recognised by the European Community on 6 April 1992 and by the United States on 7 April 1992.

Done in English and French, the English text being authoritative.

_____

Richard May
Presiding Judge

Dated this twenty-fifth day of March 1999
At The Hague
The Netherlands

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

1. Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic, Opinion and Judgment, Case No. IT-94-1-T, 7 May 1997 ("Tadic judgment").
2. Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic et. al., Case No. IT-96-21-T, 16 November 1998 ("Celebici judgment")
3. See for instance Order on Prosecution Request for Judicial Notice, The Prosecutor v. Milan Kovacevic, Case no. IT-97-24-PT, 12 May 1998.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

3. Prosecutor v. Sikirica et al., IT-95-8-T, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, 27 September 2000.

2544

IN THE TRIAL CHAMBER

Before:
Judge Richard May, Presiding
Judge Mohamed Bennouna
Judge Patrick Robinson

Registrar:
Mrs. Dorothee de Sampayo Garrido-Nijgh

Order of:
27 September 2000

PROSECUTOR

v.

DUSKO SIKIRICA
DAMIR DOŠEN
DRAGAN KOLUNDŽIJA

DECISION ON PROSECUTION MOTION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE OF ADJUDICATED FACTS

Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Dirk Ryneveld
Mr. Daryl Mundis

Counsel for the Accused:

Mr. Veselin Londrovic, for Dusko Sikirica
Mr. Vladimir Petrovic, for Damir Došen
Mr. Dušan Vucicevic, for Dragan Kolundžija

THIS TRIAL CHAMBER of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 ("the International Tribunal"),

BEING SEISED of a "Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts" filed by the Office of the Prosecutor ("Prosecution") on 4 April 2000 ("First Motion"), in which it is proposed that judicial notice be taken of 561 facts from the Tadic and Celebici Judgments[1], NOTING the "Defence Response to Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts and Admission of Documentary Evidence", filed by the Defence for the accused Damir Došen on 26 May 2000 ("Došen Defence Response"),

2545

NOTING the "Kolundzija's Defence Response to Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts" filed by the Defence for the accused Dragan Kolundzija, on 26 May 2000 ("Kolundzija Defence Response"), NOTING the "Prosecution's Notice of Additional Authority in Support of the 'Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts' filed on 4 April 2000", filed by the OTP on 22 June 2000,

NOTING the initial appearance of the accused Duško Sikirica on 7 July 2000,

NOTING the "Order on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts" issued by the Trial Chamber on 1 August 2000, in which the OTP was ordered to serve a similar Motion on the Defence for the accused Duško Sikirica and the accused was ordered to respond to the Motion,

NOTING the "Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts as Against Duško Sikirica" filed on 7 August 2000 ("Second Motion") and "Defence Response to Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts and Admission of Documentary Evidence", filed by the Defence for the accused Duško Sikirica on 4 September 2000 ("Sikirica Defence Response"), HAVING HEARD the arguments of the parties in open session on 23 June and 15 September 2000,

NOTING the arguments of the Prosecution, inter alia, that

1. The Tadic and Celebici Judgments contain factual findings which are relevant to this case, including those from the Tadic Judgment relevant to events in the Prijedor municipality and the Omarska, Keraterm and Trnopolje camps;

2. The Tadic Judgment has been subjected to appellate scrutiny and none of the relevant facts set out in the Motions were contradicted by the findings of the Appeals Chamber;

3. The facts referred to in the Motions equate to adjudicated facts as envisaged by Rule 94 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules");

4. The facts referred to in the Motions establish the necessary background to place the crimes charged in context and are relevant to establishing a number of relevant matters, including:

(a) motive, intent, knowledge, preparation and planning by the accused;

(b) that there was a widespread or systematic attack on the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat population in the Prijedor municipality (an element of proof under Article 5 of the Statute of the International Tribunal ("Statute")) and that the operation of the Omarska, Keraterm and Trnopolje camps was one aspect of this attack;

(c) the maltreatment in the camps reflected the objective of the Bosnian Serb authorities to "ethnically cleanse" the area of Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats, amounting to persecution;

2546

(d) at the time of the commission of the crimes alleged there was an ongoing armed conflict in the Prijedor area;

5. Admission of the facts referred to in the Motions is consistent with the objective of judicial economy, is consistent with the rights of the accused and serve the interests of justice;

6. Admission of the facts referred to in the Motions would expedite the trial and reduce the resources required by the parties to present their cases; and

7. The Trial Chamber should apply the same rationale as Trial Chamber I in the Kvocka case[2], which, on the basis of 444 agreed facts, proceeded to make findings of law as to those facts and decided upon elements of the offences[3],

NOTING the position of the Defence for Damir Došen and Duško Sikirica that, of the facts set out in the Motions, 64 could be agreed, and the position of the Defence for Dragan Kolundzija that 101 of the facts set out in the Motions could be agreed,

NOTING that the Defence for the three accused each assert that the Motions should be otherwise rejected, arguing, inter alia, that

1. Rule 94 of the Rules relates to facts of common knowledge and the facts in the Motions cannot be so categorised;

2. The facts in the Motions are simplified, inaccurate and misleading and cannot form the basis for making conclusions about events relevant to the amended indictment in these proceedings;

3. The facts in the Motions directly imply individual criminal responsibility of the accused and, in fact, their acceptance would lead to an indirect plea of guilty by the accused;

4. The facts in the Motions taken from the Celebici judgment are not in the proper sense adjudicated as they are the subject of ongoing appellate proceedings;

5. The adoption of facts from the Tadic Judgment violate the right of an accused

(a) to challenge particular facts relevant to the circumstances of his own case;

(b) to challenge facts which in the Tadic case led to legal findings on the application of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute;

(c) because there was very little cross-examination in that trial on the facts now sought to be admitted as adjudicated facts;

6. The facts admitted under Rule 94 in the Kvocka case were admitted by agreement of the parties, which is not the case here; and

7. The admission of the facts in the Motions would have the effect of shifting the burden of proof onto the accused.

2547

NOTING that the Motion is made pursuant to Sub-rule 94 (B), which provides

> "...
>
> (B) At the request of a party or proprio motu, a Trial Chamber, after hearing the parties, may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to matters at issue in the current proceedings."

CONSIDERING that the purpose of judicial notice is to achieve judicial economy and a balance between judicial economy and the right of the accused to a fair trial must be achieved,

CONSIDERING that the Trial Chamber can only take judicial notice of facts which are not the subject of reasonable dispute and that facts involving interpretation or legal characterisations of facts are not capable of admission under Rule 94[4],

CONSIDERING that it is appropriate for the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of facts which are agreed between the parties,

CONSIDERING that, otherwise, the facts which are sought to be admitted by the Prosecution pursuant to Rule 94 (B) are mainly facts which can be characterised either as controversial, or involving legal conclusions or mixed findings of fact and law,

CONSIDERING that the Prosecution also invites the Trial Chamber to draw legal conclusions from the facts sought to be admitted on the basis that this was done by another Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal,

CONSIDERING FURTHER that this Trial Chamber is not bound by decisions of another Trial Chamber and that it is not the purpose of Rule 94 (B) to allow findings on contested matters of law at this stage of the proceedings, the purpose of Rule 94 (B) being to narrow the factual issues in dispute in the relevant proceedings,

CONSIDERING that the Prosecution seek to have admitted under Rule 94 (B) findings of fact from two judgments, one of which is the subject of an uncompleted appeal and that, as regards facts which involve interpretation, both parties should be able to present arguments and evidence on them,

PERSUANT TO Rule 94

HEREBY ALLOWS the Motions in respect of the following facts set out in the Annex to the First Motion which are agreed between the parties:

Paragraphs 1, 2, 5, 11, 12, 13, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 35, 37, 38, 39, 41, 46, 63, 78, 79, 80, 83, 84, 85, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 113, 115, 119, 120, 123, 126, 127, 268, 269, of which the Trial Chamber will take judicial notice.

AND OTHERWISE DENIES the Motion.

Done in English and French, the English text being authoritative.

Richard May
Presiding

2543

Dated this twenty-seventh day September of 2000
At The Hague
The Netherlands

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

1. Prosecutor v. Duško Tadic, "Opinion and Judgment", Case No. IT-94-1-T, 7 May 1997; Prosecutor v Zejnil Delalic & Ors., "Judgement", Case No. IT-96-21-T, 16 Novemebr 1998.
2. Prosecutor v. Kvocka & Ors., "Decision on Judicial Notice", Case No. IT-98-30-1-T, 8 June 2000 (hereafter "Kvocka Decision").
3. Ibid. This argument appears in "Prosecution's Notice of Additional Authority in Support of the 'Prosecution's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts'", 4 April 2000 and the Transcript of these proceedings, 23 June 2000, in particular page 359.
4. See, for example, Prosecutor v. Blagoje Simic & Ors., "Decision on the Pre-Trial Motion by the Prosecution Requesting the Trial Chamber to take Judicial Notice of the International Character of the Conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina", Case No. IT-95-9-PT, 25 March 1999.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

4. Prosecutor v. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali (ICTR-97-21-T), Prosecutor v. Nsabimana and Nteziryayo (ICTR-97-29A and B-T), Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi (ICTR-96-15-T), Prosecutor v. Ndayambaje (ICTR-96-8-T), 98-42-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence, 15 May 2002.

2550

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda
Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda

United Nations
Nations Unies

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Or. Eng.

Before:
Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding
Judge Winston C. Matanzima Maqutu
Judge Arlette Ramaroson

Registrar: Adama Dieng

Date: 15 May 2002

The PROSECUTOR
v.
Pauline NYIRAMASUHUKO
and Arsène Shalom NTAHOBALI
Case No. ICTR-97-21-T

The PROSECUTOR
v.
Sylvain NSABIMANA
and
Alphonse NTEZIRYAYO
Case No. ICTR-97-29A and B-T

The PROSECUTOR
v.
Joseph KANYABASHI
Case No. ICTR-96-15-T

The PROSECUTOR
v.
Elie NDAYAMBAJE
Case No. ICTR-96-8-T

(Case No. 98-42-T)

DECISION ON THE PROSECUTOR'S MOTION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE AND ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE

25551

The Office of the Prosecutor
Silvana Arbia
Japhet Mono
Jonathan Moses
Adesola Adeboyejo
Gregory Townsend
Manuel Bouwknecht

Counsel for Kanyabashi
Michel Marchand
Michel Boyer

Counsel for Ndayambaje
Pierre Boulé

Counsel for Nsabimana
Josette Kadji
Charles PatieTchakoute

Counsel for Nteziryayo
Titinga Frédéric Pacere
Richard Perras

Counsel for Nyiramasuhuko
Nicole Bergevin
Guy Poupart

Counsel for Ntahobali:
Duncan Mwanyumba
Normand Marquis

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal");

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Winston C. Matanzima Maqutu and Judge Arlette Ramaroson (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED OF

(i) The "Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", with Annexes A, B and C, and the "Prosecutor's Book of Authorities for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 23 May 2001 (the "Motion");

(ii) The "Addendum to Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence" containing all available documents in French from the "Prosecutor's Book of Authorities", filed on 6 June 2001 (the "Addendum");

CONSIDERING the following submissions;

2552

For Kanyabashi:

(a) The "Requête urgente demandant un délai supplémentaire pour produire une réponse à la requête du Procureur visant à obtenir un constat judiciaire[1]", filed on 31 May 2001;

(b) The "Preliminary Response by the Accused Joseph Kanyabashi to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice", filed on 6 June 2001 followed by the "Prosecutor's Reply to Kanyabashi's Preliminary Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 7 June 2001;

(c) The "Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 13 July 2001, followed by the "Prosecutor's Reply to Kanyabashi's Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", with amended Annexes attached on 20 July 2001;

(d) The "Requête de Joseph Kanyabashi demandant la permission de produire une duplique à la réplique du Procureur concernant la requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de preuve", [2] filed on 30 July 2001;

(e) Noting Counsel's letter to the Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber II concerning mistakes in the translation of his response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice dated 10 September 2001;

For Nyiramasuhuko and Ndayambaje:

(a) The "Motion by the Accused Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Élie Ndayambaje to Rule Inadmissible the Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 30 May 2001, followed by the "Prosecutor's Response to Nyiramasuhuko and Ndayambaje's Motion to have Ruled Inadmissible the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 4 June 2001;

(b) The "Réponse préliminaire à la requête du Procureur aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles", filed on 21 August followed by "Premier des compléments de la réponse à la requête du Procureur aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles", [3] filed on 22 August 2001;

(c) The "Réponse de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la requête du Procureur aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles"[4], filed on 21 August 2001;

(d) Noting the "Requête d'extrême urgence sollicitant l'autorisation de déposer une duplique à la réplique du Procureur à la réponse de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles, aux vues d'éléments nouveaux n'apparaissant pas dans la requête initiale du procureur" as well as a "Duplique de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la réplique du Procureur à notre réponse à sa requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles" [5], filed on 12 September 2001;

(e) Noting the "Requête en extrême urgence aux fins d'obtenir de la Chambre II une audition des parties sur la question du constat judiciaire et d'admission de preuve (articles 73, 89, 94 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve et Article 20 du Statut)"[6], filed on 17

2553

September 2001 in which Counsel for Ndayambaje requested a hearing on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice;

For Nsabimana:

(a) The "Response by the Defence to the Prosecutor's Motion of 23 May 2001 for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence," filed on 7 June 2001 by Accused Sylvain Nsabimana followed by the "Prosecutor's Reply to Nsabimana's Response to the Prosecutor's Motion Filed 23 May 2001 for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", on 13 June 2001;

(b) The "Supplementary Submissions by S. Nsabimana on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 20 June 2001 followed by the "Prosecutor's Reply to Nsabimana's Supplementary Observations to the Prosecutor's Motion Filed 23 May 2001 for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", on 25 June 2001;

(c) The "Responses by Sylvain Nsabimana to the Prosecutor's Motions of 23 May and 5 July 2001, for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 7 August 2001;

For Nteziryayo:

(a) The "Response of the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo to the Prosecutor's Motion of 23 May 2001 for Judicial Notice", filed on 27 June 2001 which was followed by the "Réponse de l'Accusé Alphonse Nteziryayo à la requête du Procureur aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de prevue"[7], filed on 21 August 2001;

(b) The "Réplique à 'Prosecutor's Supplemental Reply in Support of her Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence' uniquement sur la question des délais",[8] filed on 13 September 2001, in which Counsel reiterates that Nteziryayo's Reply was sent on 20 August 2001 within the prescribed time frames;

For Ntahobali:

The "Reply to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 21 August 2001;

For the Prosecutor:

(a) The "Prosecutor's Supplemental Reply in Support of Her Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 3 September 2001;

(b) The "Prosecutor's Additional Reply in Support of Her Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 18 September 2001;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Prosecutor's Motion for a Scheduling Order for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", filed on 5 July 2001, which the Chamber acknowledges has been withdrawn following the Prosecutor's request made at paragraph 23 of her Reply to Kanyabashi's Response. This was followed the "Reiteration of the Withdrawal of the Prosecutor's Motion for a Scheduling Order for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence," filed on 31 July 2001. This Scheduling Motion is thereby declared moot.

2554

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rules 73, 89 and 94;

HAVING HEARD the Parties on 16 November 2001,

HEREBY DECIDES THE MOTION

I. Preliminary Issues

i) Background

1. The Prosecutor filed a Motion with attached Annexes in English on 23 May 2001. Thereafter, the Defence for Accused Kanyabashi, Ndayambaje, Nteziryayo, Nsabimana, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali in the "Butare Cases" filed written Responses and/or Counter Motions.

2. Having heard the Parties on 16 November 2001, the Chamber finds that all Defence Requests to publicly hear the Parties on the Motion are declared moot.

3. Initially, Counsel for the Defence requested a translation of the Motion into French as well as an extension of the deadline to respond. Counsel argued that, pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute and Rule 3 of the Rules, the Accused should receive the Motion and its Annexes in French, a language understood by both Counsel and the Accused.

4. By memorandum dated 12 July 2001, the Chamber directed the Registry to inform the Parties that Defence Counsel should file their replies to the Motion by 20 August 2001 and that the Prosecutor should file a response to the replies by 3 September 2001. The Chamber also directed the Registry to translate immediately the Motion and its Annexes into French.

5. Consequently, the Chamber considers that all requests for extension of time for filing responses to the Motion were rendered moot, given the extension of time until 20 August 2001. The Chamber admits all responses faxed on 20 August 2001 and subsequently filed by the Registry on 21 August 2001. Exceptionally, the Chamber has considered the further substantial submission by Counsel for Ndayambaje ("Premier des compléments de la réponse à la requête du Procureur aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles"[9]) filed on 22 August 2001, which appears to have been faxed on 21 August 2001, after notice of late filing was given by the Defence.

6. In view of the prescribed deadlines and the fact that Counsel for Nyiramasuhuko exercised his right to respond, the Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's "Requête d'extrême urgence sollicitant l'autorisation de déposer une duplique à la réplique du Procureur à la réponse de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles, aux vues d'éléments nouveaux n'apparaissant pas dans la requête initiale du procureur", filed on 12 September 2001. Accordingly, the Chamber will not consider the "Duplique de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la réplique du Procureur à notre réponse à sa requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles", also filed on 12 September 2001.

ii) Timing of Filing of the Motion

7. Certain Defence Counsel objected to the filing of the Motion so close to the commencement of trial and argued that the Prosecutor had failed to act with diligence. The Defence maintain that if the Chamber rules on the Motion after commencement of trial, such Decision would infringe upon the rights of the Accused to know the basis for cross examination of Prosecution witnesses. Consequently, the Defence request the dismissal of the Motion.

8. The Prosecutor refutes this objection and argues inter alia that there is no time limit under Rule 94 and recalls that the "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Presumptions of Facts Pursuant to Rules 94 and 54" was rendered after the commencement of trial (the Prosecutor v. Semanza, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 3 November 2000, the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000").

9. The Chamber agrees with the Prosecutor that there is no time prescription under Rule 94 of the Rules and, accordingly, denies the "Motion by Accused Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Elie Ndayambaje to Rule Inadmissible the Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence".

II. The Motion

(i) The Prosecution

10. The Prosecutor recalls that the Defence have not made any legal or factual admissions. On that basis, the Prosecutor requests that the Chamber take judicial notice, pursuant to Rule 94 of the Rules, of the facts set out in Annexes A and B.

11. Pursuant to Rule 94(A) of the Rules, the Prosecutor requests that the Chamber take judicial notice of the facts set out in Annex A and of the content of the documents listed in Annex B because they are of "common knowledge." In support of her argument, the Prosecutor submits a "Book of Authorities."

12. Pursuant to Rule 94(B) of the Rules, the Prosecutor requests that the Chamber take judicial notice of "adjudicated facts" in Annexes A and B, as facts set out in Annex A may also constitute "adjudicated facts". The Prosecutor submits that Annex B consists of "documentary evidence from other proceedings" which has previously appeared in various judgements of the Tribunal and could therefore be judicially noticed under the said sub-Rule.

13. Alternatively, under Rule 89(B) of the Rules, the Prosecutor requests the Chamber to take judicial notice of the facts and documents in Annex A and B to which Rule 94(B) cannot be applied, in accordance with fair and general principles of law.

14. Relying on Rule 89(C) of the Rules, the Prosecutor also requests the Chamber to admit as evidence the documents contained in Annex C to her Motion, consisting of internationally recognised official United Nations (UN) documents or humanitarian reports.

15. The Prosecutor relies upon the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (the "ICTY") as well as on the doctrine of judicial notice. The Prosecutor submits that she seeks to ensure judicial economy and uniformity of judgements on general facts regarding the events in Rwanda. She emphasises that, efficiency and economy are of great importance in the "Butare Cases", given the large number of Accused jointly tried.

16. The Prosecutor does not request that the Tribunal take judicial notice of ultimate facts in the present case that directly attest to the alleged guilt of any of the six Accused. On the contrary, the Prosecutor contends that taking judicial notice will not prejudice any Party to these proceedings.

(ii) The Replies by the Defence

2556

Criteria of Notoriety:

17. The Defence argue that sub-Rules 94 (A) and (B) are subject to the same criteria, namely that only a notorious fact, which cannot be contested by a "reasonable man", can be judicially noticed. Counsel for the Defence submit that the scope of Rule 94(A) is more restrictive than that of Article 21 of the Nuremberg Charter quoted by the Prosecutor and should be limited to "matters which are so notorious, or clearly established, or susceptible of demonstration by reference to a readily obtainable and authoritative source that evidence of their existence is unnecessary" (Quoting Archbold, Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice, 2000, para. 10-71, page 1213).

Criteria of Specificity (Rule 94 A):

18. The Defence argue that accuracy is the essence of judicial notice and that the Tribunal's authority to alter the Prosecutor's submissions cannot be used in relation to disputable facts in respect of time, location or over-generalisations. Unclear facts cannot constitute facts of "common knowledge", which is the only proper basis for judicial notice. Most Defence Counsel contest all facts referred to in parts I, II and V of Annex A for, inter alia, their imprecision and contestable nature which could prejudice the Accused. The Defence maintain that the factual admissions sought by the Prosecutor are not of a general historical nature and differ from those of which judicial notice was taken in the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000". The Defence argue that the sources on which the Prosecutor relies in seeking judicial notice of notorious facts are incorrect. Specifically, the Defence question the use of the Steering Committee Reports which have never been entered into evidence before this Tribunal or challenged by any Defence Counsel.

Objection to Facts Directly Supporting an Indictment:

19. The Defence allege that some facts in Annex A directly support counts of the Indictment and should not therefore be considered as "common knowledge". Rather, these facts must be discussed following a proper adversarial proceeding consistent with the provisions of Rule 89(B) of the Rules. Elements of an offence or elements that tend to prove the guilt of an Accused should not be judicially noticed.

Annex B:

20. The Defence argue that the Prosecution erroneously reads Rule 94(A): the expression "proof of facts" is applicable not to documents, but only to facts which are unalterable, impersonal and do not require supplementary proof. Generally, Counsel for the Defence do not object to judicially notice documents which cites Rwandan Laws, if such documents do not refer to interpretation or enforcement of the laws by Rwandan tribunals. Accordingly, judicial notice can be taken only of the materiality of these norms without reference to their applicability, and only if these laws and regulations contain any successive modifications.

Annex C- Authenticity of Documents:

21. With regard to the request pursuant to Rule 89(C) and 94(B) for judicial notice of documents in Annex C, certain Counsel argue that they have not been afforded the opportunity to verify the authenticity of the documents for which the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice or admission into evidence because they have not been served with the documents. Counsel for Nteziryayo argues that to take judicial notice of facts contained in official reports will be an arbitrary endeavour contrary to the finding of individual responsibility. Counsel maintains that the Prosecutor has not demonstrated that she should depart from the established rules of evidence, namely, admissibility and probative value. Defence Counsel submit that an opinion or a conclusion of a legal nature is not acceptable as evidence unless submitted by an Expert Witness. Counsel further argue that there is no general consensus about the weight to be afforded of UN documents.

2557

Judicial Notice of Genocide:

22. The Defence recall the wording of the Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000 where the Chamber held that the existence of a genocide in Rwanda is so fundamental that it requires the submission of formal proof rather than a judicial notice process and that, a Chamber may take judicial notice of the authenticity of documents without taking judicial notice of their contents. The Defence argue that in the Akayesu and the Kayishema & Ruzindana Judgements, the judicially noticed facts were general historical facts and a combination of law and fact pertaining to the existence of genocide in 1994 in Rwanda, which was not imputable to the guilt of any of the accused. The Defence object to judicial notice of the crime of genocide or incitement to commit genocide in Rwanda in 1994, as these crimes must be proved.

Rule 94(B):

23. The Defence, quoting the ICTY Sikirica Decision of 27 September 2000, maintain that most of the facts alleged by the Prosecutor do not arise from final judgements, contrary to doctrine and jurisprudence. Moreover, several Counsel allege that the judgements rendered in previous cases by the ICTY and the ICTR are not conclusive in the present case. Other counsel reject the use by the Prosecutor of the Appeals Chamber's decisions in the Akayesu and Kayishema and Ruzindana cases, and argue that each decision has only confirmed the guilt of each Accused and should therefore be considered only as res judicata in respect of each particular case, and not in respect of each factual finding made in these judgements. The Chamber is also cautioned to be prudent when looking at the definitive judgements against Akayesu, Kayishema and Ruzindana with regard to facts which were not challenged by the Defence by way of cross-examination, or which are collateral or foreign to the specific charges brought against the present six Accused, or could be contentious or even prejudicial in a trial involving six accused holding different functions during the alleged events. Moreover, the Defence argue that the facts to which Rule 94(B) may apply cannot flow from guilty pleas or from facts which were voluntarily admitted by an accused. This is made clear in the Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000. Finally, following the ICTY in the Simic Decision of 25 March 1999, the Defence indicate that Rule 94 is not intended to cover legal consequences inferred from facts. The Defence further argue that the Prosecutor attempts to by-pass the Semanza Decisions on judicial notice by inviting the Chamber to take judicial notice of both legal findings and of the intent-or mens rea-constitutive of the crimes.

Rule 89 (B):

24. The Defence maintain that, under the general principal of law generalibus specialia derogant and pursuant to Rule 94, which is a special Rule governing Judicial Notice, Rule 89 (B) is therefore inapplicable. The Defence recall that such has been the interpretation of the Rules in the Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000.

Expert witnesses reports:

25. The Defence for Nteziryayo argue that judicial notice should not be taken of facts supported by reports of expert witnesses that will be called to testify at trial, such as experts Desforges and Guichaoua.

2558

(iii) Prosecution's Replies

26. In her Reply to Kanyabashi's Responses, the Prosecutor has submitted Amended Annexes A, B and C; these Annexes, which incorporate changes in selected paragraphs, were subsequently itemised in the Prosecutor's Addendum filed on 6 June 2001.

27. The Prosecutor maintains that there is no uniformly consistent application of Rule 94 in the jurisprudence of either ad hoc tribunal. Indeed, under Rule 94(A), matters of common knowledge shall be subject to judicial notice, whereas adjudicated facts pursuant to Rule 94(B) may be subject to judicial notice (their emphasis).

28. As to judicial notice of facts listed in Annex A, the Prosecutor argues that judicial notice can be taken of selective facts that are relevant to the case. The Prosecutor further maintains that she has no duty to "ensure accurate representation of events throughout Rwanda in 1994". Moreover, the Prosecutor submits that the Rules do not require any degree of specificity for judicial notice of adjudicated facts or facts of common knowledge. Finally, the Prosecutor relies on the Chamber's authority to act proprio motu to alter the wording of the facts, as did Trial Chamber III in the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000" to render the fact "sufficiently notorious to be judicially noticed".

29. In relation to the various facts contested by the Defence, the Prosecutor argues inter alia, that some of the paragraphs in Amended Annex A are directly taken from judgements affirmed by the Appeals Chamber and have therefore acquired the status of adjudicated facts or constitute common knowledge. Alternatively, the Prosecutor invites the Chamber to find a better wording, but in any case, finds the Defence's submissions without any merit.

30. The Prosecution considers it to be anomalous that Rule 94 should be used to limit questions of fact that are appropriately adjudicated in previous cases of common knowledge but not questions of law, particularly when the two are almost impossible to distinguish.

31. With regard to adjudicated facts, the Prosecutor submits that public notoriety is not a necessary element of judicial notice under Sub-Rule 94(B). The Prosecutor accepts the Defence contention that facts voluntarily admitted by an accused do not constitute "adjudicated facts" within the meaning of Rule 94(B). Rather, the Rule allows a Trial Chamber to rely on "adjudicated" facts without further qualification or agreement between parties as a pre-requisite. The Prosecution refers to the adjudicated facts in the final Judgements in Akayesu, Kayishema & Ruzindana, Kambanda, Serushago and Ruggiu.

32. With regard to judicial notice of legal conclusions not involving mens rea listed in Amended Annex A, the Prosecutor maintains that the legal conclusions are facts of common knowledge or authoritatively adjudicated facts and that there should be no prejudice to the accused if those conclusions do not prove the guilt of the accused. As to judicial notice of mens rea, pursuant to Sub-Rules 94(A) and (B), the Prosecutor reiterates that it would be anomalous to take only judicial notice of the factual elements of a crime when a crime can be established only when the factual elements are combined with the requisite mens rea. Accordingly, the Prosecutor's arguments depart from the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000".

33. On the basis of the above reasoning the Prosecutor addresses the specific facts contained in Amended Annexes A, B and C. Amended Annex A contains minor changes in the wording of six factual allegations (paras. 5, 22, 29, 40, 43 and 79) and includes additional references in support of six other facts (paras. 1, 10, 21, 28 and 74), while Amended Annexes B and C incorporate changes previously made in the Addendum. Regarding Amended Annex A, the Prosecutor agrees that not every fact in the documents rises to the level of common knowledge. Therefore, she does not rely on any one document but rather on a range of authoritative sources, which, all together, establish that the propositions are of common knowledge to a reasonable person. However, the Prosecutor maintains that the Defence is free to examine experts on all matters relating to the specific application of the facts contained in Amended Annex A to the events in Butare.

2559

34. In relation to admission into evidence of documents contained in Amended Annex C, the Prosecutor argues that, pursuant to Rule 89 (C), these documents are thereby afforded a "lower level of significance before the trial Chamber" than the very same documents were allowed in previous jurisprudence.

35. The Prosecutor prays the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of facts contained in amended Annexes A and B as facts of common knowledge, pursuant to Rule 94(A), or as adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings pursuant to Rule 94(B) or in accordance with fair and general principles of law pursuant to Rule 89(B); and to admit into evidence the documents listed in amended Annex C under Rule 89(C).

AFTER HAVING DELIBERATED,

Rule 94: Judicial Notice

(A) A Trial Chamber shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof.

(B) At the request of a party or proprio motu, a Trial Chamber, after hearing the parties, may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to the matter at issue in the current proceedings.

36. The Chamber first recalls that when taking judicial notice "a balance between judicial economy and the right of the accused to a fair trial must be achieved"[10]. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the facts presented in Annex A were not agreed upon through any admission process. Indeed, the Chamber notes that almost all facts listed in Annex A of the Motion are contested by the Defence.

37. The Chamber notices that, in its submissions, the Prosecution has failed to clearly identify for each of the 80 facts listed in Annex A, whether it seeks judicial notice of those facts as "facts of common knowledge" (Rule 94(A)) or as "adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings" (Rule 94 (B)). As indicated in the Decision of 22 November 2001 on judicial notice in the Ntakirutimana Cases (ICTR-96-10-T and ICTR-96-17-T), facts of common knowledge and adjudicated facts "constitute different, albeit possibly overlapping categories: a fact of common knowledge is not necessarily an adjudicated fact, and vice versa". The Chamber is of the opinion that one of the purposes of judicial notice is to ensure judicial economy. However, the Prosecutor's Motion, which requested the Chamber to assess or to reformulate 80 submissions as to their qualifications as facts of common knowledge or adjudicated facts, did not promote judicial economy.

38. With regard to judicial notice of facts, pursuant to Rule 94(A), the Chamber notes that the expression "common knowledge" was interpreted in the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000" to be "those facts which are not subject to reasonable dispute including, common or universally known facts, such as general facts of history, generally known geographical facts and the law of nature" as defined in various legal textbooks. This Decision further states that: "[F]or the present purposes, common knowledge encompasses those facts that are generally known within a tribunal's territorial jurisdiction"[11] and that "once a Trial Chamber deems a fact to be of common knowledge under Rule

2560

94, it must determine also that the matter is reasonably indisputable"[12]. The same Chamber adds that "there is no requirement that a matter be universally accepted in order to qualify for judicial notice"[13]. Nonetheless, the same Chamber rejected the use of judicial notice for unadorned legal conclusions.[14]

39. The Chamber is of the opinion that judicial notice of facts which can be characterised either as controversial or which involve drawing legal findings from the facts sought to be admitted or from their interpretation, shall not be judicially noticed. Judicial notice shall only be taken of facts that are not subject to reasonable dispute and "that facts involving interpretation or legal characterisations of facts are not capable of admission under Rule 94"[15]. Disputable facts should not form part of the proceedings by way of judicial notice but should be determined after the Parties have submitted their evidence which will subsequently be discussed by the opposing Party following an adversarial procedure. (Our emphasis).

40. The Chamber notes that, pursuant to Rule 94(B) of the Rules, the facts that may be judicially noticed must have been adjudicated in other proceedings and must relate to matters at stake in the current proceedings. As stated in the Ntakirutimana Decision of 22 December 2001, "unlike Rule 94 (A), litra (B) therefore is discretionary. It is for the Chamber to decide whether justice is best served by its taking judicial notice of adjudicated facts." Concurring with the Appeals Chamber Decision in the Kupreskic case, the Chamber is of the view that pursuant to Rule 94 (B), it may not take judicial notice of findings of fact from judgements that are the subject of an uncompleted appeal[16], or of judgements based on guilty pleas, or of admissions made by the accused during the trial. (Our emphasis).

JUDICIAL NOTICE OF FACTS IN ANNEX A

Historical Description of Events Prior to 1994 (1 to 40)

1. Prior to 1897, Rwanda was a complex and advanced monarchy.

41. The Defence contest the term "advanced", its implications and the authorities quoted.

42. The Prosecution considers that the distinction is pedantic and indicates that it is taken directly from the Akayesu Judgement affirmed by the Appeals Chamber. Nevertheless, if the Chamber disagrees, the word advanced could be deleted.

2. The monarch ruled the country through his official representatives who were drawn from Tutsi nobility.

3. The kingdom of Rwanda was marginally administered by Germany until 1899.

43. The Defence allege that the date is erroneous according to the sources, and that there is lack of agreement as to the date until when the Federal Republic of Germany administered Rwanda. The information should not be considered as common knowledge

4. After World War I, the League of Nations mandated Belgium to administer the country.

5. In the early 1930's, the Belgians instituted a system of national identification cards bearing the terms Hutu, Tutsi and Twa under the category of ethnicity.

44. The Defence submit that the temporal reference is vague and that the wording suggests that it was the Belgians who categorised the Rwandans into three main ethnic groups.

2561

45. The Prosecution maintains that all the authorities quoted indicate the early 30's as a reference and that such a sentence does not indicate that the Belgians created the separate ethnic groups. The Prosecutor alleges that the information is both common knowledge and an adjudicated fact.

6. In 1946, Rwanda became a Belgian trust territory under the United Nations.

7. The revolution of 1959 marked the beginning of a period of ethnic clashes between the Hutu and the Tutsi in Rwanda, causing hundreds of Tutsi to die and thousands more to flee the country in the years immediately following.

46. The Defence indicate that there were ethnic clashes in the past and that 1959 does not mark the beginning of conflicts even if it is a turning point. This information is therefore not neutral.

47. The Prosecution maintains that this paragraph does not purport that all ethnic conflict started in 1959 and should therefore not be considered as being a partial reflection of reality.

8. The revolution of 1959 led to the abolition of the monarchy, the removal of all Tutsi political and administrative structures and the establishment of the First Republic in 1961.

9. Legislative elections held in September 1961 confirmed the dominant position of the, essentially Hutu, MDR-PARMEHUTU (Mouvement Démocratique Républicain-Parti du Mouvement d'Emancipation Hutu), led by Grégoire Kayibanda, who was subsequently elected President of the Republic by the Legislative Assembly on 26 October 1961.

48. The Defence indicate that the date at which Kayibanda became President is controversial in view of the judgement references.

10. The MDR-PARMEHUTU was the only party to present candidates in the elections of 1965.

49. The Defence allege that none of the references supports this assertion, which cannot therefore be considered as a fact of common knowledge.

50. The Prosecution indicates that this is indeed a fact of common knowledge and adjudicated and supported by the Steering Committee reference omitted in their submissions.

11. The early part of 1973, the First Rwandan Republic, which was under the domination of the Hutu of central and southern Rwanda, was again marked by ethnic violence.

51. The Defence allege that this is not a true reflection of the historical reality of the time as this period was marked by rivalry between the Hutus from the north and the people from the central region who were in power.

52. The Prosecution cites Akayesu and Kayishema and Ruzindana Judgements in support of this fact but would be content if the Chamber substituted a suitable alternative wording.

12. The ethnic confrontations in 1973 prompted another mass exodus of the Tutsi minority from the country, as had occurred between 1959 and 1963.

2562

53. In light of the authorities cited, the Defence allege that the contention that a mass Tutsi exodus in 1973 similar to the one that allegedly occurred between 1959 and 1963, is unsupported.

54. The Prosecution indicates an omission to the Steering Committee as well as to the Kayishema and Ruzindana Judgement in support of this proposition. The Prosecution further maintains that it is ludicrous to suggest that the crises that led to the various exodi were caused by anything but ethnic confrontations.

13. Many exiled Tutsi made violent incursions back into Rwanda from neighbouring countries.

55. The Defence allege that this paragraph is controversial insofar as the references to both the time and the neighbouring countries, from where the exiled Tutsis allegedly staged violent incursions, are vague.

56. The Prosecution argues that there is no requirement in the Rules about the degree of specificity and that this information does not go to prove the guilt of the accused.

14. The word Inyenzi, meaning cockroach, came to be used to refer to Tutsi.

57. The Defence indicate that this allegation is not supported by most references particularly concerning the period of the late 1960s or early 1970s.

58. The Prosecution accepts that the term was initially used only to describe armed Tutsi groups making incursions from neighbouring countries but that the word came to be used to refer to all Tutsi and is an adjudicated fact

15. On 5 July 1973, General Juvénal Habyarimana seized power in a military coup.

59. The Defence indicate that the Chamber must hear further evidence to establish a complete and unbiased fact; otherwise, the burden of proof will shift if judicial notice is taken.

60. The Prosecution, quoting Akayesu, contests that this fact is incomplete and biased.

16. In 1975, Juvènal Habyarimana founded the Mouvement Révolutionnaire National pour le Développement (MRND).

17. Juvènal Habyarimana assumed the position of Chairman of the Mouvement Révolutionnaire National pour le Développement (MRND).

18. Every Rwandan was automatically a member of the MRND from birth.

19. From 1973 to 1994, the government of President Habyarimana used a system of ethnic and regional quotas which was supposed to provide educational and employment opportunities for all.

61. The Defence allege that none of the three references submitted supports such assertions, which are not common knowledge, and that the Kayishema and Ruzindana Judgement indicates that this system was abolished in November 1990.

2563

62. The Prosecution indicates that the proposition relating to the dates of the quota systems rely refers to the years that President Habyarimana was in power. The Prosecution does not object to the deletion of the date reference, if the Chamber so decides.

20. The quota system was in fact used increasingly to discriminate against both Tutsi and Hutu from regions outside the north-west of Rwanda.

63. The Defence submit that none of the Prosecution's references supports such assertion.

64. The Prosecution refers to the commentary in support of facts19 and 20.

21. Among the privileged elite, an inner circle of relatives and close associates of President Habyarimana and his wife, Agathe Kanziga, known as the Akazu, enjoyed great power.

65. The Defence allege that the references submitted do not refer to the wife of the President.

66. The Prosecution maintains that several cited books refer to the President's wife in the context of the Akazu.

22. Some Tutsi exiles formed a political organisation called the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF).

67. The Defence state that it is incorrect to assert that "Tutsi exiles" formed the RPF and that this assertion is undermined by the Judgement references.

68. The Prosecutor has amended the words "the Tutsi exiles" by the phrase "some Tutsi exiles".

23. The RPF was a politico-military opposition organisation.

69. The Defence argue that the first three references submitted to the Chamber (including Akayesu, Kayishema & Ruzindana) do not contain any suggestion that the RPF attack of October 1990 played a role in the introduction of the multiparty system and the adoption of a new constitution. Only the Steering Committee seems to make reference to this point.

70. The Prosecution alleges that the authorities cited establish that this is a fact of common knowledge.

24. The RPF's military wing was called the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA)

25. On 1 October 1990, the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) attacked Rwanda.

26. Within days after the 1 October 1990 invasion of the RPF, government began arresting thousands of people.

27. Tutsi and Hutu political opponents were the main target of the arrests following the RPF invasion of 1 October 1990.

2564

28. Following pressure from the internal opposition, the international community and the RPF attack of October 1990, President Habyarimana permitted the introduction of multiple political parties and the adoption of a new constitution on 10 June 1991.

29. The emergence of multipartyism resulted in the establishment of four political parties in Rwanda: the MRND (Mouvement Républicain National pour la Démocratie et le Développement), the MDR (Mouvement Démocratique Républicain), the PSD (Parti Social-Démocrate) and the PL (Parti Libéral).

71. The Defence assert that paragraph 29 is in dispute and that there were five established parties, the fifth being the Parti Démocrate Chrétien (PDC). The Defence further allege that, according to the expert Professor Guichaoua, the CDR was founded in March 1992. It is therefore a disputable fact.

72. The Prosecution deletes the reference to the CDR (Coalition pour la Défense de la République).

30. The first transitional government following the 1991 constitutional reforms was made up almost exclusively of MRND members, following the refusal of the main opposition parties to take part.

73. The Defence indicate that from the references given, the Chamber should infer that the main opposition parties expressed dissatisfaction because of the composition of the first transitional government.

74. As an alternative, the Prosecution consents to the deletion of the words "following the refusal of the main opposition parties to take part" should this reference not rise to the required level of common knowledge.

31. With the second transitional government formed in April 1992, the MRND became a minority party for the first time in its history, with nine (9) ministerial portfolios out of nineteen (19).

75. According to the Defence, the reference indicates that the real power remained in the hands of the President and his MRND representatives.

76. The Prosecution maintains that the second transitional government is a minority because it has fewer seats and this is not a comment on the de facto power that the party had.

32. Even in the second transitional government, the MRND retained its domination over local administration.

77. The Defence submit that this is a sweeping assertion that cannot be found in Akayesu or in Mr. Ndiaye's report.

78. The Prosecution submits that the proposition is of common knowledge to the reasonable person.

33. The new transitional government of 1992 then entered negotiations with the RPF, which resulted in the signing of the Arusha Accords on 4 August 1993.

34. Among other things, the Arusha Accords provided for the following:

2565

(a) The integration of both the government's Forces Armées Rwandaises (FAR) and the RPF into the Rwandan National Army.

(b) The new national army was to be limited to 13,000 men, 60% FAR (Forces Armées Rwandaises) and 40% RPF

(c) The military command posts were to be shared equally (50%-50%) between the two sides, with the post of Chief of Staff of the Army assigned to the FAR.

(d) The Gendarmerie was to be limited to 6,000 men, 60% FAR and 40% RPF, with the posts of command shared equally (50%-50%) between the two sides and the post of Chief of Staff of the Gendarmerie assigned to the RPF.

(e) The Accords limited the number of ministerial portfolios to be held by the MRND (Mouvement républicain national pour le développement) to five, including the Presidency.

(f) The other portfolios within government were to be shared as follows: RPF (Front patriotique Rwandais), five; MDR (Mouvement démocratique républicain), four (including the post of Prime Minister); PSD (Parti social-démocrate), three; PL (Parti libéral), three; and the PDC (Parti démocrate-chrétien), one.

35. On 5 October 1993, the U.N. Security Council resolved to establish and deploy an international peace-keeping force in Rwanda named "United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda" (UNAMIR)

36. Determined to avoid the power sharing prescribed by the Arusha Accords, several prominent civilian and military figures pursued their strategy of ethnic division and incitement to violence.

79. The Defence allege that the indisputable fact that some prominent civilians and military figures had devised a strategy of ethnic division before the Arusha Accords has yet to be established and that the whole assertion is imprecise and reflects more an intent than a fact.

80. The Prosecution states that it is not under the obligation to specify the particulars and that the sole question is whether the information is an adjudicated fact or a fact of common knowledge worthy of judicial notice.

37. With the intention of ensuring widespread dissemination of the calls to ethnic violence, prominent figures, including some from the President's circle, set up hate media.

81. The Defence submit that the same objection apply to paragraphs 36 and 37 as the assertion is unclear and deals with intent.

82. The Prosecution maintains that the various sources cited confirm the above proposition.

38. The most prominent forms of hate media included Radio Télévision Libre des Mille Collines (RTLM) and the newspaper Kangura.

83. The Defence submit that the term "hate media" denotes an intent resulting from facts, whereas the characterisation in question is an important component of the trial of Nahimana, Ngeze and Barayagwiza before Trial chamber I. Trial Chamber II should be cautious of the sub judice rule.

84. The Prosecution considers that a statement like "RTLM is known as the 'killer radio station' from Degni-Ségui Report is clear evidence that intentional elements can amount to common knowledge within the jurisdiction of the tribunal > 39. Several Political Parties established youth organisations.

85. The Defence allege that this paragraph is vague and non-specific and therefore lacks objectivity.

86. The Prosecution maintains that there is no degree of specificity required and that paragraph 40 provides further elaboration.

> 40. Members of the Interahamwe (MRND youth wing) and the Impuzamugambi (CDR youth wing), were organised into militia groups.

87. The Defence argue that this paragraph is not supported by the references submitted by the Prosecutor and that, to ensure the trial's fairness, such allegations necessarily involve individuals who could be called to testify as to the Accused's involvement or non involvement therein.

88. Following the Defence's remarks, the Prosecution suppressed certain references to financing in the original Annex A.

Conclusions by the Chamber on Points 1 to 40 of Annex A

89. As to the facts laying out the "historical background" in Annex A, the Chamber notes that some of these facts form part of the historical context of each of the Amended Indictments against the Accused jointly tried in the present trial, whereas some facts do not form part of such context.

90. The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that those background facts referring to events prior to 1959 which are not referred to in the Indictments against the Accused, are relevant to the present proceedings. Accordingly, the Chamber will not take judicial notice of items 1 to 6, as they refer to events prior to 1959, which is the earliest date mentioned in the Indictments against the Accused.

91. As to the historical facts contained in items 7 to 40, the Chamber notes that the Defence allege that those facts are, inter alia, imprecise as to the dates, lack the required neutrality to render them reasonably indisputable, or otherwise are unsupported by prior judgements.

92. The Chamber finds that these "historical facts" are not facts of common knowledge pursuant to Rule 94 (A) of the Rules, and that the Chamber might therefore only take judicial notice of them, pursuant to Rule 94 (B) of the Rules, if they are indeed adjudicated facts and relate to the present proceedings. The Chamber is of the opinion that, for these facts to be admitted as forming part of the proceedings after having been judicially noticed, the Prosecution should have demonstrated their relevancy. Moreover, the Prosecution relies on various authorities and/or judgements that, more often than not, support only approximately the facts recited therein.

93. For the above reasons, the Chamber decides not to take judicial notice of items 7 to 40 in Annex

2567

A.

Political facts

Ethnicity

41. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, citizens native to Rwanda were identified according to the following ethnic classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa.

Death of Habyarimana

42. On 6 April 1994, the President of the Republic of Rwanda, Juvénal Habyarimana, was killed when his plane was shot down on its approach to Kigali airport.

Systematic Assasinations

43. From the morning of 7 April 1994, groups of military personnel commenced the systematic assassinations of a large number of individuals, including:

(a) The then Prime Minister, Ms. Agathe Uwilingiyimana.

(b) Some of the Ministers in the Government of Prime Minister Uwilingiyimana.

(c) Cour de Cassation (ie Constitutional Court) President Joseph Kavaruganda.

(d) The Belgian UNAMIR soldiers sent to protect the Prime Minister.

94. The Defence submit that paragraph 43 is too vague and is open to interpretation and challenge because of the use of the terms "groups of military personnel" and "systematic assassinations of a large number of political opponents" (which was subsequently amended by the Prosecution to "individuals,") including "(d) the Belgian UNAMIR soldiers [...]" who would then be identified as political opponents. The Defence consider that this is not a notorious fact and that the whole paragraph lacks neutrality.

95. The Prosecution regrets the expression "political opponent", which was deleted in the Amended Annex A, and alleges that there is no issue of neutrality.

44. The massacre of the Belgian soldiers prompted the withdrawal of the Belgian troops in the days that followed.

45. After the withdrawal of the Belgian troops, the UN Security Council drastically reduced the number of UNAMIR personnel in Rwanda.

96. The Defence contest the fact that the Chamber should take judicial notice of a value judgement in characterising the reduction as "drastic", which is not the position in Akayesu.

97. Based on the authorities cited, the Prosecution alleges that the objections lack substance.

Interim Government

256,8

46. Given the political and constitutional void created by the deaths of most national political authorities a new government, the "Interim Government", composed solely of Hutu was set up on 9 April 1994.

98. The Defence argue that this paragraph suggests that the policy of the "interim government" was determined by its Hutu make up and associates all Hutu with the said interim government. The paragraph is worded with an ethnical connotation, which contradicts the reconciliation mission of the Tribunal. Moreover, assimilating the Hutu, without distinction, with the Interim Government is prejudicial to the Accused.

99. The Prosecution contests that this paragraph leads to the conclusion that all Hutu were involved with or supported the interim government.

47. Jean Kambanda was appointed Prime Minister of the Interim Government that was officially sworn in on 9 April 1994.

48. In the Interim Government, the MRND held nine ministerial posts, plus the Presidency of the Republic, while the remaining eleven (11) positions, including that of Prime Minister, went to then 'Power' factions of the other parties.

100. The Defence indicate that this paragraph appears to contradict the reference submitted, which indicates that the MRND was not a minority party in the Interim Government.

49. During the week of 14 to 21 April 1994, the President of the Interim Government, the Prime Minister and some key ministers travelled to Butare and Gikongoro.

101. The Defence indicate that it is impossible for the Tribunal to take judicial notice of such a statement and that no other Chamber has ruled on identical facts. There is a lack of consensus among the authorities quoted so it cannot be a fact of common knowledge.

50. On 19 April 1994, the President of the Interim Government, Theodore Sindikubwabo, spoke on the radio and called for the killing of "accomplices" in Butare.

102. The Defence indicate that this paragraph, like the preceding paragraph 49, states a fact which is not of common knowledge: neither Kayishema & Ruzindana Judgement, nor Degni-Segui, nor the Steering-1, nor Prunier supports the alleged fact that the President gave a speech on 19 April 1994. This allegation is important since it is linked to the offence with which Kanyabashi is charged in paragraph 5.8 of the indictment regarding whether or not such a speech was broadcast in Butare.

51. The visits of the President of the Interim Government, the Prime Minister and some key ministers to Butare and Gikongoro during the week of 14 to 21 April 1994, marked the beginning of killings in the regions.

103. The Defence submit that only the Akayesu decision at paragraph 110 supports this statement, whereas Mr Degni-Segui refers to Butare and Cyangugu as the regions where the massacres started towards 20 April, and the Kayishema & Ruzindana Judgement refer to the President's presence and his speech of 19 April 1994 in Butare, which allegedly triggered the massacres. Accordingly, there is uncertainty as to the prefectures in question and as to whom, if anyone, accompanied the President.

104. For paragraphs 49, 50 and 51, the Prosecution maintains that common knowledge can be determined by synthesising matters from several sources. The Prosecution alleges that the President's speech does not go to prove an element of any crime or the guilt of an accused but only represent a background.

2569

Conclusions by the Chamber Regarding Items 41 to 51 of Annex A

105. The Chamber finds that items 41 and 42 of Annex A are not disputed facts and amount to facts of common knowledge for which the Chamber shall take judicial notice, pursuant to Rule 94 (A).

106. Having considered the Defence submissions as to the disputability of items 43 to 51 of Annex A and the lack of common knowledge thereof, the Chamber decides that such facts cannot be reasonably assessed as common knowledge under Rule 94(A) and cannot be considered as adjudicated facts under Rule 94 (B).

107. For the above reasons, the Chamber will not take judicial notice of items 43 to 51 of Annex A.

Widespread or systematic violence

> 52. The following state of affairs, among others, prevailed in Rwanda between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994:
>
> (a) There were throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against human beings.
>
> (b) The widespread or systematic attacks were directed against a civilian population.
>
> (c) The widespread or systematic attacks were directed against a civilian population on the grounds of political persuasion, Tutsi ethnic identification or Tutsi racial origin.

108. The Defence question the alleged fact that the period ends on 17 July 1994, and not 31 December 1994. However, it is to be noted that the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000" accepted that such state of affair existed between 6 April and 17 July 1994. The Defence alleges that acts of violence were also committed after the genocide. It would be misleading to take judicial notice of the fact that violence ended after 17 July 1994.

109. The Prosecution maintains that the Chamber is free to take judicial notice of selective facts that are relevant to the Butare cases and does not allege that the events occurring after 17 July 1994 are generally unimportant. Rather, the Prosecution submits that they are not relevant to the present case.

> 53. As part of the extermination efforts, census lists and other lists of people to be killed were made.
>
> 54. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, soldiers, militiamen and civilians under orders set up roadblocks.

110. The Defence allege that the facts contained in the paragraphs 53 and 54 are directly linked to the charges and are of the same nature as those of which Trial Chamber III declined to take judicial notice because they are not reasonably indisputable. The Defence argue that the Prosecutor is trying to admit into evidence the planning of crimes, whereas the assertion that the census lists were aimed at identifying people to be killed is not a matter of common knowledge.

2570

111. The Prosecution maintains that the fact that census lists were made and roadblocks established generally does not go to prove the guilt of any Accused. The existence of any mens rea in the commission of the acts listed in 53 and 54 is general and does not implicate any accused in the Butare cases. The large-scale devastation caused at roadblocks in Rwanda in 1994 and the wide distribution of extermination lists are facts of public notoriety.

55. At those roadblocks, the identity cards of anyone wishing to pass were often checked.

56. Many people identified as Tutsi were killed by those manning the roadblocks.

112. The Defence allege that the alleged facts set out in paragraphs 55 and 56 are directly related to the charges and that they supplement the disputable assertions in paragraph 53 and 54.

57. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, a total of between 500,000 and 1,000,000 people died in Rwanda as a result of the widespread violence.

113. The Defence refer to their earlier commentary concerning the period during which people died in Rwanda because of generalised violence.

114. The Prosecution reiterates that the argument regarding the time limit set out in the paragraph is unfounded.

Conclusions by the Chamber Regarding Items 52 to 57 of Annex A

115. The Chamber does not find that the facts enumerated in paragraphs 52 to 57 constitute facts of common knowledge. Even if previous judgements rendered by this Tribunal may provide some support for the events recited, generalisations on "widespread or systematic attacks" against a "civilian population", "census lists", "roadblocks" or the number of people killed between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994 in Rwandan are elements specifically disputed by the Defence. The Chamber is of the opinion that these statements need to be proved by the Prosecution and will not be considered as adjudicated facts relevant to the present proceedings.

116. For the above reasons, the Chamber does not take judicial notice of items 52 to 57 of Annex A.

Administrative structures

58. During the events referred to in the indictments, Rwanda consisted of the following administrative structures:

(a) Eleven (11) préfectures: Butare, Byumba, Cyangugu, Gikongoro, Gisenyi, Gitarama, Kibungo, Kibuye, Kigali-Ville, Kigali-Rural and Ruhengeri.

(b) Each préfecture was subdivided into communes.

(c) Each commune was subdivided into secteurs.

(d) Each secteur was subdivided into cellules.

2571

59. During the events referred to in the indictments, Butare préfecture was divided into 20 communes: Nyakizu, Kigembe, Gishamvu, Ngoma, Runyinya, Maraba, Ruhashya, Mbazi, Shyanda, Muyaga, Mugusa, Nyaruhengeri, Ndora, Muganza, Kibayi, Rusatira, Nyabisindu, Ntyazo, Muyira and Huye.

60. The Préfet represents executive power at prefectural level.

61. The Préfet is appointed by the President of the Republic on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior and carries out his duties under that Minister's hierarchical authority.

62. The Préfet's authority covers the entire préfecture.

63. In his capacity as administrator of the préfecture, the Préfet is responsible for ensuring peace, public order and the safety of people and property.

64. The Préfet, in the discharge of his policing duties, maintaining peace and public order, may request the intervention of the army and of the Gendarmerie Nationale.

65. The Préfet has hierarchical authority over all civil servants and all persons holding public office within the boundaries of the préfecture, including the bourgmestres and conseillers de secteur.

66. Before the introduction of multi-party politics in Rwanda in 1991, the office of the Bourgmestre was characterised by the following features:

(a) The Bourgmestre represented executive power at the commune level.

(b) The Bourgmestre was appointed and removed by the President of the Republic on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior.

(c) The Bourgmestre had authority over the civil servants posted in his commune.

(d) The Bourgmestre had policing duties in regard to maintaining law and order.

(e) Traditionally, the role of the bourgmestre had always been to act as the representative of the President in the commune.

67. The arrival of multi-party politics did not particularly change the considerable amount of unoffical powers conferred upon the bourgmestre by the people in the commune.

68. The Bourgmestre is under the hierarchical authority of the Préfet.

117. Most Defence Counsel raise no objection to the Chamber taking judicial notice of the contents of the laws, legislative decrees and presidential orders listed in Appendix B as well as the Security Council resolution, as in the Semanza Decision. However, the Defence oppose the Chamber's taking judicial notice of the application or the judicial interpretation of the administration of local government as indicated in paragraphs 58 to 68 of Section III. The Defence remind the Chamber that the Prosecution has filed an expert report by Professor Guichaoua titled "L'administraion territoriale rwandaise" addressing the same issues. The Defence had already indicated their willingness to cross-examine the said expert. Moreover, the Defence state that the administration of local government is a complex issue, which requires further clarification.

2512

69. The Forces Armées Rwandaises (FAR) were composed of the Armée Rwandaise (AR) and the Gendarmerie Nationale (GN)

70. The Forces Armées Rwandaises did not have a unified command and came directly under the Minister of Defence.

71. The Commander-in-Chief of the Forces Armées Rwandaises was the President of the Republic.

72. The Gendarmerie Nationale was responsible for maintaining public order and peace and the observance of the laws in effect in the country.

73. Gendarmerie Nationale was under the Minister of Defence but could carry out its duties of ensuring public order and peace at the request of the Préfet.

74. In cases of emergency, this request could be made verbally, notably by telephone.

118. For paragraphs 69 to 74, the Defence refer the Chamber to their preceding commentary as to the difficulty of taking judicial notice of matters by relying almost exclusively on the content of Statutes, without being aware of the application and interpretation thereof. Specifically, the Defence indicate that the Kayishema & Ruzindana Judgement at paragraph 485 does not support paragraph 74 regarding the Prefect's power of oral requisition.

119. The Prosecution maintains that paragraph 67 is a verbatim reproduction of a finding in Akayesu, who was himself a bourgmestre. Further, it will be for the Prosecution to demonstrate the particular de facto powers of each accused before establishing how those powers are relevant to the crimes charged in the indictment.

120. The Prosecution maintains that the propositions listed in paragraphs 69 to 74 are supported by both legislation and judicial findings and the Defence has not demonstrated that these propositions are not of common knowledge.

Conclusions by the Chamber Regarding Items 58 to 74 (Part III) of Annex A

121. The Chamber notes that the legal authorities in support of the "statement of facts" on the interpretation of the functioning of the administrative structures are the documents listed in Annex B. The Chamber decides that it is not appropriate to take judicial notice of the interpretation of the application of such laws, as suggested by the Prosecution pursuant to Rule 94 (A). Accordingly, the Chamber does not take judicial notice of items 58 to 74 of Part III of Annex A.

Legal Findings

75. The following state of affairs, among others, prevailed in Rwanda between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994:

25-13

(a) some Rwandan citizens committed genocide*—to wit, the following acts were done with the intent to destroy wholly or partially in Rwanda the ethnic group identified as Tutsi:*

(i) persons perceived to be Tutsi were killed.

(ii) serious bodily or mental harm was inflicted upon persons perceived to be Tutsi.

(iii) conditions of life calculated to bring about the whole or partial physical destruction of Tutsi in Rwanda were deliberately inflicted upon them

(b) some Rwandan citizens directly and publicly incited others to commit genocide*.*

(c) some Rwandan citizens committed murder as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

(d) some Rwandan citizens committed extermination of human beings as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

(e) some Rwandan citizens committed torture as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

(f) some Rwandan citizens committed rape as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

(g) some Rwandan citizens committed political persecution as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

(h) some Rwandan citizens committed inhumane acts as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, political, national or racial grounds.

76. Many of the victims of the abovementioned crimes were protected persons, within the meaning of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II.

77. The Tutsi ethnic group constitutes a group protected by the Genocide Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948) and thence, by Article 2 of the Statute.

78. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, the following state of affairs existed in Rwanda:

2574

(a) there was an armed conflict between the Rwandan Armed Forces (FAR) and the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF).

(b) this armed conflict was non-international in character.

79. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a state party to the Genocide Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948) - having acceded to it on 16 April 1975.

80. Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a Contracting Party to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocol II of 8 June 1977 - having succeeded to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on 5 May 1964 and acceded to Protocols additional thereto of 8 June 1977 on 19 November 1984.

122. The Defence indicate that paragraphs 75 to 80 appear under the title "Legal conclusions", which clearly indicates that the Chamber must not take judicial notice of legal findings and intentions, but only of objective facts. It cannot be used to judicially notice the crime of genocide by specifying the specific intent as in paragraph 75 (a). The Defence also recall paragraph 36 of the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000" on the issue of whether "genocide" occurred in Rwanda, which states: "[T]he question is so fundamental, that formal proofs should be submitted bearing out the existence of this jurisdictional elemental crime".

123. The Defence rely on the final reports of the Commission of Experts established by the Security Council, which states at paragraphs 181 and 182 that "individuals from both sides to the armed conflict perpetrated crimes against humanity in Rwanda" during the period from 6 April 1994 to 15 July 1994. It is therefore suggested that it is incorrect to infer that murders, extermination of the civilian population and other crimes stopped on 17 July 1994 or that these crimes did not exist prior to 6 April 1994.

124. The Prosecution wishes to correct an error in date and amends the date of the accession of Rwanda to the Genocide Convention from 12 February 1975 in the original Motion to 16 April 1975. With regard to Rwanda's accession to the Genocide Convention, as mentioned in paragraph 79, the Defence indicate that United Nations references refer to 6 April 1975 as the relevant date and not 16 April 1975, as alleged by the Prosecution.

125. With regard to paragraphs 75 to 80, the Prosecution maintains that only paragraph 75 contains mens rea elements but that these crimes are of common knowledge and constitute adjudicated facts before this Tribunal. The Prosecutor further argues that facts listed at 76 to 80 are consistent with all previous jurisprudence and that the exact wording of 78, 79 and 80 were first judicially noticed in the first Semanza Decision.

126. Even if the ICTY Simic Decision quoted by the Defence prohibits judicial notice of "legal characterisation of the conflict", the Prosecution maintains that those concerns are not applicable in the Rwandan context since there is no precedent before this Tribunal to suggest that "different conflicts of different natures" occurred in Rwanda. The Prosecution further indicates that the Semanza Decision took judicial notice of the nature of the conflict in Rwanda.

Conclusions by the Chamber Regarding Items 75 to 80 of Annex A

127. Having noted that Defence Counsel have contested the judicial notice with regard to the nature of the conflict in Rwanda during the relevant period and concurring with the reasoning in the

25-5

Ntakirutimana Decision of 22 November 2001, the Trial Chamber decides that, even if there are previous judgements referring to the nature of the conflict in Rwanda, and to crimes committed therein, the Chamber "prefers in the circumstances of the present case to hear evidence and arguments on the issue, rather than to take judicial notice"[17] of those legal conclusions.

128. The Chamber, therefore, does not take judicial notice of facts 75 to 80 of Annex A.

129. Finally, and also concurring with a finding in the Ntakirutimana Decision of 22 November 2001, the Chamber does not consider it to be its task to reformulate the facts listed in Annex A.

JUDICIAL NOTICE OF ANNEX B

130. In the present case the Prosecutor argues that the documents in Annex B ought to receive not only judicial notice of their authenticity but of their contents as well. In support of its argument, the Prosecution relies on the Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000[18]:

> [T]here is ample precedent in this Tribunal to take judicial notice of the existence and authenticity of such documents without taking judicial notice of the contents thereof. The Chamber, nevertheless, shall take judicial notice of the contents of resolutions of the Security Council and of statements made by the President of the Security Council because it is an organ of the United Nations which established the Tribunal. In addition, the Chamber takes judicial notice of the contents of Décret-Loi no. 01/81 and Arrete ministeriel no. 01/03, which are the copies of certain portions of the laws of Rwanda and properly qualify for judicial notice. The Chamber stresses, however, that by taking judicial notice of the existence and authenticity of the other documents in Appendix B, the Chamber does not take judicial notice of the facts recited therein.

131. The Prosecutor, citing a Decision in the ICTY Simic case argues that the test for the judicial notice of the contents of documents ought to be whether the documents amount to a "readily accessible source of indispensable accuracy".[19]

132. The Defence do not object to judicial notice of Annex B, which is mainly composed of legislation, but submit that the content of such legislation is no evidence of its application.

133. The Chamber finds that the Laws of Rwanda (Décrets-loi, items 1 and 4), certain parts of the Rwandan Law from "Codes et lois du Rwanda" (items 2, 3, and 5), the Arrêtés présidentiels (items 6 and 7) and the Constitution of the Republic of Rwanda (item 9, added by Addendum) are proper subjects for judicial notice, pursuant to Rule 94 (A), as they are matters of public notoriety that should not normally require proof. The Chamber notes that, in the Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000, the Chamber judicially noticed documents by the United Nations Security Council similar to item 8 of Annex B. Accordingly, the Chamber takes judicial notice of the existence and authenticity of the documents listed in Annex B, but does not take judicial notice of the facts recited therein.

134. The Chamber concurs with the ruling of Trial Chamber III in the Semanza Decision of 6 February 2002, in which "in the interest of completeness and accuracy" the Chamber proprio motu took judicial notice of Décret-loi No 18/75 that modified Décret-loi No 10/75. In the instant case, having noted the Defence's submissions in this respect, the Chamber proprio motu takes judicial notice of the legislation in Annex B and of any subsequent modification or amendments made to it, up until 31 December 1994.

ADMISSION INTO EVIDENCE OF ANNEX C

135. The Defence allege that the Prosecution's request in relation to Annex C pursuant to Rule 89(C), raises important issues such as: the exemption from the rule of law, the admissibility of irrelevant evidence and the violation of the right of the accused to a fair trial through an improper shift of the burden of proof.

2576

136. The Defence argue that an informal document, the contents of which cannot be judicially noticed, must be tendered in evidence by its author, unless the opposing party consents thereto, which is not the case. The Defence argue that rules governing the admissibility of evidence require, inter alia, that such evidence be reliable, relate to specific facts and be relevant, whereas the Prosecutor simply alleges that the documents contained in Annex C have probative value.

137. Concerning the admission into evidence of the book titled "The United Nations and Rwanda 1993-1996" (paragraph 5 of Annex C), the Defence indicate that questions of relevance can be raised in relation to information contained in the book and that opinions and conclusions comprised in the book cannot be admitted into evidence unless made by an expert witness, pursuant to Rule 94*bis*.

138. Finally, the Defence argue that to admit into evidence disputed facts of questionable relevance would amount to compelling the Accused to adduce evidence in rebuttal of such facts without knowing what probative value these documents may have. Only the Constitution of Rwanda, referred to in paragraph 10 of Annex C, should be treated like other documents present in Annex B.

139. The Prosecutor argues that Annex C consists of documents with probative value, as recognised in both the Semanza Decision and the Akayesu Judgement, where the vast majority of the documents were judicially noticed as to their authenticity because of their probative value regarding the historical and political context of the offences with which the accused was charged.

140. The Chamber finds that in order to "best favour a fair determination of the matter before it" (sub-Rule (B)), the Parties should, as a matter of principle, have an opportunity to examine the evidence presented by the opposing Party in the course of the proceedings, following the scheme for the admission and presentation of evidence established by the Rules[20]. Rule 89(C) states that "a Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". However, the Chamber is not convinced that justice will be best served if, in the instant case by the exercise of its discretionary power, it admitted into evidence the documents listed in Annex C, insofar as their relevancy and probative value have not been demonstrated by the Prosecution. (Our emphasis).

141. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the request to admit into evidence the documents listed in Annex C, pursuant to Rule 89(C) of the Rules.

142. Finally, the Chamber concurs with the remarks of Trial Chamber I in the Ntakirutimana Decision concerning facts which were not judicially noticed in the instant proceedings but which could possibly be judicially noticed in a different context; the Chamber does not take judicial notice of the aforementioned facts in the specific context of the "Butare Cases" involving six accused jointly tried.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DENIES the Defence "Motion by the Accused Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Élie Ndayambaje to Rule Inadmissible the Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence."

DENIES the Defence « Requête d'extrême urgence sollicitant l'autorisation de déposer une duplique à la réplique du Procureur à la réponse de Pauline Nyiramasuhuko à la requête aux fins de constat judiciaire et d'admission de présomptions factuelles, aux vues d'éléments nouveaux n'apparaissant pas dans la requête initiale du procureur », filed on 12 September 2001. 2577

DENIES the Prosecution's Motion to Rule Inadmissible Nsabimana's Reply;

TAKES JUDICIAL NOTICE of items 41 and 42 contained in Annex A, as facts of common knowledge, pursuant to Rule 94(A).

TAKES JUDICIAL NOTICE of the authenticity of the documents contained in Annex B to the Motion, pursuant to Rule 94(A), including any subsequent modification or amendments up until 31 December 1994, as follows:

(1) Décret-loi No. 10/75, Organisation et fonctionnement de la préfecture, 11 mars 1975;

(2) Organisation territoriale de la République, 15 avril 1963, annexe II, limites des communes, at paragraph III;

(3) Loi sur l'organisation communale, 23 novembre 1963, article 1;

(4) Décret-loi création de la Gendarmerie nationale (23 janvier 1974);

(5) Ordonnance législative No. R/85/25, Création de l'Armée rwandaise (10 mai 1962, article 4);

(6) Arrêté présidentiel No. 86/08, Intégration de la Police dans l'Armée rwandaise (26 juin 1973, articles 1, 2);

(7) Arrêté présidentiel No. 01/02, Statut des officiers des forces armées rwandaises (3 janvier 1977, article 2);

(8) UN Document S/RES/872 (1993) 5 October 1993 ;

(9) The Constitution of the Republic of Rwanda, 10 June 1991, Art. 45 (Gazette, 1991, p. 615).

DENIES the Motion in all other respects.

Arusha, 15 May 2002,

William H. Sekule	Winston C. Matanzima Maqutu	Arlette Ramaroson
Presiding Judge	Judge	Judge

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

[1] Unofficial translation of the title of the Submission "Urgent Motion Requesting Additional Time to Reply to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice."

2578

[2] Unofficial translation of the title of the Submission "Motion by Joseph Kanyabashi Requesting Authorisation to File a Reply to the Prosecutor's Response on the Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence."

[3] Unofficial translation of the Submissions "Preliminary Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence", "First Supplements to the Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence".

[4] Unofficial translation of the submission "Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence".

[5] Unofficial translation of the submission "Extremely Urgent Motion for Authorisation to File a Reply to the Prosecutor's Response to Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Reply to the Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence in View of New Facts" and "Reply by Pauline Nyiramasuhuko to Prosecutor's Response to Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Reply to the Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence".

[6] Unofficial translation of the submission "Extremely Urgent Motion to Hear the Parties on Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence".

[7] Unofficial translation of the Submission "Response of the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence."

[8] Unofficial translation of the Submission "Reply to the Prosecutor's Supplemental Reply in Support of the Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence Only on the Issue of Deadlines."

[9] Unofficial translation of the submission "First Supplements to the Response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice and Admission of Evidence."

[10] See "Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts", the Prosecutor v. Sikirica et al., Case No. ICTY-IT-95-87, 27 September 2000, [11] "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000", at paragraph 23.

[12] Id. at para. 24.

[13] Id. at par. 31.

[14] Id. at para. 35.

[15] Pursuant to Rule 94, the Chamber in the "Semanza Decision of 3 November 2000"decided as follows: "Some of the facts the Prosecutor seeks judicial notice of in Appendix A belong to that genus of 'common knowledge' or "notorious historical facts" permitting a court to dispense with the submission of formal proofs. For example, the Prosecutor first calls on the Chamber to take judicial notice of the fact that Rwandan citizens were classified into three ethnic groups, namely, Hutu, Tutsi and Twa. Similarly, the fact that during the period from 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994 there existed throughout Rwanda 'widespread and systematic attacks' against the civilian population based on certain invidious classifications including Tutsi ethnic identity, is a notorious historical fact of which this Chamber may take judicial notice. Moreover, the powers of the office of Bourgmestre are a proper subject of judicial notice because it falls squarely into the category of matters that are of common knowledge within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal and which may readily be determined by reference to such reliable sources such as the written laws of Rwanda."

[16]Appeals Chamber Decision, Prosecutor v. Kupreskic, 8 May 2001.

[17] Ntakirutimana, para. 36

[18] Semanza at para. 38.

2579

[19] "Decision on the Pre-trial Motion by the Prosecution Requesting the Trial Chamber to take Judicial Notice of the International Character of the Conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina", the Prosecutor v. Simic et al, Case No. ICTY-IT-95-9-PT, 25 March 1999, at par. 3.

[20] "Decision on Prosecutor's Appeal on Admissibility of Evidence, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Patrick Robinson", the Prosecutor v. Aleksovski, Case No-ICTY- IT-95-14/1-AR73, 16 February 1999, par.5.

2580

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

5. Prosecutor v Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, Judgment, 2 September 1998.

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda
Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda

CHAMBER I - CHAMBRE I

OR : ENG

Before:

Judge Laïty Kama, Presiding
Judge Lennart Aspegren
Judge Navanethem Pillay

Registry:

Mr. Agwu U. Okali

Decision of: 2 September 1998

THE PROSECUTOR
VERSUS
JEAN-PAUL AKAYESU

Case No. ICTR-96-4-T

JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Pierre-Richard Prosper

Counsel for the Accused:

Mr. Nicolas Tiangaye
Mr. Patrice Monthé

List of Contents

1. INTRODUCTION

1.1. The International Tribunal

1.2. The Indictment

1.3. Jurisdiction of the Tribunal

Article 2: Genocide
Article 3: Crimes against Humanity
Article 4: Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II
Article 6: Individual Criminal Responsibility

1.4. The Trial

1.4.1. Procedural Background
1.4.2. The Accused's line of defence

1.5. The Accused and his functions in Taba (paragraphs 3-4 of the Indictment)

De jure powers
De facto powers

2. HISTORICAL CONTEXT OF THE EVENTS IN RWANDA IN 1994

3. GENOCIDE IN RWANDA IN 1994?

4. EVIDENTIARY MATTERS

5. FACTUAL FINDINGS

5.1. General allegations (Paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment)

5.2 Killings (Paragraphs 12, 13, 18, 19 & 20 of the Indictment)

5.2.1. Paragraph 12 of the Indictment
5.2.2. Paragraph 13 of the Indictment
5.2.3. Paragraph 18 of the Indictment
5.2.4. Paragraph 19 and 20 of the Indictment

5.3 Meeting

5.3.1. Paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment

5.4 Beatings (Torture/Cruel Treatment) (Paragraphs 16, 17, 21, 22 & 23 of the Indictment)

5.5 Sexual Violence (Paragraphs 12A & 12B of the Indictment)

6. THE LAW

6.1 Cumulative Charges

6.2. Individual criminal responsibility (Article 6 of the Statute)

6.3. Genocide (Article 2 of the Statute)

6.3.1. Genocide
6.3.2. Complicity in Genocide
6.3.3. Direct and Public Incitement to commit Genocide

6.4. Crimes against Humanity (Article 3 of the Statute)

6.5. Violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II (Article 4 of the Statute)

7. LEGAL FINDINGS

7.1. Counts 6, 8, 10 and 12 - Violations of Common Article 3 (murder and cruel treatment) and Count 15 - Violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II (outrages upon personal dignity, in particular rape...)

7.2. Count 5 - Crimes against humanity (murder)

7.3. Count 7 - Crimes against Humanity (murder)

7.4. Count 9 - Crimes against Humanity (murder)

7.5. Count 4 - Direct and Public Incitement to commit Genocide

7.6. Count 11 - Crimes against Humanity (torture)

7.7. Count 13 (rape) and Count 14 (other inhumane acts) - Crimes against Humanity

7.8. Count 1 - Genocide, Count 2 - Complicity in Genocide

7.9. Count 3 - Crimes against Humanity (extermination)

8. VERDICT

---

1. INTRODUCTION

1.1. The International Tribunal

1. This judgment is rendered by Trial Chamber I of the International Tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (the "Tribunal"). The judgment follows the indictment and trial of Jean Paul Akayesu, a Rwandan citizen who was bourgmestre of Taba commune, Prefecture of Gitarama, in Rwanda, at the time the crimes alleged in the indictment were perpetrated.

2. The Tribunal was established by the United Nations Security Council by its resolution 955 of 8 November 1994.1 After having reviewed various official United Nations reports2 which indicated that acts of genocide and other systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in Rwanda, the Security Council concluded that the situation in Rwanda in 1994 constituted a threat to international peace and security within the meaning of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. Determined to put an end to such crimes and " convinced that...the prosecution of persons responsible for such acts and violations ... would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace", the Security Council, acting under the said Chapter VII established the Tribunal.3 Resolution 955 charges all States with a duty to cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs in accordance with the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), and to take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the Statute, including compliance with requests for assistance or orders issued by the Tribunal . Subsequently, by its resolution 978 of 27 February 1995, the Security Council "urge[d] the States to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, pending prosecution by the International Tribunal for Rwanda or by the appropriate national authorities, persons found within their territory against whom there is sufficient evidence that they were responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda".4

3. The Tribunal is governed by its Statute, annexed to the Security Council Resolution 955, and by its Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), adopted by the Judges on 5 July 1995 and amended subsequently.5 The two Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber of the Tribunal are composed of eleven Judges in all, three sitting in each Trial Chamber and five in the Appeals Chamber. They are elected by the United Nations General Assembly and represent, in accordance with Article 12(3) (c) of the Statute, the principal legal systems of the world. The Statute stipulates that the members of the Appeals Chamber of the other special internatinal criminal tribunal, namely the Tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 ("the Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia"), shall also serve as members of the Appeals Chamber of the Tribunal for Rwanda.

4. Under the Statute, the Tribunal has the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international human law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994. According to Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute relating to its ratione materiae jurisdiction, the Tribunal has the power to prosecute persons who committed genocide as defined in Article 2 of the Statute, persons responsible for crimes against humanity as defined in Article 3 of the Statute and persons responsible for serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the protection of victims of war6, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977, a crime defined in Article 4 of the Statute 7. Article 8 of the Statute provides that the Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with national courts over which it, however, has primacy.

5. The Statute stipulates that the Prosecutor, who acts as a separate organ of the Tribunal, is responsible for the investigation and prosecution of the perpetrators of such violations. Upon determination that a prima facie case exists to proceed against a suspect, the Prosecutor shall prepare an indictment containing a concise statement of the facts and the crime or crimes with which the accused is charged. Thereafter, he or she shall transmit the indictment to a Trial Judge for review and, if need be, confirmation. Under the Statute, the Prosecutor of the Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia shall also serve as the Prosecutor of the Tribunal for Rwanda. However, the two Tribunals maintain separate Offices of the Prosecutor and Deputy Prosecutors. The Prosecutor of the Tribunal for Rwanda is assisted by a team of investigators, trial attorneys and senior trial attorneys, who are based in Kigali, Rwanda. These officials travel to Arusha whenever they are expected to plead a case before the Tribunal.

1.2. The Indictment

6. The Indictment against Jean-Paul Akayesu was submitted by the Prosecutor on 13 February 1996 and was confirmed on 16 February 1996. It was amended during the trial, in June 1997, with the addition of three counts (13 to 15) and three paragraphs (10A, 12A and 12B). The Amended Indictment is here set out in full:

> "The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, pursuant to his authority under Article 17 of the Statute of the Tribunal, charges:
>
> JEAN PAUL AKAYESU
>
> with GENOCIDE, CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY and VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, as set forth below:
>
> Background
>
> 1. On April 6, 1994, a plane carrying President Juvénal Habyarimana of Rwanda and President Cyprien Ntaryamira of Burundi crashed at Kigali airport, killing all on board. Following the deaths of the two Presidents, widespread killings, having both political and ethnic dimensions, began in Kigali and spread to other parts of Rwanda.
>
> 2. Rwanda is divided into 11 prefectures, each of which is governed by a prefect. The prefectures are further subdivided into communes which are placed under the authority of bourgmestres. The bourgmestre of each commune is appointed by the President of the Republic, upon the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior. In Rwanda, the bourgmestre is the most powerful figure in the commune. His de facto authority in the area is significantly greater than that which is conferred upon him de jure.
>
> The Accused
>
> 3. Jean Paul AKAYESU, born in 1953 in Murehe sector, Taba commune, served as bourgmestre of that commune from April 1993 until June 1994. Prior to his appointment as bourgmestre, he was a teacher and school inspector in Taba.
>
> 4. As bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU was charged with the performance of executive functions and the maintenance of public order within his commune, subject to the authority of the prefect. He had exclusive control over the communal police, as well as any gendarmes put at the disposition of the commune. He was responsible for the execution of laws and regulations and the administration of justice, also subject only to the prefect's authority.

General Allegations

5. Unless otherwise specified, all acts and omissions set forth in this indictment took place between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, in the commune of Taba, prefecture of Gitarama, territory of Rwanda.

6. In each paragraph charging genocide, a crime recognized by Article 2 of the Statute of the Tribunal, the alleged acts or omissions were committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic or racial group.

7. The victims in each paragraph charging genocide were members of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group.

8. In each paragraph charging crimes against humanity, crimes recognized by Article 3 of the Tribunal Statute, the alleged acts or omissions were committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on national, political, ethnic or racial grounds.

9. At all times relevant to this indictment, a state of internal armed conflict existed in Rwanda.

10. The victims referred to in this indictment were, at all relevant times, persons not taking an active part in the hostilities.

10A. In this indictment, acts of sexual violence include forcible sexual penetration of the vagina, anus or oral cavity by a penis and/or of the vagina or anus by some other object, and sexual abuse, such as forced nudity.

11. The accused is individually responsible for the crimes alleged in this indictment. Under Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal, individual criminal responsibility is attributable to one who plans, instigates, orders, commits or otherwise aids and abets in the planning, preparation or execution of any of the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Charges

12. As bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU was responsible for maintaining law and public order in his commune. At least 2000 Tutsis were killed in Taba between April 7 and the end of June, 1994, while he was still in power. The killings in Taba were openly committed and so widespread that, as bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU must have known about them. Although he had the authority and responsibility to do so, Jean Paul AKAYESU never attempted to prevent the killing of Tutsis in the commune in any way or called for assistance from regional or national authorities to quell the violence.

12A. Between April 7 and the end of June, 1994, hundreds of civilians (hereinafter "displaced civilians") sought refuge at the bureau communal. The majority of these displaced civilians were Tutsi. While seeking refuge at the bureau communal, female displaced civilians were regularly taken by armed local militia and/or communal police and subjected to sexual violence, and/or beaten on or near the bureau communal premises. Displaced civilians were also murdered frequently on or near the bureau communal premises. Many women were forced to endure multiple acts of sexual violence which were at times committed by more than one assailant. These acts of sexual violence were generally accompanied by explicit threats of death or bodily harm. The female displaced civilians lived in constant fear and their physical and psychological health deteriorated as a result of the sexual violence and beatings and killings.

12B. Jean Paul AKAYESU knew that the acts of sexual violence, beatings and murders were being committed and was at times present during their commission. Jean Paul AKAYESU facilitated the commission of the sexual violence, beatings and murders by allowing the sexual violence and beatings and murders to occur on or near the bureau communal premises. By virtue of his presence during the commission of the sexual violence, beatings and murders and by failing to prevent the sexual violence, beatings and murders, Jean Paul AKAYESU encouraged these activities.

13. On or about 19 April 1994, before dawn, in Gishyeshye sector, Taba commune, a group of men, one of whom was named Francois Ndimubanzi, killed a local teacher, Sylvere Karera, because he was accused of associating with the Rwandan Patriotic Front ("RPF") and plotting to kill Hutus. Even though at least one of the perpetrators was turned over to Jean Paul AKAYESU, he failed to take measures to have him arrested.

14. The morning of April 19, 1994, following the murder of Sylvere Karera, Jean Paul AKAYESU led a meeting in Gishyeshye sector at which he sanctioned the death of Sylvere Karera and urged the population to eliminate accomplices of the RPF, which was understood by those present to mean Tutsis. Over 100 people were present at the meeting. The killing of Tutsis in Taba began shortly after the meeting.

15. At the same meeting in Gishyeshye sector on April 19, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU named at least three prominent Tutsis -- Ephrem Karangwa, Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa -- who had to be killed because of their alleged relationships with the RPF. Later that day, Juvénal Rukundakuvuga was killed in Kanyinya. Within the next few days, Emmanuel Sempabwa was clubbed to death in front of the Taba bureau communal.

16. Jean Paul AKAYESU, on or about April 19, 1994, conducted house-to-house searches in Taba. During these searches, residents, including Victim V, were interrogated and beaten with rifles and sticks in the presence of Jean Paul AKAYESU. Jean Paul AKAYESU personally threatened to kill the husband and child of Victim U if she did not provide him with information about the activities of the Tutsis he was seeking.

17. On or about April 19, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU ordered the interrogation and beating of Victim X in an effort to learn the whereabouts of Ephrem Karangwa. During the beating, Victim X's fingers were broken as he tried to shield himself from blows with a metal stick.

18. On or about April 19, 1994, the men who, on Jean Paul AKAYESU's instructions, were searching for Ephrem Karangwa destroyed Ephrem Karangwa's house and burned down his mother's house. They then went to search the house of Ephrem Karangwa's brother-in-law in Musambira commune and found Ephrem Karangwa's three brothers there. The three brothers -- Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligira and Jean Chrysostome Gakuba -- tried to escape, but Jean Paul AKAYESU blew his whistle to alert local residents to the attempted escape and ordered the people to capture the brothers. After the brothers were captured, Jean Paul AKAYESU ordered and participated in the killings of the three brothers.

19. On or about April 19, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU took 8 detained men from the Taba bureau communal and ordered militia members to kill them. The militia killed them with clubs, machetes, small axes and sticks. The victims had fled from Runda commune and had been held by Jean Paul AKAYESU.

20. On or about April 19, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU ordered the local people and militia to kill intellectual and influential people. Five teachers from the secondary school of Taba were killed on his instructions. The victims were Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiance (whose name is unknown), Tharcisse Twizeyumuremye and Samuel. The local people and militia killed them with machetes and agricultural tools in front of the Taba bureau communal.

21. On or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU and some communal police went to the house of Victim Y, a 68 year old woman. Jean Paul AKAYESU interrogated her about the whereabouts of the wife of a university teacher. During the questioning, under Jean Paul AKAYESU's supervision, the communal police hit Victim Y with a gun and sticks. They bound her arms and legs and repeatedly kicked her in the chest. Jean Paul AKAYESU threatened to kill her if she failed to provide the information he sought.

22. Later that night, on or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU picked up Victim W in Taba and interrogated her also about the whereabouts of the wife of the university teacher. When she stated she did not know, he forced her to lay on the road in front of his car and threatened to drive over her.

23. Thereafter, on or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul AKAYESU picked up Victim Z in Taba and interrogated him. During the interrogation, men under Jean Paul AKAYESU's authority forced Victims Z and Y to beat each other and used a piece of Victim Y's dress to strangle Victim Z.

Counts 1-3
(Genocide)
(Crimes against Humanity)

By his acts in relation to the events described in paragraphs 12-23, Jean Paul AKAYESU is criminally responsible for:

COUNT 1: GENOCIDE, punishable by Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal;

COUNT 2: Complicity in GENOCIDE, punishable by Article 2(3)(e) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and COUNT 3: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (extermination), punishable by Article 3(b) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Count 4
(Incitement to Commit Genocide)

By his acts in relation to the events described in paragraphs 14 and 15, Jean Paul AKAYESU is criminally responsible for:

COUNT 4: Direct and Public Incitement to Commit GENOCIDE, punishable by Article 2 (3)(c) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Counts 5-6
(Crimes Against Humanity)
(Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions)

By his acts in relation the murders of Juvénal Rukundakuvuga, Emmanuel Sempabwa, Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligira and Jean Chrysostome Gakuba, as described in paragraphs 15 and 18, Jean Paul AKAYESU committed:

COUNT 5: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (murder) punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and

COUNT 6: VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Counts 7-8
(Crimes Against Humanity)
(Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions)

By his acts in relation the murders of 8 detained men in front of the bureau communal as described in paragraph 19, Jean Paul AKAYESU committed:

COUNT 7: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (murder) punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and

COUNT 8: VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Counts 9-10
Crimes Against Humanity)
(Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions)

By his acts in relation to the murders of 5 teachers in front of the bureau communal as described in paragraph 20, Jean Paul AKAYESU committed:

COUNT 9: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (murder) punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and

COUNT 10 VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

Counts 11-12
(Crimes Against Humanity)
(Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions)

By his acts in relation to the beatings of U, V, W, X, Y and Z as described in paragraphs 16, 17, 21, 22 and 23, Jean Paul AKAYESU committed:

COUNT 11:CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (torture), punishable by Article 3(f) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and COUNT 12: VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(cruel treatment) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

In addition and/or in the alternative to his individual responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal, the accused, is individually responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute of the Tribunal for the crimes alleged in Counts 13 through 15. Under Article 6(3), an individual is criminally responsible as a superior for acts of a subordinate if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

Counts 13-15
(Crimes Against Humanity)
(Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions)

By his acts in relation to the events at the bureau communal, as described in paragraphs 12 (A) and 12(B), Jean Paul AKAYESU committed:

COUNT 13:CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY (rape), punishable by Article 3(g) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and

COUNT 14: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, (other inhumane acts), punishable by Article 3(i) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and COUNT 15:VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ARTICLE 4(2)(e) OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL 2, as incorporated by Article 4(e)(outrages upon personal dignity, in particular rape, degrading and humiliating treatment and indecent assault) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

___(Signed)_____.
Louise Arbour
Prosecutor

1.3. Jurisdiction of the Tribunal

7. The subject-matter jurisdiction of the ICTR is set out in Articles 2,3 and 4 of the Statute:

Article 2: Genocide

1. The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons committing genocide as defined in paragraph 2 of this article or of committing any of the other acts enumerated in paragraph 3 of this article.

2. Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:

a) Killing members of the group;

b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;

c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;

d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;

e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

3. The following acts shall be punishable:

a) Genocide;

b) Conspiracy to commit genocide;

c) Direct and public incitement to commit genocide;

d) Attempt to commit genocide;

e) Complicity in genocide.

Article 3: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY

The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds:

a) Murder;

b) Extermination;

c) Enslavement;

d) Deportation;

e) Imprisonment;

f) Torture;

g) Rape;

h) Persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds;

i) Other inhumane acts.

Article 4: Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II

The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977. These violations shall include, but shall not be limited to:

a) Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment;

b) Collective punishments;

c) Taking of hostages;

d) Acts of terrorism;

e) Outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

f) Pillage;

g) The passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as indispensable by civilised peoples;

h) Threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

8. In addition, Article 6 states the principle of individual criminal responsibility:

Article 6: Individual Criminal Responsibility

1. A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.

2. The official position of any accused person, whether as Head of State or Government or as a responsible Government official, shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment.

3. The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

4. The fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior shall not relieve him or her of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the International Tribunal for Rwanda determines that justice so requires.

1.4. The Trial

1.4.1. Procedural Background

9. Jean-Paul Akayesu was arrested in Zambia on 10 October 1995. On 22 November 1995, the Prosecutor of the Tribunal, pursuant to Rule 40 of the Rules, requested the Zambian authorities to keep Akayesu in detention for a period of 90 days, while awaiting the completion of the investigation.

10. On 13 February 1996, the then Prosecutor, Richard Goldstone8, submitted an Indictment against Akayesu, which was subsequently amended on 17 June 1997. It contains a total of 15 counts covering genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of Article 3 Common to the 1949 Geneva Convention and Additional Protocol II of 1977 thereto. More specifically, Akayesu was individually charged with genocide, complicity in genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, extermination, murder, torture, cruel treatment, rape, other inhumane acts and outrages upon personal dignity, which he allegedly committed in Taba commune of which he was the bourgmestre at the time of the alleged acts.

11. The Indictment was confirmed and an arrest warrant, accompanied by an order for continued detention, was issued by Judge William H. Sekule on 16 February 1996. The following week, the Indictment was submitted by the Registrar to the Zambian authorities, to be served upon the Accused. Akayesu was transferred to the Detention Facilities of the Tribunal in Arusha on 26 May 1996, where he is still detained awaiting judgment.

12. The initial appearance of the Accused, pursuant to Rule 62 of the Rules, took place on 30 May 1996 in the presence of his counsel before Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Laity Kama, presiding, Judge Lennart Aspegren and Judge Navanethem Pillay. The prosecution team, led by Honoré Rakotomanana9 Deputy Prosecutor of the Tribunal, was composed of Yacob Haile-Mariam, Mohamed Chande Othman and Pierre-Richard Prosper10. The Accused pleaded not guilty to all the counts against him. On the same date, the Chamber ordered the continued detention of the Accused while awaiting his trial11. Simultaneous interpretation in French and English, and where necessary Kinyarwanda, was provided at the hearings.

13. The Accused having been found indigent by the Tribunal, in accordance with the provisions of the Directive on Assignment of Defence Counsel12, the Registrar of the Tribunal assigned Johan Scheers as defence counsel for the Accused and counsel's fees were paid by the Tribunal. By a decision of 31 October 1996, the Chamber directed the Registrar of the Tribunal to withdraw the assignment of Johan Scheers as defence counsel for Akayesu, pursuant to Article 19 of the Directive on Assignment of Defence Counsel, and to immediately assign Michael Karnavas as the new defence counsel for the Accused. In the same decision, the Chamber postponed the trial until 9 January 1997, at the request of the Accused13. On 20 November 1996, the Chamber granted a request for a further change of defence counsel filed by the Accused on 11 November 1996, pursuant to Article 19 of the Directive. On 9 January 1997, the Registrar assigned Nicolas Tiangaye and Patrice Monthé, who served as defence counsel for the Accused until the end of the trial. On 16 January 1997, the Chamber rejected a third motion for change of defence counsel filed by the Accused on 9 January 199714. The decision of 16 January 1997 also put an end to the interim measures adopted by the Chamber on 13 January 1997, temporarily authorizing the Accused to cross-examine the witnesses himself, along with his two counsel

14. On 27 May 1996, the then counsel for the Accused, Johan Scheers, filed a preliminary motion under Rule 73 of the Rules15, requesting the Chamber to (i) rule that the criminal proceedings were inadmissible for reasons of flagrant violations of the rights of Defence; (ii) order the hearing of witnesses and that Defence investigations be conducted; (iii) exclude from the proceedings, all indirect witnesses to the acts for which the Accused is charged; and (iv) order the release of the Accused pending the trial on the merits. During the oral presentation of the motion at the hearing of 26 September 1996, however, the Defence raised issues beyond the framework of the said motion by advancing complaints regarding, on the one hand, the detention conditions of the Accused during his imprisonment in Zambia and, on the other hand, the delay by the Prosecutor in disclosing the Indictment and supporting material. In its decision of 27 September 199616, the Chamber rejected the entire motion on the grounds that the objections raised by the Defence and the manner in which they were presented, did not provide sufficient basis for the Chamber to rule on the merits under Rule 73 of the Rules. That same day, the Chamber adjourned the trial at the request of the Defence and set 31 October 199617 as the official opening date of the trial on the merits.

15. On 29 October 1996, the Chamber granted the Prosecutor's motion of 23 October 1996 for the transfer of a witness detained in Rwanda in order for him to testify before the Tribunal. A similar motion by the Defence, filed on 30 October 1997, was granted by the Chamber, it being ordered that three witnesses then detained in Rwanda be transferred to the Tribunal's Detention Facilities for a period of not more than two months so as to testify in the trial18. However, two subsequent requests by the Defence for the transfer and appearance in court of five and thirteen witnesses detained in Rwanda respectively were rejected, on the basis, inter alia, that the Defence was unable to demonstrate how the appearance of each witness was undoubtedly material in the discovery of the truth or that the conditions stipulated in Rule 90*bis* (b) of the Rules had been met19.

16. Besides the above-mentioned motions, several pre-trial motions were filed by the Defence, including a motion for the defendant to sit at counsel table during trial, a motion for an expedited in camera hearing regarding Prosecutorial misconduct and a motion to compel the Prosecutor to conduct a fair and just investigation. These motions were not granted.

17. The trial of the Accused on the merits opened on 9 January 1997 before Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Laity Kama, presiding, Judge Lennart Aspegren and Judge Navanethem Pillay. Pursuant to Rule 84 of the Rules, Honoré Rakotomanana and Yacob Haile-Mariam made the opening statement for the Prosecutor, which was followed by the opening statement for the Defence, made by Nicolas Tiangaye and Patrice Monthé. During the initial phase of the trial which took place over 26 trial days until 24 May 1997, 22 witnesses, including five expert witnesses, testified for the Prosecutor. Subsequent to the presentation of the Prosecutor's evidence, an in camera status conference was held after which the Chamber, at the request of the Defence, adjourned the trial until 29 September 1997.

18. All Prosecutor and Defence eye-witnesses requiring protection benefited from measures guaranteeing the confidentiality of their testimony 20. No information which could in any way identify the witnesses was given. During the hearings, letters of the alphabet were used as pseudonyms to refer to protected witnesses and screens isolated the said witnesses from the public, but not from the Accused and his counsel. One Defence witness was heard in camera.

19. On 13 January 1997, as an interim measure pending a Chamber decision on a request by the Accused for the replacement of his counsel, Akayesu was authorized by the Chamber to cross-examine, along with his assigned counsel, prosecution witnesses. The pertinent decision was rendered on 16 January 199721, whereby the request for replacement of Counsel was dismissed and the interim measure terminated.

20. Most of the Rwandan witnesses spoke in Kinyarwanda and their testimonies were interpreted into the two working languages of the Tribunal (French and English). By Decision of 9 March 1998, the Chamber dismissed a Defence motion, based on Rule 91 of the Rules, to direct the Prosecutor to investigate an alleged false testimony by prosecution witness "R". The Chamber found that for the Defence to raise doubts as to the reliability of statements made by a witness, was not by itself sufficient to establish strong grounds for believing that the witness may have knowingly and wilfully given false testimony 22.

21. During the hearing of 23 January 1997, the Chamber requested the Prosecutor, in view of the exceptional nature of the offences, to submit all written witness statements already made available by her to the Defence. The Prosecutor objected to the request; hence the Chamber, by a decision rendered on 28 January 1997, pursuant to Rules 89(A), 89(C) and 98 of the Rules, ordered the Prosecutor to submit all available written witness statements to the Chamber in the case and that all such statements to which reference had been made by either the Prosecutor or the Defence shall be admitted as evidence and form part of the record. However, this was subject to the caveat that disclosure of all the written statements did not necessarily entail their admissibility as evidence23.

22. On 4 February 1997, the Prosecutor, who had not yet complied with the order of 28 January 1997, filed a motion requesting the Chamber to reconsider and rescind the said order. The Prosecutor submitted, inter alia, that the order of 28 January 1997 represented an unjustified change in the established order for production of evidence and thus did not satisfy the provisions of Rule 85, that Rule 98 simply allows the Chamber to order the production of specific additional evidence and not the disclosure of all the evidence, that it involves the Chamber in the process of disclosure and, in actual fact, circumvents Rule 66 (A), and that the order is prejudicial to the parties. On 6 march 1997, the Chamber declared the Prosecutor's motion groundless, and expressed surprise, in the circumstances, at receiving a motion asking it to reconsider and rescind its order, instead of a motion for clarification. The Chamber specified in its decision that the order of 28 January 1997 could only be interpreted with respect to the witness statements already communicated to the Defence24. On 16 April 1997, the Prosecutor filed a notice of intent to comply with the Chamber's order to submit witness statements.

23. As stated above, 24 May 1997 marked the end of the first part of the trial of the Accused with the testimony of the last prosecution witness. However, on 16 June 1997, the Prosecutor submitted a request to bring an expedited oral motion before the Chamber seeking an amendment of the Indictment. During the hearing held to that end on 17 June 1997, the Prosecutor sought leave to add three further Counts, namely, Count 13: rape, a Crime Against Humanity, punishable under Article 3 (g) of the Statute, Count 14: inhumane acts, a Crime Against Humanity, punishable under Article 3 (i) of the Statute, and Count 15: outrages on personal dignity, notably rape, degrading and humiliating treatment and indecent assault, a Violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4(2)(e) of Additional Protocol II, as incorporated in Article 4(e) of the Statute. The Chamber granted leave to the Prosecutor to amend the Indictment and postponed the date for resumption of the trial to 23 October 199725

24. The second phase of the trial started on 23 October 1997 with the initial appearance of Akayesu for the new counts in a public session before the Chamber. The Accused pleaded not guilty to each of the new counts. The Prosecutor then proceeded to present six new witnesses, including an investigator with the Office of the Prosecutor. In all, the Prosecutor put 28 witnesses on the stand over 31 trial days. The Defence, for its part, presented its evidence over the course of 12 trial days between 4 November 1997 and 13 March 1998. It called 13 witnesses, including the Accused, to the stand. A total of 155 exhibits were submitted during the trial.

25. During the second phase of the trial, the Defence requested and obtained the issuance of a subpoena for Major-General Roméo Dallaire, former force Commander of UNAMIR (United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda), whose immunity had been partially lifted by the UN Secretary-General, to appear as a witness for the Defence 26. The Chamber also granted leave to a representative of the United Nations Secretariat to appear as an Amicus Curiae to make a statement on the lifting of the immunity Major-General Roméo Dallaire enjoys by virtue of his position as former force Commander of UNAMIR27

26. However, the Chamber did not grant the Defence motion for the issuance of a subpoena for two persons accused before the Tribunal to appear as Defence witnesses, on the grounds that their fundamental rights, as recognized by Article 20(4)(g) of the Statute, would perhaps be violated, and that there would be a risk that their appearance as witnesses in the case could cause prejudice to them28. A further Defence motion for the appearance of another accused as an expert witness was similarly dismissed29. The Chamber held therein that the impartiality of the potential expert witness, who is accused by the Tribunal for crimes related to those with which Akayesu is charged, could not be assured and consequently that he did not fulfil the requisite conditions for appearing as an expert witness. Furthermore, the Chamber found that for this particular Accused to be compelled to appear as an expert witness in the case would be prejudicial to him and could possibly violate his fundamental rights, as recognized by the provisions of Article 20(4)(g) of the Statute and Article 14(3)(g) of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights of 1966.

27. The Chamber dismissed a Defence motion for a site visit and the conduct of a forensic analysis of the remains of three alleged victims. The Chamber found that a new forensic analysis would not be appropriate nor, in any case, instrumental in the discovery of the truth, on the basis, inter alia, that a number of the purported mass graves, including, without a doubt, those supposedly in the vicinity of the Taba bureau communal' had been subject of previous exhumations. Moreover, the Chamber felt that the arguments of the Defence Counsel in support of the motion were pertinent mainly to evaluating the credibility of certain witness statements and not to showing the necessity for an exhumation and forensic analysis, as requested30

28. None of the parties presented witnesses for rebuttal purposes. The Accused testified in his own defence on 12 March 1998 and was cross-examined the next day by the Prosecutor. The latter presented her final arguments on 19 and 23 March, and the Defence presented its closing arguments on 26 March 1998. The trial on the merits was held over a period of 60 days of hearings, since 9 January 1997. The case was adjourned on 26 March 1998 for deliberation on the Judgment by the Chamber.

1.4.2. The Accused's line of defence

29. The Accused has pleaded not guilty to all counts of the Indictment, both at his initial appearance, held on 30 May 1996, and at the hearing of 23 October 1997 when he pleaded not guilty to each of the new counts which had been added to the Indictment when it was amended on 17 June 1997.

30. In essence, the Defence case - insofar as the Chamber has been able to establish it - is that the Accused did not commit, order or participate in any of the killings, beatings or acts of sexual violence alleged in the Indictment. The Defence concedes that a genocide occurred in Rwanda and that massacres of Tutsi took place in Taba Commune, but it argues that the Accused was helpless to prevent them, being outnumbered and overpowered by one Silas Kubwimana and the Interahamwe. The Defence pointed out that, according to prosecution witness R, Akayesu had been so harassed by the Interahamwe that at one point he had had to flee Taba commune. Once the massacres had become widespread, the Accused was denuded of all authority and lacked the means to stop the killings.

31. The Defence claims that the Chamber should not require the Accused to be a hero, to have laid down his life - as, for example, did the bourgmestre of Mugina - in a futile attempt to prevent killings and beatings. The Defence alluded to the fact that General Dallaire, in charge of UNAMIR and 2,500 troops, was unable to prevent the genocide. How, then, was Akayesu, with 10 communal policemen at his disposal, to fare any better? Moreover, the Defence argue, no bourgmestre in the whole of Rwanda was able to prevent the massacres in his Commune, no matter how willing he was to do so.

32. As for acts of sexual violence, the Defence case is somewhat different from that for killings and beatings, in that, whereas for the latter the Defence does not contest that there were killings and beatings, it does deny that there were acts of sexual violence committed, at least at the Bureau Communal. During his testimony the Accused emphatically denied that any rapes had taken place at the Bureau Communal, even when he was not there. The Chamber notes the Accused's emphatic denial of facts which are not entirely within his knowledge.

33. As general remarks, the Defence alluded to the fragility of human testimony as opposed to documentary evidence, and specifically referred to the evidence of Dr. Mathias Ruzindana, who had testified about problems in relying on eye-witness accounts of Rwandans31. The Defence also raised problems associated with alleged "syndicates of informers", in which groups of Rwandans supposedly collaborated to concoct testimony against a person for revenge or other motives. This allegation is specifically dealt with below.

34. As regards the Accused, the Defence pointed out that, though the Prosecutor admitted that the Accused had opposed massacres before 18 April 1994, the Prosecutor could not demonstrate that he was a "genocidal ideologue", since one did not adopt the ideology of genocide overnight. Hence, the Defence argued, he could not be convicted of genocide.

35. In general, the Defence argued that the Accused was a "scapegoat", who found himself Accused before the Chamber only because he was a Hutu and a bourgmestre at the time of the massacres.

36. Turning to the specific allegations contained in the Indictment, the Defence case is that there was no change in Akayesu's attitude or behaviour before and after the Murambi meeting of 18 April 1998. Both before and after, he attempted to save Tutsi lives. Witness DBB testified that the Accused gave a Tutsi woman (witness DEEX) a laissez-passer, although he could not say whether the accused knew at the time that the woman was a Tutsi or not. Witness DEEX confirmed that she was given a laissez-passer by the accused. Witnesses DIX and DJX also heard that Akayesu had saved Tutsi lives.

37. The Defence also challenged the premise that the Murambi meeting of 18 April 1994 was the key event which led to a complete change in the accused's behaviour. Since, the Defence argued, it had not been shown that orders for the extermination of the Tutsi were given at the Murambi meeting by the interim government, it follows that the accused could not have returned to his Commune a changed man because of those non-existent orders. The Defence pointed out that only one prosecution witness and one Defence witness had attended the Murambi meeting, and that neither testified that an explicit message to kill the Tutsi had been given.

38. Regarding the Gishyeshye meeting of 19 April 1994, the Defence argued that the accused was forced by the Interahamwe to read a document which allegedly mentioned the names of RPF accomplices, but that the accused tried to dissuade the population from being incited by the document, arguing that the mere appearance of names on a list did not mean that the persons named were accomplices of the RPF. The Defence also noted further "contradictions" in the accounts given by witnesses of the Gishyeshye meeting.

39. As regards the killings of the eight Runda refugees and the five teachers, the Defence pointed out that the only witness to these killings was witness K, and that the accused had, at the time of his interview by the OTP in Zambia, cited witness K as a possible Defence witness. It begged credulity that the accused would contemplate calling as a Defence witness a person whom he knew had seen him order such killings.

40. Concerning the killings of the Karangwa brothers, the Defence argued that there was such uncertainty as to how they were killed, and by what instruments, that a conviction could not stand in the absence of these material averments. It was because of these inconsistencies and uncertainties that the Defence had asked for an exhumation of the bodies, which had not been granted.

41. The charges of beatings the Defence contested on the grounds that no medical examination had been conducted on the alleged victims to verify that the injuries which they claimed were sustained as a result of the accused's actions could genuinely be so attributed.

42. The charges of offences of sexual violence, the Defence argued, were added under the pressure of public opinion and were not credibly supported by the evidence. Witness J's account, for example, of living in a tree for one week after her family were killed and her sister raped, while several months pregnant, was simply not credible but rather the product of fantasy the Defence claimed - "of interest to psychiatrists, but not justice".32

43. The Chamber has considered the Defence case extremely carefully and it will be treated here in the course of making the various factual and legal findings. There is one aspect which, however, should be dealt with here.

Putting the case to a witness

44. In the Defence closing argument, Mr. Nicholas Tiangaye, made the suggestion that some, if not all of the Prosecution witnesses who had testified against Jean-Paul Akayesu did so because they were colluding in a "syndicate of informers" which would denounce a particular individual for political reasons or in order to take over his property. In this connection, Mr. Tiangaye quoted Rene Degni-Segui, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on Rwanda, who recounted a story of a demonstrably innocent Rwandan who had been denounced by 15 witnesses as a participant in the genocide. Mr. Tiangaye concluded thus:

> "... there were cases of calumny which existed and which enabled people to denounce others regarding their participation in genocide in order to be able to take over their property."

Mr. Tiangaye then went on to say:

> "So, what do we do, Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen, when witnesses come to tell lies before the Chamber, what do we do?" 33

45. To the extent that Defence counsel invites the Chamber to disbelieve the testimony of Prosecution witnesses because they may belong to a syndicate of informers or that they may be denouncing Akayesu in order to take over his property, and that they have therefore lied before the Chamber, it is to be noted this is a very serious allegation of false testimony or perjury, which is a criminal offence. Indeed, Defence counsel during the course of the trial made a motion for a certain prosecution witness to be investigated for false testimony; which motion was rejected in a Decision of this Trial Chamber in which it gave its reasons.34. That matter does not concern the Chamber here. What is of concern is whether the Chamber should give any weight, in its deliberations, to the possibility raised by Defence counsel that prosecution witnesses may have been lying for one of the above-mentioned motives.

46. The Chamber holds that, as a blanket allegation to undermine the credibility of prosecution witnesses, this allegation can carry no weight, for two reasons. First, an attack on credibility which is not particularised with respect to individual witnesses is no attack at all on those witnesses' credibility; it is merely a generalised and unsubstantiated suspicion. Doubt can only arise where the criteria for doubt are fulfilled. To state that all prosecution witnesses should be disbelieved because some Rwandan witnesses elsewhere have lied is similar to saying, "some money is counterfeit, therefore all money might be counterfeit". If, and this is the second point, the Defence wish to challenge prosecution witnesses as members of an informer's syndicate, or to allege that they are lying in order to be able to confiscate the accused's property, then the Defence must lay the foundations for that challenge and put the challenge to the witness in question during cross-examination. This is both a matter of practicality and of principle. The practical matter is this: if the Defence does put to a witness the allegation that he is lying because he wishes to take the accused's property, then this may elicit a convincing admission or rebuttal. The witness may break down and reveal, by his words or demeanour, that he has indeed been lying for that purpose; alternatively, he may offer a convincing rebuttal, for example, by pointing out that the accused has no property which the witness could wish to misappropriate. Either way, the matter might be resolved. To never put the crucial question to the witness is to deprive the Chamber of such a possible resolution. As a matter of principle, it is only fair to a witness, whom the Defence wishes to accuse of lying, to give him or her an opportunity to hear that allegation and to respond to it. This is a rule in Common law, 35 but it is also simply a matter of justice and fairness to victims and witnesses, principles recognised in all legal systems throughout the world.

47. It is to be noted that during the trial the Defence did not put, nor even suggest, to a single prosecution witness that he or she was lying because he or she had been drawn into a syndicate of informers and instructed as to how to testify against the accused, or that the witness was lying because he or she wished to take the accused's property. In these circumstances, Defence counsel's attempt in his closing arguments to tar all prosecution witnesses with the same broad brush of suspicion cannot be accepted by the Chamber. Thus the credibility of each witness must be assessed on its merits, taking it to account the witness's demeanour and the consistency and credibility or otherwise of the answers given by him or her under oath.

1.5. The Accused and his functions in Taba (paragraphs 3-4 of the Indictment)

48. Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Indictment appear under the heading, "the Accused". Taking these paragraphs in turn, paragraph 3 reads as follows:

> The Accused
>
> 3. Jean Paul AKAYESU, born in 1953 in Murehe sector, Taba commune, served as bourgmestre of that commune from April 1993 until June 1994. Prior to his appointment as bourgmestre, he was a teacher and school inspector in Taba.

49. The Chamber confirms paragraph 3, which is common cause between the Prosecution and the Defence. On the basis of the evidence presented at trial, the Chamber finds the following facts have been established with regard to the Accused generally.

50. The Accused, Akayesu was born in 1953 in Murehe sector, Taba commune in Rwanda, where he also grew up. He was an active athlete in Taba and a member of the local football team. In 1978 he married a local woman from the same commune, whom he had then known for ten years. They are still married and have five children together.

51. Before being appointed bourgmestre in 1993, the Accused served as a teacher and was later promoted to Primary School Inspector in Taba. In this capacity he was in charge of inspecting the education in the commune and acted as head of the teachers. He would occasionally fill in as a substitute teacher and was popular among pupils and students of different educational levels in the commune. Generally speaking, the Accused was a well known and popular figure in the local community.

52. Akayesu became politically active within the commune in 1991 and on 1 July of the same year, following the transition into multipartyism, he was one of the signatories to the statute and a founding member of the new political party R called,Mouvement Démocratique Républicain MDR Politically the goal of the MDR was not to be an extension of the traditional MDR Parmehutu, but rather an updated version thereof, diametrically opposed to the MRND. The MDR focused on pointing out the errors of the MRND such as delays in the provision of infrastructure, roads, schools, health facilities, lack of electricity, etc.. Eventually, Akayesu was elected local president of the MDR in Taba commune. A sizeable proportion of the population in Taba became members of the MDR, and as the party grew, a certain animosity between members of the MDR and the MRND began to appear, resulting in several acts of violence. The other parties within the Commune, the Parti Social Démocratique, PSD and the Parti Libéral, PL cooperated with the MDR but, like the MDR, both parties experienced similar difficulties in cooperating with the MRND.

53. On a personal level, Akayesu was considered a man of high morals, intelligence and integrity, possessing the qualities of a leader, who appeared to have the trust of the local community. These abilities were in all likelihood the main reasons why different groups in the commune, among others the leaders of the MDR, communal representatives and religious leaders, considered Akayesu a suitable candidate for bourgmestre in Taba for the 1993 elections. The Accused himself admits to having been reluctant to run for the post of bourgmestre, but was pressured into candidacy by the aforementioned groups, according to several witnesses, including Akayesu himself.

54. In April 1993, Akayesu was elected bourgmestre after an election contested by four candidates. He then served as bourgmestre of Taba Commune from April 1993 until June 1994. According to the Accused, the duties of a bourgmestre were diverse. In short, he was in charge of the total life of the commune in terms of the economy, infrastructure, markets, medical care and the overall social life.Traditionally the role of the bourgmestre had always been to act as the representative of the President in the commune. Therefore the arrival of multipartyism did not particularly change the considerable amount of unofficial powers conferred upon the bourgmestre by the people in the commune. The bourgmestre was the leader of the commune and commonly treated with great respect and deference by the population.

55. In Taba Commune, Akayesu played a major role in leading the people. He would give advice on various matters concerning security, economics or on the social well-being of the citizens. His advice would generally be followed and he was considered a father-figure or parent of the commune, to whom people would also come for informal advice. After a period of economic difficulties in Taba Commune due to corruption under the previous administration, a clear difference could be detected when Akayesu took office, as people would now settle their debts trusting the new administration. According to those of his colleagues appearing as witnesses before the Chamber, Akayesu was performing his task as bourgmestre well, prior to the period which is the subject of the Indictment.

56. Paragraph 4 of the Indictment reads as follows:

> 4. As bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU was charged with the performance of executive functions and the maintenance of public order within his commune, subject to the authority of the prefect. He had exclusive control over the communal police, as well as any gendarmes put at the disposition of the commune. He was responsible for the execution of laws and regulations and the administration of justice, also subject only to the prefect's authority.

57. The Chamber finds it necessary to explore in some detail the powers of the bourgmestre and, in particular, to distinguish between the de facto and de jure powers of a bourgmestre. In so doing, the Chamber will also deal with the allegation in paragraph 2 of the Indictment which reads, "In Rwanda, the bourgmestre is the most powerful figure in the commune. His de facto authority in the area is significantly greater than that which is conferred upon him de jure".

Background

58. A commune is governed by a bourgmestre in conjunction with the communal council which is composed of representatives of the different sectors in the commune. Below the sectors are the cellules and at the lowest level are the units of ten households. The latter two are really party structures, rather than administrative subdivisions.

59. Before the advent of multi-partyism, appointment and removal of a bourgmestre was the prerogative of the State President, political loyalty being the criterion. The bourgmestre was the representative of the central government in the commune but embodied at the same time the commune as a semi-autonomous unit. In that capacity, he would, for example, arrange contracts or represent the commune in court. He also had the authority to allocate the resources of the commune, including the land. He had the sole responsibility and authority over the communal police and could call upon the national gendarmerie to restore order. In addition, he was a judicial officer. Moreover, as the trusted representative of the President, he had a series of unofficial powers and duties, to such an extent that he was the central person in the daily life of the ordinary people. Citizens needed his protection in order to function in society. The bourgmestre held considerable sway over the communal council. Although an elected body, the council was less a representative body of the interest of the population than it was simply a channel for passing orders down to the people.

60. The introduction of multipartyism in 1991 had its effect on the local and national power structures from 1992 onwards. The MRND had to sacrifice the advantages which it enjoyed when it was the Siamese twin of the administration. A number of bourgmestres were removed on the advice of a pluralistic evaluation commission. The subsequent local elections were a clear victory for the opposition. Other bourgmestres were simply ousted by militia of an opposition party. Since then, the bourgmestres were no longer necessarily the representatives of the State President or of the central authority. Instead, they became primarily the representatives of their political party at the local level. But in any case, they would still remain the most important local representatives of power at the centre.

De jure* powers

61. The office of bourgmestre in Rwanda is similar to the office of maire in France or bourgmestre in Belgium36. It is an executive civilian position in the territorial administrative subdivision of commune. The primary function of the bourgmestre is to execute the laws adopted by the communal legislature, i.e., the elected communal council37. He "embodies the communal authority"38

The communal administration

62. The relationship between a bourgmestre and the communal workforce is spelt out in the body of law which is called administrative law in Civil Law countries (as opposed to labour law which regulates employment in the private sector). The bourgmestre has the power to hire (appoint) and fire (remove) communal employees after advice from the communal council39. The President of the Republic decrees by law the legal status (rights and duties) of the communal personnel. Although the legal situation (administrative law) may be very different from the private sector (labour law), it is very much a relationship of employer and employee and, therefore, strictly limited to the scope of the employment.

The communal police

63. The bourgmestre, without being a part of the communal police, has ultimate authority over it and is entirely responsible for its organisation, functioning and control.40

64. The communal police is a civilian police whose members do not fall under the military penal code Sanctions and procedures for sanctions are the subject of administrative law. A bourgmestre has only disciplinary jurisdiction (e.g. blame, suspension) over his communal police.

65. Although the law states that only the bourgmestre has authority over the police41, he is, however, not its commander. Article 108 of the Loi sur l'organisation communale states, "Le commandement de la Police communale est assuré par un brigadier placé sous l'autorité du bourgmestre". Therefore, the relationship between the bourgmestre and the communal police is comparable to the relationship between a Minister of Defence and the High Command of the armed forces.

66. In case of public disturbances, the prefect can assume direct control over the communal police.42

Gendarmerie Nationale

67. Paragraph 4 of the Indictment states that Akayesu as a bourgmestre had exclusive control over the communal police as well as any gendarmes put at the disposal of the commune.

68. The Gendarmerie Nationale is a military force whose task it is to maintain public order when it is requested to do so43.

69. It is the prefect, not the bourgmestre who can request the intervention of the Gendarmerie44. The Gendarmes put at the disposal of the commune at the request of the prefect operate under the bourgmestre's authority45. It is far from clear, however, that in such circumstances a bourgmestre would have command authority over a military force.46

Powers of a bourgmestre in times of war or national emergency

70. Apart from asking the prefect to request the Gendarmerie to intervene (supra), there are few legal provisions on the powers of a bourgmestre in times of war or national emergency.

71. A decree of 20 October 1959 (by the Belgian authorities) on the state of emergency is apparently still on the books. It gives the bourgmestre the power, once the the state of emergency has been declared, to order the evacuation, removal and internment of persons.47

De facto* powers

72. A number of witnesses testified before the Chamber as to the de facto powers of the bourgmestre and there is indeed evidence to support the Prosecutor's assertion that the bourgmestre enjoyed significant de facto authority.

73. The expert witness, Alison DesForges, testified that the bourgmestre was the most important authority for the ordinary citizens of a Commune, who in some sense exercised the powers of a chief in pre-colonial times.

74. Witness E said that the bourgmestre was considered as the "parent" of all the population whose every order would be respected. Witness S went further and stated that the people would normally follow the orders of the administrative authority, i.e. the bourgmestre, even if those orders were illegal or wrongful. Witness V said that the people could not disobey the orders of the bourgmestre.

75. On the other hand, Witness DAAX, who was the prefect of the Gitarama prefecture in which the accused was bourgmestre - and hence the Accused's hierarchical superior - testified that the bourgmestre had to work within the ambit of the law and could not exceed his de jure powers, and that if he did so, the prefect would intervene.

76. Witness R, himself a former bourgmestre, said that the duties and responsibilities of the bourgmestre were those prescribed and decreed by law, which the bourgmestre had to respect. The witness conceded, however, that the popularity of a bourgmestre might affect the extent to which his orders and advice were obeyed within the Commune. Witness R also admitted that, at least during the transitional period, certain bourgmestres exceeded their de jure powers with impunity, for example imprisoning their political rivals or embezzling from communal resources.

77. In light of the above, the Chamber finds it proved beyond a reasonable doubt that, as paragraph 4 of the Indictment states, "As bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU was charged with the performance of executive functions and the maintenance of public order within his commune, subject to the authority of the prefect". The Chamber does find it proved that "[the bourgmestre] had exclusive control over the communal police, [...][and authority over] any gendarmes put at the disposal of the commune". The Chamber does find it proved that "[the bourgmestre] was responsible for the execution of laws and regulations and the administration of justice, also subject only to the prefect's authority". The Chamber does find it proved that, "In Rwanda, the bourgmestre is the most powerful figure in the commune. His de facto authority in the area is significantly greater than that which is conferred upon him de jure".

2. HISTORICAL CONTEXT OF THE EVENTS IN RWANDA IN 1994

78. It is the opinion of the Chamber that , in order to understand the events alleged in the Indictment, it is necessary to say, however briefly, something about the history of Rwanda, beginning from the pre-colonial period up to 1994.

79. Rwanda is a small, very hilly country in the Great Lakes region of Central Africa. Before the events of 1994, it was the most densely populated country of the African continent (7.1 million inhabitants for 26,338 square kilometres). Ninety per cent of the population lives on agriculture. Its per capita income is among the lowest in the world, mainly because of a very high population pressure on land.

80. Prior to and during colonial rule, first, under Germany, from about 1897, and then under Belgium which, after driving out Germany in 1917, was given a mandate by the League of Nations to administer it, Rwanda was a complex and an advanced monarchy. The monarch ruled the country through his official representatives drawn from the Tutsi nobility. Thus, there emerged a highly sophisticated political culture which enabled the king to communicate with the people.

81. Rwanda then, admittedly, had some eighteen clans defined primarily along lines of kinship. The terms Hutu and Tutsi were already in use but referred to individuals rather than to groups. In those days the distinction between the Hutu and Tutsi was based on lineage rather than ethnicity. Indeed, the demarcation line was blurred: one could move from one status to another, as one became rich or poor, or even through marriage.

82. Both German and Belgian colonial authorities, if only at the outset as far as the latter are concerned, relied on an elite essentially composed of people who referred to themselves as Tutsi, a choice which, according to Dr. Alison Desforges, was born of racial or even racist considerations. In the minds of the colonizers, the Tutsi looked more like them, because of their height and colour, and were, therefore, more intelligent and better equipped to govern.

83. In the early 1930s, Belgian authorities introduced a permanent distinction by dividing the population into three groups which they called ethnic groups, with the Hutu representing about 84% of the population, while the Tutsi (about 15%) and Twa (about 1%) accounted for the rest. In line with this division, it became mandatory for every Rwandan to carry an identity card mentioning his or her ethnicity. The Chamber notes that the reference to ethnic background on identity cards was maintained, even after Rwanda's independence and was, at last, abolished only after the tragic events the country experienced in 1994.

84. According to the testimony of Dr. Alison Desforges, while the Catholic Church which arrived in the wake of European colonizers gave the monarch, his notables and the Tutsi population privileged access to education and training, it tried to convert them. However, in the face of some resistance, the missionaries for a while undertook to convert the Hutu instead. Yet, when the Belgians included being Christian among the criteria for determining the suitability of a candidate for employment in the civil service, the Tutsi, hitherto opposed to their conversion, became more willing to be converted to Christianity. Thus, they carried along most Hutu. Quoting a witness from whom she asked for an explanation for the massive conversion of Hutu to Christianity, Dr. Desforges testified that the reasons for the conversion were to be found in the cult of obedience to the chiefs which is highly developed in the Rwandan society. According to that witness, "you could not remain standing while your superiors were on their knees praying". For these reasons, therefore, it can be understood why at the time, that is, in the late 1920s and early 1930s, the church, like the colonizers, supported the Tutsi monopoly of power.

85. From the late 1940s, at the dawn of the decolonization process, the Tutsi became aware of the benefits they could derive from the privileged status conferred on them by the Belgian colonizers and the Catholic church. They then attempted to free themselves somehow from Belgian political stewardship and to emancipate the Rwandan society from the grip of the Catholic church. The desire for independence shown by the Tutsi elite certainly caused both the Belgians and the church to shift their alliances from the Tutsi to the Hutu, a shift rendered more radical by the change in the church's philosophy after the second world war, with the arrival of young priests from a more democratic and egalitarian trend of Christianity, who sought to develop political awareness among the Tutsi- dominated Hutu majority.

86. Under pressure from the United Nations Trusteeship Council and following the shift in alliances just mentioned, Belgium changed its policy by granting more opportunities to the Hutu to acquire education and to hold senior positions in government services. This turn-about particularly angered the Tutsi, especially because, on the renewal of its mandate over Rwanda by the United Nations, Belgium was requested to establish representative organs in the Trust territory, so as to groom the natives for administration and, ultimately, grant independence to the country. The Tutsi therefore began the move to end Belgian domination, while the Hutu elite, for tactical reasons, favoured the continuation of the domination, hoping to make the Hutu masses aware of their political weight in Rwanda, in a bid to arrive at independence, which was unavoidable, at least on the basis of equality with the Tutsi. Belgium particularly appreciated this attitude as it gave it reason to believe that with the Hutu, independence would not spell a severance of ties.

87. In 1956, in accordance with the directives of the United Nations Trusteeship Council, Belgium organized elections on the basis of universal suffrage in order to choose new members of local organs, such as the grassroots representative Councils. With the electorate voting on strictly ethnic lines, the Hutu of course obtained an overwhelming majority and thereby became aware of their political strength The Tutsi, who were hoping to achieve independence while still holding the reins of power, came to the realization that universal suffrage meant the end of their supremacy; hence, confrontation with the Hutu became inevitable.

88. Around 1957, the first political parties were formed and, as could be expected, they were ethnically rather than ideologically based. There were four political parties, namely the Mouvement démocratique répubicain, Parmehutu ("MDR Parmehutu"), which clearly defined itself as the Hutu grassroots movement; the Union Nationale Rwandaise ("UNAR"), the party of Tutsi monarchists; and, between the two extremes, the two others, Aprosoma, predominantly Hutu, and the Rassemblement démocratique rwandais ("RADER"), which brought together moderates from the Tutsi and Hutu elite.

89. The dreaded political unrest broke out in November 1959, with increased bloody incidents, the first victims of which were the Hutu. In reprisal, the Hutu burnt down and looted Tutsi houses. Thus became embedded a cycle of violence which ended with the establishment on 18 October 1960, by the Belgian authorities, of an autonomous provisional Government headed by Grégoire Kayibanda, President of MDR Parmehutu, following the June 1960 communal elections that gave an overwhelming majority to Hutu parties. After the Tutsi monarch fled abroad, the Hutu opposition declared the Republic of Gitarama, on 28 January 1961, and set up a legislative assembly. On 6 February 1961, Belgium granted self-government to Rwanda. Independence was declared on 1 July 1962, with Grégoire Kayibanda at the helm of the new State, and, thus, President of the First Republic.

90. The victory of Hutu parties increased the departure of Tutsi to neighbouring countries from where Tutsi exiles made incursions into Rwanda. The word Inyenzi, meaning cockroach, came to be used to refer to these assailants. Each attack was followed by reprisals against the Tutsi within the country and in 1963, such attacks caused the death of at least ten thousand of them, further increasing the number of those who went into exile. Concurrently, at the domestic level, the Hutu regime seized this opportunity to allocate to the Hutu the lands abandoned by Tutsi in exile and to redistribute posts within the Government and the civil service, in favour of the Hutu, on the basis of a quota system linked to the proportion of each ethnic group in the population.

91. The dissensions that soon surfaced among the ruling Hutu led the regime to strengthen the primacy of the MDR Parmehutu party over all sectors of public life and institutions, thereby making it the de facto sole party. This consolidated the authority of President Grégoire Kayibanda as well as the influence of his entourage, most of who came from the same region as he, that is the Gitarama region in the centre of the country. The drift towards ethnic and regional power became obvious. From then onwards, a rift took root within the Hutu political Establishment, between its key figures from the Centre and those from the North and South who showed great frustration. Increasingly isolated, President Kayibanda could not control the ethnic and regional dissensions. The disagreements within the regime resulted into anarchy, which enabled General Juvénal Habyarimana, Army Chief of Staff, to seize power through a coup on 5 July 1973. General Habyarimana dissolved the First Republic and established the Second Republic. Scores of political leaders were imprisoned and, later, executed or starved to death, as was the case with the former President, Grégoire Kayibanda.

92. Following a trend then common in Africa, President Habyarimana, in 1975, instituted the one-party system with the creation of the Mouvement révolutionnaire national pour le développement (MRND), of which every Rwandan was a member ipso facto, including the newborn. Since the party encompassed everyone, there was no room for political pluralism. A law passed in 1978 made Rwanda officially a one-party State with the consequence that the MRND became a "State-party", as it formed one and the same entity with the Government. According to Dr. Desforges, the local administrative authority was, at the same time, the representative of the party within his administrative unit. There was therefore a single centralized organization , both for the State and the party, which stretched from the Head of State down to basic units known as cellules, with even smaller local organs , each comprising ten households, below the cellules. The cellules and local organs were, indeed, more of party organs, than administrative units. They were the agencies for the implementation of Umuganda, the mobilization programme which required people to allocate half a day's labour per week to some communal project, such as the construction of schools or road repairs.

93. According to testimonies given before the Chamber, particularly that of Dr. Desforges, Habyarimana's accession to power aroused a great deal of enthusiasm and hope, both inside and outside the country, and also among members of the Tutsi ethnic group. Indeed, the regime at the outset did guard against pursuing a clearly anti-Tutsi policy. Many Tutsi were then prepared to reach a compromise. However, as the years went by, power took its toll and Habyarimana's policies became clearly anti-Tutsi. Like his predecessor, Grégoire Kayibanda, Habyarimana strengthened the policy of discrimination against the Tutsi by applying the same quota system in universities and government services. A policy of systematic discrimination was pursued even among the Hutu themselves, in favour of Hutu from Habyarimana's native region, namely Gisenyi and Ruhengeri in the north-west, to the detriment of Hutu from other regions. This last aspect of Habyarimana's policy, considerably weakened his power: henceforth, he faced opposition not only from the Tutsi but also from the Hutu, who felt discriminated against and most of whom came from the central and southern regions. In the face of this situation, Habyarimana chose to relentlessly pursue the same policy like his predecessor who favoured his region, Gitarama. Like Kayibanda, he became increasingly isolated and the base of his regime narrowed down to a small intimate circle dubbed "Akazu", meaning the "President's household". This further radicalized the opposition whose ranks swelled more and more. On 1 October 1990, an attack was launched from Uganda by the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) whose forebear, the Alliance rwandaise pour l'unité nationale ("ARUN"), was formed in 1979 by Tutsi exiles based in Uganda. The attack provided a pretext for the arrest of thousands of opposition members in Rwanda considered as supporters of the RPF.

94. Faced with the worsening internal situation that attracted a growing number of Rwandans to the multi-party system, and pressured by foreign donors demanding not only economic but also political reforms in the form of much greater participation of the people in the country's management, President Habyarimana was compelled to accept the multi-party system in principle. On 28 December 1990, the preliminary draft of a political charter to establish a multi-party system was published. On 10 June 1991 the new constitution introducing the multi-party system was adopted, followed on 18 June by the promulgation of the law on political parties and the formation of the first parties, namely :

- the Mouvement démocratique républicain (MDR), considered to be the biggest party in terms of membership and claiming historical links with the MDR-Parmehutu of Grégoire Kayibanda; its power-base was mainly the centre of the country, around Gitarama;

- the Parti social démocrate (PSD), whose membership included a good number of intellectuals, recruited its members mostly in the South, in Butare;

- the Parti libéral(PL); and

- the Parti démocrate chrétien (PDC).

95. At the same time, Tutsi exiles, particularly those in Uganda organized themselves not only to launch incursions into Rwandan territory but also to form a political organization, the Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF), with a military wing called the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA). The first objective of the exiles was to return to Rwanda. But they met with objection from the Rwandan authorities and President Habyarimana, who is alleged to have said that land in Rwanda would not be enough to feed all those who wanted to return. On these grounds, the exiles broadened their objectives to include the overthrow of Habyarimana.

96. The above-mentioned RPF attack on 1 October 1991 sent shock waves throughout Rwanda. Members of the opposition parties formed in 1991, saw this as an opportunity to have an informal alliance with the RPF so as to further destabilize an already weakened regime. The regime finally accepted to share power between the MRND and the other political parties and, around March 1992, the Government and the opposition signed an agreement to set up a transitional coalition government headed by a Prime Minister from the MDR. Out of the nineteen ministries, the MRND obtained only nine. Pressured by the opposition, the MRND accepted that negotiations with the RPF be started. The negotiations led to the first cease-fire in July 1992 and the first part of the Arusha Accords48. The July 1992 cease-fire tacitly recognized RPF control over a portion of Rwandan territory in the north-east. The protocols signed following these accords included the October 1992 protocol establishing a transitional government and a transitional assembly and the participation of the RPF in both institutions. The political scene was now widened to comprise three blocs: the Habyarimana bloc, the internal opposition and the RPF. Experience showed that President Habyarimana accepted these accords only because he was compelled to do so, but had no intention of complying with what he himself referred to as "un chiffon de papier", meaning a scrap of paper.

97. Yet, the RPF did not drop its objective of seizing power. It therefore increased its military attacks. The massive attack of 8 February 1993 seriously undermined the relations between the RPF and the Hutu opposition parties, making it easy for Habyarimana supporters to convene an assembly of all Hutu Thus, the bond built on Hutu kinship once again began to prevail over political differences. The three blocs mentioned earlier gave way to two ethnic- based opposing camps: on the one hand, the RPF, the supposed canopy of all Tutsi and, on the other hand, the other parties said to be composed essentially of the Hutu.

98. In March 1992, a group of Hutu hard-liners founded a new radical political party, the Coalition pour la défense de la republique (CDR), or Coalition for the Defence of the Republic, which was more extremist than Habyarimana himself and opposed him on several occasions.

99. To make the economic, social and political conflict look more like an ethnic conflict, the President's entourage, in particular, the army, persistently launched propaganda campaigns which often consisted o fabricating events. Dr. Alison Desforges in her testimony referred to this as "mirror politics", whereby a person accuses others of what he or she does or wants to do. In this regard, in the morning hours of 5 October 1990, the Rwandan army simulated an attack on Kigali and, immediately thereafter, the Government claimed that the city had just been infiltrated by the RPF, with the help of local Tutsi accomplices. Some eight thousand Tutsi and members of the Hutu opposition were arrested the next morning. Several dozens of them died in jail. Another example of mirror politics is the March 1992 killings in Bugesera which began a week after a propaganda agent working for the Habyarimana government distributed a tract claiming that the Tutsi of that region were preparing to kill many Hutu. The MRND militia, known as Interahamwe, participated in the Bugesera killings. It was the first time that this party's militia participated in killings of this scale. They were later joined by the militia of other parties or wings of Hutu extremist parties, including, in particular, the CDR militia known as the Impuzamugambi.

100. Mirror politics was also used in Kibulira, in the north-west, and in the Bagoguye region. In both cases, the population was goaded on to defend itself against fabricated attacks supposed to have been perpetrated by RPF infiltrators and to attack and kill their Tutsi neighbours. In passing, mention should be made of the role that Radio Rwanda and, later, the RTLM, founded in 1993 by people close to President Habyarimana, played in this anti-Tutsi propaganda. Besides the radio stations, there were other propaganda agents, the most notorious of whom was a certain Léon Mugesera, vice-president of the MRND in Gisenyi Préfecture and lecturer at the National University of Rwanda, who published two pamphlets accusing the Tutsi of planning a genocide of the Hutu49. During an MRND meeting in November 1992, the same Léon Mugesera called for the extermination of the Tutsi and the assassination of Hutu opposed to the President. He made reference to the idea that the Tutsi allegedly came from Ethiopia and, hence, that after they had been killed, they should be thrown into the Rwandan tributaries of the Nile, so that they should return to where they are supposed to have come from50. He exhorted his listeners to avoid the error of earlier massacres during which some Tutsi, particularly children, were spared.

101. On the political front, a split was noticed in almost all the opposition parties on the issue of the proposed signing of a final peace agreement. This schismatic trend began with the MDR party, the main rival of the MRND, whose radical faction, later known as MDR Power, affiliated with the CDR and the MRND.

102. On 4 August 1993, the Government of Rwanda and the RPF signed the final Arusha Accords and ended the war which started on 1 October 1990. The Accords provided, inter alia, for the establishment of a transitional government to include the RPF, the partial demobilization and integration of the two opposing armies (13,000 RPF and 35,000 FAR troops), the creation of a demilitarized zone between the RPF-controlled area in the north and the rest of the country, the stationing of an RPF battalion in the city of Kigali, and the deployment, in four phases, of a UN peace-keeping force, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), with a two-year mandate.

103. On 23 October 1993, the President of Burundi, Melchior Ndadaye, a Hutu, was assassinated in the course of an attempted coup by Burundi Tutsi soldiers. Dr. Alison Desforges testified that in Rwanda, Hutu extremists exploited this assassination to prove that it was impossible to agree with the Tutsi, since they would always turn against their Hutu partners to kill them. A meeting held at the Kigali stadium at the end of October 1993 was entirely devoted to the discussion of the assassination of President Ndadaye, and in a very virulent speech, Froduald Karamira, senior national vice-President of the Interahamwe, is alleged to have called for unreserved solidarity among all the Hutu, solidarity transcending the divide of political parties. He reportedly concluded his speech with a call for "Hutu-Power".

104. The assassination of President Ndadaye gave President Habyarimana and the CDR the opportunity to denounce, in a joint MRND - CDR statement issued at the end of 1993, the Arusha Accords, calling them treason. However, a few days later, pursuing his policy of prevarication towards the international community, Habyarimana signed another part of the peace accords. Indeed, the Arusha Accords no longer existed, except on paper. The President certainly did take the oath of office, but the installation of a transitional government was delayed, mainly by divisions within the political parties and the ensuing infightings.

105. The leaders of the CDR and the PSD were assassinated in February 1994. In Kigali, in the days that followed, the Interahamwe and the Impuzamugambi massacred Tutsi as well as Habyarimana's Hutu opponents. The Belgian Foreign Minister informed his representative at the UN of the worsening situation which "could result in an irreversible explosion of violence"51 . At the same time, as he stated in his testimony before the Tribunal, UNAMIR commander, Major-General Dallaire, alerted the United Nations in New York of the discovery of arms caches and requested a change in UNAMIR's engagement rules to enable him to seize the arms; but the request was turned down. Meanwhile, anti-Tutsi propaganda on the media intensified. The RTLM constantly stepped up its attacks which became increasingly targeted and violent.

106. At the end of March 1994, the transitional government was still not set up and Rwanda was on the brink of bankruptcy. International donors and neighbouring countries put pressure on the Habyarimana government to implement the Arusha Accords.
On 6 April 1994, President Habyarimana and other heads of State of the region met in Dar-es-Salaam (Tanzania) to discuss the implementation of the peace accords. The aircraft carrying President Habyarimana and the Burundian President, Ntaryamirai, who were returning from the meeting, crashed around 8:30 pm near Kigali airport. All aboard were killed.

107. The Rwandan army and the militia immediately erected roadblocks around the city of Kigali. Before dawn on April 7 1994, in various parts of the country, the Presidential Guard and the militia started killing the Tutsi as well as Hutu known to be in favour of the Arusha Accords and power-sharing between the Tutsi and the Hutu. Among the first victims, were a number of ministers of the coalition government, including its Prime Minister, Agathe Uwilingiyimana (MDR), the president of the Supreme Court and virtually the entire leadership of the parti social démocrate (PSD). The constitutional vacuum thus created cleared the way for the establishment of the self-proclaimed Hutu-power interim government, mainly under the aegis of retired Colonel Théoneste Bagosora.

108. Soldiers of the Rwandan Armed Forces (FAR) executed ten Belgian blue helmets, thereby provoking the withdrawal of the Belgian contingent which formed the core of UNAMIR. On April 21 1994, the UN Security Council decided to reduce the peace-keeping force to 450 troops.

109. In the afternoon of 7 April 1994, RPF troops left their quarters in Kigali and their zone in the north, to resume open war against the Rwandan Armed Forces. Its troops from the north moved south, crossing the demilitarized zone, and entered the city of Kigali on April 12 1994, thus forcing the interim government to flee to Gitarama.

110. On April 12 1994, after public authorities announced over Radio Rwanda that "we need to unite against the enemy , the only enemy and this is the enemy that we have always known...it's the enemy who wants to reinstate the former feudal monarchy", it became clear that the Tutsi were the primary targets. During the week of 14 to 21 April 1994, the killing campaign reached its peak. The President of the interim government, the Prime Minister and some key ministers travelled to Butare and Gikongoro, and that marked the beginning of killings in these regions which had hitherto been peaceful. Thousands of people, sometimes encouraged or directed by local administrative officials, on the promise of safety, gathered unsuspectingly in churches, schools, hospitals and local government buildings. In reality, this was a trap intended to lead to the rapid extermination of a large number of people.

111. The killing of Tutsi which henceforth spared neither women nor children, continued up to 18 July 1994, when the RPF triumphantly entered Kigali. The estimated total number of victims in the conflict varies from 500,000 to 1,000,000 or more.

3. GENOCIDE IN RWANDA IN 1994?

112. As regards the massacres which took place in Rwanda between April and July 1994, as detailed above in the chapter on the historical background to the Rwandan tragedy, the question before this Chamber is whether they constitute genocide. Indeed, it was felt in some quarters52 that the tragic events which took place in Rwanda were only part of the war between the Rwandan Armed Forces (the RAF) and the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF). The answer to this question would allow a better understanding of the context within which the crimes with which the accused is charged are alleged to have been committed.

113. According to paragraph 2 of Article 2 of the Statute of the Tribunal, which reflects verbatim the definition of genocide as contained in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (hereinafter, "the Convention on Genocide")53, genocide means any of the following acts referred to in said paragraph, committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such, namely, inter alia: killing members of the group; causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group.

114. Even though the number of victims is yet to be known with accuracy, no one can reasonably refute the fact that widespread killings were perpetrated throughout Rwanda in 1994.

115. Indeed, this is confirmed by the many testimonies heard by this Chamber. The testimony of Dr. Zachariah who appeared before this Chamber on 16 and 17 January 1997 is enlightening in this regard. Dr. Zachariah was a physician who at the time of the events was working for a non-governmental organisation, "Médecins sans frontières." In 1994 he was based in Butare and travelled over a good part of Rwanda upto its border with Burundi. He described in great detail the heaps of bodies which he saw everywhere, on the roads, on the footpaths and in rivers and, particularly, the manner in which all these people had been killed. At the church in Butare, at the Gahidi mission, he saw many wounded persons in the hospital who, according to him, were all Tutsi and who, apparently, had sustained wounds inflicted with machetes to the face, the neck, and also to the ankle, at the Achilles' tendon, to prevent them from fleeing. The testimony given by Major-General Dallaire, former Commander of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment, who was called by the defence, is of a similar vein. Major-General Dallaire spoke of troops of the Rwandan Armed Forces and of the Presidential Guard going into houses in Kigali that had been previously identified in order to kill. He also talked about the terrible murders in Kabgayi, very near Gitarama, where the interim Government was based and of the reports he received from observers throughout the country which mentioned killings in Gisenyi, Cyangugu and Kibongo.

116. The British cameraman, Simon Cox, took photographs of bodies in many churches in Remera, Biambi, Shangi, between Cyangugu and Kibuye, and in Bisesero. He mentioned identity cards strewn on the ground, all of which were marked "Tutsi". Consequently, in view of these widespread killings the victims of which were mainly Tutsi, the Chamber is of the opinion that the first requirement for there to be genocide has been met, the killing and causing serious bodily harm to members of a group.

117. The second requirement is that these killings and serious bodily harm, as is the case in this instance be committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a particular group targeted as such.

118. In the opinion of the Chamber, there is no doubt that considering their undeniable scale, their systematic nature and their atrociousness, the massacres were aimed at exterminating the group that was targeted. Many facts show that the intention of the perpetrators of these killings was to cause the complete disappearance of the Tutsi. In this connection, Alison Desforges, an expert witness, in her testimony before this Chamber on 25 February 1997, stated as follows: "on the basis of the statements made by certain political leaders, on the basis of songs and slogans popular among the Interahamwe, I believe that these people had the intention of completely wiping out the Tutsi from Rwanda so that-as they said on certain occasions - their children , later on , would not know what a Tutsi looked like, unless they referred to history books". Moreover, this testimony given by Dr. Desforges was confirmed by two prosecution witnesses, witness KK and witness OO, who testified separately before the Tribunal that one Silas Kubwimana had said during a public meeting chaired by the accused himself that all the Tutsi had to be killed so that someday Hutu children would not know what a Tutsi looked like.

119. Furthermore, as mentioned above, Dr. Zachariah also testified that the Achilles' tendons of many wounded persons were cut to prevent them from fleeing. In the opinion of the Chamber, this demonstrates the resolve of the perpetrators of these massacres not to spare any Tutsi. Their plan called for doing whatever was possible to prevent any Tutsi from escaping and, thus, to destroy the whole group. Witness OO further told the Chamber that during the same meeting, a certain Ruvugama, who was then a Member of Parliament, had stated that he would rest only when no single Tutsi is left in Rwanda".

120. Dr. Alison Desforges testified that many Tutsi bodies were often systematically thrown into the Nyabarongo river, a tributary of the Nile. Indeed, this has been corroborated by several images shown to the Chamber throughout the trial. She explained that the underlying intention of this act was to "send the Tutsi back to their place of origin", to "make them return to Abyssinia", in keeping with the allegation that the Tutsi are foreigners in Rwanda, where they are supposed to have settled following their arrival from the Nilotic regions.54

121. Other testimonies heard, especially that of Major-General Dallaire, also show that there was an intention to wipe out the Tutsi group in its entirety, since even newborn babies were not spared. Even pregnant women, including those of Hutu origin, were killed on the grounds that the foetuses in their wombs were fathered by Tutsi men, for in a patrilineal society like Rwanda, the child belongs to the father's group of origin. In this regard, it is worthwhile noting the testimony of witness PP, heard by the Chamber on 11 April 1997, who mentioned a statement made publicly by the accused to the effect that if a Hutu woman were impregnated by a Tutsi man, the Hutu woman had to be found in order "for the pregnancy to be aborted". According to prosecution witnesses KK, PP and OO, the accused expressed this opinion on other occasions in the form of a Rwandese proverb according to which if a snake wraps itself round a calabash, there is nothing that can be done, except to break the calabash' (" Iyo inzoka yiziritse ku gisabo, nta kundi bigenda barakimena)55. In the context of the period in question, this proverb meant that if a Hutu woman married to a Tutsi man was impregnated by him, the foetus had to be destroyed so that the Tutsi child which it would become should not survive. It should be noted in this regard that in Rwandese culture, breaking the "gisabo", which is a big calabash used as a churn was considered taboo. Yet, if a snake wraps itself round a gisabo, obviously, one has no choice but to ignore this taboo in order to kill the snake.

122. In light of the foregoing, it is now appropriate for the Chamber to consider the issue of specific intent that is required for genocide (mens rea or dolus specialis). In other words, it should be established that the above-mentioned acts were targeted at a particular group as such. In this respect also, many consistent and reliable testimonies , especially those of Major-General Dallaire, Dr. Zachariah, victim V, prosecution witness PP, defence witness DAAX, and particularly that of the accused himself unanimously agree on the fact that it was the Tutsi as members of an ethnic group which they formed in the context of the period56 in question, who were targeted during the massacres57.

123. Two facts, in particular, which suggest that it was indeed the Tutsi who were targeted should be highlighted: Firstly, at the roadblocks which were erected in Kigali immediately after the crash of the President's plane on 6 April 1994 and, later on, in most of the country's localities, members of the Tutsi population were sorted out. Indeed, at these roadblocks which were manned, depending on the situation, either by soldiers, troops of the Presidential Guard and/or militiamen, the systematic checking of identity cards indicating the ethnic group of their holders, allowed the separation of Hutu from Tutsi, with the latter being immediately apprehended and killed, sometimes on the spot. Secondly, the propaganda campaign conducted before and during the tragedy by the audiovisual media, for example, "Radio Television des Milles Collines"(RTLM), or the print media, like the Kangura58 newspaper. These various news media overtly called for the killing of Tutsi, who were considered as the accomplices of the RPF and accused of plotting to take over the power lost during the revolution of 1959. Some articles and cartoons carried in the Kangura newspaper, entered in evidence, are unambiguous in this respect. In fact, even exhibit 25A could be added to this lot. Exhibit 25A is a letter from the "GZ" staff headquarters dated 21 September 1992 and signed by Deofratas Nsabimana, Colonel, BEM, to which is annexed a document prepared by a committee of ten officers and which deals with the definition of the term enemy. According to that document, which was intended for the widest possible dissemination, the enemy fell into two categories, namely:" the primary enemy" and the "enemy supporter". The primary enemy was defined as "the extremist Tutsi within the country or abroad who are nostalgic for power and who have NEVER acknowledged and STILL DO NOT acknowledge the realities of the Social Revolution of 1959, and who wish to regain power in RWANDA by all possible means, including the use of weapons". On the other hand, the primary enemy supporter was "anyone who lent support in whatever form to the primary enemy". This document also stated that the primary enemy and their supporters came mostly from social groups comprising, in particular, "Tutsi refugees", "Tutsi within the country", "Hutu dissatisfied with the current regime", "Foreigners married to Tutsi women" and the "Nilotic-hamitic tribes in the region".

124. In the opinion of the Chamber, all this proves that it was indeed a particular group, the Tutsi ethnic group, which was targeted. Clearly, the victims were not chosen as individuals but, indeed, because they belonged to said group; and hence the victims were members of this group selected as such. According to Alison Desforges's testimony, the Tutsi were killed solely on account of having been born Tutsi.

125. Clearly therefore, the massacres which occurred in Rwanda in 1994 had a specific objective, namely the extermination of the Tutsi, who were targeted especially because of their Tutsi origin and no because they were RPF fighters. In any case, the Tutsi children and pregnant women would, naturally, not have been among the fighters.

126. Consequently, the Chamber concludes from all the foregoing that genocide was, indeed, committed in Rwanda in 1994 against the Tutsi as a group. Furthermore, in the opinion of the Chamber, this genocide appears to have been meticulously organized. In fact, Dr. Alison Desforges testifying before the Chamber on 24 May 1997, talked of "centrally organized and supervised massacres". Indeed, some evidence supports this view that the genocide had been planned. First, the existence of lists of Tutsi to be eliminated is corroborated by many testimonies. In this respect, Dr. Zachariah mentioned the case of patients and nurses killed in a hospital because a soldier had a list including their names. There are also the arms caches in Kigali which Major-General Dallaire mentioned and regarding whose destruction he had sought the UN's authorization in vain. Lastly, there is the training of militiamen by the Rwandan Armed Forces and of course, the psychological preparation of the population to attack the Tutsi, which preparation was masterminded by some news media, with the RTLM at the forefront.

127. Finally, in response to the question posed earlier in this chapter as to whether the tragic events that took place in Rwanda in 1994 occurred solely within the context of the conflict between the RAF and the RPF, the Chamber replies in the negative, since it holds that the genocide did indeed take place against the Tutsi group, alongside the conflict. The execution of this genocide was probably facilitated by the conflict, in the sense that the fighting against the RPF forces was used as a pretext for the propaganda inciting genocide against the Tutsi, by branding RPF fighters and Tutsi civilians together, through dissemination via the media of the idea that every Tutsi was allegedly an accomplice of the Inkotanyi. Very clearly, once the genocide got under way, the crime became one of the stakes in the conflict between the RPF and the RAF. In 1994, General Kagame, speaking on behalf of the RPF, declared that a cease fire could possibly not be implemented until the massacre of civilians by the government forces59 had stopped.

128. In conclusion, it should be stressed that although the genocide against the Tutsi occurred concomitantly with the above-mentioned conflict, it was, evidently, fundamentally different from the conflict. The accused himself stated during his initial appearance before the Chamber, when recounting a conversation he had with one RAF officer and Silas Kubwimana, a leader of the Interahamwe, that the acts perpetrated by the Interahamwe against Tutsi civilians were not considered by the RAF officer to be of a nature to help the government armed forces in the conflict with the RPF60. Note is also taken of the testimony of witness KK which is in the same vein. This witness told the Chamber that while she and the children were taken away, an RAF soldier allegedly told persons who were persecuting her that "instead of going to confront the Inkotanyi at the war front, you are killing children, although children know nothing; they have never done politics". The Chamber's opinion is that the genocide was organized and planned not only by members of the RAF, but also by the political forces who were behind the "Hutu-power", that it was executed essentially by civilians including the armed militia and even ordinary citizens, and above all, that the majority of the Tutsi victims were non-combatants, including thousands of women and children, even foetuses. The fact that the genocide took place while the RAF was in conflict with the RPF, can in no way be considered as an extenuating circumstance for it.

129. This being the case, the Chamber holds that the fact that genocide was indeed committed in Rwanda in 1994 and more particularly in Taba, cannot influence it in its decisions in the present case. Its sole task is to assess the individual criminal responsibility of the accused for the crimes with which he is charged, the burden of proof being on the Prosecutor61. In spite of the irrefutable atrocities of the crime committed in Rwanda, the judges must examine the facts adduced in a most dispassionate manner, bearing in mind that the accused is presumed innocent Moreover, the seriousness of the charges brought against the accused makes it all the more necessary to examine scrupulously and meticulously all the inculpatory and exonerating evidence, in the context of a fair trial and in full resect of all the rights of the Accused.

4. EVIDENTIARY MATTERS

130. The Chamber will address certain general evidentiary matters of concern which arose in relation to the evidence produced by the parties during this trial. These matters include the assessment of evidence, the impact of trauma on witnesses, questions of interpretation from Kinyarwanda into French and English, and cultural factors which might affect an understanding of the evidence presented.

Assessment of Evidence

131. In its assessment of the evidence, as a general principle, the Chamber has attached probative value to each testimony and each exhibit individually according to its credibility and relevance to the allegations at issue. As commonly provided for in most national criminal proceedings, the Chamber has considered the charges against the accused on the basis of the testimony and exhibits offered by the parties to support or challenge the allegations made in the Indictment. In seeking to establish the truth in its judgment, the Chamber has relied as well on indisputable facts and on other elements relevant to the case, such as constitutive documents pertaining to the establishment and jurisdiction of the Tribunal, even if these were not specifically tendered in evidence by the parties during trial. The Chamber notes that it is not restricted under the Statute of the Tribunal to apply any particular legal system and is not bound by any national rules of evidence. In accordance with Rule 89 of its Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the Chamber has applied the rules of evidence which in its view best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit and general principles of law.

Unus Testis, Nullus Testis

132. The Chamber notes that during trial, only one testimony was presented in support of certain facts alleged in the Indictment; hence the question arises as to the principle found in Civil Law systems: unus testis, nullus testis (one witness is no witness) whereby corroboration of evidence is required if it is to be admitted.

133. Without wishing to delve into a debate on the applicability of the rule of corroboration of evidence in this judgment, the Chamber recalls that the proceedings before it are conducted in accordance solely with the Statute of the Tribunal and its Rules and, as provided for by Rule 89(A), it shall not be bound by national rules of evidence. Furthermore, where evidentiary matters are concerned, the Chamber is bound only to the application of the provisions of its Statute and Rules, in particular Rule 89 of the Rules which sets out the general principle of the admissibility of any relevant evidence which has probative value, provided that it is in accordance with the requisites of a fair trial.

134. Rule 96(i) of the Rules alone specifically deals with the issue of corroboration of testimony required by the Chamber. The provisions of this Rule, which apply only to cases of testimony by victims of sexual assault, stipulate that no corroboration shall be required. In the Tadic judgment rendered by the ICTY, the Trial Chamber ruled that this "Sub-rule accords to the testimony of a victim of sexual assault the same presumption of reliability as the testimony of victims of other crimes, something which had long been denied to victims of sexual assault in common law [which] certainly does not [...] justify any inference that in cases of crimes other than sexual assault, corroboration is required. The proper inference is, in fact, directly to the contrary"62.

135. In view of the above, the Chamber can rule on the basis of a single testimony provided such testimony is, in its opinion, relevant and credible.

136. The Chamber can freely assess the probative value of all relevant evidence. The Chamber had thus determined that in accordance with Rule 89, any relevant evidence having probative value may be admitted into evidence, provided that it is being in accordance with the requisites of a fair trial. The Chamber finds that hearsay evidence is not inadmissible per se and has considered such evidence, with caution, in accordance with Rule 89.

Witness statements

137. During the trial, the Prosecutor and the Defence relied on pre-trial statements from witnesses for the purpose of cross-examination. The Chamber ordered that any such statements to which reference was made in the proceedings be submitted in evidence for consideration63. In many instances, the Defence has alleged inconsistencies and contradictions between the pre-trial statements of witnesses and their evidence at trial. The Chamber notes that these pre-trial statements were composed following interviews with witnesses by investigators of the Office of the Prosecution. These interviews were mostly conducted in Kinyarwanda, and the Chamber did not have access to transcripts of the interviews, but only translations thereof. It was therefore unable to consider the nature and form of the questions put to the witnesses, or the accuracy of interpretation at the time. The Chamber has considered inconsistencies and contradictions between these statements and testimony at trial with caution for these reasons, and in the light of the time lapse between the statements and the presentation of evidence at trial, the difficulties of recollecting precise details several years after the occurrence of the events, the difficulties of translation, and the fact that several witnesses were illiterate and stated that they had not read their written statements. Moreover, the statements were not made under solemn declaration and were not taken by judicial officers. In the circumstances, the probative value attached to the statements is, in the Chamber's view, considerably less than direct sworn testimony before the Chamber, the truth of which has been subjected to the test of cross-examination.

False testimony

138. Rule 91 of the Rules (False Testimony under Solemn Declaration) provides for, inter alia, the investigation and possible prosecution of a witness whom the Chamber believes may have knowingly and wilfully given false testimony. As held by the Chamber in its decision rendered thereon in relation to a Defence motion requesting the Chamber to direct the Prosecutor to investigate the alleged false testimony by a witness 64, Rule 91(B) provides:

> Either the Chamber establishes proprio motu that strong grounds exist for believing that a witness has knowingly and wilfully given false testimony, and thence directs the Prosecutor to investigate the matter with a view to the preparation and submission of an Indictment for false testimony;
>
> Or, at the request of a party, it invites the Prosecutor to investigate the matter with a view to the preparation and submission of an Indictment for false testimony; and in this case, the onus is on the party to convince the Chamber that there exist strong grounds for believing that a witness has knowingly and wilfully given false testimony;

139. Further, the Chamber held in the decision, that the onus is on the party pleading a case of false testimony to prove the falsehoods of the witness statements, that they were made with harmful intent, or at least that they were made by a witness who was fully aware that they were false, and their possible bearing upon the judge's decisions. The Chamber found that for the Defence to raise only doubts as to the credibility of the statements made by the witness was not sufficient to establish strong grounds for believing that the witness may have knowingly and wilfully given false testimony, and that the assessment of credibility pertains to the rendering of the final judgment.

140. The majority of the witnesses who appeared before the Chamber were eye-witnesses, whose testimonies were based on events they had seen or heard in relation to the acts alleged in the Indictment. The Chamber noted that during the trial, for a number of these witnesses, there appeared to be contradictions or inaccuracies between, on the one hand, the content of their testimonies under solemn declaration to the Chamber, and on the other, their earlier statements to the Prosecutor and the Defence. This alone is not a ground for believing that the witnesses gave false testimony. Indeed, an often levied criticism of testimony is its fallibility. Since testimony is based mainly on memory and sight, two huma n characteristics which often deceive the individual, this criticism is to be expected. Hence, testimony is rarely exact at to the events experienced. To deduce from any resultant contradictions and inaccuracies that there was false testimony, would be akin to criminalising frailties in human perceptions. Moreover, inaccuracies and contradictions between the said statements and the testimony given before the Court are also the result of the time lapse between the two. Memory over time naturally degenerates, hence it would be wrong and unjust for the Chamber to treat forgetfulness as being synonymous with giving false testimony. Moreover, false testimony requires the necessary mens rea and not a mere wrongful statement.

141. Were the Chamber to have strong grounds for believing that the witness had knowingly and wilfully given false testimony, with the intent to impede the due process of Justice, then Rule 91 of the Rules would be applied accordingly.

The impact of trauma on the testimony of witnesses

142. Many of the eye-witnesses who testified before the Chamber in this case have seen atrocities committed against their family members or close friends, and/or have themselves been the victims of such atrocities. The possible traumatism of these witnesses caused by their painful experience of violence during the conflict in Rwanda is a matter of particular concern to the Chamber. The recounting of this traumatic experience is likely to evoke memories of the fear and the pain once inflicted on the witness and thereby affect his or her ability fully or adequately to recount the sequence of events in a judicial context. The Chamber has considered the testimony of those witnesses in this light.

143. The Chamber is unable to exclude the possibility that some or all of these witnesses did actually suffer from post traumatic or extreme stress disorders, and has therefore carefully perused the testimonies of these witnesses, those of the Prosecutor as well as those of the Defence, on the assumption that this might possibly have been the case. Inconsistencies or imprecisions in the testimonies, accordingly, have been assessed in the light of this assumption, personal background and the atrocities they have experienced or have been subjected to. Much as the Witness Protection Programme and the orders for protection of witnesses issued by the Chamber during this trial were designed primarily to reduce the danger for witnesses in coming to the Tribunal to testify, these measures may also have provided for some alleviation of stress. Reducing the physical danger to the witnesses in Rwanda, and ordering the non-disclosure of their identities to the media and the public, as well as accommodating them during their presence at the seat of the Tribunal in safe houses where medical and psychiatric assistance was available, are, in any event, measures conducive to easing the level of stress.

144. The Chamber has thanked each witness for his or her testimony during the trial proceedings and wishes to acknowledge in its judgment the strength and courage of survivors who have recounted their traumatic experiences, often reliving extremely painful emotions. Their testimony has been invaluable t the Chamber in its pursuit of truth regarding the events which took place in the commune of Taba in 1994.

Interpretation from Kinyarwanda into French and English

145. The majority of the witnesses in this trial testified in Kinyarwanda. The Chamber notes that the interpretation of oral testimony of witnesses from Kinyarwanda into one of the official languages of the Tribunal has been a particularly great challenge due to the fact that the syntax and everyday modes of expression in the Kinyarwanda language are complex and difficult to translate into French or English. These difficulties affected the pre-trial interviews carried out by investigators in the field, as well as the interpretation of examination and cross-examination during proceedings in Court. Most of the testimony of witnesses at trial was given in the language, Kinyarwanda, first interpreted into French, and then from French into English. This process entailed obvious risks of misunderstandings in the English version of words spoken in the source language by the witness in Kinyarwanda. For this reason, in cases where the transcripts differ in English and French, the Chamber has relied on the French transcript for accuracy. In some cases, where the words spoken are central to the factual and legal findings of the Chamber, the words have been reproduced in this judgment in the original Kinyarwanda.

146. The words Inkotanyi, Inyenzi, Icyitso/Ibyitso, Interahamwe and the expressions used in Kinyarwanda for "rape", because of their significance to the findings of the Chamber, are considered particularly, as follows: The Chamber has relied substantially on the testimony of Dr. Mathias Ruzindana, an expert witness on linguistics, for its understanding of these terms. The Chamber notes that Dr. Ruzindana stated in his testimony that in ascertaining the specific meaning of certain words and expressions in Kinyarwanda, it is necessary to place them contextually, both in time and in space.

147. The origin of the term Inkotanyi can be traced back to the 19th Century, at which time it was the name of one of the warrior groups of a Rwandese king, King Rwabugiris. There is no evidence to suggest that this warrior group was monoethnic. Dr. Ruzindana suggested that the name Inkotanyi was borne with pride by these warriors. At the start of the war between the RPF and the Government of Rwanda, the RPF army wing was called Inkotanyi. As such, it should be assumed that the basic meaning of the term Inkotanyi is the RPF army. Based on the analysis of a number of Rwandan newspapers and RTLM cassettes, as well as his personal experiences during the conflict, Dr. Ruzindana believed the term Inkotanyi had a number of extended meanings, including RPF sympathizer or supporter, and, in some instances, it even seemed to make reference to Tutsi as an ethnic group.

148. The basic everyday meaning of the term Inyenzi is cockroach. Other meanings of the term stem from the history of Rwanda. During the revolution' of 1959, refugees, mainly Tutsi, fled the country. Throughout the 1960's incursions on Rwandan soil were carried out by some of these refugees, who would enter and leave the country under the cover of the night, only rarely to be seen in the morning. This activity was likened to that of cockroaches, which are rarely seen during the day but often discovered at night, and accordingly these attackers were called Inyenzi. A similar comparison, between insurgent Tutsi refugees and cockroaches, was made when the RPF army carried out a number of attacks in Rwanda in 1990. It was thought that the Inyenzi of 1990 were the children of the Inyenzi of the 1960's. "The cockroach begets another cockroach and not a butterfly" was an article heading in the magazine Kangura. Another article in this publication made the reference even more explicitly, saying "The war between us and the Inyenzi-Inkotanyi has lasted for too long. It is time we told the truth. The present war is a war between Hutu and Tutsi. It has not started today, it is an old one."65

149. Unlike the term Inkotanyi, the term Inyenzi had a negative, even abusive, connotation. The radio station RTLM broadcast on 20 April 1994, "They are a gang of Tutsi extremists who called themselves Inkotanyi while they are no more than Inyenzi," and in a speech on 22 November 1992, Léon Mugesera said "Don't call them Inkotanyi, they are true Inyenzi". The term Inyenzi was widely used by extremist media, by those who had refused to accept the Arusha Peace Accords and those who wanted to exterminate the Tutsi, in whole or in part. It was often contained in RTLM broadcasts, a radio which, in the opinion of Dr. Ruzindana, was anti-Tutsi in its broadcastings.66

150. The term Icyitso, or Ibyitso in the plural, has been in usage in Kinyarwanda for quite some time. It is a common term which means accomplice. In ancient Rwandan history, a king wanting to launch an attack on neighbouring countries would send spies to the targeted country. These spies would recruit collaborators who would be known as Ibyitso. In Rwanda, the term has a negative connotation. Thus it should not be seen as being synonymous with supporter', a term which can be viewed both positively and negatively, but perhaps rather "collaborator". The term evolved, as early as 1991, to include not only collaborators, but all Tutsi. The editor of Kangura stated in 1993, "When the war started, Hutu talked openly about the Tutsi, or they referred to them, indirectly, calling them Ibyitso"67.

151. The term Interahamwe derives from two words put together to make a noun, intera and hamwe. Intera comes from the verb gutera' which can mean both to attack and to work. It was documented that in 1994, besides meaning to work or to attack, the word gutera could also mean to kill. Hamwe means together. Therefore Interahamwe could mean to attack or to work together, and, depending on the context, to kill together. The Interahamwe were the youth movement of the MRND. During the war, the term also covered anyone who had anti-Tutsi tendencies, irrespective of their political background, and who collaborated with the MRND youth.

152. The terms gusambanya, kurungora, kuryamana and gufata ku ngufu were used interchangeably by witnesses and translated by the interpreters as "rape". The Chamber has consulted its official trial interpreters to gain a precise understanding of these words and how they have been interpreted. The word gusambanya means "to bring (a person) to commit adultery or fornication". The word kurungora means "to have sexual intercourse with a woman". This term is used regardless of whether the woman is married or not, and regardless of whether she gives consent or not. The word kuryamana means "to share a bed" or "to have sexual intercourse", depending on the context. It seems similar to the colloquial usage in English and in French of the term "to sleep with". The term gufata ku ngufu means "to take (anything) by force" and also "to rape".

153. The context in which these terms are used is critical to an understanding of their meaning and their translation. The dictionary entry for kurungora 68, the most generic term for sexual intercourse, includes as an example of usage of this word, the sentence "Mukantwali yahuye n'abasore batatu baramwambura baramurongora," for which the dictionary translation into French is "Mukantwali a recontré trois jeunes gens qui l'ont dévalisée et violée" (in English "Mukantwali met three young men who robbed her of her belongings and raped her.")

154. The Chamber notes that the accused objected on one occasion to the translation of the words stated by Witness JJ ("Batangira kujya babafata ku ngufu babakoresha ibyo bashaka") as "They began to rape them." It was clarified that the witness said "they had their way with them." The Chamber notes that in this instance the term used, babafata ku ngufu, is the term which of the four terms identified in the paragraph above is the term most closely connected to the concept of force. Having reviewed in detail with the official trial interpreters the references to "rape" in the transcript, the Chamber is satisfied that the Kinyarwanda expressions have been accurately translated.

Cultural Factors Affecting the Evidence of Witnesses

155. Dr. Mathias Ruzindana noted that most Rwandans live in an oral tradition in which facts are reported as they are perceived by the witness, often irrespective of whether the facts were personally witnessed or recounted by someone else. Since not many people are literate or own a radio, much of the information disseminated by the press in 1994 was transmitted to a larger number of secondary listeners by word of mouth, which inevitably carries the hazard of distortion of the information each time it is passed on to a new listener. Similarly, with regard to events in Taba, the Chamber noted that on examination it was at times clarified that evidence which had been reported as an eyewitness account was in fact a second-hand account of what was witnessed. Dr. Ruzindana explained this as a common phenomenon within the culture, but also confirmed that the Rwandan community was like any other and that a clear distinction could be articulated by the witnesses between what they had heard and what they had seen. The Chamber made a consistent effort to ensure that this distinction was drawn throughout the trial proceedings.

156. According to the testimony of Dr. Ruzindana, it is a particular feature of the Rwandan culture that people are not always direct in answering questions, especially if the question is delicate. In such cases, the answers given will very often have to be "decoded" in order to be understood correctly. This interpretation will rely on the context, the particular speech community, the identity of and the relation between the orator and the listener, and the subject matter of the question. The Chamber noted this in the proceedings. For example, many witnesses when asked the ordinary meaning of the term Inyenzi were reluctant or unwilling to state that the word meant cockroach, although it became clear to the Chamber during the course of the proceedings that any Rwandan would know the ordinary meaning of the word. Similar cultural constraints were evident in their difficulty to be specific as to dates, times, distances and locations. The Chamber also noted the inexperience of witnesses with maps, film and graphic representations of localities, in the light of this understanding, the Chamber did not draw any adverse conclusions regarding the credibility of witnesses based only on their reticence and their sometimes circuitous responses to questions.

5. FACTUAL FINDINGS

5.1. General allegations (Paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment)

Events Alleged

157. Paragraphs 5 to 11 of the indictment appear under the heading, "General Allegations". These general allegations are, for the most part, mixed questions of fact and law relating to the general elements of genocide, crimes against humanity, and violations of international humanitarian law, the crimes set forth in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute of the Tribunal, under which the Accused is charged. Several witnesses testified before the Chamber with regard to historical background and the general situation in Rwanda prior to and during 1994. The Chamber has substantially relied on the testimonies of Dr. Ronie Zachariah, Ms. Lindsey Hilson, Mr. Simon Cox, Dr. Alison Desforges, who testified as an expert witness, and General Romeo Dallaire, the force commander of UNAMIR at the time of these events as well as United Nations reports of which it takes judicial notice, for its general findings on the factual allegations set forth in paragraphs 5-11 of the indictment.

158. Dr. Zachariah, the Chief Medical and Field Coordinator for Medecins sans frontieres ("MSF"), based in the Butare region, testified that he witnessed widespread massacres of civilians in Rwanda from 13 to 24 April 1994. He stated that he travelled from Butare to Gitarama on 13 April 1994 in order to provide medical supplies to a hospital in Gitarama which had received 40 to 50 injured people. From 25 kilometres outside Gitarama, Dr. Zachariah said he and his team began to see refugees on the road, who reported the killings of civilians at roadblocks. At one of these barriers, Dr. Zachariah stated that his driver was treated aggressively by a guard manning the roadblock, because the driver was Tutsi and the Tutsi were accused of helping the RPF. Dr. Zachariah testified that it soon became apparent upon arrival at Gitarama Hospital that Tutsi civilians were being targeted for attack on a massive scale. Subsequently, Dr. Zachariah witnessed attacks on civilian populations, and killings of civilians. He recounted visiting Kibeho Church on 16 April 1994, where two to four thousand Tutsi civilians were apparently killed, and Butare on 17 April 1994, where a Burundian Tutsi was apparently beaten to death at a checkpoint, and where his purchase officer reported seeing the bodies of 5-10 dead civilians at every checkpoint on the road from Kigali. These checkpoints were apparently manned by well-armed, drunken soldiers and civilians. On the road from Butare to Burundi on 19 April 1994, Dr. Zachariah sated that saw civilians being massacred in villages throughout the countryside and at roadblocks. In his words:

> "All the way through we could see on the [...] hillside, where there were communities, people [...] being pulled out by people with machetes, and we could see piles of bodies. In fact the entire landscape was becoming spotted with corpses, with bodies, all the way from there until almost Burundi's border".

(Hearing of 16 January 1997, pp 98-99)

159. At the Rwanda-Burundi border, on the same day, Dr. Zachariah testified that he saw a group of 60 to 80 civilians fleeing towards the Burundian border, from men armed with machetes. He stated that most of these civilians were hacked to death before they reached the border. Returning from the Burundian border, on 21 April 1994, Dr Zachariah stated that he had spoken to eye-witnesses who had informed him of the killings of approximately 40 Tutsi MSF personnel, in the Saga camps in Butare. He stated that his driver's entire family had been killed on the outskirts of Butare by Interahamwe and he had been informed of these killings by his driver who had managed to escape death. Dr. Zachariah testified that he had witnessed, on 22 April 1994, the aftermath of the massacre of the family of a moderate Hutu, Mr. Souphene, the sub-Prefect of Butare, by the Presidential Guard, and, on the same day, the killings of children in the Hotel Pascal in Butare and the executions of tens of Tutsi patients and nurses in Butare Hospital, including a Hutu nurse who was pregnant by a Tutsi man and whose child would therefore be Tutsi. Dr. Zachariah stated that he then decided to evacuate his team from Rwanda and he arrived at the Burundian border on 24 April 1994. On the way to the border and at the border, he stated that he had crossed streams and rivers in which the mutilated corpses of men, women and children floated by at an estimated rate of five bodies every minute. Dr. Zachariah stated under cross-examination that in his opinion the attacks were both "organised and systematic".

160. Lindsey Hilson, a journalist, testified that she was in Kigali from 7 February 1994 to mid-April 1994. Following the aeroplane crash of 6 April 1994 in which the Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi were killed, she said she heard from others and saw for herself the ensuing killings of Tutsi in the capital. On the third day after the aeroplane crash, she toured Kigali with aid workers and saw victims suffering from machete and gunshot wounds. In Kigali central hospital, where she described the situation as "absolutely terrible", wounded men, women and children of all ages were packed into the wards, and hospital gutters were "running red with blood". At the morgue she saw "a big pile like a mountain of bodies outside and these were bodies with slash wounds, with heads smashed in, many of them naked, men and women". She estimated that the pile outside the morgue contained about five hundred bodies, with more bodies being brought in all the time by pickup trucks. She stated that she also saw teams of convicts around Kigali collecting bodies in the backs of trucks for mass burial, as well as groups of armed men roaming the city with machetes, clubs and sticks.

161. Simon Cox, a cameraman and photographer, testified that he was on an assignment in Rwanda during the time of the events set forth in the indictment. He said he entered Rwanda from Uganda, arriving in the border town of Mulindi, in the third week of April 1994. Thence he headed south with an RPF escort and found evidence of massacres of civilian men, women and children, whom it appeared from their identity cards were mostly Tutsi, in church compounds. En route to Rusumo, in the south-east of the country, he visited hospitals where Tutsi civilians suffering from machete wounds were being treated, some of whom he interviewed. At the Tanzanian border, near Rusumo, by the Kagera river which flows towards Lake Victoria, Mr. Cox saw and filmed corpses floating by at the rate of several corpses per minute. Later, at the beginning of May, he was in Kigali and saw more bodies of dead civilians on the roads. The Chamber viewed film footage taken by Mr. Cox.

162. On a second trip, in June 1994, Mr. Cox visited the western part of Rwanda, arriving in Cyangugu from Zaire (now the Democratic Republic of Congo) and travelling north towards Kibuye. On that journey, he visited orphanages populated by Tutsi children whose parents had been massacred or disappeared. He visited a church in Shangi where a Priest described how the whole of his congregation who had been Tutsi had been hiding inside the church, because they had heard disturbances, and they were eventually all killed by large armed gangs of people, some of whom were equipped with hand grenades. The church had previously survived five repeated attacks. Mr. Cox himself examined the church and outbuildings and found graves, much blood and other evidence of killings. On the way to Kibuye, he saw further evidence of freshly dug mass graves in churchyards. Later, in the hills of Bisesero, he saw some 800 Tutsi civilians "in a desperate, desperate state", many apparently starving and with severe machete and bullet wounds, and with a great many corpses strewn all over the hills.

163. The testimony of an expert witness, Alison Desforges, which has been referred to and summarised above in the "Context of the conflict" section, also indicates that Tutsi and so-called moderate Hutu civilians were targeted for attacks on a massive scale in Rwanda at the time of the events which are the subject of this indictment.

164. In addition, the Chamber heard the testimony of General Romeo Dallaire, who was the force commander of UNAMIR in April 1994. General Dallaire described before the Chamber the massacres of civilian Tutsi which took place in Rwanda in 1994. He also testified in relation to the armed conflict which took place between the RPF and the FAR at the same time as the massacres. This conflict appeared to be a civil war between two well-organised armies. In this context, General Dallaire referred to the FAR and the RPF as "two armies", "two belligerents" or "two sides to the conflict." He noted that the mandate of the UNAMIR was to assist these two parties in implementing the Arusha Peace Accords which were signed on 4 October 1993. Subsequently, other military agreements were signed between the parties, including cease-fire agreements and agreements for arms-free zones. General Dallaire testified that the FAR was under the control of the government of Rwanda and that the RPF was under the control of Paul Kagame. The FAR and RPF occupied different sides of a clearly demarcated demilitarised zone, and according to General Dallaire, the RPF comprised 12,000-13,000 soldiers deployed in three groups: two groups for reaction in the western flank of the demilitarised zone and another group in the eastern flank with six independent battalions. The RPF headquartered in Mulundi, and had a lightweight battalion stationed in Kigali. General Dallaire testified that the RPF troops were disciplined and possessed a well-structured leadership which was answerable to authority and which respected instruction.

165. In addition to the testimony of these witnesses, the Chamber takes judicial notice of the following United Nations reports, which extensively document the massacres which took place in Rwanda in 1994: notably, the Final Report of the Commission of Experts Established Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), U.N. Doc. S/1994/1405 (1994); Report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye, on his mission to Rwanda from 8-17 April 1993, U.N. Doc. E/CN.4/1994/7/Add.1 (1993); Special Report of the Secretary-General on UNAMIR, containing a summary of the developing crisis in Rwanda and proposing three options for the role of the United Nations in Rwanda, S/1994/470, 20 April 1994; Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr. José Ayala Lasso, on his mission to Rwanda 11-12 May 1994, U.N. Doc. E/CN.4/S-3/3 (1994). See also, generally, the collection of United Nations documents in The United Nations and Rwanda, 1993-1996, The United Nations Blue Books Series, Volume X, Department of Public Information, United Nations, New York.

166. The Chamber notes that witnesses from Taba also attested to the mass killings which took place around the country.

Factual Findings

167. Paragraph 5 of the indictment alleges, "Unless otherwise specified, all acts and omissions set forth in this indictment took place between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, in the commune of Taba, prefecture of Gitarama, territory of Rwanda". This allegation, which supports the legal finding that the Chamber has territorial and temporal jurisdiction over the crimes charged, is not contested, and the Chamber finds that it has been established by the evidence presented.

168. Paragraph 6 of the indictment alleges that the acts set forth in each paragraph of the indictment charging genocide, i.e. paragraphs 12-24, "were committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic or racial group". That acts of violence committed in Rwanda during this time were committed with the intent to destroy the Tutsi population is evident not only from the testimony cited above of Dr. Zachariah, Ms. Hilson, Mr. Cox, Dr. Desforges and General Dallaire, but also from the witnesses who testified with regard to events in the commune of Taba. Witness JJ testified that she was driven away from her home, which was destroyed after a man came to the hill near where she lived and said that the bourgmestre had sent him so that no Tutsi would remain on the hill that night. At the meeting which was held on the morning of 19 April 1994, at which the Accused spoke, Witness OO testified that it was said by another speaker that all the Tutsi should be killed so that some day a child could be born who would have to ask what a Tutsi had looked like. She also quoted this speaker as saying "I will have peace when there will be no longer a Tutsi in Rwanda.". Witness V testified that Tutsi were thrown into the Nyabarongo river, which flows towards the Nile, and told to "meet their parents in Abyssinia", signifying that the Tutsi came from Abyssinia (Ethiopia) and that they "should go back to where they came from" (hearing of 24 January 1997, p.7)

169. In light of this evidence, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the acts of violence which took place in Rwanda during this time were committed with the intent to destroy the Tutsi population, and that the acts of violence which took place in Taba during this time were a part of this effort.

170. Paragraph 7 of the indictment alleges that the victims in each paragraph charging genocide were members of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group. The Chamber notes that the Tutsi population does not have its own language or a distinct culture from the rest of the Rwandan population. However, the Chamber finds that there are a number of objective indicators of the group as a group with a distinct identity. Every Rwandan citizen was required before 1994 to carry an identity card which included an entry for ethnic group (ubwoko in Kinyarawanda and ethnie in French), the ethnic group being Hutu, Tutsi or Twa. The Rwandan Constitution and laws in force in 1994 also identified Rwandans by reference to their ethnic group. Article 16 of the Constitution of the Rwandan Republic, of 10 June 1991, reads, "All citizens are equal before the law, without any discrimination, notably, on grounds of race, colour, origin, ethnicity, clan, sex, opinion, religion or social position". Article 57 of the Civil Code of 1988 provided that a person would be identified by "sex, ethnic group, name, residence and domicile." Article 118 of the Civil Code provided that birth certificates would include "the year, month, date and place of birth, the sex, the ethnic group, the first and last name of the infant." The Arusha Accords of 4 August 1993 in fact provided for the suppression of the mention of ethnicity on official documents (see Article 16 of the Protocol on diverse questions and final dispositions).

171. Moreover, customary rules existed in Rwanda governing the determination of ethnic group, which followed patrilineal lines of heredity. The identification of persons as belonging to the group of Hutu or Tutsi (or Twa) had thus become embedded in Rwandan culture. The Rwandan witnesses who testified before the Chamber identified themselves by ethnic group, and generally knew the ethnic group to which their friends and neighbours belonged. Moreover, the Tutsi were conceived of as an ethnic group by those who targeted them for killing.

172. As the expert witness, Alison Desforges, summarised:

> "The primary criterion for [defining] an ethnic group is the sense of belonging to that ethnic group. It is a sense which can shift over time. In other words, the group, the definition of the group to which one feels allied may change over time. But, if you fix any given moment in time, and you say, how does this population divide itself, then you will see which ethnic groups are in existence in the minds of the participants at that time. The Rwandans currently, and for the last generation at least, have defined themselves in terms of these three ethnic groups. In addition reality is an interplay between the actual conditions and peoples' subjective perception of those conditions. In Rwanda, the reality was shaped by the colonial experience which imposed a categorisation which was probably more fixed, and not completely appropriate to the scene. But, the Belgians did impose this classification in the early 1930's when they required the population to be registered according to ethnic group. The categorisation imposed at that time is what people of the current generation have grown up with. They have always thought in terms of these categories, even if they did not, in their daily lives have to take cognizance of that. This practice was continued after independence by the First Republic and the Second Republic in Rwanda to such an extent that this division into three ethnic groups became an absolute reality".

173. Paragraph 8 of the indictment alleges that the acts set forth in each paragraph of the indictment charging crimes against humanity, i.e. paragraphs 12-24, "were committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on national, political, ethnic or racial grounds". As set forth in the evidence, the scale of the attack was extraordinary. Defence counsel called the events which took place in Rwanda in 1994 "the greatest human tragedy" at the end of this century. Around the country, a massive number of killings took place within a very short time frame. Tutsi were clearly the target of the attack - at roadblocks, in shelters, and in their own homes. Hutu sympathetic to or supportive of Tutsi were also massacred. That the attack was systematic is evidenced by the unusually large shipments of machetes into the country shortly before it occurred. It is also evidenced by the structured manner in which the attack took place. Teachers and intellectuals were targeted first, in Taba as well as the rest of the country. Through the media and other propaganda, Hutu were encouraged systematically to attack Tutsi. For these reasons, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that a widespread and systematic attack began in April 1994 in Rwanda, targeting the civilian Tutsi population and that the acts referred to in paragraphs 12-24 of the indictment were acts which formed part of this widespread and systematic attack.

174. Paragraph 9 of the indictment states, "At all times relevant to this indictment, a state of internal armed conflict existed in Rwanda". The Chamber notes the testimony of General Dallaire, a witness called by the Defence, that the FAR was and the RPF were "two armies" engaged in hostilities, that the RPF had soldiers systematically deployed under a command structure headed by Paul Kagame, and that FAR and RPF forces occupied different sides of a clearly demarcated demilitarised zone. Based on the evidence presented, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that armed conflict existed in Rwanda during the events alleged in the indictment, and that the RPF was an organised armed group, under responsible command, which exercised control over territory in Rwanda and was able to carry out sustained and concerted military operations.

175. Paragraph 10 of the indictment reads, "The victims referred to in this indictment were, at all relevant times, persons not taking an active part in the hostilities". The victims referred to in the indictment, several of whom testified before the Chamber, were farmers, teachers and refugees. The Chamber notes that the Defence did not challenge the civilian status of the victims by making any submissions or leading any evidence connecting any of the victims to the RPF or the hostilities that prevailed in 1994.Since the allegations in Paragraphs 13, 17 and those pertaining to Juvenal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa in paragraph 15 of the indictment have not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the Chamber finds that it is futile to determine whether these alleged victims were in fact civilians, taking no active part in the hostilities that prevailed in 1994. In light of the evidence presented by the Prosecutor, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that all the other victims referred to in the indictment were civilians, not taking any active part in the hostilities that prevailed in 1994.

176. Paragraph 10A was added to the indictment when it was amended to include charges of sexual violence, set forth in Paragraphs 12A and 12B of the indictment. It is not an allegation of fact, rather it appears to be a definition of sexual violence proposed by the Prosecutor.

177. Paragraph 11 of the indictment sets forth the definition of individual criminal responsibility in Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal and alleges that the Accused is individually responsible for the crimes alleged in the indictment. The Chamber does not consider this to be a factual allegation but rather a matter of legal issue, which is addressed in the legal findings on each count. The Chamber notes that no general allegation has been made by the Prosecution in connection with Counts 13, 14 and 15, under which the Accused is charged with individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(3), as well as Article 6(1) of the Tribunal's Statute.

5.2 Killings (Paragraphs 12, 13, 18, 19 & 20 of the Indictment)

5.2.1. Paragraph 12 of the Indictment

178. The Chamber now considers paragraph 12 of the Indictment, which alleges the responsibility of the Accused, his knowledge of the killings which took place in Taba between 7 April and the end of June 1994, and his failure to attempt to prevent these killings or to call for assistance from regional or national authorities.

179. Paragraph 12 of the Indictment reads as follows:

> 12. As bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU was responsible for maintaining law and public order in his commune. At least 2000 Tutsi were killed in Taba between April 7 and the end of June, 1994, while he was still in power. The killings in Taba were openly committed and so widespread that, as bourgmestre, Jean Paul AKAYESU must have known about them. Although he had the authority and responsibility to do so, Jean Paul AKAYESU never attempted to prevent the killing of Tutsi in the commune in any way or called for assistance from regional or national authorities to quell the violence.

180. Many witnesses testified regarding the responsibilities of the bourgmestre. Witness DZZ, a former police officer, testified that as bourgmestre, the Accused was responsible for maintaining law and public order in the commune. Witness R, a former bourgmestre, confirmed this testimony, as did Witness V and expert witness Alison DesForges. The responsibilities of the bourgmestre are set forth in Rwandese law, which provides in Article 108 of the Law on the Organization of the Commune that the brigadier has command of the communal police, under the authority of the bourgmestre. Moreover, according to the testimony of witness NN and others, the accused's authority over the communal police continued, and he continued to issue them orders, throughout the period in question. Many witnesses testified as to their perception of the authority of the bourgmestre. Witness K and Witness NN both stated that as bourgmestre, the Accused was the leader of the commune, and Witness S, Witness V and Ephrem Karangwa, the current bourgmestre of Taba, all testified that the people of the commune respected and followed every order of the Accused, as bourgmestre. The bourgmestre was the most important person in the Commune and its "parent" according to Ephrem Karangwa. He was "paramount for the life of the whole commune" and the representative of the executive power in the commune, according to Witness R, himself a former bourgmestre The Accused himself acknowledged that he was responsible for the maintenance of law and order in the commune. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that this proposition has been established.

181. With regard to the allegation that at least 2000 Tutsi were killed in Taba from 7 April to the end of June 1994, the Chamber notes that while many witnesses testified to widespread killings in Taba, very few witnesses were able to estimate numbers of people killed. Ephrem Karangwa, the present bourgmestre of Taba, testified that the population of Taba has decreased by 7,000 persons since April 1994, and he described mass graves in each sector of the commune. While some part of the population decrease may be attributed to refugees leaving the commune, it is clear from the testimony of many witnesses that a substantial number of people were killed in Taba. The number 2000 has not been contested by the Defence, and it seems to the Chamber, based on the evidence of killing and mass graves, a modest estimate of the number of people killed in Taba during this period. The testimony also uniformly establishes that virtually all of these people were Tutsi. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that it has been established beyond a reasonable doubt that at least 2000 Tutsi were killed in Taba from 7 April to the end of June 1994. It has also been established that the accused remained bourgmestre throughout this period.

182. The Indictment alleges that the killings in Taba were openly committed and so widespread that the Accused must have known about them. A number of witnesses, including Witness PP and Witness V, testified that they informed the Accused of the killings which were taking place in Taba. Others, such as Witness NN, testified that the Accused was present at the bureau communal and elsewhere when killings took place, and that he witnessed these killings. Others, including Witness KK, Witness NN, Witness G Witness W, Witness J, Witness C, Witness JJ and Witness V, have testified that the Accused supervised and actively participated in the killings. The Accused himself acknowledged that he knew such killings were taking place. He testified that he was told that there were killings everywhere in Taba, and that it was the Tutsi who were being killed. He stated that on 19 April 1994, killings spread to most of the commune of Taba. The issue is not contested, and it has been established that the Accused knew that killings were taking place and were widespread in Taba during the period in question.

183. The final allegation of paragraph 12 is that although he had the authority and responsibility to do so, Jean Paul Akayesu never attempted to prevent the killing of Tutsi in the commune in any way or called for assistance from regional or national authorities to quell the violence. The Accused contends that he did not have the power necessary to prevent the killings from taking place. The Chamber notes that the issue to be addressed is whether he ever attempted to do so. In the light of the evidence, the Chamber considers that it is necessary to distinguish between the period before 18 April 1994, when the key meeting between members of the interim government and the bourgmestres took place in Murambi, in Gitarama, and the period after 18 April 1994. Indeed, on the Prosecution's own case, a marked change in the accused's personality and behaviour took place after 18 April 1994.

184. There is a substantial amount of evidence establishing that before 18 April 1994 the Accused did attempt to prevent violence from taking place in the commune of Taba. Many witnesses testified to the efforts of the Accused to maintain peace in the commune and that he opposed by force the Interahamwe's attempted incursions into the commune to ensure that the killings which had started in Kigali on 7 April 1994 did not spread to Taba. Witness W testified that on the order of the Accused to the population that they must resist these incursions, members of the Interahamwe were killed. Witness K testified that Taba commune was calm during the period when Akayesu wanted that there be calm. She said he would gather the population in a meeting and tell them that they had to be against the acts of violence in the commune. Witness A testified that when the Interahamwe tried to enter the commune of Taba, the bourgmestre did everything to fight against them, and called on the residents to go to the borders of the commune to chase them away. The Accused testified that he intervened when refugees from Kigali were being shot at by the Interahamwe. The police returned fire and three Interahamwe were killed. The Accused testified that he confiscated their weapons and their vehicle.

185. The Accused testified that he asked for three gendarmes at the meeting with the Prime Minister in Gitarama on 18 April 1994, to help him maintain order and security and to stop the killing of Tutsi. The only witnesses to attend the Murambi meeting were prosecution witness R, an MDR bourgmestre in Gitarama prefecture like the accused, and Defence witness DAAX, the former prefect of Gitarama. Witness R recalled three meetings of the bourgmestres in Gitarama prefecture convened by the prefect after 6 April 1994, and in his statement to the Office of the Prosecutor he said that the accused did ask for gendarmes at one of those meetings. When testifying before the Chamber, Witness R did not remember the accused having spoken at the Murambi meeting of 18 April 1994, although in his earlier statement to the Office of the Prosecutor, he stated that the accused had spoken at that meeting. Because of these inconsistencies, Defence counsel submitted a motion requesting the Chamber to consider a prosecution for false testimony, which this Chamber rejected in a Decision of 9 March 1998. As the Chamber stated in that Decision, it did not deem the matter appropriate for an investigation into false testimony, but rather it was a matter for the evaluation of the credibility of the witness in question. In this case, the Chamber considers that, despite discrepancies between Witness R's testimony and his prior statement to the Prosecutor relating to the sequence of the meetings addressed by the accused, if taken in the light most favourable to the accused, it corroborates the accused's account that at some point after 6 April 1994, and in all likelihood at the Murambi meeting of 18 April 1994, the accused asked for gendarmes to assist with the problems of security in his commune. Given the accused's testimony on this point, and its corroboration in part by the sole prosecution witness who was present at the Murambi meeting, the accused's version of events - that he did call for assistance from the national and regional authorities - must be credited.

186. Moreover, Defence witness DAAX, the former prefect of Gitarama supports the accused's account Witness DAAX testified that he convened three meetings of bourgmestres between 6 April 1994 and 18 April 1994 - all of which were attended by the accused - the third meeting being the one which was moved from Gitarama to Murambi at the last minute at the request of the Prime Minister so that the Prime Minister and other Ministers could address the prefect and bourgmestres. At this third meeting, the prefect testified, the accused took the floor and complained of the problems of security in his commune, in common with the Prefect and other bourgmestres. Witness DAAX's testimony agrees with that of the accused that the Prime Minister did not reply directly to the bourgmestre's expressions of concern about security in their Communes, but that he rather read parts of a prepared policy speech and threatened the complaining bourgmestres with dismissal. Witness DAAX further testified that at least one bourgmestre, the bourgmestre of Mugina, was killed shortly after the meeting as a result. Witness DAAX also testified that the accused had to flee his commune due to pressure from the Interahamwe at some point between 6 April 1994 and 18 April 1994, and in any event after the first two meetings referred to above but before the third meeting. Witness DAAX said the Accused never officially requested gendarmes from him, unlike the bourgmestre of Mugina. Witness DAAX lost contact with the Accused after 18 April 1994. The Chamber notes that the Accused does not assert that he requested assistance from the prefect of Gitarama but rather from the Prime Minister, during the course of the meeting.

187. A substantial amount of evidence has been presented indicating that the conduct of the Accused did, however, change significantly after the meeting on 18 April 1994, and many witnesses, including Witnesses E, W, PP, V and G, testified to the collaboration of the Accused with the Interahamwe in Taba after this date. Witness A testified that he was surprised to see that the Accused had become a friend of the Interahamwe. The Accused contends that he was overwhelmed. Witness DAX and Witness DBB, both witnesses for the Defence, testified that the Interahamwe threatened to kill the Accused if he did not cooperate with them. The Accused testified that he was coerced by the Interahamwe and particularly by Silas Kubwimana, the head of the Interahamwe with whom he was seen quite frequently during this time. The Chamber notes that in his pre-trial written statement, the Accused gave a very different account of Silas Kubwimana, describing his mandate in the commune as that of a "peace-maker".

188. The Chamber recognises the difficulties a bourgmestre encountered in attempting to save lives of Tutsi in the period in question. Prosecution witness R, who was the bourgmestre of another commune, i n Gitarama prefecture, testified that there was very little he or other bourgmestres could do to prevent massacres in his commune once killings became widespread after 18 April 1994. He averred that a bourgmestre could do nothing openly to combat the killings after that date or he would risk being killed what little he could do had to be done clandestinely. The Defence case is that this is precisely what the accused did.

189. Defence witnesses, DAAX, DAX, DCX, DBB and DCC confirm that the accused failed to prevent killings after 18 April 1994 and expressed the opinion that it was not possible for him to do anything with ten communal policemen at his disposal against more than a hundred Interahamwe.

190. The Defence contends that, despite pressure from the Interahamwe, the Accused continued to save lives after 18 April 1994. There is some evidence on this matter, referred to in the section on "the accused's line of Defence".

191. There is also evidence indicating that after 18 April 1994, there were people that came to the Accused for help, and he turned them away, and there is evidence that the Accused witnessed, participated in, supervised, and even ordered killings in Taba. Witness JJ testified that after her arrival a the bureau communal, where she came to seek refuge, she went to the Accused on behalf of a group of refugees, begging him to kill them with bullets so that they would not be hacked to death with machetes She said he asked his police officers to chase them away and said that even if there were bullets he would not waste them on the refugees.

192. The Chamber finds that the allegations set forth in paragraph 12 cannot be fully established. The Accused did take action between 7 April and 18 April to protect the citizens of his commune. It appears that he did also request assistance from national authorities at the meeting on 18 April 1994. Accordingly, the Accused did attempt to prevent the killing of Tutsi in his Commune, and it cannot be said that he never did so.

193. Nevertheless, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the conduct of the Accused changed after 18 April 1994 and that after this date the Accused did not attempt to prevent the killing of Tutsi in the commune of Taba. In fact, there is evidence that he not only knew of and witnessed killings. but that he participated in and even ordered killings. The fact that on one occasion he helped one Hutu woman protect her Tutsi children does not alter the Chamber's assessment that the Accused did not generally attempt to prevent the killings at all after 18 April. The Accused contends that he was subject to coercion, but the Chamber finds this contention greatly inconsistent with a substantial amount of concordant testimony from other witnesses. It is also inconsistent with his own pre-trial written statement. Witness C testified to having heard the accused say to an Interahamwe " I do not think that what we are doing is proper. We are going to have to pay for this blood that is being shed..",a statement which indicates the Accused's knowledge of the wrongfulness of his acts and his awareness of the consequences of his deeds. For these reasons, the Chamber does not accept the testimony of the Accused regarding his conduct after 18 April, and finds beyond a reasonable doubt that he did not attempt to prevent killings of Tutsi after this date. Whether he had the power to do so is not at issue, as he never even tried and as there is evidence establishing beyond a reasonable doubt that he consciously chose the course of collaboration with violence against Tutsi rather than shielding them from it.

5.2.2. Paragraph 13 of the Indictment

Alleged facts:

194. Paragraph 13 of the Indictment is worded as follows:

> "On or about 19 April 1994, before dawn, in Gishyeshye sector, Taba commune, a group of men, one of whom was named François Ndimubanzi, killed a local teacher, Sylvère Karera, because he was accused of associating with the Rwandan Patriotic Front ("RPF") and plotting to kill Hutu. Even though at least one of the perpetrators was turned over to Jean-Paul Akayesu, he failed to take measures to have him arrested".

195. It is alleged that, by the acts with which he is charged in this paragraph, Akayesu is guilty of the offences which form the subject of three counts:

> Count 1 of the Indictment charges him with the crime of genocide, punishable under Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute;
>
> Count 2 charges him with the crime of complicity in genocide, punishable under Article 2 (3)(e) of the Statute; and
>
> Count 3 charges him with the crime of extermination which is a Crime against Humanity, punishable under Article 3(b) of the Statute.

196. In order to prove the acts alleged against Akayesu under paragraph 13 of the Indictment, it is necessary to first establish that Sylvère Karera, a teacher, was killed in the Gishyeshye sector, Taba commune, on 19 April 1994, before dawn, by a group of men, one of whom was named François Ndimubanzi and that he was killed because he was accused of associating with the RPF and plotting to kill Hutu. The Chamber must then be satisfied that at least one of the perpetrators of this killing was indeed turned over to Jean-Paul Akayesu, and that he failed to take measures to have him arrested.

With regard to the killing of Sylvère Karera in the Gishyeshye sector, Taba commune, on or about 19 April 1994, before dawn:

197. Several Prosecution witnesses, particularly, those who appeared under the pseudonyms A, W, E and U, as well as Ephrem Karangwa, provided information on the killing of teacher Sylvère Karera in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994.

198. Witness A, a Hutu man, testified that, during the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, he heard people shouting that thieves had killed people at Remera school and calling on the population to stop them. Witness A affirmed that, on 19 April 1994, he had gone to Remera school. There he learnt from the headmaster that the prefect of studies, who turned out to be Sylvère Karera, had been killed. The witness saw the body of the teacher before it was covered with a pink sheet at the request of the headmaster.

199. Ephrem Karangwa, a Tutsi man, called by the Prosecutor as a witness who, at the material time, performed the functions of Inspecteur de police judiciaire of the Taba commune, stated before the Chamber that Sylvère Karera, a teacher at the Remera Rukoma school complex, was killed in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994 by members of the Interahamwe.

200. Witness W, a Tutsi, who resided in Taba, where he worked as a teacher, testified that on returning from night patrols in which he had participated during the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, he learnt that the prefect of studies at the public primary school, Rukoma, had just been killed.

201. Questioned on the death of Sylvère Karera, witness E stated that he had gone, in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, to the entrance of Remera school. He did not directly see Karera's body, but had heard that the body was in the school premises. No one stopped him from entering the school, but he had preferred to go to the place from where the noise came which had brought him out of his home.

202. Prosecution witness U also heard that a teacher, named Karera, had been killed. She stated that throughout the night, she had heard people shouting in the streets and announcing, particularly, that Karera had been killed.

203. The Defence has never disputed the killing of Sylvère Karera in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994. The accused has himself confirmed, during his appearance as witness before the Chamber, that the teacher Sylvère Karera had been killed in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994.

Concerning the allegation that Sylvère Karera was killed by a group of men, one of whom was named François Ndimubanzi, and that he was killed because he was accused of associating with the RPF and plotting to kill Hutu:

204. The Chamber notes that though the Indictment alleges that Sylvère Karera was killed by a group of men, one of whom was named François Ndimubanzi, the Prosecutor has adduced no evidence to show number and identity of the perpetrators of the killing.

205. As for the reasons alleged by the Prosecutor for the killing of Sylvère Karera, that is, associating with the RPF and plotting to kill Hutu, the Defence stated, in its concluding arguments, that they should be dismissed on the ground that Sylvère Karera was, according to the Defence, Hutu and that the Prosecutor's allegations that this teacher was killed because he was accused of plotting to kill Hutu were therefore without merit.

Concerning the allegation that at least one of the perpetrators of the killing of Sylvère Karera was turned over to Jean-Paul Akayesu and that he failed to take measures to have him arrested:

206. Though the Indictment alleges that at least one of the perpetrators of the killing of Sylvère Karera was turned over to Akayesu, the Prosecutor has adduced no evidence to support this allegation.

207. Witness E stated that, in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, after going to the school entrance where Sylvère Karera had been killed, he went to the place from where camethe noise which had brought him out of his home. At Gishyeshye, from where came the noise, near a roadblock, he saw the body of another person who had been killed. A crowd gathered. It was said that teacher Karera was killed and that the remains near the roadblock were those of the Interahamwe who had just killed Karera. Apart from that dead Interahamwe, no other person was held responsible for killing Karera. Witness E specified that he had heard that Sylvère Karera had been killed by that Interahamwe alone.

208. The witness called by the Prosecutor under the pseudonym Z, a Tutsi man, stated that, on or about 19 April 1994, in the early hours of the day following the killing of a Tutsi teacher in Remera and that of his murderer, who was killed by persons in charge of maintaining security, he and other persons stood near the body of the teacher's murderer. Akayesu, who was armed, separated members of the Interahamwe from the population. According to witness Z, Akayesu, in referring to the body on the spot, reportedly deplored the killing of this person.

209. Prosecution witness A testified that, in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, an Interahamwe was killed. No investigation was conducted. He was simply buried immediately.

210. Prosecution witness U stated that some men told him, on 19 April 1994, that a person had been killed and that Akayesu had gone to where the body was and held a meeting there.

211. Several other witnesses indicated to the Chamber that a crowd had formed early in the morning of 19 April 1994, in Gishyeshye, around the body of a young member of the Interahamwe. That meeting is at the root of the allegations brought by the Prosecutor against Akayesu under paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment. The factual findings of the Chamber on the holding of the said meeting are elaborated upon below.

212. The Prosecutor accepted this version of facts in her concluding arguments. She had then told the Chamber that, following the killing of the Tutsi teacher, Sylvère Karera, in the middle of the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, in Remera, by some members of the Interahamwe, the people of the commune had gone out into the streets to find out what was happening, wondering why a teacher had been killed. Later, according to the Prosecutor's statement, they caught one member of the Interahamwe in Gishyeshye and killed him.

213. In her concluding arguments, the Prosecutor did not mention any fact designed to show that one of the possible killers of Sylvère Karera was turned over to Jean-Paul Akayesu alive, contrary to what is alleged in paragraph 13 of the Indictment.

214. During cross-examination of the accused appearing as witness in his own trial, the Prosecutor had him confirm that Sylvère Karera was killed in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994 and that later, one member of the Interahamwe, the person who had killed Karera, was also killed. The Prosecutor added that Prosecution witnesses had indeed testified to that.

215. During his appearance before the Chamber as witness, the accused argued that during the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, he was sleeping in the Bureau Communal, when towards 4 a.m., a certain Augustin Sebazungu, MDR treasurer at Taba, residing in the Gishyeshye sector, came to inform him that the situation in the sector was tense, following the killing of a young man, a member of the Interahamwe. The Bourgmestre then immediately alerted the police and went to the scene, accompanied by two policemen. There he found a body stretched out on the ground, covered with traces of blood, as if it had been hit. The accused affirmed before the Chamber that he seized the opportunity of this gathering which formed as people came to see what was happening, to address the population. He noted that members of the region's Interahamwe had rushed and surrounded the body of their young member. Akayesu told the Chamber that he had condemned the killing of the young man because he felt that it was not in that manner that law and order would be maintained, and that he had indicated that his arrest would simply have been enough.

Factual findings

216. Prosecution witnesses appearing under the pseudonyms A, W, E and U, as well as Ephrem Karangwa, provided information which confirmed the Prosecutor's allegations as to the killing of teacher Sylvère Karera in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994. On the basis of such corroborative evidence, which was not substantially disputed by the Defence, the Chamber is satisfied that Sylvère Karera was actually killed, in Gishyeshye, in the night of 18 to 19 April 1994.

217. The Chamber notes however that the Prosecutor has not adduced conclusive evidence to support her allegations relating to the number and identity of the perpetrators of the killing of Sylvère Karera as well as the reasons for this murder.

218. With regard to the allegation that at least one of the perpetrators of the killing of Sylvère Karera had been turned over to Jean-Paul Akayesu and that he failed to take any measures to have him arrested, for the reasons explained above and in the absence of pertinent evidence, the Chamber finds that the Prosecutor has not established beyond reasonable doubt that at least one of the perpetrators of the killing of Sylvère Karera was turned over alive to Akayesu, and that he failed to take any measures to have him arrested.

5.2.3. Paragraph 18 of the Indictment

219. Paragraph 18 of the Indictment reads as follows:

> 18. On or about April 19, 1994, the men who, on Jean Paul AKAYESU's instructions, were searching for Ephrem Karangwa destroyed Ephrem Karangwa's house and burned down his mother's house. They then went to search the house of Ephrem Karangwa's brother-in-law in Musambira commune and found Ephrem Karangwa's three brothers there. The three brothers -- Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligira and Jean Chrysostome Gakuba -- tried to escape, but Jean Paul AKAYESU blew his whistle to alert local residents to the attempted escape and ordered the people to capture the brothers. After the brothers were captured, Jean Paul AKAYESU ordered and participated in the killing of the three brothers.

Events alleged

Testimony Of Ephrem Karangwa (Witness d)

220. Ephrem Karangwa was assigned the pseudonym D and placed under the Tribunal's Witness Protection Unit, pursuant to an order of 26 September 1996, but he waived witness protection and elected to testify under his own name.

221. Karangwa testified that he resided in Taba and in April 1994 he was the Inspecteur de Police Judiciaire (IPJ) in the Ministry of Justice for the Prosecutor in Taba commune having taken office in August 1984. As IPJ he investigated criminal complaints and transmitted case files to the Prosecutor. The witness's office was situated in the bureau communal in Taba. The witness testified that the head of any commune was the bourgmestre. The Accused who was the bourgmestre of Taba during the events of April 1994. The witness had known the Accused for about twenty years. The witness did not belong to any political party and he was not allowed to do so by the Minister of Justice. He testified that there was never any tension between him and the Accused and they had a good working relationship.

222. Karangwa testified that in his role as IPJ he became aware that there were problems of a political nature between the political parties in Taba, especially the MDR and the MRND. The MDR had a greater following in Taba and this party was led by the Accused. On one occasion in 1992 there was a demonstration by the MDR which led to violence when the demonstrators tried to forcibly enter the bureau communal. The MDR wanted the bourgmestre at that time removed from office. The matter was investigated by the witness and referred to the Prosecutor for prosecution. The witness did not have any knowledge of the eventual out come of this matter, at the time of testifying. The witness said that he knew of Silas Kubwimana and that he often complained about the Accused and the MDR officials. He said that there existed a file on this complaint at the Prosecutor's office. The witness said that he had become aware of the existence of this file in his official capacity as IPJ.

223. Karangwa testified that on the morning of 7 April 1994, while preparing to go to work he heard an announcement on the radio that the President had been killed. He also heard an announcement calling on people to remain wherever they were and he therefore decided not to go to work.

224. Karangwa testified that he had spoken to many people about the security situation in Taba. On 14 April 1994, he saw a blue Toyota Minibus pass him. He was informed that this motor vehicle and a white "pick up" were confiscated from the Interahamwe by the people of Kamembe. He was further informed that a police officer was killed and an Interahamwe wounded in this process.

225. Karangwa testified that on the night of 18 April 1994 he was outside his house because he had heard that Tutsi in Runda commune were being killed and since he was a tutsi he was afraid. He stated that Runda and Taba were neighbouring communes. At approximately 1 am on 19 April 1994, a person came to the witness's house and informed him that he had just attended a meeting led by the Accused where plans were being made to kill the witness and to commence killings in Taba in a similar manner to killings that were happening in Runda. This person advised the witness to flee with his family. The witness and his family hid on a hill and at dawn the witness's sisters, mother and wife went on foot to his wife's sisters house in Musambira and he and his brothers stayed behind because they wanted to verify the information that had been given to him. The witness said that he wondered why someone would want to kill him and his family, since they had no problem with anyone.

226. Karangwa testified that from his hiding place on the hill, he could see his house on the opposite hill about 150 metres away. The witness stated that he saw three vehicles drive up to his house between the hours of eight and nine o'clock in the morning. The Accused came in a blue Toyota mini bus, the one that the people had taken away from the Interahamwe. The witness was uncertain as to whether the Accused was driving the blue Toyota Hiace minibus. The witness described the other two vehicles as a white Toyota and a red Toyota. The witness could not see what the Accused had in his hands, but he did see the Accused wearing a military jacket. The Accused and the other people alighted from the motor vehicles and went down to the witness's house. The witness's dogs barked and someone in this group of people fired a round from a firearm and the dogs ran away. The witness stated that he saw this group of people then destroy his house and his mother's house. The witness stated that the houses were looted and burnt. The witness identified prosecution exhibits 50 and 51 as being photographs of the remains of these houses.

227. Karangwa testified that this event confirmed the information that he had received and he then decided to join his family in Musambira. He arrived at Musambira at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He saw his family at the house of his brother in law, Laurent Kamondo and they immediately left for Kabgayi, whilst he awaited the arrival of his younger brothers. He stated that he could not stay in the house because he was afraid that the Accused would look for him there. Instead, he hid in an eucalyptus bush on the side of a hill approximately eighty metres from the house.

228. Karangwa testified that he saw two motor vehicles, a blue Toyota Hiace minibus and a red Toyota Hilux approach the house. These vehicles stopped approximately twenty five metres away from the house. This was the same minibus that was taken away from the Interahamwe and the Accused was using it at that time. Many people alighted from the vehicles and walked towards Laurent Kamondo's house. The witness recognised some of these people as the bourgmestre of Musambira, the Accused, a police officer named Emanuel Mushumba from the Taba commune, Mutiji Masivere, Winima Boniface and Munir Yarangaclaude who was the secretary of the MDR party in the commune of Taba (phonetic spelling). The Accused was wearing a military jacket and he had a gun in his hand.

229. Karangwa testified that he heard shouts and whistles as this group of people approached Laurent Kamondo's house. He saw people running and, thereafter, he saw his younger brothers in the court yard with these people. The witness stated that it was then that he realised that his brothers were in Musambira. The witness continued to hear shouts from these people and then he heard the Accused say that his brothers must be shot. The witness heard gun shots and concluded that his brothers were killed and that the Accused had fired the gun. When asked by the Prosecutor whether he saw the gun that was used to kill his brothers, the witness replied that he saw the Accused carrying a gun when he arrived and that he heard the shots.

230. Karangwa testified that after the killing of his brothers, he fled to Kabgayi, and on arrival at the cathedral, the witness stated that he saw the Accused in a pick up' drive up to the cathedral. The Accused was in the company of two police officers from the Taba commune named Emanuel Mushumba (phonetic spelling) and Ooli Musakarani (phonetic spelling) and a group of people. The witness said that he saw the Accused and these other people alight from the vehicle and look around the courtyard of the cathedral but they did not go inside. They then got back into the motor vehicle and left. The witness was informed by Witness V that the Accused was making enquiries about his whereabouts and he was advised to hide. The witness stayed in the seminary until the end of the war.

231. Karangwa testified that he was not able to leave the seminary but that he heard from many people that the Accused was outside the seminary on many occasions. The Accused was able to come into the compound of the seminary from 30 May 1994. The witness recalled that he remembered that day clearly, because it was on that day that the Accused came to take him away, and he was saved by someone.

232. Karangwa testified that he stayed in Kabgayi from 21 April 1994 to 2 June 1994. At the beginning of 1995 the witness went to work as IPJ in the public prosecutor's office in Gitarama and on 3 January 1996 became the bourgmestre of Taba. The witness said that at that time Tutsi were killed and the only reason the Accused looked for him was because he had worked in the commune and he was Tutsi.

233. In response to a question from the bench, Karangwa stated that the fact that the Accused was present made him responsible for the death of his brothers. When asked for clarification as to whether the Accused ordered the shooting, the witness reaffirmed that the Accused ordered their shooting.

234. Under cross examination, Karangwa testified that he had a very good working relationship with the Accused. The witness stated that the Accused dealt with civil disputes and he referred all criminal matters to the witness. The witness stated that he was generally invited to meetings pertaining to security in Taba. He testified that he saw the Accused between 6 and 10 April 1994 in Kamembe. The Accused was there assessing the security situation, since there was an influx of people that were fleeing Kigali. The Accused sent commune police officers to ensure the security of these people. The Accused at this stage was opposed to any killing.

235. In clarification of an averment in his written statement made to the Office of the Prosecutor (exhibit 105), the witness testified that the Accused held meetings on 18 and 19 April 1994 with a view to planning the genocide. The witness stated that he had not attended any of these meetings but he heard of them. The witness stated that at these meetings a decision was taken that the MDR and the MRND should not fight the Interahamwe and the CDR but they should fight the tutsi. This decision according to the witness, was taken at communal level by the bourgmestre. Although the bourgmestre belonged to the MDR all the political parties at communal level were under his authority. The witness did not go to work from 7 April 1994. The witness stated that he knew that there were major security problems in the commune and expressed the view that if the bourgmestre believed that the witness was competent to resolve these problems, the bourgmestre would have provided the witness with transport to go to work.

236. The witness acknowledged the fact that the Accused fought against the Interahamwe after 6 April 1994 and went on to say that if the Accused had not done so the killing in Taba would have started much earlier. The Defence Counsel pointed out that in his written statement to the Office of the Prosecutor, the witness stated that he was about a kilometre away from his house when he saw the Accused come to his house with a group of people. The witness denied this and reaffirmed his testimony that he was 150 metres away from his house, on the opposite hill. According to the witness, he was able to identify the Accused by the way that he walked and the clothes that he was wearing. The witness could also hear what was spoken by the Accused and the group of people when they were at his house, although he was 150 metres away. The witness identified the people with the Accused as assistant bourgmestre Civil Mootijima (phonetic spelling), assistant bourgmestre Wimina Boniface (phonetic spelling), manager of a popular bank Aloyce Kubunda (phonetic spelling), businessman Daniel Gasiba (phonetic spelling) and some communal police officers.

237. Karangwa testified under cross-examination, that when the Accused arrived at Laurent Kamondo's house at Musambira he immediately searched the house and found his three brothers. The Accused then killed the witness's three brothers by shooting them. The Defence Counsel pointed out that, in his written statement, the witness had stated that the Accused killed his brother, Jean Kististan (phonetic spelling), by shooting him and when his other two brothers tried to escape they were attacked and killed with machetes by the men who were with the Accused. The Defence Counsel requested an explanation from the witness in respect of this discrepancy. The witness denied that he stated this and maintained that all three of his brothers were shot.

238. Karangwa testified under cross examination, that he left Musambira immediately after his brothers were killed and when he was asked whether he buried is brothers, his response was that he did not have the time to do so. The Defence Counsel pointed out that the witness had stated in his written statement that he had buried his brothers near the house of Laurent Kamondo and requested the witness to explain this discrepancy. The witness denied this and maintained that his brothers were buried by Laurent Kamondo.

Testimony of Witness S

239. Witness S testified that he is a Hutu farmer. In April 1994, he lived in the commune of Musambira. There was safety and security in Musumbira even after 6 April 1994 when the President's plane had crashed but this had changed on 19 April 1994. Witness S was in his house on 19 April 1994. In the morning of the same day, between 9am and 10 am, Ephrem Karangwa's wife, sisters and mother went to Witness S's home. Witness S spoke to these people on their arrival and they had informed him that killings had begun in the Taba commune and many people were leaving their homes and fleeing.

240. Witness S testified that Ephrem Karangwa arrived at his home between 11 am and 12 noon on the same day. On his arrival, his wife, mother and sisters immediately left for Kabgayi. Witness S spoke to Ephrem Karangwa who also informed him that killings had began in Taba. Witness S stepped out of his house and he stated that when he looked in the direction of Taba he could see columns of smoke. Witness S stated that Karangwa left saying that he was waiting for his brothers and on their arrival they would set off for Kabgayi to join the rest of their family.

241. Witness S testified that Ephrem Karangwa's three brothers arrived at his house between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of 19 April 1994. The three brothers went into the witness's home and asked for their mother and sisters. Witness S informed them that they had already left. He also informed them that Ephrem Karangwa was waiting for them but that he did not know where. The witness said that the three brothers were wearing civilian clothes and they did not have any weapons in their possession. The three brothers together with Witness S went into the house. Whilst in the house, the witness heard the sound of cars. The three brothers went behind the house. Witness S went into the front court yard and he saw the motor vehicle that belonged to the commune of Musumbira. The witness described this motor vehicle as a red dual cab Hilux "pickup". Witness S then saw the bourgmestre of Musumbira, Justin Nyangwe and the assistant bourgmestre, Martin Kalisa, on the path that led to his house. He also saw the Accused with the assistant bourgmestre of Taba and a few police officers. Witness S did not know all the police officers that were in the group but he recognised them as police officers by the fact that they were wearing police uniforms and they were in possession of firearms. The witness recognised two of these police officers as being from the commune of Musambira. He did not know or recognise the other people in the group. These people were wearing civilian clothes.

242. Witness S testified that he had known the Accused before the events of April 1994. When the witness visited Ephrem Karangwa at his office in the bureau communal, he often saw the Accused. According to Witness S, the Accused was wearing a long military jacket and he had a grenade in his hand. Witness S's father was also in the group of people that came to his house and the witness noticed that his father was injured in his face and he was bleeding. By this time this group of people had arrived and were standing about three metres away from the house. Witness S's father said to him if Ephrem Karangwa was in the house he should hand him over or else they will be killed by this group of people. The Accused at this time was standing next to the bourgmestre of Musambira. The bourgmestre of Musambira asked Witness S if Ephrem Karangwa was in the house. According to the witness he responded by saying that he was not in the house and invited the bourgmestre to search the house if he so wished. The assistant bourgmestre of Musumbira, Martin Kalisa, together with two police officers from Taba searched the house. Witness S was not allowed into the house whilst the search was being conducted and he stood outside. The Accused during this search ordered the police officers to surround the house, to prevent Ephrem Karangwa from running away. By this time many people from the general population of Musambira had gathered to see what was going on and they also acted on the Accused's instruction and surrounded the house.

243. Witness S testified that the people searching the house did not find Ephrem Karangwa. Instead they came out with some cans of sardines and Accused the witness and his family of being "Inyenzi". At this time Ephrem Karangwa's brothers were behind the house with the witness's sister. The witness said he did not see this but he was informed by his sister that the brothers fled. The police officers blew their whistles and said stop these "Inyenzi" from running away and a group of people pursued the three brothers.

244. Witness S testified that he heard people shouting "...stop that Inyenzi..." About ten minutes later, the mob of people returned with the three Karangwa brothers. According to Witness S, they had been beaten and although he did not see the beatings he saw the injuries sustained as a result of the beating. The brothers had certain open wounds that were bleeding and their clothes were torn. The three brothers were made to sit on the lawn about two metres from the entrance to the court yard, in the presence of the Accused. The bourgmestre of Musambira, Justin Nyangwe asked the Accused if he knew these three brothers. The Accused replied that they were from his commune. Justin Nyangwe then asked the Accused what must be done with them and the Accused responded by saying "we need to finish these people off..." and he confirmed this response by saying, they need to be shot. The police officers from Musambira made the three brothers lie on their stomachs. There was a crowd of people that had now gathered and they were asked to step back. All three brothers were shot at close range behind their heads, by two police officers from Musambira. Monzatina (phonetic spelling) shot two of the brothers and Albert shot one of the brothers.

245. Witness S testified that he and his family were told by Justin Nyangwe, the bourgmestre of Musambira, to get into the commune motor vehicle. Whilst they were being taken, Witness S heard people say that they were going to destroy his home because he and his family were "Inyenzi". The Accused and a group of people got into their motor vehicle and drove in the direction of Taba. The motor vehicle that Witness S was in started to move first and as it passed the motor vehicle of the Accused, the witness could see a person tied in the Accused's motor vehicle. Witness S and his family were taken to the bureau communal of Musambira where they were detained. He later managed to escape, but his three sisters were killed.

246. Under cross-examination, Witness S testified that he met the Accused when he went to the bureau communal in Taba to visit Ephrem Karangwa who worked as an IPJ in the commune. He often visited Ephrem Karangwa at the bureau communal. Witness S also met the assistant bourgmestre of Taba, although he did not know his name.

247. Witness S testified that before the Accused came to his house he went to his grand father's house and that was where he found Witness S's father. On arrival at Witness S's house, the Accused parked his motor vehicle on the tarred road and the bourgmestre of Musumbira parked his motor vehicle outside Witness S's house. Witness S was sitting inside his house at this time and he heard the sound of the engine of this motor vehicle the bourgmestre of Musambira travelled in, which was approximately 25 metres away from the house. The motor vehicle the Accused travelled in was approximately three to four hundred metres away on the tarred road. Witness S reiterated that he did not hear the sound of the engine of the Accused's motor vehicle but rather that of the motor vehicle the bourgmestre of Musumbira travelled in. Witness S realised that the Accused was looking for Ephrem Karangwa when the bourgmestre of Musumbira asked if Ephrem Karangwa was there and also when his father asked him to hand over Ephrem Karangwa to the Accused if he was in the house.

248. Under cross-examination Witness S confirmed that he had made a statement to the Prosecutor of Gitarama. This statement was tendered into evidence by the Defence as part of exhibit 104. Witness S stated that this statement did not pertain to the Accused but rather to the former bourgmestre of Musumbira, who was now in prison as a result of his conduct as mentioned in this statement. Witness S stated that he was asked specific questions about the bourgmestre of Musumbira. The Defence Counsel pointed out to Witness S that this statement mentioned that the Accused was with Kalisa Martin, the bourgmestre of Musambira and Justin Nyandwi. Witness S recalled that he had mentioned the Accused's involvement in respect of the killing of the Karangwa brothers to the Prosecutor of Gitarama but this was omitted from this statement.

249. Witness S testified under cross-examination that he saw the Accused with a grenade in his hand. He recognised this item in the Accused's hand as being a grenade because he saw soldiers with it before the war. Defence Counsel pointed out to Witness S that in his statement to the investigators at the Office of the Prosecutor he stated that the Accused came to his house with a gun and a grenade, whilst in his evidence in chief before the Chamber the witness testified that the Accused only had a grenade. Witness S denied making this statement to the investigators and maintained that he had only seen the Accused with a grenade.

250. Witness S testified that police officers in Musambira normally used whistles to indicate that the market was closing. Whistles were also used when there was a security problem in the region. He stated that the Karangwa brothers were chased by the people because at that time there was a search of homes for hidden people. The Police Officers blew their whistles and shouted "catch these Inyenzi, don't let them get away". The people immediately chased after the Karangwa brothers. The witness stated that the people acted in this manner because it was an order from the authorities. The people generally followed orders given by the authorities even if the order leads to any wrongful conduct. Defence Counsel pointed out that the Karangwa brothers were not armed and they did not pose any threat to the people of Musambira and despite this they were assaulted by the mob of people chasing them, even though they were not ordered to do so. This illustrated that the people committed wrongful acts even if they were not ordered to do so. Witness S did not tender an explanation in response to this issue raised by Defence Counsel.

The Testimony of Witness DAX

251. Witness DAX testified on behalf of the Defence. He stated that he knew Ephrem Karangwa and they are friends. He also knew Ephrem Karangwa's family. He stated that he did not hear anybody say that Ephrem Karangwa was to be killed or that someone was attempting to kill Ephrem Karangwa. Witness DAX testified that he had heard of the destruction of Ephrem Karangwa's house and the killing of his brothers. The witness had heard that Ephrem Karangwa's brothers were making their way to Kabgayi when they were killed in Kivumu in the Nyakabunda Commune (phonetic spelling). The witness stated that the Interahamwe were responsible for the deaths of the Karangwa brothers. The witness stated that he had since met Ephrem Karangwa several times in Kigali and although they did not discuss the details of his brothers death, the witness offered his condolences to Ephrem Karangwa.

252. Witness DAX testified that on 19 April 1994, Ephrem Karangwa's house was destroyed by neighbours. He stated that in a poor country like Rwanda it is difficult for a rich person to stay with poor neighbours. It was the Abaghi family, more specifically a person called Gahibi who destroyed the Karangwa house. A person named Gasimba Daniels, who was an enemy of Ephrem Karanga also participated in destroying the Karangwa house. Gasimba Daniels had purchased and distributed the petrol to the neighbours of Ephrem Karangwa, for the purpose of destroying Ephrem Karangwa's house. This petrol was used to set Ephrem Karangwa's house on fire. A certain person known as Usuri (phonetic spelling) also participated in destroying Ephrem Karangwa's house. The witness stated that he knew all the people responsible for the destruction of Ephrem Karangwa's house and the Accused was not involved.

253. Witness DAX admitted under cross-examination that he did not see Ephrem Karangwa's house being destroyed but he had spoken to the people responsible for such destruction immediately after the house was set on fire. He observed that they were carrying doors that they had removed from Ephrem Karangwa's house and they were boasting about their actions.

The Testimony of the Accused

254. The Accused testified that on 19 April 1994 at about 4 o' clock in the afternoon, he went to Musambira. He stated that the bourgmestre of Musambira promised to give him some fabric that he had intended to use to make a uniform for the new police officer he had employed. The Accused also stated that on 20 April 1994 he went to Kabgayi. He said that his reason for going to Kabgayi was to see one Kayibanda Alfred to ask him for shelter because he thought about fleeing. The Accused said that he saw Ephrem Karangwa's sister at Kabgayi. She greeted the Accused and he did the same. The Accused said that when he saw Karangwa's sister he realised that Karangwa was in Kabgayi. The Accused said that Karangwa abandoned him during the events of 1994. He stated that he had written to Karangwa on two occasions during the events of April 1994 and Karangwa had failed to respond. The Accused also stated that during the events of 1994 he saw Karangwa at Kamonyi. On this occasion he had spoken to Karangwa and asked Karangwa why he had abandoned him. That was all the Accused said in his testimony that was relevant to the allegations in paragraph 18 of the Indictment.

Factual Findings

255. The Chamber finds that on 19 April 1994, the Accused was searching for Ephrem Karangwa. At approximately 1am, on that day, Karangwa received a report that at a meeting led by the Accused, plans were made to kill him and other Tutsi. Karangwa's evidence that the Accused was in pursuit of him and his family, is corroborated by many witnesses. Witnesses V, E and Z were present at the meeting in the morning of 19 April 1994 at Gishyeshye, addressed by the Accused, when Karangwa's name was mentioned as being on a list of people to be killed; and the Accused named the IPJ as working with the RPF and told the people to look for him. Witness V reported this meeting to Karangwa, later in Kabgayi. Witness V saw the Accused in Kabgayi twice and on one of these times, on 20 April 1994, the Accused asked him to find Karangwa and bring Karangwa to him. Witness K, in the morning of 19 April 1994, saw the Accused get into his vehicle at the Bureau Communal and instruct others to also get in so that Ephrem Karangwa would not escape them. Witness KK also heard the Accused refer to Tutsi and Ephrem Karangwa and say, "we now have to hunt them and kill all of them". Defence witness DCC confirmed under cross-examination that the Accused had wasted no time in pursuing Ephrem Karangwa

256. Karangwa and his family left their house and went into hiding. His sisters, mother and wife went to his wife's sister's house in Musambira and he and his brothers hid on a hill opposite his house. Karangwa saw the Accused arrive at his house on the morning of 19 April 1994 in a blue Toyota Hiace mini bus, accompanied by men in two other Toyota vehicles, one red and the other white. The Accused was wearing a military jacket. A gun was fired which frightened the dogs away. The houses of Karangwa and his mother were burnt and looted. The Accused and the group of people then left. The fact that the Accused was wearing a military jacket during this time is corroborated by other witnesses. Witness S saw him in that military jacket later that day; Witness V saw him at Kabgayi on 20 April 1994 in the military uniform of the Rwandan army; defence Witness DAAX saw the Accused in a military jacket and warned him against it's use. Defence witness DFX confirmed that the Accused wore a soldier's shirt. The Accused testified that he wore a military jacket in May, given to him by a colonel of the Rwandan army.

257. Karangwa hid on a hill approximately 80 metres from the house of witness S in Musambira, to await his brothers. The Accused, together with the bourgmestre of Musambira, a police officer named Emanuel Musumba and others arrived in two motor vehicles that were blue and red in colour. Karangwa heard shouts and whistles, and thereafter saw his brothers in the courtyard with these people. He heard the Accused say that his brothers must be shot and he heard gun-shots. His three brothers whom he names in his written statement to the prosecutor as; Simon Mutijima, Thadée Uwanyiligira, and Jean Chrysostome were shot dead.

258. Karangwa fled to Kabgayi where the Accused continued to look for him. Witness V told Karangwa that the Accused was looking for him in Kabgayi and he himself saw the Accused on two occasions and evaded arrest. Karangwa remained in Kabgayi from 21 April to 21 June 1994. In cross-examination the witness denied various statements attributed to him in his written statement to the prosecutor and adhered to his testimony before the Chamber. He re-affirmed that he had not seen the shooting of his brothers but heard the Accused give the order that they be shot, and the fact that he was there made him responsible for their deaths.

259. The Defence Counsel submitted that because of the uncertainties and inconsistencies in the evidence before the Chamber on how the Karangwa brothers were killed and more specifically what weapons were used, material averments in respect of this allegation were not proved.

260. The Defence Counsel cross-examined Karangwa on the discrepancy between his evidence that his brothers were shot and his prior statement to the Office of the Prosecutor that two of his brothers died from injuries sustained from machete blows. Karangwa denied stating this to the Office of the Prosecutor and reaffirmed his testimony that all three of his brothers were shot. This explanation was not subjected to further cross-examination by Defence Counsel.

261. As noted else where, the Chamber places greater reliance on direct testimony rather than untested prior statements made under variable circumstances. The Chamber accepts Karangwa's explanation for the inconsistent prior statement and notes that his evidence that his brothers died of injuries inflicted by gun shots is consistent throughout his testimony and is corroborated by the testimony of witness S.

262. The Chamber finds that Karangwa gave a truthful account of events actually witnessed by him and that he did so without exaggeration or hostility. The Chamber is satisfied that the witness could reasonably have seen and heard the matters to which he testified. Witness S confirmed Karangwa's evidence in all material respects. Karangwa's three brothers came to Witness S's house on the afternoon of 19 April 1994. They were not armed and wore civilian clothes. They heard vehicles and the brothers hid behind the house. A red Hilux "pick-up" belonging to the commune of Musambira was outside his house. A group of people came to his house; among them was the bourgmestre and assistant bourgmestre of Musambira, the Accused, whom he knew as the bourgmestre of Taba, the assistant bourgmestre of Taba, men in police uniforms carrying firearms, two of whom he knew as police from Musambira, and civilians.

263. The Accused held a grenade in his hand. The Chamber notes that this is in contradiction to Karangwa's observation that the Accused carried a gun. While it is clear from both their testimony that the Accused held a weapon in his hand, Witness S's identification thereof is more reliable, as he was in close proximity to the Accused in the courtyard of his house.

264. Witness S's house was searched by the assistant bourgmestre of Musambira and two policemen from Taba. During the search, the Accused ordered the police to surround the house to prevent Karangwa escaping. People from Musambira also acted on this instruction.

265. The brothers of Karangwa tried to flee, and the police officers blew their whistles and said stop those "Inyenzi" from running away. A mob of people took up the call, chased after the brothers and brought them back. The brothers were bleeding from open wounds and their clothing was torn. They were made to sit on the ground about 2 metres from the entrance to the courtyard. The bourgmestre of Musambira asked the Accused if he knew the men and what should be done with them. The Accused said they came from his commune and said we need to finish these people off-they need to be shot. All three brothers were then shot dead at close range in the back of their heads by two policemen from Musambira, in the Accused's presence.

266. After the killing, the Accused and his group drove off in the direction of Taba. Witness S saw a person tied up in the Accused's vehicle. Witness S and his family were detained at the bureau communal in Musambira, from where he later escaped. In cross-examination, the witness confirmed his direct testimony and he explained that he had omitted to give an account of the Accused's's involvement , in his statement to the prosecutor of Gitarama because he was asked specific questions related to the bourgmestre of Musambira. The chamber finds this to be a reasonable explanation and accepts the direct, eye-witness testimony of Witness S on these events and rejects the hearsay evidence of defence witness DXX.

267. The Accused confirmed his presence in Musambira on the afternoon of 19 April 1994 and in Kabgayi on 20 April 1994 ,but offered explanations for his appearance that are beyond belief, in the light of overwhelming testimony to the effect that he was at that time in hot pursuit of Karangwa. The defence did not specifically address allegations, and failed to challenge the evidence of witnesses S, Karangwa and others on material issues, such as his hunt for Karangwa, orders to look for Karangwa and other tutsi to be killed, his presence at the houses of Karangwa and witness S, his carrying of a grenade and his participation in the killing of the Karangwa's brothers by ordering their deaths and being present when they were killed.

268. The Chamber has not found any evidence that the Accused blew the whistle to alert local residents to the attempted escape of the brothers but finds as proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was present at both houses, that he was searching for Karangwa, that the houses of Karangwa and his mother were destroyed in his presence by men under his control, that he went to search the house of Karangwa's brother-in-law in Musimbira and found Karangwa's brothers at this house, that he participated in the killings of the three brothers, named, Simon Mutijima, Thadee Uwanyiligira, and Jean Chrysostome Gakuba, by ordering their deaths and being present when they were killed by policemen, under the immediate authority of the Accused as bourgmestre of Taba commune and in response to his order made to the bourgmestre of Musambira.

5.2.4. Paragraph 19 and 20 of the Indictment

The Events Alleged

269. Paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Indictment read as follows:

> 19. On or about April 19, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu took 8 detained men from the Taba bureau communal and ordered militia members to kill them. The militia killed them with clubs, machetes, small axes and sticks. The victims had fled from Runda commune and had been held by Jean Paul Akayesu.
>
> 20. On or about April 19, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu ordered the local people and militia to kill intellectual and influential people. Five teachers from the secondary school of Taba were killed on his instructions. The victims were Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé (whose name is unknown), Tharcisse Twizeyumuremye and Samuel. The local people and militia killed them with machetes and agricultural tools in front of the Taba bureau communal.

270. For his alleged participation in the acts described in paragraphs 19 and 20, Akayesu is charged under seven counts, namely:

> Count 1, Genocide, punishable by Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
>
> Count 2, Complicity in Genocide, punishable by Article 2(3)(e) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
>
> Count 3, Crimes against Humanity (extermination), punishable by Article 3(b) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
>
> Count 7, Crimes against Humanity (murder), punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
>
> Count 8, Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
>
> Count 9, Crimes against Humanity (murder) punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and
>
> Count 10, Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

271. The Chamber noted, during the presentation of evidence in this case, that the events alleged occurred during a distinct period on or about 19 April 1994 at the bureau communal. Consequently, both paragraphs will be treated together.

272. A number of specific acts can be identified in the events set out in paragraphs 19 and 20. It is alleged, as pertains to paragraph 19, firstly, that Akayesu took eight refugees from the bureau communal, secondly, that he ordered militia members to kill them, thirdly, that the refugees were consequently killed with clubs, machetes, small axes and sticks, and fourthly, that the victims had fled from Runda commune and had been held by Akayesu. As regards paragraph 20, firstly, Akayesu is accused of having ordered local people and militia to kill intellectual and influential people, and secondly, five teachers, named in the Indictment, from the secondary school of Taba were killed on his instructions by the local people and militia with machetes and agricultural tools in front of Taba bureau communal. With these specific allegations in mind, the Chamber shall proceed in determining whether the participation of the accused in the events enunciated in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Indictment has been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

273. The first witness to appear for the Prosecutor to testify in relation to the events alleged in paragraphs 19 and 20 was Witness K, a Tutsi woman, married to a Hutu, who was an accountant/cashier at the bureau communal in Taba from 1990 until 1994. She had worked under the authority of Akayesu whilst he was bourgmestre of the commune at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment. Witness K testified as follows.

274. On 19 April 1994, between 9h00 and 10h00, she had gone to the bureau communal following a demand from Akayesu who requested her services as the accountant/cashier of the commune. On arriving that morning, she encountered the accused, whose mood appeared to have changed, outside the bureau communal. She said he spoke to her harshly, asking her why she was no longer coming to work. Witness K told him she was scared, and that she had come to the bureau communal on this occasion only because he had asked her. She said Akayesu then told her that she would know why she had come.

275. After this exchange, witness K, who was still standing next to the accused, testified that Akayesu called over a certain Etienne, and instructed him to bring the youths'. She saw Etienne drive off in the direction of Remera, and return with a number of youths' who were armed with traditional weapons, such as machetes and small axes69. Witness K said they all gathered close to Akayesu who told them "Messieurs, if you knew what the Tutsi who live with you are doing, I inform you that what I heard during the meeting is sufficient. Right now, I can no longer have pity for the Tutsi, especially the intellectuals. Even those who are with us, those we have kept here, I want to deliver them to you so that you can render a judgment unto them"70. The witness said Akayesu then proceeded to release the refugees from Runda held in the communal prison, and handed them - with the words here they are' - to the Interahamwe, whom she also called the killers'.

276. Witness K affirmed that there were eight refugees, all men, three of whom she personally knew to be Tutsi. She explained that they did not have their hands tied and that they all looked fine. She said the Interahamwe escorted the eight refugees to the fence of the bureau communal, where they were made to sit on the ground, in a line, their backs to the fence and their legs straight out in front of them. According to the witness, the refugees pleaded for mercy as the Interahamwe prepared to kill them. Witness K testified that Akayesu then said "Do it quickly", at which point they were killed rapidly by a large group of people who used whatever weapon they had on them.

277. After the eight refugees had been killed, witness K said she heard Akayesu instruct a communal policeman to open the communal prison and release the persons who had been imprisoned for Common law offences so that they could bury the dead refugees. She said the persons who had been released from the prison by Akayesu put the bloody bodies of the victims onto a wheelbarrow and took them away to be buried.

278. Witness K testified she heard Akayesu tell those present to fetch the one who remained. She said this person was a professor by the name of Samuel. Witness K said that they fetched him and she saw him being killed with a machete blow to the neck.

279. According to the witness, Akayesu then gave instructions for the release of all those who had broken the law, and told them to go into the hills with their whistles so as to sensitize the youth. Witness K understood this to mean go to your sectors, increase public awareness of the population and kill with them. Witness K testified she heard the accused tell the killers' that she would be killed after she had been interrogated about the Inkotanyi secrets. She said Akayesu put her into her office, took her keys and locked her up. The witness said she saw Akayesu get into a car, instructing others to also get in so that Ephrem Karangwa wouldn't escape them

280. Witness K said she had other keys on her person, thus enabling her to access the meeting room in the bureau communal from where she was able to see the events occurring outside. She testified she saw many people being brought to the bureau communal and killed, some of the victims only making it as far as the front of the entrance of the bureau communal before being killed. According to the witness, amongst those killed were professors from Remera school. She said the bodies of the victims, even those still alive, were put into wheelbarrows and taken for burial.

281. When questioned about the use of whistles, Witness K said she saw persons go behind the bureau communal to get a professor who lived there. She said that these persons used whistles so as to terrorize this professor, and to attract the attention of others nearby.

282. Pursuant to a question from the Chamber as to the killing of teachers, witness K stated she was unsure how many were killed, but that she knew the names of some of them, Theogene, Tharcisse, a woman called Phoebe (the gérante of Remera secondary school), and her fiancé whose name she didn't know. She explained that the woman was killed because it was alleged a radio for communicating with the Inkotanyi had been found at her house. She further stated that the true reason for the killings of the teachers and the refugees was because they were Tutsi.

283. Under cross-examination, questioned about where the teachers she saw being killed had come from, witness K stated that some of the teachers had been brought from the direction of Remera and another from behind the bureau communal. Asked if Akayesu was then still present, she stated that she had explained that Akayesu wasn't present when the actual killings of the professors took place. She reasserted being next to Akayesu when he gave the order to kill the teachers.

284. Under cross-examination, witness K further testified she had heard the refugees had been locked up in the prison of the bureau communal by Akayesu at the request of the bourgmestre of Runda, but that she hadn't heard whether this bourgmestre had asked for these refugees to be killed. She said she had found out the refugees were from Runda by speaking to at least two other individuals from Runda whom she knew. The witness testified not knowing why exactly the refugees had been locked up in the communal prison, but was adamant they had been killed because of their Tutsi ethnicity. Witness K also confirmed that she was next to Akayesu at the bureau communal when he gave the instructions to fetch the youths/Interahamwe and that she heard Akayesu order the killing of the refugees from Runda.

285. Witness KK for the Prosecutor, a Hutu woman married to a Tutsi and residing in Taba commune in 1994, also testified in relation to the events alleged in paragraphs 19 and 20. She said that shortly after April 6 1994, the houses of Tutsi including her own were pillaged, and that she sought refuge at the bureau communal with her Tutsi husband and nine children. She said many refugees came to the bureau communal, but that they were treated differently depending on their ethnicity. According to the witness, the atmosphere changed a few days later with the arrival of a number of Interahamwe from Remera. She said the Interahamwe addressed the refugees in the presence of Akayesu in front of the bureau communal. According to witness KK, the Interahamwe stated that they had uncovered a Tutsi plan to kill the Hutu, but as their God was never far, and because they had discovered the plan, they were going to put the Tutsi where the Tutsi had planned to put the Hutu.

286. According to the testimony of witness KK, Akayesu then went to his office. On his return, she asserted he was angry and brandished a document which he read to the refugees, by saying "We lived with Tutsi, there was a hatred between us. The IPJ, Karangwa Ephrem had planned to kill me so that he could replace me in my function as bourgmestre. We now have to hunt them and find all of them"71. The witness testified Akayesu continued by talking of a landmine planted by the Tutsi that had exploded at the primary school. This landmine, she heard the accused state, was the beginning of the planned killings of Hutu. She said the accused then stated that as schoolchildren of all ethnicities were in this school, when the explosion happened, it was aimed at all Rwandans.

287. Witness KK testified Akayesu said further "there are many accomplices in our commune. There is an accomplice who is to be found behind the bureau communal, who is called Tharcisse. He was a professor"72. She said Akayesu then told the policemen and Interahamwe to fetch him. The witness saw Tharcisse and his wife being made to sit in the mud. She said the wife was undressed and told to go and die elsewhere. She also heard Akayesu ask Tharcisse for information on the Inkotanyi.She said Tharcisse replied "do what you will because I know no secrets". She testified Tharcisse was killed by the Interahamwe on the road outside the bureau communal. She testified Akayesu was standing near to where the victim was sitting.

288. Witness KK said she also heard Akayesu order the Interahamwe to bring the teachers who taught in Remera, and say that the intellectuals were the source of all of the misery. She testified that she saw the Interahamwe return very angry with the teachers. She saw the teachers, the number of which she was unsure of being made to sit in the mud on the road outside the bureau communal, where Tharcisse had been killed. According to the witness, it was alleged that these teachers had communicated by radio with Inkotanyi. Witness KK said a young couple who were soon to be married was killed first. She said that all the teachers were killed on the road in front of the bureau communal with little hoes and clubs and that she had heard it being stated that to kill them with a bullet or grenade would be inflicting a less atrocious death. The witness added that no one could ask for help because Tutsi were not allowed to live in Taba commune. She said the bodies of the teachers were then taken to makeshift ditches, and covered in earth and grass. According to witness KK, some of the teachers were still breathing when buried.

289. Under cross-examination, witness KK asserted that no teachers had taken up refuge at the bureau communal, but that the massacres had started with the killing of the teachers. The Defence attempted to discredit the witness by raising doubts as to the various dates she spoke of during her testimony, however she explained that considering all that happened to her in April 1994, it was very difficult for her to remember with certainty the specific dates. She also confirmed never having seen Akayesu kill anyone himself, save that it was he who ordered the killings which took place before his eyes.

The case for the Defence

290. Witness DCC for the Defence, detained in Rwanda at the time of his appearance before the Chamber, was a driver at the Taba bureau communal from 1 July 1993 until the events in 1994. During his examination-in-chief, he stated that he had not heard of Akayesu being an anti-Tutsi in the month of April, 1994. He also testified he came every day to the bureau communal during the massacres. During cross-examination, he added he had seen a substantial number of persons being killed at the bureau communal. According to the witness, the bodies of those killed were taken next to the primary school, however he said he never personally witnessed any burials of cadavers because he was not part of the people who took the bodies away. He maintained this statement even though he testified that he walked past the school every day on his way home. The Chamber notes thereupon, that in answer to questions put to him by the Chamber, pertaining to there being mass graves in the vicinity of the bureau communal, the witness said that he rarely went to the bureau communal during 1994 and that he had never seen any mass graves.

291. Witness DCC testified that after 6 April 1994, refugees from Runda and Shyorongi started arriving at the bureau communal of Taba, where they were welcomed by the authorities and lodged in various premises. He said the refugees were all free and none were locked up in the prison. Witness DCC testified he saw Interahamwe on two occasions come to the bureau communal and kill people. On the first of these occasions, he said the Interahamwe were from Taba but that he did not personally see Akayesu. On the second of these occasions, he saw the Interahamwe from Runda with military personnel search the office of Akayesu after having forced him out of the bureau communal. He said the Interahamwe terrorised the people at the bureau communal and asked for identity cards. According to witness DCC, the Interahamwe took the Tutsi away to be killed. He also said that Akayesu did not have a good understanding with the Interahamwe who accused him at times of being an Inkotanyi as he was welcoming refugees at the bureau communal.

292. Reference was also made by the Defence to the statement given by witness DCC to the Prosecutor[73], in which he stated "What I know, Akayesu was only present at the commune office one time when four people were killed at the entrance of the office. Akayesu did not do anything about it. Akayesu knew that the killings of Tutsi took place in the commune. The killers were Interahamwe". According to the witness, Akayesu did nothing to stop the Interahamwe because he was powerless to do so.

293. During cross-examination, the witness asserted that he was 34 years old, that in 1994, he did not flee Taba or go to Uganda, and that he did not have knowledge of and never saw Akayesu searching for Karangwa. Witness DCC said he was arrested in Rwanda on 30 April 1996. The Prosecutor produced a report, "Witness to Genocide", of an interview given by witness DCC to an NGO named Africa Rights[74]. Witness DCC confirmed speaking to a Human Rights Organization in 1996. The Prosecutor summarized extracts of the said document which stated that at the time of the interview, Witness DCC was 33 years old, that he had been recruited as the driver of the commune on 1 July 1993, that he had returned to Rwanda and was arrested on 30 April 1996. The Prosecutor read out another extract: "According to Akayesu's driver, [...] Akayesu lost no time in pursuing Ephrem. On 19 April, Akayesu, assistant bourgmestre Mutijima and a communal policeman, Mushumba, went to Kamonyi to look for the IPJ of the commune, Ephrem Karangwa, saying that he was a great accomplice of the RPF. Akayesu and his team came back in the afternoon'". Witness DCC confirmed that Akayesu had not wasted any time in pursuing Karangwa, but denied having spoken of Kamonyi, of Akayesu's return or that Akayesu had called Karangwa an accomplice of the RPF.

294. Witness DZZ for the Defence, a Hutu policeman in 1994 detained in Rwanda at the time of his appearance before the Chamber, testified manning barriers in the commune of Taba and guarding the bureau communal at the time of the events alleged. He said massacres had become widespread in the commune of Taba after 18 April 1994 and that he had heard of massacres at the bureau communal. He said he went to the bureau communal on a regular basis and manned a barrier nearby, but asserted that he did not personally witness any crimes at the bureau communal. He testified that he had not heard of Akayesu participating in the massacres, and that the accused had preached peace amongst the refugees.

The witness said that Akayesu saved certain Tutsi, namely witness K and Karangwa, during the massacres. In his mind, they had been saved because, had Akayesu supported the killings, Akayesu would also have targeted Karangwa and witness K.

295. Akayesu testified going to the bureau communal on 19 April 1994. On his arrival within the vicinity of the bureau communal, he said he saw the refugees running everywhere. In the courtyard of the bureau communal, according to Akayesu, the Interahamwe were killing the refugees who had fled from Runda and Shyorongi. He said he parked the car and saw the cashier, witness K. Akayesu said he was perplexed at seeing her and wondered from where she had come. He testified that he called out to her, ordering her to go into her office. He said he had to stop someone with a machete from attacking her and subsequently escorted her personally into the office of the bureau communal. According to Akayesu, he went back into the courtyard and saw refugees who had been killed, and noted that others had managed to escape. However, at a later stage during his examination-in-chief, when asked whether anyone had ever been killed in the courtyard of the bureau communal, Akayesu stated that when he was at the bureau communal or when there had been Interahamwe attacks during his absence, no one had been killed in the courtyard. After these events, Akayesu said he departed with the communal police in the direction of Mbizi, consequent upon receiving information that some of the killers had gone to Mbizi.

296. During cross-examination, the Prosecutor presented tape recordings of interviews of Akayesu carried out by the Office of the Prosecutor on 10 and 11 April 1996 in Zambia75. The Prosecutor questioned the credibility of Akayesu's testimony before the Chamber regarding answers he had given about the refugees at the bureau communal on 18, 19 and 20 April 1994. During his testimony, Akayesu stated he was unable to distinguish intellectuals from the rest of the refugees on the basis that there was no criteria to make it possible to tell an intellectual apart from other persons. However, in the said interviews, the accused said he was surprised not to have seen intellectuals of the commune amongst the refugees who, in his opinion, appeared to be farmers, old women, children, and old people. The Chamber questioned Akayesu as to the differences in the answers given in court, on the one hand, and before the Office of the Prosecutor, on the other. Akayesu said he had not seen anyone who could be categorized as an intellectual/teacher, but that he was able to find out by speaking with the refugees whether or not there were any intellectuals/teachers amongst them.

297. Furthermore the accused confirmed that in the context of the events in 1994, had he told the population to fight the enemy, this would have been understood as meaning fight the Tutsi. He also asserted not having control of the population after 18 April 1994. He said witness KK was at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994. Questioned as to the killings at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994, Akayesu said he did not see anyone killed with a machete because he was in the courtyard of the bureau communal attending to witness K. Akayesu added that he never saw any bodies either outside or inside the perimeter of the bureau communal and never went behind the primary school. Further, Akayesu testified never personally seeing cadavers save for the bodies of two dead children in his sector. In answer to questions on the fate of the schoolteachers whom he said he knew, Akayesu stated only hearing of their killings near the bureau communal three days after their deaths.

298. In support of its case, the Defence recalled that at least 19 witnesses in this case had never seen Akayesu either personally kill or order killings, and that only one witness, witness K, had been called to testify in relation to the events in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Indictment. The Defence questioned the credibility of witness K on the grounds that Akayesu, during the said interviews of 1996, had cited this particular witness as a potential defence witness. If witness K had really lived through all the events she testified on, argued the Defence, why would Akayesu have named her as a defence witness.

Factual Findings

299. The testimonies of witnesses K and KK evidenced, on the one hand, events which both K and KK witnessed, and on the other hand, events that only one of the two had witnessed. The Chamber recalls that the requirement of corroboration of a witness' testimony unique to certain events, i.e. the principle of unus testis nullus testis, is not applicable under the Rules of the Tribunal76. The Chamber found both witness K and witness KK to be credible. Their testimonies were not marked by hostility and were confirmed under cross-examination. The Defence attempted to discredit witness KK on the basis of her inability to remember specific dates and times. However, the Chamber considers that these lapses of memory were not significant and an inability to recall dates and times with specificity - particularly in the light of the traumatic experience of this witness - is not by itself a basis for discrediting the witness77.

300. Further, the Defence contested the credibility of witness K on the premise that Akayesu had indicated to the Prosecutor in April 1996 that she was a potential defence witness. The Chamber finds this to be a mere affirmation by Akayesu of his intent to call a certain witness, and that it does not constitute a defence per se as to the allegations contained in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Indictment. Further the Defence claimed the Prosecutor had called only one witness in respect of the events alleged in the said paragraphs. In light of the testimonies of two witnesses, namely K and KK, the Chamber finds the latter to be an erroneous submission by the Defence.

301. In view of the aforementioned, the Chamber finds the testimonies of witnesses K and KK both to be credible on their own, and that when dealt with together they offer sufficient correlation as to events, dates and locations for the Chamber to base its findings thereon.

302. During their respective testimonies before the Chamber, both witnesses DCC and DZZ were evasive in answering questions in relation to the events alleged in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Indictment. However, the Chamber notes that the reluctance of these witnesses in answering certain questions was limited either to their individual participation in the acts, or to events they had personally seen. The Chamber recalls that both witnesses DCC and DZZ were at the time of their testimonies, detained in prisons in Rwanda, hence it is understandable that neither wished to present self-incriminating evidence. The Chamber has considered the probative value of their testimonies in light of the above, and finds that the evasiveness and reluctance which punctuated their oral testimony reduced their credibility.

303. Witnesses K and KK for the Prosecution, testified that they witnessed massacres at the bureau communal. Witness K specified seeing the massacres on 19 April 1994 at the bureau communal, and witness KK testified that the massacres started with the killing of teachers.

304. Both witnesses presented by the Defence, witness DCC and DZZ, also testified that killings took place at the bureau communal. Witness DCC went to the bureau communal everyday during the events. He saw people, mainly Tutsi, being massacred by the Interahamwe and taken to be buried behind the primary school. Furthermore, the Defence presented as evidence the statement given by witness DCC to the Prosecutor78. The section quoted by the Defence clearly indicates that Akayesu was at the bureau communal when four people were killed at the entrance of the office and that he knew the killing of Tutsi was taking place in the commune. Questioned as to why Akayesu did nothing to stop these acts perpetrated by the Interahamwe, witness DCC said Akayesu was powerless to do so. The Chamber notes that the testimony of witness DCC supports the prosecution's evidence that people were killed at the bureau communal, in the presence of the accused; and conflicts with Akayesu's testimony that no killings took place at the bureau communal and that the only dead bodies he saw were those of two children

305. Witness DZZ testified that he went regularly to the bureau communal but that he never personally saw any massacres or crimes he had heard of being perpetrated. He added that Akayesu never participated in the massacres and even preached peace amongst the refugees. He also affirmed that massacres in Taba had become widespread after 18 April 1994. However, the Chamber notes that for witness DZZ to stipulate on the occasions he went to the bureau communal he did not see any of the massacres, and further that he had not heard of Akayesu's participation in massacres, does not refute the specific allegations in paragraphs 19 and 20. Indeed, it is alleged killings occurred at the bureau communal in the presence and under the instructions of Akayesu. DZZ had heard there were massacres at the bureau communal but never personally witnessed any. The Chamber notes thereon that the defence presented by the testimony of witness DZZ supports the fact that there were massacres at the bureau communal but that it does not specifically address the events in the said paragraphs, as the witness was not present when the killings he had heard of took place.

306. Akayesu admitted during his examination-in-chief that he saw massacres of refugees at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994. This is corroborated by the testimonies of witnesses DZZ, DCC, K and KK in relation to there being massacres at the bureau communal. The Chamber finds it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that, firstly, there were refugees at the bureau communal and, secondly, that massacres did occur at the bureau communal on or about 19 April 1994.

307. Akayesu confirmed under cross-examination that he was able to identify intellectuals, teachers being an example he put to the Chamber, from the rest of the refugees. Witnesses K and KK both stated that Akayesu ordered the killing of certain intellectuals and other refugees. The Defence did not specifically address these allegations. Under cross-examination, questioned as to these allegations, Akayesu said he never saw anyone killed in the courtyard with a machete because he was attending to witness K, that he never saw any bodies inside or outside the courtyard of the bureau communal and that he heard of the deaths of the teachers three days after their killings. The Chamber finds that the veracity of these answers can be doubted. Indeed, Akayesu affirmed himself during his examination-in-chief that, on 19 April 1994, he saw refugees being attacked at the bureau communal, and that he saw some killed and others escape. Further, the Chamber finds implausible the assertion that he heard of the deaths of the Remera teachers three days later. Witnesses, including himself, have placed Akayesu at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994. Akayesu testified to seeing and hearing of searches of various intellectuals in Taba throughout the day of 19 April 1994, yet he somehow did not hear of killings that took place at the bureau communal the same day. The Chamber cannot accept Akayesu's assertion with regard to the killing of teachers. Further, the Chamber notes that Akayesu did not specifically contest the allegations that he ordered the militia and local population to kill intellectuals and influential people.

Paragraph 19

308. As pertains to the allegations in paragraph 19, evidence set out above has demonstrated that refugees from Runda had been held at the bureau communal by Akayesu. Evidence has established that Akayesu told the Interahamwe he had sent for that "[...] he could no longer have pity for the Tutsi. Even those who we have kept here, I want to deliver them to you so that you can render a judgment unto them". It has been demonstrated that he then ordered the release of the refugees and handed them over to the Interahamwe with the words here they are'. Evidence has demonstrated that these refugees were made to sit next to the fence of the bureau communal and that when they begged for mercy, Akayesu said to the Interahamwe do it quickly'. It has been established that immediately after Akayesu had said this, the refugees were killed in his presence, by persons nearby who used whatever weapons they had on them. It has been established that the refugees were killed because they were Tutsi.

309. The Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu released eight detained men of Runda commune whom he was holding in the bureau communal and handed them over to the Interahamwe. It has also been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu ordered the local militia to kill them. It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the eight refugees were killed by the Interahamwe in the presence of Akayesu. The Chamber also finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that traditional weapons, including machetes and small axes, were used in the killings, though it is has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that sticks and clubs were used in the killings. It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the eight refugees were killed because they were Tutsi.

Paragraph 20

310. Evidence has demonstrated that after the killing of the refugees, Akayesu instructed people near him to fetch the one who remained', and that consequent to this instruction, a certain professor by the name of Samuel was brought to the bureau communal. It has been established that Samuel was then killed with a machete blow to the neck.

311. Evidence has demonstrated that on or about 19 April 1994, Akayesu addressed refugees and Interahamwe in front of the bureau communal, calling for all Tutsi within the commune to be hunted and found. It has been established that Akayesu stated that there were accomplices in the commune, one of whom lived behind the bureau communal. It has been established that Akayesu cited a professor by the name of Tharcisse as the accomplice and ordered the Interahamwe and communal policemen to fetch him. Evidence has established that persons using whistles fetched Tharcisse and his wife from behind the bureau communal. Tharcisse and his wife were made to sit in the mud on the road outside the bureau communal, whereupon his wife was undressed and told to leave. It has been established that Akayesu asked Tharcisse for information on the Inkotanyi, after which the Interahamwe killed Tharcisse in the presence of Akayesu.

312. Evidence has shown that Akayesu said to the Interahamwe that the intellectuals were the source of all the misery, and that he ordered the Interahamwe to bring the teachers from Remera. It has been demonstrated that a number of teachers from Remera school were brought to the road outside the bureau communal and killed with traditional weapons, including hoes and clubs. Evidence identified the victims to be Theogene and Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé.

313. The Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that on or about 19 April 1994, Akayesu ordered the local people and Interahamwe to kill intellectual people'. It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that, after the killing of the refugees, Akayesu instructed the local people and Interahamwe near him at the bureau communal to fetch the one who remains', a professor by the name of Samuel, and that consequent to this instruction, a certain professor by the name of Samuel was brought to the bureau communal. It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Samuel was then killed by the local people and Interahamwe with a machete blow to the neck. The Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that teachers from the commune of Taba were killed pursuant to the instructions of Akayesu. The Chamber finds it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that amongst the teachers who were killed were Tharcisse, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé. It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Tharcisse was killed in the presence of Akayesu. The Chamber finds it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were all killed by local people and Interahamwe using machetes and agricultural tools on the road in front of the bureau communal. The Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu ordered the killing of influential people, nor that the victims were teachers from the secondary school of Taba.

314. The Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the teachers were killed because they were Tutsi.

5.3 Meeting

5.3.1. Paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment

315. Paragraph 14 of the Indictment reads as follows: "The morning of April 19, 1994, following the murder of Sylvère Karera, Jean Paul Akayesu led a meeting in Gishyeshye sector at which he sanctioned the death of Sylvère Karera and urged the population to eliminate accomplices of the RPF, which was understood by those present to mean Tutsi. Over 100 people were present at the meeting. The killing of Tutsi in Taba began shortly after the meeting".

316. It is alleged that by the acts with which he is charged in this paragraph, the Accused is guilty of offences covered under four counts:

> Count 1 of the Indictment charges him with the crime of genocide, punishable under Article 2 (3)(a) of the Statute;
>
> Count 2 charges him with the crime of complicity in genocide, punishable under Article 2 (3)(e) of the Statute;
>
> Count 3 charges him with the crime of extermination which constitutes a crime against humanity, punishable under Article 3 (b) of the Statute; and
>
> Count 4 charges him with the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, punishable under Article 2 (3)(c) of the Statute.

317. The Chamber deems that, in order to derive clear and articulate factual findings regarding the acts alleged in paragraph 14 of the Indictment, it is necessary to consider, separately, the facts relating to:

> firstly, the holding on the morning of 19 April 1994 of a meeting in Gishyeshye sector, alleged to have been attended by over 100 people and led by the Accused alone following the death of Mr. Karera;
>
> secondly, the fact during that meeting, the Accused is alleged to have sanctioned the death of Sylvère Karera;
>
> thirdly, the fact during that meeting, the Accused is alleged to have urged the population to eliminate the accomplices of the RPF, which was understood by those present to mean Tutsi; and
>
> Fourthly, the killing of Tutsi in Taba is alleged to have begun shortly after the said meeting.

318. With regard to the facts in paragraph 14 of the Indictment detailed as follows:

> "The morning of April 19, 1994, following the murder of Sylvère Karera, Jean Paul Akayesu led a meeting in Gishyeshye sector. (.....) Over 100 people were present at the meeting."

319. The Chamber finds a substantial disparity between the French and English versions of paragraph 14 of the Indictment. While in the French version it is said that " Jean Paul Akayesu alone led a meeting," the English version only indicates that "Jean Paul Akayesu led a meeting,' without specifying whether he led the meeting alone. The Chamber is of the opinion that the French version should be accepted in this particular case, because the Indictment was read to the Accused in French at his initial appearance, because the Accused and his counsel spoke French during the hearings and, above all, because the general principles of law stipulate that, in criminal matters, the version favourable to the Accused should be selected. In the present case and in accordance with the French version of the Indictment, the Prosecution must not only establish that the Accused led the meeting, but also that he led it alone.

320. The murder of Sylvère Karera, a teacher killed on the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, and the subsequent events, alleged under paragraph 13 of the Indictment, have already been discussed supra.

321. Prosecution witness A testified that after he saw the remains of Sylvère Karera at the Remera school, he went to Gishyeshye on 19 April 1994, towards 6 or 7 o'clock in the morning, where he found a large gathering of 300 to 400 people at a crossroads. The witness stated that no one had convened the meeting but that it was rather a gathering of people attracted by the events. The crowd stood near to the body of a person identified as an Interahamwe from Gishyeshye, who was alleged to have killed Sylvère Karera. A small group of people, including the bourgmestre , the Accused, sector council members and four armed members of the Interahamwe, who could be identified by the MRND coat of arms on their caps, faced the crowd in such a way that enabled them to address it. The sector councillors called on the crowd to pay attention to the speech by the . Witness A pointed out that the Interahamwe stood near a blue minibus in which the Accused had arrived, and that they seemed to have been escorting the latter, which was a surprise to the crowd.

322. A Tutsi man, appearing as a Prosecution witness under the pseudonym Z, testified that on or about 19 April 1994, in the early hours of the day following the murder of a Tutsi teacher in Remera, the murderer of this teacher was killed by persons responsible for maintaining law and order. Witness Z and other people gathered around the body of the teacher's murderer. The crowd Accused the Interahamwe present of having caused the death of the teacher. The Accused, who was armed, separated the rest of the population from members of the Interahamwe and then addressed the crowd.

323. Prosecution witness V, a teacher in Taba for nearly 30 years, went to Gishyeshye sector where he attended a meeting, at the place where the body of a Hutu man lay. He confirmed that a meeting was then held on the road in Gishyeshye, in the presence of the Accused, who was carrying a gun, and who organized the said meeting. The witness estimated that it was attended by some 500 people. The people were standing in front of a house. The Accused himself stood in the middle of the road with the Interahamwe next to him, across the road from the people.

324. Ephrem Karangwa, a Tutsi man, called as witness for the Prosecution, who, at the time of the acts alleged in the Indictment, was the Inspecteur de police judiciaire (Senior law enforcement Officer, criminal investigation department) of the Taba commune, testified before the Chamber that on 19 April, the Accused held a meeting in Gishyeshye sector.

325. Men, who had gone to inquire after Sylvère Karera, told witness U that a person had been killed following the murder of Karera and that the Accused himself had gone to where the body was and held a meeting there.

326. The holding of the said meeting was confirmed by the Accused himself, who told the Chamber during his testimony as witness, that at about 4 a.m., on the night of 18 to 19 April 1994, a certain Augustin Sebazungu, treasurer of the MDR in Taba and a resident of Gishyeshye sector, came to see him at the Bureau communal, where he had been sleeping, to inform him that the situation in Gishyeshye sector was tense, following the murder of a young man who was a member of the Interahamwe. The bourgmestre immediately alerted the police and went to the scene with two policemen, in a blue minibus. In Gishyeshye, he found a body stretched out on the ground, covered with traces of blood, as if it had been hit. The Accused affirmed before the Chamber that since people were coming to see what was happening, he took advantage of the fact that a crowd had gathered there to address the population. He noted that the Interahamwe of the region had flocked around the body of their young member. The Accused puts the crowd at the meeting at about 100 to 200 people, including Hutu and Tutsi, members of the Interahamwe, members of the MDR and probably other political parties. The Accused admitted before the Chamber that he asked the crowd to draw closer, and then addressed the crowd, while the two policemen accompanying him stood behind him.

327. In his closing arguments, the Defence counsel underscored that the Accused never convened the Gishyeshye meeting, but that a crowd had spontaneously gathered after a man had been killed. The Accused, as bourgmestre, reportedly found himself among the crowd thus assembled which included members of the Interahamwe.

328. With regard to the facts in paragraph 14 of the Indictment detailed as follows:

> " Jean Paul Akayesu (...) sanctioned the death of Sylvère Karera"

329. According to Prosecution witness V, the Accused stated that Sylvère Karera died because he was working with the Inkotanyi. The bourgmestre further stated that the person whose body lay at the meeting place had been wrongly killed, but that Sylvère Karera had been justly killed. Under cross-examination by the Defence, witness V reiterated that the Accused stated that Karera had been killed because he was working with the Inkotanyi.

330. Witness Z, a Tutsi man, testified that at the meeting which followed the murder of the Remera teacher, the Accused, who was armed, separated the rest of the population from the members of the Interahamwe and, speaking of the body on the ground, he reportedly deplored the murder of the person and stated that this person was dead and yet the enemy was still alive. According to witness Z, the Accused told the crowd that papers detailing Tutsi plans to exterminate the Hutu had been seized at the home of the teacher.

331. The Accused told the Chamber, during his testimony, that he had inquired of the crowd standing around the body of the young Interahamwe, why the young man had been killed. The people gathered there, answered that he had looted and that he had been justly punished. The bourgmestre then stayed on to speak to the people, trying to explain to them that killing as a habit must stop and making them aware of the consequences. He condemned the murder of the young man because he felt that such was not a way of maintaining law and order, and explained that it would have been enough to arrest the young man. The Accused told the Chamber that he had asked Augustin Sebazungu why he, as a prominent figure and an educated man, had failed to stop the population from killing the young man, to which Sebazungu reportedly replied that there was nothing he could do.

332. With regard to the facts in paragraph 14 of the Indictment detailed as follows:

> " Jean Paul Akayesu (...) urged the population to eliminate the accomplices of the RPF, which was understood by those present to mean Tutsi."

333. Prosecution witness A testified that, during the said meeting, the Accused held papers which he allegedly showed to the crowd saying that the papers had been seized at the home of an Inkotanyi accomplice. He also said the papers detailed what the Inkotanyi accomplices were to do. The Accused showed the papers to the public. He stated that things had changed and that the Inkotanyi and their accomplices wanted to seize power. According to witness A, the bourgmestre stated that everyone should do everything possible to fight against those people because they were seeking to restore the former regime. He said that he was personally going to search for some of the people. A teacher then told the Accused that he knew of an accomplice to which the Accused replied: "Go fetch this person". Witness A also stated that the Interahamwe allegedly told the Accused he was to put the people of the commune at their disposal. The bourgmestre then told the crowd to fight against the Inkotanyi and their accomplices. The witness stated that the crowd remained rather calm even though it was stunned by the unusual statement made by the Accused. Witness A was personally surprised, just as, in his words, the rest of the people present, to see that the bourgmestre had changed and that he seemed, among other things, to have become friends with the Interahamwe.

334. Prosecution witness V told the Chamber that at the Gishyeshye meeting of 19 April 1994, the Accused asked the population to collaborate with the Interahamwe in the fight against the Tutsi, the sole enemy of the Hutus. According to witness V, the Accused brandished documents which he said contained a list of names of Hutu that the Tutsi wanted to kill. He read the papers and said that the Tutsi were holding meetings to exterminate the Hutu. Witness V felt that the bourgmestre wanted to make the population understand that the Tutsi were their enemies. The Accused said the Tutsi, the real and only enemies of the Hutu, must be killed. He called on the population to work with the Interahamwe to search for the sole enemy. He also said that there were well-known Tutsi people living in the commune, who were working with the RPF. Witness V stated that apart from the Accused, only a certain François took the floor, to state that a list of receipts for contributions, allegedly made by the Tutsi to the Inkotanyi, had been seized.

335. According to Prosecution witness C, during that meeting, showed the Accused the crowd documents which included a list of the names of Hutu whom the Inkotanyi and the Tutsi inhabitants of Taba wanted to kill and a list of the names of Tutsi who had paid their contributions to the RPF. The witness noted that, while the Interahamwe seemed to be happy, the crowd was stunned by the change in the behaviour of the bourgmestre. Witness C stated that the Accused said during the meeting that the Tutsi was the sole enemy of the Hutu. He confirmed that he did hear the Accused say the Tutsi must be killed.

336. Witness Z, a Tutsi man, testified that at the meeting which followed the murder of the Remera teacher, the Accused, who was armed, called on all those present to bury their political differences and unite to fight the enemy, the enemy being the Tutsi, the accomplices of the Inkotanyi. Witness Z stated that the Accused, speaking of the body of the young Interahamwe believed to have killed Sylvère Karera, deplored the murder of the person and said that he was dead whereas the enemy was still alive. Witness Z further testified that, at the meeting, the Accused had in his possession papers which included a list of names. The Accused read the papers and stated that the Tutsi were holding meetings to exterminate the Hutu. In addition to the Accused, a member of the Interahamwe, named François, also took the floor, holding papers his hands. He showed the papers and said they had been seized at the home of the teacher killed in Remera. The documents included a list of the names of Tutsi who had paid their contributions to the Inkotanyi. The crowd was surprised to see that the Accused then seemed to be cooperating with the Interahamwe. Witness Z felt that, during the said meeting, the Accused was addressing the Hutu and telling them to kill the Tutsi.

337. A certain Ephrem Karangwa, who was the Inspecteur de police judiciaire of Taba Commune at the time of the events, testified before the Chamber that at the Gishyeshye meeting, the Accused told the population to kill the Tutsi in Taba. The bourgmestre told the people that whether they supported the MDR, MRND or the PSD, they should unite and understand that there was only one enemy, namely the Tutsi. The Accused told the people not to fear the Interahamwe. According to the witness the people who attended the said meeting affirmed to him that, during the meeting, the Accused showed a list of people to be killed, which included the name of Ephrem Karangwa. Allegations that the Accused, inter alia, named Ephrem Karangwa during the said meeting, are included in paragraph 13 of the Indictment and elaborated upon here infra.

338. Men reportedly told Prosecution witness U that, at the meeting held by the Accused near the body of Sylvère Karera's murderer, it was said that the only enemy was the Tutsi and that all Tutsi must be killed. According to witness U, the crowd then allegedly said that the "plane" had been shot by the Inkotanyi, and that the Inkotanyi were the Tutsi.

339. Several Prosecution witnesses confirmed the Prosecution allegation that, when the Accused called on the people to fight against the enemy, the people present took it to mean that the Tutsi must be killed. Witness C, a male Hutu farmer like witness N, a female Hutu farmer, told the Chamber that, at the time of the alleged events, the "Inkotanyi" and the "Inyenzi" meant the Tutsi. Witness N specified that the Accused himself, as a leader, took the Tutsi to mean the Inkotanyi and the Inyenzi. Witness V also pointed out that, at the time of the events, the words Inkotanyi and Tutsi, were interchangeable in the countryside. He specified that, while all Inkotanyi were not Tutsi, everyone understood at the time that all Tutsi were Inkotanyi. Witness V also confirmed that the words Tutsi and Inkotanyi were synonymous and stated that the Tutsi had been pursued with such shouts as " There they are, those Inkotanyi, those Tutsi." He explained that the Tutsi were assimilated to the Inkotanyi.

340. Dr. Mathias Ruzindana, Professor of Linguistics at the University of Rwanda, appearing as expert witness for the Prosecution, explained to the Chamber that, based on his own analyses of Rwandan publications and broadcasts by the RTLM and on his personal experience, he was of the opinion that, at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment, the term Inkotanyi had several extended meanings, from an RPF sympathizer to members of the Tutsi group, depending on the context.

341. According to witness DIX, a Hutu woman, appearing as a Defence witness, explained that in her opinion, the Interahamwe started to kill people because they thought that their neighbours had in their midst accomplices of enemies from outside the country.

342. A certain Joseph Matata, a Defence witness, testified before the Chamber that the contention that when the Accused called on the people to fight against the enemy, those present took it to mean that the Tutsi must be killed, had to rebutted. According to him, the latter's speech must be interpreted with two factors in mind, namely the context of RPF incursions into the Rwandan territory and the fact that people who knew the bourgmestre could not have construed his speech as a call to kill the Tutsi.

343. A Defence witness appearing under the pseudonym DZZ, denied that the Accused ever held a meeting in Taba commune at the time of the alleged acts.

344. During his testimony before the Chamber, the Accused stated that the Interahamwe began to shout when the crowd had gathered at Gishyeshye. He called on them to calm down, stating that it was necessary to work in an orderly fashion. The Interahamwe then reportedly informed the bourgmestre that soldiers, the Inkotanyi, were allegedly infiltrating the commune. The Accused maintained before the Chamber that he had replied that if they knew of a family harbouring an RPF militant, they could reveal such information to a councillor, an officer of the Cellule, a policeman or the bourgmestre , who would then take up the case and follow it up. The Accused denied that he himself told the crowd that people, the accomplices of the Inkotanyi, should be flushed out, but admitted that it was said in the crowd that certain families were harbouring RPF soldiers.

345. In response to Prosecution questions regarding the lists of names mentioned by several Prosecution witnesses, the Accused stated under cross-examination, that a certain François had given him papers he rapidly read through silently for his personal edification. Those papers included the names of people and their functions. The Accused testified that the Interahamwe ordered him twice to read out the list and he refused to do so. According to him, members of the Interahamwe then said that the list, which included the names of RPF soldiers and their supporters, had been seized in the office of an "Inspecteur de police judiciaire" in Runda, a member of the RPF, who had been killed while he was shooting at the soldiers and the communal police.

346. The Accused testified before the Chamber that he refused to read the list aloud to the crowd because he had had time to recognize certain names on the list such as those of Karangwa, Charlotte, Rukundakuvuga and Mutabazi. According to the Accused, he allegedly explained to the assembled population that the list contained names which included that of Ephrem Karangwa, and that such a list constituted a real danger since anyone could someday find their name on such a list. Thus, he reportedly cautioned the people against such documents.

347. The Accused then specifically admitted before the Chamber that mentioning a name on such a list was seriously damaging to the person thus named and jeopardized their life. He also confirmed that made by a public official, such as the bourgmestre , such a statement would have so much more impact on the people, who would understand that the person was thus being denounced and that they would certainly be killed.
The position of the Defence as stated, particularly, during the closing arguments, regarding the documents read by the Accused, is that overexcited members of the Interahamwe allegedly forced the bourgmestre to read a document in their possession, which included the names of a certain number of people considered to be accomplices of the RPF. The Accused allegedly tried to dissuade the demonstrators from denouncing anyone in such a manner, by explaining that there was no proof that the people whose names appeared on the list were indeed RPF supporters.

348. With regard to the facts in paragraph 14 of the Indictment detailed as follows:

" The killing of Tutsi in Taba began shortly after the meeting."

349. With regard to the allegation made in paragraph 14 of the Indictment, the Chamber feels that it is not sufficient to simply establish a possible coincidence between the Gishyeshye meeting and the beginning of the killing of Tutsi in Taba, but that there must be proof of a possible causal link between the statement made by the Accused during the said meeting and the beginning of the killings.

350. Witness Ephrem Karangwa, who was the "Inspecteur de police judiciaire" of Taba commune, at the time of the events testified that until 18 April 1994, the people of Taba were united and there were no killings in Taba at that time.

351. According to Prosecution witness C, the Taba population followed the instructions given by the bourgmestre at the Gishyeshye meeting and began thereafter to destroy houses and to kill. The witness recalled that the people once again complied with the instructions of the Accused as they always had.

352. Prosecution witness W, a Tutsi, clearly stated that the attacks began on 19 April 1994. The first attack he witnessed took place on 19 April 1994 at about 2:00 p.m. Just before that, his younger brother, who had gone to find out what had happened in Rukoma, told him that a list of "Collaborators" had allegedly been discovered in the home of Sylvère Karera, and that the name of witness W was allegedly on the list. The witness then immediately went into hiding and later sought refuge in Kayenzi commune.

353. Prosecution witness A, a Tutsi man, testified before the Chamber that five Tutsi were killed on the day of the meeting. From that date, witness A personally observed that the people were destroying houses, taking away corrugated iron sheets, doors and anything they could carry, and killing cows which they ate. Some of the people tried to run away when the killings began. Most of the victims were Tutsi. Witness A said that in his opinion when the Accused began to have good relations with the Interahamwe, the latter did whatever they wanted with the commune. He felt that the people were thus subjected to propaganda designed to make one part of the population hate the other. The people were believed to have changed because of repeated statements and promises made to them and that, as a result, they allegedly began to kill.

354. Witness N, a 69-year old female Hutu farmer, also explained that the destruction of houses, the killing of cows and even the killings, began following said meeting. She attributed the scale of the killings to the Accused's fiery mood during said meeting and his urging to wage war against the Inkotanyi and the Tutsi. She felt that had the Accused not held the meeting in question, the killings would never have started at that very moment, even if the Interahamwe were more powerful than the bourgmestre .

355. The Accused himself confirmed to the Chamber that killings started in Taba on 19 April 1994. He said that, on that day, after addressing the crowd at Gishyeshye, he went to the Bureau communal where he noted that the Interahamwe had killed a good number of people, who had sought refuge there, including elderly people, women and children.

356. During its closing arguments, the Defence pointed out that Prosecution witness V had testified before the Chamber that many Tutsi had sought refuge at the Bureau communal on the night of 19 April 1994. It therefore expressed doubt as to the reliability of Prosecution Witness V who had also stated, during his testimony, that on the morning of the same 19 April 1994, the Accused had ordered the Tutsi to be killed.

357. A certain Joseph Matata, called as a Defence witness, explained to the Chamber that, in his opinion and according to testimonies he had allegedly collected in Taba, the militia began to neutralize the Accused as from 19 April 1994. He therefore concluded that the beginning of the massacres was not linked to the Gishyeshye meeting, but that it was an unfortunate coincidence.

358. Factual findings:

359. On the basis of consistent evidence and the facts confirmed by the Accused himself, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was present in Gishyeshye, during the early hours of 19 April 1994, that he joined the crowd gathered around the body of a young member of the Interahamwe militia, and that he took that opportunity to address the people. The Chamber finds that the Accused did not convene the meeting, but that he joined an already formed gathering. Furthermore, on the basis of consistent evidence, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that on that occasion, the Accused, by virtue of his functions as bourgmestre and the authority he held over the population, did lead the crowd and the ensuing proceedings.

360. With regard to the Prosecution allegation that the Accused sanctioned the death of Sylvère Karera, the Chamber finds that the Accused himself admitted to having condemned the death of a young Interahamwe who had allegedly killed Karera, but failing to mention that he also condemned the death of Karera. The Chamber nevertheless points out that failure to condemn is not tantamount to approval in this case. However, on the basis of testimonies by witnesses V and Z, the Chamber finds that the Accused could very well have attributed the death of Sylvère Karera to his alleged complicity with the Inkotanyi and may have added that Karera had been justly killed. The Chamber however finds that no other evidence corroborated the testimony of witness V, whereas some ten witnesses had been questioned about facts relating to the murder of Sylvestre Karera and the ensuing meeting at which the Accused spoke. Consequently, the Chamber holds that in the absence of conclusive evidence, the Prosecution has failed to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused publicly sanctioned the death of Sylvère Karera at the Gishyeshye gathering.

361. With regard to the allegation that the Accused urged the population, during the said gathering, to eliminate the accomplices of the RPF, after considering the weight of all supporting and corroborative evidence, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused clearly called on the population to unite and eliminate the sole enemy: accomplices of the Inkotanyi. On the basis of consistent evidence heard throughout the trial and the information provided by Dr. Ruzindana, appearing as an expert witness on linguistic issues, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the population construed the Accused's call as a call to kill the Tutsi. The Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was himself fully aware of the impact of his statement on the crowd and of the fact that his call to wage war against Inkotanyi accomplices could be construed as one to kill the Tutsi in general.

362. Finally, relying on substantial evidence which was not essentially called into question by the Defence, and as it was confirmed by the Accused, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a causal link between the statement of the Accused at the 19 April 1994 gathering and the ensuing widespread killings in Taba.

The events alleged

363. Paragraph 15 reads as follows:

> At the same meeting in Gishyeshye sector on April 19, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu named at least three prominent Tutsis -- Ephrem Karangwa, Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa -- who had to be killed because of their alleged relationships with the RPF. Later that day, Juvénal Rukundakuvuga was killed in Kanyiya. Within the next few days, Emmanuel Sempabwa was clubbed to death in front of Taba bureau communal.
>
> It is the alleged that by his participation in relation to these acts the accused committed offences charged in six counts:
>
> > Count 1, Genocide, punishable by Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
> >
> > Count 2, Complicity in Genocide, punishable by Article 2(3)(e) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
> >
> > Count 3, Crimes against Humanity (extermination), punishable by Article 3(b) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
> >
> > Count 4, Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide, punishable by virtue of Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute of the Tribunal;
> >
> > Count 5, Crimes against Humanity (murder), punishable by Article 3(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal; and Count 6, Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, as incorporated by Article 4(a)(murder) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

364. Paragraph 15 of the Indictment alleges that, at a meeting held on 19 April 1994 in Gishyeshye sector, the accused called for the killing of three prominent Tutsi due to their alleged relationships with the RPF. As a supposed consequence of being named, at least two of them, namely Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa, were subsequently killed. The acts which were allegedly further perpetrated as regards to Ephrem Karangwa are the subject of paragraphs 16, 17 and 18 of the Indictment.

365. It has already been established beyond reasonable doubt, as alleged in paragraph 14 of the Indictment, that Akayesu was present at an early morning gathering in Gishyeshye sector on April 19 1994. The Chamber found that Akayesu urged those present to unite to eliminate the only enemy, the accomplice of the Inkotanyi. The Chamber also found the terms Inkotanyi and accomplice during the said meeting to refer to Tutsi and that the accused was conscious that his utterances to the crowd would be understood as calls to kill the Tutsi in general.

366. It now needs to be established whether during this gathering, Akayesu specifically named Ephrem Karangwa, Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa who had to be killed because of their alleged relationships with the RPF. If it is proved beyond a reasonable that Akayesu named the said three, the Chamber will consider evidence presented in relation to their subsequent fates as alleged in the second and third sentences of paragraph 15 of the Indictment.

The Role, if any, of the Accused

367. A number of the witnesses, namely witnesses V, C, A, Z and Akayesu, who testified in relation to the events alleged in paragraph 14 of the Indictment, also testified in relation to the specific allegations contained in paragraph 15 of the Indictment. Hence, the Chamber will limit itself to recalling the testimonies of these witnesses only as pertains to the paragraph 15 of the Indictment, i.e. the naming of three individuals and their subsequent fates, factual findings having already been made above to there having been a gathering in Gishyeshye and the pertinent general allegations.

368. Witness Z, a Tutsi man, testified that on or about 19 April 1994, in the early hours of the morning, he was present at the Gishyeshye sector gathering, which was attended by Akayesu. He said Akayesu separated the crowd from the Interahamwe and called for all those present to forget their political differences until the enemy had been eliminated, the enemy being the Tutsi, the accomplices of the Inkotanyi.

369. Witness Z said Akayesu, who was holding documents, cited Ephrem Karangwa as someone wanting to kill him and replace him as bourgmestre. He said the accused did not name anyone else in particular. According to witness Z, Akayesu said that he didn't want to give the names of the other persons because they lived nearby and someone might warn and help them escape. The witness said an Interahamwe by the name of François spoke about papers. According to the witness, the Interahamwe said the papers had been seized from the dead professor's house (see factual findings on paragraphs 13 and 14 of the Indictment) and contained details of monies paid by the Tutsi to the Inkotanyi.

370. Witness Z testified Akayesu announced on leaving that he was going so that those persons who are to be found between Taba and Kayenzi did not escape him. He said the accused left in a vehicle with the Interahamwe. Once back at his house which was on a neighboring hill, the witness said he observed the persons who had been in the vehicle with Akayesu break down the door of Rukundakuvuga's house. He later heard that Rukundakuvuga was arrested. Under cross-examination, witness Z confirmed that Akayesu had not named Rukundakuvuga but added that Akayesu read from documents at the gathering.

371. Witness V, a Tutsi teacher in Taba in Taba commune for nearly 28 years, testified he was present at the gathering at the Gishyeshye sector. He said that, during this gathering, Akayesu asked the population to collaborate with the Interahamwe in the fight against the only enemy of the Hutu, namely the Tutsi. The witness said Akayesu brandished documents on which there was a list of names of Hutu who were to be killed by the Inkotanyi and the Tutsi, and a list of RPF collaborators. The witness affirmed Akayesu said he knew of a number of people in the commune, namely three teachers, to be RPF collaborators who lived in Kanyenzi, and a fourth person, the "inspecteur de police judiciaire" who worked at the office of the commune. Witness V said the accused told the crowd that these people had to be sought to prevent them from escaping. The witness testified the accused named Ephrem Karangwa during the meeting, and by reference to where they lived also implicitly spoke of Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa, who were both Tutsi. According to the witness, the crowd understood that Akayesu was looking for these people as they were supposedly RPF accomplices.

372. Witness V testified that of the four individuals spoken of by the accused, he saw two of the bodies at the bureau communal, and the body of Rukundakuvuga on the Kanyiya road as he fled the commune of Taba. The fourth person named at the meeting was able to escape.

373. Under cross-examination, witness V asserted that Akayesu brandished three documents during the gathering. He said there was a list of people who were financing the RPF, a list of Hutu who had to be killed by the Tutsi, and a list of Tutsi RPF collaborators. The witness testified that Akayesu only named Karangwa. Questioned as to the identification of other individuals, witness V said they weren't expressly cited, but Akayesu pointed to where they lived and said that they were teachers. According to witness V, as people immediately went to search for them it had been possible for individuals at the gathering to guess about whom Akayesu was speaking.

374. Witness E, a Hutu man from Taba testified that he was present at the Gishyeshye gathering on the morning of 19 April 1994. He said Akayesu arrived in a car and addressed the crowd. According to the witness, Akayesu, who was armed with a rifle, pointed to the Interahamwe who were alongside him and told the crowd that the Interahamwe and the MRND, the party to which belonged the Interahamwe, meant them no harm. Witness E said Akayesu told the crowd that all of the political parties were at present one and the same, and that the only enemy was the accomplice of the Inkotanyi. The witness said a certain François gave Akayesu some documents which had allegedly been found at the residence of a RPF accomplice. He said Akayesu told the crowd that all of the Inkotanyi accomplices had to be sought. Questioned as to any names being cited by Akayesu, the witness said only that of Ephrem Karangwa was mentioned.

375. Witness A, a Hutu man who worked with Akayesu from April 1993 up until 7 April 1994, testified that he attended the Gishyeshye gathering in the early hours of 19 April 1994. He said that on arriving, around 06h00 and 07h00 in the morning, he saw a crowd gathered around a body. According to the witness, amongst the people present were the bourgmestre, conseillers, the local population who had heard the noise the night before and Interahamwe. The witness said the members of the cellules and the conseillers asked the crowd to listen to the bourgmestre. Witness A declared Akayesu showed a number of documents to the people, and told the crowd that things had changed, that the Inkotanyi and their accomplices wanted to take power. Questioned as to the citing of names, the witness stated that Akayesu mentioned only Ephrem Karangwa, the "inspecteur de police judiciaire", as someone who had a plan to replace him. The witness added that Akayesu told the crowd that everyone had to do whatever they could to fight these people so as not to return to the previous regime, and that he too would personally search for these people. Witness A testified that a teacher in the crowd informed Akayesu that he knew of another accomplice, in response to which Akayesu ordered that this person be found.

376. Under cross-examination, witness A affirmed that during the gathering in Gishyeshye, Akayesu named only Ephrem Karangwa, and mentioned no other names.

377. Witness C, a Hutu farmer, testified that he attended the Gishyeshye gathering. He said Akayesu addressed the crowd. According to the witness, the accused took documents from his jacket and stated that he was going to read the contents of the documents found at the Professor's house who had been killed in Remera. He said that Akayesu called for the crowd to listen attentively and to put into practice the contents of the documents. Witness C declared that thereafter Akayesu read out the documents.

378. Akayesu testified that on the morning of 19 April 1994 in Gishyeshye sector, a number of people, including Interahamwe, had assembled around the cadaver of an Interahamwe. Akayesu explained that during his discussions on commune security with the crowd at this gathering, a certain François, who had arrived with the Interahamwe, gave him a number of documents on which there figured names and occupations of supposed RPF accomplices and told him to read them. Though François told him to read out the names on the lists, the accused asserted that he did not do so, save for citing, reluctantly so, that of Ephrem Karangwa. In so doing he said he explained to those present at the gathering "there is on this list Ephrem Karangwa, tomorrow you may find yourselves on the list; will it then be said that you too are housing elements of the RPF, a soldier of the RPF?".

379. Under cross-examination, Akayesu declared that he did not read out any names but that he did cite that of Ephrem Karangwa. He added that he had summarized the contents of the documents in his possession by saying there was a list of names on which figured Ephrem Karangwa, tomorrow others could appear on the list, would it then be said that they too are hiding RPF soldiers. Akayesu said the Rukundakuvuga was also on the list, but denied having read it out. Akayesu stated it would be dangerous to publicly designate an individual as an accomplice of the RPF

380. The Defence argued that Akayesu never convened the gathering at Gishyeshye. Instead, the accused was amongst a group of people who had gathered there after a man had been killed. The Defence submitted that Interahamwe were angry, and forced Akayesu to read a document, which contained the names of persons they believed to be accomplices of the RPF. The Defence averred that Akayesu tried to dissuade the Interahamwe from denouncing people in this manner as there was nothing to prove on the list that these people were accomplices of the RPF.

Findings of fact

381. The Chamber has already found beyond a reasonable doubt that Akayesu was present and did speak at the gathering in Gishyeshye sector on the morning of 19 April 1994. This has been developed in the factual findings pertaining to paragraph 14 of the Indictment.

382. Akayesu admitted to having been given a number of documents by the Interahamwe François, and that he did cite the name of Ephrem Karangwa during this gathering, as a forewarning to those present that they too could be deemed RPF accomplices if their names figured on the list. Akayesu also admitted it would be dangerous to cite the name of an individual as an RPF accomplice. However, he was adamant that at he did not read out the documents as such, but summarized them for the crowd. Akayesu confirmed names, save that of Ephrem Karangwa, also appeared on the list. Further, the Defence submitted in its closing arguments that Akayesu had been forced to read out the documents given to him by the Interahamwe.

383. Akayesu's testimony, as regards the naming of Ephrem Karangwa, is supported by the evidence presented by witnesses Z, V, E and A in this matter. All four affirmed that only the name of Ephrem Karangwa had been cited during the Gishyeshye gathering. Witnesses V and Z added that in their opinions it was possible to infer, from Akayesu's gestures and subsequent conduct, reference to Sempabwa and Rukundakuvuga.

384. The Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu did cite Ephrem Karangwa during the Gishyeshye meeting. It has also been established beyond a reasonable doubt he did so knowing of the consequences of naming someone as an RPF accomplice in the temporal context of the events alleged in the Indictment.

385. However, the Chamber is of the opinion that the evidence presented in this matter does not support the specific allegations that Akayesu named Juvénal Rukundakuvuga and Emmanuel Sempabwa. The evidence presented shows only an implicit, yet remote, allusion by Akayesu during the Gishyeshye gathering to these two individuals, and does not demonstrate that Akayesu expressly named them. Hence, the Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu named Juvénal Rukundakuvuga or Emmanuel Sempabwa during the Gishyeshye gathering on 19 April 1994, and that their fates were consequent upon the utterances of Akayesu at the Gishyeshye gathering.

5.4 Beatings (Torture/Cruel Treatment) (Paragraphs 16, 17, 21, 22 & 23 of the Indictment)

Charges Set Forth in the Indictment

> 16. Jean Paul Akayesu, on or about April 19, 1994, conducted house-to-house searches in Taba. During these searches, residents, including Victim V, were interrogated and beaten with rifles and sticks in the presence of Jean Paul Akayesu. Jean Paul Akayesu personally threatened to kill the husband and child of Victim U if she did not provide him with information about the activities of the Tutsi he was seeking.
>
> 17. On or about April 19,1994, Jean Paul Akayesu ordered the interrogation and beating of Victim X in an effort to learn the whereabouts of Ephrem Karangwa. During the beating, Victim X's fingers were broken as he tried to shield himself from blows with a metal stick.
>
> 21. On or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu and some communal police went to the house of Victim Y, a 68 year old woman. Jean Paul Akayesu interrogated her about the whereabouts of the wife of a university teacher. During the questioning, under Jean Paul Akayesu's supervision, the communal police hit Victim Y with a gun and sticks. They bound her arms and legs and repeatedly kicked her in the chest. Jean Paul Akayesu threatened to kill her if she failed to provide the information he sought.
>
> 22. Later that night, on or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu picked up Victim W in Taba and interrogated her also about the whereabouts of the wife of the university teacher. When she stated she did not know, he forced her to lay on the road in front of his car and threatened to drive over her.
>
> 23. Thereafter, on or about April 20, 1994, Jean Paul Akayesu picked up Victim Z in Taba and interrogated him. During the interrogation, men under Jean Paul Akayesu's authority forced Victims Z and Y to beat each other and used a piece of Victim Y's dress to strangle Victim Z.

Events Alleged

386. The Chamber notes that paragraph 16 of the Indictment includes allegations with respect to Victim V and Victim U. As the evidence which was given by and about Victim V (Witness A) relates to events which are described in paragraphs 21, 22 and 23 of the Indictment, the Chamber will consider this component of paragraph 16 together with the allegations set forth in paragraphs 21, 22 and 23.

387. Witness K (Victim U), a Tutsi woman married to a Hutu man, was an accountant who worked for the Accused in the office of the bureau communal in Taba, during the events of April 1994. Witness K testified that on the morning of 19 April 1994 she went to the bureau communal at the request of the Accused and that she found him there outside the office with many people, changed in mood and in temper. She said he asked her why she had not been coming to work and sh e told him that she was afraid and had come only at his request. After then witnessing the killing of Tutsi at the bureau communal, which she said was ordered by the Accused, Witness K said the killers asked the Accused why she had not been killed as well. She said he told them that they were going to kill her after questioning her about the secrets of the Inkotanyi. According to Witness K, the Accused then took her keys, locked her in her office and left, saying he was going to search for Ephrem Karangwa, the Inspector of Judicial Police.

388. The Accused returned, said Witness K, with other men whom she referred to as "killers", and they questioned her. She said they asked her to explain how she was cooperating with the Inkotanyi, which she denied. She said the Accused insisted and said that if she did not tell them how she worked with the Inkotanyi, they would kill her. After further discussion, she said the Accused again threatened her, saying she should tell them what she knew or they would kill her, and then left. At this time she estimated it was about three o'clock in the afternoon. Witness K testified that the Accused returned at around midnight with a police officer and asked her whether she had decided to tell them what she knew. When she said she knew nothing, she said he told her, "I wash my hands of your blood." She said he then told her to leave the office and go home and when she expressed concern about the late hour, he asked the driver and the police to accompany her home.

389. Under cross-examination, Witness K stated that her husband was a friend of the Accused. When asked why she was not killed, she said that Tutsi women married to Hutu men were not killed. In his testimony, the Accused confirmed that he saw Witness K at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994 and said that he had wondered why she was there. He said that he saw a man behind her with a machete and that he came between them and escorted her to the office, and told her to keep the door closed.

390. Witness Q (Victim X), a Tutsi man who lived in Musambira, testified that on the same day, 19 April 1994, while he was there visiting, the Accused came to the home of his parents, looking for Ephrem Karangwa, the Inspector of Judicial Police for the commune of Taba. Witness Q told the Chamber that the four people who came - one of whom was a policeman armed with a gun, another armed with grenades and another with a small hatchet - made him, his brother, his sister and his brother-in-law sit down in the courtyard at the entrance of the house. He said they asked where Ephrem Karangwa was, and after a discussion in French, entered the house to search, leaving the policeman with them in the courtyard, his gun charged and ready to shoot. Witness Q said he recognized the policeman, who told his brother-in-law that it was Akayesu, the bourgmestre of Taba, who had come to his house. He said that Akayesu was wearing a long military jacket. Witness Q had not previously met the Accused but was able to identify him in court. He said the Accused and two other people came out of the house with boxes, papers and photographs, which they scattered in the courtyard, saying the photographs of family members in Uganda had been sent by Inkotanyis. Witness Q said he and his relatives were then beaten and kicked by the two men who were with the Accused, and he was hit with a small axe on his right hand. He said his brother-in-law was hit and wounded in the head. The witness displayed in court his right hand with a bent index finger, which he said had been broken from the beating when he raised his hand to ward off the blows. Witness Q testified that the Accused was present during this beating and watched it. He said the Accused was the one apparently responsible.

391. The other house-to-house searches referred to in the relevant paragraphs of the Indictment appear to have taken place on the next day and relate to the search by the Accused for Alexia, the wife of Pierre Ntereye, a university teacher. Witness N (Victim Y), a Hutu farmer, testified that she knew where Alexia was hiding. She said the Accused, whom she had known for two years, came to her house with three Interahamwe - Mugenzi, Francois and Singuranayo - at nine o'clock in the evening, the day after the meeting in the commune (i.e. 20 April), looking for Alexia. She said the Accused stayed in his vehicle, near the entrance of her home. The others broke down the door and pointed their guns at her, ordering her to show them the Inkotanyi hiding in her house. She said she told them to search the house, and one of them went to search while the other one stayed at the door. Witness N testified that Mugenzi, who was a communal police officer, took her by the arm to the door and hit her on her head with the barrel of his rifle. She said Francois, who had gone into the house, found a young girl whom he told to open her mouth. According to Witness N, Singuranayo then forced open her mouth and struck her with the barrel of the gun.

392. Witness N said that when she told them that she did not know where Alexia was, she was lifted by her arms and legs by the three men and taken outside to the Accused. She said the Accused told her to lie down, which she did. She said Mugenzi then stepped on her neck and pushed the butt of his rifle into her neck. She said he stomped on her with a lot of force, and that the Accused then hit her with a club on her back. When she shouted, she said the Accused told her to be quiet, calling her the mother-in-law of the Inkotanyi and a "poisonous woman." Witness N testified that they then took her in the vehicle to a partially opened mine at a place called Buguli. She said the Accused ordered her to lie down in front of the vehicle, got into the driver's seat and told her that he was going to run her over. Mugenzi told her to tell them where the people she was hiding were or they would kill her. She said she told them that she did not know and that they should kill her if they wanted. Witness N said Mugenzi then bound her arms and legs with a piece of cloth, pushed her to the ground and stomped on her with his foot. She said the others also joined in and stomped on her.

393. Witness N said she was then put in the vehicle and taken to the house of Ntereye's sisters. When they arrived, she said Francois called for Ntereye's niece Tabita (Victim W) and they questioned her. According to Witness N, the Accused remained in the vehicle and called Tabita from there. He asked her where Alexia was, and she said she did not know. Witness N testified that Tabita was then taken in the vehicle back to the mine. There, she said, they made her get out and told her to get in front of the vehicle. The Accused threatened to run her over and again asked her for the whereabouts of the people in question. She said Tabita was afraid and said that they had hidden in a sorghum field but that she did not know where they were. According to her testimony, Witness N was then told by the Accused that she was a "poisonous woman" and that she had hidden these people. She said they then began to strike her with their gun[s].

394. Witness N said that she and Tabita were then taken in the vehicle to a roadblock, where they picked up Victim Z, and they were then taken to Gishyeshye Sector. Witness N testified that she was at this time "almost dead" from the beating she had suffered. When they arrived, Witness N said she was thrown on the road, next to Victim Z, and they began to beat him with a club. She said the Accused then instructed Victim Z to beat her. She said Victim Z stood up and began to beat her, and that he beat her several times on her leg with a club. During this time, she testified that the Accused was standing next to them near the vehicle. Witness N said her hands were then tied in the back with a piece of cloth, the other end of which was used to strangle Victim Z. She said they tightened the cloth, and his eyes almost came out of their sockets. Victim Z then said that he thought he knew who had hidden Alexia. She said [they] then started hitting him again, very hard, and the Accused asked [him] to hit her hard, to make her talk. Witness N said she threatened to bite [him] if [he] continued to hit her.

395. Witness N testified that she was then taken in the vehicle with Victim Z to a roadblock and there they picked up a person identified as Victim V(Witness A). She said they were taken to Victim V's house, where they were taken out of the vehicle and thrown on the ground. According to the testimony, they started beating Victim Z again with the club and they also beat Victim V and told him to bring out the person he was hiding. Victim V said he was not hiding anybody. On direct examination, Witness N said the Accused told Victim V to raise his arms so that they could shoot him. On cross-examination, Witness N testified that Mugenzi told Victim V to raise his arms so that they could shoot him. She said they did not shoot him, and that the Accused told Victim V that they would continue searching for Alexia and that if they did not find her he would have to die.

396. Witness N testified that as a result of the beatings she received, her arm is limp. She said that she can no longer walk as she did before and that she needs help to get dressed. She testified that she can no longer work on the farm. The Trial Chamber notes that Witness N walked with difficulty, aided by a walking stick.

397. Witness C (Victim Z), a Hutu farmer, testified that he knew Alexia, that she was a Tutsi teacher and the wife of Ntereye. He said that she hid in his house during April 1994 and that she had come to his house because she realized that he had not participated in the killings. Witness C testified that some Interahamwe came to his house while he was out harvesting coffee. He said one of his children came to look for him after the child had been beaten and asked where Alexia was. Witness C returned to his house and found the Interahamwe at the entrance, carrying machetes and clubs. He said some also had grenades. According to the testimony, the Interahamwe surrounded Witness C and accused him of hiding Alexia. Witness C said that Alexia was not in his house, and one of them started beating him on his back with the blunt side of a machete. He said he then told them that Alexia sometimes hid in his house and sometimes in another person's house. They continued to beat him, and Witness C testified that when he realized that he was about to be killed he said that Alexia was in another [room]. He said the Interahamwe took him to Victim Y's house, and when they arrived they continued beating him. He said they asked Victim Y where Alexia was, and she said that Alexia had gone to her husband's relatives. Witness C said that the Interahamwe then left the house, taking him with them, and after a distance released him, saying that they had from him what they needed.

398. Witness C (Victim Z) testified that one week after this incident, while participating in a night patrol, he saw the Accused, whom he had known for a long time, with three Interahamwes, Victim Y (Witness N) and Tabita, the niece of Ntereye, in a white twin cab. He said the Accused was driving and stopped at the roadblock, got out of his car and told the Interahamwe that they should bring Witness C to him. He said the Accused told him to get into the vehicle, which he did, and they drove to the forest. In the middle of the forest, Witness C said they stopped and asked him to get out and lie down in front of the vehicle. He said the Accused then stepped on his face, causing his lips to bleed, and kept his foot on Witness C's face while two of the Interahamwe - Francois and Mugenzi - began to beat him with the butt of their guns. During this time, he said he was asked repeatedly where Alexia was hiding.

399. Witness C said that during the beating, Victim Y(Witness N), who was in the vehicle, urged him to tell them where Alexia was, and when he realized that they were going to kill him, he told them that she was at his home. Concerned that they would find her there, Witness C said he then told them she was somewhere else and Victim Y told them that Victim V could advise them of her whereabouts. Witness C testified that he was then made to sit next to Victim Y and they were bound together, side by side, with a rope by the Interahamwe Mugenzi. He said the rope was put around his neck. Under cross-examination, Witness C clarified that the rope was in fact a piece of cloth that he had been wearing. When he began to vomit, Witness C said they were untied and the Accused then told them to get back into the vehicle. Witness C also testified on examination that he was asked by Francois to hit Victim Y and given a cudgel, with which he struck her once on the leg. He said he was told to tell Victim Y to tell them where Alexia was hiding. After this, Witness C testified that the Accused told them to get back into the vehicle and they were taken to the roadblock.

400. At the roadblock, Witness C testified that they picked up Victim V and the Accused drove them to Victim V's house. When they arrived, he said the Accused asked his Interahamwes to search the house. He said two of them went in and came back, saying that Alexia was not in the house. According to Witness C, the Accused then told Victim V twice to step aside and raise his arms in the air so that they could shoot at him. One of the Interahamwe told him a third time to raise his arms so that they could shoot him. Witness C said they did not shoot at Victim V, but they again beat him, Witness C, on the back with the blunt side of a machete. He said they were then asked to get back in the vehicle and went near the home of Victim Y, who was dropped off. They continued, he said, dropping one Interahamwe off at a roadblock and stopping at another roadblock, where the members of Ntereye's family had been arrested. Witness C testified that the Accused asked them to get in the vehicle - a woman, three children and three men. He said they then went to a commercial center near Remera Rukoma, and the people were taken to a prison there. Witness C and Victim V were left to wait in the vehicle while the Accused, Francois and Mugenzi went to drink beer at a place about fifteen feet from the vehicle. From the vehicle, Witness C testified that he heard the Accused say to the Interahamwe "I do not think that what we are doing is proper. We are going to have to pay for this blood that is being shed." After the Accused and the Interahamwe drank beer and returned to the vehicle, Witness C said they were taken near the school of Remera Rukoma, dropped off there and told to be at the office the next morning at 7:00.

401. Witness C showed the Trial Chamber the scars he said he had from this beating, on the left side of his back. He said that he did not have scars on his lips but that he did have wounds on his head and a scar on his nose. He testified that he has continuing health problems such as a bleeding nose and pains in his head, and that his body is no longer what it was before.

402. Witness A (Victim V), a Hutu man, testified that he knew Alexia and that he was the person who had found the hiding place for her. He said he saw the Accused, whom he had known for ten years and worked with, one night while he was on patrol, sometime between 7:00 and 9:00. He said the Accused was alone in a white pickup truck, and while they were talking, he saw people, including the Interahamwe Francois and a commune police officer, coming from the house of an elderly woman, who lived near him. He said they put this woman in the vehicle and took her to the forest, and shouts were heard as they beat her. Later, he said the Accused came back and took away another of his neighbours who was doing the night patrol, and he also heard this person crying out as he was being beaten. Witness A said they came back and picked him up and went to his house. He said the Accused was driving the vehicle. He said they came into his house and searched for people they said were hiding there, in particular Alexia. Witness A said they had guns, and that after they searched the house they took him and the others to the gate of the house, and the commune police officer and Francois began to beat them with the butt of a rifle and a stick, asking them where Alexia was. At this time, he said the Accused was standing next to them and watching. He said when they discovered that Alexia was not in the house, they stopped the beating and put them in the vehicle. He said they released the elderly woman and sent her back to her house, and they continued to detain him and Victim Z.

403. Witness A testified that near his house, they found nine people from families who had been stopped by night patrols. He said these people were presented to the Accused who put them in the vehicle and took them to a prison near Remera Hospital. He said the Accused and Francois went to have drinks and he was left in the vehicle with Victim Z and a young girl, guarded by the commune police officer. Afterwards, he said they went back to the bureau communal and on the way the Accused told them to go home but come back to the bureau communal early the next morning. At this time, he said it was approximately 2:00 in the morning. On cross-examination, Witness A said that he did not sustain serious injuries from the beatings apart from a broken rib which was treated.

404. The Accused testified that after Ntereye was killed on 10 May 1994, people were saying that they still did not know where his wife was. The Accused said he knew that she was being sought, and he said he was determined to save her. He said that Ntereye had told him that she was going from house to house. He said he found an Interahamwe called Francois and told him that he had someone to save. He said he asked Francois to help him for a price and gave him twenty thousand. He said he then went to Ntereye's sister's house and found his niece who told him that Alexia was living in the house of an elderly woman. He said he knew her to be a tough old lady and asked the niece to come with him to reassure her. He said they left - himself, a police officer and Francois. He said they called for the lady and she came, and he spoke to her. He said she told him that Alexia had been there but left and gone to Kayenzi. He said when he asked her whether she was telling the truth, she told him "I cannot lie because you are going to do good for Alexia and then I have also heard that you tried to save Ntereye." He said he left with the niece and drove to Buguli and that he spoke to her and her sisters, warning them not to let the children go outside because they would be killed. In his testimony, the Accused then moved on to other events. The Accused later testified that when he went to look for Alexia, there were two or three people at the roadblock near the home of the old lady, but that neither Victim V nor Victim Z was there, and he did not see them on this occasion. He testified that Victim Y, Victim Z and Victim V were known to him. He also said there were no mines in Buguli.

Factual Findings

405. The Chamber finds that on 19 April 1994, Victim U (Witness K) was threatened by the Accused at the bureau communal. She went to the bureau communal because she had been summoned there by the Accused. She was questioned by the Accused in the presence of men whom she had just seen killing Tutsi at the bureau communal. In response to a question from the killers, Victim U heard the Accused tell them that she would be killed after she was questioned about the secrets of the Inkotanyi. The Accused then questioned Victim U and threatened that she would be killed if she did not divulge information about her cooperation with the Inkotanyi. The Accused then locked Victim U in her office and left. When he returned in the afternoon, he resumed questioning Victim U and again threatened that she would be killed if she did not provide information about the Inkotanyi. He left again and returned at midnight with a police officer. The Accused asked her whether she would tell them what she knew and when she said she knew nothing, he said, "I wash my hands of your blood." He then asked the driver and the police to accompany her home.

406. The Chamber found Victim U to be a very credible witness whose testimony was not marked by anger or hostility and whose testimony was confirmed under cross-examination. The Chamber notes that the Accused in his testimony confirmed the presence of Victim U at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994. The Chamber does not accept his explanation of her presence there or his actions. If he intended to protect her, as he suggested, why did he take her key from her, why did he question her about the Inkotanyi, and why did he leave her there until midnight? The Accused did not address any of these questions or specifically deny that he did any of these things. He did not even deny specifically that he told the others in her presence that she would be killed after questioning or that he threatened her when he questioned her. The Chamber notes that there is no evidence to suggest that the Accused threatened the husband or child of Victim U.

407. With regard to the allegations set forth in paragraph 17 of the Indictment, the Chamber is unable to find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the Accused ordered the interrogation and beating of Victim X (Witness U) on 19 April 1994. The evidence presented in support of the allegation relies entirely on a single witness, the credibility of whom the Defence has successfully challenged. In cross-examination, the Defence questioned Witness Q regarding the details of the incident at his father's home, as they had been described by him in his pre-trial written statement. When asked about his prior statement that the Accused had been accompanied by two policemen rather than one, Witness Q explained that one of the policeman was from Taba and the other from Musambira. He said the second policeman had remained on the main road, and he had not actually seen this policeman which is why he did not mention him in his testimony. When asked about his prior statement that the Accused was armed rather than unarmed, Witness Q said that he had said that the Accused was wearing a military jacket and that he had heard that another policeman had a gun. When asked about his prior statement that he had been beaten by a policeman with a metal bar, Witness Q said that he was beaten by a man in civilian clothes, whom he assumed was a policeman because he was carrying a grenade. He said he was beaten with a metal instrument which had a pointed end. When asked about his prior statement that the Accused arrived in a red Toyota and that he saw a man lying in the rear seat of the vehicle with his hands tied, Witness Q said that he did not see the man in the back seat but that he heard about him. He said he did not see the vehicle as it was 500 meters away, but that he had heard that it was red.

408. While the Chamber has been cautious in allowing the contents of pre-trial written statements to impeach the testimony of witnesses before it, in this case the inconsistencies between the testimony and the written statement of Victim X are many and too significant to justify a finding of credibility without corroboration of other testimony. The Chamber notes that even if it were to accept the testimony of Victim X in full, it would not be able to find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the Accused ordered the interrogation and beating of Victim X. The witness testified that the Accused was present and watched the beatings, but there is no evidence that he gave any orders. There is only evidence that words were spoken in French. No evidence has been presented as to what was said and by whom.

409. With regard to the search for Alexia, wife of Ntereye, the Chamber finds that at on the evening of 20 April 1994, the Accused went with two Interahamwe named Francois and Singuranayo and one communal police officer named Mugenzi to the house of Victim Y (Witness N), a [68] year old woman at the time. Mugenzi took her by the arm to the door and hit her on the head with the barrel of his rifle. Victim Y was then forcibly taken to the Accused, who ordered her to lie down. In the presence of the Accused, Victim Y was beaten by the communal police officer Mugenzi who stepped on her neck, pushed the butt of his rifle into her neck, and stomped on her. Victim Y was also beaten by the Accused, who hit her with a club on her back. She was interrogated by Mugenzi and the Accused about the whereabouts of Alexia, the wife of Ntereye, a university professor. She was then taken to Buguli, where the Accused made her lie down in front of the vehicle and threatened to run her over. At the mine, in the presence of the Accused, she was also threatened and interrogated by Mugenzi, who bound her arms and legs and stomped on her with his foot. The others stomped on her as well.

410. Later that night, the Accused picked up Tabita (Victim W) and interrogated her also about the whereabouts of Alexia, the wife of Ntereye. She was then taken in the vehicle back to the mine. She was asked to get in front of the vehicle, and the Accused threatened to run her over and again interrogated her about the whereabouts of Alexia.

411. Thereafter, on the same evening, the Accused picked up Victim Z (Witness C) and took him to a forest in Gishyeshye Sector, where the Accused stepped on his face, causing his lips to bleed, and kept his foot on Victim Z's face while the Interahamwe Francois and the commune police officer Mugenzi beat him with the butt of their guns. Victim Z was tied to Victim Y with a piece of cloth by Mugenzi, which was used to choke him. Victim Z was also forced by Francois to beat Victim Y with a cudgel he was given. During this time, Victim Z was interrogated, but it is unclear who actually did the interrogation.

412. Following the interrogation of Victim Y and Victim Z, the Accused picked up Victim V at a roadblock and took him, with Victim Y and Victim Z, to his house, which was searched by Interahamwe at the direction of the Accused. The Accused then told Victim V to raise his arms in the air and threatened to shoot him. In the presence of the Accused, Victim V was then beaten under interrogation by the Interahamwe Francois and the commune police officer Mugenzi with the butt of a rifle and a stick. Victim Z was beaten on the back with the blunt side of a machete. Victim Y, Victim Z and Victim V were then taken away in the vehicle and, after Victim Y was released near her home, Victim Z and Victim V were kept in the vehicle while the Accused and the others drank beer. Victim Z and Victim V were released at approximately 2:00 in the morning.

413. As a result of the beatings, Victim Y has trouble walking. Victim Z has scars on his back and continuing health problems. Victim V sustained a broken rib from the beatings.

414. The Chamber notes that the testimony of Witness N, Witness C and Witness A closely correlate in all material respects and even with regard to minor details. There were very few inconsistencies, of an extremely minor nature. Witness N said, for example, that Victim Z (Witness C) was beaten with a club. Victim Z testified that he was beaten with the butt of a gun. It is clear that there was a club, as it was used by Victim Z to hit Victim Y (Witness N) when he was forced to do so. It is understandable that Victim Y may have therefore mistaken the instrument used on Victim Z. Victim Z initially testified that he was tied to Victim Y with a rope, whereas Victim Y testified that it was a piece of cloth. On cross-examination, however, Victim Z clarified that in fact it was a piece of cloth that was used.

415. The Chamber finds these facts have been established beyond a reasonable doubt. In making its factual findings, the Chamber has carefully considered the cross-examination by the Defence of Prosecution witnesses and the evidence presented by the Defence in the form of testimony by the Accused. With regard to cross-examination, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution witnesses substantially confirmed their direct testimony. In his testimony, the Accused confirmed that he picked up the niece of Ntereye, with the Interahamwe Francois and his police officer, and went with her to the house of Victim Y. He confirmed that he drove with Ntereye's niece to Buguli, stating only that there were no mines in Buguli. The Accused also confirmed that he was looking for Alexia, the wife of Ntereye, but he maintained that he was determined to save her. He said that he paid Francois to help him in this effort. The Accused testified that he did not see Victim Z or Victim V at the roadblock near the home of Victim Y, although they all testified that they saw him and each other. According to the testimony of the Accused, the search for Alexia took place after the death of Ntereye on 10 May 1994. All the prosecution witnesses, however, date this search to 20 April 1994. The Defence in its cross-examination did not question the evidence given by the Prosecution witnesses about the date. The Accused also testified that when he spoke to Victim Y, she said "I cannot lie because you are going to do good for Alexia and then I have also heard that you tried to save Ntereye." Having heard Victim Y's (Witness N's) testimony, the Chamber finds it highly unlikely that she would have made such a statement and notes that the statement was not put to her by the Defence on cross-examination, in which the Accused himself participated. Moreover, the Accused's account of his efforts to find and save Alexia simply tapered off in his testimony, without any explanation as to whether he continued the search or gave it up and if so, why. The Chamber also notes the testimony of Witness PP, which it has accepted as credible, that when Alexia and her nieces were brought to the bureau communal, the Accused said to the Interahamwe, "Take them to Kinihira. Don't you know where killings take place, where the others have been killed?" The actions of the Accused were incompatible with a desire to save Alexia, and the Chamber does not accept the testimony of the Accused on these events as credible.

5.5 Sexual Violence (Paragraphs 12A & 12B of the Indictment)

Charges Set Forth in the Indictment

> 12A. Between April 7 and the end of June, 1994, hundreds of civilians (hereinafter "displaced civilians") sought refuge at the bureau communal. The majority of these displaced civilians were Tutsi. While seeking refuge at the bureau communal, female displaced civilians were regularly taken by armed local militia and/or communal police and subjected to sexual violence, and/or beaten on or near the bureau communal premises. Displaced civilians were also murdered frequently on or near the bureau communal premises. Many women were forced to endure multiple acts of sexual violence which were at times committed by more than one assailant. These acts of sexual violence were generally accompanied by explicit threats of death or bodily harm. The female displaced civilians lived in constant fear and their physical and psychological health deteriorated as a result of the sexual violence and beatings and killings.
> 12B. Jean Paul Akayesu knew that the acts of sexual violence, beatings and murders were being committed and was at times present during their commission. Jean Paul Akayesu facilitated the commission of the sexual violence, beatings and murders by allowing the sexual violence and beatings and murders to occur on or near the bureau communal premises. By virtue of his presence during the commission of the sexual violence, beatings and murders and by failing to prevent the sexual violence, beatings and murders, Jean Paul Akayesu encouraged these activities.

Events Alleged

416. Allegations of sexual violence first came to the attention of the Chamber through the testimony of Witness J, a Tutsi woman, who stated that her six year-old daughter had been raped by three Interahamwe when they came to kill her father. On examination by the Chamber, Witness J also testified that she had heard that young girls were raped at the bureau communal. Subsequently, Witness H, a Tutsi woman, testified that she herself was raped in a sorghum field and that, just outside the compound of the bureau communal, she personally saw other Tutsi women being raped and knew of at least three such cases of rape by Interahamwe. Witness H testified initially that the Accused, as well as commune police officers, were present while this was happening and did nothing to prevent the rapes. However, on examination by the Chamber as to whether Akayesu was aware that the rapes were going on, she responded that she didn't know, but that it happened at the bureau communal and he knew that the women were there. Witness H stated that some of the rapes occurred in the bush area nearby but that some of them occurred "on site". On examination by the Chamber, she said that the Accused was present during one of the rapes, but she could not confirm that he saw what was happening. While Witness H expressed the view that the Interahamwe acted with impunity and should have been prevented by the commune police and the Accused from committing abuses, she testified that no orders were given to the Interahamwe to rape. She also testified that she herself was beaten but not raped at the bureau communal.

417. On 17 June 1997, the Indictment was amended to include allegations of sexual violence and additional charges against the Accused under Article 3(g),Article 3(i) and Article 4(2)(e) of the ICTR Statute. In introducing this amendment, the Prosecution stated that the testimony of Witness H motivated them to renew their investigation of sexual violence in connection with events which took place in Taba at the bureau communal. The Prosecution stated that evidence previously available was not sufficient to link the Accused to acts of sexual violence and acknowledged that factors to explain this lack of evidence might include the shame that accompanies acts of sexual violence as well as insensitivity in the investigation of sexual violence. The Chamber notes that the Defence in its closing statement questioned whether the Indictment was amended in response to public pressure concerning the prosecution of sexual violence. The Chamber understands that the amendment of the Indictment resulted from the spontaneous testimony of sexual violence by Witness J and Witness H during the course of this trial and the subsequent investigation of the Prosecution, rather than from public pressure. Nevertheless, the Chamber takes note of the interest shown in this issue by non-governmental organizations, which it considers as indicative of public concern over the historical exclusion of rape and other forms of sexual violence from the investigation and prosecution of war crimes. The investigation and presentation of evidence relating to sexual violence is in the interest of justice.

418. Following the amendment of the Indictment, Witness JJ, a Tutsi woman, testified about the events which took place in Taba after the plane crash. She that she was driven away from her home, which was destroyed by her Hutu neighbours who attacked her and her family after a man came to the hill near where she lived and said that the bourgmestre had sent him so that no Tutsi would remain on the hill that night. Witness JJ saw her Tutsi neighbours killed and she fled, seeking refuge in a nearby forest with her baby on her back and her younger sister, who had been wounded in the attack by a blow with an axe and two machete cuts. As she was being chased everywhere she went, Witness JJ said she went to the bureau communal. There she found more than sixty refugees down the road and on the field nearby. She testified that most of the refugees were women and children.

419. Witness JJ testified that the refugees at the bureau communal had been beaten by the Interahamwe and were lying on the ground when she arrived. Witness JJ encountered four Interahamwe outside the bureau communal, armed with knives, clubs, small axes and small hoes. That afternoon, she said, approximately forty more Interahamwe came and beat the refugees, including Witness JJ. At this time she said she saw the Accused, standing in the courtyard of the communal office, with two communal police officers who were armed with guns, one of whom was called Mushumba. Witness JJ said she was beaten on the head, the ribs and the right leg, which left her disabled. That evening, she said, the Accused came with a policeman to look for refugees and ordered the Interahamwe to beat them up, calling them "wicked, wicked people" and saying they "no longer had a right to shelter." The refugees were then beaten and chased away. Witness JJ said she was beaten by the policeman Mushumna, who hit her with the butt of his gun just behind her ear.

420. Witness JJ testified that she spent the night in the rain in a field. The next day she said she returned to the bureau communal and went to the Accused, in a group of ten people representing the refugees, who asked that they be killed as the others had been because they were so tired of it all. She said the Accused told them that there were no more bullets and that he had gone to look for more in Gitarama but they had not yet been made available. He asked his police officers to chase them away and said that even if there were bullets they would not waste them on the refugees. As the refugees saw that death would be waiting for them anywhere else, Witness JJ testified they stayed at the bureau communal.

421. Witness JJ testified that often the Interahamwe came to beat the refugees during the day, and that the policemen came to beat them at night. She also testified that the Interahamwe took young girls and women from their site of refuge near the bureau communal into a forest in the area and raped them. Witness JJ testified that this happened to her - that she was stripped of her clothing and raped in front of other people. At the request of the Prosecutor and with great embarrassment, she explicitly specified that the rapist, a young man armed with an axe and a long knife, penetrated her vagina with his penis. She stated that on this occasion she was raped twice. Subsequently, she told the Chamber, on a day when it was raining, she was taken by force from near the bureau communal into the cultural center within the compound of the bureau communal, in a group of approximately fifteen girls and women. In the cultural center, according to Witness JJ, they were raped. She was raped twice by one man. Then another man came to where she was lying and he also raped her. A third man then raped her, she said, at which point she described herself as feeling near dead. Witness JJ testified that she was at a later time dragged back to the cultural center in a group of approximately ten girls and women and they were raped. She was raped again, two times. Witness JJ testified that she could not count the total number of times she was raped. She said, "each time you encountered attackers they would rape you," - in the forest, in the sorghum fields. Witness JJ related to the Chamber the experience of finding her sister before she died, having been raped and cut with a machete.

422. Witness JJ testified that when they arrived at the bureau communal the women were hoping the authorities would defend them but she was surprised to the contrary. In her testimony she recalled lying in the cultural center, having been raped repeatedly by Interahamwe, and hearing the cries of young girls around her, girls as young as twelve or thirteen years old. On the way to the cultural center the first time she was raped there, Witness JJ said that she and the others were taken past the Accused and that he was looking at them. The second time she was taken to the cultural center to be raped, Witness JJ recalled seeing the Accused standing at the entrance of the cultural center and hearing him say loudly to the Interahamwe, "Never ask me again what a Tutsi woman tastes like," and "Tomorrow they will be killed" (Ntihazagire umbaza uko umututsikazi yari ameze, ngo kandi mumenye ko ejo ngo nibabica nta kintu muzambaza. Ngo ejo bazabica). According to Witness JJ, most of the girls and women were subsequently killed, either brought to the river and killed there, after having returned to their houses, or killed at the bureau communal. Witness JJ testified that she never saw the Accused rape anyone, but she like Witness H, believed that he had the means to prevent the rapes from taking place and never even tried to do so. In describing the Accused and the statement he made regarding the taste of Tutsi women, she said he was "talking as if someone were encouraging a player" (Yavugaga nk'ubwiriza umukinnyi) and suggested that he was the one "supervising" the acts of rape. Witness JJ said she did not witness any killings at the bureau communal, although she saw dead bodies there.

423. When Witness JJ fled from the bureau communal, she left her one year-old child with a Hutu man and woman, who said they had milk for the child and subsequently killed him. Witness JJ spoke of the heavy sorrow the war had caused her. She testified to the humiliation she felt as a mother, by the public nudity and being raped in the presence of children by young men. She said that just thinking about it made the war come alive inside of her. Witness JJ told the Chamber that she had remarried but that her life had never been the same because of the beatings and rapes she suffered. She said the pain in her ribs prevents her from farming because she can no longer use a hoe, and she used to live on the food that she could grow.

424. Witness OO, a young Tutsi woman, testified that she and her family sought refuge at the bureau communal in April 1994 and encountered many other Tutsi refugees there, on the road outside the compound. While she was there, she said, some Interahamwe arrived and started killing people with machetes. She and two other girls tried to flee but were stopped by the Interahamwe who went back and told the Accused that they were taking the girls away to "sleep with" them. Witness OO told the Chamber that standing five meters away from the Accused, she heard him say in reply, "take them". She said she was then separated from the other girls and taken to a field by one Interahamwe called Antoine. When she refused to sit down, he pushed her to the ground and put his "sex" into hers, clarifying on examination that he penetrated her vagina with his penis. When she started to cry, she said he warned her that if she cried or shouted, others might come and kill her.

425. According to Witness OO, Antoine left her in the field and returned that night to take her to the house of a woman called Zimba, where she spent three nights. On the fourth night, she said Antoine returned and took her to another Interahamwe called Emanuel. She said that Antoine did the same thing he had done before to her, and that Emanuel followed him in turn. Witness OO told the Chamber she spent three days and nights at the house of Emanuel where every day she was sexually violated by both Antoine and Emanuel. Afterwards, she said she was chased away by them.

426. Witness OO returned to the bureau communal when she heard that an order had been given to stop the killing of women and children, but after hearing the Accused, Kubwimana and Ruvugama all call for the killing of Tutsi, she left and went back into hiding. Subsequently, she and her seven year-old sister were apprehended by Interahamwe and taken to a roadblock. Her sister and two other people were imprisoned overnight and killed in the morning. At the time of these events, Witness OO was fifteen years old. When asked how it was that the Accused had the authority to protect her from rape, Witness OO replied that if he had told the Interahamwe not to take her from the bureau communal, they would have listened to him because he was the bourgmestre. Witness OO was unable to identify the Accused in the courtroom. She told the Chamber that someone had pointed him out to her at the bureau communal as the bourgmestre but that she had not looked at him closely and that it had been a long time ago.

427. Witness KK, a Hutu woman married to a Tutsi man, also sought refuge at the bureau communal in Taba after her home was destroyed. She testified that the Tutsi refugees there were beaten often by the police and the Accused, whom she described as "supervising." She recalled the Accused publicly name a teacher called Tharcisse as an accomplice and send the police to find him. They brought Tharcisse and his wife and made them sit in the mud. With the Accused standing nearby they then killed Tharcisse. They took off his wife's clothing and told her to go and die somewhere else. Witness KK testified that on the same day, on the orders of the Accused, the Interahamwe brought teachers from Remera, who were also forced to sit in the mud. She said they started by clubbing a young teacher who had been brought with his fiancee, and that during this time the Accused was walking around and supervising the police, who were beating refugees. The teachers were critically wounded with small hoes and taken in a wheelbarrow to a mass grave, many still breathing, left to die a slow death.

428. Witness KK testified that her husband was beaten at the bureau communal and injured on the head. After escaping, he was captured by Interahamwe, and Witness KK received a message from him requesting to speak to her before he died. She found him behind the bureau communal with Interahamwes armed with clubs and spears, who then took him away between the two buildings of the bureau communal. She learned later that he was killed. Witness KK later went to the Accused and asked him for an attestation to help her keep her children alive. She said he replied that it was not he who had made them be born Tutsi and that "when rats are killed you don't spare rats that are still in the form of fetus." Witness KK testified that she had been pregnant and miscarried after being beaten by police and Interahamwe. Of her nine children, only two survived the events of this period.

429. Witness KK also recalled seeing women and girls selected and taken away to the cultural center at the bureau communal by Interahamwes who said they were going to "sleep with" these women and girls Witness KK testified regarding an incident in which the Accused told the Interahamwe to undress a young girl named Chantal, whom he knew to be a gymnast, so that she could do gymnastics naked. The Accused told Chantal, who said she was Hutu, that she must be a Tutsi because he knew her father to be a Tutsi. As Chantal was forced to march around naked in front of many people, Witness KK testified that the Accused was laughing and happy with this. Afterwards, she said he told the Interahamwes to take her away and said "you should first of all make sure that you sleep with this girl." (Ngo kandi nababwiye ko muzajya mubanza mukirwanaho mukarongora abo bakobwa.) Witness KK also testified regarding the rape of Tutsi women married to Hutu men. She described, after leaving the bureau communal, encountering on the road a man and woman who had been killed. She said the woman, whom she knew to be a Tutsi married to a Hutu, was "not exactly dead" and still in agony. She describec the Interahamwes forcing a piece of wood into the woman's sexual organs while she was still breathing, before she died. In most cases, Witness KK said that Tutsi women married to Hutu men "were left alone because it was said that these women deliver Hutu children." She said that there were Hutu men who married Tutsi women to save them, but that these women were sought, taken away forcibly and killed. She said that she never saw the Accused rape a woman.

430. Witness NN, a Tutsi woman and the younger sister of JJ, described being raped along with another sister by two men in the courtyard of their home, just after it was destroyed by their Hutu neighbours and her brother and father had been killed. Witness NN said one of the men told her that the girls had been spared so that they could be raped. She said her mother begged the men, who were armed with bludgeons and machetes, to kill her daughters rather than rape them in front of her, and the man replied that the "principle was to make them suffer" and the girls were then raped. Witness NN confirmed on examination that the man who raped her penetrated her vagina with his penis, saying he did it in an "atrocious" manner, mocking and taunting them. She said her sister was raped by the other man at the same time, near her, so that they could each see what was happening to the other. Afterwards, she said she begged for death.

431. According to the testimony of Witness NN, after these men left, two other men who were neighbours came and one of them raped her, while the other took her sister a little further away and raped her sister. She recalled that the neighbour said that marriage had been refused to them, but now they were going to sleep with the girls without penalty (peine). She said the men left afterwards, warning the girls that they would kill them if they did not stay where they were. That evening, she said two other younger men, around the age of 15 or 16, came and asked them to "teach them because they didn't know how it was done". After these two men raped the girls, Witness NN said their mother asked her daughters to leave rather than continue to be tortured in front of her. The girls left and went into hiding with a relative.

432. After hiding for a week and one half, Witness NN said she heard that Akayesu had stopped the killings, and she went with her sister towards the bureau communal. On the way, having taken a different route from her sister, Witness NN said she met two men who said they would accompany her to the bureau communal and that they had been given orders by the bourgmestre. She said the two men then took her a short distance away and raped her, each of them in turn, leaving her there afterwards lying naked. Subsequently, she said four men herding cattle came upon her, and two of them raped her. These incidents took place in the countryside, not very far from the bureau communal, according to Witness NN. After the rapes, Witness NN said she could not move - she was unable to get up and unable to dress herself. She said her sister found her and brought her some ghee to put in her lower parts to relieve the muscles. When she was able to get up, Witness NN said she continued on her way to the bureau communal with her sister.

433. Witness NN estimated that she arrived at the bureau communal some time in the beginning of May, and she said she found about three hundred refugees there, mostly women and children. The morning after she arrived, she said she saw the Accused with a towel around his neck, moving to the place where two Interahamwes were driving a woman to rape her, between the bureau communal and the cultural center. She said she saw the Accused standing watching the men drag the woman and later on he entered the office. She said she saw the Interahamwe circle this woman and saw them on top of her but did not see them penetrate her. She also said there were many refugees watching while this was happening. During the rape, she said there were two commune policemen who were in front of the office of the bourgmestre, one called Mushumba and one called Nsengiyumva who was in plain clothes. She said they did nothing to prevent the rape from happening and that the Accused did nothing as well - only watched and entered his office. She said after the rape she saw that the naked woman was hungry and cold, and the woman was pregnant. She said she was told by an Interahamwe that the woman died at the bureau communal. Witness NN said she did not see anyone raped inside the cultural center but that the Interahamwe did come at night and take some girls away.

434. Two days after arriving at the bureau communal, Witness NN recounted seeing an Interahamwe called Rafiki, whom she had known previously and who had previously told her that he wanted to live with her. When he saw her at the bureau communal, she said he told her that he was going to rape her and not marry her. She said Rafiki took her to his home not far from the bureau communal and locked her up there for two days, during which time he raped her repeatedly day and night, a total of approximately six times. She said often when he came to rape her, he had been smoking herbs or drinking alcohol. When she returned to the bureau communal, Witness NN said she found her sister, who told her that she also had been raped again, at the bureau communal. Witness NN testified that her sister was hungry and cold, and could not move. Her sister died and when they went to bury her, they found her body had been eaten by dogs.

435. Witness NN said she saw the Accused often at the bureau communal and that she heard him tell police to remove the refugees, citing one occasion where a policeman named Mushuba beat and chased them away after receiving such an order from the Accused. She also recalled seeing the Accused when Ntereye was taken from the prison and killed. She did not witness this killing but heard a gunshot and later saw the corpse of Nteyere, his head crushed as if by a hammer. Subsequently, Witness NN said on two consecutive days she was taken with a group of several hundred people, mostly women and children, to a hole near the bureau communal where the Interahamwe were intending to kill them with a grenade. The first day they were apparently unable to find a grenade. On the second day, they were beaten and brought back to the hole. At that time Witness NN said Rafiki, the Interahamwe who had locked her in his house, took her out of the group and said that she was his wife. According to her testimony, the Interahamwe then started stabbing the group of people, beating them with machetes and throwing them into the hole while she was standing by. Witness NN said she closed her eyes but could hear people crying and shouting. She estimated that the killing of the group took twenty minutes, and recalled feeling as if she were dead, apart from the fact that she was still breathing.

436. Witness NN said she was then taken by the younger brother of Rafiki back to his home where she stayed for one week. While she was there, she said she was locked up by Rafiki, who gave the key to other young men who came and "slept with" her, which she explained meant that they took their "sex" and put it into hers. She did not recall how many times this happened, stating that they came every day but that sometimes they did not rape her. After a week, Witness NN told the Chamber that she ran away and hid in the bush. Witness NN expressed the opinion in her testimony that the Accused had the power to oppose the killings and rapes and that by not giving refuge to anybody at the bureau communal, he authorized the rapes which took place. She testified that as a result of the rapes she has had recurring vaginal discharge and pain which require treatment in hospital.

437. Witness PP, a Tutsi woman married to a Hutu man, lived very near the bureau communal. Witness PP testified that she saw three women - Alexia, the wife of Ntereye, and her two nieces Nishimwe and Louise - raped and killed at Kinihira, a basin near the bureau communal. Witness PP said that the women were brought by the Interahamwe, at the direction of the Accused, in a vehicle of the bureau communal driven by Mutabaruka, the driver of the commune of Taba. She said she first saw the women in the vehicle at the bureau communal, where she heard the Accused say to the Interahamwe, "Take them to Kinihira. Don't you know where killings take place, where the others have been killed?" According to Witness PP, who then went to Kinihira herself, the three women were forced by the Interahamwe to undress and told to walk, run and perform exercises "so that they could display the thighs of Tutsi women." All this took place, she said, in front of approximately two hundred people. After this, she said the women were raped. She described in particular detail the rape of Alexia by Interahamwe who threw her to the ground and climbed on top of her saying "Now, let's see what the vagina of a Tutsi woman feels like." According to Witness PP, Alexia gave the Interahamwe named Pierre her Bible before he raped her and told him, "Take this Bible because it's our memory, because you do not know what you're doing." Then one person held her neck, others took her by the shoulders and others held her thighs apart as numerous Interahamwe continued to rape her - Bongo after Pierre, and Habarurena after Bongo. According to the testimony, Alexia was pregnant. When she became weak she was turned over and lying on her stomach, she went into premature delivery during the rapes. Witness PP testified that the Interahamwe then went on to rape Nishimwe, a young girl, and recalled lots of blood coming from her private parts after several men raped her. Louise was then raped by several Interahamwe while others held her down, and after the rapes, according to the testimony, all three women were placed on their stomachs and hit with sticks and killed.

438. Witness PP said that no one tried to rape her because they did not know which ethnic group she belonged to. She also said she was protected from rape by an Interahamwe named Bongo because she had given him a sandwich and tea, and he told the other Interahamwe not to harm her. Witness PP testified that some women and children were able to escape from the bureau communal in April 1994 but that they had to "sacrifice themselves" in order to survive. By sacrifice she said she meant that they submitted to rape and she said that she helped to care for one of these women who subsequently came to her house for a week. On cross-examination, Witness PP described her encounter with a woman called Vestine, whom she had rescued from the pit at Kinihira where people were being thrown and where Vestine had just given birth. Witness PP said she brought Vestine to stay in the house of Emmanuel, a man she knew, and when she went back two days later, he told her that Vestine had been taken by an Interahamwe called Habarurena to a sorghum field in a place known as Kanyinya. According to Witness PP, Habarurena kept Vestine in the sorghum field for a week and raped her repeatedly. When she next saw Vestine there was a liquid flowing from her private parts and Vestine told her, "I think it would be better to go Kinihira to be killed." The next day Witness PP said she saw Vestine being raped, together with other women, and there was nothing she could do. On the following day, from the church where she went to pray, Witness PP said she saw Vestine being killed with a machete, by an Interahamwe called Bongo, and thrown into the pit, having been brought back there by the Interahamwe Habarurena.

439. Defence Witness DBB, a former student of the Accused currently in detention in Rwanda, testified that he went to the bureau communal on the 17 April 1994. Thereafter he went into hiding during the massacres and did not go to the bureau communal at all. Witness DBB testified that he never heard of or saw violence perpetrated against women during the events which took place in 1994, and that no women in his sector were raped. Subsequently he did say that he heard people saying that women were being raped in the commune of Taba, outside of his sector, but he said he did not witness this. Witness DBB said he did not hear the name of the Accused mentioned in connection with sexual violence and that it was being attributed to the people who were participating in the massacres and looting. Witness DBB expressed the view that these incidents were being done out of sight of the Accused. On cross-examination he said he did not know anything about the Accused allowing women to be taken away and raped at the bureau communal.

440. Defence Witness DCC, the driver of Taba commune, testified that he never heard about violence perpetrated against women in Taba commune, that the Accused perpetrated violence against women in the commune or that the Accused gave orders for women to be raped. He said that during the period he was at the bureau communal, in April and throughout May, there were refugees there and he was there every day. He said nothing happened to the women refugees, and that he did not witness any of them being beaten or taken away to be raped. He said he did not know Alexia, Ntereye's wife, and denied going to look for her, finding her, and driving her in the communal vehicle to the bureau communal and then to Kinihira. He said the bureau communal vehicle had broken down before the massacres started

441. Defence Witness DZZ , a former Taba communal policeman currently in detention in Rwanda, testified that he went to the bureau communal every day and that incidents of sexual violence did not take place there. Witness DZZ also testified that he saw no crimes of any type being committed at the bureau communal. Witness DZZ was quite insistent that he heard of no cases of rape in the entire commune of Taba during this period. Defence Witness DCX in a similar statement said that when he was in Taba he heard no mention of sexual violence. He stated categorically that there was no rape. Defence Witness DAX when asked whether he had heard that the Interahamwe had committed crimes of sexual violence against women stated that nobody talked about such things where he was. He said he could not affirm that elsewhere maybe such things were heard or took place.

442. Defence Witness Matata, called as an expert witness, noted only one case he had heard of in Taba, an attempted rape of two girls aged fourteen and fifteen. He expressed his opinion that the bourgmestre would not have been aware of this case as it was in a region, Buguri sector, which the bourgmestre had never gone to. Witness Matata noted that there is a cultural factor which prevented people from talking about rape, but also suggested that the phenomenon of rape was introduced afterwards for purposes of blackmail. He said he had come across incidents of rape in other parts of the country but suggested that cases of rape were not frequent and not related to an ethnic group. Witness Matata expressed the opinion that rapists were more interested in satisfying their physical needs, that there were spontaneous acts of desire even in the context of killing. He noted that Tutsi women, in general, are quite beautiful and that raping them is not necessarily intended to destroy an ethnic group, but rather to have a beautiful woman.

443. Defence Witness DIX testified that her father lent his vehicle to the Accused and helped him ensure security in the commune during this period. Witness DIX testified that she was at home in Taba and heard all the news but that she did not hear anything about rape or sexual violence during the killings which took place. However, she said that she received all her information from her parents and neighbours and did not once go to the bureau communal after the killings started. She said that she herself saw the Accused just one time, in April. According to her testimony, she did not speak to him at that time, and has never spoken to him at any other time. Nevertheless, Witness DIX expressed the opinion that the Accused had committed no crime, and she was surprised that he was in prison. Defence Witness DJX, a minor and the brother of Witness DIX, also testified that he did not hear anything about rape and he did not see any cases of rape. The Chamber notes that the written statements of these two witnesses, prepared and submitted by the Defence, are identical. Witness DJX was twelve years old at the time of the events, and like Witness DIX, he testified that he did not go to the bureau communal during this period. He said he saw the Accused two times.

444. Witness DFX testified that she was never a witness to acts of rape or sexual violence in Taba and that she never even heard anyone talk about them. The Chamber notes that this witness, who is a protected witness, has a close personal relationship to the Defendant. She testified, on examination by the Chamber, that the Accused did not tell her what was happening at the bureau communal, that she did not ask him, and that her source of information was from other people. On cross-examination by the Prosecution, she testified that she herself never went to the bureau communal during this period for security reasons. On examination by the Chamber, the Witness acknowledged that in her written statement submitted by the Defence she had mentioned reports that the Interahamwe were abducting beautiful Tutsi girls and taking them home as mistresses. She conceded that such conduct could be considered sexual violence as it was not consensual.

445. Defence Witness DEEX, a Tutsi woman, testified that before killing women the Interahamwes raped them. Asked whether the Accused encouraged or authorized them in this sexual violence, she said she did not know. On cross-examination, she said that she did not personally witness sexual violence, although she heard that the girls at the house of the family where she had taken refuge were raped by the Interahamwe. Witness DEEX testified that she was given a laissez-passer by the Accused, which helped her to move around safely.

446. The Accused himself testified that he was completely surprised by the allegations of rape in Taba during the events which took place. He asserted that anyone saying that even a single woman was raped at the bureau communal was lying. While he acknowledged that some witnesses had testified that they were raped at the bureau communal, he swore, in the name of God, that the charge was made up. He said he never saw, and never heard from his policemen, that any woman was raped at the bureau communal. He said that he heard about rape accusations over Radio Rwanda and that women's associations had organized demonstrations and a march from Kigali to Taba. He suggested that perhaps this was intended to make the Chamber understand that in Taba women were raped at the bureau communal, but he insisted that women were never raped within the premises of the bureau communal or on land belonging to the bureau communal or the commune.

447. In his testimony, the Accused recalled the allegation that he had forced a young girl, Chantal, to march naked. He said he did not know her and that it never took place. He said he would not do something like that. He referred to the account of a woman raped with a wooden stick as "savagery", questioning how a woman could witness such a thing, and he referred to the statement he had been accused of making at the entrance to the cultural center as "too much". He also testified that the cultural center building is such that it would be difficult to see what was going on inside from the door and that it would be difficult for a woman lying down inside to know who is at the door. The Accused testified that there were women taking refuge all over and outside the bureau communal and that there were women in the cultural center. He denied that the Interahamwe brought women to the cultural center. He said that some of the women who took refuge at the bureau communal were killed and others escaped.

448. On examination by the Chamber, the Accused stated that he did hear about rapes in Kigali but only after he was out of the country. When asked by the Chamber for a reaction to the testimony of sexual violence, the Accused noted that rape was not mentioned in the pre-trial statements of Witness J and Witness H, although Witness H said on examination by the Chamber that she had mentioned her rape to investigators. The Accused suggested that his Indictment was amended because of pressure from the women's movement and women in Rwanda, whom he described as "worked up to agree that they have been raped." On examination by the Chamber, the Accused acknowledged that it was possible that rape might have taken place in the commune of Taba, but he insisted that no rape took place at the bureau communal. He said he first learned of the rape allegations in Taba at the Chamber and maintained that the charges were an "invented accusation.

Factual Findings

449. Having carefully reviewed the testimony of the Prosecution witnesses regarding sexual violence, the Chamber finds that there is sufficient credible evidence to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that during the events of 1994, Tutsi girls and women were subjected to sexual violence, beaten and killed on or near the bureau communal premises, as well as elsewhere in the commune of Taba. Witness H, Witness JJ, Witness OO, and Witness NN all testified that they themselves were raped, and all, with the exception of Witness OO, testified that they witnessed other girls and women being raped. Witness J, Witness KK and Witness PP also testified that they witnessed other girls and women being raped in the commune of Taba. Hundreds of Tutsi, mostly women and children, sought refuge at the bureau communal during this period and many rapes took place on or near the premises of the bureau communal - Witness JJ was taken by Interahamwe from the refuge site near the bureau communal to a nearby forest area and raped there. She testified that this happened often to other young girls and women at the refuge site. Witness JJ was also raped repeatedly on two separate occasions in the cultural center on the premises of the bureau communal, once in a group of fifteen girls and women and once in a group of ten girls and women. Witness KK saw women and girls being selected and taken by the Interahamwe to the cultural center to be raped. Witness H saw women being raped outside the compound of the bureau communal, and Witness NN saw two Interahamwes take a woman and rape her between the bureau communal and the cultural center. Witness OO was taken from the bureau communal and raped in a nearby field. Witness PP saw three women being raped at Kinihira, the killing site near the bureau communal, and Witness NN found her younger sister, dying, after she had been raped at the bureau communal. Many other instances of rape in Taba outside the bureau communal - in fields, on the road, and in or just outside houses - were described by Witness J, Witness H, Witness OO, Witness KK, Witness NN and Witness PP. Witness KK and Witness PP also described other acts of sexual violence which took place on or near the premises of the bureau communal - the forced undressing and public humiliation of girls and women. The Chamber notes that much of the sexual violence took place in front of large numbers of people, and that all of it was directed against Tutsi women.

450. With a few exceptions, most of the rapes and all of the other acts of sexual violence described by the Prosecution witnesses were committed by Interahamwe. It has not been established that the perpetrator of the rape of Witness H in a sorghum field and six of the men who raped Witness NN were Interahamwe. In the case of Witness NN, two of her rapists were neighbours, two were teenage boys and two were herdsmen, and there is no evidence that any of these people were Interahamwe. Nevertheless, with regard to all evidence of rape and sexual violence which took place on or near the premises of the bureau communal, the perpetrators were all identified as Interahamwe. Interahamwe are also identified as the perpetrators of many rapes which took place outside the bureau communal, including the rapes of Witness H, Witness OO, Witness NN, Witness J's daughter, a woman near death seen by Witness KK and a woman called Vestine, seen by Witness PP. There is no suggestion in any of the evidence that the Accused or any communal policemen perpetrated rape, and both Witness JJ and Witness KK affirmed that they never saw the Accused rape anyone.

451. In considering the role of the Accused in the sexual violence which took place and the extent of his direct knowledge of incidents of sexual violence, the Chamber has taken into account only evidence which is direct and unequivocal. Witness H testified that the Accused was present during the rape of Tutsi women outside the compound of the bureau communal, but as she could not confirm that he was aware that the rapes were taking place, the Chamber discounts this testimony in its assessment of the evidence. Witness PP recalled the Accused directing the Interahamwe to take Alexia and her two nieces to Kinihira, saying "Don't you know where killings take place, where the others have been killed?" The three women were raped before they were killed, but the statement of the Accused does not refer to sexual violence and there is no evidence that the Accused was present at Kinihira. For this reason, the Chamber also discounts this testimony in its assessment of the evidence.

452. On the basis of the evidence set forth herein, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused had reason to know and in fact knew that sexual violence was taking place on or near the premises of the bureau communal, and that women were being taken away from the bureau communal and sexually violated. There is no evidence that the Accused took any measures to prevent acts of sexual violence or to punish the perpetrators of sexual violence. In fact there is evidence that the Accused ordered, instigated and otherwise aided and abetted sexual violence. The Accused watched two Interahamwe drag a woman to be raped between the bureau communal and the cultural center. The two commune policemen in front of his office witnessed the rape but did nothing to prevent it. On the two occasions Witness JJ was brought to the cultural center of the bureau communal to be raped, she and the group of girls and women with her were taken past the Accused, on the way. On the first occasion he was looking at them, and on the second occasion he was standing at the entrance to the cultural center. On this second occasion, he said, "Never ask me again what a Tutsi woman tastes like." Witness JJ described the Accused in making these statements as "talking as if someone were encouraging a player." More generally she stated that the Accused was the one "supervising" the acts of rape. When Witness OO and two other girls were apprehended by Interahamwe in flight from the bureau communal, the Interahamwe went to the Accused and told him that they were taking the girls away to sleep with them. The Accused said "take them." The Accused told the Interahamwe to undress Chantal and march her around. He was laughing and happy to be watching and afterwards told the Interahamwe to take her away and said "you should first of all make sure that you sleep with this girl." The Chamber considers this statement as evidence that the Accused ordered and instigated sexual violence, although insufficient evidence was presented to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that Chantal was in fact raped.

453. In making its factual findings, the Chamber has carefully considered the cross-examination by the Defence of Prosecution witnesses and the evidence presented by the Defence. With regard to cross-examination, the Chamber notes that the Defence did not question the testimony of Witness J or Witness

H on rape at all, although the Chamber itself questioned both witnesses on this testimony. Witness JJ, OO, KK, NN and PP were questioned by the Defence with regard to their testimony of sexual violence, but the testimony itself was never challenged. Details such as where the rapes took place, how many rapists there were, how old they were, whether the Accused participated in the rapes, who was raped and which rapists used condoms were all elicited by the Defence, but at no point did the Defence suggest to the witnesses that the rapes had not taken place. The main line of questioning by the Defence with regard to the rapes and other sexual violence, other than to confirm the details of the testimony, related to whether the Accused had the authority to stop them. In cross-examination of the evidence presented by the Prosecution, specific incidents of sexual violence were never challenged by the Defence.

454. The Defence has raised discrepancies between the pre-trial written statements made by witnesses to the Office of the Prosecutor and their testimony before this Chamber, to challenge the credibility of these witnesses. The Chamber has considered the discrepancies which have been alleged with regard to the witnesses who testified on sexual violence and finds them to be unfounded or immaterial. For example, the Defence challenged Witness PP, quoting from her pre-trial statement that she stayed home during the genocide and recalling her testimony that she went out often as a contradiction. The Chamber pointed out to the Defence that elsewhere in her pre-trial statement, Witness PP had also said "I went out of my house often." The Chamber established that during this period, Witness PP stayed, generally speaking, in the Taba commune, but that she went out of her house often. Selectively quoting from the pre-trial statements, the Defence often suggested inconsistencies which, upon examination or with further explanation, were found not to be inconsistencies.

455. With regard to the inconsistencies which were established by the Defence, the Chamber finds them to be immaterial. For example, Witness OO said in her pre-trial statement that she went to the bureau communal four days after the plane crash which killed President Habyarimana. In her testimony, she said she went to the bureau communal one week after the plane crash. Witness PP said in her pre-trial statement that when she rescued Vestine, Vestine was thereafter taken from her by Habarurena. In her testimony, Witness PP said she left Vestine at the house of Emmanuel, from which Vestine was taken by Habarurena. Whether Tutsi women were stripped on the way to or at Kinihira is the core of another discrepancy between the pre-trial statement and testimony of Witness PP. The Chamber considers that these inconsistencies are not of material consequence and that they are not substantial enough to impeach the credibility of the witnesses. The Chamber is of the view that the inconsistencies between pre-trial statements and witness testimony can be explained by the difficulties of recollecting precise details several years after the occurrence of the events, the trauma experienced by the witnesses to these events, the difficulties of translation, and the fact that several witnesses were illiterate and stated that they had not read their written statements.

456. The Defence in its closing argument used the example of Witness J to demonstrate the dishonesty of Prosecution witnesses. He recalled that Witness J testified that she was six months pregnant, and that when her brother was killed she climbed up a tree and stayed there for an entire week in her condition, without any food. In fact, the Defence is misrepresenting Witness J's testimony. She did not say that she stayed in a tree for a whole week without food. Witness J testified that when she got hungry she came down and went to a neighbour's house for food and that subsequently her neighbour brought food to her and then she would spend the night in the tree. Under cross-examination, Witness J testified that she came down from the tree every night. What the Defence characterized as the "fantasy" of this witness, which may be "of interest to psychologists and not justice", the witness characterized as desperation, answering his challenge with the suggestion, "If somebody was chasing you, you would be able to climb a tree."

457. Of the twelve witnesses presented by the Defence, other than the Accused only two - DZZ and DCC - testified that they went regularly to the bureau communal after the killings began in Taba. These two witnesses contradicted each other on what they saw and heard. Witness DZZ, a former communal policeman currently in detention in Rwanda, testified that he heard of no cases of rape in the entire commune during this period. He testified that he was at the bureau communal every day and that no sexual violence took place there. He also testified that no crimes of any sort took place at the bureau communal - a categorical statement which, in the light of all the other witnesses who have testified that killings took place at the bureau communal, is highly implausible. The Accused himself testified that killings took place at the bureau communal. Witness DCC, who is currently in detention in Rwanda, also testified that killings took place at the bureau communal. Witness DCC was the driver of the commune during this time, and he testified that he never heard that violence was perpetrated against women in Taba. He denied bringing Alexia, the wife of Ntereye, in the communal vehicle to the bureau communal and then to Kinihira, and he testified that this vehicle had broken down before the massacres started Yet Defence Witness DAX testified that the communal vehicle was in use between April and June. Witness PP also testified that she saw the driver in this vehicle within this time frame. For these reasons the Chamber does not accept the testimony of Witness DZZ and DCC with regard to sexual violence.

458. Most of the Defence witnesses did not go to the bureau communal during the period from 7 April 1994 to the end of June 1994. Witness DCX , who testified that he did not hear any mention of sexual violence, only went to the bureau communal two times during this period, for personal reasons, and passed by the bureau several times. Witness DEEX, a Tutsi woman, who testified that she went once to the bureau communal, did hear that women were being raped by the Interahamwe before they were killed. The other Defence witnesses who testified that they had not heard any mention of sexual violence stated that they did not go to the bureau communal at any time after the killings started. Witness DBB, Witness DAX, Witness DAAX, Witness DIX, Witness DJX, Witness DFX and Witness Matata never went to the bureau communal during this period. Witness DAAX and Witness Matata, who was called as an expert, were not in the commune of Taba during this period, and Witness DBB was in hiding after 17 April 1994. The Chamber considers that these witnesses were not in a position to know what occurred at the bureau communal. By their own accounts none of them, with the exception of Witness DAAX, had any conversation with the Accused regarding what was happening there. Witness DAAX, a prefet, testified that he lost contact with the Accused after 18 April 1994, before the killings began. The testimony of these witnesses therefore does not discredit the evidence presented by the Prosecution witnesses.

459. With regard to the testimony of the Accused, the Chamber finds very little concrete evidence or argument on sexual violence other than his bare denial that it occurred. The only specific incident referred to by the Accused on direct examination was the forced undressing and parading of Chantal, which he denied. On examination by the Chamber, the Accused subsequently referred to other incidents and a statement he was said to have made outside the cultural center, suggesting that it would be difficult for a person standing at the entrance to see what was happening inside, and that it would be difficult for a person inside lying down to see who was at the entrance. The Accused did not assert that this was impossible, and these comments were made in an offhand manner rather than as a serious defence. The Accused simply stated that there was very little to say about the allegations of sexual violence, that unlike the killings this was impossible and not even for discussion.

460. Faced with first-hand personal accounts from women who experienced and witnessed sexual violence in Taba and at the bureau communal, and who swore under oath that the Accused was present and saw what was happening, the Chamber does not accept the statement made by the Accused. The Accused insists that the charges are fabricated, but the Defence has offered the Chamber no evidence to support this assertion. There is overwhelming evidence to the contrary, and the Chamber does not accept the testimony of the Accused. The findings of the Chamber are based on the evidence which has been presented in this trial. As the Accused flatly denies the occurrence of sexual violence at the bureau communal, he does not allow for the possibility that the sexual violence may have occurred but that he was unaware of it.

6. THE LAW

6.1 Cumulative Charges

461. In the amended Indictment, the accused is charged cumulatively with more than one crime in relation to the same sets of facts, in all but count 4. For example the events described in paragraphs 12 to 23 of the Indictment are the subject of three counts of the Indictment - genocide (count 1), complicity in genocide (count 2) and crimes against humanity/extermination (count 3). Likewise, counts 5 and 6 of the Indictment charge murder as a crime against humanity and murder as a violation of common article 3 of the Geneva Conventions, respectively, in relation to the same set of facts; the same is true of counts 7 and 8, and of counts 9 and 10, of the Indictment. Equally, counts 11 (crime against humanity/torture) and 12 (violation of common article 3/cruel treatment) relate to the same events. So do counts 13 (crime against humanity/rape), 14 (crimes against humanity/other inhumane acts) and 15 (violation of common article 3 and additional protocol II/rape).

462. The question which arises at this stage is whether, if the Chamber is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that a given factual allegation set out in the Indictment has been established, it may find the accused guilty of all of the crimes charged in relation to those facts or only one. The reason for posing this question is that it might be argued that the accumulation of criminal charges offends against the principle of double jeopardy or a substantive non bis in idem principle in criminal law. Thus an accused who is found guilty of both genocide and crimes against humanity in relation to the same set of facts may argue that he has been twice judged for the same offence, which is generally considered impermissible in criminal law.

463. The Chamber notes that this question has been posed, and answered, by the Trial Chamber of the ICTY in the first case before that Tribunal, The Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic. Trial Chamber II, confronted with this issue, stated:

> "In any event, since this is a matter that will only be relevant insofar as it might affect penalty, it can best be dealt with if and when matters of penalty fall for consideration. What can, however, be said with certainty is that penalty cannot be made to depend upon whether offences arising from the same conduct are alleged cumulatively or in the alternative. What is to be punished by penalty is proven criminal conduct and that will not depend upon technicalities of pleading". (Prosecutor v. Tadic , Decision on Defence Motion on Form of the Indictment at p.10 (No. IT-94-1-T, T.Ch.II, 14 Nov, 1995)

464. In that case, when the matter reached the sentencing stage, the Trial Chamber dealt with the matter of cumulative criminal charges by imposing concurrent sentences for each cumulative charge. Thus, for example, in relation to one particular beating, the accused received 7 years' imprisonment for the beating as a crime against humanity, and a 6 year concurrent sentence for the same beating as a violation of the laws or customs of war.

465. The Chamber takes due note of the practice of the ICTY. This practice was also followed in the Barbie case, where the French Cour de Cassation held that a single event could be qualified both as a crime against humanity and as a war crime.[79]

466. It is clear that the practice of concurrent sentencing ensures that the accused is not twice punished for the same acts. Notwithstanding this absence of prejudice to the accused, it is still necessary to justify the prosecutorial practice of accumulating criminal charges.

467. The Chamber notes that in Civil Law systems, including that of Rwanda, there exists a principle known as concours ideal d'infractions which permits multiple convictions for the same act under certain circumstances. Rwandan law allows multiple convictions in the following circumstances:

> Code pénal du Rwanda: Chapitre VI - Du concours d'infractions:
>
> > Article 92.- Il y a concours d'infractions lorsque plusieurs infractions ont été commises par le mˆme auteur sans qu'une condamnation soit intervenue entre ces infractions.
> >
> > Article 93.- Il y concours idéal:
> > 1) lorsque le fait unique au point de vue matériel est susceptible de plusieurs qualifications;
> > 2) lorsque l'action comprend des faits qui, constituant des infractions distinctes, sont unis entre eux comme procédant d'une intention délictueuse unique ou comme étant les uns des circonstances aggravantes des autres.
> >
> > Seront seules prononcées dans le premier cas les peines déterminées par la qualification la plus sévère, dans le second cas les peines prévues pour la répression de l'infraction la plus grave, mais dont le maximum pourra ˆtre alors élevé de moitié.

468. On the basis of national and international law and jurisprudence, the Chamber concludes that it is acceptable to convict the accused of two offences in relation to the same set of facts in the following circumstances: (1) where the offences have different elements; or (2) where the provisions creating the offences protect different interests; or (3) where it is necessary to record a conviction for both offences in order fully to describe what the accused did. However, the Chamber finds that it is not justifiable to convict an accused of two offences in relation to the same set of facts where (a) one offence is a lesser included offence of the other, for example, murder and grievous bodily harm, robbery and theft, or rape and indecent assault; or (b) where one offence charges accomplice liability and the other offence charges liability as a principal, e.g. genocide and complicity in genocide.

469. Having regard to its Statute, the Chamber believes that the offences under the Statute - genocide, crimes against humanity, and violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II - have different elements and, moreover, are intended to protect different interests. The crime of genocide exists to protect certain groups from extermination or attempted extermination. The concept of crimes against humanity exists to protect civilian populations from persecution. The idea of violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II is to protect non-combatants from war crimes in civil war. These crimes have different purposes and are, therefore, never co-extensive. Thus it is legitimate to charge these crimes in relation to the same set of facts. It may, additionally, depending on the case, be necessary to record a conviction for more than one of these offences in order to reflect what crimes an accused committed. If, for example, a general ordered that all prisoners of war belonging to a particular ethnic group should be killed, with the intent thereby to eliminate the group, this would be both genocide and a violation of common article 3, although not necessarily a crime against humanity. Convictions for genocide and violations of common article 3 would accurately reflect the accused general's course of conduct.

470. Conversely, the Chamber does not consider that any of genocide, crimes against humanity, and violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II are lesser included forms of each other. The ICTR Statute does not establish a hierarchy of norms, but rather all three offences are presented on an equal footing. While genocide may be considered the gravest crime, there is no justification in the Statute for finding that crimes against humanity or violations of common article 3 and additional protocol II are in all cricumstances alternative charges to genocide and thus lesser included offences. As stated, and it is a related point, these offences have different constituent elements. Again, this consideration renders multiple convictions for these offences in relation to the same set of facts permissible.

6.2. Individual criminal responsibility (Article 6 of the Statute)

471. The Accused is charged under Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal with individual criminal responsibility for the crimes alleged in the Indictment. With regard to Counts 13, 14 and 15 on sexual violence, the Accused is charged additionally, or alternatively, under Article 6(3) of the Statute. In the opinion of the Tribunal, Articles 6(1) and 6(3) address distinct principles of criminal liability and should, therefore, be considered separately. Article 6(1) sets forth the basic principles of individual criminal liability, which are undoubtedly common to most national criminal jurisdictions. Article 6(3), by contrast, constitutes something of an exception to the principles articulated in Article 6(1), as it derives from military law, namely the principle of the liability of a commander for the acts of his subordinates or "command responsibility".

472. Article 6(1) provides that:

> "A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime".

Thus, in addition to responsibility as principal perpetrator, the Accused can be held responsible for the criminal acts of others where he plans with them, instigates them, orders them or aids and abets them to commit those acts.

473. Thus, Article 6(1) covers various stages of the commission of a crime, ranging from its initial planning to its execution, through its organization. However, the principle of individual criminal responsibility as provided for in Article 6(1) implies that the planning or preparation of the crime actually leads to its commission. Indeed, the principle of individual criminal responsibility for an attempt to commit a crime obtained only in case of genocide80. Conversely, this would mean that with respect to any other form of criminal participation and, in particular, those referred to in Article 6(1), the perpetrator would incur criminal responsibility only if the offence were completed.

474. Article 6 (1) thus appears to be in accord with the Judgments of the Nuremberg Tribunal which held that persons other than those who committed the crime, especially those who ordered it, could incur individual criminal responsibility.

475. The International Law Commission, in Article 2 (3) of the Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind, reaffirmed the principle of individual responsibility for the five forms of participation deemed criminal referred to in Article 6 (1) and consistently included the phrase "which in fact occurs", with the exception of aiding and abetting, which is akin to complicity and therefore implies a principal offence.

476. The elements of the offences or, more specifically, the forms of participation in the commission of one of the crimes under Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute, as stipulated in Article 6 (1) of the said Statute, their elements are inherent in the forms of participation per se which render the perpetrators thereof individually responsible for such crimes. The moral element is reflected in the desire of the Accused that the crime be in fact committed.

477. In this respect, the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia found in the Tadic case that:

> "a person may only be criminally responsible for conduct where it is determined that he knowingly participated in the commission of an offence" and that "his participation directly and substantially affected the commission of that offence through supporting the actual commission before, during, or after the incident."81

478. This intent can be inferred from a certain number of facts, as concerns genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, for instance, from their massive and/or systematic nature or their atrocity, to be considered infra in the judgment, in the Tribunal's findings on the law applicable to each of the three crimes which constitute its ratione materiae jurisdiction.

479. Therefore, as can be seen, the forms of participation referred to in Article 6 (1), cannot render their perpetrator criminally liable where he did not act knowingly, and even where he should have had such knowledge. This greatly differs from Article 6 (3) analyzed here below, which does not necessarily require that the superior acted knowingly to render him criminally liable; it suffices that he had reason to know that his subordinates were about to commit or had committed a crime and failed to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such acts or punish the perpetrators thereof. In a way, this is liability by omission or abstention.

480. The first form of liability set forth in Article 6 (1) is planning of a crime. Such planning is similar to the notion of complicity in Civil law, or conspiracy under Common law, as stipulated in Article 2 (3) of the Statute. But the difference is that planning, unlike complicity or plotting, can be an act committed by one person. Planning can thus be defined as implying that one or several persons contemplate designing the commission of a crime at both the preparatory and execution phases.

481. The second form of liability is 'incitation' (in the french version of the Statute) to commit a crime, reflected in the English version of Article 6 (1) by the word instigated. In English, it seems the words incitement and instigation are synonymous82. Furthermore, the word "instigated" or "instigation" is used to refer to incitation in several other instruments83. However, in certain legal systems and, under Civil law, in particular, the two concepts are very different84. Furthermore, and even assuming that the two words were synonymous, the question would be to know whether instigation under Article 6 (1) must include the direct and public elements, required for incitement, particularly, incitement to commit genocide (Article 2 (3)(c) of the Statute) which, in this instance, translates incitation into English as "incitement" and no longer "instigation". Some people are of that opinion85. The Chamber also accepts this interpretation 86.

482. That said, the form of participation through instigation stipulated in Article 6 (1) of the Statute, involves prompting another to commit an offence; but this is different from incitement in that it is punishable only where it leads to the actual commission of an offence desired by the instigator87.

483. By ordering the commission of one of the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute, a person also incurs individual criminal responsibility. Ordering implies a superior- subordinate relationship between the person giving the order and the one executing it. In other words, the person in a position of authority uses it to convince another to commit an offence. In certain legal systems, including that of Rwanda 88, ordering is a form of complicity through instructions given to the direct perpetrator of an offence. Regarding the position of authority, the Chamber considers that sometimes it can be just a question of fact.

484. Article 6 (1) declares criminally responsible a person who "(...) or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in Articles 2 to 4 (...)". Aiding and abetting, which may appear to be synonymous, are indeed different. Aiding means giving assistance to someone. Abetting, on the other hand, would involve facilitating the commission of an act by being sympathetic thereto. The issue here is to whether the individual criminal responsibility provided for in Article 6(1) is incurred only where there was aiding and abetting at the same time. The Chamber is of the opinion that either aiding or abetting alone is sufficient to render the perpetrator criminally liable. In both instances, it is not necessary for the person aiding or abetting another to commit the offence to be present during the commission of the crime.

485. The Chamber finds that, in many legal systems, aiding and abetting constitute acts of complicity. However, though akin to the constituent elements of complicity, they themselves constitute one of the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute, particularly, genocide. The Chamber is consequently of the opinion that when dealing with a person Accused of having aided and abetted in the planning, preparation and execution of genocide, it must be proven that such a person did have the specific intent to commit genocide, namely that, he or she acted with the intent to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such; whereas, as stated supra, the same requirement is not needed for complicity in genocide89.

486. Article 6(3) of the Statute deals with the responsibility of the superior, or command responsibility. This principle, which derives from the principle of individual criminal responsibility as applied in the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, was subsequently codified in Article 86 of the Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 8 June 1977.

487. Article 6 (3) stipulates that:

"The fact that any of the acts referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof".

488. There are varying views regarding the Mens rea required for command responsibility. According to one view it derives from a legal rule of strict liability, that is, the superior is criminally responsible for acts committed by his subordinate, without it being necessary to prove the criminal intent of the superior. Another view holds that negligence which is so serious as to be tantamount to consent or criminal intent, is a lesser requirement. Thus, the "Commentary on the Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949" stated, in reference to Article 86 of the Additional Protocol I, and the mens rea requirement for command responsibility that:

> "[...] the negligence must be so serious that it is tantamount to malicious intent, apart from any link between the conduct in question and the damage that took place. This element in criminal law is far from being clarified, but it is essential, since it is precisely on the question of intent that the system of penal sanctions in the Conventions is based"90.

489. The Chamber holds that it is necessary to recall that criminal intent is the moral element required for any crime and that, where the objective is to ascertain the individual criminal responsibility of a person Accused of crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the Chamber, such as genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto, it is certainly proper to ensure that there has been malicious intent, or, at least, ensure that negligence was so serious as to be tantamount to acquiescence or even malicious intent.

490. As to whether the form of individual criminal responsibility referred to Article 6 (3) of the Statute applies to persons in positions of both military and civilian authority, it should be noted that during the Tokyo trials, certain civilian authorities were convicted of war crimes under this principle. Hirota, former Foreign Minister of Japan, was convicted of atrocities - including mass rape - committed in the "rape of Nanking", under a count which charged that he had " recklessly disregarded their legal duty by virtue of their offices to take adequate steps to secure the observance and prevent breaches of the law and customs of war".The Tokyo Tribunal held that:

> "Hirota was derelict in his duty in not insisting before the Cabinet that immediate action be taken to put an end to the atrocities, failing any other action open to him to bring about the same result. He was content to rely on assurances which he knew were not being implemented while hundreds of murders, violations of women, and other atrocities were being committed daily. His inaction amounted to criminal negligence".

It should, however, be noted that Judge Röling strongly dissented from this finding, and held that Hirota should have been acquitted. Concerning the principle of command responsibility as applied to a civilian leader, Judge Röling stated that:

> "Generally speaking, a Tribunal should be very careful in holding civil government officials responsible for the behaviour of the army in the field. Moreover, the Tribunal is here to apply the general principles of law as they exist with relation to the responsibility for omissions'. Considerations of both law and policy, of both justice and expediency, indicate that this responsibility should only be recognized in a very restricted sense".

491. The Chamber therefore finds that in the case of civilians, the application of the principle of individual criminal responsibility, enshrined in Article 6 (3), to civilians remains contentious. Against this background, the Chamber holds that it is appropriate to assess on a case by case basis the power of authority actually devolved upon the Accused in order to determine whether or not he had the power to take all necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the commission of the alleged crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

6.3. Genocide (Article 2 of the Statute)

6.3.1. Genocide

492. Article 2 of the Statute stipulates that the Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for genocide, complicity to commit genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, attempt to commit genocide and complicity in genocide.

493. In accordance with the said provisions of the Statute, the Prosecutor has charged Akayesu with the crimes legally defined as genocide (count 1), complicity in genocide (count 2) and incitement to commit genocide (count 4).

Crime of Genocide, punishable under Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute 494. The definition of genocide, as given in Article 2 of the Tribunal's Statute, is taken verbatim from Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (the "Genocide Convention")91. It states:

> " Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:
>
> (a) Killing members of the group;
> (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
> (c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
> (d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
> (e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group."

495. The Genocide Convention is undeniably considered part of customary international law, as can be seen in the opinion of the International Court of Justice on the provisions of the Genocide Convention, and as was recalled by the United Nations' Secretary-General in his Report on the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia92.

496. The Chamber notes that Rwanda acceded, by legislative decree, to the Convention on Genocide on 12 February 197593. Thus, punishment of the crime of genocide did exist in Rwanda in 1994, at the time of the acts alleged in the Indictment, and the perpetrator was liable to be brought before the competent courts of Rwanda to answer for this crime.

497. Contrary to popular belief, the crime of genocide does not imply the actual extermination of group in its entirety, but is understood as such once any one of the acts mentioned in Article 2(2)(a) through 2 (2)(e) is committed with the specific intent to destroy "in whole or in part" a national, ethnical, racial or religious group.

498. Genocide is distinct from other crimes inasmuch as it embodies a special intent or dolus specialis. Special intent of a crime is the specific intention, required as a constitutive element of the crime, which demands that the perpetrator clearly seeks to produce the act charged. Thus, the special intent in the crime of genocide lies in "the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such".

499. Thus, for a crime of genocide to have been committed, it is necessary that one of the acts listed under Article 2(2) of the Statute be committed, that the particular act be committed against a specifically targeted group, it being a national, ethnical, racial or religious group. Consequently, in order to clarify the constitutive elements of the crime of genocide, the Chamber will first state its findings on the acts provided for under Article 2(2)(a) through Article 2(2)(e) of the Statute, the groups protected by the Genocide Convention, and the special intent or dolus specialis necessary for genocide to take place.

Killing members of the group (paragraph (a)):

500. With regard to Article 2(2)(a) of the Statute, like in the Genocide Convention, the Chamber notes that the said paragraph states "meurtre" in the French version while the English version states "killing". The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the term "killing" used in the English version is too general, since it could very well include both intentional and unintentional homicides, whereas the term "meurtre", used in the French version, is more precise. It is accepted that there is murder when death has been caused with the intention to do so, as provided for, incidentally, in the Penal Code of Rwanda which stipulates in its Article 311 that "Homicide committed with intent to cause death shall be treated as murder".

501. Given the presumption of innocence of the accused, and pursuant to the general principles of criminal law, the Chamber holds that the version more favourable to the accused should be upheld and finds that Article 2(2)(a) of the Statute must be interpreted in accordance with the definition of murder given in the Penal Code of Rwanda, according to which "meurtre" (killing) is homicide committed with the intent to cause death. The Chamber notes in this regard that the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention 94, show that the proposal by certain delegations that premeditation be made a necessary condition for there to be genocide, was rejected, because some delegates deemed it unnecessary for premeditation to be made a requirement; in their opinion, by its constitutive physical elements, the very crime of genocide, necessarily entails premeditation.

Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group (paragraph b)

502. Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group does not necessarily mean that the harm is permanent and irremediable.

503. In the Adolf Eichmann case, who was convicted of crimes against the Jewish people, genocide under another legal definition, the District Court of Jerusalem stated in its judgment of 12 December 1961, that serious bodily or mental harm of members of the group can be caused > " by the enslavement, starvation, deportation and persecution [...] and by their detention in ghettos, transit camps and concentration camps in conditions which were designed to cause their degradation, deprivation of their rights as human beings, and to suppress them and cause them inhumane suffering and torture"95.

504. For purposes of interpreting Article 2 (2)(b) of the Statute, the Chamber takes serious bodily or mental harm, without limiting itself thereto, to mean acts of torture, be they bodily or mental, inhumane or degrading treatment, persecution.

Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part (paragraph c):

505. The Chamber holds that the expression deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part, should be construed as the methods of destruction by which the perpetrator does not immediately kill the members of the group, but which, ultimately, seek their physical destruction.

506. For purposes of interpreting Article 2(2)(c) of the Statute, the Chamber is of the opinion that the means of deliberate inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction, in whole or part, include, inter alia, subjecting a group of people to a subsistence diet, systematic expulsion from homes and the reduction of essential medical services below minimum requirement.

Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group (paragraph d):

507. For purposes of interpreting Article 2(2)(d) of the Statute, the Chamber holds that the measures intended to prevent births within the group, should be construed as sexual mutilation, the practice of sterilization, forced birth control, separation of the sexes and prohibition of marriages. In patriarchal societies, where membership of a group is determined by the identity of the father, an example of a measure intended to prevent births within a group is the case where, during rape, a woman of the said group is deliberately impregnated by a man of another group, with the intent to have her give birth to a child who will consequently not belong to its mother's group.

508. Furthermore, the Chamber notes that measures intended to prevent births within the group may be physical, but can also be mental. For instance, rape can be a measure intended to prevent births when the person raped refuses subsequently to procreate, in the same way that members of a group can be led, through threats or trauma, not to procreate.

Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group (paragraph e)

509. With respect to forcibly transferring children of the group to another group, the Chamber is of the opinion that, as in the case of measures intended to prevent births, the objective is not only to sanction a direct act of forcible physical transfer, but also to sanction acts of threats or trauma which would lead to the forcible transfer of children from one group to another.

510. Since the special intent to commit genocide lies in the intent to "destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such", it is necessary to consider a definition of the group as such. Article 2 of the Statute, just like the Genocide Convention, stipulates four types of victim groups, namely national, ethnical, racial or religious groups.

511. On reading through the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention96, it appears that the crime of genocide was allegedly perceived as targeting only "stable" groups, constituted in a permanent fashion and membership of which is determined by birth, with the exclusion of the more "mobile" groups which one joins through individual voluntary commitment, such as political and economic groups. Therefore, a common criterion in the four types of groups protected by the Genocide Convention is that membership in such groups would seem to be normally not challengeable by its members, who belong to it automatically, by birth, in a continuous and often irremediable manner.

512. Based on the Nottebohm decision97 rendered by the International Court of Justice, the Chamber holds that a national group is defined as a collection of people who are perceived to share a legal bond based on common citizenship, coupled with reciprocity of rights and duties.

513. An ethnic group is generally defined as a group whose members share a common language or culture.

514. The conventional definition of racial group is based on the hereditary physical traits often identified with a geographical region, irrespective of linguistic, cultural, national or religious factors.

515. The religious group is one whose members share the same religion, denomination or mode of worship.

516. Moreover, the Chamber considered whether the groups protected by the Genocide Convention, echoed in Article 2 of the Statute, should be limited to only the four groups expressly mentioned and whether they should not also include any group which is stable and permanent like the said four groups. In other words, the question that arises is whether it would be impossible to punish the physical destruction of a group as such under the Genocide Convention, if the said group, although stable and membership is by birth, does not meet the definition of any one of the four groups expressly protected by the Genocide Convention. In the opinion of the Chamber, it is particularly important to respect the intention of the drafters of the Genocide Convention, which according to the travaux préparatoires, was patently to ensure the protection of any stable and permanent group.

517. As stated above, the crime of genocide is characterized by its dolus specialis, or special intent, which lies in the fact that the acts charged, listed in Article 2 (2) of the Statute, must have been "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such".

518. Special intent is a well-known criminal law concept in the Roman-continental legal systems. It is required as a constituent element of certain offences and demands that the perpetrator have the clear intent to cause the offence charged. According to this meaning, special intent is the key element of an intentional offence, which offence is characterized by a psychological relationship between the physical result and the mental state of the perpetrator98.

519. As observed by the representative of Brazil during the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention,

> "genocide [is] characterised by the factor of particular intent to destroy a group. In the absence of that factor, whatever the degree of atrocity of an act and however similar it might be to the acts described in the convention, that act could still not be called genocide."99

520. With regard to the crime of genocide, the offender is culpable only when he has committed one of the offences charged under Article 2(2) of the Statute with the clear intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a particular group. The offender is culpable because he knew or should have known that the act committed would destroy, in whole or in part, a group.

521. In concrete terms, for any of the acts charged under Article 2 (2) of the Statute to be a constitutive element of genocide, the act must have been committed against one or several individuals, because such individual or individuals were members of a specific group, and specifically because they belonged to this group. Thus, the victim is chosen not because of his individual identity, but rather on account of his membership of a national, ethnical, racial or religious group. The victim of the act is therefore a member of a group, chosen as such, which, hence, means that the victim of the crime of genocide is the group itself and not only the individual100.

522. The perpetration of the act charged therefore extends beyond its actual commission, for example, the murder of a particular individual, for the realisation of an ulterior motive, which is to destroy, in whole or part, the group of which the individual is just one element.

523. On the issue of determining the offender's specific intent, the Chamber considers that intent is a mental factor which is difficult, even impossible, to determine. This is the reason why, in the absence of a confession from the accused, his intent can be inferred from a certain number of presumptions of fact. The Chamber considers that it is possible to deduce the genocidal intent inherent in a particular act charged from the general context of the perpetration of other culpable acts systematically directed against that same group, whether these acts were committed by the same offender or by others. Other factors, such as the scale of atrocities committed, their general nature, in a region or a country, or furthermore, the fact of deliberately and systematically targeting victims on account of their membership of a particular group, while excluding the members of other groups, can enable the Chamber to infer the genocidal intent of a particular act.

524. Trial Chamber I of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia also stated that the specific intent of the crime of genocide

> " may be inferred from a number of facts such as the general political doctrine which gave rise to the acts possibly covered by the definition in Article 4, or the repetition of destructive and discriminatory acts. The intent may also be inferred from the perpetration of acts which violate, or which the perpetrators themselves consider to violate the very foundation of the group- acts which are not in themselves covered by the list in Article 4(2) but which are committed as part of the same pattern of conduct"101.

Thus, in the matter brought before the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, the Trial Chamber, in its findings, found that > "this intent derives from the combined effect of speeches or projects laying the groundwork for and justifying the acts, from the massive scale of their destructive effect and from their specific nature, which aims at undermining what is considered to be the foundation of the group".102

6.3.2. Complicity in Genocide

The Crime of Complicity in Genocide, punishable under Article 2(3)e) of the Statute 525. Under Article 2(3)e) of the Statute, the Chamber shall have the power to prosecute persons who have committed complicity in genocide. The Prosecutor has charged Akayesu with such a crime under count 2 of the Indictment.

526. Principle VII of the "Nuremberg Principles" 103 reads

> "complicity in the commission of a crime against peace, a war crime, or a crime against humanity as set forth in Principle VI is a crime under international law."

Thus, participation by complicity in the most serious violations of international humanitarian law was considered a crime as early as Nuremberg.

527. The Chamber notes that complicity is viewed as a form of criminal participation by all criminal law systems, notably, under the Anglo-Saxon system (or Common Law) and the Roman-Continental system (or Civil Law). Since the accomplice to an offence may be defined as someone who associates himself in an offence committed by another 104, complicity necessarily implies the existence of a principal offence.105

528. According to one school of thought, complicity is borrowed criminality' (criminalité d'emprunt). In other words, the accomplice borrows the criminality of the principal perpetrator. By borrowed criminality, it should be understood that the physical act which constitutes the act of complicity does not have its own inherent criminality, but rather it borrows the criminality of the act committed by the principal perpetrator of the criminal enterprise. Thus, the conduct of the accomplice emerges as a crime when the crime has been consummated by the principal perpetrator. The accomplice has not committed an autonomous crime, but has merely facilitated the criminal enterprise committed by another.

529. Therefore, the issue before the Chamber is whether genocide must actually be committed in order for any person to be found guilty of complicity in genocide. The Chamber notes that, as stated above, complicity can only exist when there is a punishable, principal act, in the commission of which the accomplice has associated himself. Complicity, therefore, implies a predicate offence committed by someone other than the accomplice.

530. Consequently, the Chamber is of the opinion that in order for an accused to be found guilty of complicity in genocide, it must, first of all, be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime of genocide has, indeed, been committed.

531. The issue thence is whether a person can be tried for complicity even where the perpetrator of the principal offence himself has not being tried. Under Article 89 of the Rwandan Penal Code, accomplices > "may be prosecuted even where the perpetrator may not face prosecution for personal reasons, such as double jeopardy, death, insanity or non-identification"[unofficial translation].

As far as the Chamber is aware, all criminal systems provide that an accomplice may also be tried, even where the principal perpetrator of the crime has not been identified, or where, for any other reasons, guilt could not be proven.

532. The Chamber notes that the logical inference from the foregoing is that an individual cannot thus be both the principal perpetrator of a particular act and the accomplice thereto. An act with which an accused is being charged cannot, therefore, be characterized both as an act of genocide and an act of complicity in genocide as pertains to this accused. Consequently, since the two are mutually exclusive, the same individual cannot be convicted of both crimes for the same act.

533. As regards the physical elements of complicity in genocide (Actus Reus), three forms of accomplice participation are recognized in most criminal Civil Law systems: complicity by instigation, complicity by aiding and abetting, and complicity by procuring means106. It should be noted that the Rwandan Penal Code includes two other forms of participation, namely, incitement to commit a crime through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places or at public gatherings, or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written material or printed matter in public places or at pubic gatherings, or through the public display of placards or posters, and complicity by harbouring or aiding a criminal. Indeed, according to Article 91 of the Rwandan Penal Code:

> "An accomplice shall mean:
> 1. A person or persons who by means of gifts, promises, threats, abuse of authority or power, culpable machinations or artifice, directly incite(s) to commit such action or order(s) that such action be committed.
> 2. A person or persons who procure(s) weapons, instruments or any other means which are used in committing such action with the knowledge that they would be so used.
> 3. A person or persons who knowingly aid(s) or abet(s) the perpetrator or perpetrators of such action in the acts carried out in preparing or planning such action or in effectively committing it.
> 4. A person or persons who, whether through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places or at public gatherings, or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written material or printed matter in public places or at pubic gatherings or through the public display of placards or posters, directly incite(s) the perpetrator or perpetrators to commit such an action without prejudice to the penalties applicable to those who incite others to commit offences, even where such incitement fails to produce results.

5. A person or persons who harbour(s) or aid(s) perpetrators under the circumstances provided for under Article 257 of this Code."107 [unofficial translation]

534. The Chamber notes, first of all, that the said Article 91 of the Rwandan Penal Code draws a distinction between "instigation" (instigation), on the one hand, as provided for by paragraph 1 of said Article, and "incitation" (incitement), on the other, which is referred to in paragraph 4 of the same Article. The Chamber notes in this respect that, as pertains to the crime of genocide, the latter form of complicity, i.e. by incitement, is the offence which under the Statute is given the specific legal definition of "direct and public incitement to commit genocide," punishable under Article 2(3)c), as distinguished from "complicity in genocide." The findings of the Chamber with respect to the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide will be detailed below. That said, instigation, which according to Article 91 of the Rwandan Penal Code, assumes the form of incitement or instruction to commit a crime, only constitutes complicity if it is accompanied by, "gifts, promises, threats, abuse of authority or power, machinations or culpable artifice"108. In other words, under the Rwandan Penal Code, unless the instigation is accompanied by one of the aforesaid elements, the mere fact of prompting another to commit a crime is not punishable as complicity, even if such a person committed the crime as a result.

535. The ingredients of complicity under Common Law do not appear to be different from those under Civil Law. To a large extent, the forms of accomplice participation, namely "aid and abet, counsel and procure", mirror those conducts characterized under Civil Law as "l'aide et l'assistance, la fourniture des moyens".

536. Complicity by aiding or abetting implies a positive action which excludes, in principle, complicity by failure to act or omission. Procuring means is a very common form of complicity. It covers those persons who procured weapons, instruments or any other means to be used in the commission of an offence, with the full knowledge that they would be used for such purposes.

537. For the purposes of interpreting Article 2(3)e) of the Statute, which does not define the concept of complicity, the Chamber is of the opinion that it is necessary to define complicity as per the Rwandan Penal Code, and to consider the first three forms of criminal participation referred to in Article 91 of the Rwandan Penal Code as being the elements of complicity in genocide, thus:

- complicity by procuring means, such as weapons, instruments or any other means, used to commit genocide, with the accomplice knowing that such means would be used for such a purpose;
- complicity by knowingly aiding or abetting a perpetrator of a genocide in the planning or enabling acts thereof;
- complicity by instigation, for which a person is liable who, though not directly participating in the crime of genocide crime, gave instructions to commit genocide, through gifts, promises, threats, abuse of authority or power, machinations or culpable artifice, or who directly incited to commit genocide.

538. The intent or mental element of complicity implies in general that, at the moment he acted, the accomplice knew of the assistance he was providing in the commission of the principal offence. In other words, the accomplice must have acted knowingly.

539. Moreover, as in all criminal Civil law systems, under Common law, notably English law, generally, the accomplice need not even wish that the principal offence be committed. In the case of National Coal Board v. Gamble109, Justice Devlin stated

"an indifference to the result of the crime does not of itself negate abetting. If one man > deliberately sells to another a gun to be used for murdering a third, he may be indifferent about whether the third lives or dies and interested only the cash profit to be made out of the sale, but he can still be an aider and abettor."

In 1975, the English House of Lords also upheld this definition of complicity, when it held that willingness to participate in the principal offence did not have to be established110. As a result, anyone who knowing of another's criminal purpose, voluntarily aids him or her in it, can be convicted of complicity even though he regretted the outcome of the offence.

540. As far as genocide is concerned, the intent of the accomplice is thus to knowingly aid or abet one or more persons to commit the crime of genocide. Therefore, the Chamber is of the opinion that an accomplice to genocide need not necessarily possess the dolus specialis of genocide, namely the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as such.

541. Thus, if for example, an accused knowingly aided or abetted another in the commission of a murder, while being unaware that the principal was committing such a murder, with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the group to which the murdered victim belonged, the accused could be prosecuted for complicity in murder, and certainly not for complicity in genocide. However, if the accused knowingly aided and abetted in the commission of such a murder while he knew or had reason to know that the principal was acting with genocidal intent, the accused would be an accomplice to genocide, even though he did not share the murderer's intent to destroy the group.

542. This finding by the Chamber comports with the decisions rendered by the District Court of Jerusalem on 12 December 1961 and the Supreme Court of Israel on 29 May 1962 in the case of Adolf Eichmann111. Since Eichmann raised the argument in his defence that he was a "small cog" in the Nazi machine, both the District Court and the Supreme Court dealt with accomplice liability and found that,

> "[...] even a small cog, even an insignificant operator, is under our criminal law liable to be regarded as an accomplice in the commission of an offence, in which case he will be dealt with as if he were the actual murderer or destroyer".112

543. The District Court accepted that Eichmann did not personally devise the "Final Solution" himself, but nevertheless, as the head of those engaged in carrying out the "Final Solution" - "acting in accordance with the directives of his superiors, but [with] wide discretionary powers in planning operations on his own initiative," he incurred individual criminal liability for crimes against the Jewish people, as much as his superiors. Likewise, with respect to his subordinates who actually carried out the executions, "[...] the legal and moral responsibility of he who delivers up the victim to his death is, in our opinion, no smaller, and may be greater, than the responsibility of he who kills the victim with his own hands"113. The District Court found that participation in the extermination plan with knowledge of the plan rendered the person liable "as an accomplice to the extermination of all [...] victims from 1941 to 1945, irrespective of the extent of his participation"114.

544. The findings of the Israeli courts in this case support the principle that the mens rea, or special intent, required for complicity in genocide is knowledge of the genocidal plan, coupled with the actus reus of participation in the execution of such plan. Crucially, then, it does not appear that the specific intent to commit the crime of genocide, as reflected in the phrase "with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such," is required for complicity or accomplice liability.

545. In conclusion, the Chamber is of the opinion that an accused is liable as an accomplice to genocide if he knowingly aided or abetted or instigated one or more persons in the commission of genocide, while knowing that such a person or persons were committing genocide, even though the accused himself did not have the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.

546. At this juncture, the Chamber will address another issue, namely that which, with respect to complicity in genocide covered under Article 2(3)(e) of the Statute, may arise from the forms of participation listed in Article 6 of the Statute entitled, "Individual Criminal Responsibility," and more specifically, those covered under paragraph 1 of the same Article. Indeed, under Article 6(1), "A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime." Such forms of participation, which are summarized in the expression "[...] or otherwise aided or abetted [...]," are similar to the material elements of complicity, though they in and of themselves, characterize the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute, which include namely genocide.

547. Consequently, where a person is accused of aiding and abetting, planning, preparing or executing genocide, it must be proven that such a person acted with specific genocidal intent, i.e. the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such, whereas, as stated above, there is no such requirement to establish accomplice liability in genocide.

548. Another difference between complicity in genocide and the principle of abetting in the planning, preparation or execution a genocide as per Article 6(1), is that, in theory, complicity requires a positive act, i.e. an act of commission, whereas aiding and abetting may consist in failing to act or refraining from action. Thus, in the Jefferson and Coney cases, it was held that "The accused [...] only accidentally present [...] must know that his presence is actually encouraging the principal(s)"115. Similarly, the French Court of Cassation found that,

> "A person who, by his mere presence in a group of aggressors provided moral support to the assailants, and fully supported the criminal intent of the group, is liable as an accomplice"116[unofficial translation].

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia also concluded in the Tadic judgment that :

> "if the presence can be shown or inferred, by circumstantial or other evidence, to be knowing and to have a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act, then it is sufficient on which to base a finding of participation and assign the criminal culpability that accompanies it."117

6.3.3. Direct and Public Incitement to commit Genocide

THE CRIME OF DIRECT AND PUBLIC INCITEMENT TO COMMIT GENOCIDE, PUNISHABLE UNDER ARTICLE 2(3)(c) OF THE STATUTE

549. Under count 4, the Prosecutor charges Akayesu with direct and public incitement to commit genocide, a crime punishable under Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute.

550. Perhaps the most famous conviction for incitement to commit crimes of international dimension was that of Julius Streicher by the Nuremberg Tribunal for the virulently anti-Semitic articles which he had published in his weekly newspaper Der Stürmer. The Nuremberg Tribunal found that: "Streicher's incitement to murder and extermination, at the time when Jews in the East were being killed under the most horrible conditions, clearly constitutes persecution on political and racial grounds in connection with War Crimes, as defined by the Charter, and constitutes a Crime against Humanity". 118

551. At the time the Convention on Genocide was adopted, the delegates agreed to expressly spell out direct and public incitement to commit genocide as a specific crime, in particular, because of its critical role in the planning of a genocide, with the delegate from the USSR stating in this regard that, "It was impossible that hundreds of thousands of people should commit so many crimes unless they had been incited to do so and unless the crimes had been premeditated and carefully organized. He asked how in those circumstances, the inciters and organizers of the crime could be allowed to escape punishment, when they were the ones really responsible for the atrocities committed".119

552. Under Common law systems, incitement tends to be viewed as a particular form of criminal participation, punishable as such. Similarly, under the legislation of some Civil law countries, including Argentina, Bolivia, Chili, Peru, Spain, Uruguay and Venezuela, provocation, which is similar to incitement, is a specific form of participation in an offence120; but in most Civil law systems, incitement is most often treated as a form of complicity.

553. The Rwandan Penal Code is one such legislation. Indeed, as stated above, in the discussion on complicity in genocide, it does provide that direct and public incitement or provocation is a form of complicity. In fact, Article 91 subparagraph 4 provides that an accomplice shall mean " A person or persons who, whether through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places or at public gatherings, or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written material or printed matter in public places or at public gatherings or through the public display of placards or posters, directly incite(s) the perpetrator or perpetrators to commit such an action without prejudice to the penalties applicable to those who incite others to commit offences, even where such incitement fails to produce results". 121

554. Under the Statute, direct and public incitement is expressly defined as a specific crime, punishable as such, by virtue of Article 2(3)(c). With respect to such a crime, the Chamber deems it appropriate to first define the three terms: incitement, direct and public.

555. Incitement is defined in Common law systems as encouraging or persuading another to commit an offence122. One line of authority in Common law would also view threats or other forms of pressure as a form of incitement123. As stated above, Civil law systems punish direct and public incitement assuming the form of provocation, which is defined as an act intended to directly provoke another to commit a crime or a misdemeanour through speeches, shouting or threats, or any other means of audiovisual communication124. Such a provocation, as defined under Civil law, is made up of the same elements as direct and public incitement to commit genocide covered by Article 2 of the Statute, that is to say it is both direct and public.

556. The public element of incitement to commit genocide may be better appreciated in light of two factors: the place where the incitement occurred and whether or not assistance was selective or limited. A line of authority commonly followed in Civil law systems would regard words as being public where they were spoken aloud in a place that were public by definition125. According to the International Law Commission, public incitement is characterized by a call for criminal action to a number of individuals in a public place or to members of the general public at large by such means as the mass media, for example, radio or television 126. It should be noted in this respect that at the time Convention on Genocide was adopted, the delegates specifically agreed to rule out the possibility of including private incitement to commit genocide as a crime, thereby underscoring their commitment to set aside for punishment only the truly public forms of incitement127.

557. The "direct" element of incitement implies that the incitement assume a direct form and specifically provoke another to engage in a criminal act, and that more than mere vague or indirect suggestion goes to constitute direct incitement128. Under Civil law systems, provocation, the equivalent of incitement, is regarded as being direct where it is aimed at causing a specific offence to be committed. The prosecution must prove a definite causation between the act characterized as incitement, or provocation in this case, and a specific offence129. However, the Chamber is of the opinion that the direct element of incitement should be viewed in the light of its cultural and linguistic content. Indeed, a particular speech may be perceived as "direct" in one country, and not so in another, depending on the audience130. The Chamber further recalls that incitement may be direct, and nonetheless implicit. Thus, at the time the Convention on Genocide was being drafted, the Polish delegate observed that it was sufficient to play skillfully on mob psychology by casting suspicion on certain groups, by insinuating that they were responsible for economic or other difficulties in order to create an atmosphere favourable to the perpetration of the crime. 131

558. The Chamber will therefore consider on a case-by-case basis whether, in light of the culture of Rwanda and the specific circumstances of the instant case, acts of incitement can be viewed as direct or not, by focusing mainly on the issue of whether the persons for whom the message was intended immediately grasped the implication thereof.

559. In light of the foregoing, it can be noted in the final analysis that whatever the legal system, direct and public incitement must be defined for the purposes of interpreting Article 2(3)(c), as directly provoking the perpetrator(s) to commit genocide, whether through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places or at public gatherings, or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written material or printed matter in public places or at public gatherings, or through the public display of placards or posters, or through any other means of audiovisual communication.

560. The mens rea required for the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide lies in the intent to directly prompt or provoke another to commit genocide. It implies a desire on the part of the perpetrator to create by his actions a particular state of mind necessary to commit such a crime in the minds of the person(s) he is so engaging. That is to say that the person who is inciting to commit genocide must have himself the specific intent to commit genocide, namely, to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.

561. Therefore, the issue before the Chamber is whether the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide can be punished even where such incitement was unsuccessful. It appears from the travaux préparatoires of the Convention on Genocide that the drafters of the Convention considered stating explicitly that incitement to commit genocide could be punished, whether or not it was successful. In the end, a majority decided against such an approach. Nevertheless, the Chamber is of the opinion that it cannot thereby be inferred that the intent of the drafters was not to punish unsuccessful acts of incitement. In light of the overall travaux, the Chamber holds the view that the drafters of the Convention simply decided not to specifically mention that such a form of incitement could be punished.

562. There are under Common law so-called inchoate offences, which are punishable by virtue of the criminal act alone, irrespective of the result thereof, which may or may not have been achieved. The Civil law counterparts of inchoate offences are known as [infractions formelles] (acts constituting an offence per se irrespective of their results), as opposed to [infractions matérielles] (strict liability offences). Indeed, as is the case with inchoate offenses, in [infractions formelles], the method alone is punishable. Put another way, such offenses are "deemed to have been consummated regardless of the result achieved [unofficial translation]"132 contrary to [infractions matérielles]. Indeed, Rwandan lawmakers appear to characterize the acts defined under Article 91(4) of the Rwandan Penal Code as so-called [infractions formelles], since provision is made for their punishment even where they proved unsuccessful. It should be noted, however, that such offences are the exception, the rule being that in theory, an offence can only be punished in relation to the result envisaged by the lawmakers. In the opinion of the Chamber, the fact that such acts are in themselves particularly dangerous because of the high risk they carry for society, even if they fail to produce results, warrants that they be punished as an exceptional measure. The Chamber holds that genocide clearly falls within the category of crimes so serious that direct and public incitement to commit such a crime must be punished as such, even where such incitement failed to produce the result expected by the perpetrator.

6.4. Crimes against Humanity (Article 3 of the Statute)

Crimes against Humanity - Historical development

563. Crimes against humanity were recognized in the Charter and Judgment of the Nuremberg Tribunal, as well as in Law No. 10 of the Control Council for Germany. Article 6(c) of the Charter of Nuremberg Tribunal defines crimes against humanity as

> "..murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war, or persecutions on political, racial or religious grounds in execution of or in connexion with any crime within the jurisdiction of the Chamber, whether or not in violation of the domestic law of the country where perpetrated."

564. Article II of Law No. 10 of the Control Council Law defined crimes against humanity as:

> "Atrocities and Offenses, including but not limited to murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture, rape, or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population or persecution on political, racial or religious grounds, whether or not in violation of the domestic laws of the country where perpetrated."133

565. Crimes against humanity are aimed at any civilian population and are prohibited regardless of whether they are committed in an armed conflict, international or internal in character134. In fact, the concept of crimes against humanity had been recognised long before Nuremberg. On 28 May 1915, the Governments of France, Great Britain and Russia made a declaration regarding the massacres of the Armenian population in Turkey, denouncing them as "crimes against humanity and civilisation for which all the members of the Turkish government will be held responsible together with its agents implicated in the massacres".135 The 1919 Report of the Commission on the Responsibility of the Authors of the War and on Enforcement of Penalties formulated by representatives from several States and presented to the Paris Peace Conference also referred to "offences against ... the laws of humanity".136

566. These World War I notions derived, in part, from the Martens clause of the Hague Convention (IV) of 1907, which referred to "the usages established among civilised peoples, from the laws of humanity, and the dictates of the public conscience". In 1874, George Curtis called slavery a "crime against humanity". Other such phrases as "crimes against mankind" and "crimes against the human family" appear far earlier in human history (see 12 N.Y.L. Sch. J. Hum. Rts 545 (1995)).

567. The Chamber notes that, following the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, the concept of crimes against humanity underwent a gradual evolution in the Eichmann, Barbie, Touvier and Papon cases.

568. In the Eichmann case, the accused, Otto Adolf Eichmann, was charged with offences under Nazi and Nazi Collaborators (punishment) Law, 5710/1950, for his participation in the implementation of the plan know as the Final Solution of the Jewish problem'. Pursuant to Section I (b) of the said law:

> "Crime against humanity means any of the following acts: murder, extermination, enslavement, starvation or deportation and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population , and persecution on national, racial, religious or political grounds."137

The district court in the Eichmann stated that crimes against humanity differs from genocide in that for the commission of genocide special intent is required. This special intent is not required for crimes against humanity138. Eichmann was convicted by the District court and sentenced to death. Eichmann appealed against his conviction and his appeal was dismissed by the supreme court.

569. In the Barbie case, the accused, Klaus Barbie, who was the head of the Gestapo in Lyons from November 1942 to August 1944, during the wartime occupation of France, was convicted in 1987 of crimes against humanity for his role in the deportation and extermination of civilians. Barbie appealed in cassation, but the appeal was dismissed. For the purposes of the present Judgment, what is of interest is the definition of crimes against humanity employed by the Court. The French Court of Cassation, in a Judgment rendered on 20 December 1985, stated:

> Crimes against humanity, within the meaning of Article 6(c) of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal annexed to the London Agreement of 8 August 1945, which were not subject to statutory limitation of the right of prosecution, even if they were crimes which could also be classified as war crimes within the meaning of Article 6(b) of the Charter, were inhumane acts and persecution committed in a systematic manner in the name of a State practising a policy of ideological supremacy, not only against persons by reason of their membership of a racial or religious community, but also against the opponents of that policy, whatever the form of their opposition. (Words italicized by the Court)139

570. This was affirmed in a Judgment of the Court of Cassation of 3 June 1988, in which the Court held that:

> The fact that the accused, who had been found guilty of one of the crimes enumerated in Article 6(c) of the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal, in perpetrating that crime took part in the execution of a common plan to bring about the deportation or extermination of the civilian population during the war, or persecutions on political, racial or religious grounds, constituted not a distinct offence or an aggravating circumstance but rather *an essential element of the crime against humanity, consisting of the fact that the acts charged were performed in a systematic manner in the name of a State practising by those means a policy of ideological supremacy.*140(Emphasis added)

571. The definition of crimes against humanity developed in Barbie was further developed in the Touvier case. In that case, the accused, Paul Touvier, had been a high-ranking officer in the Militia (Milice) of Lyons, which operated in "Vichy" France during the German occupation. He was convicted of crimes against humanity for his role in the shooting of seven Jews at Rillieux on 29 June 1994 as a reprisal for the assassination by members of the Resistance, on the previous day, of the Minister for Propaganda of the "Vichy" Government.

572. The Court of Appeal applied the definition of crimes against humanity used in Barbie, stating that:

> The specific intent necessary to establish a crime against humanity was the intention to take part in the execution of a common plan by committing, in a systematic manner, inhuman acts or persecutions in the name of a State practising a policy of ideological supremacy.141

573. Applying this definition, the Court of Appeal held that Touvier could not be guilty of crimes against humanity since he committed the acts in question in the name of the "Vichy" State, which was not a State practising a policy of ideological supremacy, although it collaborated with Nazi Germany, which clearly did practice such a policy.

574. The Court of Cassation allowed appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal, on the grounds that the crimes committed by the accused had been committed at the instigation of a Gestapo officer, and to that extent were linked to Nazi Germany, a State practising a policy of ideological supremacy against persons by virtue of their membership of a racial or religious community. Therefore the crimes could be categorised as crimes against humanity. Touvier was eventually convicted of crimes against humanity by the Cour d'Assises des Yvelines on 20 April 1994.142

575. The definition of crimes against humanity used in Barbie was later affirmed by the ICTY in its Vukovar Rule 61 Decision of 3 April 1996 (IT-95-13-R61), to support its finding that crimes against humanity applied equally where the victims of the acts were members of a resistance movement as to where the victims were civilians:

> "29. ... Although according to the terms of Article 5 of the Statute of this Tribunal combatants in the traditional sense of the term cannot be victims of a crime against humanity, this does not apply to individuals who, at one particular point in time, carried out acts of resistance. As the Commission of Experts, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780, noted, "it seems obvious that Article 5 applies first and foremost to civilians, meaning people who are not combatants. This, however, should not lead to any quick conclusions concerning people who at one particular point in time did bear arms. ... Information of the overall circumstances is relevant for the interpretation of the provision in a spirit consistent with its purpose." (Doc S/1994/674, para. 78).

576. This conclusion is supported by case law. In the Barbie case, the French Cour de Cassation said that:

> "inhumane acts and persecution which, in the name of a State practising a policy of ideological hegemony, were committed systematically or collectively not only against individuals because of their membership in a racial or religious group but also against the adversaries of that policy whatever the form of the opposition" could be considered a crime against humanity. (Cass. Crim. 20 December 1985).

577. Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court defines a crime against humanity as any of the enumerated acts committed as part of a widespread of systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack. These enumerated acts are murder; extermination; enslavement; deportation or forcible transfer of population; imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law; torture; rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity; persecution against any identifiable group or collectively on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender or other grounds that are universally recognised as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this article or any other crime within the jurisdiction of the Court; enforced disappearance of persons; the crime of apartheid; other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering , or serious injury to body or mental or physical health.143

Crimes against Humanity in Article 3 of the Statute of the Tribunal

578. The Chamber considers that Article 3 of the Statute confers on the Chamber the jurisdiction to prosecute persons for various inhumane acts which constitute crimes against humanity. This category of crimes may be broadly broken down into four essential elements, namely :

(i) the act must be inhumane in nature and character, causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health;
(ii) the act must be committed as part of a wide spread or systematic attack;
(iii) the act must be committed against members of the civilian population;
(iv) the act must be committed on one or more discriminatory grounds, namely, national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds.

The act must be committed as part of a wide spread or systematic attack.

579. The Chamber considers that it is a prerequisite that the act must be committed as part of a wide spread or systematic attack and not just a random act of violence. The act can be part of a widespread or systematic attack and need not be a part of both.144

580. The concept of widespread' may be defined as massive, frequent, large scale action, carried out collectively with considerable seriousness and directed against a multiplicity of victims. The concept of systematic' may be defined as thoroughly organised and following a regular pattern on the basis of a common policy involving substantial public or private resources. There is no requirement that this policy must be adopted formally as the policy of a state. There must however be some kind of preconceived plan or policy. 145

581. The concept of attack' maybe defined as a unlawful act of the kind enumerated in Article 3(a) to (I) of the Statute, like murder, extermination, enslavement etc. An attack may also be non violent in nature, like imposing a system of apartheid, which is declared a crime against humanity in Article 1 of the Apartheid Convention of 1973, or exerting pressure on the population to act in a particular manner, may come under the purview of an attack, if orchestrated on a massive scale or in a systematic manner.

The act must be directed against the civilian population

582. The Chamber considers that an act must be directed against the civilian population if it is to constitute a crime against humanity. Members of the civilian population are people who are not taking any active part in the hostilities, including members of the armed forces who laid down their arms and those persons placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause.146 Where there are certain individuals within the civilian population who do not come within the definition of civilians , this does not deprive the population of its civilian character.147

The act must be committed on discriminatory grounds

583. The Statute stipulates that inhumane acts committed against the civilian population must be committed on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds.' Discrimination on the basis of a person's political ideology satisfies the requirement of political' grounds as envisaged in Article 3 of the Statute. For definitions on national, ethnic, racial or religious grounds see supra.

584. Inhumane acts committed against persons not falling within any one of the discriminatory categories could constitute crimes against humanity if the perpetrator's intention was to further his attacks on the group discriminated against on one of the grounds mentioned in Article 3 of the Statute. The perpetrator must have the requisite intent for the commission of crimes against humanity. 148

The enumerated acts

585. Article 3 of the Statute sets out various acts that constitute crimes against humanity, namely: murder; extermination; enslavement; deportation; imprisonment; torture; rape; persecution on political, racial and religious grounds; and; other inhumane acts. Although the category of acts that constitute crimes against humanity are set out in Article 3, this category is not exhaustive. Any act which is inhumane in nature and character may constitute a crime against humanity, provided the other elements are met. This is evident in (i) which caters for all other inhumane acts not stipulated in (a) to (h) of Article 3.

586. The Chamber notes that the accused is indicted for murder, extermination, torture, rape and other acts that constitute inhumane acts. The Chamber in interpreting Article 3 of the Statute, shall focus its discussion on these acts only.

Murder

587. The Chamber considers that murder is a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 3 (a) of the Statute. The International Law Commission discussed the inhumane act of murder in the context of the definition of crimes against humanity and concluded that the crime of murder is clearly understood and defined in the national law of every state and therefore there is no need to further explain this prohibited act.

588. The Chamber notes that article 3(a) of the English version of the Statute refers to "Murder", whilst the French version of the Statute refers to "Assassinat". Customary International Law dictates that it is the act of "Murder" that constitutes a crime against humanity and not "Assassinat". There are therefore sufficient reasons to assume that the French version of the Statute suffers from an error in translation.

589. The Chamber defines murder as the unlawful, intentional killing of a human being. The requisite elements of murder are :

1. the victim is dead;
2. the death resulted from an unlawful act or omission of the accused or a subordinate;
3. at the time of the killing the accused or a subordinate had the intention to kill or inflict grievous bodily harm on the deceased having known that such bodily harm is likely to cause the victim's death, and is reckless whether death ensures or not.

590. Murder must be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population. The victim must be a member of this civilian population. The victim must have been murdered because he was discriminated against on national, ethnic, racial, political or religious grounds.

Extermination

591. The Chamber considers that extermination is a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 3 (c) of the Statute. Extermination is a crime which by its very nature is directed against a group of individuals. Extermination differs from murder in that it requires an element of mass destruction which is not required for murder.

592. The Chamber defines the essential elements of extermination as the following :

1. the accused or his subordinate participated in the killing of certain named or described persons;
2. the act or omission was unlawful and intentional.
3. the unlawful act or omission must be part of a widespread or systematic attack;
4. the attack must be against the civilian population;
5. the attack must be on discriminatory grounds, namely: national, political, ethnic, racial, or religious grounds.

Torture

593. The Chamber considers that torture is a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 3(f) of the Statute. Torture may be defined as :

..any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.'149

594. The Chamber defines the essential elements of torture as :

(i) The perpetrator must intentionally inflict severe physical or mental pain or suffering upon the victim for one or more of the following purposes:

(a) to obtain information or a confession from the victim or a third person;
(b) to punish the victim or a third person for an act committed or suspected of having been committed by either of them;
(c) for the purpose of intimidating or coercing the victim or the third person;
(d) for any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

(ii) The perpetrator was himself an official, or acted at the instigation of, or with the consent or acquiescence of, an official or person acting in an official capacity.

595. The Chamber finds that torture is a crime against humanity if the following further elements are satisfied :

(a) Torture must be perpetrated as part of a widespread or systematic attack;
(b) the attack must be against the civilian population;
(c) the attack must be launched on discriminatory grounds, namely: national, ethnic, racial, religious and political grounds.

Rape

596. Considering the extent to which rape constitute crimes against humanity, pursuant to Article 3(g) of the Statute, the Chamber must define rape, as there is no commonly accepted definition of this term in international law. While rape has been defined in certain national jurisdictions as non-consensual intercourse, variations on the act of rape may include acts which involve the insertion of objects and/or the use of bodily orifices not considered to be intrinsically sexual.

597. The Chamber considers that rape is a form of aggression and that the central elements of the crime of rape cannot be captured in a mechanical description of objects and body parts. The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment does not catalogue specific acts in its definition of torture, focusing rather on the conceptual frame work of state sanctioned violence. This approach is more useful in international law. Like torture, rape is used for such purposes as intimidation, degradation, humiliation, discrimination, punishment, control or destruction of a person. Like torture, rape is a violation of personal dignity, and rape in fact constitutes torture when inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.

598. The Chamber defines rape as a physical invasion of a sexual nature, committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive. Sexual violence which includes rape, is considered to be any act of a sexual nature which is committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive. This act must be committed :

(a) as part of a wide spread or systematic attack;
(b) on a civilian population;
(c) on certained catalogued discriminatory grounds, namely: national, ethnic, political, racial, or religious grounds.

6.5. Violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II (Article 4 of the Statute)

Article 4 of the Statute

599. Pursuant to Article 4 of the Statute, the Chamber shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977. These violations shall include, but shall not be limited to:

a) violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment;

b) collective punishments;

c) taking of hostages;

d) acts of terrorism;

e) outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

f) pillage;

g) the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as indispensable by civilised peoples;

h) threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

600. Prior to developing the elements for the above cited offences contained within Article 4 of the Statute, the Chamber deems it necessary to comment upon the applicability of common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II as regards the situation which existed in Rwanda in 1994 at the time of the events contained in the Indictment.

Applicability of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II

601. The four 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocol I thereto generally apply to international armed conflicts only, whereas Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions extends a minimum threshold of humanitarian protection as well to all persons affected by a non-international conflict, a protection which was further developed and enhanced in the 1977 Additional Protocol II. In the field of international humanitarian law, a clear distinction as to the thresholds of application has been made between situations of international armed conflicts, in which the law of armed conflicts is applicable as a whole, situations of non-international (internal) armed conflicts, where Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II are applicable, and non-international armed conflicts where only Common Article 3 is applicable. Situations of internal disturbances are not covered by international humanitarian law.

602. The distinction pertaining to situations of conflicts of a non-international character emanates from the differing intensity of the conflicts. Such distinction is inherent to the conditions of applicability specified for Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II respectively. Common Article 3 applies to "armed conflicts not of an international character", whereas for a conflict to fall within the ambit of Additional Protocol II, it must "take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups which, under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to implement this Protocol". Additional Protocol II does not in itself establish a criterion for a non-international conflict, rather it merely develops and supplements the rules contained in Common Article 3 without modifying its conditions of application.[150]

603. It should be stressed that the ascertainment of the intensity of a non-international conflict does not depend on the subjective judgment of the parties to the conflict. It should be recalled that the four Geneva Conventions, as well as the two Protocols, were adopted primarily to protect the victims, as well as potential victims, of armed conflicts. If the application of international humanitarian law depended solely on the discretionary judgment of the parties to the conflict, in most cases there would be a tendency for the conflict to be minimized by the parties thereto. Thus, on the basis of objective criteria, both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II will apply once it has been established there exists an internal armed conflict which fulfills their respective pre-determined criteria[151].

604. The Security Council, when delimiting the subject-matter jurisdiction of the ICTR[152], incorporated violations of international humanitarian law which may be committed in the context of both an international and an internal armed conflict:

" Given the nature of the conflict as non-international in character, the Council has incorporated within the subject-matter jurisdiction of the Tribunal violations of international humanitarian law which may either be committed in both international and internal armed conflicts, such as the crime of genocide and crimes against humanity, or may be committed only in internal armed conflicts, such as violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions, as more fully elaborated in article 4 of Additional Protocol II.

In that latter respect, the Security Council has elected to take a more expansive approach to the choice of the applicable law than the one underlying the Statute of the Yugoslav Tribunal, and included within the subject-matter jurisdiction of the Rwanda Tribunal international instruments regardless of whether they were considered part of customary international law or whether they have customarily entailed the individual criminal responsibility of the perpetrator of the crime. Article 4 of the Statute, accordingly, includes violations of Additional Protocol II, which, as a whole, has not yet been universally recognized as part of customary international law, for the first time criminalizes common article 3 of the four Geneva Conventions."153

605. Although the Security Council elected to take a more expansive approach to the choice of the subject-matter jurisdiction of the Tribunal than that of the ICTY, by incorporating international instruments regardless of whether they were considered part of customary international law or whether they customarily entailed the individual criminal responsibilty of the perpetrator of the crime, the Chamber believes, an essential question which should be addressed at this stage is whether Article 4 of the Statute includes norms which did not, at the time the crimes alleged in the Indictment were committed, form part of existing international customary law. Moreover, the Chamber recalls the establishment of the ICTY 154, during which the UN Secretary General asserted that in application of the principle of nullum crimen sine lege the International Tribunal should apply rules of International Humanitarian law which are beyond any doubt part of customary law.

606. Notwithstanding the above, a possible approach would be for the Chamber not to look at the nature of the building blocks of Article 4 of the Statute nor for it to categorize the conflict as such but, rather, to look only at the relevant parts of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II in the context of this trial. Indeed, the Security Council has itself never explicitly determined how an armed conflict should be characterised. Yet it would appear that, in the case of the ICTY, the Security Council, by making reference to the four Geneva Conventions, considered that the conflict in the former Yugoslavia was an international armed conflict, although it did not suggest the criteria by which it reached this finding. Similarly, when the Security Council added Additional Protocol II to the subject matter jurisdiction of the ICTR, this could suggest that the Security Council deemed the conflict in Rwanda as an Additional Protocol II conflict. Thus, it would not be necessary for the Chamber to determine the precise nature of the conflict, this having already been pre-determined by the Security Council. Article 4 of the Statute would be applicable irrespective of the Additional Protocol II question', so long as the conflict were covered, at the very least, by the customary norms of Common Article 3. Findings would thus be made on the basis of whether or not it were proved beyond a reasonable doubt that there has been a serious violation in the form of one or more of the acts enumerated in Article 4 of the Statute.

607. However, the Chamber recalls the way in which the Prosecutor has brought some of the counts against the accused, namely counts 6, 8, 10, 12 and 15. For the first four of these, there is mention only of Common Article 3 as the subject matter jurisdiction of the particular alleged offences, whereas count 15 makes an additional reference to Additional Protocol II. To so add Additional Protocol II should not, in the opinion of the Chamber, be dealt with as a mere expansive enunciation of a ratione materiae which has been pre-determined by the Security Council. Rather, the Chamber finds it necessary and reasonable to establish the applicability of both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II individually. Thus, if an offence, as per count 15, is charged under both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II, it will not suffice to apply Common Article 3 and take for granted that Article 4 of the Statute, hence Additional Protocol II, is therefore automatically applicable.

608. It is today clear that the norms of Common Article 3 have acquired the status of customary law in that most States, by their domestic penal codes, have criminalized acts which if committed during internal armed conflict, would constitute violations of Common Article 3. It was also held by the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Tadic judgment 155 that Article 3 of the ICTY Statute (Customs of War), being the body of customary international humanitarian law not covered by Articles 2, 4, and 5 of the ICTY Statute, included the regime of protection established under Common Article 3 applicable to armed conflicts not of an international character. This was in line with the view of the ICTY Appeals Chamber stipulating that Common Article 3 beyond doubt formed part of customary international law, and further that there exists a corpus of general principles and norms on internal armed conflict embracing Common Article 3 but having a much greater scope156.

609. However, as aforesaid, Additional Protocol II as a whole was not deemed by the Secretary-General to have been universally recognized as part of customary international law. The Appeals Chamber concurred with this view inasmuch as "[m]any provisions of this Protocol [II] can now be regarded as declaratory of existing rules or as having crystallised in emerging rules of customary law[ ]", but not all.157

610. Whilst the Chamber is very much of the same view as pertains to Additional Protocol II as a whole, it should be recalled that the relevant Article in the context of the ICTR is Article 4(2) (Fundamental Guarantees) of Additional Protocol II 158. All of the guarantees, as enumerated in Article 4 reaffirm and supplement Common Article 3159 and, as discussed above, Common Article 3 being customary in nature, the Chamber is of the opinion that these guarantees did also at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment form part of existing international customary law.

Individual Criminal Responsibility

611. For the purposes of an international criminal Tribunal which is trying individuals, it is not sufficient merely to affirm that Common Article 3 and parts of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II - which comprise the subject-matter jurisdiction of Article 4 of the Statute - form part of international customary law. Even if Article 6 of the Statute provides for individual criminal responsibility as pertains to Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute, it must also be shown that an individual committing serious violations of these customary norms incurs, as a matter of custom, individual criminal responsibility thereby. Otherwise, it might be argued that these instruments only state norms applicable to States and Parties to a conflict, and that they do not create crimes for which individuals may be tried.

612. As regards individual criminal responsibility for serious violations of Common Article 3, the ICTY has already affirmed this principle in the Tadic case. In the ICTY Appeals Chamber, the problem was posed thus:

> " Even if customary international law includes certain basic principles applicable to both internal and international armed conflicts, Appellant argues that such provisions do not entail individual criminal responsibility when breaches are committed in internal armed conflicts; these provisions cannot, therefore, fall within the scope of the International Tribunal's jurisdiction.160"

613. Basing itself on rulings of the Nuremberg Tribunal, on "elements of international practice which show that States intend to criminalise serious breaches of customary rules and principles on internal conflicts", as well as on national legislation designed to implement the Geneva Conventions, the ICTY Appeals Chamber reached the conclusion:

" All of these factors confirm that customary international law imposes criminal liability for serious violations of common Article 3, as supplemented by other general principles and rules on protection of victims of internal armed conflict, and for breaching certain fundamental principles and rules regarding means and methods of combat in civil strife.161"

614. This was affirmed by the ICTY Trial Chamber when it rendered in the Tadic judgment162.

615. The Chamber considers this finding of the ICTY Appeals Chamber convincing and dispositive of the issue, both with respect to serious violations of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II.

616. It should be noted, moreover, that Article 4 of the ICTR Statute states that, "The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977" (emphasis added). The Chamber understands the phrase "serious violation" to mean "a breach of a rule protecting important values [which] must involve grave consequences for the victim", in line with the above-mentioned Appeals Chamber Decision in Tadic , paragraph 94. The list of serious violations which is provided in Article 4 of the Statute is taken from Common Article 3 - which contains fundamental prohibitions as a humanitarian minimum of protection for war victims - and Article 4 of Additional Protocol II, which equally outlines "Fundamental Guarantees". The list in Article 4 of the Statute thus comprises serious violations of the fundamental humanitarian guarantees which, as has been stated above, are recognized as part of international customary law. In the opinion of the Chamber, it is clear that the authors of such egregious violations must incur individual criminal responsibility for their deeds.

617. The Chamber, therefore, concludes the violation of these norms entails, as a matter of customary international law, individual responsibility for the perpetrator. In addition to this argument from custom, there is the fact that the Geneva Conventions of 1949 (and thus Common Article 3) were ratified by Rwanda on 5 May 1964 and Additional Protocol II on 19 November 1984, and were therefore in force on the territory of Rwanda at the time of the alleged offences. Moreover, all the offences enumerated under Article 4 of the Statute constituted crimes under Rwandan law in 1994. Rwandan nationals were therefore aware, or should have been aware, in 1994 that they were amenable to the jurisdiction of Rwandan courts in case of commission of those offences falling under Article 4 of the Statute.

The nature of the conflict

618. As aforesaid, it will not suffice to establish that as the criteria of Common Article 3 have been met, the whole of Article 4 of the Statute, hence Additional Protocol II, will be applicable. Where alleged offences are charged under both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II, which has a higher threshold, the Prosecutor will need to prove that the criteria of applicability of, on the one hand, Common Article 3 and, on the other, Additional Protocol II have been met. This is so because Additional Protocol II is a legal instrument the overall sole purpose of which is to afford protection to victims in conflicts not of an international character. Hence, the Chamber deems it reasonable and necessary that, prior to deciding if there have been serious violations of the provisions of Article 4 of the Statute, where a specific reference has been made to Additional Protocol II in counts against an accused, it must be shown that the conflict is such as to satisfy the requirements of Additional Protocol II.

Common Article 3

619. The norms set by Common Article 3 apply to a conflict as soon as it is an armed conflict not of an international character'. An inherent question follows such a description, namely, what constitutes an armed conflict? The Appeals Chamber in the Tadic decision on Jurisdiction163 held "that an armed conflict exists whenever there is [...] protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a State. International humanitarian law applies from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extends beyond the cessation of hostilities until [...] in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement is reached". Similarly, the Chamber notes that the ICRC commentary on Common Article 3164 suggests useful criteria resulting from the various amendments discussed during the Diplomatic Conference of Geneva, 1949, inter alia:

> That the Party in revolt against the de jure Government possesses an organized military force, an authority responsible for its acts, acting within a determinate territory and having the means of respecting and ensuring the respect for the Convention.
>
> That the legal Government is obliged to have recourse to the regular military forces against insurgents organized as military in possession of a part of the national territory.
>
> (a) That the de jure Government has recognized the insurgents as belligerents; or
>
> (b) that it has claimed for itself the rights of a belligerent; or
>
> (c) that it has accorded the insurgents recognition as belligerents for the purposes only of the present Convention; or
>
> (d) that the dispute has been admitted to the agenda of the Security Council or the General Assembly of the United Nations as being a threat to international peace, a breach of peace, or an act of aggression.

620. The above reference' criteria were enunciated as a means of distinguishing genuine armed conflicts from mere acts of banditry or unorganized and short-lived insurrections165. The term, armed conflict' in itself suggests the existence of hostilities between armed forces organized to a greater or lesser extent166. This consequently rules out situations of internal disturbances and tensions. For a finding to be made on the existence of an internal armed conflict in the territory of Rwanda at the time of the events alleged, it will therefore be necessary to evaluate both the intensity and organization of the parties to the conflict.

621. Evidence presented in relation to paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment167, namely the testimony of Major-General Dallaire, has shown there to have been a civil war between two groups, being on the one side, the governmental forces, the FAR, and on the other side, the RPF. Both groups were well-organized and considered to be armies in their own right. Further, as pertains to the intensity of conflict, all observers to the events, including UNAMIR and UN Special rapporteurs, were unanimous in characterizing the confrontation between the two forces as a war, an internal armed conflict. Based on the foregoing, the Chamber finds there existed at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment an armed conflict not of an international character as covered by Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

Additional Protocol II

622. As stated above, Additional Protocol II applies to conflicts which "take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups which, under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to implement this Protocol".

623. Thus, the conditions to be met to fulfil the material requirements of applicability of Additional Protocol II at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment would entail showing that:

(i) an armed conflict took place in the territory of a High Contracting Party, namely Rwanda, between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups;

(ii) the dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups were under responsible command;

(iii) the dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups were able to exercise such control over a part of their territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations; and

(iv) the dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups were able to implement Additional Protocol II.

624. As per Common Article 3, these criteria have to be applied objectively, irrespective of the subjective conclusions of the parties involved in the conflict. A number of precisions need to be made about the said criteria prior to the Chamber making a finding thereon.168

625. The concept of armed conflict has already been discussed in the previous section pertaining to Common Article 3. It suffices to recall that an armed conflict is distinguished from internal disturbances by the level of intensity of the conflict and the degree of organization of the parties to the conflict. Under Additional Protocol II, the parties to the conflict will usually either be the government confronting dissident armed forces, or the government fighting insurgent organized armed groups. The term, armed forces' of the High Contracting Party is to be defined broadly, so as to cover all armed forces as described within national legislations.

626. The armed forces opposing the government must be under responsible command, which entails a degree of organization within the armed group or dissident armed forces. This degree of organization should be such so as to enable the armed group or dissident forces to plan and carry out concerted military operations, and to impose discipline in the name of a de facto authority. Further, these armed forces must be able to dominate a sufficient part of the territory so as to maintain sustained and concerted military operations and to apply Additional Protocol II. In essence, the operations must be continuous and planned. The territory in their control is usually that which has eluded the control of the government forces.

627. In the present case, evidence has been presented to the Chamber which showed there was at the least a conflict not of a international character in Rwanda at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment169. The Chamber, also taking judicial notice of a number of UN official documents dealing with the conflict in Rwanda in 1994, finds, in addition to the requirements of Common Article 3 being met, that the material conditions listed above relevant to Additional Protocol II have been fulfilled. It has been shown that there was a conflict between, on the one hand, the RPF, under the command of General Kagame, and, on the other, the governmental forces, the FAR. The RPF increased its control over the Rwandan territory from that agreed in the Arusha Accords to over half of the country by mid-May 1994, and carried out continuous and sustained military operations until the cease fire on 18 July 1994 which brought the war to an end. The RPF troops were disciplined and possessed a structured leadership which was answerable to authority. The RPF had also stated to the International Committee of the Red Cross that it was bound by the rules of International Humanitarian law170. The Chamber finds the said conflict to have been an internal armed conflict within the meaning of Additional Protocol II. Further, the Chamber finds that conflict took place at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment.

Ratione personae

628. Two distinct issues arise with respect to personal jurisdiction over serious violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II - the class of victims and the class of perpetrators.

The class of victims

629. Paragraph 10 of the Indictment reads, "The victims referred to in this Indictment were, at all relevant times, persons not taking an active part in the hostilities". This is a material averment for charges involving Article 4 inasmuch as Common Article 3 is for the protection of "persons taking no active part in the hostilities" (Common Article 3(1)), and Article 4 of Additional Protocol II is for the protection of, "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities". These phrases are so similar that, for the Chamber's purposes, they may be treated as synonymous. Whether the victims referred to in the Indictment are indeed persons not taking an active part in the hostilities is a factual question, which has been considered in the Factual Findings on the General Allegations (paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment).

The class of perpetrators

630. The four Geneva Conventions - as well as the two Additional Protocols - as stated above, were adopted primarily to protect the victims as well as potential victims of armed conflicts. This implies thus that the legal instruments are primarily addressed to persons who by virtue of their authority, are responsible for the outbreak of, or are otherwise engaged in the conduct of hostilities. The category of persons to be held accountable in this respect then, would in most cases be limited to commanders, combatants and other members of the armed forces.

631. Due to the overall protective and humanitarian purpose of these international legal instruments, however, the delimitation of this category of persons bound by the provisions in Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II should not be too restricted. The duties and responsibilities of the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols, hence, will normally apply only to individuals of all ranks belonging to the armed forces under the military command of either of the belligerent parties, or to individuals who were legitimately mandated and expected, as public officials or agents or persons otherwise holding public authority or de facto representing the Government, to support or fulfil the war efforts. The objective of this approach, thus, would be to apply the provisions of the Statute in a fashion which corresponds best with the underlying protective purpose of the Conventions and the Protocols.

632. However, the Indictment does not specifically aver that the accused falls in the class of persons who may be held responsible for serious violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II. It has not been alleged that the accused was officially a member of the Rwandan armed forces' (in its broadest sense). It could, hence, be objected that, as a civilian, Article 4 of the Statute, which concerns the law of armed conflict, does not apply to him.

633. It is, in fact, well-established, at least since the Tokyo trials, that civilians may be held responsible for violations of international humanitarian law. Hirota, the former Foreign Minister of Japan, was convicted at Tokyo for crimes committed during the rape of Nanking171. Other post-World War II trials unequivocally support the imposition of individual criminal liability for war crimes on civilians where they have a link or connection with a Party to the conflict172.The principle of holding civilians liable for breaches of the laws of war is, moreover, favored by a consideration of the humanitarian object and purpose of the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols, which is to protect war victims from atrocities.

634. Thus it is clear from the above that the laws of war must apply equally to civilians as to combatants in the conventional sense. Further, the Chamber notes, in light of the above dicta, that the accused was not, at the time of the events in question, a mere civilian but a bourgmestre. The Chamber therefore concludes that, if so established factually, the accused could fall in the class of individuals who may be held responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law, in particular serious violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II.

Ratione loci

635. There is no clear provision on applicability ratione loci either in Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II. However, in this respect Additional Protocol II seems slightly clearer, in so far as it provides that the Protocol shall be applied "to all persons affected by an armed conflict as defined in Article 1". The commentary thereon 173 specifies that this applicability is irrespective of the exact location of the affected person in the territory of the State engaged in the conflict. The question of applicability ratione loci in non-international armed conflicts, when only Common Article 3 is of relevance should be approached the same way, i.e. the article must be applied in the whole territory of the State engaged in the conflict. This approach was followed by the Appeals Chamber in its decision on jurisdiction in Tadic , wherein it was held that "the rules contained in [common] Article 3 also apply outside the narrow geographical context of the actual theatre of combat operations"174.

636. Thus the mere fact that Rwanda was engaged in an armed conflict meeting the threshold requirements of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II means that these instruments would apply over the whole territory hence encompassing massacres which occurred away from the war front'. From this follows that it is not possible to apply rules in one part of the country (i.e. Common Article 3) and other rules in other parts of the country (i.e. Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II). The aforesaid, however, is subject to the caveat that the crimes must not be committed by the perpetrator for purely personal motives.

Conclusion

637. The applicability of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II has been dealt with above and findings made thereon in the context of the temporal setting of events alleged in the Indictment. It remains for the Chamber to make its findings with regard the accused's culpability under Article 4 of the Statute. This will be dealt with in section 7 of the judgment.

7. LEGAL FINDINGS

7.1. Counts 6, 8, 10 and 12- Violations of Common Article 3 (murder and cruel treatment) and Count 15 - Violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II (outrages upon personal dignity, in particular rape...)

638. Counts 6, 8, 10, and 12 of the Indictment charge Akayesu with Violations of Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, and Count 15 charges Akayesu of Violations of Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocol II thereto. All these counts are covered by

Article 4 of the Statute.

639. It has already been proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict not of an international character between the Government of Rwanda and the RPF in 1994 at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment175. The Chamber found the conflict to meet the requirements of Common Article 3 as well as Additional Protocol II.

640. For Akayesu to be held criminally responsible under Article 4 of the Statute, it is incumbent on the Prosecutor to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Akayesu acted for either the Government or the RPF in the execution of their respective conflict objectives. As stipulated earlier in this judgment, this implies that Akayesu would incur individual criminal responsibility for his acts if it were proved that by virtue of his authority, he is either responsible for the outbreak of, or is otherwise directly engaged in the conduct of hostilities. Hence, the Prosecutor will have to demonstrate to the Chamber and prove that Akayesu was either a member of the armed forces under the military command of either of the belligerent parties, or that he was legitimately mandated and expected, as a public official or agent or person otherwise holding public authority or de facto representing the Government, to support or fulfil the war efforts. Indeed, the Chamber recalls that Article 4 of the Statute also applies to civilians.

641. Evidence presented during trial established that, at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment, Akayesu wore a military jacket, carried a rifle, he assisted the military on their arrival in Taba by undertaking a number of tasks, including reconnaissance and mapping of the commune, and the setting up of radio communications, and he allowed the military to use his office premises. The Prosecutor relied in part on these facts to demonstrate that there was a nexus between the actions of Akayesu and the conflict. Further the Prosecutor argued that reference by Akayesu to individuals as RPF accomplices was indicative of Akayesu connecting his actions to the conflict between the Government and the RPF.

642. It has been established in this judgment that Akayesu embodied the communal authority and that he held an executive civilian position in the territorial administrative subdivision of Commune. However, the Prosecutor did not bring sufficient evidence to show how and in what capacity Akayesu was supporting the Government effort against the RPF. The evidence as pertains to the wearing of a military jacket and the carrying of a rifle, in the opinion of the Chamber, are not significant in demonstrating that Akayesu actively supported the war effort. Furthermore, the Chamber finds that the limited assistance given to the military by the accused in his role as the head of the commune does not suffice to establish that he actively supported the war effort. Moreover, the Chamber recalls it has been proved that references to RPF accomplices in the context of the events which occurred in Taba were to be understood as meaning Tutsi.176

643. Considering the above, and based on all the evidence presented in this case, the Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the acts perpetrated by Akayesu in the commune of Taba at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment were committed in conjunction with the armed conflict. The Chamber further finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akayesu was a member of the armed forces, or that he was legitimately mandated and expected, as a public official or agent or person otherwise holding public authority or de facto representing the Government, to support or fulfil the war efforts.

644. The Tribunal therefore finds that Jean-Paul Akayesu did not incur individual criminal responsibility under counts 6, 8, 10, 12 & 15 of the Indictment.

7.2. Count 5 - Crimes against humanity (murder)

645. Count 5 of the indictment charges the Accused with a crime against humanity (murder), pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute, for the acts alleged in paragraphs 15 and 18 of the indictment.

646. The definition of crimes against humanity, including the various elements that comprise the enumerated offences under Article 3 of the Statute have already been discussed.

647. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was present and addressed a gathering in Gishyeshye sector on the morning of 19 April 1994. The Chamber however finds that it has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused during this address, mentioned the names of Juvénal Rukundakuvuga or Emmanuel Sempabwa as Tutsi to be killed and as a result thereof they were subsequently killed.

648. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that during his search for Ephrem Karangwa, the Accused participated in the killing of Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome, by ordering their deaths and being present when they were killed.

649. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome were civilians, taking no active part in the hostilities that prevailed in Rwanda in 1994 and the only reason they were killed is because they were Tutsi.

650. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome, the Accused had the requisite intent to kill them as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Rwanda on ethnic grounds.

651. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome, the Accused is individually criminally responsible for the death of these victims, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

652. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in Rwanda on 19 April 1994 and the conduct of the Accused formed part of this attack.

653. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing of Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome constitutes murder committed, as part of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population on ethnic grounds and as such constitutes a crime against humanity. Accordingly, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused is guilty as charged in count 5 of the indictment.

7.3. Count 7 - Crimes against Humanity (murder)

654. Count 7 of the indictment charges the Accused with a crime against humanity (murder), pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute, for the acts alleged in paragraph 19 of the indictment.

655. The definition of crimes against humanity, including the various elements that comprise the enumerated offences under Article 3 of the Statute have already been discussed.

656. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that on 19 April 1994, the Accused took eight detained refugees who were civilians and who did not take any active part in the hostilities that prevailed in Rwanda in 1994 and handed them over to the local militia, known as the Interahamwe with orders that they be killed.

657. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Interahamwe, acting on the orders from the Accused killed these eight refugees, at the bureau communal in the presence of the Accused.

658. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of the eight refugees, the Accused had the requisite intent to kill them as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Rwanda on ethnic grounds and as such he is criminally responsible for the killing of these eight refugees.

659. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of the eight refugees, the Accused is individually criminally responsible for the death of these victims, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

660. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in Rwanda on 19 April 1994 and the conduct of the Accused formed part of this attack.

661. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing of these eight refugees constitutes murder committed, as part of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population on ethnic grounds and as such constitutes a crime against humanity. Accordingly, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused is guilty as charged in count 7 of the indictment.

7.4. Count 9 - Crimes against Humanity (murder)

662. Count 9 of the indictment charges the Accused with a crime against humanity (murder), pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute, for the acts alleged in paragraph 20 of the indictment.

663. The definition of crimes against humanity, including the various elements that comprise the enumerated offences under Article 3 of the Statute have already been discussed.

664. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that on 19 April 1994, the Accused ordered the local people and militia known as the Interahamwe to kill intellectual people.

665. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Interahamwe and the local population, acting on the orders of the Accused killed five teachers namely; a professor known as Samuel; Tharcisse who was killed in the presence of the Accused; Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé.

666. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that these five teachers were civilians and did not take any active part in the hostilities that prevailed in Rwanda in 1994.

667. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that these five teachers were killed because they were Tutsi.

668. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of these five teachers, the Accused had the requisite intent to kill them as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Rwanda on ethnic grounds.

669. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of these five teachers, the Accused is individually criminally responsible for the death of these victims, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

670. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in Rwanda on 19 April 1994 and the conduct of the Accused formed part of this attack.

671. The Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing of these five people constitute murder committed, as part of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population on ethnic grounds and as such constitutes a crime against humanity. Accordingly, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused is guilty as charged in count 9 of the indictment.

7.5. Count 4 - Direct and Public Incitement to commit Genocide

672. Count 4 deals with the allegations described in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment, relating, essentially, to the speeches that Akayesu reportedly made at a meeting held in Gishyeshye on 19 April 1994. The Prosecutor alleges that, through his speeches, Akayesu committed the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, a crime punishable under Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute.

673. The Trial Chamber made the following factual findings on the events described in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment. The Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that:

(i) Akayesu, in the early hours of 19 April 1994, joined a crowd of over 100 people which had gathered around the body of a young member of the Interahamwe in Gishyeshye.
(ii) He seized that opportunity to address the people and, owing, particularly, to his functions as bourgmestre and his authority over the population, he led the gathering and the proceedings.
(iii) It has been established that Akayesu then clearly urged the population to unite in order to eliminate what he termed the sole enemy: the accomplices of the Inkotanyi.
(iv) On the basis of consistent testimonies heard throughout the proceedings and the evidence of Dr. Ruzindana, appearing as expert witness on linguistic matters, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the population understood Akayesu's call as one to kill the Tutsi. Akayesu himself was fully aware of the impact of his speech on the crowd and of the fact that his call to fight against the accomplices of the Inkotanyi would be construed as a call to kill the Tutsi in general.
(v) During the said meeting, Akayesu received from the Interahamwe documents which included lists of names, and read from the lists to the crowd by stating, in particular, that the names were those of RPF accomplices.
(vi) Akayesu testified that the lists contained, especially, the name of Ephrem Karangwa, whom he named specifically, while being fully aware of the consequences of doing so. Indeed, he admitted before the Chamber that, at the time of the events alleged in the Indictment, to label anyone in public as an accomplice of the RPF would put such a person in danger.
(vii) The Chamber is of the opinion that there is a causal relationship between Akayesu's speeches at the gathering of 19 April 1994 and the ensuing widespread massacres of Tutsi in Taba.

674. From the foregoing, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that, by the above-mentioned speeches made in public and in a public place, Akayesu had the intent to directly create a particular state of mind in his audience necessary to lead to the destruction of the Tutsi group, as such. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the said acts constitute the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, as defined above.

675. In addition, the Chamber finds that the direct and public incitement to commit genocide as engaged in by Akayesu, was indeed successful and did lead to the destruction of a great number of Tutsi in the commune of Taba.

7.6. Count 11 - Crimes against Humanity (torture)

676. In the light of its factual findings with regard to the allegations set forth in paragraphs 16,17, 21, 22 and 23 of the Indictment, the Tribunal considers the criminal responsibility of the Accused on Count 11 for his acts in relation to the beatings of Victims U, V, W, X, Y and Z.

677. The Tribunal notes that evidence has been presented at trial regarding the beating of victims not specifically named in paragraphs 16,17,21,22 and 23 of the Indictment. Witness J, for example, testified that she was slapped and her brother was beaten by the Accused. As counts 11 and 12 are restricted to acts in relation to the beatings of Victims U, V, W, X, Y and Z, the Tribunal will restrict its legal findings to these acts.

678. The Tribunal notes that paragraph 16 of the Indictment alleges that the Accused threatened to kill the husband and child of Victim U. The factual finding of the Tribunal is that the Accused threatened to kill Victim U, not her husband and child. The Tribunal considers that the allegations set forth in the Indictment sufficiently informed the Accused, in accordance with the requirements of due process, of the charge against him. The material allegation is that he threatened Victim U. Whether the threat was against her life or the life of her immediate family is not legally significant in the Tribunal's view.

679. The Tribunal notes that Paragraph 21 of the Indictment refers to "communal police" without reference to the Interahamwe, although Paragraph 23 refers to "men under Jean Paul Akayesu's authority". In its factual findings, the Tribunal has determined that only Mugenzi was a communal police officer. The other person actively involved in the interrogation and beating of Victim Z and possibly the interrogation of Victim W was Francois, an Interahamwe. As Francois and Mugenzi were both acting in the presence of and under the immediate authority of the Accused, as bourgemester, the Tribunal finds that in relation to the Accused the acts of Francois may be treated as equivalent to the acts of Mugenzi.

680. The Tribunal notes that the Accused himself participated in the beating of Victim Y by hitting her on the back with a club, and the beating of Victim Z by stepping on his face and holding his foot there while others beat him. It is alleged that he interrogated them but it is not specifically alleged in Paragraphs 21 and 23 of the Indictment that the Accused committed acts of physical violence. The Tribunal finds, however, that the allegations in the Indictment were sufficient notice to the Accused of the incidents in question, and that the exact role of the Accused in these incidents was a matter which was adjudicated at trial in accordance with the requirements of due process. For these reasons, the Tribunal finds that the Accused may be judged criminally responsible for his direct participation in these beatings, despite the absence of a specific allegation of direct participation by the Accused in the relevant paragraphs of the Indictment.

681. The Tribunal interprets the word "torture", as set forth in Article 3(f) of its Statute, in accordance with the definition of torture set forth in the United Nations Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, that is "any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity."

682. The Tribunal finds that the following acts committed by the Accused or by others in the presence of the Accused, at his instigation or with his consent or acquiescence, constitute torture:

(i) the interrogation of Victim U, under threat to her life, by the Accused at the bureau communal, on 19 April 1994;
(ii) the beating of Victim Y outside of her house by the Accused and Mugenzi on 20 April 1994;
(iii) the interrogation of Victim Y, under threat to her life, by the Accused, and the beating of Victim Y under interrogation by Mugenzi, in the presence of the Accused, at a mine at Buguli on 20 April 1994;
(iv) the interrogation of Victim W, under threat to her life, at a mine at Buguli by the Accused, on 20 April 1994;
(v) the beating of Victim Z under interrogation by the Accused, and by Mugenzi and Francois in the presence of the Accused, in Gishyeshye Sector, on 20 April 1994;
(vi) the forcing of Victim Z to beat Victim Y under interrogation, by Francois in the presence of the Accused, in Gishyeshye Sector, on 20 April 1994;
(vii) the beating of Victim Z and Victim V by Mugenzi and Francois and the interrogation of Victim V, under threat to his life, by the Accused outside the house of Victim V, on 20 April 1994;

683. Accordingly, the Tribunal finds the Accused criminally responsible on Count 11 under Article 6(1) of its Statute for commission of the following acts of torture as crimes against humanity under Article 3 (a) of its Statute:

(i) his interrogation of Victim U, under threat to her life, at the bureau communal on 19 April 1994;
(ii) his beating of Victim Y, outside of her house, on 20 April 1994;
(iii) his interrogation of Victim Y, under threat to her life, at a mine at Buguli on 20 April 1994;
(iv) his interrogation of Victim W, under threat to her life, at a mine at Buguli on 20 April 1994;
(v) his beating of Victim Z in Gishyeshye Sector, on 20 April 1994;
(vi) his interrogation of Victim V, under threat to his life, outside of his house, on 20 April 1994.

684. The Tribunal finds the Accused criminally responsible on Count 11 under Article 6(1) of its Statute for implicitly ordering, as well as instigating, aiding and abetting, the following acts of torture, which were committed in his presence by men acting on his behalf, as crimes against humanity under Article 3 (a) of its Statute:

(i) the beating of Victim Y outside of her house by Mugenzi on 20 April 1994;
(ii) the beating of Victim Y, under interrogation, by Mugenzi, at a mine at Buguli on 20 April 1994;
(iii) the beating of Victim Z, under interrogation, by Mugenzi and Francois, in Gishyeshye Sector on 20 April 1994;
(iv) the forcing of Victim Z to beat Victim Y, under interrogation, by Francois, in Gishyeshye Sector on 20 April 1994.

7.7. Count 13 (rape) and Count 14 (other inhumane acts) - Crimes against Humanity

685. In the light of its factual findings with regard to the allegations of sexual violence set forth in paragraphs 12A and 12B of the Indictment, the Tribunal considers the criminal responsibility of the Accused on Count 13, crimes against humanity (rape), punishable by Article 3(g) of the Statute of the Tribunal and Count 14, crimes against humanity (other inhumane acts), punishable by Article 3(i) of the Statute.

686. In considering the extent to which acts of sexual violence constitute crimes against humanity under Article 3(g) of its Statute, the Tribunal must define rape, as there is no commonly accepted definition of the term in international law. The Tribunal notes that many of the witnesses have used the term "rape" in their testimony. At times, the Prosecution and the Defence have also tried to elicit an explicit description of what happened in physical terms, to document what the witnesses mean by the term "rape". The Tribunal notes that while rape has been historically defined in national jurisdictions as non-consensual sexual intercourse, variations on the form of rape may include acts which involve the insertion of objects and/or the use of bodily orifices not considered to be intrinsically sexual. An act such as that described by Witness KK in her testimony - the Interahamwes thrusting a piece of wood into the sexual organs of a woman as she lay dying - constitutes rape in the Tribunal's view.

687. The Tribunal considers that rape is a form of aggression and that the central elements of the crime of rape cannot be captured in a mechanical description of objects and body parts. The Tribunal also notes the cultural sensitivities involved in public discussion of intimate matters and recalls the painful reluctance and inability of witnesses to disclose graphic anatomical details of sexual violence they endured. The United Nations Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment does not catalogue specific acts in its definition of torture, focusing rather on the conceptual framework of state-sanctioned violence. The Tribunal finds this approach more useful in the context of international law. Like torture, rape is used for such purposes as intimidation, degradation, humiliation, discrimination, punishment, control or destruction of a person. Like torture, rape is a violation of personal dignity, and rape in fact constitutes torture when it is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.

688. The Tribunal defines rape as a physical invasion of a sexual nature, committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive. The Tribunal considers sexual violence, which includes rape, as any act of a sexual nature which is committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive. Sexual violence is not limited to physical invasion of the human body and may include acts which do not involve penetration or even physical contact. The incident described by Witness KK in which the Accused ordered the Interahamwe to undress a student and force her to do gymnastics naked in the public courtyard of the bureau communal, in front of a crowd, constitutes sexual violence. The Tribunal notes in this context that coercive circumstances need not be evidenced by a show of physical force. Threats, intimidation, extortion and other forms of duress which prey on fear or desperation may constitute coercion, and coercion may be inherent in certain circumstances, such as armed conflict or the military presence of Interahamwe among refugee Tutsi women at the bureau communal. Sexual violence falls within the scope of "other inhumane acts", set forth Article 3(i) of the Tribunal's Statute, "outrages upon personal dignity," set forth in Article 4(e) of the Statute, and "serious bodily or mental harm," set forth in Article 2(2)(b) of the Statute.

689. The Tribunal notes that as set forth by the Prosecution, Counts 13-15 are drawn on the basis of acts as described in paragraphs 12(A) and 12(B) of the Indictment. The allegations in these paragraphs of the Indictment are limited to events which took place "on or near the bureau communal premises." Many of the beatings, rapes and murders established by the evidence presented took place away from the bureau communal premises, and therefore the Tribunal does not make any legal findings with respect to these incidents pursuant to Counts 13, 14 and 15.

690. The Tribunal also notes that on the basis of acts described in paragraphs 12(A) and 12(B), the Accused is charged only pursuant to Article 3(g) (rape) and 3(i) (other inhumane acts) of its Statute, but not Article 3(a)(murder) or Article 3(f)(torture). Similarly, on the basis of acts described in paragraphs 12(A) and 12(B), the Accused is charged only pursuant to Article 4(e)(outrages upon personal dignity) of its Statute, and not Article 4(a)(violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment). As these paragraphs are not referenced elsewhere in the Indictment in connection with these other relevant Articles of the Statute of the Tribunal, the Tribunal concludes that the Accused has not been charged with the beatings and killings which have been established as Crimes Against Humanity or Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions. The Tribunal notes, however, that paragraphs 12(A) and 12(B) are referenced in Counts 1-3, Genocide and it considers the beatings and killings, as well as sexual violence, in connection with those counts.

691. The Tribunal has found that the Accused had reason to know and in fact knew that acts of sexual violence were occurring on or near the premises of the bureau communal and that he took no measures to prevent these acts or punish the perpetrators of them. The Tribunal notes that it is only in consideration of Counts 13, 14 and 15 that the Accused is charged with individual criminal responsibility under Section 6(3) of its Statute. As set forth in the Indictment, under Article 6(3) "an individual is criminally responsible as a superior for the acts of a subordinate if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or punish the perpetrators thereof." Although the evidence supports a finding that a superior/subordinate relationship existed between the Accused and the Interahamwe who were at the bureau communal, the Tribunal notes that there is no allegation in the Indictment that the Interahamwe, who are referred to as "armed local militia," were subordinates of the Accused. This relationship is a fundamental element of the criminal offence set forth in Article 6(3). The amendment of the Indictment with additional charges pursuant to Article 6(3) could arguably be interpreted as implying an allegation of the command responsibility required by Article 6(3). In fairness to the Accused, the Tribunal will not make this inference. Therefore, the Tribunal finds that it cannot consider the criminal responsibility of the Accused under Article 6(3).

692. The Tribunal finds, under Article 6(1) of its Statute, that the Accused, by his own words, specifically ordered, instigated, aided and abetted the following acts of sexual violence:

(i) the multiple acts of rape of ten girls and women, including Witness JJ, by numerous Interahamwe in the cultural center of the bureau communal;
(ii) the rape of Witness OO by an Interahamwe named Antoine in a field near the bureau communal;
(iii) the forced undressing and public marching of Chantal naked at the bureau communal.

693. The Tribunal finds, under Article 6(1) of its Statute, that the Accused aided and abetted the following acts of sexual violence, by allowing them to take place on or near the premises of the bureau communal, while he was present on the premises in respect of (i) and in his presence in respect of (ii) and (iii), and by facilitating the commission of these acts through his words of encouragement in other acts of sexual violence, which, by virtue of his authority, sent a clear signal of official tolerance for sexual violence, without which these acts would not have taken place:

(i) the multiple acts of rape of fifteen girls and women, including Witness JJ, by numerous Interahamwe in the cultural center of the bureau communal;

(ii) the rape of a woman by Interahamwe in between two buildings of the bureau communal, witnessed by Witness NN;
(iii) the forced undressing of the wife of Tharcisse after making her sit in the mud outside the bureau communal, as witnessed by Witness KK;

694. The Tribunal finds, under Article 6(1) of its Statute, that the Accused, having had reason to know that sexual violence was occurring, aided and abetted the following acts of sexual violence, by allowing them to take place on or near the premises of the bureau communal and by facilitating the commission of such sexual violence through his words of encouragement in other acts of sexual violence which, by virtue of his authority, sent a clear signal of official tolerance for sexual violence, without which these acts would not have taken place:

(i) the rape of Witness JJ by an Interahamwe who took her from outside the bureau communal and raped her in a nearby forest;
(ii) the rape of the younger sister of Witness NN by an Interahamwe at the bureau communal;
(iii) the multiple rapes of Alexia, wife of Ntereye, and her two nieces Louise and Nishimwe by Interahamwe near the bureau communal;
(iv) the forced undressing of Alexia, wife of Ntereye, and her two nieces Louise and Nishimwe, and the forcing of the women to perform exercises naked in public near the bureau communal.

695. The Tribunal has established that a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian ethnic population of Tutsis took place in Taba, and more generally in Rwanda, between April 7 and the end of June, 1994. The Tribunal finds that the rape and other inhumane acts which took place on or near the bureau communal premises of Taba were committed as part of this attack.

COUNT 13

696. The Accused is judged criminally responsible under Article 3(g) of the Statute for the following incidents of rape:

(i) the rape of Witness JJ by an Interahamwe who took her from outside the bureau communal and raped her in a nearby forest;
(ii) the multiple acts of rape of fifteen girls and women, including Witness JJ, by numerous Interahamwe in the cultural center of the bureau communal;
(iii) the multiple acts of rape of ten girls and women, including Witness JJ, by numerous Interahamwe in the cultural center of the bureau communal;
(iv) the rape of Witness OO by an Interahamwe named Antoine in a field near the bureau communal;
(v) the rape of a woman by Interahamwe in between two buildings of the bureau communal, witnessed by Witness NN;
(vi) the rape of the younger sister of Witness NN by an Interahamwe at the bureau communal;
(vii) the multiple rapes of Alexia, wife of Ntereye, and her two nieces Louise and Nishimwe by Interahamwe near the bureau communal.

COUNT 14

697. The Accused is judged criminally responsible under Article 3(i) of the Statute for the following other inhumane acts:

(i) the forced undressing of the wife of Tharcisse outside the bureau communal, after making her sit in the mud, as witnessed by Witness KK;
(ii) the forced undressing and public marching of Chantal naked at the bureau communal;
(iii) the forced undressing of Alexia, wife of Ntereye, and her two nieces Louise and Nishimwe, and the forcing of the women to perform exercises naked in public near the bureau communal.

7.8. Count 1 - Genocide, Count 2 - Complicity in Genocide

698. Count 1 relates to all the events described in the Indictment. The Prosecutor submits that by his acts alleged in paragraphs 12 to 23 of the Indictment, Akayesu committed the crime of genocide, punishable under Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute.

699. Count 2 also relates to all the acts alleged in paragraphs 12 to 23 of the Indictment. The Prosecutor alleges that, by the said acts, the accused committed the crime of complicity in genocide, punishable under Article 2(3)(e) of the Statute.

700. In its findings on the applicable law, the Chamber indicated supra that, in its opinion, the crime of genocide and that of complicity in genocide were two distinct crimes, and that the same person could certainly not be both the principal perpetrator of, and accomplice to, the same offence. Given that genocide and complicity in genocide are mutually exclusive by definition, the accused cannot obviously be found guilty of both these crimes for the same act. However, since the Prosecutor has charged the accused with both genocide and complicity in genocide for each of the alleged acts, the Chamber deems it necessary, in the instant case, to rule on counts 1 and 2 simultaneously, so as to determine, as far as each proven fact is concerned, whether it constituted genocide or complicity in genocide.

701. Hence the question to be addressed is against which group the genocide was allegedly committed. Although the Prosecutor did not specifically state so in the Indictment, it is obvious, in the light of the context in which the alleged acts were committed, the testimonies presented and the Prosecutor's closing statement, that the genocide was committed against the Tutsi group. Article 2(2) of the Statute, like the Genocide Convention, provides that genocide may be committed against a national, ethnical, racial or religious group. In its findings on the law applicable to the crime of genocide supra, the Chamber considered whether the protected groups should be limited to only the four groups specifically mentioned or whether any group, similar to the four groups in terms of its stability and permanence, should also be included. The Chamber found that it was necessary, above all, to respect the intent of the drafters of the Genocide Convention which, according to the travaux préparatoires, was clearly to protect any stable and permanent group.

702. In the light of the facts brought to its attention during the trial, the Chamber is of the opinion that, in Rwanda in 1994, the Tutsi constituted a group referred to as "ethnic" in official classifications. Thus, the identity cards at the time included a reference to "ubwoko" in Kinyarwanda or "ethnie" (ethnic group) in French which, depending on the case, referred to the designation Hutu or Tutsi, for example. The Chamber further noted that all the Rwandan witnesses who appeared before it invariably answered spontaneously and without hesitation the questions of the Prosecutor regarding their ethnic identity. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that, in any case, at the time of the alleged events, the Tutsi did indeed constitute a stable and permanent group and were identified as such by all.

703. In the light of the foregoing, with respect to each of the acts alleged in the Indictment, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, based on the factual findings it has rendered regarding each of the events described in paragraphs 12 to 23 of the Indictment, of the following:

704. The Chamber finds that, as pertains to the acts alleged in paragraph 12, it has been established that, throughout the period covered in the Indictment, Akayesu, in his capacity as bourgmestre, was responsible for maintaining law and public order in the commune of Taba and that he had effective authority over the communal police. Moreover, as "leader" of Taba commune, of which he was one of the most prominent figures, the inhabitants respected him and followed his orders. Akayesu himself admitted before the Chamber that he had the power to assemble the population and that they obeyed his instructions. It has also been proven that a very large number of Tutsi were killed in Taba between 7 April and the end of June 1994, while Akayesu was bourgmestre of the Commune. Knowing of such killings, he opposed them and attempted to prevent them only until 18 April 1994, date after which he not only stopped trying to maintain law and order in his commune, but was also present during the acts of violence and killings, and sometimes even gave orders himself for bodily or mental harm to be caused to certain Tutsi, and endorsed and even ordered the killing of several Tutsi.

705. In the opinion of the Chamber, the said acts indeed incur the individual criminal responsibility of Akayesu for having ordered, committed, or otherwise aided and abetted in the preparation or execution of the killing of and causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi group. Indeed, the Chamber holds that the fact that Akayesu, as a local authority, failed to oppose such killings and serious bodily or mental harm constituted a form of tacit encouragement, which was compounded by being present to such criminal acts.

706. With regard to the acts alleged in paragraphs 12 (A) and 12 (B) of the Indictment, the Prosecutor has shown beyond a reasonable doubt that between 7 April and the end of June 1994, numerous Tutsi who sought refuge at the Taba Bureau communal were frequently beaten by members of the Interahamwe on or near the premises of the Bureau communal. Some of them were killed. Numerous Tutsi women were forced to endure acts of sexual violence, mutilations and rape, often repeatedly, often publicly and often by more than one assailant. Tutsi women were systematically raped, as one female victim testified to by saying that "each time that you met assailants, they raped you". Numerous incidents of such rape and sexual violence against Tutsi women occurred inside or near the Bureau communal. It has been proven that some communal policemen armed with guns and the accused himself were present while some of these rapes and sexual violence were being committed. Furthermore, it is proven that on several occasions, by his presence, his attitude and his utterances, Akayesu encouraged such acts, one particular witness testifying that Akayesu, addressed the Interahamwe who were committing the rapes and said that "never ask me again what a Tutsi woman tastes like"[177]. In the opinion of the Chamber, this constitutes tacit encouragement to the rapes that were being committed.

707. In the opinion of the Chamber, the above-mentioned acts with which Akayesu is charged indeed render him individually criminally responsible for having abetted in the preparation or execution of the killings of members of the Tutsi group and the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on members of said group.

708. The Chamber found supra, with regard to the facts alleged in paragraph 13 of the Indictment, that the Prosecutor failed to demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt that they are established.

709. As regards the facts alleged in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment, it is established that in the early hours of 19 April 1994, Akayesu joined a gathering in Gishyeshye and took this opportunity to address the public; he led the meeting and conducted the proceedings. He then called on the population to unite in order to eliminate what he referred to as the sole enemy: the accomplices of the Inkotanyi; and the population understood that he was thus urging them to kill the Tutsi. Indeed, Akayesu himself knew of the impact of his statements on the crowd and of the fact that his call to fight against the accomplices of the Inkotanyi would be understood as exhortations to kill the Tutsi in general. Akayesu who had received from the Interahamwe documents containing lists of names did, in the course of the said gathering, summarize the contents of same to the crowd by pointing out in particular that the names were those of RPF accomplices. He specifically indicated to the participants that Ephrem Karangwa's name was on of the lists. Akayesu admitted before the Chamber that during the period in question, that to publicly label someone as an accomplice of the RPF would put such a person in danger. The statements thus made by Akayesu at that gathering immediately led to widespread killings of Tutsi in Taba.

710. Concerning the acts with which Akayesu is charged in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment, the Chamber recalls that it has found supra that they constitute direct and public incitement to commit genocide, a crime punishable under Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute as distinct from the crime of genocide178.

711. With respect to the Prosecutor's allegations in paragraph 16 of the Indictment, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that on 19 April 1994, Akayesu on two occasions threatened to kill victim U, a Tutsi woman, while she was being interrogated. He detained her for several hours at the Bureau communal, before allowing her to leave. In the evening of 20 April 1994, during a search conducted in the home of victim V, a Hutu man, Akayesu directly threatened to kill the latter. Victim V was thereafter beaten with a stick and the butt of a rifle by a communal policeman called Mugenzi and one Francois, a member of the Interahamwe militia, in the presence of the accused. One of victim V's ribs was broken as a result of the beating.

712. In the opinion of the Chamber, the acts attributed to the accused in connection with victims U and V constitute serious bodily and mental harm inflicted on the two victims. However, while Akayesu does incur individual criminal responsibility by virtue of the acts committed against victim U, a Tutsi , for having committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on a member of the Tutsi group, such acts as committed against victim V were perpetrated against a Hutu and cannot, therefore, constitute a crime of genocide against the Tutsi group.

713. Regarding the acts alleged in paragraph 17, the Prosecutor has failed to satisfy the Chamber that they were proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

714. As for the allegations made in paragraph 18 of the Indictment, it is established that on or about 19 April 1994, Akayesu and a group of men under his control were looking for Ephrem Karangwa and destroyed his house and that of his mother . They then went to search the house of Ephrem Karangwa's brother- in- law, in Musambira commune and found his three brothers there. When the three brothers, namely Simon Mutijima, Thaddee Uwanyiligira and Jean-Chrysostome, tried to escape, Akayesu ordered that they be captured, and ordered that they be killed, and participated in their killing.

715. The Chamber holds that these acts indeed render Akayesu individually criminally responsible for having ordered, committed, aided and abetted in the preparation or execution of the killings of members of the Tutsi group and the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on members of said group.

716. Regarding the allegations in paragraph 19, the Chamber is satisfied that it has been established that on or about 19 April 1994, Akayesu took from Taba communal prison eight refugees from Runda commune, handed them over to Interahamwe militiamen and ordered that they be killed. They were killed by the Interahamwe using various traditional weapons, including machetes and small axes, in front of the Bureau communal and in the presence of Akayesu who told the killers "do it quickly". The refugees were killed because they were Tutsi.

717. The Chamber holds that by virtue of such acts, Akayesu incurs individual criminal liability for having ordered, aided and abetted in the perpetration of the killings of members of the Tutsi group and in the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on members of said group.

718. The Prosecutor has proved that, as alleged in paragraph 20 of the Indictment, on that same day, Akayesu ordered the local people to kill intellectuals and to look for one Samuel, a professor who was then brought to the Bureau communal and killed with a machete blow to the neck. Teachers in Taba commune were killed later, on Akayesu's instructions. The victims included the following: Tharcisse Twizeyumuremye, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé whose name is unknown. They were killed on the road in front of the Bureau communal by the local people and the Interahamwe with machetes and agricultural tools. Akayesu personally witnessed the killing of Tharcisse.

719. In the opinion of the Chamber, Akayesu is indeed individually criminally responsible by virtue of such acts for having ordered, aided and abetted in the preparation or execution of the killings of members of the Tutsi group and in the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on members of said group.

720. The Chamber finds that the acts alleged in paragraph 21 have been proven. It has been established that on the evening of 20 April 1994, Akayesu, and two Interahamwe militiamen and a communal policeman, one Mugenzi, who was armed at the time of the events in question, went to the house of Victim Y, a 69 year old Hutu woman, to interrogate her on the whereabouts of Alexia , the wife of Professor Ntereye. During the questioning which took place in the presence of Akayesu, the victim was hit and beaten several times. In particular, she was hit with the barrel of a rifle on the head by the communal policeman. She was forcibly taken away and ordered by Akayesu to lie on the ground. Akayesu himself beat her on her back with a stick. Later on, he had her lie down in front of a vehicle and threatened to drive over her if she failed to give the information he sought.

721. Although the above acts constitute serious bodily and mental harm inflicted on the victim, the Chamber notes that they were committed against a Hutu woman. Consequently, they cannot constitute acts of genocide against the Tutsi group.

722. As regards the allegations in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the Indictment, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that on the evening of 20 April 1994, in the course of an interrogation, Akayesu forced victim W to lay down in front of a vehicle and threatened to drive over her . That same evening, Akayesu, accompanied by Mugenzi, a communal policeman, and one Francois, an Interahamwe militiaman, interrogated victims Z and Y. The accused put his foot on the face of victim Z, causing the said victim to bleed, while the police officer and the militiaman beat the victim with the butt of their rifles. The militiaman forced victim Z to beat victim Y with a stick. The two victims were tied together, causing victim Z to suffocate. Victim Z was also beaten on the back with the blade of a machete.

723. The Chamber holds that by virtue of the above-mentioned acts Akayesu is individually criminally responsible for having ordered, committed, aided and abetted in the preparation or infliction of serious bodily or mental harm on members of the Tutsi group.

724. From the foregoing, the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, that Akayesu is individually criminally responsible, under Article 6(1) of the Statute, for having ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the commission of the acts described above in the findings made by the Chamber on paragraphs 12, 12A, 12B, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22 and 23 of the Indictment, acts which constitute the killing of members of the Tutsi group and the infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on members of said group.

725. Since the Prosecutor charged both genocide and complicity in genocide with respect to each of the above-mentioned acts, and since, as indicated supra, the Chamber is of the opinion that these charges are mutually exclusive, it must rule whether each of such acts constitutes genocide or complicity in genocide.

726. In this connection, the Chamber recalls that, in its findings on the applicable law, it held that an accused is an accomplice to genocide if he or she knowingly and wilfully aided or abetted or instigated another to commit a crime of genocide, while being aware of his genocidal plan, even where the accused had no specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such. It also found that Article 6(1) of the Statute provides for a form of participation through aiding and abetting which, though akin to the factual elements of complicity, nevertheless entails, in and of itself, the individual responsibility of the accused for the crime of genocide, in particular, where the accused had the specific intent to commit genocide, that is, the intent to destroy a particular group; this latter requirement is not needed where an accomplice to genocide is concerned.

727. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the Chamber to decide, in this instant case, whether or not Akayesu had a specific genocidal intent when he participated in the above-mentioned crimes, that is, the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a group as such.

728. As stated in its findings on the law applicable to the crime of genocide, the Chamber holds the view that the intent underlying an act can be inferred from a number of facts[179]. The Chamber is of the opinion that it is possible to infer the genocidal intention that presided over the commission of a particular act, inter alia, from all acts or utterances of the accused, or from the general context in which other culpable acts were perpetrated systematically against the same group, regardless of whether such other acts were committed by the same perpetrator or even by other perpetrators.

729. First of all, regarding Akayesu's acts and utterances during the period relating to the acts alleged in the Indictment, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, on the basis of all evidence brought to its attention during the trial, that on several occasions the accused made speeches calling, more or less explicitly, for the commission of genocide. The Chamber, in particular, held in its findings on Count 4, that the accused incurred individual criminal responsibility for the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide. Yet, according to the Chamber, the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide lies in the intent to directly lead or provoke another to commit genocide, which implies that he who incites to commit genocide also has the specific intent to commit genocide: that is, to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.

730. Furthermore, the Chamber has already established that genocide was committed against the Tutsi group in Rwanda in 1994, throughout the period covering the events alleged in the Indictment[180]. Owing to the very high number of atrocities committed against the Tutsi, their widespread nature not only in the commune of Taba, but also throughout Rwanda, and to the fact that the victims were systematically and deliberately selected because they belonged to the Tutsi group, with persons belonging to other groups being excluded, the Chamber is also able to infer, beyond reasonable doubt, the genocidal intent of the accused in the commission of the above-mentioned crimes.

731. With regard, particularly, to the acts described in paragraphs 12(A) and 12(B) of the Indictment, that is, rape and sexual violence, the Chamber wishes to underscore the fact that in its opinion, they constitute genocide in the same way as any other act as long as they were committed with the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a particular group, targeted as such. Indeed, rape and sexual violence certainly constitute infliction of serious bodily and mental harm on the victims181 and are even, according to the Chamber, one of the worst ways of inflict harm on the victim as he or she suffers both bodily and mental harm. In light of all the evidence before it, the Chamber is satisfied that the acts of rape and sexual violence described above, were committed solely against Tutsi women, many of whom were subjected to the worst public humiliation, mutilated, and raped several times, often in public, in the Bureau Communal premises or in other public places, and often by more than one assailant. These rapes resulted in physical and psychological destruction of Tutsi women, their families and their communities. Sexual violence was an integral part of the process of destruction, specifically targeting Tutsi women and specifically contributing to their destruction and to the destruction of the Tutsi group as a whole.

732. The rape of Tutsi women was systematic and was perpetrated against all Tutsi women and solely against them. A Tutsi woman, married to a Hutu, testified before the Chamber that she was not raped because her ethnic background was unknown. As part of the propaganda campaign geared to mobilizing the Hutu against the Tutsi, the Tutsi women were presented as sexual objects. Indeed, the Chamber was told, for an example, that before being raped and killed, Alexia, who was the wife of the Professor, Ntereye, and her two nieces, were forced by the Interahamwe to undress and ordered to run and do exercises "in order to display the thighs of Tutsi women". The Interahamwe who raped Alexia said, as he threw her on the ground and got on top of her, "let us now see what the vagina of a Tutsi woman takes like". As stated above, Akayesu himself, speaking to the Interahamwe who were committing the rapes, said to them: "don't ever ask again what a Tutsi woman tastes like". This sexualized representation of ethnic identity graphically illustrates that tutsi women were subjected to sexual violence because they were Tutsi. Sexual violence was a step in the process of destruction of the tutsi group - destruction of the spirit, of the will to live, and of life itself.

733. On the basis of the substantial testimonies brought before it, the Chamber finds that in most cases, the rapes of Tutsi women in Taba, were accompanied with the intent to kill those women. Many rapes were perpetrated near mass graves where the women were taken to be killed . A victim testified that Tutsi women caught could be taken away by peasants and men with the promise that they would be collected later to be executed. Following an act of gang rape, a witness heard Akayesu say "tomorrow they will be killed" and they were actually killed. In this respect, it appears clearly to the Chamber that the acts of rape and sexual violence, as other acts of serious bodily and mental harm committed against the Tutsi, reflected the determination to make Tutsi women suffer and to mutilate them even before killing them, the intent being to destroy the Tutsi group while inflicting acute suffering on its members in the process.

734. In light of the foregoing, the Chamber finds firstly that the acts described supra are indeed acts as enumerated in Article 2 (2) of the Statute, which constitute the factual elements of the crime of genocide, namely the killings of Tutsi or the serious bodily and mental harm inflicted on the Tutsi. The Chamber is further satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that these various acts were committed by Akayesu with the specific intent to destroy the Tutsi group, as such. Consequently, the Chamber is of the opinion that the acts alleged in paragraphs 12, 12A, 12B, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22 and 23 of the Indictment and proven above, constitute the crime of genocide, but not the crime of complicity; hence, the Chamber finds Akayesu individually criminally responsible for genocide.

7.9. Count 3 - Crimes against Humanity (extermination)

735. Count 3 of the indictment charges the Accused with crimes against humanity (extermination), pursuant to Article 3(b) of the Statute, for the acts alleged in paragraphs 12 to 23 of the indictment.

736. The definition of crimes against humanity, including the various elements that comprise the enumerated offences under Article 3 of the Statute have already been discussed.

737. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that during his search for Ephrem Karangwa on 19 April 1994, the Accused participated in the killing of Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra and Jean Chrysostome, by ordering their deaths and being present when they were killed.

738. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that on 19 April 1994, the Accused took eight detained refugees and handed them over to the local militia, known as the Interahamwe with orders that they be killed.

739. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Interahamwe and the local population, acting on the orders of the Accused killed five teachers namely; a professor known as Samuel; Tharcisse who was killed in the presence of the Accused; Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé.

740. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the eight refugees as well as Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra, Jean Chrysostome, Samuel, Tharcisse, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé were all civilians, taking no active part in the hostilities that prevailed in Rwanda in 1994 and the only reason they were killed is because they were Tutsi.

741. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of the eight refugees as well as Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra, Jean Chrysostome, Samuel, Tharcisse, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé, the Accused had the requisite intent to cause mass destruction, directed against certain groups of individuals, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Rwanda on ethnic grounds.

742. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that in ordering the killing of the eight refugees as well as Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra, Jean Chrysostome, Samuel, Tharcisse, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé, the Accused is individually criminally responsible for the death of these victims, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

743. The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in Rwanda on 19 April 1994 and the conduct of the Accused formed part of this attack.

744. Therefore the Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing of the eight refugees as well as Simon Mutijima, Thaddée Uwanyiligra, Jean Chrysostome, Samuel, Tharcisse, Theogene, Phoebe Uwineze and her fiancé, constitute extermination committed, as part of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population on ethnic grounds and as such constitutes a crime against humanity. Accordingly, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused is guilty as charged in count 3 of the indictment.

8. VERDICT

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, having considered all of the evidence and the arguments,

THE CHAMBER unanimously finds as follows:

Count 1: Guilty of Genocide

Count 2: Not guilty of Complicity in Genocide

Count 3: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Extermination)

Count 4: Guilty of Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide

Count 5: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Murder)

Count 6: Not guilty of Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions (Murder)

Count 7: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Murder)

Count 8: Not guilty of Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions (Murder)

Count 9: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Murder)

Count 10: Not guilty of Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions (Murder)

Count 11: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Torture)

Count 12: Not guilty of Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions (Cruel Treatment)

Count 13: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Rape)

Count 14: Guilty of Crime against Humanity (Other Inhumane Acts)

Count 15: Not guilty of Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4(2)(e) of Additional Protocol II (Outrage upon personal dignity, in particular Rape, Degrading and Humiliating Treatment and Indecent Assault)

Done in English and French,

Signed in Arusha, 2 September 1998,

Laïty Kama	Lennart Aspegren	Navanethem Pillay
Presiding Judge	Judge	Judge

(Seal of the Tribunal)

Footnotes:

Footnote 1. UN Document S/RES/955 of 8 November 1994

Footnote 2. Preliminary Report of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 935 (1994)

(UN Document S/1994/1125), Final Report of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994) (Document S/1994/1405) and Reports of the Special Rapporteur for Rwanda of the United Nations Commission of Human Rights (Document S/1994/1157, annexes I and II).

Footnote 3. The establishment of a special international tribunal was also requested by the Government of Rwanda (UN Document S/1994/1115). However, its representative at the Security Council later voted against resolution 955.

Footnote 4. S/RES/978 of 27 February 1995, operative paragraph 1

Footnote 5. The Rules were successively amended on 12 January 1996, 15 May 1996, 4 July 1996, 5 June 1997 and 8 June 1998.

Footnote 6. Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, 12 August 1949, United Nations Treaty Series, vol. 75, No.970 ("Geneva Convention I"); Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, 12 August 1949, ibid No.971 ("Geneva Convention II"); Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War , 12 August 1949, ibid, No.972 ("Geneva Convention III"); Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, 12 August 1949, ibid No.973 (" Geneva Convention IV").

Footnote 7. Protocol Additional...relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts (Protocol II), 8 June 1977, United Nations Treaty Series, vol. 1125, No. 17513

Footnote 8. On 1 October 1996, Louise Arbour succeeded Richard Goldstone as Prosecutor of the Tribunal.

Footnote 9. On 26 April 1997, Bernard Acho Muna succeeded Honoré Rakotomanana as Deputy Prosecutor of the Tribunal.

Footnote 10. Besides the people already mentioned, the Prosecutor was represented during the trial by Patricia Viseur Sellers, James K. Stewart, Luc C"té, Sara Dareshori and Rosette Muzigo-Morrison.

Footnote 11. Decision: Order for Continued Detention Awaiting Trial, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 30 May 1996.

Footnote 12. ICTR/2/L.2

Footnote 13. Decision Concerning a Replacement of an Assigned Counsel and Postponement of the Trial, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, 31 October 1996

Footnote 14. Decision on the Request of the Accused for Replacement of Assigned Counsel, The Prosecutor Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 16 January 1997.

Footnote 15. As adopted on 5 July 1995

Footnote 16. Decision on the Preliminary Motion Submitted by the Defence on the Form of the Indictment and Exclusion of Evidence. The Prosecutor v. Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 27 September 1996.

Footnote 17. Decision on Postponement of the Trial, The Prosecutor v. Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 27 September 1996. However, at the hearing of 31 October, the beginning of the trial was postponed to 9 January 1997 at the request of the Defence.

Footnote 18. Order for Temporary Transfer of Three Detained Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90*bis* of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case NO. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 31 October 1997

Footnote 19. Decison on a Motion for the Appearance and Protection of Witnesses Called by the Defence, The Prosecutor v.

Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case NO. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 9 February 1998, & Decision on the Motion for the Transfer and Protection of Defence Witnesses, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case NO. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 26 February 1998

Footnote 20. Decision on the preliminary motion submitted by the Prosecutor for protective measures for witnesses, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, 27 September 1996.

Footnote 21. Ibid 14

Footnote 22. Oral decision. The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 9 March 1998, written decision issued on 24 March 1998.

Footnote 23. Decision by the Tribunal on its Request to the Prosecutor to Submit the Written Witness Statements, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 28 January 1997.

Footnote 24. Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion to Reconsider and Rescind the Order of 18 January 1997, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 6 March 1997

Footnote 25. Leave to amend the Indictment, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 17 June 1997.

Footnote 26. Decision on the Motion to Subpoena a Witness. The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-94-T, Trial Chamber I, 19 November 1997.

Footnote 27. Order Granting Leave for Amicus Curiae to Appear, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Trial Chamber I, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, 12 February 1998.

Footnote 28. Oral decision on a Motion for Summonses and Protection of Witnesses Called by the Defence, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 17 February 1998, written decision 23 February 1998.

Footnote 29. Decision on a Defence Motion for the Appearance of an Accused as an Expert Witness, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 9 March 1998.

Footnote 30. Oral decision on the Defence Motion Requesting an Inspection of the Site and the Conduct of a Forensic Analysis, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Trial Chamber I, 17 February 1998, written decision 3 March 1998.

Footnote 31. See Evidentiary Matters'.

Footnote 32. Hearing of 26 March 1998, p.61 (French version) Footnote 33. Transcript of hearing of 26 March 1998, p.17.

Footnote 34. See Procedural Background' as relates to Decision on False Testimony.

Footnote 35. See Adrian Keane, The Modern Law of Evidence, (Butterworths: 1989), p. 120: "A cross-examiner who wishes to suggest to the jury that the witness is not speaking the truth on a particular matter must lay a proper foundation by putting that matter to the witness so that he has an opportunity of giving any explanation which is open to him", noting, however, that this is not a "hard and fast" rule.

Footnote 36. In France, Belgium and Rwanda, the bourgmestre has basically a threefold function: (1) head of the communal administration; (2) officier de l'état civil; and (3) maintaining and/or restoring the peace.

Footnote 37. Loi du 23 novembre 1963 sur l'organisation communale (reprinted in Codes et Lois du Rwanda, Reyntjens, F. et Gorus, J. (eds.), 1995).

Article 58: Le bourgmestre est, d'une manière générale, chargé d'exécuter les décisions du Conseil communal[...]

However, in case of urgency, the bourgmestre can issue police regulations and impose sanctions for violations (article 61). Furthermore, he always has the power to arrest, for a maximum of 48 hours, any person who breaches the peace (article 62).

Footnote 38. Article 56: Le bourgmestre est ... la foi représentant du pouvoir centrale dans la commune et personnification de l'autorité communale.

Footnote 39. Article 93: Le pouvoir d'engagement, de suspension et de révocation appartient au bourgmestre après avis du Conseil communal conformément aux instructions du Ministre de l'intérieur.

Footnote 40. Loi sur la police communale du 4 octobre 1977 (arrˆté présidentiel n 285/03) (reprinted in Codes et Lois du Rwanda, Reyntjens, F. et Gorus, J. (eds.), 1995)
Article 1: La Police communale est une force constituée au niveau de la commune. Elle est placée sous l'autorité du bourgmestre qui l'utilise dans sa t*f*che de maintien et de rétablissement de l'ordre public et d'exécution des lois et des règlements.
Article 4: Le bourgmestre assume l'entière responsabilité de l'organisation, du fonctionnement et du contr"le du corps de la Police communale. Il est aidé dans cette t*f*che par le brigadier.

Footnote 41. Article 104 of the Loi sur l'organisation communale: Le bourgmestre a seul autorité sur les agents de la Police communale [...]

Footnote 42. Article 104 [...] Toutefois, en cas de calamité publique ou lorsque des troubles menacent d'éclater ou ont éclaté, le préfet peut réquisitionner les agents de la Police communale et les placer sous son autorité directe.

Footnote 43. Décret loi du 23 janvier 1974 sur la création de la Gendarmerie Nationale Article 3: La Gendarmerie Nationale est une force armée instituée pour assurer le maintien de l'ordre et de l'exécution des loi.

Article 4: Les fonctions de la Gendarmerie Nationale ont un caractère ... la fois préventif et répressif. Elles se divisent en fonctions ordinaires et fonctions extraordinaires. Les fonctions ordinaires sont celles que la Gendarmerie Nationale remplit en vertu de la loi sans réquisition préalable de l'autorité.
Les fonctions extraordinaires sont celles que la Gendarmerie Nationale ne peut remplir que sur réquisition de l'autorité compétente.

Footnote 44. Article 103: [...] En outre, le préfet peut mettre ... la disposition de la commune des éléments de la Police Nationale. [actuellement, il faut sans doute lire: la Gendarmerie Nationale]

Footnote 45. Article 104: Le bourgmestre a seul autorité sur les agents de la Police communale et, par délégation de préfet, sur les éléments de la Police Nationale [lire: Gendarmerie Nationale] mis ... la disposition de la commune.

Footnote 46. Article 39 de la lois sur la Gendarmerie Nationale:

Footnote 47. éTAT D'EXCEPTION - 20 octobre 1959 - Décret:
Article 1: En cas de guerre, de mobilisation en Belgique ou au Congo, de troubles ou de circonstances graves menaçant la sécurité ou l'intérˆts publics, le gouverneur général peut déclarer l'état d'exception.
Article 4: Le gouverneur général, les autorités q'il désigne et leurs délégués peuvent:
(1) ordonner:
a) des perquisitions de jour et de nuit dans les domiciles;
b) l'évacution des personnes, leur éloignement, leur mise sous surveillance ou leur internement.
(2) interdire:

[...]
MESURES D'EXéCUTION - 10 décembre 1959 - ordonnance n 11/630
Article 1: Dans l'ensemble ou la partie du territoire déclarés en état d'exception:
a) le gouverneur de province, le commissaire de district, le premier bourgmestre, ou leurs délégués exercent les pouvoirs prévus ... l'article 4 du décret sur l'état d'exception.
b) ...

Footnote 48. Prosecution Exhibit No. 14

Footnote 49. Prosecution Exhibits Nos. 68 and 69.

Footnote 50. Prosecution Exhibit No. 74.

Footnote 51. Prosecution Exhibit No.18

Footnote 52. See the cross examination of Dr. Zachariah (witness) by one of the defence counsel.

Footnote 53. The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 9 December 1948.

Footnote 54. See supra, in the chapter on the history of Rwanda, the statements made by Léon Mugesera during the meeting of the MRND held on 22 November 1992, referred to the fact that Tutsi had supposedly come from Ethiopia and that, after they were killed, their bodies should be thrown into the Rwandan tributaries of the Nile, so that they can go back to where they supposedly came. See Prosecution Exhibit tendered and recorded as No. 74.

Footnote 55. These are the Kinyarwanda words used by witness PP

Footnote 56. The term ethnic group is, in general, used to refer to a group whose members speak the same language and/or have the same culture. Therefore, one can hardly talk of ethnic groups as regards Hutu and Tutsi, given that they share the same language and culture. However, in the context of the period in question, they were, in consonance with a distinction made by the colonizers, considered both by the authorities and themselves as belonging to two distinct ethnic groups; as such, their identity cards mentioned each holder's ethnic group. In its findings in chapter 7 of the judgment, the Chamber will come back to this issue.

Footnote 57. However, the Tutsi were not the sole victims of the massacres. Many Hutu were also killed, though not because they were Hutu, but simply because they were , for one reason or another, viewed as having sided with the Tutsi.

Footnote 58. It will be noted in this regard that in the travaux preparatoires of the Genocide Convention, the Yugoslav delegate indicated with regard to the genocide of Jews by the Nazis that the crimes began with the preparation and mobilization of the masses by means of the ideas spread by the necessary propaganda and in circles which financed this propaganda. See the Summary Records of the meetings of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September 1948-10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly.

Footnote 59. See the " Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on his mission to Rwanda, 11-12 May 1994" (E/CN.4?s-3?3, 19 May 1994), reproduced in annex "The United Nations and Rwanda, 1993-1996", Department of Public Information, United Nations, New York, 1996, p. 287.

Footnote 60. See transcript of the hearing of 12 March 1998, p. 152

Footnote 61. In the opinion of the Chamber, it is not only obvious that an accused person could be declared innocent of the crime of genocide even when it is established that genocide had indeed taken place, but also, in a case other than that of Rwanda, a person could be found guilty of genocide without necessarily having to establish that genocide had taken place throughout the country concerned.

Footnote 62. See ICTY Tadic Judgment, 7 May 1997, paras. 535 to 539

Footnote 63. supra Procedural Background',

Footnote 64. Ibid

Footnote 65. Issue no. 10, page 10, 1993

Footnote 66. Dr. Ruzindana believed that RTLM broadcasted somewhat extremist messages, abusive by their very nature, for instance "Well you will know those to kill because you will look at their noses...We will look at their nose, and so, we know which ones to kill"

Footnote 67. Issue no. 45, page 3, July 1993.

Footnote 68. Dictionnaire Rwandais-Français de l'Institut National de Recherche Scientifique (Three Volumes), Edition abrégée et adaptée par Irenée JACOB.

Footnote 69. The witness identified Trial Exhibits 31, 33 & 37, as types of weapons carried by the youths'.

Footnote 70. Kinyarwanda "Yarababwiye ngo: Burya abatutsi mubana nabo, ngo ntabwo muzi ibyo bakora, ngo ibyo naraye menyeye mu nama I Gitarama birahagije. Ubu nta mpuhwe na nkeya nagirira abatutsi, cyane cyane abize. Ngo Nabariya bari hariya twari twarabitse, ngiye kubabaha mubacire urubanza'."

Footnote 71. Kinyarwanda: "Ngo twabanaga n'abatutsi ari inzigo. Ngo IPJ Karangwa Ephrem ngo yari yarateganyije kuzanyica; ngo kugira ngo ansimbure abe burugumesitiri; ngo none natwe tubahigire kutababura."

Footnote 72. Kinyarwanda: "Ibyitso tubifite ari byinshi muri Komini yacu. Ngo inyuma ya komini hari icyitso cyitwa Tharcisse. Ubwo yari umuprofeseri."

Footnote 73. See Exhibit 120

Footnote 74. See Exhibit 134

Footnote 75. Exhibits 144, 144(a), 145 and 145(a)

Footnote 76. See Evidentiary Matters, Unus testis nullus testis'.

Footnote 77. See further Evidentiary Matters, assessment of evidence'

Footnote 78. Exhibit No. 120

Footnote 79. Judgment of 20 December 1985, Bulletin des arrets de la Cour de Cassation, 1985, p. 1038 e.s)

Footnote 80. See Virginia Morris & Michael P. Scharpf, Ibid., p.235

Footnote 81. Para. 692, page 270, The Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic , Case No. IT-94-1-T, 7 May 1997, ICTY.

Footnote 82. See, for example, the "Lexique Anglais-Français (principalement juridique) of the Council of Europe, Strasbourg, January 1997, which translates "incitement" by incitation, instigation ou provocation or the "Dictionnaire Français/ Anglais" Larousse, or the "Dictionnaire Francais/ Anglais" Super Senior Robert Collins.

Footnote 83. Article 6 of the Nuremberg Charter, Article 7(1) of the ICTY Statute and Article 2(3)(b) of the Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and the Security of Mankind.

Footnote 84. See, for instance, Article 91 of the Rwandan Penal Code, quoted and analyzed above under Chapter 6.3.2.

Footnote 85. See Virginia Morris and Michael P. Scharpf, Ibid. p.239. Comments on Article 2 (3)(f) of the Draft Code on Crimes Against the Peace and the Security of Mankind by the International Law Commission, which article considers incitement to commit a crime in the same way as Article 6(1) of the Tribunal's Statute.

Footnote 86. See infra the findings of the Chamber on the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

Footnote 87. On this issue, also see infra the findings of the Chamber on the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

Footnote 88. See Article 91 of the Penal Code, in "Codes et Lois du Rwanda", Université nationale du Rwanda, 31 December 1994 update, Volume I, 2nd edition: 1995, p.395.

Footnote 89. See infra the findings of the Chamber on the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

Footnote 90. Claude Pilloud et al., "Commentary on the Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949", 1987, p.1036.

Footnote 91. The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly, on 9 December 1948.

Footnote 92. Secretary General's Report pursuant to paragraph 2 of resolution 808 (1993) of the Security Council, 3 May 1993, S/25704.

Footnote 93. Legislative Decree of 12 February 1975, Official Gazette of the Republic of Rwanda, 1975, p.230. Rwanda acceded to the Genocide Convention but stated that it shall not be bound by Article 9 of this Convention.

Footnote 94. Summary Records of the meetings of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September-10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly.

Footnote 95. "Attorney General of the Government of Israel vs. Adolph Eichmann", "District Court" of Jerusalem, 12 December 1961, quoted in the "The International Law Reports", vol. 36,1968, p.340.

Footnote 96. Summary Records of the meetings of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September - 10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly.

Footnote 97. International Court of Justice, 1995

Footnote 98. See in particular: Roger Merle et André Vitu, " Traité de droit criminel", Cujas, 1984, (first edition, 1967), p.723 et seg.

Footnote 99. Summary Records of the meetings of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September - 10 December 1994, op. cit., p.109.

Footnote 100. Concerning this issue, see in particular Nehemiah Robinson, "The Genocide Convention. Its Origins as Interpretation", p.15, which states that victims as individuals "are important not per se but as members of the group to which they belong".

Footnote 101. International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Decision of Trial Chamber 1, Radovan Karadzic, Ratko Mladic case (Cases Nos. IT-95-5-R61 and IT-95-18-R61), Consideration of the Indictment within the framework of Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, paragraph 94.

Footnote 102. Ibid. Paragraph 95.

Footnote 103. "Principles of International Law Recognized in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the Judgment of the Tribunal," adopted by the International Law Commission of the United Nations, 1950.

Footnote 104. The Osborn's Concise Law Dictionary defines an accomplice as :"any person who, either as a principal or as an accessory, has been associated with another person in the commission of any offence.", Sweet and Maxwell, 1993, p.6

Footnote 105. It appears from the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention that only complicity in the completed offence of genocide was intended for punishment and not complicity in an attempt to commit genocide, complicity in incitement to commit genocide nor complicity in conspiracy to commit genocide, all of which were, in the eyes of some states, too vague to be punishable under the Convention.

Footnote 106. See, for example, Article 46 of the Senegalese Penal Code, Article 121-7 of the Nouveau code pénal français (New French Penal Code).

Footnote 107. See Article 91 of the Penal Code in "Codes et lois du Rwanda", Université nationale du Rwanda, 31 December 1994 update, volume 1, 2nd edition: 1995, p. 395.

Footnote 108. See especially Cour de cassation française (French Court of Cassation): Crim. 24 December 1942. JCP 19 944, ruling out prosecuting an individual as an accomplice who simply gave advice on committing a crime.

Footnote 109. National Coal Board v. Gamble, [1959] 1 QB 11.

Footnote 110. DPP for Northern Ireland v. Lynch, [1975] AC 653.

Footnote 111. Eichmann, Op. Cit., p. 340.

Footnote 112. Ibid, p. 323.

Footnote 113. District Court judgment, p. 179.

Footnote 114. Ibid p. 14.

Footnote 115. Jefferson case (1994) 1 A11 ER 270 - Coney case (1882) 8 QDB 534; See Blackstone A5.7, p. 72.

Footnote 116. Crim, 20 January 1992: Dr. pénal 1992, 194.

Footnote 117. See Judgment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Case No. IT-94-1-T, "The Prosecutor versus Dusko Tadic ", 7 May 1997, paragraph 689.

Footnote 118. Nuremberg Proceedings, Vol. 22, p. 502

Footnote 119. Summary Records of the meetings of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September - 10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly, statements by Mr. Morozov, p. 241.

Footnote 120. Cf. Jean Pradel, Droit pénal comparé (Comparative Penal Law), Précis Dalloz: 1995, p. 277-278.

Footnote 121. Penal Code in, "Codes et Lois du Rwanda" (Codes and Laws of Rwanda), National University of Rwanda, 31 December 1994 update, Volume I, 2nd Edition: 1995, p. 395.[unofficial translation]

Footnote 122. "... someone who instigates or encourages another person to commit an offence should be liable to conviction for those acts of incitement, both because he is culpable for trying to cause a crime and because such liability is a step towards crime prevention." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law, Clarendon Press, Oxford: 1995, p. 462.

Footnote 123. "The conduct required for incitement is some form of encouragement or persuasion to commit an offence, although there is authority which would regard threats or other forms of pressure as incitement." Ibid, p. 462.

Footnote 124. See for example the French Penal Code, which defines provocation as follows: "Anyone, who whether through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places or at public gatherings or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written material, printed matter, drawings, sketches, paintings, emblems, images or any other written or spoken medium or image in public places or at public gatherings, or through the public display of placards or posters, or through any other means of audiovisual communication" shall have directly provoked the perpetrator(s) to commit a crime or misdemeanour, shall be punished as an accomplice to such a crime or misdemeanour; L No. 72-546 of 1 July 1972 and L. No. 85-1317 of 13 December 1985.[Unofficial translation]

Footnote 125. French Court of Cassation, Criminal Tribunal, 2 February 1950, Bull, crim. No. 38, p. 61.

Footnote 126. The[...] Element of public incitement requires communicating the call for criminal action to a number of individuals in a public place or to members of the general public at large. Thus, an individual may communicate the call for criminal action in person in a public place or by technical means of mass communication, such as by radio or television.", Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind, art. 2(3)(f); Report of the International Law Commission to the General Assembly, 51 U.N. ORGA Supp. (No. 10), at 26, U.N. Doc. A/51/10(1996).

Footnote 127. See Yearbook of the United Nations, UN Fiftieth Edition, 1945-1995, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1995 and the Summary Records of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September - 10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly.

Footnote 128. "The element of direct incitement requires specifically urging another individual to take immediate criminal action rather than merely making a vague or indirect suggestion." Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind, art. 2(3)(f); Report of the International Law Commission to the General Assembly, 51 U.N. ORGA Supp. (No. 10), at 26, U.N. Doc. A/51/10(1996).

Footnote 129. Article 23 of the French Law of 29 July 1881 on the provoking of crimes and offenses. See especially the analysis of André Vitu, Traité de Droit criminel, Droit pénal spécial, 1982.

Footnote 130. On this subject, see above, in the findings of the Chamber on Evidentiary Matters, the developments pertaining to the analysis of the Kinyarwanda language presented by the expert witness Professor Mathias Ruzindana.

Footnote 131. Summary Records of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, 21 September- 10 December 1948, Official Records of the General Assembly.

Footnote 132. Merle and Vitu, Ibid, p. 619

Footnote 133. International Law Reports, Volume 36, p. 31.

Footnote 134. Secretary General's Report on the ICTY Statute, (S/25704), paragraph 47.

Footnote 135. Roger Clark, Crimes against Humanity at Nuremberg, The Nuremberg and International Law, page 177, Ginburgs and Kudriavtsev

Footnote 136. Id. p 178

Footnote 137. International Law Report; volume 36; 1968 at p.30

Footnote 138. ILR, Volume 36, Part 4, p5 at 41

Footnote 139. 78 ILR 136 at 137

Footnote 140. ILR pp.332 and 336. Gaz. Pal. 1988, II, p. 745)

Footnote 141. ILR, pp. 340 and 352-5.

Footnote 142. Le Monde, 21 April 1994.

Footnote 143. Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted by the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Court on 17 July 1998.

Footnote 144. In the original French version of the Statute, these requirements were worded cumulatively: "Dans le cadre dune adieux generalise et systematic", thereby significantly increasing the threshold for application of this provision. Since Customary International Law requires only that the attack be either widespread or systematic, there are sufficient reasons to assume that the French version suffers from an error in translation.

Footnote 145. Report on the International Law Commission to the General Assembly, 51 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No 10) at 94 U.N.Doc. A/51/10 (1996)

Footnote 146. Note that this definition assimilates the definition of "civilian" to the categories of person protected by Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions; an assimilation which would not appear to be problematic. Note also that the ICTY Vukovar Rule 61 Decision, of 3 April 1996, recognised that crimes against humanity could be committed where the victims were captured members of a resistance movement who at one time had borne arms, who would thus qualify as persons placed hors de combat by detention.

Footnote 147. Protocol Additional to the Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflict; Article 50.

Footnote 148. The Judgment of Prosecutor v. Du ko Tadic , case no. IT94-I-T, addressed this issue, citing the case the Federation Nationale des Deportes et Internes Resistant et Patriot and Other v. Barbie 78 Int'L. Rep.124, 125 (1995). On Appeal the Cour de Cassation quashed and annulled the judgment in part, holding that members of the resistance could be victims of crimes against humanity as long as the necessary intent for crimes against humanity was present. (Para. 641)

Footnote 149. Convention against Torture and Other Cruel , Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Article 1

Footnote 150. See Article 1 (Material field of application) of Additional Protocol II.

Footnote 151. Ibid and International Committee of the Red Cross Commentary on the Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, para. 4438, (hereinafter the "Commentary on Additional Protocol II").

Footnote 152. See the Secretary General's Report on practical arrangements for the effective functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, recommending Arusha as the seat of the Tribunal, UN Doc. S/1995/134, of 13 February 1995.

Footnote 153. Ibid paragraphs 11 - 12

Footnote 154. See the Secretary General's Report to the Security Council on establishment of the ICTY, UN Doc. S/25704, of 3 May 1993, para 34.

Footnote 155. See ICTY Tadic Judgment of 7 May 1997, paragraph 609

Footnote 156. Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, paragraphs 116 and 134.

Footnote 157. Ibid paragraph 117

Footnote 158. Save for 4(2)(f) slavery and the slave trade in all their forms

Footnote 159. As regards Collective Punishments'note should be taken of commentary thereon, para 4535 - 4536 Commentary on Additional Protocol II

Footnote 160. Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, paragraph 128

Footnote 161. Ibid paragraph 134

Footnote 162. See ICTY Tadic Judgment of 7 May 1997, paragraph 613

Footnote 163. See ICTY Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, para. 70

Footnote 164. See International Committee of the Red Cross, Commentary I Geneva Convention, Article 3, Paragraph 1 - Applicable Provisions

Footnote 165. Ibid

Footnote 166. See Commentary on Additional Protocol II, paras 4338-4341

Footnote 167. See Factual Findings - General Allegations (paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment)'

Footnote 168. See generally Commentary on Additional Protocol II, Article 1 (Material field of application)

Footnote 169. See in particular documents referred to in Factual Findings - General Allegations (paragraphs 5-11 of the Indictment)'

Footnote 170. Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on his mission to Rwanda of 11-12 May 1994 (E/CN.4/S-3/3. 19 May 1994)

Footnote 171. See General Legal Findings - Individual Criminal Responsibility (Article 6 of the Statute)'

Footnote 172. See The Hadamar Trial, Law Reports of Trials of War Criminals ("LRTWC"), Vol. I, pp. 53-54: "The accused were not members of the German armed forces, but personnel of a civilian institution. The decision of the Military Commission is, therefore, an application of the rule that the provisions of the laws or customs of war are addressed not only to combatants but also to civilians, and that civilians, by committing illegal acts against nationals of the opponent, may become guilty of war crimes"; The Essen Lynching Case, LRTWC, Vol. I, p.88, in which, inter alia, three civilians were found guilty of the killing of unarmed prisoners of war; and the Zyklon B Case, LRTWC, Vol. I, p. 103: "The decision of the Military Court in the present case is a clear example of the application of the rule that the provisions of the laws and customs of war are addressed not only to combatants and to members of state and other public authorities, but to anybody who is in a position to assist in their violation. [...] The Military Court acted on the principle that any civilian who is an accessory to a violation of the laws and customs of war is himself also liable as a war criminal".

Footnote 173. Commentary on Additional Protocol II, paragraph 4490

Footnote 174. See ICTY Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, paragraph 69

Footnote 175. supra Legal Findings on Article 4 of the Statute' and Genocide in Rwanda in Rwanda in 1994'

Footnote 176. supra Factual findings on paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Indictment'

Footnote 177. "Ntihazagire umbaza uko umututsikazi yari ameze, ngo kandi mumenye ko ejo ngo nibabica nta kintu muzambaza."

Footnote 178. See findings of the Chamber on Count 4.

Footnote 179. 1 See above the findings of the Trial Chamber on the law applicable to the crime of genocide.

Footnote 180. 2 See above, the findings of the Trial Chamber on the occurrence of genocide against the Tutsi group in Rwanda in 1994.

Footnote 181. See above, the findings of the Trial Chamber on the Chapter relating to the law applicable to the crime of genocide, in particular, the definition of the constituent elements of genocide.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

6. Prosecutor v. Mirloslav Kvocka, Milojica Kos, Mlado Radic, Zoran Zigic, Dragoljub Prcac, Decision on Judicial Notice, 8 June 2000.

2741

IN THE TRIAL CHAMBER

Before:
Judge Almiro Rodrigues, Presiding
Judge Fouad Riad
Judge Patricia Wald

Registrar:
Mrs. Dorothee de Sampayo Garrido-Nijgh

Decision of:
8 June 2000

THE PROSECUTOR

v.

MIROSLAV KVOCKA
MILOJICA KOS
MLADO RADIC
ZORAN ZIGIC
DRAGOLJUB PRCAC

DECISION ON JUDICIAL NOTICE

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Ms. Brenda Hollis
Mr. Michael Keegan
Mr. Kapila Waidyaratne

Defence Counsel:

Mr. Krstan Simic for Miroslav Kvocka
Mr. Zarko Nikolic for Milojica Kos
Mr. Toma Fila for Mladjo Radic
Mr. Simo Tosic for Zoran Zigic
Mr. Jovan Simic for Dragoljub Prcac

TRIAL CHAMBER I of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 ("the Tribunal"); NOTING Rules 54, 73 and 94 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (hereinafter "the Rules");

2742.

NOTING the "Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated facts" filed on 11 January 1999 and listing in its Annex I 583 paragraphs from the judgements in Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic ("the Tadic judgement") and Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic, et al. ("the Celebici judgement"), (hereafter, "the Prosecutor's motion dated 11 January 1999");

NOTING the decision of Trial Chamber III in this case dated 19 March 1999 taking judicial notice of facts contained in paragraphs 1 to 6, 8, 10 to 17, 21 to 70, 74, 78 to 87, 89, 96 to 113, 115 to 125 of the Annex I of the Prosecutor's Motion;

NOTING the appeal judgement of 15 July 1999 in case number IT-94-1-A, Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic, and in particular paragraph 148;

NOTING the submissions of the parties following the Prosecutor's Motion of 11 January 1999 and in particular:

NOTING the "Defence Proposal for Admission of Adjudicated Facts" filed by the accused Radic on 2 February 2000, in which he agrees to judicial notice of the facts from the Tadic judgement with the exception of those listed in paragraphs 421 and 422 of the annex to the Prosecutor's motion; and the "Motion of the Defence of the Accused Milojica Kos Concerning the Admission of Adjudicated Facts" dated 9 February 2000;

NOTING the "Prosecution's Response to Defence Motions for the Admission of Adjudicated Facts" dated 14 February 2000, in which the Prosecutor argues that if judicial notice is taken of the facts from Tadic, such decision should apply to all accused, whether or not they consent;

NOTING the "Order on Judicial Notice" dated 17 February 2000 requiring the defence to respond to the previous pleadings and specify which paragraphs, if any, in the annex to the Prosecutor's motion dated 11 January 1999 they find objectionable;

NOTING the "Defence Motion Pursuant to the Trial Order Dated 17 February 2000" filed by Zigic on 22 February 2000, in which he objects to the taking of judicial notice;

HAVING HEARD the Prosecution and defence of the accused persons, Kvocka, Kos, Radic et Zigic, in a status conference on 24 February 2000, at which time the parties stated that they had reached an agreement on the facts contained in 444 out of the 583 paragraphs proposed by the Prosecutor in the annex I to her motion dated 11 January 1999;

HAVING HEARD the defence of the accused Prcac at the Status Conference on 12 April 2000, in which he also accepted the facts included in the 444 paragraphs just mentioned;

NOTING the "Prosecution's Rule 65 ter (E) (ii) Motion for Judicial Notice" dated 28 April 2000 requesting the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of the facts contained in the 444 paragraphs mentioned about and to draw legal conclusions and in particular, to declare that the facts establish beyond a reasonable doubt the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute, notably: that there was an armed conflict in the times and places alleged in the indictment; that the victims of the acts and omissions alleged in the indictment were persons taking no active part in the hostilities pursuant to Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949; that there was a nexus between the acts or omissions alleged in the indictment and the armed conflict; that there was an ongoing widespread or systematic attack against the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat population in the times and places alleged in the indictment; that the acts or omissions alleged in the indictment were committed as part of or in the context of that widespread or systematic attack; and that the acts or omissions alleged in the indictment were committed during an armed conflict, whether international or internal in character;

2743

NOTING "Defence Response to Prosecution's Motion for Clarification of Additional Matters and Prosecution's Rule 65 Motion for Judicial Notice" dated 2 May 2000 in which the defence of Radic agrees to the judicial notice of the facts contained in the aforementioned 444 paragraphs but objects to drawing the legal conclusions related to Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute;

NOTING the "Response of the Accused Kos to the Prosecution's Rule 65*ter* (E) (ii) Motion for Judicial Notice Filed on 28 April 2000," in which he agrees to the judicial notice of the facts contained in the 44 paragraphs but opposes any Trial Chamber finding that the adjudicated facts establish beyond a reasonable doubt the common elements of the crimes under Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute;

NOTING the "Prosecution's Reply to Defence Response to "Prosecution's Motion for Clarification of Additional Matters and Prosecution's Rule 65 Motion for Judicial Notice"" dated 19 May 2000, in which the Prosecutor contends that the arguments raised by the accused Radic are without merit;

NOTING the "Defence Reply to Prosecution's Reply to Defence Response to "Prosecution's Motion for Clarification of Additional Matters and Prosecution's Rule 65 Motion for Judicial Notice"" of Radic (dated 23 May 2000 but filed 30 May 2000, following the authorization by the Trial Chamber to file a reply), in which the defence stresses its belief that drawing conclusions that the agreed upon adjudicated facts prove beyond a reasonable doubt the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 would be the practical equivalent of turning that agreement into a guilty plea;

HAVING HEARD the parties, and in particular the Defense of all accused, during the status conference dated 6 June 2000;

CONSIDERING that the defence of the accused Radic opposes the Trial Chamber's drawing legal conclusions on the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute on the grounds that Rule 94 authorizes judicial notice of facts but not legal conclusions; that the parties are not allowed to resolve legal issues through mutual negotiation; that consent to a finding on the common elements could be considered to be a confession of guilt; that the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 may only be considered at the same time as individual criminal responsibility is considered pursuant to Article 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute; that there was a widespread and/or systematic attack in Bosnia and Herzegovina not only on the Muslim and Croat civilian population, but also on the Serb population; and that the armed conflict did not have an international character;

CONSIDERING that the defence of the accused Kos opposed the Trial Chamber's drawing legal conclusions on the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute on the grounds that Rule 94 is intended to cover facts and not the legal conclusions inferred from those facts, as was held by Trial Chamber III in its decision of 25 March 1999 in Prosecutor v. Simic; and that such legal findings have no biding force except between the parties in respect of a particular case;

CONSIDERING that the Prosecutor argues that the Trial Chamber has the inherent power to draw legal conclusions from facts established beyond a reasonable doubt at any time in the proceeding; that the importance of the judicial notice by the trial chamber of the 444 adjudicated facts agreed to by the parties is that those facts are proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and conclusions may therefore be drawn from them; that in most national judicial systems, issues concerning the jurisdictional elements of crimes are often determined in limine; that during the 24 February 2000 status conference, the defence of the accused Radic accepted "the positions presented in the Tadic judgement, and the elements on the basis of which such judgement was made" and the defence of Kvocka said "we accept all the facts that are relevant to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, the conflict, the fact that it was an armed conflict, the question of the nature and the ethnicity of the prisoners and so on"; that the question of the existence of the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 is completely distinct from the determination of the individual criminal responsibility of the accused, such that establishment of those elements cannot be deemed a confession;

2744

CONSIDERING that the Prosecution believes that the defence of the accused Radic is partially correct when it says that parties are not authorized to resolve legal issues, including the common elements of the offences, by mutual negotiation, but that parties can make an agreement pursuant to Rule 65*ter* and that, while the Trial Chamber is not bound by a potential agreement between the parties about those elements it may accept the agreement as a basis for making findings about the existence of the common elements;

CONSIDERING that the amended indictment dated 31 May 1999 charges the accused with violations of the laws and customs of war and crimes against humanity in Bosnia-Herzegovina in the Prijedor municipality and in particular in the Omarska, Keraterm and Trnopolje camps between 26 May and 30 August 1992; and that the accused Ducko Tadic was convicted of crimes committed in the same places between 23 May and 31 December 1992, and his appeal is completed and his conviction has now become final; that the Celebici judgement (the Trial Chamber observes that it is now on appeal) also concerns the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina at the same time;

CONSIDERING that the parties accepted, during the status conferences on 24 February 2000 and 12 April 2000, that it was in the interests of justice, and in particular of expediting the trial, that judicial notice should be taken of facts included in 444 out of the 583 paragraphs listed by the Prosecutor from the Tadic and Celebici cases, which are relevant to the present case, since this would relieve the parties from presenting proof on uncontested issues regarding the historical context, geography, military and administrative situation of the Prijedor municipality between 23 May and 31 December 1992;

CONSIDERING that the Trial Chamber notes that Rule 94 permits it to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to matters at issue in the current proceedings; that Trial Chamber III already took judicial notice of facts included in 94 out of the 444 paragraphs in its aforementioned decision dated 19 March 1999 concerning the accused Kvocka, Kos, Radic and Zigic; that there exists an agreement between the parties about the facts included in 444 of the paragraphs mentioned in the Prosecutor's motion dated 11 January 1999; that the Trial Chamber informed the parties that it took note of the agreement;

CONSIDERING that even if Rule 94 is concerned only with judicial notice of facts and documentary evidence, no provision in the Statute or the Rules forbids the Trial Chamber, having taken account of the rights of the accused, from drawing legal conclusions based on facts thereby established beyond a reasonable doubt;

CONSIDERING that the Defense of the accused was given the opportunity to make its argument at the Status Conference on 6 June 2000, whether any legal conclusion about the common elements of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute could be based on the agreed adjudicated facts; that the Defense of the accused Kos, supported by the Defense of the accused Prcac, submitted that some of the required elements of Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute could be based upon the agreed facts;

CONSIDERING that the Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence that it is still up to the Prosecution to prove the individual responsibility of the accused for the crimes in the indictment;

2745

CONSIDERING that it results necessarily and incontestably from the facts that the parties have agreed upon and which the Trial Chamber is taking judicial notice of, that there was an armed conflict, accompanied by a widespread and systematic attack on the Muslim and Croat civilian population, in the times and places alleged in the indictment; and it further is included in these agreed upon facts that the existence of the Omarska, Keraterm and Trnopolje camps and the mistreatment of the prisoners in those camps was linked to the armed conflict and to the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population[1];

CONSIDERING that the determination so made by the Chamber does not indicate in itself that the accused are responsible for the commission of the alleged crimes; and that it is up to the Prosecutor to prove such responsibility under Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the statute, and that the defence is entitled to raise its arguments on these points in the full exercise of its rights;

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS

TAKES JUDICIAL NOTICE of the facts contained in paragraphs 1 to 330[2], 332, 334 to 339, 342, 343, 345 to 366, 475 to 492, 519 to 583 in the annex I to the motion of the Prosecutor dated 11 January 1999;

DECIDES that at the times and places alleged in the indictment, there existed an armed conflict; that this conflict included a widespread and systematic attack against notably the Muslim and Croat civilian population; and that there was a nexus between this armed conflict and the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population and the existence of the Omarska, Keraterm and Tronpolje camps and the mistreatment of the prisoners therein.

Done in English and French, the French version being authoritative.

Done this eight day of June 2000,
At The Hague
The Netherlands.

_____
Almiro Rodrigues
Presiding Judge

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

1. In particular, paragraphs 559 to 574 concern the existence of an armed conflict and paragraphs 575 to 583 are related to the existence of a nexus between the armed conflict and the mistreatment of persons detained in the camps.
2. The 19 March 1999 decision of Trial Chamber III regarding the accused Kvocka, Kos, Radic and Zigic took judicial notice of the facts in paragraphs 1 to 6, 8, 10 to 17, 21 to 70, 74, 78 to 87, 89, 96 to 113, 115 to 125 of the aforementioned Annex I.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

7. Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi, ICTR-96-15-T, Decision on Jurisdiction, 18 June 1997.

ICTR-96-15A-T
(730-719.)
3-7-97

730
Kanyabashi
2747

UNITED NATIONS NATIONS UNIES

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda
Trial Chamber 2

Before: Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding Judge
Judge Tafazzal H. Khan
Judge Navanethem Pillay

OR: ENG

Registrar: Mr. Frederik Harhoff

Decision of: 18 June 1997

THE PROSECUTOR
versus
JOSEPH KANYABASHI

Case No. ICTR-96-15-T

DECISION ON THE DEFENCE MOTION ON JURISDICTION

ICTR RECEIVED
03 JUL 1997
ACTION: REGISTRAR
COPY:

Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Yacob Haile-Mariam

Counsel for the Defence

Mr. Evans Monari
Mr. Michel Marchand

THE TRIBUNAL,

SITTING AS Trial Chamber 2 of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Tribunal"), composed of Judge William H. Sekule as Presiding Judge, Judge Tafazzal H. Khan and Judge Navanethem Pillay;

CONSIDERING the indictment submitted by the Prosecutor against Joseph Kanyabashi pursuant to Rule 47 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") and confirmed by Judge Yakov A. Ostrovsky on 15 July 1996 on the basis that there existed sufficient evidence to provide reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II thereto;

TAKING NOTE of the transfer of the accused from Belgium to the Tribunal's Detention Facilities on 8 November 1996 and his initial appearance on 29 November 1996 before this Chamber;

BEING NOW SEIZED OF the preliminary motion filed by the Defence Counsel on 17 April 1997 pursuant to Rule 73(A)(i) of the Rules, challenging the jurisdiction of the Tribunal;

HAVING ALSO RECEIVED the Prosecutor's response, filed on 22 May 1997, to the Defence Counsel's motion;

HAVING HEARD the parties at the hearing of the Defence Counsel's motion and the Prosecutor's response, held on 26 May 1997;

CONSIDERING the provisions of the UN Charter, the Statute of the Tribunal and the Rules, in particular Rules 72 and 73;

TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION the decision of 10 August 1995 of the Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Case No. IT-94-1-T, The Prosecutor versus Duško Tadić; and the decision of 2 October 1995 rendered by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Case No. IT-94-1-AR72, on appeal of the said decision of the Trial Chamber.

AFTER HAVING DELIBERATED:

1. The Defence Counsel submitted his preliminary motion pursuant to Rule 73(A)(i) of the Rules 139 days after the initial appearance of the accused. By so doing, he manifestly exceeded the time-limit prescribed in Rule 73(B) of the Rules, which stipulates that preliminary motions by the accused shall be brought within sixty (60) days after the initial appearance, and in any case before the hearing on the merits. Rule 73(C) of the Rules further lays down that failure to apply within this time-limit shall constitute a waiver of the right, unless the Trial Chamber grants relief to hear the preliminary motion upon good cause being shown by the Defence Counsel.

2. The Trial Chamber, therefore, must first examine whether there are reasonable grounds for proceeding with the examination of this preliminary motion.

A. On the Consequence of the Defence Counsel's Failure to Submit his Preliminary Motion Within Sixty Days After the Initial Appearance Of the Accused.

3. Rule 72(B) of the Rules allows the Prosecution as well as the Defence to file preliminary motions and further establishes that the Trial Chamber shall dispose thereof in limine litis. The purpose of this requirement, evidently, is to ensure that all basic questions and fundamental objections raised by the parties against the competence, the proceedings and the functions of the Tribunal are properly addressed and dealt with before the beginning of the trial on its merits.

4. Rule 73(A) identifies some of the preliminary motions which must, for reasons of expediency, be raised and disposed of before the beginning of the trial on the merits, such as objections against the jurisdiction of the Tribunal or against defects in the indictment. Rule 73(B), accordingly, specifies that such motions must be filed within sixty (60) days after the initial appearance in order to ensure their consideration well in advance of the trial. Rule 73(C) goes on to establish that failure to meet the time-limit shall constitute a waiver of the right to submit such preliminary motions. If, however, the Defence shows good cause, the Trial Chamber might grant relief from this waiver. These Rules are clear and leave no room for misunderstanding.

5. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that the Defence motion was filed out of time, and was surprised that neither the Defence nor the Prosecutor made any reference to this fact when the preliminary motion was heard by the Trial Chamber. Defence Counsel did not file any request for a waiver and did not provide the Trial Chamber with any explanation for his failure to respect the prescribed time-limit. The Prosecutor, on her part, did not object to hearing this motion

6. Notwithstanding the fact that some of the questions raised by the Defence Counsel have already been addressed in the decision rendered on 2 October 1995 by the Appeals Chamber for the Former Yugoslavia, the Trial Chamber finds that, in view of the issues raised regarding the establishment of this Tribunal, its jurisdiction and its independence and in the interests of justice, that the Defence Counsel's motion deserves a hearing and full consideration. The Trial Chamber, therefore, grants relief from the waiver suo motu and will thus proceed with the examination of the Defence Counsel's preliminary motion.

B. On the Substance of the Preliminary Motion

7. In his preliminary motion, the Defence Counsel raised a number of challenges concerning the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. These challenges can be adequately condensed into the following five principal objections:

(i) That the sovereignty of States, in particular that of the Republic of Rwanda, was violated by the fact that the Tribunal was not established by a treaty through the General Assembly;

(ii) that the Security Council lacked competence to establish an ad-hoc Tribunal under Chapter VII of the UN Charter;

(ii) that the Security Council lacked competence to establish an ad-hoc Tribunal under Chap ter VII of the UN Charter;

(iii) that the primacy of the Tribunal's jurisdiction over national courts was unjustified and violated the principle of jus de non evocando;

(iv) that the Tribunal cannot have jurisdiction over individuals directly under international law; and

(v) that the Tribunal is not and cannot be impartial and independent;

8. The Prosecutor responded that the basic arguments in the Defence Counsel's motion were addressed by the Trial Chamber and, in particular, by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in the Tadić-case. The Trial Chamber notes that, in terms of Article 12(2) of the Statute, the two Tribunals share the same Judges of their Appeals Chambers and have adopted largely similar Rules of Procedure and Evidence for the purpose of providing uniformity in the jurisprudence of the two Tribunals. The Trial Chamber, respects the persuasive authority of the decision of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and has taken careful note of the decision rendered by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadic case.

B.1. On the Defence Counsel's Objection that the Sovereignty of States, in Particular that of the Republic of Rwanda, Was Violated by the Fact that the Tribunal Was Not Established by a Treaty Through the General Assembly.

9. The Defence Counsel submitted in his written and oral submissions that the Tribunal should and in fact could only have been established by an international treaty upon recommendation of the General Assembly, which would have permitted the member States of the United Nations to express their approval or disapproval of the establishment of an ad-hoc Tribunal. The Defence Counsel argued that by leaving the establishment of the Tribunal to the Security Council through a Resolution under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, the United Nations not only encroached upon the sovereignty of the Republic of Rwanda, and other Member States, but also frustrated the endeavours of its General Assembly to establish a permanent criminal court. The Tribunal, in the Defence Counsel's view, was therefore not lawfully established.

10. The Prosecutor, in response to this first objection raised by Defence Counsel, rejected the notion that the Tribunal was unlawfully established and contended that, since there was a need for an effective and expeditious implementation of the decision to establish the Tribunal, the treaty approach would have been ineffective because of the considerable time required for the establishment of an instrument and for its entry into force.

11. The Trial Chamber finds that two issues need to be addressed. One is whether the accused as an individual has locus standi to raise a plea of infringement of the sovereignty of States, in particular that of the Republic of Rwanda, and the other is whether the sovereignty of the Republic of Rwanda and other Member States were in fact violated in the present case.

12. As regards the first of these questions, the Appeals Chamber held in the Tadić-case that

> "To bar an accused from raising such a plea is tantamount to deciding that , in this day and age, an international court could not, in a criminal matter where the liberty of an accused is at stake, examine a plea raising the issue of violation of State sovereignty. "

The Trial Chamber agrees with this conclusion and accepts that the accused in the present case can raise the plea of State sovereignty. In any event, it is the individual and not the State who has been subjected to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.

13. As regards the second question whether the sovereignty of the Republic of Rwanda has been violated by the Security Council's decision to establish the Tribunal, the Trial Chamber notes that membership of the United Nations entail certain limitations upon the sovereignty of the member States. This is true in particular by virtue of the fact that all member States, pursuant to Article 25 of the UN Charter, have agreed to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the Charter. For instance, the use of force against a State sanctioned by the Security Council in accordance with Article 41 of the UN Charter is one clear example of limitations upon sovereignty of the State in question which can be imposed by the United Nations.

14. The Trial Chamber notes, furthermore, that the establishment of the ICTR was called for by the Government of Rwanda itself, which maintained that an international criminal tribunal could assist in prosecuting those responsible for acts of genocide and crimes against humanity and in this way promote the restoration of peace and reconciliation in Rwanda. The Ambassador of Rwanda, during the discussion and adoption of Resolution 955 in the Security Council on 8 November 1994 declared that:

> "The tribunal will help national reconciliation and the construction of a new society based on social justice and respect for the fundamental rights of the human person, all of which will be possible only if those responsible for the Rwandese tragedy are brought to justice."

15. Against this background, the Trial Chamber is of the view that the Security Council's establishment of the Tribunal through a Resolution under Chapter VII of the UN Charter and with the participation of the Government of Rwanda, rather than by a treaty adopted by the Member States under the auspices of the General Assembly, did not violate the sovereignty of the Republic of Rwanda and that of the Member States of the United Nations..

16. The Defence Counsel further argued that the establishment of the Tribunal through a resolution of the Security Council effectively undermined the General Assembly's initiative to set up a permanent international Criminal Court. The Trial Chamber, however, mindful of the fact that such a tribunal may well be created by an international treaty, finds that this question has no bearing on the jurisdiction of this Tribunal and must therefore, be rejected.

B.2. On the Defence Counsel's Objections that the Security Council Lacked Competence to Establish an ad-hoc Tribunal under Chapter VII of the UN Charter

17. The second main issue addressed by the Defence relates to the interpretation and delimitation of Chapter VII of the UN Charter and more specifically to the contents and boundaries of the authority of the Security Council.

18. In his written and oral submissions, the Defence Counsel argued that the establishment of the Tribunal by the Security Council was ill-founded for five basic reasons:

(i) that the conflict in Rwanda did not pose any threat to international peace and security;

(ii) that there was no international conflict to warrant any action by the Security Council;

(iii) that the Security Council thus could not act within Chapter VII of the UN Charter;

(iv) that the establishment of an ad-hoc tribunal was never a measure contemplated by Article 41 of the UN Charter; and finally

(v) that the Security Council has no authority to deal with the protection of Human Rights.

The Trial Chamber will now examine each of these contentions in turn.

19. "The conflict in Rwanda did not pose any threat to international peace and security".

On several occasions, e.g. in Congo, Somalia and Liberia, the Security Council has established that incidents such as sudden migration of refugees across the borders to neighbouring countries and extension or diffusion of an internal armed conflict into foreign territory may constitute a threat to international peace and security. This, might happen, in particular where the areas immediately affected have exhausted their resources. The reports submitted by the Special Rapporteur for Rwanda of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights (see Doc. S/1994/1157) and also by the Commission of Experts appointed by the Secretary General (see Doc. S/1994/1125) concluded that the conflict in Rwanda as well as the stream of refugees had created a highly volatile situation in some of the neighbouring regions. As a matter of fact, this conclusion was subsequently shared by the Security Council and formed the basis for the adoption of Security Council's resolution 955 (1994) of 8 November 1994.

20. Although bound by the provisions in Chapter VII of the UN Charter and in particular Article 39 of the Charter, the Security Council has a wide margin of discretion in deciding when and where there exists a threat to international peace and security. By their very nature, however, such discretionary assessments are not justiciable since they involve the consideration of a number of social, political and circumstantial factors which cannot be weighed and balanced objectively by this Trial Chamber.

21. While it is true that the conflict in Rwanda was internal in the sense that it emerged from inherent tensions between the two major groups forming the population within the territory of Rwanda and otherwise did not involve the direct participation of armed forces belonging to any other State, the Trial Chamber cannot accept the Defence Counsel's notion that the conflict did not pose any threat to international peace and security. The question of, whether or not the conflict posed a threat to international peace and security is a matter to be decided exclusively by the Security Council. The Trial Chamber nevertheless takes judicial notice of the fact that the conflict in Rwanda created a massive wave of refugees, many of whom were armed, into the neighbouring countries which by itself entailed a considerable risk of serious destabilisation of the local areas in the host countries where the refugees had settled. The demographical composition of the population in certain neighbouring regions outside the territory of Rwanda, furthermore, showed features which suggest that the conflict in Rwanda might eventually spread to some or all of these neighbouring regions.

22. The Trial Chamber concludes that there is no merit in the Defence Counsel's argument that the conflict in Rwanda did not pose any threat to international peace and security and holds that this was a matter to be decided exclusively by the Security Council.

23. "There was no international conflict to warrant any action by the Security Council."

The Defence Counsel further contends that there was no international conflict to warrant any action by the Security Council. This argument has been partly addressed in the preceding paragraphs in the sense that if the Security Council had decided that the conflict in Rwanda did in fact pose a threat to international peace and security, this conflict would thereby fall within the ambit of the Security Council's powers to restore and maintain international peace and security pursuant to the provisions in Chapter VII of the UN Charter.

24. The Security Council's authority to take such action, furthermore, exists independently of whether or not the conflict was deemed to be international in character. The decisive pre-requisite for the Security Council's prerogative under Article 39 and 41 of the UN Charter is not whether there exists an international conflict, but whether the conflict at hand entails a threat to international peace and security. Internal conflicts, too, may well have international implications which can justify Security Council action. The Trial Chamber holds that there is no basis for the Defence Counsel's submission that the Security Council's competence to act rested on a pre-existing international conflict.

25. "The Security Council could not act within Chapter VII of the UN Charter."

During his oral submission, the Defence Counsel further added that the Security Council was not competent to act in the case of the conflict in Rwanda because international peace and security had already been re-established by the time the Security Council decided to create the Tribunal.

26. The Trial Chamber observes, once again, that this argument entails a finding of fact based on evidence and that, in any case, the question of whether or not the Security Council was justified in taking actions under Chapter VII when it did, is a matter to be determined by the Security Council itself. The Trial Chamber notes, in particular, that cessation of the atrocities of the conflict does not necessarily imply that international peace and security had been restored, because peace and security cannot be said to be re-established adequately without justice being done. In the Trial Chamber's view, the achievement of international peace and security required that swift international action be taken by the Security Council to bring to justice those responsible for the atrocities in the conflict.

27. "The establishment of an ad-hoc tribunal was never a measure contemplated by Article 41 of the UN Charter."

The thrust of this argument lies in the contention that the establishment of an ad-hoc Tribunal to prosecute perpetrators of genocide and violations of international humanitarian law is not a measure contemplated by the provisions of Chapter VII of the UN Charter. While it is true that establishment of judicial bodies is not directly mentioned in Article 41 of the UN Charter as a measure to be considered in the restoration and maintenance of peace, it clearly falls within the ambit of measures to satisfy this goal. The list of actions contained in Article 41 is clearly not exhaustive but indicates some examples of the measures which the Security Council might eventually decide to impose on States in order to remedy a conflict or an imminent threat to international peace and security. This is also the view of the Appeals Chamber in the Tardic-case.

28. "The Security Council has no authority to deal with the protection of Human Rights" Finally, the Defence Counsel holds that the international protection of Human Rights is embedded in particular international instruments such as the global International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights & Social, Economic and Cultural Rights and in the regional conventions on Human Rights for Europe and Africa, all of which have established particular international institutions entrusted with the task of protecting the body of international Human Rights. The Defence Counsel claims, therefore, that the protection of Human Rights is not a matter for the Security Council.

29. The Trial Chamber cannot accept the Defence Counsel's argument that the existence of specialized institutions for the protection of Human Rights precludes the Security Council from taking action against violation of this body of law. Rather to the contrary, the protection of international Human Rights is the responsibility of all United Nations organs, the Security Council included, without any limitation, in conformity with the UN Charter.

B.3. On the Defence Counsel's Objections Against the Primacy of the Tribunal's Jurisdiction Over National Courts and Against Violation of the Principle of Jus de non Evocando.

30. Although the Defence Counsel did not explicitly challenge the primacy of the Tribunal's jurisdiction over national courts, this objection is implied in the Defence Counsel's contention that establishment of the Tribunal violated the principle of jus de non evocando.

31. This principle, originally derived from constitutional law in civil law jurisdictions, establishes that persons accused of certain crimes should retain their right to be tried before the regular domestic criminal Courts rather than by politically founded ad-hoc criminal tribunals which, in times of emergency, may fail to provide impartial justice. As stated by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić-case: "As a matter of fact and of law the principle advocated by the Appellant aims at one very specific goal: to avoid the creation of special or extraordinary courts designed to try political offences in times of social unrest without guarantees of a fair trial." In the Trial Chamber's opinion, however, the Tribunal is far from being an institution designed for the purpose of removing, for political reasons, certain criminal offenders from fair and impartial justice and have them prosecuted for political crimes before prejudiced arbitrators.

32. It is true that the Tribunal has primacy over domestic criminal Courts and may at any stage request national Courts to defer to the competence of the Tribunal pursuant to article 8 of the Statute of the Tribunal, according to which the Tribunal may request that national Courts defer to the competence of the Tribunal at any stage of their proceedings. The Tribunal's primacy over national Courts is also reflected in the principle of non bis in idem as laid down in Article 9 of the Statute and in Article 28 of the Statute which establishes that States shall comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber. The primacy thereby entrenched for the Tribunal, however, is exclusively derived from the fact that the Tribunal is established under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, which in turn enables the Tribunal to issue directly binding international legal orders and requests to States, irrespective of their consent. Failure of States to comply with such legally binding orders and requests may, under certain conditions, be reported by the President of the Tribunal to the Security Council for further action.

The Trial Chamber concludes, therefore, that the principle of jus de non evocando has not been violated.

B.4. On the Defence Counsel's Objections Against the Tribunal's Jurisdiction over Individuals Directly under International Law.

33. The Defence Counsel further contends that bestowing the Tribunal with jurisdiction over individuals is inconsistent with the UN Charter, for the reason that the Security Council has no authority over individuals, and that only States can pose threats to international peace and security.

34. The Prosecution responded to this contention by citing the Nüremberg Trials which, in the Prosecution's view, established that individuals who have committed crimes under international law can be held criminally responsible directly under international law. The Prosecutor further contended that attribution of individual criminal responsibility is a fundamental expression of the need for enforcement action by the Security Council. It is indeed difficult to separate the individual from the State, as the duties and rights of States are only duties and rights of the individuals who compose them, and as international criminal law, like other branches of law, deals with the regulation of human conduct. It is to individuals, not the abstract, that international law applies, and it is against individuals that it should provide sanctions. In the words of the Deputy Prosecutor in the trial against Frank Hans in 1946:

> "It seems intolerable to every sensitized human being that the men who put their good will at disposition of the State entity in order to make use of the power and material resources of this entity to slaughter, as they have done, millions of human beings in the execution of a policy long since determined, should be assured of immunity. The principle of State sovereignty which might protect these men is only a mask; this mask removed, the man's responsibility reappears."

35. The Trial Chamber recalls that the question of direct individual criminal responsibility under international law is and has been a controversial issue within and between various legal systems for several decades and that the Nüremberg trials in particular have been interpreted differently in respect of the position of the individual as a subject under international law. By establishing the two International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, however, the Security Council explicitly extended international legal obligations and criminal responsibilities directly to individuals for violations of international humanitarian law. In doing so, the Security Council provided an important innovation of international law, but there is nothing in the Defence Counsel's motion to suggest that this extension of the applicability of international law against individuals was not justified or called for by the circumstances, notably the seriousness, the magnitude and the gravity of the crimes committed during the conflict.

36. In his submissions, furthermore, the Defence Counsel referred to a number of other areas of conflicts and incidents in which the Security Council took no action to establish an international criminal tribunal, e.g. Congo, Somalia and Liberia, and the Defence Counsel seems to infer from the lack of such action in these cases that individual criminal responsibility should not be taken in the case of the conflict in Rwanda. The Trial Chamber, however, disagrees entirely with this perception. The fact that the Security Council, for previously prevailing geo-strategic and international political reasons, was unable in the past to take adequate measures to bring to justice the perpetrators of crimes against international humanitarian law is not an acceptable argument against introducing measures to punish serious violations of international humanitarian law when this becomes an option under international law. The Trial Chamber, thus, cannot accept the Defence Counsel's objections against the Tribunal's jurisdiction over individuals.

B.5. On the Defence Counsel's Objections Based on the Allegation that the Tribunal is not Impartial and Independent.

37. The Defense Motion asserted that the Tribunal was set up by the Security Council, a political body and as such the Tribunal is just another appendage of an international organ of policing and coercion, devoid of independence.

38. The Prosecutor, in response, challenged the claim in the Defense Motion that the Tribunal cannot act both as a subsidiary organ of the Security Council and as an independent Judicial body. He stated that although the ICTY and the ICTR share certain aspects of personnel, materials and means of operation, the Tribunal for Rwanda is a separate Tribunal with its own Statute, its own sphere of jurisdiction and its own rules of operation and as such it has legal independence.

39. This Trial Chamber is of the view that criminal courts worldwide are the creation of legislatures which are eminently political bodies. This was an observation also made by the Trial Chamber in the Tadić-case. To support this view, the Trial Chamber in that case relied on Effect of Awards of Compensation made by the United Nations Administrative Tribunal (1954) I.C.J. 47, 53; Advisory Opinion of 13 July), which specifically held that a political organ of the United Nations, in that case the General Assembly, could and had created "an independent and truly judicial body." Likewise, the Security Council could create such a body using its wide discretion under Chapter VII.

40. This independence is, for example, demonstrated by the fact that the Tribunal is not bound by national rules of evidence as stated under rule 89 A of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Tribunal is free to apply those Rules of Evidence which best favor a fair determination of the matter before it as stipulated in rule 89(B) of the Rules.

41. Further, the judges of the Tribunal exercise their judicial duties independently and freely and are under oath to act honorably, faithfully, impartially and conscientiously as stipulated in rule 14 of the Rules. Judges do not account to the Security Council for their judicial functions.

42. In this Trial Chamber's view, the personal independence of the judges of the Tribunal and the integrity of the Tribunal are underscored by Article 12 (1) of the Statute of the Tribunal which states that persons of high moral character, integrity, impartiality who possess adequate qualifications to become judges in their respective countries and having widespread experience in criminal law, international law including international humanitarian law and human rights law, shall be elected.

43. This Trial Chamber also subscribes to a view which was expressed by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadic case that when determining whether a tribunal has been 'established by law', consideration should be made to the setting up of an organ in keeping with the proper international standards providing all the guarantees of fairness and justice.

44. Under the Statute and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the Tribunal will ensure that the accused receives a fair trial. This principle of fair trial is further entrenched in Article 20 which embodies the major principles for the provision of a fair trial, inter alia, the principles of public hearing and subject to cross examination. The rights of the accused are also set out such as the right to counsel, presumption of innocence until the contrary is proved beyond a reasonable doubt, privilege against self-incrimination and the right to adequate time for the preparation of his/her case. These guarantees are further included in rules 62, 63 and 78 of the Rules. The rights of the accused enumerated above are based upon Article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and are similar to those found in Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

45. Defence Counsel argued that the obligation imposed on the Tribunal to report to the Security Council derogates its independence as a judicial organ. The Prosecutor contended that this obligation was discretionary. In fact it is mandatory. In Article 34 of the Statute, the Tribunal is duty bound to do this annually. This requirement is not only a link between it and the Security Council but it is also a channel of communication to the International community, which has an interest in the issues being addressed and the right to be informed of the activities of the Tribunal. In the Chamber`s view, the Tribunal`s obligation to report progress to the Security Council is purely administrative and not a judicial act and therefore does not in any way impinge upon the impartiality and independence of it`s judicial decision.

46. The Defence Counsel further contended that African jurisprudence and Human Rights Covenants were overlooked in the setting up the Tribunal. This contention cannot be correct because the important instruments on human rights in Africa, including the Charter of the Organization of African Unity (O.A.U.) and the African Charter On Human Rights ("the African Charter") were indirectly included in the law applicable to the Tribunal. Articles 3 and 7 of the African Charter on Human and People's Rights, for example, contain rights which are similar to those guaranteed in the Statute.

47. The Defence Counsel argued that the impartiality of the of the Tribunal has not been demonstrated for the reason that there has been selective prosecution only of persons belonging to the Hutu ethnic group.

48. In his response, the Prosecutor dismissed these allegations and stated that indictments have been issued against leading perpetrators of the genocide and that subject to the availability of evidence, he intended to prosecute Hutu and Tutsi "extremists". The use of the word "extremists" is inaccurate and unfortunate, in view of Article 1 of the statute.

49. The Trial Chamber simply reiterates that, pursuant to Article 1 of the Statute, all persons who are suspected of having committed crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal are liable to prosecution.

50. The Trial Chamber is not persuaded by the arguments advanced by the Defence Counsel that the Tribunal is not impartial and independent and accordingly rejects this contention.

FOR THESE REASONS,

DECIDES to dismiss the motion submitted by the Defence Counsel challenging the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.

Arusha, 18 June 1997.

William H. Sekule
Presiding Judge

T. H. Khan
Judge

Navanethem Pillay
Judge

Pronounced in Open Court on the 3rd of July 1997

William H. Sekule
Presiding Judge

(Seal of the Tribunal)

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

8. Prosecutor v. Kayishema & Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, Judgement, 21 May 1999.

Westlaw.

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda

THE PROSECUTOR
v.

CLÉMENT KAYISHEMA and OBED RUZINDANA

ICTR-95-1-T

Decision of: 21 May 1999

JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor: Mr. Jonah Rahetlah, Ms. Brenda Sue Thornton, Ms. Holo Makwaia

Counsel for Clément Kayishema: Mr. André Ferran, Mr. Philippe Moriceau

Counsel for Obed Ruzindana: Mr. Pascal Besnier, Mr. Willem Van der Griend

Before: Presiding Judge William H. Sekule, Judge Yakov A. Ostrovsky, Judge Tafazzal Hossain Khan

Registrar: Mr. Agwu U. Okali

List of Contents

I. INTRODUCTION

1.1 The Tribunal and its Jurisdiction

1.2 The Indictment

1.3 The Accused

1.4 Procedural Background of the Case

II. Historical Context of the 1994 Events in Rwanda

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

III. EVIDENTIARY MATTERS

3.1 Equality of Arms

3.2 Reliability of Eyewitnesses

3.3 Witness Statements

3.4 Specificity of die Indictment

IV.THE LAW

4. 1 Genocide

4.2 Crimes Against Humanity

4.3 Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II, thereto

4.4 Criminal Responsibility, Articles 6(1) and 6(3)

V. FACTUAL FINDINGS

5.1 Alibi

5.2 Did Genocide Occur in Rwanda and Kibuye in 1994?

5.3 An Introduction: The Massacres at the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean Complex, Stadium in Kibuye Town and the Church in Mubuga

5.4 The Massacres in the Area of Bisesero

VI.LEGAL FINDINGS

6.1 Kayishema's Command Responsibility

6.2 Genocide

6.3 Crimes Against Humanity

6.4 Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II

VII. Cumulative Charges

VIII. The Verdict

Sentencing Order

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Separate and Dissenting Opinion of Judge Khan regarding the Verdicts under Charges of Crimes Against Humanity/Murder and Crimes Against Humanity/Murder

Dissenting Opinion

I. INTRODUCTION

1.1 The Tribunal and its Jurisdiction

1.2 The Indictment

1.3 The Accused

1.4 Procedural Background of the Case

1.1 The Tribunal and its Jurisdiction

1. This Judgement is rendered by Trial Chamber II of the International Tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for the serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (the Tribunal). The Judgement follows the Indictment and the joint trial of Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana.

2. The Tribunal was established by the United Nations Security Council's Resolution 955 of 8 November 1994. [FN1] After official investigations, the Security Council found indications of wide spread violations of international humanitarian law and concluded that the situation in that country in 1994 constituted a threat to international peace and security within the meaning of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, thus giving rise to the establishment of the Tribunal.

FN1 UN Doc. S/RES/955 of 8 Nov. 1994.

3. The Tribunal is governed by its Statute (the Statute), annexed to the Security Council Resolution 955, and by its Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the Rules), adopted by the Judges on 5 July 1995 and amended subsequently. [FN2] The Judges of the Tribunal, currently fourteen in all, are selected by the General Assembly and represent the principal legal systems of the world.

FN2 The Rules were successively amended on 12 Jan. 1996, 15 May 1996, 4 Jul. 1996, 5 Jun. 1997 and 8 Jun. 1998.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

4. The ratione materiae jurisdiction of the Tribunal is set out in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute. Under the Statute, the Tribunal is empowered to prosecute persons who are alleged to have committed Genocide, as defined in Article 2, persons responsible for Crimes Against Humanity, as defined in Article 3 and persons responsible for serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the Protection of Victims of War, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977, a crime defined under Article 4 of the Tribunal's Statute. [FN3] Article 8 of the Statute provides that the Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with national courts over which, however, it has primacy. The temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal is limited to acts committed from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994.

FN3 The provisions of these offences are detailed in Part IV of the Judgement, entitled The Law.

5. Finally, the Statute stipulates that the Prosecutor, who acts as a separate organ of the Tribunal. is responsible for the investigation and prosecution of the perpetrators of such violations. The Prosecutor is assisted by a Deputy Prosecutor, a team of senior trial attorneys, trial attorneys, and investigators based in Kigali, Rwanda.

1.2 The Indictment

The amended Indictment, against the accused persons, is reproduced, in full, below.

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL, TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

CASE NO: ICTR-95-1-1 (sic)

THE PROSECUTOR OF THE TRIBUNAL

AGAINST

CLEMENT KAYISHEMA OBED RUZINDANA

[Registry date stamped

11 April 1997]

First Amended Indictment

Richard J. Goldstone, Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Rwanda, pursuant to his authority under Article 17 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (Tribunal Statute), charges:

1. This indictment charges persons responsible for the following massacres which occurred in the Prefecture of Kibuye, Republic of Rwanda:

1.1 The massacre at the Catholic Church and the Home St. Jean complex in Kibuye town, where thousands of men, women and children were killed and numerous people injured around 17 April 1994.

1.2 The massacre at the Stadium in Kibuye town, where thousands of men, women and children were killed and numerous people injured on about 18 and 19 April 1994.

1.3 The massacre at the Church in Mubuga, where thousands of men, women and children were killed and numerous people injured between about 14 and 17 April 1994.

1.4 The massacres in the area of Bisesero, where thousands of men, women and children were killed and numerous people injured between about 10 April and 30 June 1994.

THE MASSACRES SITES

2. The Republic of Rwanda is divided into eleven Prefectures. These eleven Prefectures are further divided into communes. The Prefecture of Kibuye consists of nine communes. The massacres which form the basis of the charges in the indictment occurred in the Prefecture of Kibuye, in Gitesi, Gishyita and Gisovu communes.

3. The first massacre site addressed in this indictment, namely, the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean complex, is located in Kibuye town, Gitesi commune, on a piece of land which is surrounded on three sides by Lake Kivu. A road runs past the entrance to the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean complex. The Catholic Church is visible from the road. The Home St. Jean is behind the Church and is not visible from the road.

4. The second massacre site addressed to in this indictment, the Stadium, is located near the main traffic circle in Kibuye town, Gitesi Commune. The town's main road runs past the Stadium. Immediately behind the Stadium is a high hill.

5. The third massacre site addressed in this indictment, the Church of Mubuga, is located in Gishyita Commune. Gishyita Commune is located in the southern part of Kibuye Prefecture. The Church in Mubuga is located approximately 20 kilometres from Kibuye town.

6. The fourth massacre site addressed in this indictment is the area of Bisesero. The area of Bisesero extends through two communes in the Prefecture of Kibuye: Gishyita and Gisovu. Bisesero is an area of high rolling hills, located in the southern portion of Kibuye Prefecture. The hills are very large, and are often separated by deep valleys.

BACKGROUND

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

7. The structure of the executive branch, and the authority of the members therein, is set forth in the laws of Rwanda. In the Prefecture, the Prefect is the highest local representative of the government, and is the trustee of the State Authority. The Prefect has control over the government and its agencies throughout the Prefecture.

8. In each commune within a Prefecture there exists the council of the commune, which is led by the Bourgmestre of that Commune. The Bourgmestre of each commune is nominated by the Minister of the Interior and appointed by the President. As representative of the executive power, the Bourgmestre is subject to the hierarchical authority of the Prefect, but, subject to this authority, the Bourgmestre is in charge of governmental functions within his commune.

9. The Prefect is responsible for maintaining the peace, public order, and security of persons and goods within the Prefecture. In fulfilling his duty to maintain peace, the Prefect can demand assistance from the army and the Gendarmerie Nationale. The Bourgmestre also has authority over those members of the Gendarmerie Nationale stationed in his commune.

10. The Gendarmerie Nationale is an armed force established to maintain the public order and execute the laws. It is lead by the Minister of Defence, but can exercise its function of safeguarding the public order at the request of the competent national authority, which is the Prefect. The Gendarmerie Nationale has an affirmative duty to report to the Prefect information which has a bearing on the public order, as well as a duty to assist any person who, being in danger, requests its assistance. From January - July 1994, there were approximately 200 gendarmes in the Prefecture of Kibuye.

11. The members of the executive branch also have control over the communal police. Each commune has Police Communale, who are engaged by the Bourgmestre of the commune. Normally the Bourgmestre has exclusive authority over the members of the Police Communale. In case of public calamities, however, the Prefect can claim the policemen of the Police Communale and place them under his direct control.

12. The Interahamwe, an unofficial paramilitary group composed almost exclusively of extremist Hutus, had significant involvement in the events charged in this indictment. The National Revolutionary Movement for Development (MRND) party created the members of the Interahamwe as a military training organisation for MRND youth and based the members of the Interahamwe's leadership on the MRND's own structure, with leaders at the national, prefectoral, and communal levels. There was no official link between the Interahamwe and the Rwandan military, but members of the Army and Presidential Guard trained, guided and supported the Interahamwe. Occasionally, members of the Army or Presidential Guard participated in Interahamwe activities.

13. On 6 April 1994, the airplane carrying then-president of Rwanda Juvenal Habyarimana crashed during its approach into Kigali airport in Rwanda. Almost immediately, the massacre of civilians began throughout Rwanda. During that time, individuals seeking Tutsis were able to focus their activities on specific locations because Tutsis, who believed themselves to be in danger, often fled in large numbers to perceived safe areas such as churches and communal buildings. This practice, which was widely known, was based on the fact that in the past Tutsis who had sought refuge in such places had not been attacked. Thus, during the period of time relevant to this indictment, groups of people seeking refuge in the same area were most likely predominantly Tutsis.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

14. Also, during the times relevant to this indictment, the Rwandan government required all Rwandans to carry, at all times, identity cards that designated the bearer's status as Hutu, Tutsi, Twa or "naturalised". Individuals seeking Tutsis could identify their targets simply by asking individuals to show their identification card.

GENERAL ALLEGATIONS

15. All acts of (sic) omissions by the accused set forth in this indictment occurred during the period of 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994 and in the territory of the Republic of Rwanda.

16. In each paragraph charging genocide, a crime recognised by Article 2 of the Tribunal Statute, the alleged acts or omissions were committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, an ethnic or racial group.

17. In each paragraph charging crimes against humanity, crimes recognised by Article 3 of the Tribunal Statute, the alleged acts or omissions were part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds.

18. At all times relevant to this indictment, the victims referred to in this indictment were protected under Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and by the Additional Protocol II thereto.

19. At all times relevant to this indictment, there was an internal armed conflict occurring within Rwanda.

20. At all times relevant to this indictment, Clement Kayishema was Prefect of Kibuye and exercised control over the Prefecture of Kibuye, including his subordinates in the executive branch and members of the Gendarmerie Nationale.

21. Each of the accused is individually responsible for the crimes alleged against him in this indictment, pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Tribunal Statute. Individual responsibility includes planning, instigating, ordering, committing or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation and execution of any of the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the Tribunal Statute.

22. In addition, Clement Kayishema is also or alternatively individually responsible as a superior for the criminal acts of his subordinates in the administration, the Gendarmerie Nationale, and the communal police with respect to each of the crimes charged, pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Tribunal Statute. Superior individual responsibility is the responsibility of a superior for the acts of his subordinate if he knew or had reasons to know that his subordinate was about to commit such criminal acts or had done so and failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts, or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

THE ACCUSED

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

23. Clement Kayishema was born in 1954 in Bwishyura Sector, Gitesi Commune, Kibuye Prefecture, Rwanda. Kayishema's father was Jean Baptiste Nabagiziki, and his mother was Anastasie Nyirabakunzi. He was appointed to the position of Prefect of Kibuye on 3 July 1992, and assumed his responsibility as Prefect soon after. Clement Kayishema acted as Prefect of Kibuye until his departure to Zaire in July 1994. He is believed to be currently in Bukavu, Zaire.

24. Obed Ruzindana is believed to have been borne around 1962 in Gisovu Sector, Gisovu Commune, Kibuye Prefecture, Rwanda. Ruzindana's father was Elie Murakaza. Obed Ruzindana was a commercial trader in Kigali during the time period in which the crimes alleged in this indictment occurred. He is believed to be currently somewhere in Zaire.

The Massacre at the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean

COUNTS 1• 6

25. By about 17 April 1994, thousands of men, women and children from various locations had sought refuge in the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean complex (the Complex) located in Kibuye town. These men, women and children were unarmed and were predominantly Tutsis. They were in the complex seeking protection from attacks on Tutsis which had occurred throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye.

26. Some of the people who sought refuge in the Complex did so because Clement Kayishema ordered them to go there. When Clement Kayishema ordered people to the Complex, he knew or had reason to know that an attack on the complex was going to occur.

27. After people gathered in the Complex, the Complex was surrounded by persons under Clement Kayishema's control, including members of the Gendarmerie Nationale. These persons prevented the men, women and children within the Complex from leaving the Complex at a time when Clement Kayishema knew or had reason to know that an attack on the Complex was going to occur.

28. On about 17 April 1994, Clement Kayishema ordered members of the Gendarmerie Nationale, communal police of Gitesi commune, members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians to attack the Complex, and personally participated in the attack. The attackers used guns, grenades, machetes, spears, cudgels and other weapons to kill the people in the Complex.

29. The attack resulted in thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to the people within the complex. (Attachment A contains a list of some of the individuals killed in the attack, members of the Gendarmerie Nationale, the Interahamwe and armed civilians searched for and killed or injured survivors of the attack.

30. Before the attack on the Complex, Clement Kayishema did not take measures to prevent an attack, and after the attack Clement Kayishema did not punish the perpetrators.

31. By these acts and omissions, Clement Kayishema is criminally responsible for:

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Count 1: GENOCIDE, a violation of Article 2 (3)(a) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 2: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (a) (murder) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 3: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (b) (extermination) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 4: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (i) (other inhumane acts) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 5: A VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute; and

Count 6: A VIOLATION OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute.

The Massacre at the Stadium in Kibuye Town

COUNTS 7 - 12

32. By about 18 April 1994, thousands of men, women and children from various locations had sought refuge in the Stadium located in Kibuye town. These men, women and children were unarmed and were predominantly Tutsis. They were in the Stadium seeking refuge from attacks on Tutsis which had occurred throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye.

33. Some of the people who sought refuge in the Stadium did so because Clement Kayishema ordered them to go there. When Clement Kayishema ordered people to go to the Stadium, he knew or had reason to know that an attack on the Stadium was going to occur.

34. After people gathered in the Stadium, the Stadium was surrounded by persons under Clement Kayishema's control, including members of the Gendarmerie Nationale. These persons prevented the men, women and children within the Stadium from leaving the Stadium at a time when Clement Kayishema knew or had reason to know that an attack on the Complex (sic) was going to occur.

35. On or about 18 April 1994, Clement Kayishema, went to Stadium and ordered the Gendarmerie Nationale, the communal police of Gitesi Commune, the members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians to attack the Stadium. Clement Kayishema initiated the attack himself by firing a gun into the air. In addition, Clement Kayishema personally participated in the attack. The attackers used guns, grenades, pangas, machetes, spears, cudgels and other weapons to kill the people in the Stadium. There were survivors of the attack on 18 April 1994. During the night of 18 April 1994 and the morning of 19 April 1994 gendarmes surrounding the Stadium prevented the survivors from leaving. The attack on the Stadium continued on 19 April 1994.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Throughout the attacks, men, women and children attempting to flee the attacks were killed.

36. The two days of attacks resulted in thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to the men, women and children within the Stadium (Attachment B contains a list of some of the individuals killed in the attacks).

37. Before the attacks on the Stadium Clement Kayishema did not take measures to prevent an attack from occurring, and after the attacks Clement Kayishema did not punish the perpetrators.

38. By these acts and omissions Clement Kayishema is criminally responsible for:

Count 7: GENOCIDE, a violation of Article 2 (3)(a) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 8: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (a) (murder) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 9: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (b) (extermination) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 10: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (i) (other inhumane acts) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 11: A VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute; and

Count 12: A VIOLATION OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute.

The Massacre at the Church in Mubuga

COUNTS 13 • 18

39. By about 14 April 1994, thousands of men, women and children congregated in the Church in Mubuga, Gishyita Commune. These men, women and children were predominantly Tutsis. They were in the church seeking refuge from attacks on Tutsis which had occurred throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye.

40. After the men, women and children began to congregate in the Church, Clement Kayishema visited the Church on several occasions. On or about 10 April Clement Kayishema brought gendarmes, under his control, to the Church. These gendarmes prevented the men, women and children within the church from leaving.

41. On or about 14 April 1994 individuals, including individuals under Clement Kayishema's control, directed members of the Gendarme Nationale, communal police of Gishyita commune, the Interahamwe and armed civilians to attack the Church. In addition, each of them personally participated in the attacks. The attackers used guns, grenades, machetes, spears, pangas, cudgels and other weapons to kill the people in the Church. Not all the people could be killed at once, so the attacks continued for several days. Both before and during these attacks persons under Clement Kayishema's control, including members of the Gendarmerie Nationale and communal police, prevented the men, women and children within the church from leaving.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

42. The attacks resulted in thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to the men, women and children within the Church (Attachment C contains a list of some of the victims killed in the attacks).

43. Before the attacks on the Church in Mubuga, Clement Kayishema did not take measures to prevent the attacks, and after the attacks Clement Kayishema did not punish the perpetrators.

44. By these acts and omissions Clement Kayishema is criminally responsible for:

Count 13: GENOCIDE, a violation of Article 2 (3)(a) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 14: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (a) (murder) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 15: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (b) (extermination) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 16: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3 (i) (other inhumane acts) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 17: A VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute; and

Count 18: A VIOLATION OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute.

The Massacres in the Area of Bisesero

COUNTS 19-24

45. The area of Bisesero spans over two communes of the Kibuye Prefecture. From about 9 April 1994 through 30 June 1994, thousands of men, women and children sought refuge in the area of Bisesero. These men, women and children were predominantly Tutsis and were seeking refuge from attacks on Tutsis which had occurred throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

46. The area of Bisesero was regularly attacked, on almost a daily basis, throughout the period of about 9 April 1994 through about 30 June 1994. The attackers used guns, grenades, machetes, spears, pangas, cudgels and other weapons to kill the Tutsis in Bisesero. At various times the men, women and children seeking refuge in Bisesero attempted to defend themselves from these attacks with stones, sticks and other crude weapons.

47. At various locations and times throughout April, May and June 1994, and often in concert, Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana brought to the area of Bisesero members of the Gendarmerie Nationale, communal police of Gishyita and Gisovu communes, Interahamwe and armed civilians, and directed them to attack the people seeking refuge there. In addition, at various locations and times, and often in concert, Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana personally attacked and killed persons seeking refuge in Bisesero.

48. The attacks described above resulted in thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to the men, women and children within the area of Bisesero (Attachment D contains a list of some of the individuals killed in the attacks).

49. Throughout this time, Clement Kayishema did not take measures to prevent the attacks, and after the attacks Clement Kayishema did not punish the perpetrators

50. By these acts and omissions Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana are criminally responsible for:

Count 19: GENOCIDE, a violation of Article 2 (3) (a) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 20: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Articles 3(a) (murder) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 21: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3(b) (extermination) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 22: CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY, a violation of Article 3(1) (other inhumane acts) of the Tribunal Statute;

Count 23: A VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute; and

Count 24: A VIOLATION OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, a violation of Article 4 (a) of the Tribunal Statute.

1996 Arusha, Tanzania

Signed

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Richard J. Goldstone, Prosecutor

This rearranged version conforms to the Order of Trial Chamber II in its decision of 10 April 1997 on the indictment of 28 November 1995 confirmed by the Honourable Judge Pillay and amended on 29 April 1996, to serve as the Indictment for the accused Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana in the case ICTR 95-1-I.

1.3 The Accused

Clement Kayishema

6. According to Clement Kayishema's (Kayishema), own testimony, he was born into a Hutu family in the Bwishyura Sector, Kibuye Prefecture in Rwanda, in 1954. His father was a teacher and later worked as a janitor in a hospital. Subsequently, he was hired as the commune secretary and was finally appointed judge at the Canton Tribunal. His mother and seven siblings were uneducated farmers.

7. In 1974, Kayishema was appointed registrar in Kagnagare Canton Tribunal. The following year he was granted a scholarship to attend the faculty of medicine of the National University of Rwanda, in Butare. Upon graduation, he practiced general medicine and surgery. In 1984, he was sent by the Rwandan Government to work as a doctor in an Ugandan refugee camp. From 1986 to 1991, he held the position of medical director of the hospital of Nyanza. He was then transferred to the Kibuye hospital.

8. Kayishema married a Rwandan woman by the name of Mukandoli, in 1987 with whom he had two children. Mukandoli holds a degree in education science from the National University of Rwanda, with a specialization in psychology.

9. Kayishema joined the Christian Democratic Party (PDC), whose motto was "work, justice and fraternity," in April 1992. On 3 July 1992, Kayishema was appointed the Prefect of Kibuye Prefecture. This occurred at a time when the multiparty system came into effect in Rwanda. He was re-appointed to his post, after the death of the President in 1994, by the Interim Government.

Obed Ruzindana

10. According to the testimony of witnesses, Obed Ruzindana (Ruzindana) was born in 1962 into a wealthy Hutu family in Gisovu Commune, Kibuye Prefecture, Rwanda. His father, Elie Murakaza, had been a Bourgmestre in the Mugonero Commune, where the family resided. Murakaza and, by extension, his family were well known and respected in the community.

11. Ruzindana left his home in Kibuye for Kigali in 1986-1987 and engaged in transporting merchandise out of Rwanda and importing goods into the country. He employed four drivers and by all accounts became a successful businessman in his own right.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

12. In 1991 he married a woman whom he had known since childhood. Mrs. Ruzindana testified that although both her parents were Tutsi, her father's identity card indicated that he was a Hutu. According to Mrs. Ruzindana it was possible to "pay" to change one's ethnicity on the identity card. Two children were born from this union in 1991 and 1993. Ruzindana and his family lived in Remera, Kigali until the tragic events of 1994 when they returned to Ruzindana's parents' home in Mugonero.

1.4 Procedural Background of the Case

Pre-trial

13. Kayishema and Ruzindana were initially charged in the original Indictment submitted by the Prosecutor, Richard Goldstone, [FN4] on 22 November 1995 together with six other suspects. The charges included conspiracy to commit genocide, Genocide and Crimes Against Humanity and violations of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II. The Indictment was confirmed by Judge Navanethem Pillay on 28 November 1995. Judge Pillay ordered that the Indictment be amended on 6 May 1996 to remove the conspiracy charges. It should be noted that a second Indictment was brought against Ruzindana on 17 June 1996, the trial of which is still pending. That Indictment was confirmed by Judge Tafazzal H. Khan on 21 June 1996.

FN4 On 1 October 1996, Louise Arbour succeeded Richard Goldstone as Prosecutor of the Tribunal.

14. Kayishema was arrested on 2 May 1996 in Zambia and transferred to the United Nations Detention Unit Facility (the UNDF) in Arusha, on 26 May 1996. His initial appearance was held on 31 May 1996 before Trial Chamber I. Kayishema, represented by Mr. André Ferran, of the bar of Montpellier, France, and Philippe Moriceau of the bar of Montpellier, France, pleaded not guilty to all of the charges.

15. Ruzindana was arrested on 20 September 1996 in Nairobi, Kenya and transferred to the UNDF on 22 September 1996. His initial appearance was held on 29 October 1996 before the Trial Chamber II. Ruzindana, represented by Mr. Pascal Besnier, of the bar of Paris, France, and Mr. Willem Van der Griend of the Bar of Rotterdam, the Netherlands, pleaded not guilty to all of the charges. The Chamber set a date for trial for 20 February 1997 while reserving the right to join with Kayishema.

16. At the pretrial stage, the Trial Chamber received and decided many written motions from the Parties. Some of the more pertinent ones are detailed below.

17. Kayishema filed a preliminary Motion on 26 July 1996 in which he requested the annulment of the proceedings, and consequently, his provisional release. The Parties were heard on 5 November 1996 and the Defence request was rejected.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Kayishema filed a further Motion on 23 October 1996 for postponement of the trial in order to enable him to prepare his case. The Prosecutor did not oppose the Motion but on 5 November 1996, filed a Motion for joinder of Kayishema and Ruzindana. The Tribunal ordered the joinder of the two accused. The trial date for Kayishema consequently was postponed to the trial date set for Ruzindana, which as mentioned above was 20 February 1997. [FN5]

FN5 Decision on the joinder of the Accused and Setting the Date for Trial, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 6 November 1996.

18. On 30 December 1996 Ruzindana filed a preliminary Motion objecting to the form of the Indictment and against joinder of his case with that of Kayishema based on various alleged procedural difficulties with the Indictment and the warrant of arrest. The request for annulment of the two Indictments and for his release was rejected as was the objection to the joinder.

19. On 27 March 1997, the Prosecution brought a Motion for leave to sever and to join in a superseding Indictment and to amend the superseding Indictment in the cases against Kayishema, Gérard Ntakirutimana, and Ruzindana on the grounds of involvement in a same transaction. The Chamber rejected the Motion because the Prosecutor did not offer any evidence that demonstrated the nature of the common scheme.

20. Kayishema brought another Motion on 7 March 1997 calling for the application of Article 20 (2) and (4)(b) (Rights of the accused) of the Statute of the Tribunal by the Prosecution. The Defence further requested the Prosecution to divulge and limit its number of lawyers, consultants, assistants and investigators working on the case. The Chamber ruled [FN6] that the rights of the accused and equality between the parties should not be confused with the equality of means and resources. The Chamber concluded that the Defence had not proved any violation of the rights of the accused as provided in Article 20(2) and (4)(b) of the Statute.

FN6 Order on the Motion by the Defence Counsel for Application of Article 20 (2) and (4) (b) of the Statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-96-10-T, 5 May 1997.

Trial

21. On 11 April 1997 the trial of Kayishema and Ruzindana commenced before Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge William H. Sekule, presiding, Judge Yakov A. Ostrovsky and Judge Tafazzal H. Khan, based on the First Amended Indictment filed with the Registry on that day. The Prosecution team consisted of Mr. Jonah Rahetlah, Ms. Brenda Sue Thornton, and Ms. Holo Makwaia. Kayishema was represented by Mr. Andre Ferran and Mr. Philippe Moriceau. Mr. Pascal Besnier and Mr. Van der Griend formed the Defence team for Ruzindana. The Prosecution completed its case on 13 March 1998, having called a total of 51 witnesses and having tendered into evidence over 350 exhibits.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

22. The Prosecution filed a Motion on 18 February 1998, pursuant to Rule 73 of the Rules, requesting the Trial Chamber to order the uninterrupted continuation of the trial of the accused and the consultation of both Parties in respect of the scheduling of this continuation. The Chamber was of the view that pursuant to Article 20(4)(b) of the Statute, the accused should be accorded adequate time and facilities for the preparation of their case. [FN7]

FN7 Decision on the Prosecution Motion for Directions for the Scheduling of the Continuation of the Trial of ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana on the Charges as Contained in the Indictment No. ICTR-95-1-T, 12 March 1998.

23. The Defence commenced their case on 11 May 1998 and closed on 15 September 1998. It should be noted that at the conclusion of the Prosecution's case, the Defence requested an adjournment in order to prepare its case. In the interest of justice, the Trial Chamber granted the Defence Teams a generous two-month adjournment to prepare. The Defence presented a total of twenty-eight witnesses, sixteen of whom testified on behalf of accused, Ruzindana, seven for Kayishema and five for both accused persons. Kayishema testified on his own behalf. Over 59 Defence exhibits were admitted.

24. The Prosecutor presented closing argument from 21 October to 28 October 1998, Ruzindana's Defence from 28 October to 2 November 1998 and Kayishema's Defence from 3 to 16 November 1998. The Prosecutor presented the argument in rebuttal on 17 November 1998. The case was adjourned the same day for deliberation by the Trial Chamber.

25. During the trial, numerous written and oral motions were heard. On 17 April 1997, the Defence challenged the credibility of a witness, where the oral testimony varied from the previous written statement taken by the prosecutor's investigators. The Chamber opined that variation may occur at times for appreciable reasons without giving cause to disregard the statement in whole or in part. [FN8] The Chamber ordered that when counsel perceives there to be a contradiction between the written and oral statement of a witness, Counsel should raise such question by putting to the witness the exact portion in issue to enable the witness to explain the discrepancy before the Tribunal. Counsels should then mark the relevant portion and submit it as an exhibit if they find that the contradiction or discrepancy raised was material to the credibility of the witness concerned.

FN8 Order on the Probative Value of Alleged Contradiction between the Oral and Written Statement of A Witness During Examination, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 17 April 1997.

26. On 9 July 1997, Ruzindana filed a Motion pursuant to Rule 75 of the Rules seeking protective measures for potential witnesses noting that this protection should not extend to providing immunity from prosecution by an appropriate authority. The Trial Chamber [FN9] granted the Motion. A Motion filed by Kayishema seeking general protective measures for witnesses who would testify on his behalf was also granted by the Chamber in its Decision on 23 March 1998. [FN10]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN9 Decision on the Motion for the Protection of Defence Witnesses, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 6 October 1997.

FN10 Decision on the Motion for the Protection of Defence Witnesses, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 23 February 1998.

27. On 12 March 1998 the Prosecutor filed a Motion requesting the Trial Chamber to order the Defence to comply with the provisions of rules 67(A)(ii) and 67(C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Prosecutor submitted that if the Defence intended to offer the defence of alibi, it should notify the Prosecution as early as practicable but in any event prior to the commencement of the trial. The Chamber opined that Kayishema should make the necessary disclosure immediately if they intend to rely upon the defence of alibi or special defence. However, the Defence filed a joint Motion on 30 April 1998 requesting the Trial Chamber to interpret the notion of 'defence of alibi' and 'special defence' as stipulated in Rule 67 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Chamber dismissed the Defence Motion on the ground that it can not define rule 67 of the Rules in an abstract form without a specific problem to address. [FN11]

FN11 Decision on the Prosecution Motion for An Order Requesting Compliance by the Defence with Rules 67 (A)(ii) and 67(C) of the Rules, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, 15 June 1998.

28. Due to the Defence's continued non compliance with Rule 67(A)(ii) of the Rule of Procedure and Evidence, the Prosecution filed another Motion on 11 August 1998, seeking, inter alia, an order prohibiting the Defence of Kayishema from invoking the Defence of alibi or any special Defence. The Defence responded that, under Rule 67(B), failure of the Defence to notify the Prosecutor of the Defence of alibi or any special Defence as required by rule 67(A)(ii), does not limit the right of the accused to raise the Defence of alibi or special Defence. The Trial rejected the Defence's reasons for not providing details noting that the accused himself could have provided at least some details. The Chamber therefore reiterated its previous decision on this matter. [FN12]

FN12 Decision on the Prosecution Motion for A Ruling on the Defence Continued non Compliance with Rule 67 (A)(ii) and with the Written and Oral Orders of the Trial Chamber, the prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 3 September 1998.

29. On 22 June 1998, the Prosecution filed a Motion, seeking for a ruling that evidence of a Defence expert witness, a psychiatrist, be ruled inadmissible. The

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Chamber noted that it is important to observe the rights of the accused to a fair trial guaranteed under the provisions of Article 20 of the Statute in particular 20(4)(e) which provides that the accused shall have the rights to obtain the attendance of witnesses on his or her behalf. The expert was heard. [FN13]

30. On 19 August 1998, the Chamber dismissed a Motion filed by the Defence requesting to re-examine witness DE. The Trial Chamber found that the case of Kayishema would not suffer prejudice in the absence of additional evidence from this witness and rejected the Motion. [FN14]

FN14 Decision on the Defence Motion for the Re-examination of Defence Witness DE, the Prosecutor v. ClJment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1- T, 19 August 1998.

II. Historical Context of the 1994 Events in Rwanda

31. It is necessary to address the historical context within which the events unfolded in Rwanda in 1994, in order to understand fully the events alleged in the Indictment and the evidence before the Trial Chamber. We will not engage in a lengthy examination of the geo-political or historical difficulties faced by Rwanda as a number of reports and other publications have been written on these issues to which interested persons can refer.

32. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that an attempt to explain the causal links between the history of Rwanda and the suffering endured by this nation in 1994 is not appropriate in this forum and may be futile. It is impossible to simplify all the ingredients that serve as a basis for killings on such a scale. Therefore, the account presented below is a brief explanation of issues related to the division of ethnic groups in Rwanda, a brief history of Rwanda's post-independence era, including a look at the 1991 Constitution, the Arusha Accords, and the creation of militias.

33. The Trial Chamber has chosen to relay the events using neutral language and, where necessary, to discuss the cross-examination of the Prosecution witnesses. The summary is based exclusively on the evidence presented to this Trial Chamber and no reference has been made to sources or materials that do not constitute a part of the record of the present case.

The Question of Ethnicity in Rwanda

34. In 1994, apart from some foreign nationals, there were three officially recognised ethnic groups living in Rwanda, the Hutus, the Tutsis and the Twas. The Hutus constituted the overwhelming majority of the population. The Rwandan use of the term "ethnicity" requires some explanation because according to Prosecution witness, André Guichaoua, Professor of Sociology and Economics at the University of Lille, France, all Rwandans share the same national territory, speak the same language, believe in the same myths and share the same cultural traditions. The

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Trial Chamber opines that these shared characteristics could be tantamount to a common ethnicity. Thus, it is recognised that prior to the colonisation of Rwanda, by Germany and later Belgium, the line separating the Hutus and Tutsis was permeable as the distinction was class-based. In other words, if a Hutu could acquire sufficient wealth, he would be considered a Tutsi.

35. This begs the question of how it became possible permanently to seal a person into one category after the Belgian colonisation. The Belgians instituted a system of national identification cards bearing the terms Hutu, Tutsi and Twa, under the category of ethnicity, which were used for administrative purposes in 1931. Although prior to the arrival of the European colonisers the Rwandans had referred to themselves as Hutus, Tutsis or Twas, it was after this point that the group identity solidified and this former sociological categorisation became a means of ethnic identification. From its inception, the identification card has been used to facilitate discrimination against one group or another in Rwanda, be it in the implementation of an ethnic based quota system in educational and employment opportunities or in implementing a policy of genocide as was done in 1994.

36. For decades some claimed that Hutus and Twas were the original inhabitants of Rwanda and that Tutsis were "people from the Nile." [FN1] During cross-examination Guichaoua deposed that this idea has never been proven scientifically and that no one "category of occupants has more legitimacy than others." [FN2] Nonetheless, certain Hutu politicians have periodically used this concept to legitimise their call for "Hutu Power" and to incite hatred and division amongst the Rwandan population, as outlined below.

FN1 Pros. exh. 103A, p. 8.

FN2 Ibid.

A Brief Glance at the Post-Independence Era

37. In 1959, shortly prior to gaining independence, Rwanda witnessed the beginnings of intense ethnic tensions. During that year a number of Tutsi chiefs, farmers and other persons were massacred and their houses were set ablaze. Thousands of other Tutsis were forced to flee to neighbouring countries. Guichaoua stated that the deterioration of ethnic relations could be attributed to the legacy of Tutsi favouritism by the colonial powers.

The First Republic

38. The country's first President, Gregoire Kayibanda, was elected in 1962 at which time the Hutu movements began to display their radicalisation more openly. Professor Guichaoua testified that anti-Tutsi movements had become so hostile that by 1963, 200,000 to 300,000 Tutsis sought refuge in neighbouring countries. Between 1962 and 1966 there were repeated attempts by armed Tutsi groups (labelled

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Inyenzi -- cockroach) to regain power through incursions organised from neighbouring countries, mainly from Burundi. According to Professor Guichaoua, because an incursion in December 1963 reached the gates of Kigali, a hunt for Tutsis ensued throughout the country thereafter. The worsening tensions led to the consolidation of power by "the radical Hutu elements and helped to suppress the deep divisions within the regime in power which was increasingly marked by the personal and authoritarian style of government of President Kayibanda." [FN3]

FN3 Pros. exh. 103A, p. 12.

39. President Kayibanda's attempt to maintain his hold on power is evident from the institution of a de facto single-party system in Rwanda in 1965. His party, the Republican Democratic Movement (MDR-PARMEHUTU) eliminated the Tutsi parties as well as other Hutu parties such as the Association for the Social Advancement of the Masses (APROSOMA). Factional political divisions, based on regions of origin from within the country, added further strain on the ethnic- base difficulties at that time. A new sense of supremacy, based on the existence of a legitimate majority population was fostered and contributed to the massacres of the Tutsis that occurred in Rwanda and Burundi in 1972-73. Thus, the inability of the First Republic to overcome ethnic tensions lead to its downfall and the assassination of President Kayibanda.

The Second Republic

40. On 5 July 1973, the Chief of Staff, Major Juvenal Habyarimana, a native of Gisenyi Prefecture, seized power in a coup d'etat. His then Chief of Security, Alexis Kanyarengwe "implemented a strategy of political and ethnic tension, aimed at making the coup d'etat%i" seem necessary for restoring order to the country. Although the 1973 coup was interpreted as "simply settling scores between rival factions" [FN4] and having nothing to do with ethnic tensions, those in power encouraged the Hutus to chase away their Tutsi friends and colleagues from educational establishments and places of employment. Again, like in 1959, many Tutsis died at the hands of Hutu assailants and thousands of others fled the country. This brought about the advent of Rwanda's Second Republic.

FN4 Ibid., p. 15. Professor Guichaoua cited to a proclamation following the coup by commander Theoneste Lizinde, which made no reference to the ethnic confrontations.

41. Two years later, in 1975, the National Revolutionary Movement for Development (MRND) was created to replace the MDR. At its helm was President Habyarimana. This party controlled the country until the time of the tragic events in 1994. In 1978, President Habyarimana declared that the Hutu-Tutsi problem would be solved by ensuring that all Rwandans, from birth, were members of the MRND. Compulsory and exclusive membership in this party effectively erased any distinction between the party and the State. Habyarimana also promised that all segments of society would be ensured representation in high ranking government posts, taking into account its percentage in the total population. Of course this idea inherently contained a quota system that would further frustrate the efforts in reconciling ethnic difficulties.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

42. For the next few years the Habyarimana government focused its efforts on issues of development. According to Professor Guichaoua, throughout the late 1970s and a part of the 1980s this government's efforts met with undeniable success in terms of low national debt, maintaining macroeconomic balances, monetary stability, food self-sufficiency, etc. Also during this time, the government re-introduced the system of umuganda -- the Rwandan concept of communal work -- meant to promote the value of organised or spontaneous solidarity (mutual help among neighbours) among the people living in the hills. [FN5] Additionally, "the social cohesion of this peasant state and the submission of the peasantry to an extremely authoritarian and constraining order was due largely to a policy which succeeded in establishing a weakly differentiated social system." [FN6] Thus the misplaced belief and confidence the Rwandans had in their leadership, that existed during the colonial era, was put to use once again in 1994.

FN5 Ibid., p.16.

FN6 Ibid., p.18.

43. Despite this economic success and the government's ability to bring its citizens together to engage in community work, the largely agrarian population of Rwanda did not benefit. Rwandans began to protest the inequities, noticing the nepotism and widespread corruption in the government. The quota system mentioned above was another source of difficulties for the population. As gross social inequalities persisted and with other economic problems and food shortages that arose in 1988- 89, the time was ripe for Tutsis outside the country to attempt to regain power once more.

44. On a number of occasions members of the Tutsi diaspora had attempted to return to Rwanda, only to be stopped at the boarder by claims that the small country could not absorb the returnees. For example, in 1982, when Uganda expelled various categories of refugees, Rwanda responded by closing its borders, refusing assistance to the thousands in need and only later allowing a small fraction of the Tutsi refugees to enter and resettle. Following these incidents, the thousands of Rwandans that remained in the neighbouring countries of Burundi, Tanzania, Uganda and Zaire began to pressure the world community and these governments to find a solution to their plight.

45. The Rwandan Patriotic Front (the RPF) was created as a response to the Tutsi Diaspora's frustration with the international community's minimal attention to the emotionally charged refugee problem. In October 1990, the RPF launched an attack into northeastern Rwanda from Uganda. This attack was supported by, inter alia, the majority of Tutsis living abroad and brought an intense period of diplomatic negotiations which produced some noticeable results. For instance, by November 1990, the system of ethnic based scholastic and professional quotas was officially abolished and in December the Rwandan government declared an amnesty for certain prisoners. By March 1991 a cease- fire was called. Certain elements of the then Rwandan government however, were not eager to begin the process and therefore ensured that some of the more significant promises made were not implemented with due haste. Additionally, the extreme violence targeting the Tutsi population, especially in rural areas, continued unabated. Therefore, the RPF continued its strategy of a protracted war. Nevertheless, attempts were made at a democratic transition between 1991 and 1993.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The 1991 Constitution and Multi-Partism

46. Francois Nsanzuwera, a Rwandan scholar, testified that the 1991 Rwandan Constitution replaced the single party system with a multiparty system. It entrusted the National Assembly and the President of the Republic with legislative and executive power, respectively. The Constitution however did not render the President of the Republic accountable to the National Assembly.

47. The officially recognised parties were forbidden to use paramilitary forces (Article 26) and were granted access to the official media. Thereafter, the following parties were created: the Mouvement Democratique République (MDR), the Parti Libéral (PL), the Parti Social-democrate (PSD), the Parti Democrate-chrétien (PDC) and the Coalition pour la Défense de la République (CDR).

48. With the advent of multi-party politics, a very distinctive constitutional and administrative status quo would have purportedly manifested itself in Rwanda. This was the view of Professor Guibal, a titular Professor of constitutional and administrative law, Montpellier University, France. He was commissioned by the Defence to produce a report on the constitutional landscape of Rwanda, based upon the laws promulgated and in effect during and prior to the events of 1994. [FN7]

FN7 What follows is a synopsis of this report and Professor Guibal's testimony on 27 and 28 May 1998.

49. It was Professor Guibal's opinion that as a result of the multi-partyism that emerged after the 1991 Constitution, the traditional delineation of the branches of Government was not discernible. Thus, there was no clear separation of powers between the executive, judiciary and central and regional administration. Rather, the witness testified, the constitutional framework that existed after 1991 was one that was delineated on a party-political basis also. Consequently, a dichotomy of hierarchies and relationships would have emerged throughout, and even transcended the branches of Government -- one on an administrative level and one on a party political basis.

50. Professor Guibal then went on to describe the theoretical consequence of the system that existed in Rwanda, when faced with the events and turmoil of 1994. He was of the opinion that such a paradigm of multi-partyism, when confronted with these chaotic and unstable times, would have become a system of crisis multi-partyism. The Chamber was informed that such crisis multi-partyism would arise as pivotal governmental figures were moved to resolve the turmoil and conflicts upon party-political lines, rather than by the delineated constitutional means.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The Arusha Accords

51. Nsanzuwera testified that the Rwandan government and the RPF signed the Arusha Accords on 4 August 1993 in Arusha, Tanzania in order to bring about a peaceful settlement to the political and military crisis in Rwanda. The Accords constituted a compilation of several agreements and protocols previously signed, concerning notably cease-fire and power sharing between the warring factions. 47 articles of the 1991 Constitution were replaced by the provisions of the Arusha Accords, including articles on power sharing and the entrusting of additional power to the Prime Minister and certain organs of the government.

The Creation of Militias

52. While the negotiations for peace and power sharing were underway in Arusha, the MRND and the CDR stepped up their efforts to recruit members, especially from the youth segment of the population. Both the MRND and the CDR, two Hutu based parties, intensified their efforts to fortify membership in their youth organisations known as the Interahamwe and the Impuzamugambi, respectively. Within a short period of time these recruits were converted to paramilitary forces. The parties ensured that the young recruits, made up mostly of former soldiers, gendarmes and prisoners, were militarily trained and indoctrinated. All these activities were carried out in direct violation of Article 26 of the 1991 Constitution and with the knowledge of the then Minister of Internal Affairs who was entrusted with the duty to suspend the activities of any political party for such activities.

53. By the end of 1993 CDR speeches, broadcast from government owned radio stations, referred to the Tutsis and Hutus from the opposition parties as collaborators of the RPF. These speeches encouraged the militias to target Tutsis in their daily acts of vandalism. Between 1992 and 1994 there were claims that the militias were supported by certain member of the military and the Presidential Guard. During this period many members of the judiciary were said to have turned a blind eye to the criminal acts of the militias either because they supported their activities or out of fear of reprisals. Assassination attempts, some of which were successful, were made on the lives of certain judges or magistrates who sought to carry out their duties faithfully. According to Nsanzuwera, by that time some claimed that members of the militias had become more powerful than members of the armed forces. As indicated in the parts that follow, the militias did in fact play a substantial role in the 1994 Genocide that occurred in this country.

Conclusion

54. The ethnic tensions were used by those in power in 1994 to carry out their plans to avoid power sharing. The responsible parties ignored the Arusha Accords and used the militias to carry out their genocidal plan and to incite the rest of the Hutu population into believing that all Tutsis and other persons who may not have supported the war against the RPF were in fact RPF supporters. It is against this backdrop that of thousands of people were slaughtered and mutilated in just three short months.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

III. EVIDENTIARY MATTERS

3.1 Equality of Arms

3.2 Reliability of Eyewitnesses

3.3 Witness Statements

3.4 Specificity of the Indictment

3.1 Equality of Arms

55. The notion of equality of arms is laid down in Article 20 of the Statute. Specifically, Article 20(2) states, "... the accused shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing. ...'' Article 20(4) also provides, "... the accused shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality... ," there then follows a list of rights that must be respected, including the right to a legal counsel and the right to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his or her defence.

56. Counsel for Kayishema filed a Motion, on 13 March 1997, calling for the application of Rule 20(2) and 20(4). [FN1] The Defence submitted that in order to conduct a fair trial, full equality should exist between the Prosecution and the Defence in terms of the means and facilities placed at their disposal. To this end, the Defence requested the Chamber to order the disclosure of the number of lawyers, consultants, assistants and investigators that had been at the disposal of the Prosecution since the beginning of the case. The Motion also requested the Chamber to order the Prosecutor to indicate the amount of time spent on the case and the various expenditures made. Finally, the Motion called upon the Chamber to restrict the number of assistants utilised by the Prosecution during trial to the same number as those authorised for the Defence.

FN1 Motion by the Defence Counsel for Kayishema Calling for the Application by the Prosecutor of Article 20(2) and 20 (4)(b) of the Statute. Filed with the Registry, 13 March 1997. The issue was raised again by Mr. Ferran in his closing arguments. Trans., 3 Nov 1998, from p. 30.

57. On the first two points raised by the Defence (request for information on the

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Prosecutor's resources), the Prosecution submitted that the information requested by Defence was not public and was intrinsically linked to the exercise of the Prosecutor's mandate, in accordance with Article 15 of the Statute. [FN2]

FN2 The Prosecution's response to the Motion was filed with the Registry on 29 April 1997 and additional information was filed on 5 May 1997.

58. On the third point (request to limit the number of assistants to the Prosecutor), the Prosecution submitted that Article 20 of the Statute establishes an equality of rights, rather than an equality of means and resources.

59. The Chamber considered that the Defence did not prove any violation of the rights of the accused as laid down in Article 20(2) and 20(4). [FN3] The Chamber considered that the Defence should have addressed these issues under Article 17(C) of the Directive on Assignment of Defence Counsel (Defence Counsel Directive). This provision clearly states

FN3 Order on the Motion by the Defence Counsel for Application of Article 20(2) and (4)(b) of the Statute, 5 May 1997.

the costs and expenses of legal representation of the suspect or accused necessarily and reasonably incurred shall be covered by the Tribunal to the extent that such expenses cannot be be borne by the suspect or the accused because of his financial situation. [emphasis added]

60. This provision should be read in conjunction with Article 20(4)(d) of the Statute which stipulates that legal assistance shall be provided by the Tribunal, "... if he or she does not have sufficient means to pay for it." [emphasis added]. Therefore, at this juncture, the Trial Chamber would reiterate its earlier ruling on this Motion that the rights of the accused should not be interpreted to mean that the Defence is entitled to same means and resources as the Prosecution. Any other position would be contrary to the status quo that exists within jurisdictions throughout the world and would clearly not reflect the intentions of the drafters of this Tribunal's Statute.

61. The question of equality of arms was verbally raised on other occasions. The Defence Counsel complained, for example, of the impossibility to verify the technical and material data about Kibuye Prefecture submitted by the Prosecution. [FN4] However, the Trial Chamber is aware that investigators, paid for by the Tribunal, was put at the disposal of the Defence. Furthermore, Article 17(C) establishes that any expenses incurred in the preparation of the Defence case relating, inter alia alia, to investigative costs are to be met by the Tribunal. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that all of the necessary provisions for the preparation of a comprehensive defence were available, and were afforded to all Defence Counsel in this case. The utilisation of those resources is not a matter for the Trial Chamber.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN4 Defence Closing Brief for Kayishema, 16 Oct. 1998, p. 3.

62. Counsel for Kayishema also raised the issue of lack of time afforded to the Defence for the preparation of its case. [FN5] In this regard the Trial Chamber notes that Kayishema made his initial appearance before the Tribunal on 31 May 1996, Counsel having been assigned two days prior. The trial began on 11 April 1997 and the Defence did not commence its case until 11 May 1998, almost two years after the accused's initial appearance. As such, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that sufficient time was accorded to both Parties for the preparation of their respective cases.

FN5 Ibid., p. 2-3.

63. Specifically, on the time designated for the preparation of the closing arguments, the Defence expressed further dissatisfaction. [FN6] Having expressed his opinion that "the trial has been fair," Counsel for Kayishema however went on to submit that the eight days allowed him to prepare for his closing arguments was inequitable in light of the one month time frame afforded to the Prosecution. However, the Chamber pronounced itself on this issue from the bench when it was declared, FN6 See Mr. Ferran's closing arguments, Trans., 3 Nov. 1998, pp. 54-55.

... for the record, I think the parties ... agreed that the presentation of oral argument and filing of the relevant documents will be done within a time frame ... So the concept of either one party being given one month does not arise . . [I]t was discussed openly with the understanding that each and every respective party had some work to do ... That is the defence could prepare its own case ... right from the word go ... (President of the Chamber) [FN7]

FN7 Trans., 3 Nov. 1998, pp. 55-56.

64. Moreover, were any particular issues of dispute or dissatisfaction to have arisen, the Trial Chamber should have been seized of these concerns in the appropriate manner and at the appropriate time. A cursory reference in the closing brief, and a desultory allusion in Counsel's closing remarks is not an acceptable mode of raising the issue before the Chamber.

3.2 Reliability of Eyewitnesses

65. Unlike the leaders of Nazi Germany, who meticulously documented their acts during World War II, the organisers and perpetrators of the massacres that occurred in Rwanda in 1994 left little documentation behind. Thus, both Parties relied predominantly upon the testimony of witnesses brought before this Chamber in order to establish their respective cases.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

66. A majority of the Prosecution witnesses were Tutsis who had survived attacks in Kibuye Prefecture (survivor witnesses), in which both accused allegedly participated. As such the Defence presented Dr. Régis Pouget to address the Trial Chamber on the credibility of eyewitness testimonies generally and, more specifically, upon the reliability of testimony from persons who had survived attacks having witnessed violent acts committed against their families, friends and neighbours. [FN8]

FN8 Def. exh. 59, Report on the Crowd Psychology. Dr. Pouget has been, inter alia, Professor of Psychiatry and Psychology, Director of Education, Montpellier University, France; and the appointed expert in psychology for Nimes and Montepellier Courts of Appeal, France.

67. The Prosecution contested the submission of the report, submitting that it was unnecessary and without probative value. [FN9] Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber, in exercising its discretion on this issue, received the report and heard the testimony of Dr. Pouget between 29 June and 2 July 1998.

FN9 Motion by the Prosecutor that Evidence of a Defence Expert Witness, Dr. Pouget, be Ruled Inadmissible Pursuant to Article 19(1) of the Statute and Rules 54 and 89 of the Rules.

Eyewitness Testimonies Generally

68. The issue of identification is particularly pertinent in light of the defence of alibi advanced by the accused. The report prepared by Dr. Pouget and submitted on behalf of the Defence suggests that eyewitnesses often are not a reliable source of information.

69. In order to support such a conclusion, Dr. Pouget proffered a number of reasons. It was his opinion, for example, that people do not pay attention to what they see yet, when uncertain about the answer to a question, they often give a definite answer nonetheless. He went on to describe various other, common-place factors that may affect the reliability of witness testimony generally. He observed, inter alia, that the passage of time often reduces the accuracy of recollection, and how this recollection may then be influenced either by the individual's own imperfect mental process of reconstructing past events, or by other external factors such as media reports or numerous conversations about the events.

70. The Chamber does not consider that such general observations are in dispute. Equally, the Chamber concurs with Dr. Pouget's assertion that the corroboration of events, even by many witnesses, does not necessarily make the event and/or its details correct. However, the Trial Chamber is equally cognisant that, notwithstanding the foregoing analysis, all eyewitness testimony cannot be simply disregarded out-of-hand on the premise that it may not be an exact recollection. Accordingly, it is for the Trial Chamber to decide upon the reliability of the witness' testimony in light of its presentation in court and after its subjection to cross-examination. Thus, whilst corroboration of such testimony is not a guarantee of its accuracy, it is a factor that the Trial Chamber has taken into account when considering the testimonies.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

71. Similarly, prior knowledge of those identified is another factor that the Trial Chamber may take into account in considering the reliability of witness testimonies. For example, in the Tanzanian case of Waziri Amani v. Republic [FN10] the accused called into question his identification by witnesses. The Court of Appeals held that, if at the end of his (the witness') examination the judge is satisfied that the quality of identification is good, for example, when the identification was made by a witness after a long period of observation or in satisfactory conditions by a relative, a neighbour, a close friend, a workmate and the like, we think, he could in those circumstances safely convict on the evidence of identification.

FN10 1980 TLR 250, 252.

The case of United States v. Telafaire [FN11] also offers persuasive guidance on the other factors which may be taken into account. Firstly, the court in Telafaire held that the trier of fact must be convinced that the witness had the capacity and an adequate opportunity to observe the offender. Secondly, the identification of the accused by the witness should be the product of his own recollection and, thirdly, the trier of fact should take into consideration any inconsistency in the witness's identification of the accused at trial. Finally, it was held that the general credibility of the witness -- his truthfulness and opportunity to make reliable observations -- should also be borne in mind by the trier of fact.

FN11 469 F.2d 552 (D.C. Cir. 1972).

72. The Trial Chamber, in its examination of the evidence, has been alive to these various approaches and, where appropriate, has specifically delineated the salient considerations pertinent to its findings.

Survivors as Witnesses

73. The report of Dr. Pouget, an expert in the field of psychology, address the reliability of testimony from those who have witnessed traumatic events. It was his opinion that strong emotions experienced at the time of the events have a negative effect upon the quality of recollection. During traumatic events, he expounded, the natural defensive system either prevents the retention of those incidents or buries their memories so deep that they are not easily, if at all, accessible.

74. This is the view of the expert Defence witness. However, as the Prosecutor highlighted, other views do exist. She produced, for example, other academic views which stated that stressful conditions lead to an especially vivid and detailed recollection of events. [FN12] What is apparent to the Trial Chamber is that different witnesses, like different academics, think differently.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN12 An article by Ann Maass and Gautier Kohnken, in the Law and Human Behaviour Journal, vol. 13, no. 4, 1989, was shown to the witness and discussed in cross-examination. Trans., 2 Jul. 1998, p. 104.

75. The Chamber is aware of the impact of trauma on the testimony of witnesses. However, the testimonies cannot be simply disregarded because they describe traumatic and horrific realities. Some inconsistencies and imprecision in the testimonies are expected and were carefully considered in light of the circumstances faced by the witnesses.

3.3 Witness Statements

76. The Parties raised apparent discrepancies or omissions that arose with regard to certain evidence when the witnesses' written statements were juxtaposed with their testimony given orally in Court. These written statements were drafted after the witnesses were interviewed by Prosecution investigators as part of the investigative process. Alleged inconsistencies were raised in relation to both Prosecution and Defence witnesses. The procedure adopted by the Trial Chamber for dealing with apparent inconsistencies was expounded during the hearing of evidence by Prosecution witness A. There, the Trial Chamber ordered that an alleged inconsistency be put to the witness and the witness be offered an opportunity to explain. In light of this explanation, if Counsel asserted that the inconsistency remained, the Counsel would mark the relevant portion of the witness statement and submit it as an exhibit for consideration by the Trial Chamber. Both Prosecution and Defence Counsel submitted such exhibits. [FN13]

FN13 Decision on the Prosecution Motion Request to Rule Inadmissible the Evidence of Defence Expert Witness, Dr. Pouget, the Prosecutor v. Clment Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, 29 June 1998.

77. The witness statements are not automatically evidence before the Trial Chamber per se. However, the statements may be used to impeach a witness. Where the relevant portion of the statement has been submitted as an exhibit, this portion will be considered by the Trial Chamber in light of the oral evidence and explanation offered by the witness. The Chamber is mindful that there was generally a considerable time lapse between the events to which the witnesses testified, the making of their prior statements, and their testimony before the Trial Chamber. However, notwithstanding the above, inconsistencies may raise doubt in relation to the particular piece of evidence in question or, where such inconsistencies are found to be material, to the witnesses' evidence as a whole.

FN13 See Pros. exh. 350A, 350B and 350C.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

78. Whether or not the explanation by the witness is enough to remove the doubt is determined on a case-by-case basis considering the circumstances surrounding the inconsistency and the subsequent explanation. However, to be released from doubt the Trial Chamber generally demands an explanation of substance rather than mere procedure. For example, a common explanation provided by witnesses was that the interviewing investigator did not accurately reflect in the written statement what the witness said. Although such an explanation may well be true, particularly considering the translation difficulties, in the absence of evidence that corroborates the explanation, it is generally not enough to remove doubt. Indeed, it is not for the Trial Chamber to search for reasons to excuse inadequacies in the Prosecution's investigative process.

79. Conversely, where the witness provides a convincing explanation of substance, perhaps relating to the substance of the investigator's question, then this may be sufficient to remove the doubt raised.

80. Doubts about a testimony can be removed with the corroboration of other testimonies. However, corroboration of evidence is not a legal requirement to accept a testimony. This Chamber is nevertheless aware of the importance of corroboration and considered the testimonies in this light. This notion has been emphasised in the Factual Findings of this Judgement.

3.4 Specificity of the Indictment

Introduction

81. The Indictment, in setting out the particulars of the charges against the accused, refers to events "around" and "about" a specific date, or between two specified dates. Kayishema is charged separately for massacres at the sites of the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean, the Stadium in Kibuye and Mubuga Church. Paragraphs 28, 35 and 41 of the Indictment detail these massacres as occurring on or about the 17, 18 and 14 April 1994 respectively. The fourth crime site for which both Kayishema and Ruzindana are charged is the Bisesero area between 9 April and 30 June. The question arises, therefore, as to whether sufficient certainty exists to enable an adequate defence to be advanced, thus to ensure the right of the accused to a fair trial.

The Allegations in Relation to the Massacres in the Bisesero Area

82. The Trial Chamber considers it appropriate to distinguish between the first three sites in the Indictment, and the charges raised in respect of the Bisesero area. The exact dates on which massacres occurred at the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean, the Stadium and Mubuga Church were identified in the course of the trial by the Prosecution's case-in-chief. Accordingly, the findings made by this Chamber are set out below in the Factual Findings Part.

83. The Chamber is aware of the difficulties of raising a defence where all of the elements of the offence are not precisely detailed in the Indictment. The difficulties are compounded because the alibi defence advanced by both accused persons does not remove them from the Bisesero vicinity at the time in question. The accused in the Tadic case faced similar difficulties. [FN14] In that instance the Trial Chamber observed the near impossibility of providing a 24-hour, day-by-day, and week-by-week account of the accused's whereabouts for an alibi defence which covers a duration of several months. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that this is a substantive issue.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN14 Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Case No. IT-94-1-T, 7 May 1997, para. 533. (Tadic Judgement.)

84. Nevertheless, it is important to note here that throughout the trial the burden of proving each material element of the offence, beyond a reasonable doubt, has remained firmly on the Prosecution. Whilst, prima facie, the accused should be informed in as greater detail as possible of the elements of the offence against them, such details will necessarily depend on the nature of the alleged crimes. The Trial Chamber finds that during its case-in-chief the Prosecution did focus upon various sites throughout the Bisesero region, but because of the wide-ranging nature of the attacks no further specificity was possible in the Indictment.

85. It is unnecessary, however, for the Prosecution to prove an exact date of an offence where the date or time is not also a material element of the offence. Whilst it would be preferable to allege and prove an exact date of each offence, this can clearly not be demanded as a prerequisite for conviction where the time is not an essential element of that offence. [FN15] Furthermore, even where the date of the offence is an essential element, it is necessary to consider with what precision the timing of the offence must be detailed. It is not always possible to be precise as to exact events; this is especially true in light of the events that occurred in Rwanda in 1994 and in light of the evidence we have heard from witnesses. Consequently, the Chamber recognises that it has balanced the necessary practical considerations to enable the Prosecution to present its case, with the need to ensure sufficient specificity of location and matter of offence in order to allow a comprehensive defence to be raised.

FN15 See, the Tadic Judgement, para. 534 and the cases cited therein.

86. However, because of the foregoing observations, the Trial Chamber opines that where timing is of material importance to the charges, then the wording of the count should lift the offence from the general to the particular. [FN16] In this respect, the Trial Chamber notes that the ratione temporis of this Tribunal extends from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994, and the Indictment only refers only to events that occurred in the Bisesero area between the 9 April and 30 June. In fact, during its case-in-chief, and with the more precise definition of massacre sites within the Bisesero area, the Prosecution was able to pinpoint specific periods during which the alleged events occurred. Therefore, the date need only be identified where it is a material element of the offence and, where it is such a necessary element, the precision with which such dates need be identified varies from case to case. In light of this, the Trial Chamber opines that the lack of specificity does not have a bearing upon the otherwise proper and complete counts, and it did not prejudice the right of the accused to a fair trial.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN16 See, for example, the Canadian cases of, G.B., A.B. and C.S. v. R (1990) 2 S.C.R. 30, and R v. Colgan (1986) 30 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (Court of Appeal), where Monnin C.J.M. found an offence specified as occurring at some point within a six year period to be sufficiently precise.

IV. THE LAW

4.1 Genocide

4.2 Crimes Against Humanity

4.3 Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II, thereto

4.4 Criminal Responsibility, Articles 6(1) and 6(3)

4.1 GENOCIDE

87. Article 2(2) of the ICTR Statute reads:

Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:

a. Killing members of the group;

b. Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;

c. Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;

d. Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;

e. Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

The above definition reproduces Articles II and III of the Genocide Convention of 1948 and Article 17 of the International Law Commission Report 1996, Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind (ILC Draft Code of Crimes).

88. The concept of genocide appeared first in the International Military Tribunal (Nuremberg) Judgement of 30 September and 1 October 1946, referring to the destruction of groups. The prohibition of genocide then was recognised by the General Assembly of the United Nations as a principle of international law.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Resolution 260(A)(III) of 9 December 1948, adopting the Draft Genocide Convention, crystallised into international law the prohibition of that crime. The Genocide Convention became widely accepted as an international human rights instrument. Furthermore, the crime of genocide is considered part of international customary law and, moreover, a norm of jus cogens.

89. The definition of the crime of genocide was based upon that of crimes against humanity, that is, a combination of "extermination and persecutions on political, racial or religious grounds" and it was intended to cover "the intentional destruction of groups in whole or in substantial part" (emphasis added). The crime of genocide is a type of crime against humanity. Genocide, however, is different from other crimes against humanity. The essential difference is that genocide requires the aforementioned specific intent to exterminate a protected group (in whole or in part) while crimes against humanity require the civilian population to be targeted as part of a widespread or systematic attack. There are instances where the discriminatory grounds coincide and overlap. This scenario is detailed in the present Judgement, in the Part VII on Cumulative Charges.

90. For the crime of genocide to be committed, two elements are required, namely, the mens rea, the requisite specific intent, and the actus reus, the prohibited act or omission.

4.1.1 The Mens Rea

91. A distinguishing aspect of the crime of genocide is the specific intent (dolus specialis) to destroy a group in whole or in part. The dolus specialis applies to all acts of genocide mentioned in Article 2(a) to (e) of the Statute, that is, all the enumerated acts must be committed 'with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.' It is this specific intent that distinguishes the crime of genocide from the ordinary crime of murder. [FN1] The Trial Chamber opines that for the crime of genocide to occur, the mens rea must be formed prior to the commission of the genocidal acts. The individual acts themselves, however, do not require premeditation; the only consideration is that the act should be done in furtherance of the genocidal intent.

FN1 Virginia Morris & Michael Scharf, THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA, 167 (1998)

92. Under Article 6(3) of the Statute, the superior is criminally responsible for the acts committed by his subordinates if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

Proof of the Requisite Intent

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

93. Regarding the assessment of the requisite intent, the Trial Chamber acknowledges that it may be difficult to find explicit manifestations of intent by the perpetrators. The perpetrator's actions, including circumstantial evidence, however may provide sufficient evidence of intent. The Commission of Experts in their Final Report on the situation in Rwanda also noted this difficulty. Their Report suggested that the necessary element of intent can be inferred from sufficient facts, such as the number of group members affected. [FN2] The Chamber finds that the intent can be inferred either from words or deeds and may be demonstrated by a pattern of purposeful action. [FN3] In particular, the Chamber considers evidence such as the physical targeting of the group or their property; the use of derogatory language toward members of the targeted group; the weapons employed and the extent of bodily injury; the methodical way of planning, the systematic manner of killing. Furthermore, the number of victims from the group is also important. In the Report of the Sub- Commission on Genocide, the Special Rapporteur stated that "the relative proportionate scale of the actual or attempted destruction of a group, by any act listed in Articles II and III of the Genocide Convention, is strong evidence to prove the necessary intent to destroy a group in whole or in part." [FN4]

FN2 Cited in Bassiouni, in THE LAW OF THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR THE FOR?? YUGOSLAVIA, p. 524, and UN AND RWANDA, 1993-6, p. 432, para. 166.

FN3 Wisconsin International Law Journal, 243 (1996).

FN4 UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1985/6, p. 16, para. 29.

94. It is also the view of the Chamber that although a specific plan to destroy does not constitute an element of genocide, it would appear that it is not easy to carry out a genocide without such a plan, or organisation. Morris and Scharf note that "it is virtually impossible for the crime of genocide to be committed without some or indirect involvement on the part of the State given the magnitude of this crime." [FN5] They suggested that "it is unnecessary for an individual to have knowledge of all details of the genocidal plan or policy." The Chamber concurs with this view.

FN5 Morris & Scharf, supra, p.168.

Destruction of a Group

95. The perpetrator must intend to destroy a group in whole or in part. This begs the question of what constitutes the "destruction of a group." The Prosecution suggests that the term should be broadly interpreted and encompass acts that are undertaken not only with the intent to cause death but also includes acts which may fall short of causing death. [FN6] In the Akayesu Judgement, acts of sexual violence, which occurred in Taba Commune were found to form an integral part of the process of destruction, specifically, targeting Tutsi women and contributing to their destruction and the destruction of the Tutsi as a group. [FN7] The Trial

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Chamber concurs with this view and that of the International Law Commission (ILC) which stated that "it is not necessary to intend to achieve the complete annihilation of a group from every corner of the globe." [FN8]

FN6 Prosecutor's Brief, 9 Oct. 1998, p. 30

FN7 Akayesu Judgement, para. 731.

FN8 ILC Draft Code of Crimes, p. 42, para.8.[Throughout the text, page citations to the International Law Commission (ILC) Report 1996 may refer to the Internet version at http://www.un.org/law/ilc/reports/196/chap02.htm]

Whole or in Part

96. Another aspect for consideration is that the intent to destroy the group must be "in whole or in part." The ILC stated that "the crime of Genocide by its very nature requires the intention to destroy at least a substantial part of a particular group." [FN9] In the Report of the Sub-Commission on Genocide, the Special Rapporteur stated that "in part" would seem to imply a reasonably significant number, relative to the total of the group as a whole, or else a significant section of a group such as its leadership. Hence, both proportionate scale and total number are relevant. [FN10]

FN9 Ibid.

FN10 Mr. Whitaker, in UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1985/6, p. 16, para. 29.

97. The Trial Chamber opines, therefore, that "in part" requires the intention to destroy a considerable number of individuals who are part of the group. Individuals must be targeted due to their membership of the group to satisfy this definition.

A National, Ethnical, Racial or Religious Group

98. The intent must exist to "destroy a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such." Thus, the acts must be directed towards a specific group on these discriminatory grounds. An ethnic group is one whose members share a common language and culture; or, a group which distinguishes itself, as such (self identification); or, a group identified as such by others, including perpetrators of the crimes (identification by others). A racial group is based on hereditary physical traits often identified with geography. A religious group includes denomination or mode of worship or a group sharing common beliefs.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Destroying in whole or in part a National, Ethnical, Racial or Religious Group as Such

99. This phrase speaks to specific intent (the requisite mens rea). The "destroying" has to be directed at the group as such, that is, qua group, as stipulated in Article 2(2) of the Statute.

4.1.2 Actus Reus

100. Article 2(2)(a) to (e) of the ICTR Statute and Article II (a) to (e) of the Genocide Convention lists acts which, if committed with the specific intent, amount to genocide.

Killing Members of the Group

101. Article 2(2)(a) of the Statute, in the English language version, states that genocide means the act of "killing" committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such. The French language version refers to meurtre, a term that requires the additional mental element of intent.

102. The Parties in their closing remarks addressed the differences between the English and French versions. The Prosecutor submitted that the term meurtre has a legal meaning in French law, that is, a deliberate homicide, whereas the term "killing" is merely the act of causing the death to another. [FN11] The Prosecutor contended that the language used in the English version is more flexible and would permit, if the need arises, a broadening of the meaning or interpretation. [FN12] The Defence teams submitted that "meurtre'' should be applied, as it was in the Akayesu Judgement. The Defence submitted that where doubt exists then, as a general principle of criminal law, that doubt should be interpreted in favour of the accused.

FN11 Trans., 21 Oct. 1998, p. 91.

FN12 Ibid.

103. The Trial Chamber agrees that if a doubt exists, for a matter of statutory interpretation, that doubt must be interpreted in favour of the accused. Therefore, the relevant act under Article 2(2)(a) is "meurtre,'' that is, unlawful and intentional killing. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that all the enumerated acts must be committed with intent to destroy a group in whole or in part. As stated by the ILC the enumerated acts "are by their very nature conscious, intentional or volitional acts which an individual could not usually commit without knowing that certain consequences were likely to result. They are not the type of acts that would normally occur by accident or even as a result of mere negligence ... the definition of this crime requires a particular state of mind or a specific intent with respect to the overall consequences of the prohibited act." [FN13] Hence, there is virtually no difference between the two as the term "killing" is linked to the intent to destroy in whole or in part.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN13 ILC Draft Code of Crimes, p. 42, (commenting upon sub-paragraph (a) to (e) of Article 17).

104. The Chamber observes that the Akayesu Judgement does not fully define the term "killing." [FN14] It is the opinion of the Trial Chamber that there is virtually no difference between the term "killing" in the English version and "meurtre'' in the French version of Article 2 (2)(a) of the Statute within the context of genocidal intent. Hence "killing" or "meurtre" should be considered along with the specific intent of genocide, that is, the intent to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such.

FN14 Paras. 500-501, p. 206.

Causing Serious Bodily or Mental Harm to Members of the Group

105. Pursuant to Article 2(2)(b) of the Statute states "causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group."

106. This phrase, which is not defined by the Statute, was the subject of contention during the closing submissions of the Parties. The Prosecution submitted that "causing a bodily or a mental harm" means: to undertake an action that might cause injury to the physical and mental fullness, the total being of a person; that a human being is to be considered as a whole with structures and elements functioning in concert and harmony; that the term "serious" is applicable to both the bodily and the mental part of a person and is dependant upon the extent to which the physical body or mental well being is injured.

107. The Prosecution submitted that serious harm may include impact on one or more elements of the human structure, which disables the organs of the body and prevents them from functioning as normal. To this end, the harm caused need not bring about death but causes handicap such that the individual will be unable to be a socially useful unit or a socially existent unit of the group. The Prosecution submitted that blows and wounds inflicted would constitute serious harm when they are so violent or have such intensity that they immediately cause the malfunctioning of one or many essential mechanisms of the human body. The Prosecution also submits that non-physical aggressions such as the infliction of strong fear or strong terror, intimidation or threat are also serious mental harm. [FN15]

FN15 Rahetlah, submission, 21 October 1998, pp. 114 to 121.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

Serious Bodily Harm

108. The phrase serious bodily harm should be determined on a case-by-case basis, using a common sense approach. In the Akayesu Judgement, it was held that serious bodily harm does not necessarily mean harm that is permanent or irremediable. [FN16] The Akayesu Judgement further held that acts of sexual violence, rape, mutilations and interrogations combined with beatings, and/or threats of death, were all acts that amount to serious bodily harm. [FN17] The Trial Chamber concurs with these determinations.

FN16 Akayesu Judgement, para 502.

FN17 Akayesu Judgement, paras 706-07 and 711-12.

109. It is the view of the Trial Chamber that, to large extent, "causing serious bodily harm" is self-explanatory. This phrase could be construed to mean harm that seriously injures the health, causes disfigurement or causes any serious injury to the external, internal organs or senses.

Serious Mental Harm

110. The phrase "serious mental harm" should also be determined on a case-by-case. The Prosecution submits that there is no prerequisite that mental suffering should be the result of physical harm. The Prosecution relies upon the commentary offered in the Preparatory Committee's Definition of Crimes that suggests that serious mental harm should include "more than minor or temporary impairment on mental faculties." [FN18] The Prosecution suggested that the inflicting of strong fear or terror, intimidation or threat may amount to serious mental harm.

FN18 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, 9 Oct. 1998, p. 26.

111. The Defence teams submitted that the serious bodily and mental harm alleged by the Prosecution was merely a consequence of attempts to kill and did not amount to genocidal offences in themselves. It argued that the Prosecution witnesses who had been wounded did not demonstrate that the perpetrators had intention to cause serious bodily or mental harm. The Defence contends therefore, that there was intention to cause murder and not to cause serious bodily or mental harm.

112. The Chamber considers that an accused may be held liable under these circumstances only where, at the time of the act, the accused had the intention to inflict serious mental harm in pursuit of the specific intention to destroy a group in whole or in part.

113. The Chamber opines that "causing serious mental harm" should be interpreted on a case-by-case basis in light of the relevant jurisprudence.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Deliberately Inflicting on the Group Conditions of Life Calculated to Bring About its Physical Destruction in Whole or in Part

114. Article 2(2)(c) of the Statute covers the act of "deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part." The Prosecution submits that Article 2(2)(c) applies to situations likely to cause death regardless of whether death actually occurs and allows for the punishment of the perpetrator for the infliction of substandard conditions of life which, if left to run their coarse, could bring about the physical destruction of the group. [FN19]

FN19 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, 9 October 1998, p.28.

115. The Trial Chamber concurs with the explanation within the Draft Convention, prepared by the U.N. Secretariat which interpreted this concept to include circumstances which will lead to a slow death, for example, lack of proper housing, clothing, hygiene and medical care or excessive work or physical exertion. [FN20]

FN20 Nehemiah Robinson, the Genocide Convention: A Commentary (1960), p. 123.

116. It is the view of the Trial Chamber that "deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part," includes methods of destruction which do not immediately lead to the death of members of the group. The Chamber adopts the above interpretation. [FN21] Therefore the conditions of life envisaged include rape, the starving of a group of people, reducing required medical services below a minimum, and withholding sufficient living accommodation for a reasonable period, provided the above would lead to the destruction of the group in whole or in part.

FN21 Robinson, supra, pp. 63-64.

Imposing Measures Intended to Prevent Births Within the Group

117. Article 2(2)(d) of the Statute covers the act of imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group. The Trial Chamber concurs with the explanation provided in the Akayesu Judgement.

Forcibly Transferring Children of the Group to Another

118. Article 2(2)(e) of the Statute covers the act of forcibly transferring children of the group to another. The Trial Chamber concurs with the explanation provided in the Akayesu Judgement.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

4.2 CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY

119. Article 3 of the ICTR Statute states:

The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds:

a) Murder;

b) Extermination;

c) Enslavement;

d) Deportation;

e) Imprisonment;

f) Torture;

g) Rape;

h) Prosecutions;

i) Other inhumane acts.

120. Crimes against humanity were prosecuted at the Nuremberg trials. The Charter of the International Military Tribunal of Nuremberg [FN22] in its Article 6(c) (Annex to the Agreement for the Prosecution and Punishment of Major War Criminals of the European Axis (London Agreement)), describes the crimes against humanity as follows:

FN22 Law No. 10 of the Control Council for Germany.

... namely murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian populations, before or during the war; or persecutions on political, racial, or religious grounds in execution of or in connection with any crime within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, whether or not in violation of the domestic law of the country where perpetrated.

121. Crimes against humanity were also applied under Article II of Law No. 10 of the Control Council Law [FN23] and went through a gradual evolution in the domestic cases of Eichmann, [FN24] Barbie, [FN25] and Touvier. More recently, crimes against humanity have been applied in the International Criminal Tribunals for both Rwanda and the Former Yugoslavia.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

FN23 International Law Reports (ILR), vol.36, p. 31.

FN24 36 ILR.

FN25 125 ILR.

4.2.1 The Attack

122. The enumerated crimes must be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. The attack is the event in which the enumerated crimes must form part. Indeed, within a single attack, there may exist a combination of the enumerated crimes, for example murder, rape and deportation. The elements of the attack effectively exclude from crimes against humanity, acts carried out for purely personal motives and those outside of a broader policy or plan; a position which was adopted by the Defence.

Widespread or Systematic

123. The attack must contain one of the alternative conditions of being widespread or systematic. [FN26] A widespread attack is one that is directed against a multiplicity of victims. [FN27] A systematic attack means an attack carried out pursuant to a preconceived policy or plan. Either of these conditions will serve to exclude isolated or random inhumane acts committed for purely personal reasons. [FN28]

FN26 Despite the French text containing the conjunctive 'and' instead of the disjunctive 'or' between the terms widespread or systematic, the Trial Chamber is in no doubt that the correct interpretation is the disjunctive. The matter has already been settled in the Akayesu Judgement and needs no further debate here.

FN27 The ILC Draft Code of Crimes explained "large scale" (the term used in place of 'widespread') to mean acts that are "directed against a multiplicity of victims." Article 18, para 4 of commentary.

FN28 The ILC Draft Code of Crimes defines systematic as "meaning pursuant to a preconceived plan or policy. The implementation of this plan or policy could result in the repeated or continuous commission of inhumane acts. The thrust of this requirement is to exclude random acts that were not committed as part of a broader plan or policy." Article 18, para 3 of commentary.

The Policy Element

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

124. For an act of mass victimisation to be a crime against humanity, it must include a policy element. Either of the requirements of widespread or systematic are enough to exclude acts not committed as part of a broader policy or plan. Additionally, the requirement that the attack must be committed against a "civilian population" inevitably demands some kind of plan and, the discriminatory element of the attack is, by its very nature, only possible as a consequence of a policy.

125. Who or what must instigate the policy? Arguably, customary international law requires a showing that crimes against humanity are committed pursuant to an action or policy of a State. However, it is clear that the ICTR Statute does not demand the involvement of a State. Guidance on this issue may be gained from the ILC who, in the Draft Code of Crimes, stated that crimes against humanity are inhumane acts "instigated or directed by a Government or by any organisation or group." [FN29] The ILC explains that this requirement was, intended to exclude the situation in which an individual commits an inhumane act whilst acting on his own initiative pursuant to his own criminal plan in the absence of any encouragement or direction from either a Government or a group or an organisation ... The instigation or direction of a Government or any group, which may or may not be affiliated with a Government, gives the act its great dimension and makes it a crime against humanity imputable to private persons or agents of the State. [FN30]

FN29 ILC Draft Code of Crimes Article 18.

FN30 ILC Draft Code of Crimes Art. 18 para 5 of commentary.

126. The Trial Chamber concurs with the above view and finds that the Tribunal's jurisdiction covers both State and non-State actors. As Prefect, Kayishema was a State actor. As a businessman Ruzindana was a non-State actor. To have jurisdiction over either of the accused, the Chamber must be satisfied that their actions were instigated or directed by a Government or by any organisation or group.

Civilian Population

127. Traditionally, legal definitions of 'civilian' or 'civilian population' have been discussed within the context of armed conflict. However, under the Statute, crimes against humanity may be committed inside or outside the context of an armed conflict. Therefore, the term civilian must be understood within the context of war as well as relative peace. The Trial Chamber considers that a wide definition of civilian is applicable and, in the context of the situation of Kibuye Prefecture where there was no armed conflict, includes all persons except those who have the duty to maintain public order and have the legitimate means to exercise force. Non-civilians would include, for example, members of the FAR, the RPF, the police and the Gendarmerie Nationale.

128. With regard to the targeting of any civilian population, the Trial Chamber

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

concurs with the finding in the Tadic decision that the targeted population must be predominantly civilian in nature but the presence of certain non- civilians in their midst does not change the character of that population. [FN31]

FN31 TadicJudgement, at para 638.

129. In any event, the Defence teams did not challenge the assertion that the victims of the alleged attacks were civilians. And, the Prosecution submitted that the victims in the four massacre sites were farmers, teachers and those seeking refuge from the attacks.

Discriminatory Grounds

130. The Statute contains a requirement additional to both the Nuremberg Charter and the ICTY Statute; that the attack be committed on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. The Prosecution submits that the discrimination at issue was based on ethnic or, alternatively, political grounds. [FN32] The Prosecution asserted that the discrimination was on ethnic grounds because the victims were Tutsis and political grounds because the Tutsis were accomplices or supporters of the RPF. The Defence did not contest that the Tutsis were considered an ethnic group. [FN33] Political grounds include party political beliefs and political ideology.

FN32 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, p. 42.

FN33 For detailed discussion regarding ethnicity see the Historical Context Part of the Judgement.

131. The Prosecution submit that it is the intent of the perpetrator to discriminate against a group that is important rather than whether the victim was, in fact, a member of that targeted group. In this regard there are two issues for the Chamber to address. Firstly, in a scenario where the perpetrator's intention is to exterminate the Tutsi group and, in furtherance of this intent, he kills a Belgium Priest who is protecting the Tutsi, the Trial Chamber opines that such an act would be based on discrimination against the Tutsi group.

132. The second relevant scenario is where the perpetrator attacks people on the grounds and in the belief that they are members of a group but, in fact, they are not, for example, where the perpetrator believes that a group of Tutsi are supporters of the RPF and therefore accomplices. In the scenario, the Trial Chamber opines that the Prosecution must show that the perpetrator's belief was objectively reasonable - based upon real facts - rather than being mere speculation or perverted deduction.

The Mental Element

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

133. The perpetrator must knowingly commit crimes against humanity in the sense that he must understand the overall context of his act. The Defence for Ruzindana submitted that to be guilty of crimes against humanity the perpetrator must know that there is an attack on a civilian population and that his act is part of the attack. [FN34] This issue has been addressed by the ICTY where it was stated that the accused must have acted with knowledge of the broader context of the attack; [FN35] a view which conforms to the wording of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC) Article 7.

FN34 Closing Arguments at p. 26.

FN35 Tadic Judgement, at para. 656, "therefore in addition to the intent to commit the underlying offence the perpetrator must know of the broader context in which his acts occur."

134. The Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence. Part of what transforms an individual's act (s) into a crime against humanity is the inclusion of the act within a greater dimension of criminal conduct; therefore an accused should be aware of this greater dimension in order to be culpable thereof. Accordingly, actual or constructive knowledge of the broader context of the attack, meaning that the accused must know that his act(s) is part of a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population and pursuant to some kind of policy or plan, is necessary to satisfy the requisite mens rea element of the accused. This requirement further compliments the exclusion from crimes against humanity of isolated acts carried out for purely personal reasons.

4.2.2 The Crimes

135. Article 3 entitles the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda to prosecute persons responsible for crimes enumerated within the Statute. The crimes must be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. The crimes themselves need not contain the three elements of the attack (i.e. widespread or systematic, against any civilian population, on discriminatory grounds), but must form part of such an attack. Indeed, the individual crimes contain their own specific elements. For an accused to be found guilty under crimes against humanity the Prosecution must prove that the accused is responsible for one of the crimes charged pursuant to Article 6(1) and/or 6(3) of the Statute. The following crimes are charged in the Indictment: murder, extermination and other inhumane acts.

Murder

136. The Prosecution charges Kayishema with crimes against humanity for murder in Counts 2, 8, 14 and 20 of the Indictment, and Ruzindana with crimes against humanity for murder in Count 20 of the Indictment.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

137. Article 3(a) of the English version of the Statute uses the term "murder," whilst the French version of the Statute uses the term "assassinat.'' [FN36] The use of these terms has been the subject of some debate because the mens rea for murder, as it is defined in most common law jurisdictions, includes but does not require premeditation; whereas, in most civil law systems, premeditation is always required for assassinat. [FN37] The Akayesu Judgement, which is the only case to have addressed the issue, stated that customary international law dictates that it is the act of murder that constitutes a crime against humanity and not assassinat. In Akayesu, the Chamber held that there were sufficient reasons to assume that the French version of the Statute suffers from an error in translation. [FN38] The Defence argued, inter alia, that the Akayesu solution of an error in translation was too simple and not convincing as both the French and the English versions of the Statute are originals. According to the Defence, murder was meant to be the equivalent of assassinat. However, the Prosecution argued that premeditation was not a necessary element and suggested that the "unlawful killing of a human being as the result of the perpetrator engaging in conduct which was in reckless disregard for human life" is enough.

FN36 Indeed, the Statute, Article 2(2)(a)(Genocide) refers to "killing" -- "meurtre'' in French, while Article 4(a) refers to "murder" -- "meurtre'' in French.

FN37 Nouveau Code PJnal, Article 221-3 "Le meurtre commis avec prJmeditation constitute un assassinat. Il est puni de la rJclusion criminelle < perpetuitJ. [...]"

FN38 Akayesu Judgement, at para. 588.

138. The Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence. When interpreting a term from one language to another, one may find that there is no equivalent term that corresponds to all the subtleties and nuances. This is particularly true with legal terms that represent jurisprudential concepts. Here, the mens rea for murder in common law overlaps with both meurtre and assassinat (that is, a meurtre aggravé) in civil systems. [FN39] The drafters chose to use the term assassinat rather than meurtre. As a matter of interpretation, the intention of the drafters should be followed so far as possible and a statute should be given its plain meaning. [FN40] Since the concepts of murder and assassinat can correspond to one another, in the opinion of this Trial Chamber, there is no need to change the wording of the Statute. Although it may be argued that, under customary international law, it is murder rather than assassinat that constitutes the crime against humanity (a position asserted by the Chamber in the Akayesu Judgement), this court is bound by the wording of the ICTR Statute in particular. It is the ICTR Statute that reflects the intention of the international community for the purposes of trying those charged with violations of international law in Rwanda. Furthermore, the ICTR and ICTY Statutes did not reflect customary international law at the time of drafting. This is evident by the inclusion of the need for an armed conflict in the ICTY Statute and the inclusion of the requirement that the crimes be committed with discriminatory intent in the ICTR Statute. Accordingly, it may be presumed that the drafters intended to use assassinat alongside murder. Indeed, by using assassinat in French, the drafters may have intended that only the higher standards of mens rea for murder will suffice. [FN41]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN39 For example, at the high end of murder the mens rea corresponds to the mens rea of assassinat, i.e., unlawful killing with premeditation. Conversely, at the low end of murder where mere intention or recklessness is sufficient and premeditation is not required, the mens rea of murder corresponds to the mens rea of meurtre.

FN40 Notably the text was drafted in English and French, both being original and authentic. The Statute was then translated into the four remaining official UN languages. Therefore, between English and French there was no translation. Accordingly, there can be no 'error in translation' as such; there can only be a mistake in the drafting of an original text. Notably, the term used in the ICTY Statute is also assassinat (ICTY Statute Article 5(a)).

FN41 Of course, in common law, there is no crime of unlawful killing that provides for a higher standard of mens rea than that of murder. Therefore, even if the drafters intended that only the standard of mens rea for assassinat would suffice, the drafters would still need to use the term murder in English.

139. If in doubt, a matter of interpretation should be decided in favour of the accused; in this case, the inclusion of premeditation is favourable to the accused. The Chamber finds, therefore, that murder and assassinat should be considered together in order to ascertain the standard of mens rea intended by the drafters and demanded by the ICTR Statute. When murder is considered along with assassinat the Chamber finds that the standard of mens rea required is intentional and premeditated killing. The result is premeditated when the actor formulated his intent to kill after a cool moment of reflection. [FN42] The result is intended when it is the actor's purpose, or the actor is aware that it will occur in the ordinary course of events.

FN42 This explanation conforms to the French jurisprudence of the criminal court and to the United States Supreme Court case law.

140. The accused is guilty of murder if the accused, engaging in conduct which is unlawful:

1. causes the death of another;

2. by a premeditated act or omission;

3. intending to kill any person or,

4. intending to cause grievous bodily harm to any person.

Thus, a premeditated murder that forms part of a widespread or systematic attack, against civilians, on discriminatory grounds will be a crime against humanity. Also included will be extrajudicial killings, that is "unlawful and deliberate killings carried out with the order of a Government or with its complicity or acquiescence." [FN43] FN43 See Amnesty International's 14 Point Program for the Prevention of Extrajudicial Executions.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Extermination

141. The Prosecution charges Kayishema with crimes against humanity for extermination in Counts 3, 9, 15 and 21 of the Indictment, and Ruzindana with crimes against humanity for extermination in Count 21 of the Indictment.

142. The crime of extermination was not specifically defined in the Statute or the Nuremberg Charter. Indeed, there is very little jurisprudence relating to the essential elements of extermination. In the Akayesu Judgement, Chamber I considered that extermination is a crime that by its very nature is directed against a group of individuals and differs from murder in that it requires an element of mass destruction that is not required for murder. [FN44] The Prosecution asserted that there is no need for a defined number of people to die for the killing to rise to an act of extermination; it is determined on a case-by-case basis even though there is the need for a numerical requirement. [FN45] Notably, Akayesu was found guilty of extermination for ordering the killing of sixteen people. [FN46] The Chamber agrees that the difference between murder and extermination is the scale; extermination can be said to be murder on a massive scale. The Defence did not address the numerical question but argues that "the essence of extermination lies in the fact that it is an indiscriminate elimination." [FN47]

FN44 Akayesu Judgement, at para. 591.

FN45 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, at p. 36.

FN46 Akayesu Judgement. at para 735-744.

FN47 Ruzindana Closing Argument, at p. 8.

143. Cherif Bassiouni states that extermination is murder on a massive scale and may include unintentional killing:

Extermination implies intentional and unintentional killing. The reason for the latter is that mass killing of a group of people involves planning and implementation by a number of persons who, though knowing and wanting the intended result, may not necessarily know their victims. Furthermore, such persons may not perform the actus reus that produced the deaths, nor have specific intent toward a particular victim. [FN48]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

FN48 Cherif Bassiouni, Crimes Against Humanity in International Law (Martinus Nijhoff Publishers 1992).

The ICC Statute (Article 7(2)(b)), offers an illustrative rather than definitive statement regarding extermination: "Extermination includes the intentional infliction of conditions of life, inter alia the deprivation of access to food and medicine, calculated to bring about the destruction of part of a population."

144. Having considered the above, the Chamber defines the requisite elements of extermination:

The actor participates in the mass killing of others or in the creation of conditions of life that lead to the mass killing of others, through his act(s) or omission(s); having intended the killing, or being reckless, or grossly negligent as to whether the killing would result and; being aware that his act(s) or omission(s) forms part of a mass killing event; where, his act(s) or omission(s) forms part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds.

145. The term "mass", which may be understood to mean 'large scale,' does not command a numerical imperative but may be determined on a case-by-case basis using a common sense approach. The actor need not act with a specific individual(s) in mind.

146. The act(s) or omission(s) may be done with intention, recklessness, or gross negligence. The 'creation of conditions of life that lead to mass killing' is the institution of circumstances that ultimately causes the mass death of others. For example: Imprisoning a large number of people and withholding the necessities of life which results in mass death; introducing a deadly virus into a population and preventing medical care which results in mass death. Extermination includes not only the implementation of mass killing or the creation of conditions of life that leads to mass killing, but also the planning thereof. In this event, the Prosecutor must prove a nexus between the planning and the actual killing.

147. An actor may be guilty of extermination if he kills, or creates the conditions of life that kills, a single person providing the actor is aware that his act(s) or omission(s) forms part of a mass killing event. [FN49] For a single killing to form part of extermination, the killing must actually form part of a mass killing event. An 'event' exists when the (mass) killings have close proximity in time and place.

FN49 For example, if ten FAR officers fire into a crowd of 200 Tutsis, killing them all. FAR officer X is a poor shot and kills only a single person, whereas officer Y kills 16. Because both X and Y participated in the mass killing and were both aware that their actions formed part of the mass killing event, they will both be guilty of extermination.

Other Inhumane Acts

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

148. The Prosecution charges Kayishema with crimes against humanity for other inhumane acts in Counts 4, 10, 16 and 22 of the Indictment, and Ruzindana with crimes against humanity for other inhumane acts in Count 22 of the Indictment.

149. Since the Nuremberg Charter, the category 'other inhumane acts' has been maintained as a useful category for acts not specifically stated but which are of comparable gravity. The importance in maintaining such a category was elucidated by the ICRC when commenting on inhumane treatment contained in Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions,

It is always dangerous to try to go into too much detail -- especially in this domain. However much care were taken in establishing a list of all the various forms of infliction, one would never be able to catch up with the imagination of future torturers who wished to satisfy their bestial instincts; and the more specific and complete a list tries to be, the more restrictive it becomes. The form of wording adopted is flexible and, at the same time, precise. [FN50]

FN50 ICRC COMMENTARY ON THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS p. 54.

150. Other inhumane acts include those crimes against humanity that are not otherwise specified in Article 3 of the Statute, but are of comparable seriousness. The ICC Statute (Article 7(k)), provides greater detail than the ICTR Statute to the meaning of other inhumane acts: "other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health." The ILC commenting on Article 18 of its Draft Code of Crimes states

The Commission recognized that it was impossible to establish an exhaustive list of the inhumane acts which may constitute crimes against humanity. First, this category of acts is intended to include only additional acts that are similar in gravity to those listed in the preceding subparagraphs. Second, the act must in fact cause injury to a human being in terms of physical or mental integrity, health or human dignity.

151. The Chamber notes the International Law Commission's commentary. In relation to the Statute, other inhumane acts include acts that are of similar gravity and seriousness to the enumerated acts of murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture, rape, or persecution on political, racial and religious grounds. These will be acts or omissions that deliberately cause serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitute a serious attack on human dignity. The Prosecution must prove a nexus between the inhumane act and the great suffering or serious injury to mental or physical health of the victim. The Chamber agrees with the Prosecution submission that the acts that rise to the level of inhumane acts should be determined on a case-by-case basis. [FN51]

FN51 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, p. 37.

152. The Defence asserts that for an accused to be found guilty of mental harm,

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

there must be a direct relation between the assailant and the victim. [FN52] The Prosecution on the other hand suggests that victims have suffered mental harm amounting to other inhumane acts due to them having witnessed atrocities for which the accused is responsible. For example, in relation to Count 4 the Prosecution submits, FN52 See, Ruzindana's Closing Arguments,pp. 38-41.

[w]ith respect to serious mental harm, six survivors testified (and the survivors of all the other massacres testified) that they witnessed family members and friends being killed. As established by the evidence, Tutsi civilians were placed in an environment of fear and desperation and were forced to witness the killing and the severe injuring of friends, family and other Tutsi civilians. The killings were brutal in manner. The people saw carnage and heard the people singing exterminate them, exterminate them. ... The Prosecutor submits that such an environment inherently causes serious mental harm. [FN53]

FN53 Prosecutor's Closing Brief, p. 80. See also pp. 93, 101, 105 and 134.

153. The Chamber is in no doubt that a third party could suffer serious mental harm by witnessing acts committed against others, particularly against family or friends. However, to find an accused responsible for such harm under crimes against humanity, it is incumbent on the Prosecution to prove the mens rea on the part of the accused. Indeed, as stated above, inhumane acts are, inter alia, those which deliberately cause serious mental suffering. The Chamber considers that an accused may be held liable under these circumstances only where, at the time of the act, the accused had the intention to inflict serious mental suffering on the third party, or where the accused knew that his act was likely to cause serious mental suffering and was reckless as to whether such suffering would result. Accordingly, if at the time of the act, the accused was unaware of the third party bearing witness to his act, then he cannot be held responsible for the mental suffering of the third party.

154. In summary, for an accused to be found guilty of crimes against humanity for other inhumane acts, he must commit an act of similar gravity and seriousness to the other enumerated crimes, with the intention to cause the other inhumane act, and with knowledge that the act is perpetrated within the overall context of the attack.

4.3 VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, THERETO

155. Pursuant to Article 4 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Four Geneva Conventions of 1949 (Common Article 3) for the protection of War Victims, and Additional Protocol II thereto of 1977 (Protocol II).

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

4.3.1 Customary Law

156. The Trial Chamber is cognisant of the ongoing discussions, in other forums, about whether the above-mentioned instruments should be considered customary international law that imposes criminal liability for their serious breaches. In the present case, such an analysis seems superfluous because the situation is rather clear. Rwanda became a party to the Conventions of 1949 on 5 May 1964 and to Protocol II on 19 November 1984. These instruments, therefore, were in force in the territory of Rwanda at the time when the tragic events took place within its borders.

157. Moreover, all the offences enumerated in Article 4 of the Statute, also constituted crimes under the laws of Rwanda. The other Party to the conflict, the RPF, also had stated to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) that it was bound by the rules of international humanitarian law. Therefore, there is no doubt that persons responsible for the breaches of these international instruments during the events in the Rwandan territories in 1994 could be subject to prosecution.

158. Thus, the question before the Trial Chamber is not about the applicability of these instruments in a general sense, but to what extent they are applicable in the instant case. In order to answer this question, a more detailed legal analysis of these instruments as well as the historical background to their adoption is necessary.

4.3.2 Historical Background of Common Article 3

159. The Diplomatic Conference for the Establishment of International Conventions for the Protection of Victims of War, convened by the Swiss Federal Council, was held in Geneva from 21 April to 12 August 1949 (the Conference). The Conference was seized by the working documents that passed through the many preparatory stages. After four months of continuous debate, the Conference established the first, second, third and fourth Geneva Conventions. [FN54]

FN54 ''First Convention," "second Convention," "third Convention" and "fourth Convention" mean, respectively, the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Conditions of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field of 12 August 1949: the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Conditions of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked members of Armed Forces at Sea of 12 August 1949; the Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of 12 August 1949; the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949.

160. From the very beginning, it was understood that these four Conventions could be applicable only in international armed conflicts. However, the ICRC proposed at the Conference to apply these Conventions to non-international armed conflicts as well. The proposal of the ICRC was rejected as a result of almost universal opposition by the states.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

161. During the debate on this issue, special attention was focused on the fourth Geneva Convention. For a long period, it was considered evident that civilians would remain outside hostilities. The ICRC recognised that "when the Second World War broke out, civilians were not provided with effective protection under any convention or treaty." [FN55]

FN55 The Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949, Commentary, IV Geneva Convention, p. 3. (ICRC Pub., 1958), Hereafter, "Commentary on IV Geneva Convention, ICRC".

162. It was emphasised by the ICRC that the Fourth Convention represented "an important step forward in written international law in the humanitarian field." [FN56] Therefore, in the opinion of the ICRC, it was necessary to apply it to internal armed conflicts as well. However, from the point of view of the delegations such an application could entail not only political but also technical difficulties.

FN56 Ibid., p. 9.

163. Thus, the situation at the Conference was rather complicated. On the one hand, the idea of the ICRC to apply the four Geneva Conventions to internal armed conflicts had been treated by many delegations as unfriendly attempts to interfere in the internal affairs of the states and to protect all forms of insurrections, rebellion, anarchy and the break-up of states and even plain brigandage. On the other hand, there was an understanding of the necessity to aid the victims of internal conflicts, the horrors of which sometimes surpass the horrors of international wars by reason of the fratricidal hatred they engender. [FN57]

FN57 ICRC comments on Additional Protocol II. See the ICRC website, (visited 6 May, 1999) <http://www.icrc.org>.

164. The Conference rejected a considerable number of the alternative drafts on this issue and, as a result of lengthy and tremendous efforts, succeeded in approving Common Article 3 as it appears now in the four Geneva Conventions. Pursuant to this Article, each Party to a non-international conflict is bound to apply certain provisions as a minimum. The words "as a minimum" must be understood in the sense that the applicable provisions represent a compulsory minimum. At the same time, the Parties were encouraged not to limit themselves to the provided minimum. They were invited, in accordance with Common Article 3, "to endeavour to bring into force, by means of special agreements, all or part of the other provisions of the present Convention."

165. On this occasion, the ICRC pointed out: "To borrow the phrase of one of the delegates, Article 3 is like a 'Convention in miniature.' It applies to non-international conflicts only and will be the only Article applicable to them until such time as a special agreement between the Parties has brought into force between them all or part of the other provisions of the Convention." [FN58]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2812

FN58 Commentary on IV Geneva Convention, p. 34.

4.3.3 Historical Background of Additional Protocol II

166. After the Conference in 1949, the idea to improve the situation with the protection of the victims of internal conflicts remained on the agenda. As a result of compromise, Common Article 3 was not drafted in a very clear way and there were practical difficulties with its application. Moreover, in light of the number and scale of armed conflicts that occurred in different parts of the world the need to improve the protection of the civilian population during armed conflicts became more urgent. In this respect, the ICRC found it necessary to emphasise that "the development of arms and the increased radius of action given to armed forces by modern inventions have made it apparent that, notwithstanding the ruling theory, civilians were certainly 'in the war', and exposed to the same dangers as the combatants -- and sometimes worse." [FN59]

FN59 Preliminary remarks of the ICRC to the Geneva Conventions of August 12, 1949, p. 17.

167. In light of such circumstances, the ICRC began to prepare a new conference, which took place in 1977. One of the main purposes of this conference was to improve the protection of the civilian population during arrived conflicts. Two Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 were adopted as a result of this conference. Protocol I deals with international armed conflict and Protocol II with non-international armed conflict. Commenting recently on the general problems in implementing the fourth Geneva Convention, the ICRC noted that this Convention "contains no detailed provisions for the protection of the civilian population against the dangers caused by military operations such as aerial bombardments and shelling. This gap was later filled by Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions." [FN60] Similarly, Protocol II had to supplement Common Article 3 in order to improve the protection of civilians in internal armed conflicts.

FN60 Report by ICRC Meeting of Experts, Geneva, 27-29 October 1998, p. 2. See the ICRC website (visited 29 Dec. 1998) <http://www.icrc.org>.

168. One of the very important supplements of Protocol II to Common Article 3 is Part IV entitled "Civilian Population." In this Part the Protocol provides not only for the protection of "individual civilians," but directly addresses the issue of the protection of the "civilian population." Article 13 of Additional Protocol II states, "the civilian population and individual civilians shall enjoy general protection against dangers arising from military operations." This part contains six detailed Articles providing for the protection of objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, protection of works and installations containing dangerous forces, protection of cultural objects and places of worship, prohibition of forced movement of civilians, activities of relief societies et cetera.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

4.3.4 The Test of Applicability of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II

Introduction

169. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that in order for an act to breach Common Article 3 and Protocol II, a number of elements must be shown. It must be established that the armed conflict in Rwanda in this period of time was of a non-international character. There must also be a link between the accused and the armed forces. Further, the crimes must be committed ratione loci and ratione personae. Finally, there must be a nexus between the crime and the armed conflict.

The Trial Chamber shall, therefore, consider each of these elements in turn.

The Nature of the Armed Conflict

170. Both international instruments, Common Article 3 and Protocol II, were in force in 1994 in Rwanda. Therefore, it is proper to consider them together taking into account that Protocol II "develops and supplements Common Article 3 without modifying its existing conditions of application." [FN61] The general criteria in Protocol II for determining whether armed conflict is of a non- international character was one of the important supplements. An armed conflict which takes place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organised armed groups, in accordance with Protocol II, should be considered as a non-international armed conflict. This requirement reflects the essential distinction between an international armed conflict, conducted by two or more States, and non- international armed conflict conducted by a State and another armed force which does not qualify as a State.

FN61 See Art. 1 of Additional Protocol II.

171. Certain types of internal conflicts, which fall below a minimum threshold, are not recognised by Article 1(2) of Protocol II as non-international armed conflict, namely, "situations of internal disturbances and tensions, such as riots, isolated and sporadic acts of violence and other acts of a similar nature." The remaining criteria define the necessary characteristics of the dissident armed forces or other organised armed groups, which must:

1. be under responsible command;

2. exercise control over part of the territory of the State;

3. carry out sustained and concerted military operations, and

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

4. be able to implement the Protocol.

172. Thus, in the present case, all material requirements existed to consider the situation in Rwanda, during April, May, June and July 1994, as an armed conflict, not of an international character. This conflict took place in the territory of Rwanda between governmental armed forces (Forces Armées Rwandaises -- the FAR) and the dissident armed forces (Rwandese Patriotic Front -- the RPF). These dissidents, under the responsible command of General Kagame, exercised control over part of the territory of Rwanda and were able to carry out sustained and concerted military operations as well as to implement Common Article 3 and Protocol II.

A Link Between the Accused and the Armed Forces

173. In accordance with Article 6 of the ICTR Statute, a person who "planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime." Article 4 of the Statute especially provides for prosecuting persons for serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. Therefore, the question is whether the accused falls within the class of persons who may be held responsible for serious violations of these international instruments.

174. Violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II could be committed during, or as a result of, military operations. This means that the Parties to an armed conflict should be responsible for such breaches. In the instant case, this would constitute the FAR and the RPF. The ability of the RPF as a dissident armed force to implement legally binding international instruments is considered in Protocol II as a fundamental criteria in order to recognise the non-international character of the armed conflict. The ability of the governmental armed forces to comply with the provisions of such instruments is axiomatic. In the instant case, the two armies were well organised and participated in the military operations under responsible military command. Therefore, based on Article 6(1) of the ICTR Statute, it could be concluded that the appropriate members of the FAR and RPF shall be responsible individually for violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II, if factually proven.

175. Thus, individuals of all ranks belonging to the armed forces under the military command of either of the belligerent Parties fall within the class of perpetrators. If individuals do not belong to the armed forces, they could bear the criminal responsibility only when there is a link between them and the armed forces. It cannot be disregarded that the governmental armed forces are under the permanent supervision of public officials representing the government who had to support the war efforts and fulfil a certain mandate. On this issue, in the Akayesu Judgement, Trial Chamber I was correct to include in the class of perpetrators, "individuals who were legitimately mandated and expected as public officials or agents or persons otherwise holding public authority or de facto representing the Government to support or fulfil the war efforts." [FN62]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

FN62 Akayesu Judgement, para. 631.

176. Thus, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the laws of war apply not only to the members of the armed forces but, in certain cases, to civilians as well, if so established factually. In this case, the accused persons could fall within the class of individuals who may be held responsible for serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. Violations of these international instruments could be committed outside the theatre of combat. For example, the captured members of the RPF may be brought to any location within the territory of Rwanda and could be under the control or in the hands of persons who are not members of the armed forces. Therefore, every crime should be considered on a case-by-case basis taking into account the material evidence presented by the Prosecution. In other words, the evidence needs to show, beyond a reasonable doubt, that there was a link between the accused and the armed forces.

Ratione Personae

177. Two distinct issues arise with respect to personal jurisdiction over serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. In addition to the class of perpetrators, which has been considered above, the issue of the class of victims should be addressed.

178. It is delineated in paragraph 1 of the Indictment that, "thousands of men, women, and children were killed and numerous people injured" at the four sites in the Prefecture of Kibuye between about 10 April and 30 June 1994. It was added in paragraphs 25, 32, 39 and 45 of the Indictment that "these men, women and children were unarmed and were predominantly Tutsis."

179. On the basis of the definition of the civilian population contained in Article 50 of Additional Protocol I, the conclusion could be made that the victims of the massacres which occurred at the four sites, referred to in the Indictment, qualify as the civilian population. This definition stipulates, "the civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians." The first paragraph of the same Article indicates that, "a civilian is any person who does not belong to one of the categories of persons referred to in Article 4(A)(1), (2), (3) and (6) of the Third Convention and in Article 43 of this Protocol." Each of these Articles enumerates the various types of combatants. Therefore, in accordance with this definition, for the purpose of protection of victims of armed conflict, all persons who are not combatants might be considered civilians.

180. On this basis, the ICRC comes to the following conclusion: "Thus the Protocol adopted the only satisfactory solution, which is that of a negative definition, namely, that the civilian population is made up of persons who are not members of the armed forces." [FN63] It should be noted that there is a certain distinction between the terms "civilians" and "civilian population." There are civilians who accompany the armed forces or are attached to them. Civilians could even be among combatants who take a direct part in the hostilities. There is clear confirmation of this fact in Protocol II which stipulates that, "civilians shall enjoy the protection afforded by this part unless and for such time as they take a direct part in the hostilities." [FN64] However, the civilian population as such does not participate in the armed conflict. Article 50 of Protocol I emphasises, "the presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilian does not deprive the population of its civilian character." [FN65]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN63 COMMENTARY ON THE ADDITIONAL PROTOCOLS (Jean Pictet, ed.) (ICRC, Mantinus Nijhoff Publishers, Geneva, 1987), p. 610, section 1913.

FN64 Additional Protocol II, Art. 13(3).

FN65 Additional Protocol I, Article 50(3).

181. It is generally known that the civilian population is unarmed and is not in any way drawn into the armed conflict. The Chamber also takes into account the fact that the Defence did not challenge the civilian status of the victims. Whether there is a material averrment for charges involving Article 4 of the Statute is a question of findings which is addressed in Part VI of the Judgement.

Ratione Loci

182. In spite of the fact that there is no clear provision on applicability ratione loci either in Common Article 3 or Protocol II, the juridical situation is rather clear. The Chamber has to recall that two Parties in the armed conflict were legally bound by the provisions of these international instruments. Therefore, in accordance with requirements of international public law, these instruments should be applicable in the whole territory of Rwanda. Moreover, in Article 4 of Protocol II, which in principle reproduces Common Article 3, there is a clear indication that the enumerated criminal acts "shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever." Therefore, it is unnecessary that serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II occur in the actual theatre of operations. Captured persons, for example, could be brought to other locations of the territory, but despite this relocation, they should be treated humanely. The expression "at any time whatsoever" means that the temporal factor does not assume a narrow interpretation. This approach was confirmed by the ICTY Appeal Chamber in its decision on jurisdiction in the Tadic Judgement wherein it was held that,

... the geographical and temporal frame of reference for internal armed conflicts is similarly broad. This conception is reflected in the fact that beneficiaries of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions are those taking no active part (or no longer taking an active part) in the hostilities. This indicates that the rules contained in Article 3 also apply outside the narrow geographical context of the actual theatre of combat operations. [FN66]

FN66 ICTY Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, para. 69.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

183. The Appeal Chamber also remarked in this paragraph that "like Common Article 3, it explicitly protects all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in the hostilities...Article 2(1) [of Protocol II] provides 'this Protocol shall be applied [...] to all persons affected by an armed conflict as defined in Article 1'." After quoting Article 2(2) of Protocol II about persons who have been deprived of their liberty the Appeals Chamber noted that "under this last provision the temporal scope of the applicable rules clearly reaches beyond the actual hostilities...The nexus required is only a relationship between the conflict and the deprivation of liberty, not that the deprivation occurred in the midst of battle."[Emphasis added]. On the basis of the foregoing, the Appeal Chambers came to the conclusion that in case of internal conflict, until a peaceful settlement is achieved, international humanitarian law continues to apply in the whole territory under the control of a Party, whether or not actual combat takes place there and the crimes committed in these circumstances should be considered as crimes "in the context of an armed conflict." [FN67] Thus, the Appeals Chamber found that the alleged crimes should not be considered in the narrow geographical and temporal framework and should be understood as crimes committed in the context of an armed conflict if there is a relationship between this conflict and the offence.

FN67 Ibid. para. 70.

Serious Violations

184. The competence of the Chamber is limited to serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. Article 4 of the ICTR Statute states that the persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II should be prosecuted. The Chamber finds that this is a qualitative limitation of its competence and the phrase "serious violations" should be interpreted as breaches involving grave consequences. The list of prohibited acts, which is provided in Article 4 of the ICTR Statute, as well as in Common Article 3 and in Article 4 of Protocol II, undeniably should be recognised as serious violations entailing individual criminal responsibility.

Nexus Requirement Between the Armed Conflict and the Crime

185. It is important to establish whether all the crimes committed during the non-international armed conflict should be considered as crimes connected with serious violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. The Chamber is of the opinion that only offences, which have a nexus with the armed conflict, fall within this category. If there is not a direct link between the offences and the armed conflict there is no ground for the conclusion that Common Article 3 and Protocol II are violated.

186. The jurisprudence in this area of the law requires such a link between the armed conflict and the offence. The ICTY Trial Chamber in the Judgement of Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic, Zdravko Mucic, Hazim Delic and Esad Landzo (Celebic¥ Judgement) stated that "there must be an obvious link between the criminal act and the armed conflict." [FN68] The same point of view is reflected in the Tadic Judgement. In Tadic, the Trial Chamber remarked that "the only question to be determined in the circumstances of each individual case was whether the offences were closely related to the armed conflict as a whole." [FN69] In the Akayesu Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that "...it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the acts perpetrated by Akayesu ...were committed in conjunction with the armed conflict." Such a conclusion means that, in the opinion of that Chamber, such a connection is necessary.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN68 Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic, Zdravko Mucic, Hazim Delic and Esad Landzo, Case No. IT-96-21-T, 16 Nov. 1998, para. 193.

FN69 Tadic Judgement, para. 573.

187. This issue was discussed recently at the first session of the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court (16 to 26 February 1999). From the point of view of the participants, war crimes would occur if the criminal conduct took place in the context of and was associated with the armed conflict. [FN70]

FN70 The Second Discussion Paper (PCNICC/1999/WGE/RT.2).

188. Thus the term "nexus" should not be understood as something vague and indefinite. A direct connection between the alleged crimes, referred to in the Indictment, and the armed conflict should be established factually. No test, therefore, can be defined in abstracto. It is for the Trial Chamber, on a case-by-case basis, to adjudge on the facts submitted as to whether a nexus existed. It is incumbent upon the Prosecution to present those facts and to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that such a nexus exists.

189. The nexus requirement between the offence and the armed conflict is of crucial significance, taking into account that Common Article 3 and Protocol II are designed to protect the victims of the armed conflict. War crimes are inevitably connected with violations of Common Article 3 and Protocol II. Whether there is a nexus between the alleged crimes and the armed conflict in the instant case is an issue of legal findings which will be addressed in Part VI of the Judgement. At this stage it should be highlighted that the consideration of the applicability of the provisions of Common Article 3 and Protocol II would be proper if such a nexus is established.

Conclusion

190. It remains for the Chamber to make a finding in the context of the events alleged in the Indictment with regard to the culpability of the accused under Article 4 of the ICTR Statute. This will be addressed in the Legal Findings Part of the Judgement.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

4.4 CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY, ARTICLES 6(1) AND 6(3)

4.4.1 Individual Responsibility - Article 6(1)

191. The Indictment sets out in its General Allegations (paragraph 21) that both Kayishema and Ruzindana, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Tribunal's Statute, are individually responsible for the execution of crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the same Statute. Whilst the Chamber will examine the specific charges raised in the Indictment below, it must first address the inherent requirement that the accused be individually responsible for the commission of these crimes. In this respect the Statute adopts a wide scope of inclusion. Article 6(1) states

A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation and execution of the crime referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.

192. The Parties addressed the Chamber with regard to the interpretation and application of this paragraph to the events in question. Accordingly, it is necessary to consider the degree of participation required in the crimes delineated in Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute. Only then, and in light of the factual findings set out below, is it possible to identify whether either Ruzindana or Kayishema are individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1).

193. Before addressing the requisite elements necessary to find individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(1), the Trial Chamber will first examine the issue of statutory construction raised by Counsel for Ruzindana.

194. The Defence focused upon a very specific interpretation of Article 6(1). They contended that the modes of participation, "planning, instigation, ordering, committing", should be read cumulatively, but separately from, "aiding and abetting". [FN71] Only such a position, it was submitted, would give full weight to the drafters use of "or" within the Article. Furthermore, because "abetting" and "instigating" have the same meaning, to avoid concurrence it was posited that "aiding and abetting" should also be read cumulatively despite the ruling in the Akayesu Judgement.

FN71 Defence closing arguments, read from written brief submitted by Mr. Van der Griend on behalf of Ruzindana, on 28 October 1998 ("Closing Brief for Ruzindana"), p. 45. In the Closing Brief for Ruzindana, counsel at once urged this cumulative reading, and then endorsed its disjunctive formulation adopted by the Akayesu Judgement, p. 45. The Chamber enunciates its view here for the purpose of clarity.

195. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the interpretation submitted by the Defence would not only offend common sense, but would also be contrary to the findings of the Chamber in the Celebici Judgement, where it stated categorically,

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1999 WL 33288417 (UN ICT (Rwa))

... that individuals may be held criminally responsible for their participation in the commission of offences in any of the several capacities is in clear conformity with general principles of criminal law. As concluded by the Trial Chamber II in the Tadic Judgement, there can be no doubt that this corresponds to the position under customary international law. [FN72] [emphasis added]

FN72 Celebici Judgement, para 321. See also the cases and conventions cited therein.

196. Similar reasoning is found in the Akayesu Judgement where the Chamber remarked, "Article 6(1) covers various stages of the commission of a crime." [FN73] [emphasis added]. Trial Chamber I in the Akayesu Judgement also held that, "aiding and abetting" were not synonymous, thus could separately give rise to individual responsibility. After stating these principles the Chamber in Akayesu proceeded to find the accused guilty of nine counts pursuant to one or more of the modes of participation expressed in Article 6(1).

FN73 Akayesu Judgement, para. 473. See also para. 484 where Trial Chamber I reads "aiding and abetting" disjunctively.

197. The Trial Chamber can see no reason to depart from these logical and well-founded expressions of international law. Therefore, if any of the modes of participation delineated in Article 6(1) can be shown, and the necessary actus reus and mens rea are evidenced, then that would suffice to adduce criminal responsibility under this Article.

198. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that, as was submitted by the Prosecution, there is a further two stage test which must be satisfied in order to establish individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(1). This test required the demonstration of (i) participation, that is that the accused's conduct contributed to the commission of an illegal act, and (ii) knowledge or intent, that is awareness by the actor of his participation in a crime. [FN74]

FN74 Prosecution Closing Brief, p. 17. This test was drawn from the Tadic Judgement applying identical provisions in Article 7(1) of the ICTY Statute.

199. The first point of this test, the actus reus of participation, was considered in great detail by Trial Chamber I in the Akayesu Judgement and by the ICTY in the Tadic Judgement. [FN75] It is now firmly established that for the accused to be criminally culpable his conduct must have been proved, beyond a reasonable doubt, to have contributed to, or have had an effect on, the commission of the crime. [FN76] What constitutes the actus reus and the requisite contribution inevitably varies with each mode of participation set out in Article 6(1). [FN77] What is clear is that the contribution to the undertaking be a substantial one, and this is a question of fact for the Trial Chamber to consider.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN75 See, respectively, paras. 480-484, and paras. 673-674 and 688-692.

FN76 See Tadic Judgement, para. 673-674; Celebici Judgement, para. 326; Akayesu Judgement, para. 473-475; Furundzija Judgement, para. 235; and the authorities cited therein.

FN77 See Akayesu Judgement, paras. 480-485.

200. It is not presupposed that the accused must be present at the scene of the crime, nor that his contribution be a direct one. That is to say, in light of the decision rendered in the Furundzjia Judgement and the jurisprudence set out therein, the role of the individual in the commission of the offence need not always be a tangible one. This is particularly pertinent where the accused is charged with the "aiding" or "abetting" of a crime. In Furundzija it was held, "... an approving spectator who is held in such respect by the other perpetrators that his presence encourages them in their conduct, may be guilty of complicity in a crime against humanity." [FN78]

FN78 Furundzija Judgement, para 207.

201. This Chamber concurs. The presence of such a spectator need not be a conditio sine qua non for the principal. Therefore, subject to the caveat that the accused knew the effect that his presence would have, he may be found responsible under Article 6(1) for such a contribution to the commission of any of the offences specified in the Tribunal's Statute.

202. This jurisprudence extends naturally to give rise to responsibility when the accused failed to act in breach of a clear duty to act. The question of responsibility arising from a duty to act, and any corresponding failure to execute such a duty is a question that is inextricably linked with the issue of command responsibility. This is because under Article 6(3) a clear duty is imposed upon those in authority, with the requisite means at their disposal, to prevent or punish the commission of a crime. However, individual responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) is based, in this instance, not on the duty to act, but from the encouragement and support that might be afforded to the principals of the crime from such an omission. [FN79]

FN79 See the Akayesu Judgement where the accused's failure to oppose the killings, in light of his authoritative position, was found to constitute a form of tacit encouragement, para. 705.

203. In view of such a broad scope of participation that may give rise to responsibility under Article 6(1), there must be a clear awareness that this participation will lead to the commission of a crime. [FN80] The Trial Chamber has set out, in Chapter 5.1 of this Judgement, that the clear objective of the atrocities occurring throughout Rwanda and the Kibuye Prefecture, in 1994, was to destroy the Tutsi population. The perpetrators of these crimes, therefore, were united in this common intention. On this point, the Chamber in the Celebici Judgement declared that where, 2822

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN80 What constitutes a crime is defined by the Tribunal's Statute. Therefore, only the actual commission of a crime will suffice, except for that of genocide where it is specifically stated that an 'attempt' to commit genocide will give rise to criminal responsibility, Article 2(3)(d) of the Statute.

... a plan exists, or where there otherwise is evidence that members of a group are acting with a common criminal purpose, all those who knowingly participate in, and directly and substantially contribute to, the realisation of this purpose may be held criminally responsible. . and ...[d]epending upon the facts of a given situation, the culpable individual may, under such circumstances, be held criminally responsible either as a direct perpetrator of, or as an aider and abettor to, the crime in question. [FN81]

FN81 Celebici Judgement, para. 328.

204. The Trial Chamber concludes, therefore, that the members of such a group would be responsible for the result of any acts done in furtherance of the common design where such furtherance would be probable from those acts.

205. Thus, the accused need not necessarily have the same mens rea as the principal offender. Whilst knowledge or intention will give rise to individual responsibility under Article 6(1), the distinction is only of importance in distinguishing whether the accused aids or abets a crime or is a co- perpetrator. [FN82]

FN82 See Furundzija Judgement, paras. 250-257.

206. Such a requirement of mens rea refutes the contention by Counsel for Kayishema that the burden of proof is reversed when the actus reus for responsibility, under this Article, arises through the failure to perform an act. The Prosecution must prove that the accused was aware that his failure to act would contribute to the commission of a crime.

207. In short, therefore, the Chamber finds that each of the modes of participation may, independently, give rise to criminal responsibility. The Prosecution must prove that through his mode of participation, whether it be by act(s) or omission(s), the accused contributed substantially to the commission of a crime and that, depending on the mode of participation in question, he was at least aware that his conduct would so contribute to the crime.

4.4.2 Command Responsibility -- Article 6(3)

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

208. The Indictment further alleges that Kayishema was, "also or alternatively individually responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates". In this respect, Article 6(3) is pertinent. It states,

The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew, or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. [FN83]

FN83 Hereafter, responsibility arising under this Article shall be referred to as "command responsibility", or "superior responsibility". The terms will be used interchangeably.

Ruzindana is not charged under Article 6(3).

209. The principle of command responsibility is firmly established in international law, and its position as a principle of customary international law has recently been delineated by the ICTY in the Celebici Judgement. [FN84] The clear recognition of this doctrine is now reflected in Article 28 of the Rome Statute of the ICC.

FN84 Celebici Judgement, paras. 333-343, in reference to the respective Article in the ICTY Statute.

210. The finding of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute does not prevent the Chamber from finding responsibility additionally, or in the alternative, under Article 6(3). The two forms of responsibility are not mutually exclusive. The Chamber must, therefore, consider both forms of responsibility charged in order to fully reflect the culpability of the accused in light of the facts.

211. There were no submissions made by the Defence with regard to the legal underpinning of Article 6(3). As such, the Trial Chamber will consider the position advanced by the Prosecution concomitantly with its examination of the various elements that must be satisfied in order to establish criminal liability under the doctrine of command responsibility.

212. It is essential to consider first whether Kayishema, in his role as Prefect, is subject to the notion of command responsibility set out in Article 6(3). Secondly, it is incumbent upon the Chamber to consider who constitutes the subordinates over whom Kayishema would exercise command. In this respect it would also be necessary to clarify whether those subordinates must be under his de jure command, or if de facto subordination would suffice. Thirdly, the requisite degree of knowledge of the subordinate's actions required to establish command responsibility must also be considered. Finally, the Chamber must address the question of when an individual becomes responsible under this doctrine for failing to prevent a crime or punish the perpetration thereof.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Responsibility of a Non-Military Commander

213. The Prosecution submitted that the principle of superior responsibility applies not only to military commanders, but also extends to civilians in positions of authority. [FN85] The Chamber finds that the application of criminal responsibility to those civilians who wield the requisite authority is not a contentious one. There are a number of reasons for this.

FN85 Closing Brief, p. 20.

214. The construction of the Statute itself is clear. It makes no limited reference to the responsibility to be incurred by military commanders alone. [FN86] Rather, the more generic term of "superior" is used. The Chamber concurs with the observation in the Celebici Judgement that this generic term, coupled with its juxtaposition to the individual criminal responsibility of "Head[s] of State or Government" or "responsible Government officials" in Article 6(2), clearly reflects the intention of the drafters to extend this provision of superior responsibility beyond military commanders, to also "encompass political leaders and other civilian superiors in positions of authority." [FN87]

FN86 C.f. the specification of the responsibility of "military commanders" in Article 87 of Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions 1949, (Jean Pictet ed.).

FN87 Celebici Judgement, para. 356.

215. The jurisprudence also supports this interpretation. Before Trial Chamber I of this Tribunal, the former Prime Minister, Jean Kambanda, pleaded guilty to crimes against humanity and genocide by virtue, inter alia, of Article 6(3). [FN88] Similarly, Omar Serushago, a prominent local civilian and leader of the members of the Interahamwe in Gisenyi Prefecture, also pleaded guilty to crimes against humanity and genocide and acknowledged responsibility for these crimes pursuant to Article 6(3). [FN89] In addition, the Celebici Judgement, which addressed this issue in great detail, highlighted the practice of the Military Tribunal for the Far East (Tokyo Tribunal), and the Superior Military Government Court of the French Occupation Zone in Germany, where senior politicians and even leading industrialists were charged with the commission of war crimes committed by their subordinates. [FN90]

FN88 Prosecutor v. Jean Kambanda, Judgement and Sentence, Case No.: ICTR 97- 23-S (Eng.).

FN89 Prosecutor v. Omar Serushago, Judgement and Sentence, Case No.: ICTR 98-

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN90 Ibid, paras. 356-362.

216. The crucial question in those cases was not the civilian status of the accused, but of the degree of authority he exercised over his subordinates. [FN91] Accordingly the Chamber accepts the submission made by the Prosecution that a civilian in a position of authority may be liable under the doctrine of command responsibility. The Chamber will turn, therefore, to consider in what instances a civilian can be considered a superior for the purposes of Article 6(3), and the requisite "degree of authority" necessary to establish individual criminal culpability pursuant to this doctrine of superior responsibility.

FN91 See the opinion of Judge Röling in the "Rape of Nanking" case, and the Akayesu Judgement, para. 491.

Concept of Superior: de Jure and de Facto Control

217. This superior-subordinate relationship lies at the heart of the concept of command responsibility. The basis under which he assumes responsibility is that, if he knew or had reason to know that a crime may or had been committed, then he must take all measures necessary to prevent the crime or punish the perpetrators. If he does not take such actions that are within his power then, accordingly, he is culpable for those crimes committed. The Trial Chamber in Celebici set out the guiding principle in this respect, when it stated that, "[T]he doctrine of command responsibility is ultimately predicated upon the power of the superior to control the acts of his subordinates". [FN92] The Chamber then elaborated upon this principle by warning that, "[We] must at all times be alive to the realities of any given situation and be prepared to pierce such veils of formalism that may shield those individuals carrying the greatest responsibility for heinous acts." [FN93]

FN92 Celebici Judgement, para. 376.

FN93 Ibid., para. 377.

218. In order to 'pierce the veils of formalism' therefore, the Chamber must be prepared to look beyond the de jure powers enjoyed by the accused and consider the de facto authority he exercised within Kibuye during April to July 1994. The position expounded by the ILC that an individual should only be responsible for those crimes that were within his legitimate legal powers to prevent, [FN94] does not assist the Trial Chamber in tackling the, 'realities of any given situation'. Therefore, in view of the chaotic situation that which prevailed in Rwanda in these pivotal months of 1994, the Chamber must be free to consider whether Kayishema had the requisite control over those committing the atrocities to establish individual criminal liability under Article 6(3), whether by de jure or de facto command.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2826

FN94 ILC Draft Code of Crimes.

219. A concentration upon the de jure powers of the prefect would assist neither Party. For example, focussing upon the de jure power of the prefect under the 1991 Constitution would be to prevent proper consideration of the Defence's case that the climate in Rwanda and the practical realities at that time were such that the prefect not only had no control over certain de jure subordinates, but also that he had no means to effectively prevent the atrocities that were occurring. Equally, a restricted view of the concept of superior to those exercising de jure control would not enable the Chamber to adequately consider the arguments of the Prosecution. She submitted that Kayishema exercised both legal command over those committing the massacres and de facto authority over these and other assailants such as the members of the Interahamwe.

220. This approach is also congruent with the Celebici case and the authorities cited therein. [FN95] For example, having examined the Hostage and High Command cases the Chamber in Celebici concluded that they authoritatively asserted the principle that, "powers of influence not amounting to formal powers of command provide a sufficient basis for the imposition of command responsibility." This Trial Chamber concurs.

FN95 Celebici Judgement, paras. 364-378.

221. Moreover, the Rome Statute for the ICC, having delineated the circumstances in which a military commander would incur responsibility as a superior, stipulates in Article 28(2) that all other superiors shall be criminally responsible for acts, "committed by subordinates under his or her effective control." [emphasis added].

222. Article 6 of this Tribunal's Statute is formulated in a broad manner. By including responsibility of all government officials, all superiors and all those acting pursuant to orders, it is clearly designed to ensure that those who are culpable for the commission of a crime under Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute cannot escape responsibility through legalistic formalities. Therefore, the Chamber is under a duty, pursuant to Article 6(3), to consider the responsibility of all individuals who exercised effective control, whether that control be de jure or de facto.

223. Where it can be shown that the accused was the de jure or de facto superior and that pursuant to his orders the atrocities were committed, then the Chamber considers that this must suffice to found command responsibility. The Chamber need only consider whether he knew or had reason to know and failed to prevent or punish the commission of the crimes if he did not in fact order them. If the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused ordered the alleged atrocities then it becomes unnecessary to consider whether he tried to prevent; and irrelevant whether he tried to punish.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

224. However, in all other circumstances, the Chamber must give full consideration to the elements of 'knowledge' and 'failure to prevent and punish' that are set out in Article 6(3) of the Statute.

Knowledge of Subordinates' Actions

225. The mens rea in Article 6(3) requires that for a superior to be held criminally responsible for the conduct of his subordinates he must have known, or had reason to know, of their criminal activities. If it can be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the superior knew of the crimes that were being committed by those over whom he exercised control then the requisite mens rea is clearly established.

226. However, when we consider that individual responsibility arises when the superior "had reason to know" that a crime had or was about to be committed, the requisite mens rea is not so clear. The expansive approach to apportioning command responsibility in the cases following the Second World War was observed by the Trial Chamber in the Celebici Judgement. These cases first imposed a duty for the commander to know everything that occurred within his ambit of jurisdiction, and then imposed responsibility upon the commander for failure to fulfil that duty. [FN96] The Chamber in the Celebici case did not follow this reasoning. Instead it preferred it be proven that some information be available that would put the accused on notice of an offence and require further investigation by him.

FN96 See Celebici Judgement, para. 389, and the cases cited therein, particularly the Hostage case, the Toyoda case, and the Pohl case.

227. On this issue, the Chamber finds the distinction between military commanders and other superiors embodied in the Rome Statute an instructive one. [FN97] In the case of the former it imposes a more active duty upon the superior to inform himself of the activities of his subordinates when he, "knew or, owing to the circumstances at the time, should have known that the forces were committing or about to commit such crimes." This is juxtaposed with the mens rea element demanded of all other superiors who must have, "[known], or consciously disregarded information which clearly indicated, that the subordinates were committing or about to commit such crimes."

FN97 Article 28(1)(a), and 28(2)(a).

228. The Trial Chamber agrees with this view insofar that it does not demand a prima facie duty upon a non-military commander to be seized of every activity of all persons under his or her control. In light of the objective of Article 6(3) which is to ascertain the individual criminal responsibility for crimes as serious as genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of Common Article 3 to the

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II thereto, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution must prove that the accused in this case either knew, or consciously disregarded information which clearly indicated or put him on notice that his subordinates had committed, or were about to commit acts in breach of Articles 2 to 4 of this Tribunal's Statute.

Effective Control: Failure to Prevent or Punish a Crime

229. The principle of command responsibility must only apply to those superiors who exercise effective control over their subordinates. This material ability to control the actions of subordinates is the touchstone of individual responsibility under Article 6(3). The International Law Commission in its Draft Code went so far as to suggest that for a superior to incur criminal responsibility, he must have, "the legal competence to take measures to prevent or repress the crime and the material possibility to take such measures." [FN98] [emphasis added].

FN98 ILC Draft Code of Crimes, pp. 38-39.

230. However, as the Chamber highlighted above, to give such prominence to the de jure power bestowed upon an individual is to provide justice to neither Party. There is a need to shed this legalistic formalism and to focus upon the situation which prevails in the given fact situation. Therefore, the Chamber prefers the position as set out in the Celebici Judgement where it was held that,

... the superior have effective control over the persons committing the underlying violations of humanitarian law, in the sense of having the material ability to prevent and punish the commission of these offences. With the caveat that such authority can have a de facto as well as a de jure character... [FN99]

FN99 Celebici Judgement, para. 378.

231. Accordingly, the ability to prevent and punish a crime is a question that is inherently linked with the given factual situation. Thus, only in light of the findings which follow and an examination of the overall conditions in which Kayishema had to operate as Prefect, can the Chamber consider who were the subordinates to Kayishema from April to July 1994 and whether he exercised the requisite degree of control over them in order to conclude whether he is individually criminally responsible for the atrocities committed by them.

V. FACTUAL FINDINGS 5.1 Alibi

5.2 Did Genocide Occur in Rwanda and Kibuye in 1994?

5.3 An Introduction: The Massacres at the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean Complex, Stadium in Kibuye Town and the Church in Mubuga

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2829

5.4 The Massacres in the Area of Bisesero

5.1 Alibi

232. Both Kayishema and Ruzindana raised the defence of alibi to the charges levied against them. Both accused assert that they were not at the sites when any of the massacres occurred. The Trial Chamber shall consider the arguments advanced by Kayishema and Ruzindana below. Before examining the specifics of the alibi defences, however, it is first necessary to consider the procedural concerns that have accompanied their invocation.

5.1.1 Alibi Defence and Rule 67 of the Rules

The salient provisions of Rule 67 of the Rules state that,

(A) As early as reasonably possible and in any event prior to the commencement of the trial:

(ii) the defence shall notify the Prosecutor of its intent to enter:

(a) the defence of alibi; in which case the notification shall specify the place or places at which the accused claims to have been present at the time of the alleged crime and the names and addresses of witnesses and any other evidence upon which the accused intends to rely to establish the alibi

(B) Failure of the defence to provide such notice under this Rule shall not limit the right of the accused to rely on any of the above defences.

233. The requirement upon the Defence to disclose its intention to rely upon the defence of alibi reflects the well-established practice in the common law jurisdictions around the world. [FN1] It is a requirement necessary in many jurisdictions, and in the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, in order to allow the Prosecution to adequately prepare its case. Once the accused has raised the defence of alibi, the burden to prove this defence may or may not rest upon him depending upon the jurisdiction concerned. In some jurisdictions such as India, the burden of proof rests upon individuals, who plead the defence of alibi. [FN2] In several other jurisdictions as for example in South Africa, the burden of proof rests upon the Prosecution. [FN3]

FN1 In this respect see Criminal Justice Act 1967 s.11 of England which specifically legislates to require disclosure of alibi prior to trial. Similar legislation exists in Canada, as well as certain states of the United States and Australia.

FN2 Section 103 of the Indian Evidence Act. Refer to Sakar on Evidence, vol. 2 (1993), 14th Ed. p. 1341.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN3 R v. Biya. (1952) 4 SA 514 (Appellate Division); Woolmington v. D.P.P. (1935) A.C. 462 (H.L.) and R v. Wood, Cr. App. R. 74, at 78 (1968) (English Law); Sekitoleko v. Uganda [1967] E.A. 531 (U) (Ugandan Law).

234. In the instant case, the Trial Chamber holds that the burden of proof rests upon the Prosecution to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt in all aspects notwithstanding that the Defence raised alibi. After all, the accused is presumed innocent until the Prosecution has proved his guilt under Article 20(3) of the Statute. The accused is only required to raise the defence of alibi and fulfil the specific requirements of Rule 67(A)(ii) of the Rules, which stipulates the necessary information required about the defence of alibi.

235. Under Rule 67 aforementioned, the Defence is required to notify the Prosecution about their intent to rely upon the defence of alibi. However, Counsel for Kayishema made absolutely no indication prior to the commencement of the trial of his intention to rely upon the defence of alibi, and Counsel for Ruzindana only submitted limited information with regard to the witnesses that he intended to call. The Prosecution filed a formal complaint by Motion in which it requested the Trial Chamber to order compliance with Rule 67(A)(ii) of the Rules. [FN4]

FN4 In, Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, in the Decision on the Prosecution motion for a ruling on the Defence continued non compliance with Rule 67(A)(ii) and with the written and oral orders of the Trial Chamber, 3 Sept. 1998, Case No. International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda-95-1-T.

236. During the hearing, Kayishema was asked why, in light of the evidence he had heard against him, he had not raised his defence of alibi at an earlier stage. He stated that as far as the Office of the Prosecutor was concerned, the question was never asked of him. Furthermore, he raised the issue at the first opportunity with his Defence Counsel on 31 May 1996.

237. The Trial Chamber has considered the failure of both Defence Counsels to act in accordance with Rule 67(A)(ii). In its Decision on the above Prosecution Motion, the Chamber ruled,

... that where good cause is not shown, for the application of Rule 67(B), the Trial Chamber is entitled to take into account this failure when weighing the credibility of the defence of alibi and/or any special defences presented. [FN5]

FN5 Decision on non-compliance, Ibid.

238. The Trial Chamber notes that the Defence had ample time to prepare their client's defence and takes this on board in consideration of the timeliness of Counsel's notification of the Prosecution in accordance with Rule 67(A)(ii) of the Rules. This approach is congruent with those jurisdictions [FN6] facing similar difficulties in balancing the needs of the Prosecution with the Defendant's right to testify and present a defence. [FN7]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN6 For example, see Canada, R v. Dunbar and Logan, 68 C.C.C. (2d) 13 at pp. 62-3 (1982); R v. Cleghorn 3 S.C.R. 175 (1995), and Australia, Petty and Maiden v. R, 173 CLR (1991) where although no inference could be taken from the Defendant's prior silence, where a differing explanation had been given then inferences could be drawn.

FN7 Article 20 of the Statute.

239. Counsel for the Defence constantly advanced the argument that the Prosecution's concern over the continued violations of this rule was unjustified in light of the Prosecution's late disclosure of witness lists. [FN8] However, all Parties to the proceedings had the opportunity to raise such lack of disclosure in the appropriate manner before this Chamber. Therefore, the Defence's failure to follow the Rules of Procedure and Evidence is unacceptable and serves neither the interests of the accused nor of justice. Furthermore, the Defence's observation that under Rule 85 the Prosecution may bring evidence to rebut the alibi, does not mitigate the aforementioned duty upon the Defence under Rule 67. [FN9] Moreover, the mere fact that the Prosecutor did not utilise Rule 85 to bring evidence in rebuttal will not have any bearing upon the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence presented. Thus, this Chamber will accord no extra weight to the accused's defence of alibi merely because the Prosecution did not call witnesses in rebuttal. Considering the Decision on the above Motion, in which the Trial Chamber ordered the compliance with Rules 67(A)(ii) and 67(B) and in light of the considerations discussed above, the Trial Chamber will, despite the non-compliance with its order and the defiance of the Defence Counsel, consider the defence of alibi advanced by both Kayishema and Ruzindana without prejudice to the accused.

FN8 This was reiterated once again even in Mr. Ferran's rejoinder, Trans., 17 Nov. 1998, pp. 133-139.

FN9 Rule 85(A)(iii) of the Rules.

5.1.2 Kayishema's Alibi Defence

240. The essence of Kayishema's alibi is that he was in hiding from the morning of Saturday 16 April 1994, to the morning of Wednesday 20 April 1994. These dates purportedly removed him from the scene of the massacres at Catholic Church, Home St. Jean Complex and the Stadium that occurred on 16, 17, 18, 19 April. It would also remove him from Mubuga Church on the 16 April, the date that the Trial Chamber has found the major attack at this site occurred. It would not, however, account for his whereabouts in the days that preceded this attack. Kayishema also denies ever being present at any of the massacre sites in the Bisesero area during the period set out in the Indictment, but provides no specific alibi.

241. Kayishema testified before this Trial Chamber that in the early hours of Saturday 16 April, upon the departure of the commanding officer Major Jabo, the Tutsi gendarmes were mutinying and were looking for him with harmful intention. Upon receipt of this information he, with his wife and children, went into hiding. Kayishema stated in his testimony that between 9 and 10 a.m. he and his family left the prefectorial house and went into hiding. They sought refuge in the houses of white people in Kibuye because they had already been looted and no one was likely to return to them. The first house was that of Mr. Soufflet which lay along from the Prefectorial residence on Lake Kivu, approximately three kilometres from Home St. Jean and the Catholic Church. Kayishema stated that they remained there for the nights of 16 and 17 April. He and his family then moved next door, to the last house in that direction, for the remaining two nights. This was owned by a Swiss technical assistant who was working in the forestry department. Kayishema contended that he was absent from his family only when he would investigate a noise outside or when his informant visited their hiding place. This absence was never in excess of 30 minutes.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

242. In an earlier account, Kayishema had volunteered details of this Prosecution period to the investigators, as shown in exhibit 350C, a transcript of the interview with investigators. On 6 November 1996, during the interview with investigators, Kayishema stated that he was in his own home during the period of the massacres at Home St. Jean, the Catholic Church, and the Stadium. Although at this time he could not remember the dates, or the days of the week that he was confined to his house, Kayishema identified individuals with whom he had hidden, namely Emmanuel Dusabimana, Alphonse Kayiranga, the wife of Lieutenant Charles Twagirayezu and the Tutsi wife of a Hutu named Francois. He did not, however, call any of these people to testify on his behalf. In this statement he also asserted that he would spend his nights, in the bush, hiding. During his cross-examination Kayishema explained the difference between his oral testimony and his statement to the investigators. He stated that his position in both was that he had been in hiding during the period of the massacres at the aforementioned sites and, therefore, could not have perpetrated the atrocities alleged.

243. In his testimony, Kayishema went on to describe his activities after he came out of hiding. He talked of travelling around the Prefecture, burying bodies and taking wounded or malnourished children to the hospital, around 22 April. He met with the interim Prime Minister, Jean Kambanda, on 3 May and attended a public meeting with him. Kayishema also talked of going to Gitarama on 9 May in order to meet with the interim government that was based there at that time. His diary, [FN10] the personal diary of the Prefect, details meetings on 10, 11, and 13 May with his sous prefects. Kayishema referred to these meetings, as well as those on the 14 May with his prefectorial council and on 16 May with the interim president, in his testimony to the Trial Chamber. He also confirmed that he had gone into the Bisesero area throughout May, but only to conduct his prefectorial duties and to investigate the disparities between the information he had received and the actual situation in the area. Kayishema submitted, therefore, that Defence witness DU, who testified that the defendant had not left his prefectorial office in this period, had been mistaken. Kayishema maintained, however, that he never visited any of the massacre sites in the Bisesero area during the months of April, May and June 1994 as charged in the Indictment. Moreover, when questioned in cross-examination about eye-witnesses who had identified him in the Bisesero area at specific sites such as Muyira Hill, and the Cave, Kayishema maintained that he did not know where such sites were even located. He asserted that those witnesses who identified him at various massacre sites either between 16 to 20 April, or in the

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Bisesero area during the massacres in April, May and June had erred.

FN10 Def. exh. 58.

Defence Witnesses in Support of Kayishema

244. In support of his alibi defence, the defendant called a number of witnesses, including his wife. In her first statement to investigators Mrs. Kayishema had stated that she, her husband and their children had gone into hiding in mid April. She also stated that on 13 May, the date of one of the major attacks in the Bisesero area, her husband had driven her to work in the morning and after dropping her at her work place, he went directly to his office. She arrived at work that Friday morning at 8 a.m., and returned home with her husband at 11 a.m.

245. In her testimony before the Chamber, however, Mrs. Kayishema, who holds a degree in education science and has served as a school inspector, clarified and elaborated upon her first statement. She contended that they had gone into hiding between 16 and 20 April 1994, following the departure of the commanding officer of the gendarmerie nationale in Kibuye Prefecture on 15 April. The corporal who remained was an RPF sympathiser and, she asserted, they had been informed that he had made various threats against the prefect. Although in her testimony Mrs. Kayishema referred to just female and sick gendarmes who had remained behind after the meeting on 15 April, she maintained that she and her husband had gone into hiding on 16 April for fear of their lives. They hid in the houses of those people who had been building the roads, staying in several houses and changing frequently. No more details about the houses were given. However, when questioned about her initial statement to investigators where she claimed to have gone into hiding in the bush for three days, she was able to clarify to this Chamber that she and her children had been hiding in the houses, and that her husband had spent the nights in the bush.

246. In her testimony, Kayishema's wife further elaborated upon the events of Friday 13 May 1994. In addition to the activities in the morning, she recalled that she had attended a public meeting chaired by her husband. The meeting, which began at 2 p.m., was to present the new sous prefets. Mrs. Kayishema did not offer any further testimony regarding her husband's whereabouts over the ensuing weeks, but simply stated that he continued with his duties as Prefect until their departure to Zaire on 16 July 1994.

247. Most witnesses for Kayishema had either not seen him at all during the period in question, such as witness DAC, or had seen him for very short periods of time on isolated occasions. Witness DN, for example, had seen him at a meeting in late April, witness DK saw him at a meeting to inaugurate a school in mid May, and witness DM had seen him briefly sometime in May at the roundabout at the centre of Kibuye Town. Consequently, although all Defence witnesses testified to never having heard of the participation of their Prefect in these massacres, very little specific evidence was proffered as to the accused's whereabouts during their execution. Only two other witnesses were able to provide further detailed insight into Kayishema's activities from 6 April 1994. With regard to the massacre at Mubuga Church, the only witness presented by the Defence was DV. The witness knew the accused by sight because he had seen him in Gitesi where he undertook his studies. He had not actually been present at the massacre and was unsure of the date it occurred. However, he lived only six to seven hundred meters from Mubuga Church and stated that he had not seen the defendant in the vicinity during the period of the massacres. In fact, witness DV testified that he did not see the defendant at all throughout April, May, June or July.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

248. Witness DU testified as to Kayishema's whereabouts from 4 May to 16 July 1994. His testimony covered almost the entire period. He knew the defendant well and stayed in Kayishema's house upon returning to Kibuye on 4 May. DU also worked in a canteen, just fifteen meters from the entrance of the Prefecture offices. Although he could not see Kayishema's office, he had a clear view of the entrance of these offices. He testified that he saw Kayishema every day over those two months. He ate breakfast, lunch and evening meals with Kayishema and his family, and often travelled to and from work with him. In the opinion of DU, Kayishema could not have visited the Bisesero area at any time from 4 May to 16 July because the defendant was never absent for periods in excess of 30 minutes. The witness felt able to state this with some certainty because of the proximity of the canteen to the defendant's offices and the fact that the noise of Kayishema's vehicle as he arrived at or departed from the offices made his whereabouts very obvious. The one exception that the witness could recall to these minimal absences was when Kayishema led a meeting and was gone for six hours. Mrs. Kayishema informed witness DU that Kayishema was at a meeting. Like the many other witnesses called for the Defence, DU had never heard any reference to the participation in any massacres by his Prefect, Kayishema.

Examination of Kayishema's Alibi Defence

249. Having set out the defence propounded by Kayishema, the Trial Chamber has also given consideration to the various arguments raised by the Prosecution with regard to the issue of Kayishema's alibi. Particularly, the Chamber has taken note of the many contradictions in the defence raised by Kayishema. These are contradictions not only within his own testimony, but also contradictions between his testimony and the testimony of his wife and the other witnesses called on his behalf.

250. The Trial Chamber observes Kayishema's various statements to the investigators and to the Chamber do not correlate. For instance, in his first voluntary statement to investigators in July 1996 Kayishema made no reference to being in hiding or to the events which supposedly led to his being in hiding, namely the 'mutiny' of the gendarmerie nationale. A number of observations may be made in this regard. In the first instance, the Trial Chamber does not make a negative finding due solely to Kayishema's non- disclosure of his alibi during the initial interviews with investigators. However, in addition to this non-disclosure within his interviews, in Kayishema's diary there was no mention of him either being in hiding or of the gendarme mutiny. The diary, Kayishema confirmed, was the personal diary of the Prefect. Whilst this Chamber appreciates that it is not possible to note every event which occurred, it is surprising that no mention was made of such major events, in particular those that precluded him from undertaking his official functions as Prefect.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

251. The second statement given by Kayishema to investigators, on 6 November 1996, also differs in many respects from his testimony before this Chamber. In that interview, Kayishema did not remain silent, but gave specific details of his whereabouts during the massacres at the Home St. Jean complex, the Catholic Church and Gatwaro Stadium. He stated that he was in his home, the residence of the Prefect. When questioned specifically if he was in his home, for the whole time, Kayishema affirmed, "Home, in my house." Kayishema further provided the names of those individuals with whom he was hiding, as set out above. He also went on to describe how he would have to spend entire nights in the bush. Kayishema's statement that he was in his own home contradicts his testimony in court where he testified that he was in hiding in houses belonging to others. In his testimony, responding to a judicial question inquiring whether he was in his home or in hiding, Kayishema confirmed that he was hiding in the bush at night. This answer does not clear up the discrepancy. In his oral testimony Kayishema gave specific details of being in two houses for two nights each, moving from one to the other. Further, when questioned specifically as to why he had told investigators that he had been in his home, Kayishema referred to the need to protect the identity of those in whose houses he had occupied. Responding to another judicial question inquiring why, therefore, he had not told investigators that he had been in hiding could not reveal the identity of Kayishema simply asserted that he had not lied. Kayishema suggested that his response to investigators that he had been in his house had served its purpose, namely to protect the identity of those in the houses of whom he sought refuge.

252. One final point was raised with regard to Kayishema's presence at the sites of Home St. Jean, and the Stadium. In his statement to the investigators he was asked specifically if he had ever visited any of these sites between 7 April and the end of May. He answered emphatically, no. Yet in cross- examination before this Chamber, he stated that he had been at the Catholic Church and Home St. Jean sometime between 13 April and the massacres. When questioned on this discrepancy, he answered that he understood that the investigator was asking whether he had been to these sites on a daily basis. This explanation is not entirely convincing.

Contradictions Between Kayishema's Evidence and the Evidence of his Wife and Others

253. The contradictions within this defence extend beyond the statements and testimonies of Kayishema alone. Discrepancies exist, for example, between his account and that of his wife's. In her statement to the investigator's on 28 April 1998 Mrs. Kayishema maintained that she and her family were in hiding for three days in the bush, but she could not remember the days or dates. Almost two months later, before this Trial Chamber, she testified that they went into hiding on 15 April, and finally concluded under cross-examination that they had actually gone into hiding on 16 April. She made no mention of others being in their house prior to their departure. Whilst Mrs. Kayishema confirms that they were in hiding until 20 April, she talks of moving from house to house "frequently". [FN11] Her husband said that they were in just two houses. She testified that he spent the nights in the bush. He testified that for these four nights and days he did not leave her in excess of 30 minutes.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN11 Trans., 24 June 1998, p. 121.

254. With respect to those dates outside of 16 to 20 April, Mrs. Kayishema's testimony offers little further insight. She does not provide any information of her husband's whereabouts on 15 April, during the massacres at Mubuga Church. Similarly, she provides little information on his movements after they came out of hiding. She does confirm that he continued his activities as Prefect and she also testified as to his activities on Friday 13 May 1994. It was on this date that one of the major attacks in the Bisesero area occurred. It was her testimony, however, that during that day Kayishema had driven her to work at around 8 a.m. They then returned home at approximately 11 a.m. that same morning where they stayed until she and her husband attended a public meeting where the defendant presented the new sous préfets at 2 p.m. that afternoon. When asked why Mrs. Kayishema had not mentioned this meeting in the afternoon when speaking to investigators two months prior to her testimony she claimed that she had simply not remembered it. This meeting was entered in Kayishema's diary. However, whereas two previous meetings with regard to the new sous prefects had been written in French, this meeting was noted in another ink and written in Kinyarwanda. Furthermore, this note states that it was a meeting with all staff members to present the new sous prefects. [FN12] There is no mention of the meeting being a public one as Mrs. Kayishema had claimed. The Trial Chamber has some doubt whether the entry regarding this meeting was in fact entered at the time of events.

FN12 Def. exh. 58.

255. Beyond these specific days, and a few other notable days of interest such as when the Cardinal visited the region, the Mrs. Kayishema does not offer any further testimony as to her husband's actions during the remaining period when massacres were occurring in the Bisesero area. However, Witness DU, a friend of Kayishema who claims to have been resident in his house from 4 May, offers this alibi. He testified that apart from one day when the defendant was attending a meeting all morning, Kayishema never left his offices for more than half an hour. It is a testimony that is discredited initially by its improbability, especially in light of Kayishema's position as Prefect that demanded his presence over the whole Prefecture. It is also a testimony that is discredited by its contradictions with Mrs. Kayishema's and the defendant's own testimony before this Chamber. Kayishema gave detailed evidence of his continuing activities as Prefect throughout April, May and June. He specifically confirmed, contrary to the opinion of DU, that he had been to the Bisesero area. The testimony of witness DU, therefore, adds little weight to Kayishema's alibi defence for the massacres that occurred in the Bisesero region.

Kayishema's Elaboration

256. A further phenomenon highlighted by the Prosecution was the Kayishema's ability to recall exact dates, days and even times that he was in hiding during his testimony. It is a matter of concern to this Trial Chamber because it is in sharp contrast to his interview, almost two years prior. In that interview in November 1996 Kayishema could not provide any dates or even days that he was in hiding. Kayishema was asked in cross-examination before this Trial Chamber why he had given the response to the investigators that he did not remember what days he was in hiding. His considered response was that, in the first place, he did not know what were going to be the key issues for his defence. Secondly, he asserted that he had the right to remain silent. However, this Chamber notes that he did not remain silent. Rather, he specifically said that he did not remember. [FN13] The Chamber also notes that Kayishema could not have an answer what had aided his memory, in light of the absence of any entry in his diary, since that last interview. Although not conclusive in itself, the Trial Chamber has taken such elaboration into consideration. [FN14]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN13 Pros. exh. 350CA.

FN14 Similar elaboration by the accused, central to the defence of alibi, were observed by the Trial Chamber in the Tadic Judgement, para. 502.

Finding

257. In light of these contradictions, this Chamber does not find any merit in the defence advanced by Kayishema. Whilst the burden of proof rests upon the Prosecution to prove the case against Kayishema, the defence of alibi that has been raised on his behalf has not been sufficient to levy any doubt against that Prosecution case which is set out and considered below.

5.1.3 Ruzindana's Alibi Defence

258. In total, 21 witnesses appeared on behalf of Ruzindana alone and gave testimony pertinent to his defence of alibi. Most of these witnesses did not give a comprehensive account of Ruzindana's whereabouts during the period when massacres were known to have occurred in the Bisesero region. Nevertheless, a picture was built by the Defence of a man continuing his business in the town of Mugonero.

259. After the death of President Habyarimana, on 6 April 1994, Ruzindana and his family left Remera, a neighbourhood of Kigali, where they had been living. They returned to Mugonero where Ruzindana's father continued to run a shop. Ruzindana was a businessman and a well-known figure in the area. A number of witnesses testified to having seen Ruzindana for varying periods of time between April and July 1994. Witnesses testified to having seen Ruzindana serving customers in his father's shop, others observed Ruzindana at the local market which was held every Wednesday, or noticed him on the roads between Kibuye, Cyangugu and Gisenyi.

260. Specifically, witnesses such as DD testified to frequenting the store of Ruzindana's father "almost everyday" where, on most occasions, Ruzindana had served him. [FN15] Witness DD, a friend of Ruzindana's was not more specific but witness DAA apparently corroborated his account. Like DD, witness DAA worked in a store opposite the Ruzindana family shop and confirmed that Ruzindana was never away from

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Mugonero for more than a week. However, like all other witness who testified for the accused, he never accompanied Ruzindana on these business trips. Moreover, the only exact dates to which he could confirm that Ruzindana was present at Mugonero were the 12 to 14 April.

FN15 Trans., 20 May 1998, p.105.

261. Ruzindana was also seen regularly in the Mugonero market, which was held every Wednesday. Witnesses DB, DE, DF, DN, DQ, DS and DY identified Ruzindana in the market on numerous occasions throughout April, May and June. However, no exact dates were ever given by these witnesses. Witness DB, for example, saw the accused one Wednesday in early May; witness DF recollected seeing him four times in these three months; witness DQ saw him once in April and twice in May. Thus, it is possible to see that these sightings, which would last only a few minutes, are utilised by the Defence to reflect the activities of an individual continuing his normal course of business. They are not, and cannot, be offered as a comprehensive alibi for his whereabouts during the massacres in the Bisesero area.

262. Similarly, the Defence offered a number of examples where witnesses had seen Ruzindana on the roads in the conduct of his business. Other witnesses referred to Ruzindana driving one of his four trucks in the course of his trading, transporting beer or coffee to and from Mugonero. Witness DQ, for example, testified that Ruzindana passed by on the road to Kibuye on at least nine occasions in this period; witness DS saw him with empty beer bottles on the way to Kibuye; witness DD, who worked opposite the Ruzindana shop, talked of the accused leaving with empty beer bottles and returning, a few hours later, with full ones; and witness DR, who owned a kiosk near the roadside, testified that Ruzindana would often drive past with his driver in his green Toyota pick-up truck -- leaving at approximately 8 a.m. with empty beer bottles and returning around 4 p.m. with full ones. Although none of these witnesses were able to give the Trial Chamber any specific dates as to when they saw Ruzindana undertaking these trips, they were able to further elaborate upon the impression of an individual continuing his daily business activities. To this end, witnesses DB and DA also testified that Ruzindana was in the areas of Cyangugu and Gisenyi for business purposes. Once again, their information is very imprecise and relate his whereabouts for only very limited periods of time. For example, witness DB described how he met Ruzindana in Mugonero approximately one week after the President's death, in Cyangugu Prefecture on a Tuesday one month after that, and then in Mugonero on Wednesday of the next week.

263. The Chamber is cognisant of the difficulties often encountered by witnesses in recalling such details and we have, accordingly, set out our approach elsewhere. [FN16] However, the Trial Chamber observes that virtually none of the witnesses presented on behalf of the accused were able to give any substantial idea of his whereabouts in their testimony before this Tribunal. Beyond those already stipulated, only witness DH was able to verify a certain date that Ruzindana was in Mugonero. He described how the accused was present when he arrived in Mugonero on the morning of Saturday 16 April. Witness DH, a relative of the accused, remained there until 3 p.m. and described how Ruzindana had also stayed in the town for the duration of his visit. Beyond that, like those witnesses set out above, witness DH simply describes how he had met Ruzindana one day in mid May on the road to Kibuye, about twenty kilometres from Mugonero, and that Ruzindana had just bought supplies of beer.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN16 Chapter 3.3

264. Ruzindana's wife was one of the few who is able to give a more comprehensive picture of his movements during this period. She testified that whilst he went to work, she would remain in the house during the day. However, because they shared a midday meal every day she could be certain that Ruzindana was within the vicinity of Mugonero on most days. Mrs. Ruzindana testified that the Ruzindana had only left for prolonged periods of time on four or five occasions. These periods could be either one or two days if Ruzindana had gone to Cyangugu or Gisenyi on business. Employees working in Ruzindana's house supported this testimony. The houseboy, DC, testified that Ruzindana would leave very early some mornings and would not return for up to two days. Although he had no personal knowledge of why Ruzindana was away, DC testified that on such occasions Ruzindana had instructed him to inform his family that he had gone for supplies. No clear indication of the days or dates that the accused would spend away from the home were offered. This is in common with those other witnesses set out above who corroborated the fact that Ruzindana would go away for either day trips or prolonged periods of time, but could also offer no certainty as to when those occasions were. Accordingly, as with sightings at the market and on the road, the Trial Chamber is unable to assess whether the sightings and trips away that have been alluded to were congruent or separate.

265. Each witness further testified that at no time did they see Ruzindana in the company of the militia or the armed forces or in the possession of any form of weapon during the period set out in the Indictment.

Examination of Ruzindana's Alibi Defence

266. The Prosecution questioned the reliability, credibility and relevance of various Defence witnesses. They raised the issue of reliability vis-à-vis the testimony of various witnesses who had close relationships with Ruzindana. Not only was there Ruzindana's wife who testified, but also two other relations, a number of close friends, and two employees of Ruzindana. The Prosecution also raised the issue of credibility of a number of these witnesses. For example, witness DB states that he saw Ruzindana in Cyangugu on 26 June as Ruzindana headed for Zaire. The Prosecution noted, however, that DC also testified before the Chamber that Ruzindana was at home the entire day on 26 June.

267. The final point raised by the Prosecution is the pertinence of the testimony of many Defence witnesses. The majority of the witnesses were close relatives or former employees, who are likely to benefit from shielding Ruzindana from any criminal responsibility. Many individuals testified to having seen him on market day for various lengths of time between five minutes and one hour. Several more testified to having seen him on the road to Kibuye, even those who did not know Ruzindana nevertheless remembered his frequent journeys. However, even those who spent a great deal of time with Ruzindana: his wife, his sister, and his brother-in-law, as well as his servants, all testify that they did not travel with him on the frequent business trips that he supposedly made. They, like all of the other witnesses for the Defence, were not in a position to corroborate Ruzindana's location when he left on his 'business trips.'

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

284c

268. These witnesses cannot account for the activities of Ruzindana even on a day-to-day basis, let alone 24-hours-a-day. His wife, after all, confirmed that Ruzindana was gone for two-day periods on a number of occasions. Furthermore, in cross-examination his wife conceded that the Defendant made many more daylong journeys to Kibuye although he did not spend the night. [FN17] The many witnesses who had seen him on the road to Kibuye confirmed these apparent trips. However, in cross-examination these witnesses also stated that this same road from Mugonero to Kibuye divided, branching off into the direction of Gishyita and the area of Bisesero.

FN17 This is a point corroborated by Defence witness DAA, who owned a shop opposite the Ruzindana family shop. See Trans., 18 and 19 Aug. 1998.

269. Bisesero lies approximately twenty kilometres from Mugonero. Given the proximity, therefore, these day trips would have more than sufficed to enable Ruzindana to reach the massacre sites and then return home. Accordingly, it is not sufficient for the purposes of his alibi defence, for witnesses to state that Ruzindana was the road from Mugonero or for Ruzindana's sister to state that whenever he was not on a business trip, that the accused would enjoy the family meal with them.

270. Furthermore, the Prosecution does not deny that Ruzindana continued trading throughout April, May and June, or that he made several other trips to locations such as Cyangugu. Rather, this supports the contention of Prosecution witnesses, X, FF and II who had not only heard reference to their attackers coming from Gisenyi, Gikongoro and Cyangugu, but had also noticed the accents peculiar to these regions.

Finding

271. The Chamber is cognisant of the difficulties raised in advancing this defence due to the time period covered in the Indictment. The legal issues that this gives rise to have already been considered. [FN18] At this juncture it is sufficient to note that, on a factual basis, many witnesses for the Defence were unable to provide specific dates as to when they had seen Ruzindana in Mugonero.

FN18 See, chapter 3.4

272. The burden of proof is, of course, on the Prosecution to prove their case beyond a reasonable doubt. In the opinion of the Trial Chamber, however, the alibi defence provided by Ruzindana does not diminish the Prosecution case. Even if the evidence proffered by the Defence in support of alibi is accepted in its entirety, it remains insufficient to raise doubt in relation to Ruzindana's presence in Bisesero at the times of the massacres. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber rejects the defence of alibi advanced by Ruzindana and has set out its factual findings below.

5.2 DID GENOCIDE OCCUR IN RWANDA AND KIBUYE IN 1994?

273. A question of general importance to this case is whether genocide took place in Rwanda in 1994, as the Prosecution has alleged. Considering the plethora of official reports, including United Nations documents, [FN19] which confirm that genocide occurred in Rwanda and the absence of any Defence argument to the contrary, one could consider this point, settled. Nevertheless, the question is so fundamental to the case against the accused that the Trial Chamber feels obliged to make a finding of fact on this issue. The Trial Chamber underscores that a finding that genocide took place in Rwanda is not dispositive of the question of the accused's innocence or guilt. It is the task of this Chamber to make findings of fact based on the Indictment against the accused and assess the evidence to make a finding of the possible responsibility of each person under the law only.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN19 See Pros. exh. 328-331.

274. According to Article 2 of the Tribunal's Statute, genocide means various enumerated acts committed with intent to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group as such. The enumerated acts include, inter alia, killing members of a group and causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group. The purpose of this Chapter is not to decide whether specific acts by particular individuals amounted to genocidal acts, that is, acts committed with the special intent to destroy the Tutsi group in whole or in part. Rather, this Chapter assesses whether the events in Rwanda as a whole, reveal the existence of the elements of the crime of genocide. Such a finding allows for a better understanding of the context within which perpetrators may have committed the crimes alleged in the Indictment. Additionally, because the Indictment concerns events that took place in Kibuye, this Chapter of the Judgment includes a general examination of the events in that prefecture.

275. The Trial Chamber heard testimony from the United Nations Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Dr. René Degni-Segui, whose credentials qualified him as an expert and whose testimony was convincing. The Trial Chamber is seized of his reports to the Security Council on the situation of human rights in Rwanda in 1994, which he submitted after conducting investigations throughout Cyangugu, Butare and Kibuye prefectures. Inter alia, Degni-Segui proffered evidence [FN20] before the Trial Chamber that perpetrators planned the genocide of the Tutsi population prior to 7 April 1994, and produced reports concerning the massacres, which occurred during hostilities. He testified that although to date no one has found any official written document outlining the genocidal plan, there exist sufficient indicators that a plan was in place prior to the crash of the President's plane on 7 April 1994. These indicators include (1) execution lists, which targeted the Tutsi elite, government ministers, leading businessmen, professors and high profile Hutus, who may have favoured the implementation of the Arusha Accords; (2) the spreading of extremist ideology through the Rwandan media which facilitated the campaign of incitement to exterminate the Tutsi population; (3) the use of the civil defence programme and the distribution of weapons to the civilian population; and, (4) the "screening" carried out at many roadblocks which were erected with great speed after the downing of the President's plane. [FN21] The outcome of the implementation of these indicators was the massacres carried out throughout the country.

FN20 The witness produced seven reports for the Security Council. He relied most heavily on one Report, Pros. exh. 331, during his testimony before this Chamber (U.N. Doc. E/CN4/1995/71 1995).

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN21 See Pros. exh. 330B and 331 B, p. 5.

276. It is the opinion of the Trial Chamber that the existence of such a plan would be strong evidence of the specific intent requirement for the crime of genocide. To make a finding on whether this plan existed, the Trial Chamber examines evidence presented regarding the more important indicators of the plan.

Background to the Events of 1994

277. The time was ripe in early 1994 for certain so-called Hutu extremists in power in Rwanda who opposed the Arusha Accords, to avoid having to share decision-making positions with opposition groups. After attending a meeting on the implementation of the Arusha Peace Accords, in Tanzania, President Juvénal Habyarimana was en route to Rwanda when his plane was shot down over Kigali airport and crashed on 6 April 1994. Witness O testified that he on 8 April heard a broadcast on Radio France International (RFI) that the Rwandan People's Army (RPA or FAR) had announced the end of the cease-fire. The state of fear that ensued, caused by the rumours about the intentions of the RPF to exterminate the Hutus and the terror and insecurity that prevailed in Rwanda, served as a pretext for the execution of the genocidal plan and consequently the retention of power by the extremist Hutus. Based on eyewitness and expert testimony and reports, immediately after the plane crash, on 7 April 1994, massacres began throughout Rwanda.

278. A radio announcement on the morning of 7 April, concerning the death of the President, ordered people to remain at home. This announcement was made in order to facilitate the movement of the soldiers and gendarmes from house to house to arrest and execute real and perceived enemies of the Hutu extremists, specifically those named on execution lists. Witnesses, including Degni-Segui and Prosecution witness RR, confirmed this fact.

The Effects of Extremist Ideology Disseminated Through the Mass Media

279. Military and civilian official perpetuated ethnic tensions prior to 1994. Kangura newspaper, established after the 1990 RPF invasion, Radio Television Mille Colline (RTLM) and other print and electronic media took an active part in the incitement of the Hutu population against the Tutsis. Kangura had published the "Ten Commandments" for the Hutus in 1991, which stated that the Tutsis were the enemy. In addition, according to witnesses, in 1991 ten military commanders produced a full report that answered the question how to defeat the enemy in the military, media and political domains. These witnesses also testified that in September 1992 the military issued a memorandum, based on the 1991 report, which also defined the "enemy" as the Tutsi population, thereby transferring the hostile intentions of the RPF to all Tutsis. According to one report, prior to 6 April, the public authorities did not openly engage in inciting the Hutus to perpetrate massacres. On 19 April however, the President of the Interim Government, told the people of Butare to "get to work" in the Rwandan sense of the term by using their machetes and axes.

280. Several witnesses stated that during the atrocities "the Rwandese carried a radio set in one hand and a machete in the other." [FN22] This demonstrates that the radio was a powerful tool for the dissemination of ethnic hatred. Radio National and RTLM freely and regularly broadcasted ethnic hatred against the Tutsis. For example, a UNICEF report refers to an RTLM broadcast stating that "for babies who were still suckling ... they [the assailants] had to cut the legs so that they would not be able to walk." [FN23] In 1992 Leon Mugesera, a professor turned propagandist for the MRND, declared in a public meeting "nous ne commettrons pas l' erreur de '59 ou nous avons fait échoppé des plus jeunes'' (we will not make the 1959 mistake where we let the younger ones [Tutsis] escape.) [FN24] Mugusera also incited the Hutus by explaining that "... we must remove the entrails but there is shorter way, let us throw them into the river so they can go out of the country that way." [FN25] These speeches and reports became widely diffused through repetition in public meetings and through the mass media.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN22 Trans., 9 Mar. 1998, p. 47.

FN23 Trans., 5 Mar. 1998, at 112; Prosecution exh. 331B.

FN24 Trans., 5 Mar. 1998, p. 98.

FN25 Ibid. p. 85.

281. The dissemination and acceptance of such ideas was confirmed by a Hutu policeman to Prosecution witness Patrick de Saint-Exupery, a journalist reporting for the French newspaper Le Figaro. De Saint-Exupery remarked that the policeman had told him how they killed Tutsis "because they were the accomplices of the RPF" and that no Tutsis should be left alive. [FN26] (emphasis added.) This witness, who went to the Bisesero region late June 1994, described how "the hill was scattered, literally scattered with bodies, in small holes, in small ditches, on the foliage, along the ditches, there were bodies and there were many bodies." [FN27]

FN26 Trans., 18 Nov. 1997, p. 136.

FN27 Trans., 18 Nov. 1997, p. 153.

282. As a result of the diffusion of the anti-Tutsi propaganda, the killings "started off like a little spark and then spread." [FN28] Degni-Segui stated that many communities were involved. Butare was an exception as there was resistance to carrying out the killings because the prefect was a Tutsi. The killings did not start in Butare until 19 April, after the Interim Government sacked the prefect and after a visit and an inciting speech by the Interim President. The speech urged the inhabitants of Butare to engage in a murderous manhunt by appealing to the populace that "the enemies are among you, get rid of them." [FN29]

FN28 Trans., 5 Mar. 1998, p. 110.

FN29 Pros. exh. 330B, p. 6.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2844

The Civil Defence Program and the Militias

283. In 1994, Rwandan officials controlled the militias and civil defence forces. The militias trained in military camps. During times of unrest or emergency states call such groups into duty to supplement its armed forces. The evidence before the Trial Chamber moreover reveals that both the militias and the civil defence forces programme became an integral part of the machinery carrying out the genocidal plan in 1994.

284. One of the means by which an ordinary Rwandan became involved in the genocide was through the civil defence programme. Initially both Hutus and Tutsis were involved in the civil defence programme. Authorities established the civil defence programme in 1990 for the security of the civilian population, whereby they could arm persons at all administrative levels, from the top of the prefecture, down to the cellule. Degni Segui confirmed this scheme during a conversation with Bisimungu, the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces, the chief of the police and the Commander of the Gendarmerie, during one of his visits to Rwanda. Unfortunately, the civil defence programme was used in 1994 to distribute weapons quickly and ultimately transformed into a mechanism to exterminate Tutsis. Numerous eyewitnesses such as Witnesses C and F confirmed this fact. They testified that they witnessed the distribution of machetes to civilians by the Prefectoral and Communal authorities in early April 1994. Other evidence before this Chamber shows that 50,000 machetes were ordered and distributed through this programme shortly before the commencement of the 1994 massacres, to the militias of the MRND (members of the Interahamwe) and CDR (members of the Impuzamugambi), and the Hutu civilian population. Degni-Segui concluded that in the end this "system served to kill innocent people, namely Tutsis." [FN30]

FN30 Trans., 9 Mar. 1998, p. 101-102.

285. Prosecution evidence, including letters from Rwandan authorities confirmed that "the population must remain watchful in order to unmask the enemy and his accomplices and hand them over to the authorities." [FN31] Witness R who was familiar with the administrative structure of Rwanda in 1994, affirmed that the people were told to "protect themselves within the Cellules and the Sectors," by organising patrols and erecting roadblocks. [FN32]

FN31 Pros. exh. 52, p. 4.

FN32 Trans., 2 Oct. 1997, p. 51.

286. Other eyewitnesses recounted their versions of the occurrences at the massacre sites and almost all affirmed the presence of members of the Interahamwe and other armed civilians. In fact, several witnesses averred that the majority of the attackers were members of the militias and other civilians who were singing songs of extermination as they approached their victims. Several witnesses further stated that most of these attackers carried machetes and other traditional agricultural tools, as opposed to the gendarmes or police who were armed with guns and grenades.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Roadblocks and Identification Cards

287. The perpetrators of the genocide often employed roadblocks to identify their victims. Both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified to this fact. Degni-Segui testified that within hours of the President's death, the military personnel, soldiers, the members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians erected and manned roadblocks. In fact, some roadblocks were erected within thirty to forty-five minutes after the crash of President's plane and remained throughout Rwanda for at least the following three months. According to this witness "what they had to do was to use identity cards to separate the Tutsis from the Hutus. The Tutsis were arrested and thereafter executed, at times, on the spot." [FN33]

FN33 Trans., 5 Mar. 1998, p. 105.

288. De Saint-Exupery confirmed the existence of roadblocks in Rwanda during the time in question. He testified that from Goma to Kibuye on 25 June 1994, "at the approach ... to each locality, there was a roadblock." [FN34] Witness Sister Julianne Farrington stated that in May 1994 as she travelled from Butare to Kibuye, she went through 45 roadblocks. She further stated that at some roadblocks military personnel monitored movements, while others were manned by young Hutus in civilian dress. Other witnesses, including witnesses G, T, and Defence witness DA and DM, who travelled through various parts of Rwanda during the genocide, confirmed these facts before this Trial Chamber. The Trial Chamber notes that those who produced identity cards bearing the indication Hutu and those with travel documents were able to pass through these roadblocks without serious difficulties. Conversely, those identified as Tutsis were either arrested or killed. The Trial Chamber recognises that the erection of roadblocks is a natural phenomenon during times of war. However, the roadblocks in Rwanda were unrelated to the military operations. Sadly, they were used to identify the Tutsi victims of the genocide.

FN34 Trans., 18 Nov. 1997, p. 118.

Conclusion

289. In summary, the Trial Chamber finds that the massacres of the Tutsi population indeed were "meticulously planned and systematically co-ordinated" by top level Hutu extremists in the former Rwandan government at the time in question. [FN35] The widespread nature of the attacks and the sheer number of those who perished within just three months is compelling evidence of this fact. This plan could not have been implemented without the participation of the militias and the Hutu population who had been convinced by these extremists that the Tutsi population, in fact, was the enemy and responsible for the downing of President Habyarimana's airplane.

FN35 Trans., 5 Mar. 1998, 84.

290. The cruelty with which the attackers killed, wounded and disfigured their victims indicates that the propaganda unleashed on Rwanda had the desired effect, namely the destruction of the Tutsi population. The involvement of the peasant population in the massacres was facilitated also by their misplaced belief and confidence in their leadership, [FN36] and an understanding that the encouragement of the authorities to guaranteed them impunity to kill the Tutsis and loot their property.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN36 See Part II, supra discussing the Historical Context of 1994 Events in Rwanda.

291. Final reports produced estimated the number of the victims of the genocide at approximately 800,000 to one million, nearly one-seventh of Rwanda's total population. [FN37] These facts combined prove the special intent requirement element of genocide. Moreover, there is ample evidence to find that the overwhelming majority of the victims of this tragedy were Tutsi civilians which leaves this Chamber satisfied that the targets of the massacres were "members of a group," in this case an ethnic group. In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds a plan of genocide existed and perpetrators executed this plan in Rwanda between April and June 1994.

FN37 Pros. exh. 331B, p. 5.

5.2.1 Genocide in Kibuye

292. Having determined that perpetrators carried out a genocidal plan in Rwanda in 1994, this Chamber now turns to assess the situation in Kibuye Prefecture. After the death of the President on 6 April 1994, the relatively calm co- existence of the Hutus and Tutsis came to a halt in Kibuye. According to the Prosecutor, Kibuye was among the first of the prefectures "to enter into this dance of death." [FN38] In Kibuye, the first incidents took place on 8 and 9 April 1994 in various communes. The Chamber heard testimony and received documentary evidence that the perpetrators of the genocide in Kibuye acted with requisite intent to destroy the Tutsi population in whole or in part and that they in fact succeeded in achieving this goal. In this Chapter, this Chamber examines briefly the occurrences in Kibuye Prefecture from April to June 1994.

FN38 Trans., 11 Apr. 1997, at 34.

Background

293. The Chamber finds that events in Kibuye unfolded as follows. After the crash of the President's plane, the atmosphere quickly began to change. The Hutu population began openly to use accusatory or pejorative terms, such as Inkotanyi (Kinyarwanda for RPF accomplice/enemy) [FN39] and Inyenzi (Kinyarwanda for cockroach) when referring to the Tutsis. The members of the Interahamwe and other armed militant Hutus began a campaign of persecution against the Tutsis based on the victims' education and social prominence. Simultaneously, the Tutsi population, as a whole, suffered indiscriminate attacks in their homes. Perpetrators set on fire their houses and looted and killed their herds of cattle. Witness A testified that on the morning of 7 April 1994 his Hutu neighbours began to engage in looting, attacking Tutsi- owned houses and slaughter Tutsi-owned livestock. Witnesses C, F, OO and E, corroborated these occurrences.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN39 See the testimonies of Witnesses G, U and Z explaining that Inkotanyi meant "all the Tutsis" or the "enemy".

294. On their way to the gathering places many witnesses saw roadblocks where the perpetrators separated Tutsis from the Hutus. Once the Tutsis reached these places they were injured, mutilated and some of the women were raped. In the end the Tutsis were massacred by Hutu assailants who sang songs whose lyrics exhorted extermination during the attacks. These attackers were armed and led by local government officials and other public figures. The fact that these massacres occurred is not in dispute. In fact, Kayishema testified that he and others engaged in a clean-up operation after the massacres.

295. To illustrate implementation of the genocidal plan, the Trial Chamber now turns to examine the occurrences in the commune in Kibuye, immediately following the death of President Habyarimana, and other related issues which serve as further proof, such as meetings and documentary evidence, of the genocidal events in Kibuye.

Initial Attacks at the Residences of the Tutsis

296. There is sufficient evidence to find that in communes such as Gishyita Gitesi Mabanza and Rutsiro the initial persecution of the Tutsis and individual attacks on their houses began almost immediately after the death of the President. The fact that killings took place throughout Kibuye is corroborated by a diary entry [FN40] which was tendered by Witness O. Witness O testified that initially after the President's death, in Gitesi Commune, there was relative calm. He also stated, however, that on 7 April "he saw wounded people everywhere, by the roadside, bushes and very close to the administrative headquarters of the Prefecture.'' [FN41] Witness O, under cross-examination, told the Trial Chamber that the first people to be killed were in Kigali and they were alleged to be RPF collaborators. Witness O testified there was a cause-and-effect relationship correlation between the 8 April radio announcement of the purported resumption of the war and the first deaths in Rwanda and, in particular, in Kibuye Prefecture.

FN40 Prosecution Exhibit 76E, as shown in the Trans., of 13 October 1997.

FN41 Trans., of 13 October 1997, p. 149

297. Witness F's testimony is illustrative of many other witnesses and of the situation as a whole. A resident of Gitesi commune, Witness F testified that he heard the news of the crash at 10 a.m. on 7 April and that as a result, the mood of the people changed to one of panic in his neighbourhood. On 7 or 8 April, a meeting took place at Mutekano Bar, situated some 400-500 meters from the Kibuye prison, along the road heading to the Kibuye Prefecture Office. Witness F testified during that period, he interacted with one Mathew, who was participating in the said meeting. Witness F observed the meeting, the topic of which was security - addressing the "Tutsi problem" -- from the roadside for about twenty minutes. Many local officials participated in the meeting.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

298. Witness F testified that after the meeting of 8 April, he witnessed machetes being distributed by Ndida, the Commune Secretary. The machetes had been transported into the commune by Prefectoral trucks and the Secretary of Gitesi Commune supervised the unloading. They were taken towards the Petrol Rwanda fuel Station. About twenty persons received a machete each including, Eriel Ndida, Rusigera, Siriaki, Emmanuel, the Headmaster and many others. On 9 April, the local officials departed to other commune after the distribution of machetes. That evening around his neighbourhood in Gitesi, Witness F noticed that the situation had changed and that militant Hutus openly were attacking the Tutsi. The proximity of the distribution of weapons to the massacres of Tutsi civilians is evidence of the genocidal plan. He noticed that militant Hutu had begun throwing rocks at Tutsis and throwing some persons into Lake Kivu. He also observed similar acts of violence in Gishyita commune. He stated that some persons from Gishyita crossed Lake Kivu to take refuge in the commune of Gitesi. [FN42]

FN42 Trans., 22 April 1997, p.36.

299. On 12 April, the first person in Witness F's neighbourhood was killed. Munazi who was with other militant Hutu and members of the Interahamwe killed Nyirakagando, an elderly Tutsi. Witness F and others saw her dead body in the morning of 13 April, as they were fleeing their homes. Witness F stated that "the Hutus killed her because she was Tutsi." [FN43] Militant Hutus started by chasing Tutsi men. Witness F stated that "when the Tutsi realised that they were being pursued by the Hutus, they started to flee through the bushes." [FN44] Witness F's wife was gang-raped by the Hutus before her children's eyes on 13 April. Witness F's mother "was killed with the use of a spear to her neck" during the same attack. [FN45] Witness F left his wife who was no longer able to walk and first hid in the bush, within sight of his house and on 13 April fled to a Pentecostal church at Bukataye.

FN43 Trans., 22 Apr. 1997, p. 46.

FN44 Trans., 22 Apr. 1997, p. 47.

FN45 Trans., 22 Apr. 1997, p. 49.

300. Witness F spent the night at the church parish at Bukataye. During the night, there was an attack on the church parish, led by the Headmaster of the Pentecostal school. People carrying clubs and spears accompanied the Headmaster of the school. He said, "the Tutsi who were in the Church should come out so that they could be killed." [FN46] Those who were unable to flee the Church were separated. Tutsi women separated from the Hutu women. The latter remained and watched as the attackers killed the former. Witness F stated that the men, including him, then fled to the bushes.

FN46 Trans., 22 Apr. 1997, p. 51.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Mass Movement of the Tutsi Population

301. Witness B testified that, when the attacks began in her commune, she and others decided to flee, stating "we did not want to be killed in our homes, and the people were saying that if you go to the Church no one could be killed there." [FN47] Witness B along with her mother, young sister and brother as well as four other Tutsis, left their village in Kabongo, Bishura sector, Gitesi commune, for the Catholic Church in Kibuye. As they fled, there were armed Hutus around their home.

FN47 Trans., 17 Apr. 1997, p. 8.

302. Because the Tutsis were targets in their homes, they began to flee and seek refuge in traditional safety. Witness T, who worked at the Catholic Church and Home Saint Jean, (the Complex) testified that in the days following the President's death, a curfew was announced and people were told to stay at home. Tutsis, however, began to arrive on the peninsula, where the Complex is located, shortly thereafter. These Tutsis were from the hill of Bururga. Others came from Gitesi, Bishunda, Karongi and Kavi. They had converged at the communal office but they were not allowed to stay. Witness T stated that she helped lodge the thousands refugees, comprised of the elderly, women and children, in the dormitories at the Complex. Those seeking refuge were worried because their homes had been burnt. The first incidents of burning homes started between 7 and 10 April in Burunga, the hill to the left of the Home St. Jean, and other hills nearby. Witness T stated that she saw the home of a friend aflame.

303. Explaining a diary entry from 14 April 1994 to the Trial Chamber, Witness O stated that those seeking refuge from Gitesi Commune, who were on their way to the Stadium, told him that they were fleeing massacres which had begun in their area. Witness O observed many massacres during that time and aided Tutsi survivors to reach Kibuye Hospital.

304. Witness C testified that two days after the President's death people in Burunga, Mabanza commune started fleeing. She testified that attackers were attacking the Tutsi for being Tutsi and burning their houses. She explained that there was no apparent reason for these attacks besides these persons' ethnicity. Regarding the militant Hutu, she stated that "they themselves really could not find a reason for this because they would share everything on a day- to-day basis." [FN48] She saw people fleeing from Mabanza, including a member of her extended family, and the family of Nyaribirangwe. Her relative had been dealt a machete blow to his head.

FN48 Trans., 17 Apr. 1997, p. 116.

305. Witness B testified that they fled to the Catholic Church "because people like my father who had lived through other periods of unrest as in 1959, when there was an attack against the Tutsi, at that time people took refuge at the Church." [FN49] Witness T had a similar reason for going to a place of refuge. She testified that since the 1959 revolutions, whenever people felt insecure, they would go to churches, parishes and would be protected and be "respected in these places." [FN50] Additionally, witness F testified, that they arrived at the Catholic Church on 15 April at about 4 a.m. and found scores of other Tutsis who had come from other commune such as Mabanza, Rutsiro, Kaivere and Gishyita as well as Gisenyi Prefecture.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2850

FN49 Trans., 17 April 1997, p.11

FN50 Trans., 6 May 1997, p.24

306. Witness A testified that on 7 April, militant Hutu began to attack Tutsi-owned houses, slaughtered Tutsi-owned livestock. The Abakiga (Hutus from the northern region of Rwanda) joined their fellow Hutu: On 12 April 1994, militant Abakiga Hutu identified the Tutsi by identification cards and massacres started in Gatunda shopping area. Witness A went to the Catholic Church, arrived 13 April between 6 and 7 a.m., and found numerous refugees gathered there.

307. Almost all Prosecution and Defence witness, including Mrs. Kayishema, who travelled throughout Kibuye Prefecture, testified that they encountered roadblocks. At these roadblocks the attackers used identification cards to distinguish between and to separate Hutus from Tutsis.

Other Evidence of Intent to Commit Genocide

308. The record in the present case is replete with evidence that reveals the existence of a plan to destroy the Rwandan Tutsi population in 1994. The Trial Chamber explores briefly some of the more pertinent evidence relative to the acts demonstrating the intent to commit genocide that took place in Kibuye Prefecture.

309. Evidence presented to the Chamber shows that in Kibuye Prefecture the massacres were prearranged. For months before the commencement of the massacres, bourgmestres were communicating lists of suspected RPF members and supporters from their commune to the Prefect. [FN51] In addition, the Prosecutor produced a series of written communications between the Central Authorities, [FN52] Kayishema and the Communal Authorities that contain language regarding whether "work has begun" and whether more "workers" were needed in certain commune. [FN53] Another letter sent by Kayishema to the Minister of Defence requested military hardware and reinforcement to undertake clean-up efforts in Bisesero. [FN54]

FN51 Pros. exh. 55-58.

FN52 Pros. exh. 52, 54 and 296.

FN53 Pros. exh. 53. (Letter from Kayishema to all Bourgmestres in Kibuye.)

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2851

FN54 Pros. exh. 296.

310. Some of the most brutal massacres occurred after meetings organized by the Prefectoral authorities and attended by the heads of the Rwandan interim government and/or ordinary citizens of the prefecture to discuss matters of "security." [FN55] During one of these meetings Kayishema was heard requesting reinforcement from the central authorities to deal with the security problem in Bisesero. Witness O testified that on 3 May 1994, Interim Governmental Prime Minister Jean Kambanda visited Kibuye prefecture with a number of other officials, including Ministers of Interior, Information, and Finance, the Prefect of Kibuye, and the General Secretary of MDR party. Witness O attended a meeting with these and other officials in his capacity as an official of Kibuye hospital and voiced his concern regarding seventy-two Tutsi children who survived the massacre at the Complex and were in poor physical condition at Kibuye hospital. Members of the Interahamwe had threatened these children, aged between 8 and 15 years. The Prime Minister did not personally respond to Witness O's concern, but asked the Minister of Information to do so. That minister rebuked Witness O, remarking that he should not protect people who don't want to be protected. He also declared that Witness O obviously did not approve of the politics of the Interim Government, and could not recognize the enemy. The Minister of Information gave the impression that the Interim Government recognized these infirm children as enemies. Later, these children were forcibly taken from the hospital and killed.

FN55 Meetings attended by Prime Minister Kambanda and/or his Ministers included that on 3 May 1994.

311. Sister Farrington testified to having witnessed the discriminatory attitude of various Kibuye authorities towards all Tutsis. During the occurrences Sister Farrington went to Kibuye Prefectoral offices to inquire about obtaining a laissez-passer that would allow some of the nuns from her convent to leave Rwanda. Over a period of three days she spoke with the Sous- prefect, Gashangore as well as Kayishema. Gashangore used hostile language when referring to Tutsis and accused specific people in the Prefecture of being "central to the activities of the Inkontany.'' During another attempt to obtain help, Sister Farrington spoke with Kayishema in his office where he spoke to her in an agitated and aggressive tone. Kayishema told her that there was a war prepared by the Inkotanyi, and the Tutsi people were collaborators of the enemy. As proof he showed her a list of names of people, maps and other documents allegedly preparing Tutsis to become revolutionaries.

Conclusion

312. Considering this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that, in Kibuye Prefecture, the plan of genocide was implemented by the public officials. Persons in positions of authority used hate speech and mobilised their subordinates, such as the gendarmes the communal police, and the militias, who in turn assisted in the mobilisation of the Hutu population to the massacre sites where the killings took place. Tutsis were killed, based on their ethnicity, first in their homes and when they attempted to flee to perceived safe havens they were stopped at roadblocks and some were killed on the spot. Those who arrived at churches and stadiums were attacked and as a result tens of thousands perished.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

313. Having examined the reasons why Tutsis gathered at the four massacre sites, the Trial Chamber now examines the evidence specific to these sites and the role, if any, of the accused Kayishema, and his subordinates, as well as that of Ruzindana in the alleged crimes.

5.3 AN INTRODUCTION: THE MASSACRES AT THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND HOME SAINT-JEAN COMPLEX, STADIUM IN KIBUYE TOWN AND THE CHURCH IN MUBUGA

314. This Chapter addresses the occurences common to the first three massacre sites in the Indictment namely, the Catholic Church and Home Saint-Jean Complex (Complex), located in Kibuye, the Stadium in Kibuye (Stadium), and the Church in Mubuga (Mubuga Church), in Gishyita commune. This introduction does not include the fourth massacre site, Bisesero area, because the masscres in that area followed a slightly different pattern and took place over a much longer period of time than the first three sites. Additionally, under this Indictment, the Bisesro charges include both accused persons where as the first three sites concern Kayishema only. A summary of the witness testimonies for the first three sites paints the following picture.

315. In mid-April 1994, Tutsi seeking refuge from various communes converged on the three sites in order to escape atrocities perpetrated by the Hutus against the Tutsis. Throughout Kibuye Prefecture, Tutsis were being attacked, their houses set ablaze and cattle looted or slaughtered. Historically, community centres such as the Churches and the Stadium were regarded as safe havens where people gathered for protection in times of unrest; this was the case in April 1994. Many witnesses testified that they went to these sites with the belief that the prefectorial authorities would protect them. By the time some Tutsi reached the churches they were overflowing and these people continued on to the Stadium, often under the instruction of the gendarmes and local officials. By all accounts, very large numbers of Tutsis amassed in each of the three sites. Estimates varied from 4,000 to over 5,500 at Mubuga, about 8,000 at the Complex and, 5,000 to 27,000 at the Stadium.

316. At all three sites, gendarmes guarded the entrances or completely surrounded the structure. The gendarmes controlled the congregation, maintaining order or preventing people from leaving. Witnesses testified that Tutsi who attempted to exit were killed by armed Hutu assailants. Conditions inside the massacre sites became desperate, particularly for the weak and wounded. The authorities did not provide food, water or medical aid and, when supplies were offered, the Gendarmes prevented them from reaching the Tutsis.

317. With thousands of internally displaced persons (hereinafter refugees) [FN56] effectively imprisoned at the three sites in Kibuye, five days of almost continuous massacres commenced. First, at Mubuga Church the major killing started on 15 April and continued on 16 April. On 15 and 16 April the Complex suffered preliminary attacks followed by a major slaughter on 17 April. On 18 April, the massacre at the Stadium began with the attackers returning on 19 April to complete the job. Evidence before the Trial Chamber suggests that thousands of Tutsi seeking refuge were killed during these few days.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN56 Because the parties referred to the internally displaced persons as "those seeking refuge" throughout the trial, the Trial Chamber will remain consistent with this usage, noting however, that this use of the term in this context is inaccurate.

318. Testimony reveals striking similarities in the assailants' methods both during the initial gathering of Tutsis and later during the execution of the massacres. Some of those seeking refuge assembled at the three sites had done so owing to encouragement by Hutu officials. Initially, the gendarmes appeared merely to be maintaining order and allowed people to leave the Churches or Stadium to find food or water. Soon thereafter, however, authorities cut off supplies and prevented those seeking refuge from leaving. Those who attempted to leave were either chased back inside the structure or were killed by the armed attackers while the gendarmes watched. At this stage gendarmes and/or the members of the Interahamwe surrounded the Churches and at the Stadium gendarmes guarded the entrances. These conditions of siege soon turned into massive attacks by Gendarmes, communal police, prison wardens, the members of the Interahamwe and other armed civilians. Having surrounded the site, they usually waited for the order from an authority figure to begin the assault. The massacres started with the assailants throwing grenades, tear gas, flaming tires into the structure, or simply shooting into the crowds. Those who tried to escape were killed with traditional weapons. Following these hours of slaughter, the attackers would enter the building or Stadium carrying crude traditional weapons and kill those remaining alive.

319. The above background facts for the most part, are not refuted and the Trial Chamber finds ample evidence to support this general picture of events. The real issue for the Trial Chamber is the role, if any, played by Kayishema and/or those under his command or control, at the three crime sites. The Prosecution alleges that Kayishema was present, participated and led others at all three massacre sites. Kayishema admitted that he visited the sites when Tutsi were congregated but prior to the massacres to assess the situation. Kayishema, however, denies his presence during the days of attack. Indeed, Kayishema's alibi states that he was in hiding during the times of the massacres [FN57] because his life was under threat. He claims to have been hiding from the morning of 16 April through 20 April, coming out on the morning of 20 April.

FN57 It should be noted that the massacre at Mubuga Church began on 15 April and that Kayishema's claim of alibi did not begin to until the morning of 16 April.

320. Evidence shows that others saw Kayishema at the three sites during the period of 14 to 18 April. On 14 April Kayishema stated that he visited Mubuga Church, but only to monitor the situation. Testimony, however, places Kayishema at Mubuga in the morning, of 15 April and at the Complex at 3 p.m. in the afternoon. The evidence suggests that the two churches are approximately 40 kilometres apart by road. Again, on 16 April, Kayishema was seen in the morning at Mubuga during the start of the attack and then at the Complex during the preliminary acts of violence. The following day, 17 April, witnesses testified that Kayishema was present at the Complex and played a pivotal role in the massive slaughter of that day. Lastly, Kayishema is said to have initiated the massacre at the Stadium on 18 April. The Trial Chamber now turns to separately assess the evidence for each of the four massacre sites enumerated in the Indictment.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

5.3.1 THE MASSACRE AT THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND HOME ST. JEAN

Background

321. According to the Indictment, the massacre site at the Home St. Jean Catholic Church Complex (Complex) is located in Kibuye, Gitesi commune, on the peninsula surrounded by Lake Kivu. A road runs perpendicular to the entrance to the Complex. One can see the Catholic Church but not Home Saint Jean from the road. The Complex, according to Expert witness Sjouke Eekma, is accessible by either the road from the roundabout or from the Prefecture. There were several doors to the Catholic Church.

322. During the unrest occurring in the commune soon after the crash of the President's plane, thousands of people sought refuge in places of worship such as the Complex. For instance, witness F testified, that he arrived at the Catholic Church on 15 April and found many other Tutsis who had arrived from other communes such as Mabanza, Rutsiro, Kaivere and Gishiyita as well as Gisenyi Prefecture. Witness B testified that she fled to the Catholic Church "because people like my father who had lived through other unrest as in 1959, when there was an attack against the Tutsi, at that time people took refuge at the (Catholic) Church." [FN58] Witness T corroborates other witnesses' reason for seeking refuge at the Church. She testified that since the 1959 revolutions, whenever people felt insecure, they would go to churches, parishes and would be protected; that is, they would be "respected in these places." [FN59]

FN58 Trans., 17 April 1997, p. 11.

FN59 Trans., 6 May 1997, p. 24.

323. The conditions inside these places of shelter worsened. In the Catholic Church people were crowded. Witness A testified that when a census was made for purposes of food distribution, the number of those seeking refuge was found to be 8,000 people of Tutsi ethnicity. [FN60] The census is corroborated by Witnesses T and F. The Tutsis seeking refuge received no assistance whatsoever from the Prefectural Authorities.

FN60 Trans., 15 Apr. 1997, p. 31.

324. The major attack on the Complex took place on 17 April but prior to that attack, members of the Interahamwe and local officials launched several smaller attacks. Tutsi seeking refuge threw stones and repulsed the smaller attacks. From about 15 April, the gendarmerie nationale surrounded and prevented the Tutsi from leaving

325. Expert witnesses Dr. Haglund, a Forensic Anthropologist, and Dr. Peerwani a Pathologist, testified regarding the victims of the massacre. Both experts examined cadavers of thousands of people and described how they had been killed. Dr. Haglund testified that he had examined the large mass grave near the Catholic Church along with four additional areas that also contained human remains. Dr. Peerwani examined

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

122 cadavers during January and February 1996. Now part of the evidence, identification cards found on the victims indicated that they were all Tutsi.

326. Dr. Haglund's written report confirms that many people, men, women and children were killed at the Complex. Of the 493 dead examined by Dr. Haglund, only found one gunshot injury. He estimated that 36% of people in the grave had died from force trauma whereas 33% of the people died from an undetermined cause. Dr. Haglund selected an individual as an example who he identified as a fifty year old man. The man's fibula had been completely severed by some sharp object, [FN61] which "would have severed the achilles" tendon rendering this individual partially crippled. [FN62] On the neck region "all the soft tissue from the right side of the neck towards the back would have been cut through" [FN63] and "a sharp cut mark in the tibia body, and in the inferior border of the scapular shoulder blade, another trauma caused by a blow of a sharp object." [FN64] Dr. Haglund concluded that the fifty-year old man was trying to protect himself by presenting different body aspects to the armed assailant. Dr. Peerwani found stab wounds indicating the use of sharp force instruments and confirmed that many of the victims were young children and the old.

FN61 Trans., 26 Nov. 1997, p. 29

FN62 Trans., 26 Nov. 1997, p. 30

FN63 Trans., 26 Nov. 1997, p. 32

FN64 Trans., 26 Nov. 1997, p. 33

The Attacks

15, 16 April 1994

327. Several witnesses testified about the minor attacks that occurred on 15 and 16 April. Witnesses T and A testified that an attack on the Complex occurred on 15 April at 3:00 p.m. During that attack, Witnesses A and D saw Kayishema snatching a child from its mother. Witness F testified that local officials participated in an attack on the Complex on 16 April. The gendarmes simply watched, but those seeking refuge repulsed the attack. After this event, witness F saw Kayishema and Mugambira, a prosperous Kibuye businessman, transporting weapons in their vehicles. A military pick-up also assisted in transporting weapons to the nearby Petrol Rwanda fuel station. Witness F saw the accused, Kayishema, hold a meeting with other assailants near the Petrol Rwanda fuel station.

17 April 1994 on Catholic Church

328. On 17 April, between 9 and 10 a.m., a major attack occurred at the Catholic Church, where thousands of Tutsi men, women and children had taken refuge. The attackers arrived from three directions, namely from the roundabout, the Prefecture and Lake Kivu. Witness F, who was standing in front of the Catholic Church, vividly described the various attackers. Witness F and others testified that the attackers were Hutu civilians; Twa civilians; communal police officers; prison guards and local officials such as the Communal Accountant; Rusizera, the Assistant Bourgmestre, Gahima, the Headmaster of the Pentecostal school, Emmanuel Kayihura and Siriaka Bigisimana. Other witnesses identified and corroborated the presence of the local officials. Witness E recognised the conseillers of Gishura Sector and witness C named particular officials such as Conseiller Ndambizimana; Calixte, the Prison Warden; and the Bourgmestre of Gitesi Commune. The attackers carried assorted weapons including machetes, swords, spears, small axes, clubs with nails, the "impuzamugenzi'' and other agricultural tools. They were singing "let us exterminate them". Kayishema arrived with the attackers from the Prefecture Office in a white Toyota vehicle. Witnesses F, C, D, E and A clearly observed Kayishema's arrival. For example, witness F was sufficiently close to the accused to see that he was wearing a pair of white shorts. Witness A, D and F stated that Kayishema was carrying a sword.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2856

329. Witness F saw Kayishema arrive, get out of his vehicle along with the gendarmes, and receive applause as he walked towards the group of attackers. Witnesses F, D and E testified respectively that Kayishema ordered the assailants to "begin working, get down to work" [FN65] "go to work," or "start working."

FN65 Trans., 22 Apr. 1997.

330. They were all positioned so that they could hear Kayishema utter these words. According to witnesses E and F, the phrase "go to work" in the Rwandan context means "to kill Tutsis." At that point, Witnesses E and F testified that after ordering attackers "to go to work," Kayishema climbed up the hill along the path near the Church, addressed the assembled attackers through a megaphone, informed them that he had received orders from Kigali to kill the Tutsis and commanded the gendarmes to shoot. Witness E said that Kayishema then fired three shots.

331. Three witnesses saw Kayishema speak and give orders for the attackers to go to work. Only Witness E, however, claims to have seen Kayishema fire three signal shots. Witness A testified that it was the gendarmes opposite the Church who fired the shots. At that point some attackers began to throw stones at those seeking refuge and the gendarmes opened fire. The gendarmes shot the Tutsis who were in front of the Church. Soon thereafter the gendarmes and other Hutu assailants started to attack Tutsis inside the Church. They fired grenades and tear gas canisters inside the Church through the doors, and proceeded to fire their guns. Witness F who escaped by climbing a tree nearby, stated that "I could see quite clearly the square or the area in front of the Church. I could see him [Kayishema] with my own eyes." [FN66] Witness F saw Kayishema walk to the threshold of the Church and send an attacker to bring a jerrican of petrol. The petrol was poured on tires and the doors of the Church, and then set ablaze. According to witness A, the main door of the Church was burnt down. Witness C saw the attackers throw a tire which was doused with petrol, inside the Church. Many witnesses, including Witness F, testified that people were burnt.

FN66 Ibid., p. 98.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

332. At some point, Kayishema led the attackers who entered the Church and began to kill the survivors. Witness A, who had hidden under dead bodies and had smeared himself with blood, observed that Kayishema entered the Church with a young man and took steps to ensure that there were no survivors. Witness A stated that he could see Kayishema clearly since at that point the only attackers inside the Church were Kayishema and the young man. Witness A saw Kayishema use his sword to cut a person called Rutabana and a baby who was lying on top of witness A. With regard to this scene, witness A stated that he knew that it was a baby on top of him as he could feel the child's legs kicking him about the chest level. [FN67] Kayishema with his sword cut witness A, injuring him near his right clavicle, the right hand and the left elbow. The Trial Chamber was shown the scars of these injuries.

FN67 Trans., 15 April 1997, p. 145.

333. Several witnesses, such as A, B, C, D and E managed to escape. Others, such as B, C, D fled to the Home St. Jean, whilst witness F fled to the Stadium.

17 April 1994 on Home St. Jean

334. The attacks progressed from Catholic Church to the Home St. Jean when assailants descended upon the scene around 1 or 2 p.m., singing the lyrics "let's exterminate them." The assailants threw grenades inside the building and as a result, people suffocated. When the gendarmes broke the lock of the door, the fleeing Tutsis were faced with members of the Interahamwe wielding machetes and spears. Witnesses B and C survived by denouncing their Tutsi ethnicity to the attackers. Attackers allowed them to join a group of 15 to 20 Hutu who were being escorted to safety by the gendarmes and walked away from the Church. On their way, the two and others met Kayishema who asked the accompanying gendarmes "where are you taking these Tutsi?" [FN68] Notwithstanding that members of the group replied that they were all Hutu, Kayishema struck witness B with his machete.

FN68 Trans., 17 Apr. 1997, p.29.

The Victims

335. The attackers left thousands dead and many injured. Witness D estimated the number of those seeking refuge at the Complex prior to the major attack to be around 8,000. Witness A heard the same figure from Leonard Surasi, a man who had estimated the number in order to supply them with food. Witnesses A, B, C, D and F saw substantial numbers of dead bodies after the attack. Witness O, a local Hutu who had recorded this massacre as an entry in his personal diary, testified that he had participated in burying the dead bodies. Witness E testified that one week after the massacre at the Church, he saw prisoners come to collect bodies for burial. They spent five days burying the dead. Witness G, a Hutu, who had assisted in burying the dead, testified that at the Catholic Church, there were bodies along the road from the Prefecture, in front of the main door to the Church, inside the Church, in front of the Father's residence and also inside the Priests' house. He also stated that people assisting in the burial of the Tutsis were being threatened by Ruberanziza and Bisenyamana among other people. [FN69]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN69 Trans., 24 Apr. 1997, p.4.

336. At the Home St. Jean, in particular, Witness T, a person employed at Home St. Jean, testified that she lost nine staff members and their children. Witness G saw around 200 to 300 Tutsi corpses scattered in front, behind, in the cellar, on upper floors and around the Home St. Jean buildings. Further, many of the survivors were injured. Witness F observed about forty injured people, whose ankles had been cut.

Case for the Defence

337. The defence for Kayishema offered a defence of alibi on the dates of the massacre, which appears above in Chapter 5.1 on Alibi. In cross-examination, the Defence challenged witness A's ability to having seen Kayishema when he entered the Church. They further questioned witness A's ability to have found space and time to smear himself with blood. This Chamber finds that although witness A's testimony may have lacked certain details, his testimony regarding Kayishema's presence and participation, on the whole, is credible. Moreover, witness A's description of Kayishema's attire and the weapon he carried conforms to the testimony of other witnesses, such as B, C and D. Further, witness A's identification of Kayishema is strengthened because he knew Kayishema prior to the events. Witness A first saw Kayishema in 1993 at the Kibuye Hospital (a friend pointed out Kayishema saying, "there is the Prefect.'') This Chamber finds reliable witness A's deposition of Kayishema's presence and participation in the attacks of 17 April.

338. Witness B testified regarding the encounter with Kayishema when she and others were being escorted as 'Hutus' by gendarmes. Witness B affirmed that Kayishema wore white shorts and uttered "where are you taking these Tutsi?" [FN70] The gendarmes responded "these are not Tutsi but they are Hutus." [FN71] The Defence in their closing remarks did not deny the scene but claimed that Witness B was involuntarily wounded. The Defence suggested to the witness that the push was intended to put her back in line. The Trial Chamber finds witness B to be a credible witness who identified Kayishema during the attacks and heard him speak. Witness B met Kayishema in 1989 at the Kibuye hospital and thereafter had seen him from time to time. Witness C corroborated witness B's testimony regarding the attack. The Trial Chamber finds no material contradictions in witness B's story.

FN70 Trans., 17 Apr. 1997, p. 93.

FN71 Trans., 17 Apr. 1997, p.97.

339. Regarding witness C, the Trial Chamber notes that she knew Kayishema prior to the events. Witness C stated that she and the accused were from Bwishyura Sector and that she knew him and his father. She testified that she saw Kayishema cut the fingers of witness B with a machete. A list tendered into evidence by witness C shows the names of victims and attackers. The names of Kayishema and other local officials appear amongst the alleged attackers.

340. The defence cross-examined witness D on his ability to hear Kayishema utter the words "go to work." Witness D stated that he heard Kayishema ordering the attackers to "go to work" from a distance of approximately ten to fifteen meters away, while standing between the road which leads to the roundabout and to the Prefecture. The Defence also challenged witness D's account of his hiding in the ceiling of Home St. Jean. Witness D explained that he left the Church at 1 p.m. and stayed in the ceiling in Home St. Jean with five others, until 4 a.m. Witness T corroborates his account although she did not specifically single out witness A as being one of those in the ceiling.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

341. Witness D, identified Kayishema as one of the attackers. He knew Kayishema prior to the events because Kayishema attended meetings at the Home St. Jean in his capacity as the Prefect of Kibuye. Witness D saw Kayishema on 15 April in a white vehicle near the Home St. Jean. His account of Kayishema's arrival and description of the attack is corroborated by many witnesses including A, B, C and F. The Trial Chamber finds that witness D identified Kayishema and finds his account of Kayishema's participation credible.

342. Witness F testified that he was in front of the Church when Kayishema arrived and that there was little distance between him and the attackers. Witness F confirmed seeing Kayishema and stated that he wore "white shorts" and carried a sword. Witness F's account of how Kayishema spoke through a megaphone was corroborated by witness E. Witness F knew Kayishema prior to the events and gave a detailed account of Kayishema's participation during the events of the attack. The Trial Chamber has considered witness F's testimony and finds his account of the events of 17 April is reliable and conforms to that of other witnesses.

343. Witness E testified also that he heard Kayishema use a large megaphone to order attackers "to go to work." [FN72] According to this witness, Kayishema spoke using the megaphone to deliver a message from Kigali to exterminate the Tutsis, and fired gunshots. The Trial Chamber notes that witness E described Kayishema's arrival at the massacre site, identified Kayishema and described his participation. The Trial Chamber finds witness E's testimony regarding the events credible. Additionally, he knew Kayishema as the chief of Kibuye hospital prior to these events. His account of the occurrences was corroborated by other witnesses. However, witness E was the sole eyewitness to testify that Kayishema fired the shot signaling the start of the massacre. Hence there exists some doubt as to whether Kayishema actually fired the shots, that sparked off the attack. This uncertainty is not surprising in light of the circumstances. Given the confusion of multiple shooters and the prevailing terror, this Chamber cannot find that Kayishema fired the shots. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber finds that the shooting began following Kayishema's order. The Trial Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Kayishema ordered and instigated the attack upon the Catholic Church.

FN72 Trans., 16 Apr., p. 156.

Conclusion

344. The Trial Chamber finds that the witnesses' testimonies proved, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Kayishema was present at and participated in the 17 April 1994 massacres at the Complex. Witnesses, such as witness T and witness G, constituted "independent" witnesses, in the sense that they were not survivors as such, because they were not the target of the massacres. Their testimonies corroborated the events as recounted by those who survived the massacre. All the witnesses claimed that they previously knew Kayishema and they identified him at the trial. Moreover, the events occurred in broad daylight. The Hutu attackers killed with impunity as the local officials present not only refrained from preventing the massacre, but encouraged them.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2860

345. The defence failed to controvert the credibility of these witnesses or the reliability of the evidence on fundamental issues, in particular the identification of Kayishema during the attack. Minor discrepancies in testimony between witnesses did not raise a reasonable doubt as to the issue of Kayishema's participation.

Factual Findings

346. With regard to Kayishema's participation in the Complex massacre, the Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of witnesses A, B, C, D, E, F, G and T.

347. Paragraph 25 of the Indictment alleges that by 17 April thousands of unarmed and predominantly Tutsi had gathered at the Complex. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the evidence presented that there were indeed thousands of men, women and children who had sought refuge at the Complex. Further, the Trial Chamber finds that they were unarmed and predominantly Tutsi.

348. Paragraph 26 of the Indictment alleges that some Tutsis went to the Complex because Kayishema ordered them to do so at a time when Kayishema knew that an attack was going to occur. The Prosecution did not prove that the Tutsis were ordered to go to the Complex or that Kayishema ordered them to go there. Most of the witnesses went there on their own volition. Others such as witness B went there because in the past their parents had gone to such places for safety. It was only witness D, who testified that Kayishema ordered him to go to the Church. [FN73] This testimony while credible, does not satisfy this Chamber of the facts alleged in paragraph 26. Consequently, the Trial Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the Tutsi men, women and children went to the Complex on their own volition or because their parents had in the past found refuge in such places.

FN73 Trans., 14 Apr. 1997, p. 12.

349. Paragraph 27 of the Indictment alleges that people under Kayishema's control, surrounded the Complex and prevented people from leaving at a time when Kayishema knew the attack was going to occur. This Chamber finds that the evidence of witnesses A, B, C, E and F shows that after those seeking refuge had gathered in the Complex it was surrounded by people under Kayishema's orders or control, including gendarmes and members of the Interahamwe. Witness D described how attackers in boats surrounded the peninsula on which the Complex is located. Witness B, described how the Complex was surrounded by members of the Interahamwe carrying machetes and spears. Witness C, testified that gendarmes prevented persons from leaving the Complex on 17 April 1994.

350. The Trial Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt that Kayishema knew or must have known that an attack was about to occur. This is because Kayishema stated that he had received orders from Kigali to kill Tutsis, he initiated the attack on 17 April, and he gave orders for the attack to begin. It follows, therefore, that Kayishema had the requisite knowledge. Kayishema was seen at the Complex twice before the attacks of 17 April and knew or must have known from the massive number of armed attackers that, in the circumstances of Kibuye Prefecture at the time, there was potential for a massacre to occur. Indeed, because smaller scale attacks had occurred there on the 15 and 16 April, Kayishema must have been aware of the potential for further attacks. Furthermore, as shown above in paragraph 28 of the Indictment, the Complex massacres followed the massacre at Mubuga Church where Kayishema had played a major role by initiating a systematic pattern of extermination within Kibuye. For these reasons, the Prosecution proved the allegations in paragraph 27.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

351. Paragraph 28 of the Indictment alleges that on 17 April Kayishema went to the Complex, ordered the attackers to commence an attack and participated personally. Witnesses A, B, C, D, E and F testified that, notwithstanding the massive number of people seeking refuge at the Complex, they clearly saw Kayishema. The Trial Chamber finds the identification of Kayishema convincing. In making this finding the Trial Chamber is mindful that all the above- mentioned witnesses had known Kayishema prior to the events and successfully identified Kayishema at trial. In addition, the events occurred in broad daylight. The Trial Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that on 15, 16 and 17 April, Kayishema went to the Complex, and that during the attacks it was not possible to leave the premises as those who attempted to flee were killed.

352. The Trial Chamber also finds, beyond a reasonable doubt that Kayishema participated in and played a leading role during the massacres at the Complex. Kayishema led the attackers from the Prefecture office to the massacre site at the Complex, he instigated and encouraged all the attackers by the message from Kigali to kill the Tutsis, which he delivered through the megaphone. Kayishema also orchestrated the burning of the Church. Further, he cut one Rutabana inside the Church after the major offensive subsided.

353. Paragraph 29 of the Indictment alleges that the Complex attacks left thousands dead or injured. The Trial Chamber finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the single day of the major scale attack, as well as the smaller-scale sporadic attacks upon the Complex, resulted in the death of thousands of Tutsis whilst numerous others suffered injuries. This Chamber bases this finding primarily on the testimony of Dr. Haglund and Dr. Nizam Peerwani, Prosecution expert witnesses. Thus, the Prosecution has proved the facts alleged in paragraph 29.

354. In relation to paragraph 30 of the Indictment: The accusations in this paragraph are addressed in Chapter 6.1 infra.

5.3.2 The Massacre at the Stadium in Kibuye

Background

355. The witnesses presented a horrific account of the Kibuye Stadium massacre that occurred in mid-April 1994. Hutu military, police and the members of the

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Interahamwe conducted a massive, systematic, two-day slaughter of thousands of Tutsi civilians. Four witnesses were survivors of this massacre. Dr. Haglund, who visited the Stadium in September 1995, presented photographic slides. These slides depict a stadium with a field of grass about the size of a football pitch and additional side space for viewing; brick walls about eight foot high surround the Stadium on three sides and Gatwaro Hill flanks the fourth side. Spectator grandstands are located at one end. The road runs parallel to the side of the Stadium, facing Gatwaro Hill.

356. On Monday, 18 April 1994, at approximately 1 or 2 p.m., groups of gendarmes, communal police, prison wardens and members of the Interahamwe came from the direction of the roundabout in Kibuye town, surrounded the Stadium and started to massacre the Tutsi with tear gas, guns and grenades. The first attack of the massacre finished at approximately 6 p.m. The next day, after celebrating in the local bar, attackers returned to kill survivors. The fact that the massacre at the Stadium occurred does not appear to be in dispute; Kayishema himself testified that a major attack at the Stadium took place on 18 April 1994 [FN74] and witness DO estimated that about 4,000 of those seeking refuge were killed at the Stadium. Witness G, a local Hutu, who helped to bury bodies found in and near the Stadium, stated that dead bodies covered the entire ground of the Stadium and that bodies were buried using machinery over five days. Therefore, the issues for the Trial Chamber to consider here are whether Kayishema was present at the Stadium on 18 April 1994 and, if so, what was his role if any, and the role of anyone acting under Kayishema's orders or control.

FN74 Trans., 10 Sept 1998, p. 24.

The Role of Kayishema and His Subordinates

357. The Trial Chamber now assesses the evidence in relation to Kayishema's role at the Stadium massacre. In short, witnesses testified that Kayishema arrived in a white vehicle at the head of a column of attackers, ordered them to begin the killing and gave the signal by shooting a gun into a crowd of persons. The identification of Kayishema at the Stadium is strengthened by the witnesses' knowledge of the accused prior to the events in 1994. Witness I had known Kayishema since the accused was a child and had been the neighbour of Kayishema's parents. Indeed, Kayishema himself testified that witness I was a friend of his family. Witness K had known Kayishema before he was a Prefect and had seen him many times when he went for medical treatment. Witness M claimed to have known Kayishema all his life, but admitted that the accused did not know him well. Witness L had not known Kayishema before and testified that he only knew it was Kayishema at the Stadium because others had informed him so. With some variation in detail, witnesses I, K, L and M gave a similar account, both of the events and of Kayishema's role in particular. The testimony of witness I, the most lucid and complete is discussed thoroughly below, followed by the testimony of witnesses K, L, M, F, and NN.

Witnesses

Witness I

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

358. Witness I is an elderly carpenter. In mid-April, sometime between 15 and 20 April 1994, witness I and seventeen other family members left their home in search of refuge and protection from massacres occurring throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye. Witness I testified that his Conseiller had told him to go to the Stadium where Tutsi would be safe. He explained that they arrived at the Stadium and stayed there for three or four days. When he arrived at the stadium no one was guarding the entrances but soon thereafter gendarmes started to control who could exit and, confiscated weapons from those who entered. Witness I testified that those attempting to leave were killed by members of the Interahamwe and, that he saw this happen. In the Stadium there was no firewood, the water had been cut off, and the Tutsi seeking refuge ate raw meat from cows. Sick and wounded were amongst them and those who attempted to seek help from the local hospital just yards from the Stadium were beaten back or killed. Those seeking refuge barely had room to sit down and there was no protection from sun or rain. The authorities provided no assistance. Soon after arrival the Tutsi heard from others about the massacres at Mubuga Church and Home St. John.

359. Witness I testified, describing his feelings, "For me I thought that no one would be able to kill off 15,000 people, and I thought that any authority who would represent so many people would not dare to kill them off, because these people worked for those persons in authority. They paid taxes and they provide assistance and they repair roads. ... So I told myself that no one was going to be able to use firearms or machetes to kill us off. I said that no person in authority would be able to do such a thing." [FN75]

FN75 Trans., 28 April 1997, p. 49.

360. Witness I testified that at about 2 p.m. on 18 April armed civilians, soldiers, former soldiers and prison wardens armed with guns, clubs and machetes came from the direction of the roundabout in Kibuye. They divided into groups and surrounded the Stadium, taking position on the hills. From his viewpoint in the spectator grandstands witness I testified that he clearly observed Kayishema standing by the main entrance, near a house owned by the MRND. From this location, Kayishema could see into the Stadium. Witness I saw Kayishema ask for a gun, shoot it toward the masses inside the Stadium as if to signal the attack to commence, and then give the gun back to the gendarme. Kayishema's two shots struck two people. At that point the massacre began. The attackers threw tear gas and grenades and fired guns into the Stadium. Witness I described the scene, "some were dead already, others were wounded in a way that they could no longer lift themselves from the ground. There were children who were crying because of the blows they had received. Others were bleeding or looking for water." The massacre stopped at approximately 6:00 or 6.30 p.m. After the attack ceased, witness I heard the attackers gathered in the bar next to the Stadium, drinking and dancing. On that first day witness I did not see attackers enter the Stadium. Those who tried to flee were killed with sharpened bamboo sticks. Witness I discovered that his two wives and fifteen children who accompanied him to the stadium had been killed on that day. During the night of 18 April he managed to escape and fled towards Karongi.

361. The Defence asserted that witness I did not mention to investigators in an interview prior to his testimony that he had seen two people killed by Kayishema's opening shots. Witness I admitted that, although he had seen two people hit by Kayishema's shots, he did not know whether the victims had died. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence that Kayishema's shots struck two persons seeking refuge in the Stadium, an assertion that is corroborated by witness M.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Witnesses K, L, and M

362. Witnesses K, L and M are also Tutsis who had sought refuge inside the Stadium and survived the massacre of 18 April. Their testimony regarding the appalling conditions within the Stadium and the gendarmes preventing egress conforms to the evidence of witness I. In addition, the witnesses testified to an incident that occurred on the morning of 18 April; a white man started to count the people in the Stadium in order to bring aid but left when Kayishema, who arrived at the Stadium with gendarmes, threatened the same white man if he helped them. All three witnesses testified that they did not understand the conversation between the white man and Kayishema in French, but that others translated the gist of it from French to Kinyarwanda.

363. Like witness I, witnesses K, L and M testified that on 18 April at around 1 or 2 p.m., Kayishema came from the direction of the Kibuye roundabout accompanied by the members of the Interahamwe, gendarmes, communal police and prison wardens. The witnesses saw Kayishema walk to a position just outside the main gate, in front of the MRND building, and order the massacre to commence. Witnesses K and L added further that Kayishema was armed with a sword and that the attackers were singing a song in Kinyarwanda with the lyrics, "exterminate them, exterminate them." These witnesses also testified that the attackers surrounded the Stadium, used tear gas, grenades and guns to kill those inside the Stadium, but did not enter.

364. Witness M gave nearly the same account as witness I with regard to Kayishema firing gunshots into the Stadium. M testified that Kayishema had taken a gun from a gendarme, fired it into the Stadium twice, hitting two people, and then fired once into the air, at which point the massacre started. Witnesses K and L, however, testified that they did not see Kayishema fire into the Stadium but heard him order the gendarmes to "fire on these Tutsi dogs." This difference in testimony is understandable considering that witnesses I and M were observing events from half way up the grandstands whereas witnesses K and L were positioned just inside the Stadium close to the main entrance. When considered together, the witness testimony shows that Kayishema first ordered the gendarmes to fire on the Tutsis and then grabbed a gun and personally fired twice into the Stadium, apparently to lead and set an example to start the massacre. It is reasonable that witnesses K and L did not see Kayishema shoot because, having heard Kayishema's orders to fire, they already were fleeing. Indeed, witness K testified that when he heard Kayishema give the order to shoot he immediately ran further back into the Stadium; witness L testified that when he heard Kayishema's order he ran to find his family and did not see Kayishema again. Witnesses K, L and M testified that the massacre continued until 6 or 6.30 p.m. Witness O, a Hutu doctor, testified that he heard the massacre start with firing and grenades at around 3 p.m. and continue until dark.

365. There is less evidence relating to the massacres on the morning of 19 April. Witness K testified that at 6 a.m. he and others left the Stadium and fled up Gatwaro Hill when he saw the attackers returning to where they appeared to return in order to finish off any survivors with traditional weapons. As he fled, witness K saw the attackers going into the Stadium and heard shouts and screams. Their testimony did not place Kayishema at the Stadium on 19 April.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Witnesses F and NN

366. Witnesses F and NN observed events from hiding places outside the Stadium. The testimony of these witnesses conforms generally to that offered by witnesses I, K, L and M but also differs in some respects. Witness F testified that he survived the massacre at Catholic Church Home St. John and during the night of 17 April fled to Gatwaro Hill, from where he had a good view of the Stadium. He observed the events at the Stadium 18 April and Kayishema's participation, including the opening gunshots. Witness F, however, testified that Kayishema arrived with the attackers between 9.30 and 10 a.m. and estimated that they were there for approximately two hours before the massacre started. Contradicting the other witnesses, witness F testified that killers entered the Stadium on 18 April and began cutting up the Tutsis. The apparent confusion in witness F's account may be explained by the circumstances and the mental state in which he observed the events; responding to a question of what he did when the massacre started, witness F stated "I was astonished. I completely lost my head. I cannot even tell you what I witnessed as regards the massacres and this was because a lot of my family were inside the Stadium and they were being massacred." [FN76]

FN76 Trans., 22 April 1997 p. 133.

367. Witness NN testified that on 18 April he was hiding between two buildings about 40 metres from where Kayishema stopped by the Stadium's main entrance. Witness NN testified that, before shooting into the Stadium, Kayishema murdered a Tutsi child and its mother. He stated that Kayishema then took the child from its mother, held it upside down by one leg, extended the other leg to a soldier and sliced it vertically with a sword. According to NN, Kayishema shot the child's mother as she ran to the Stadium entrance. The Trial Chamber notes that NN observed the events from a different position, which could explain his divergent account. Furthermore, evidence suggests that Kayishema was surrounded by gendarme and members of the Interahamwe when he arrived at the main entrance and, therefore, the view of the other witnesses could have been obstructed at the time when Kayishema allegedly killed the child. However, the Stadium witnesses all testified that they had a clear view of Kayishema when he arrived and, that being so, it seems unlikely that they would omit an incident of such horror from their testimony. Furthermore, if Kayishema had first shot the child's mother before he moved to the main entrance from where he shot twice into the Stadium, the other witnesses likely would have observed this. According to their evidence, they did not. For all the above reasons, the Trial Chamber does not rely on the evidence proffered by witnesses F and NN pertaining to the Stadium massacre on 18 April 1994.

The Defence Case

368. In his defence, Kayishema testified that he was in hiding and did not go to the Stadium at the time of the massacres. However, Kayishema testified that he did visit the people seeking refuge at the Stadium sometime after 13 April but before they were killed; "Yes I went to the place but my CV is clear. I'm quite used to this sort of plague. When there are so many people I know how to gather them together, how to seek solution to the problems, how to subdivide them according to their needs. ...'' In other words, Kayishema testified that he went to the Stadium in order to assess the situation. This, however, squarely contradicts his statement to Prosecution investigators. When asked by investigators if he ever went to the Stadium, Home St. John or Mubuga Church from 7 April 1994 until the end of the war, Kayishema gave a categorical "no". When questioned about this apparent contradiction during cross-examination Kayishema testified that he thought the investigator was asking him whether he had visited the sites everyday and therefore he answered in the negative. [FN77] With regard to gendarmes guarding the gates of the Stadium and controlling the movement of people in and out, Kayishema testified that this was "true and normal."

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN77 See Prosecution exhibit 350c(b).

369. The Defence raised further issues of detail. The Defence questioned why the huge number of Tutsis did not escape before the 18 April by overpowering the four or so gendarmes who were guarding the entrances. The witnesses were consistent in their responses, stating that the gendarmes were armed but those seeking refuge were powerless, therefore, those who tried to leave would have been killed. This fear seems reasonable particularly in light of the evidence that Tutsis had initially sought refuge in the Stadium as a means of escaping atrocities occurring throughout Kibuye Prefecture and that Tutsis had been killed when they attempted to leave.

370. The Defence further asserts that there is no direct evidence that Kayishema ordered the water supply in the Stadium to be turned off as suggested by some Prosecution witnesses. The Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence; although it is clear that the taps in the Stadium did not supply water, there is no direct evidence that Kayishema was responsible.

Factual Findings

371. With regard to Kayishema's participation in the Stadium massacre, the Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of witnesses I, K, L and M. In cross- examination all four witnesses remained fundamentally faithful to the evidence proffered in chief.

372. Paragraph 32 of the Indictment alleges that by April 18 thousands of unarmed and predominantly Tutsis had gathered in the Stadium. The Defence pointed out that Prosecution witnesses did not give a consistent figure with regard to the number of Tutsi whom had gathered in the Stadium. Witness estimates varied from 5,000 to 27,000. The Trial Chamber does not consider this variation fatal to the reliability of the witness evidence. Mindful that the Indictment merely states "thousands of men, women and children had sought refuge in the Stadium located in Kibuye town," the Trial Chamber is satisfied from the evidence that there were indeed thousands of men, women and children who had sought refuge at the Stadium. Further, the Trial Chamber finds that those seeking refuge were predominately Tutsi and, with the exception of a small number of machetes with which they slaughtered cows for food, they were unarmed.

373. Paragraph 33 of the Indictment alleges some refugees went to the Stadium because Kayishema ordered them to do at a time when Kayishema knew that an attack was going to occur. The Prosecution failed to prove this allegation. In fact, almost all witnesses testified to the contrary.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

374. Paragraph 34 of the Indictment alleges that people under Kayishema's control, surrounded the Stadium and prevented people from leaving at a time when Kayishema knew the attack was going to occur. The evidence of Prosecution witnesses I, K, L and M, discussed above, is sufficient to show that after those seeking refuge had gathered in the Stadium, it was surrounded by people under Kayishema's control, including gendarmes. Witnesses I, K, L, M and O, testified that gendarmes prevented persons from leaving the Stadium from about 16 April 1994. Kayishema himself accepted that gendarmes were controlling the movement of people in and out of the Stadium. Furthermore, the Stadium massacre followed the massacres at Mubuga Church and Catholic Church, Home St. John. Indeed, a systematic pattern of extermination existed which is a clear demonstration of the specific intent to destroy Tutsis within Kibuye Prefecture in whole or in part. The evidence shows that Kayishema played a major role within this system. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that at the time when the Tutsi were prevented from leaving, Kayishema knew or had reason to know that an attack on the Stadium was going to occur.

375. Paragraph 35 of the Indictment alleges that on April 18 Kayishema went to the Stadium, initiated, ordered, and participated in the attack. It further alleges that during the night of April 18, attackers killed Tutsis if they tried to leave. Witnesses I, K, L and M notwithstanding the mass people, testified that they clearly saw and (in relation to K and L) heard Kayishema. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Kayishema's identification and participation convincing. In a scenario, such as the Stadium, it is not surprising that those inside would strain to see and hear what was happening outside when a group of attackers arrived en masse at the main gate. The photographic exhibits indicate that witnesses I and M, positioned on the spectator stands, would be able to see over the Stadium wall to the main entrance. Witnesses K and L, positioned just inside the Stadium close to the main entrance, explained how, despite many people being between them and Kayishema, they wanted to see who had arrived and succeeded in doing so. All of the identification occurred in broad daylight. In making this finding the Trial Chamber is mindful that witnesses I, K and M had known Kayishema prior to the events and successfully identified Kayishema at the trial. Witness L, however, had not known Kayishema prior to the Stadium massacre, but others informed him that it was Prefect Kayishema at the time of the events. Therefore, the Trial Chamber must treat the identification of Kayishema by witness L with extra vigilance. The account of witness L is so similar to the other Prosecution witnesses, particularly K, such that the Trial Chamber accepts that his testimony related to the same man. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber considers that the testimony of L further corroborates the evidence of witnesses I, K, and M with regard to Kayishema's participation in the Stadium massacre.

376. The Trial Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that on 18 April 1994 Kayishema went to the Stadium and ordered members of the Gendarmerie Nationale, communal police and members of the Interahamwe to attack the Stadium. Further, Kayishema initiated the attack by firing a gun into the Tutsi who had assembled in the Stadium and his shots struck two of them. The evidence indicates that the attackers tear gas, guns and grenades were used on 18 April and that the massacre continued on 19 April. However, the evidence relating to the 19 April is not sufficient to show which assailants were attacking the Stadium, or to prove Kayishema's presence. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that during the attacks some of the Tutsis who attempted to flee were killed.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

377. There is conflicting evidence pertaining to whether the Tutsis were prevented from leaving the Stadium during the night of April 18 and the morning of April 19. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved their case on this issue.

378. Paragraph 36 of the Indictment alleges that the Stadium attacks left thousands dead or injured. The Trial Chamber is convinced by the evidence that the two days of attacks on the Stadium resulted in thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to Tutsi men, women and children. Predominantly Hutu assailants perpetrated these acts.

379. In relation to paragraph 37 of the Indictment: The accusations in this paragraph are dealt with below in Part VI.

5.3.3 THE MASSACRES AT THE CHURCH IN MUBUGA

Background

380. The Church in Mubuga, like other places of worship in Rwanda, was regarded historically as a safe haven in times of unrest. This was also the case in 1994. The Prosecution alleges that by about 14 April 1994 thousands of unarmed men, women and children, most of whom were Tutsi, had gathered at the Church in Mubuga to escape on-going and widespread violent attacks throughout Kibuye Prefecture. The Prosecution alleges that on 14 April the authorities of the Prefecture, including Kayishema and Bourgmestre Sikubwabo, came with gendarmes to the Church located in Gishyita Commune. According to one eyewitness, [FN78] Sikubwabo stated that he was going to exterminate the Tutsis. Over the next few days, attackers killed thousands of people. Only a handful of those who had sought refuge in the Church would survive this massacre, just one of many in Kibuye Prefecture.

FN78 Trans., 3 Mar. 1998, p. 28.

381. The allegation that this appalling event occurred at Mubuga Church is not in dispute. In fact, an assortment of witnesses, including various eyewitnesses, Sister Julie Ann Farrington, Defence witness DP, and Kayishema, confirmed that after the massacre, corpses and/or human remains were found inside and/or in the immediate vicinity of Mubuga Church. Witnesses who visited this site shortly after the massacre remarked that the decomposing bodies caused a strong stench in the area. In addition, Dr. Haglund, testified that he went to the Church grounds on 20 September 1995 to investigate two alleged graves sites there. He deposed that one grave had been exhumed previously and the bodies had been reburied nearby. In the second area he found a depression in the ground and there were indications that this area had been disturbed. Upon an attempt to probe the second mass grave he found that the ground was too hard and therefore he did not conduct further investigations there. Due to uncontested evidence showing a massacre near the Church in Mubuga, the questions that remain relate to the presence and the participation of Kayishema and those under his control in this massacre. [FN79] The Trial Chamber examines the role Kayishema and his subordinates played at this massacre site, in detail, below,

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN79 The Prosecutor presented witnesses who testified that Ruzindana was present and participated in the massacre at Mubuga Church. The Trial Chamber will not consider this evidence because the Indictment in question charges Clement Kayishema alone with crimes at this site.

Prosecution Case

382. Five Prosecution eyewitnesses, V, W, OO, PP and UU appeared before the Trial Chamber to recount the events of prior to and during the massacre in mid- April 1994 at Mubuga Church. [FN80] With slight variations, these five eyewitnesses recounted the events in the following manner. While thousands of Tutsis congregated at this site, between 9 and 14 April 1994, witnesses heard that the Prefect had met with the Hutu priest and that the distribution of food to those seeking refuge was forbidden. The same Hutu priest, who had replaced the Tutsi priest at Mubuga Church, refused water to those seeking refuge, and told them to "die, because your time has come." [FN81]

FN80 Witness OO deposed that the massacres continued on 17 April 1994. There will be an examination of this potential discrepancy in the Analysis and Findings Chapter on the massacres at Mubuga Church below.

FN81 Trans., 20 Nov. 1997, p. 16.

383. Paragraph 40 of the Indictment alleges that "[a]fter the men, women and children began to congregate in the Church, Clement Kayishema visited the Church on several occasions" and that on or about 10 April he brought gendarmes to this location who prevented those seeking refuge in the Church from leaving. All prosecution witnesses deposed that gendarmes had gathered on the Church grounds and patrolled the Church complex to ensure that those who had sought shelter there would not leave. Witness V stated that gendarmes accompanied Kayishema before and during the attacks and witness PP stated that he saw gendarmes near the Church on 13 April. Witness UU stated that on the 15 April Kayishema arrived with "soldiers." The other three eyewitnesses stated that gendarmes were present throughout the congregation of those seeking refuge and during the massacres. For example, witness V stated that the gendarmes arrived on either the 9 or 10 April.

384. Witnesses V, OO and PP all confirmed the allegation that, prior to the attacks, the Tutsis could not leave the Church due to a fear of the gendarmes and other armed individuals patrolling the Church complex. According to one witness, this fear was founded upon the murder of individuals who had attempted to leave the Church building, to find food.

385. Paragraph 41 of the Indictment asserts that individuals under Kayishema's control "directed members of the Gendarme [sic] Nationale, communal police of Gishyita commune, members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians to attack the Church," and that these individuals directly participated in the events. What follows is how the events unfolded as recounted by Prosecution eyewitnesses before the Trial Chamber.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

15 April 1994

386. A number of Prosecution eyewitnesses stated that after the Tutsis began to gather, the Church doors were kept locked from the inside in order to prevent the assailants, who previously had attempted to attack, from entering the Church. Therefore, on the morning of 15 April, the assailants began the attack by throwing tear gas grenades into the Church and shooting through the windows. Witnesses V, W and UU placed Kayishema and the local authorities at the Church on this day. According to witnesses OO and W, Bourgmestre Sikubwabo and Conseillers Mika Muhimana and Vincent Rutaganera led the attack. Witness V stated that he saw Kayishema arrive at the Church in the company of gendarmes on 15 April, while UU stated that he saw Kayishema in the company of "soldiers" on this day. Witness V was the only witness that claimed that Kayishema had a gun and opened fire.

387. According to UU, on this day, Kayishema came to the Church and went to the home of the Hutu priest behind the Church. Witness OO confirmed the cooperation of the priest with Kayishema when he deposed that the priest instructed him to conduct a head count of the Tutsis in the Church for the Prefect. In addition, the Prosecution eyewitnesses confirmed the presence and/or participation of the communal police and civilians, such as local businessman Rundikayo, on this date. Witnesses indicated that although some people died from the effects of the tear gas, the number of Tutsis killed was relatively low on this day. By all accounts, the attackers left the Church in the afternoon of 15 April.

16 April 1994

388. On the morning of 16 April 1994 the Church doors were finally forced opened and the assailants entered the Church. Witness PP recalled that "we were hoping to be killed by bullets and not by machetes." [FN82] The attackers again used tear gas grenades, along with other traditional weapons and, during the ensuing panic some Tutsis were trampled to death.

FN82 Trans., 3 Mar. 1998, p. 30.

389. Witness OO testified that, on the morning of 16 April, Kayishema came with soldiers of the National Army. Witness W was the other eyewitness who placed Kayishema at the Church on this date. It was claimed that in addition to Kayishema, local authorities such as Bourgmestre Sikubwabo and various conseillers were present at the Church on this date. Soldiers threw grenades and other armed attackers shot at and hacked with machetes the Tutsis inside the Church. After most people in the Church had been killed, witness OO, who hid under the corpses of fallen Tutsis, stated that he heard the Prefect telling the local authorities "to come and collect the Caterpillar [bulldozer] to bury the dead." [FN83]

FN83 Trans., p. 39, 20 Nov. 1997. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness claimed this conversation took place after the massacres, on 17 April, a date that was not corroborated by other witnesses.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The Defence Case

390. The Defence conceded that Kayishema came to Mubuga Church on 14 April, but that he did so only to monitor the situation. In fact, during closing arguments, the Defence reminded the Trial Chamber that his visit to the Church is recorded in Kayishema's diary. [FN84] This was an obvious mistake as nothing is recorded in the said diary under this date.

FN84 Def. exh. 58.

391. The Defence also attempted to impeach Prosecution witnesses by stressing that some contradicted themselves, or each other, with regard to the exact hour of the commencement of the attacks or the varying dates of the end of the attacks. For example, the Chamber was asked to recall that witness OO deposed that the attacks did not end until 17 April while others claimed that the massacre, at this site, ended on 16 April. According to Kayishema's Defence Counsel the idea that "a witness can only identify Clement Kayishema if he knew him before" is incorrect. [FN85] In cross-examination issues of visibility were raised which will be analysed below.

FN85 Trans., 4 Nov. 1998, p. 148.

Factual Findings

392. The allegations in paragraph 39 of the Indictment, that by about 14 April 1994 thousands of Tutsis congregated in Mubuga Church and that they were taking refuge from attacks which had occurred throughout Kibuye, are not in dispute. In addition all five Prosecution witnesses and at least one Defence witness confirmed that many Tutsis had come to the Church for protection. The witnesses gave slightly differing numbers about the persons that were gathered at the Church. Witness V estimated that about 4,000 people, mostly women and children had assembled there by 12 April, while witness W remarked that the number of persons taking shelter at this location was between 4,000 to 5,000 by the time of the attacks. Witness OO stated that 5,565 were present at the Church according to a head count he conducted on the instructions of the Hutu priest, who had told OO that this information was needed by the Prefect for humanitarian purposes. The Trial Chamber accepts that between 4,000 to 5,000 persons had taken refuge at Mubuga Church.

393. Paragraph 40 of the Indictment charges Kayishema with having visited the Church on several occasions before the attacks and having brought gendarmes to this location on or about 10 April. The gendarmes allegedly prevented the Tutsis within the Church from leaving. As discussed above, all Prosecution eyewitnesses affirmed having seen gendarmes at the Church while they were assembling there and during the attacks. With regard to Kayishema having brought the gendarmes two witnesses testified that prior to the attack they saw him at the Church either arriving with or in the company of gendarmes. Therefore, we find that whether these gendarmes came to this location with Kayishema or arrived without him is irrelevant as Kayishema knew or should have known of their activities, especially given the state of security in his Prefecture. The issue is the presence of the gendarmes and not whether they were physically transported to the crime site by Kayishema.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

394. Whether the gendarmes prevented the Tutsis from leaving the Church is the second question raised in paragraph 40 of the Indictment. The Defence contended that the gendarmes were present for the protection of the Tutsis. The Prosecution witnesses painted another picture. They stated that while the gendarmes were present before the attacks, armed assailants, including the members of the Interahamwe, surrounded the Church and attacked Tutsis attempting to exit, with impunity. Witnesses W and OO both affirmed that Tutsis who initially attempted to leave the Church for food or water were either chased back into the building or beaten to death by the armed assailants outside the Church. Witness OO stated that those seeking refuge could not even leave the Church to use the toilet. One Prosecution eyewitness testified that approximately, twelve to fifteen gendarmes were present at the Church. If this number was accurate, coupled with the fact that gendarmes are usually armed, then it would be conceivable that the gendarmes could engage in the prevention of the departure of the Tutsi seeking refuge from this site. Moreover, during the attacks, the gendarmes were seen throwing grenades and shooting into the crowds of the unarmed civilians inside the Church. All these facts leave no doubt that the gendarmes were involved in the virtual imprisonment and later the massacre of the Tutsis in Mubuga Church until the attacks began inside the Church on the morning of 15 April.

395. Paragraph 41 of the Indictment, surprisingly, does not charge Kayishema with having been present during the attacks. It states "on or about 14 April 1994 individuals, including individuals under Clement Kayishema's control, directed members of the Gendarme [sic] Nationale, communal police of Gishyita commune, members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians to attack the Church." The Indictment goes on to allege that the attacks continued for several days as not all the persons within the Church could be killed at one time. As aforementioned, all five Prosecution eyewitnesses to the events at Mubuga Church were there on the 14 and 15 April. Two witnesses deposed that they had been there on the 16 April and only one on 17 April 1994. These witnesses stated that they closed the doors to the Church to avoid being attacked by assailants. The Trial Chamber finds that, with regard to the date, there were no material contradictions in the oral testimonies of these five witnesses, as claimed by the Defence. The Trial Chamber further finds that the attackers, who surrounded the Church, began their attempts to kill the Tutsis before 15 April, but that the dates on which the massacres were carried out inside the Church were in fact 15 and 16 April in the presence, and at the direction of, local authorities.

396. Because a number of eyewitnesses placed Kayishema at Mubuga Church during the attacks, at this juncture, it is appropriate to consider the identification of the accused at this location before and during the attacks. Preliminarily, we are cognizant of the fact that the events took place during the daytime, which renders visibility less problematic. Secondly, we note that because those seeking refuge were awaiting attacks, they must have been constantly seeking to know about the goings-on around the Church and were therefore, as mentioned by some witnesses, such as W, looking outside through the windows and doors.

397. Having observed the demeanor of the witnesses and listened closely to their oral testimony the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the eyewitnesses were credible and did not attempt to invent facts. This credibility was helpful in determining the reliability of the identification of the accused at the massacre site. Mubuga

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Church has three doors and several windows [FN86] and according to the eyewitnesses' accounts, the assailants, including Kayishema and his subordinates came close to the Church building at some point during the time in question. During cross-examination, some concerns of obstructed visibility were raised also in the case of OO, because he had placed Kayishema at the site by stating that while he (witness OO) was lying under the corpses of slaughtered Tutsis, he heard Kayishema speaking with other local authorities. The question then becomes one of voice recognition and not of visibility, as the Defence contend. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witnesses' prior familiarity with the accused - he had seen the Prefect at the installation of Sikubwabo as Bourgmestre and at local rallies - and having heard his voice at other meetings prior to the massacres would enable OO to recognise Kayishema's voice and render the identification of the accused a trustworthy one.

FN86 Pros. ex's. 37, 39 and 40.

398. The Defence contested the identification of the accused by witness W by pointing to the unfavorable visibility conditions caused by the tear gas released into the Church. Since there is both oral and pictorial [FN87] evidence of grenades having been used the Trial Chamber notes that this factor could have made for poor visibility. However, Mubuga Church covers a sizeable amount of space, capable of holding 4,000 to 5,000 persons. Witness W stated that he was not near the part of the Church where the grenade landed and was therefore able to view the persons outside. At any rate, it remains unclear whether the witness saw Kayishema prior to the launching of the tear gas grenade or after. Therefore, the Trial Chamber accepts the testimony of witness W. [FN88]

FN87 Pros. exh. 47.

FN88 It should be noted that witness W deposed that he had known Kayishema well before the attacks.

399. Questions were also raised by the Defence regarding the reliability of witness UU's identification of the accused. UU testified that he was near the main entrance of Mubuga Church when Kayishema arrived in his vehicle. During cross-examination, however, he stated that he did not recognise Kayishema until he heard other people remark that the Prefect had arrived. The Trial Chamber observes that witness UU had met Kayishema on one occasion prior to April 1994, at Kayishema's grandfather's home, but may not have recognised him immediately upon his arrival at Mubuga Church on 15 April. However, the witness stated that after the declaration by others he did recall knowing Kayishema. The Trial Chamber finds this, in fact, to be the case.

400. Each one of these eyewitnesses, with the exception of PP, placed Kayishema at the site on at least one day either shortly before or during the attacks of 15 and 16 April. Witness PP's hearsay evidence also corroborated the accounts of other eyewitnesses. Additionally all eyewitnesses presented by the Prosecution for this site affirmed having seen at least one or more of the following outside the Church during the time in question: local authorities such as Bourgmestre Sikubwabo, Conseillers Muhimana and Rutagenera, Minister of Information Niyitegeka as well as gendarmes, members of the Interahamwe, communal police and other armed civilians.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

It is interesting to note that the Defence only contested the presence of local authorities during the cross- examination of Kayishema and not before. [FN89]

FN89 When asked by Ms. Thornton about whom lead the massacres in Kibuye Prefecture, Kayishema stated that none of the local authorities had taken part and that trials were conducted after he fled the country, in July 1994, to find the culprits.

401. Paragraph 42 of the Indictment maintains that as a result of the attacks thousands of deaths and numerous injuries to men, women and children perished and numerous others sustained injuries.

402. The Trial Chamber has made a finding with regard to the number of the Tutsis present at the Church. Therefore, in light of the testimony that most of the persons assembled at the Church were slaughtered, the Trial Chamber deems it unnecessary to focus on exact numbers. Suffices to say we find that thousands of persons were massacred at this site and therefore the Prosecution has met its burden beyond a reasonable doubt with regard to this allegation.

403. Paragraph 43 of the Indictment asserts the Kayishema did not attempt to prevent this massacre and failed to punish those responsible. This allegation is addressed in Chapter 6.1.

Conclusion

404. It is clear from the evidence presented to the Trial Chamber that of the thousands of Tutsis gathered at Mubuga Church, only a few survived this weekend massacre. The Trial Chamber is satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Kayishema and his subordinates, including local authorities, the gendarmes, the communal police and the members of the Interahamwe were present and participated at the attacks at Mubuga Church between 14 and 16 April. As aforementioned, Kayishema, is not charged with having been present during the attacks under paragraph 41 of the Indictment. In light of the testimony of the five witnesses the Chamber nevertheless finds that Kayishema was present during the actual attacks. We further find that his presence and the presence and the participation of other local authorities, encouraged the killings of the Tutsis who had assembled to seek refuge there.

5.4 THE MASSACRES IN THE AREA OF BISESERO

5.4.1 Introduction

405. The evidence before the Trial Chamber presents a picture of a massive, horrific assault on the Tutsis gathered in the Bisesero area by extremist Hutu military, communal police, members of the Interahamwe and armed civilians. These attacks continued throughout April, May and June 1994. The Bisesero area was home and area of refuge to many Tutsis during the genocide. Many Tutsis from other regions, hid in caves, scattered through woods and bushes, or gathered on the high hills in the area. Some Tutsis congregated in Bisesero because they had heard that they would be protected. This was not the case. Relentlessly, they were pursued by Hutus bent on genocide, who shot or hacked all the Tutsis they found.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

406. The most severe attacks occurred in the Bisesero area on 13 and 14 May 1994, after an apparent two-week lull in the attacks. Some evidence asserted that this two-week pause in the attacks resulted from a resistance by the Tutsis assembled in Bisesero and attackers used this pause to regroup. Witness G attended a meeting, held on 3 May by Prime Minister Jean Kambanda at Kayishema's offices, in which Kayishema reported there was serious insecurity caused by those gathered in Bisesero and requested reinforcement to resolve the problem. [FN90] Soon after in mid May, the assailants again pursued those seeking refuge from place to place. At times, Hutu operations were conducted on a huge, organised scale with hundreds of assailants transported in buses to areas where Tutsi civilians had gathered. At other times, minor military or Interahamwe patrols throughout the region attacked Tutsis whenever they were found. The ultimate aim of these assaults appeared to be the complete annihilation of the entire Tutsi population. In pursuit of this objective, attackers killed thousands of Tutsi civilians.

FN90 Witness G also testified that in the ensuing days he saw the members of the Interahamwe from Gisenyi Prefecture, armed with guns, going toward Bisesero.

General Allegations

407. Paragraph 45 of the Indictment alleges, that the Bisesero area spans two communes, Gishyita and Gisovu, in Kibuye Prefecture. The Prosecution alleges that from about 9 April until 30 June 1994, thousands of men, women and children sought refuge in the area of Bisesero. Most were Tutsis seeking refuge from attacks that had occurred throughout the Prefecture of Kibuye.

408. Bisesero's geography is not in dispute. The Trial Chamber is seized of Prosecution exhibits, including maps and photographic slides, which depict the area of Bisesero.

409. Furthermore, the Defence did not contest the allegation that from about 9 April until 30 June 1994, Tutsis sought refuge in Bisesero from Hutu attacks that had occurred in other parts of Rwanda and, in particularly, other areas of Kibuye Prefecture. Many eyewitnesses confirmed having been amongst thousands of Tutsis fleeing other attacks within Kibuye Prefecture [FN91] and other witnesses confirmed having seen many Tutsis fleeing various areas in Kibuye to Bisesero. Kayishema testified: "I can tell you that the, [sic] aggressors were Hutu and the attacked were the Tutsis, some who came from Bisesero and others who had gathered in the hills of Bisesero. On both sides -- on either side there were cases of mortality." [FN92] Numerous witnesses confirmed the mass murder of Tutsis in the Bisesero area. For instance, Chris McGreal, a journalist for the London-based Guardian newspaper, testified that he spoke to Tutsis seeking refuge on a hill in Bisesero in June 1994. While there, he saw evidence of mass killings in the area including human corpses. The Tutsis whom he interviewed told him that these bodies remained unburied because they (the Tutsis) feared attacks by the armed Hutus near the water. Patrick de Saint Exupery, a journalist for the Paris-based Le Figaro, visited Bisesero in June 1994. He confirmed that a "Bisesero Hill was scattered, literally scattered with bodies, in small holes, in small ditches, on the foliage, along the ditches, there were bodies and there were many bodies." [FN93]

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN91 For example, witnesses OO, PP, W survived the massacres at Mubuga Church and took refuge in the Bisesero area.

FN92 Trans., 4 Sept. 1998, p.59.

FN93 Trans., 18 Nov. 1997, p. 137.

410. Paragraph 46 of the Indictment, alleges that "the area of Bisesero was regularly attacked on almost a daily basis, throughout the period of about 9 April 1994 through 30 June 1994. The attackers used guns, grenades, machetes, spears, pangas, cudgels and other weapons to kill the Tutsis in Bisesero. At various times the men, women and children seeking refuge in Bisesero attempted to defend themselves from these attacks with stones, sticks and other crude weapons."

411. The above allegations were not contested. Most Prosecution witnesses, including survivors of attacks, confirmed that attacks took place on a regular basis, during the time in question. Witness OO testified that "the attacks were every day in Bisesero, but most frequent in Muyira and Gitwa. The attacks began at about 6 a.m. and would continue until about 4 to 5 p.m." Kayishema himself testified that "major attack" [FN94] and "massacres" [FN95] took place in Bisesero. There is sufficient evidence to show that attacks occurred at approximately twelve sites in the Bisesero area. [FN96] Dr. Haglund observed the aftermath of the massacres in September 1995 at various sites at Bisesero. Testifying about his visit to a hill on the border of Gishyita and Gisovu Commune, Dr. Haglund stated "[a]nd if one looks through field glasses or a magnifying instrument across ... this hillside there were many white spots -- it looks almost like strange mushrooms growing here and they represented skeletons, the heads of human bodies that were littered on this landscape ...'' [FN97] and "in a brief walk around I observed a minimum of 40 to 50 individual skeletons lying about on the hill. These were skeletons on the surface. They represented men, women, children and adults." [FN98]

FN94 Trans., 9 Sep. 1998, p. 37.

FN95 Trans., 8 Sep. 1998, p. 117.

FN96 The Trial Chamber notes that some witnesses used specific names of neighbourhoods when testifying about specific attacks. For the purpose of clarity however, we have grouped neighbouring localities together and described the attacks by date.

FN97 Trans., 25 Nov. 1997, p. 65.

FN98 Trans., 24 Nov. 1997, p. 82.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

412. All types of weapons were used by the attackers, witness JJ confirmed that attackers were carrying "clubs, machetes and grenades." Witness HH also reported that the assailants were armed with guns, machetes, swords and spears. The forensic evidence presented by Dr. Haglund confirmed that the victims were killed with such weapons during the massacres. Tutsis, who had gathered at Bisesero, also attempted to defend themselves with crude weapons. Witness X, along with other witnesses, confirmed this fact. Witness EE stated that the Tutsis threw rocks at the assailants to thwart attacks and escape.

5.4.2 Massacres Where Kayishema and Ruzindana Acted in Concert

413. The Prosecution alleges that at various massacre sites in Bisesero, Kayishema and Ruzindana often in concert, brought and directed groups of armed attackers. Moreover, the Prosecution accuses both of personally attacking and killing persons seeking refuge in Bisesero area. Evidence shows that assailants attacked the Tutsis seeking refuge over a vast area. For clarity, the Chamber discusses the evidence chronologically and site by site, with emphasis on the most severe attacks.

Bisesero Hill

414. Witness FF saw Kayishema, Ruzindana and Mika Muhimana, the Conseiller of the Gishyita sector, arriving at Bisesero in a white vehicle on 11 May. Kayishema was wearing a green shirt and carrying a megaphone. Ruzindana wore a white shirt and carried a weapon. Mika said through a megaphone that they were working for the Red Cross and that peace had returned. He urged people to bring the wounded and the handicapped to the Church in Mubuga where they would get blankets and beans. As those seeking refuge emerged from their hiding places Ruzindana stepped out of his vehicle and shot at a woman and two girls. Witness FF observed these events from a distance of approximately ten meters. This Chamber finds this uncontroverted testimony.

Attacks at Muyira Hill in May

415. Muyira Hill is located in the Bisesero area on the border between Gishyita and Gisovu commune on the Gishyita side of the road that separates the two communes at this location. As Saint Exupery deposed, it was a manhunt for Tutsis. Many witnesses identified Kayishema and/or Ruzindana at this massacre site including witnesses PP, OO, II, JJ, NN, HH, UU, FF, KK. Witnesses PP and OO were survivors of the Church in Mubuga massacres who then escaped to Bisesero. Witness PP testified that on 13 May Kayishema and Ruzindana were at the foot of Muyira Hill participating in the attacks. Witness PP clearly observed the attackers throwing grenades, chasing those seeking refuge and, before nightfall, Kayishema and Ruzindana shooting at the fleeing Tutsis. On 14 May, also at Muyira, PP heard Kayishema addressing a group of attackers who had come from other prefectures.

416. Witness OO testified that the Muyira attacks were led by the Bourgmestre, the Prefect, conseillers and Ruzindana. The attackers separated into groups and encircled the Tutsis seeking refuge. According to OO, he stated that before the attacks, Ruzindana had distributed traditional weapons to the attackers. Witness OO stated that on 13 May Kayishema and Ruzindana came to Muyira Hill leading a convoy of vehicles, including buses, which were transporting soldiers. He testified that Kayishema signalled the start of the attack by firing a shot. Witness OO stated that he saw Kayishema clearly and described that Kayishema wore a green suit on that day. Witness OO saw Ruzindana who was armed, leading one of the group of attackers. Ruzindana shot witness OO, striking him in the foot that day. The Defence noted that the witness had told the Prosecution investigator he had been shot in the leg rather than foot. The witness explained that the Kinyarwanda word he had used on both occasions was "ikirenge," which means foot. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that, any discrepancy is not a material contradiction.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

417. With regard to the events of 14 May, OO saw Ruzindana and Kayishema arrive with members of the Interahamwe. From his hiding place that morning he heard Kayishema address the attackers who came from the other prefectures and remembered Kayishema saying "the dirt should be cleaned that day and that they should finish the job ...'' and that Kayishema and others would take care of what remained to be done. [FN99]

FN99 Trans., 20 Nov. 97, p. 86.

418. Witness II, testified that on 13 May he observed the government owned ONATRACOM buses arrive along with many other vehicles from which soldier exited. As the assailants began the attack, the Tutsis fled, after an initial attempt to defend themselves using stones. Witness II testified that he saw Ruzindana arrive with the soldiers and appear to lead them. Although during examination-in-chief II testified that he witnessed Ruzindana firing a gun at the Tutsis, in cross-examination, this statement proved to be based on an assumption rather than his direct observation. In addition, on the evening of 13 May, while he was hiding at Uwingabo Cellule, II observed the attackers regrouping. There he saw and heard Kayishema thanking those attackers from the surrounding commune and prefectures, including Ruzindana, for having shown such devotion to their work.

419. On 14 May II observed the attackers as they again arrived in buses and cars. From a literal stone's throw away, II saw Kayishema and Ruzindana leading the group and observed both shoot at the Tutsis. Witness II fled in the direction of Karongi Hill and escaped. Witness II further claimed that he saw Ruzindana, on several occasions, giving money to several of the attackers.

420. Witness JJ testified to the events at Muyira Hill on 13 May. He affirmed that Kayishema, dressed in a green civilian suit, arrived in a white vehicle with military escort and Ruzindana was seen to be transporting assailants. Kayishema held a short barrelled, black gun and a hand megaphone. He divided the attackers into groups, gave instructions and fired the first shot. Witness JJ recalled that at the end of the attack, Kayishema presided over the regrouped assailants. During the examination-in-chief, JJ initially stated that he was 300 meters away from Kayishema, but later approximated the distance to have been 120 meters.

421. On 14 May, witness JJ again saw Kayishema between Gishyita Hill and Gisovu where the assailants parked their vehicles. At the end of the large-scale attack, Kayishema brought together and congratulated the assailants from other areas. Attackers shot witness JJ in the hand during the Muyira attacks.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

422. Witness NN testified that on 13 May 1994, he recognised Kayishema, Ruzindana and Bourgmestre Ndimbati, among the attackers. Kayishema was waiting for those seeking refuge on the road and shot in the direction of three Tutsis named Mbunduye, Munyandamutsa and Hakizimana. The record is unclear whether the witness observed the death of any of these persons. Witness NN, who stated that Ruzindana transported members of the Interahamwe to the massacre site on 13 May. There he fired gunshots at two Tutsis named Ragasana and Birara and shot at OO, but missed. Witness NN, who lost an eye from a grenade explosion at this site recalled how the Hill was covered with dead at the end of the attack.

423. Witness HH testified that assailants during the attack of 13 May included Kayishema, Ruzindana, Musema, Ndimbati and Sikubwabo. As OO was hiding in the forest Kayishema and Ruzindana were quite close when OO saw them shoot at a group of Tutsis seeking refuge who were at the top of the hill. Witness HH remembered the attackers singing: "The Tutsis should be exterminated and thrown into the forest ... don't spare the newly born baby, don't spare the elderly man, don't spare the elderly woman. Kagame left the country when he was a young baby." [FN100] In cross-examination, HH explained that he had not mentioned Ruzindana in his written statement because the Prosecution investigator had inquired only about the presence of responsible officials. Having reviewed the written statement, the Trial Chamber finds credible the witness's explanation.

FN100 Prosecution exh., 297.

424. Witness UU observed Kayishema at Mpura Hill, a 30-minute walk from Muyira Hill, on 14 May. There, he saw Kayishema near the top of Mpura, drinking beer with other assailants before the start of the attacks. He then saw Kayishema directing other leaders to the location of Tutsis nearby. Thereafter, the attackers began to pursue the Tutsis on Mpura Hill. Witness UU testified that he saw Ruzindana giving money to the attackers on 15 May on Gitwa Hill in Mubuga and that he had heard a conversation between him and the attackers regarding additional payments. The witness's testimony clarified that he was able to observe the exchange of money. However, UU stated that he heard only the conversation between the attackers, and not that between Ruzindana and these assailants, who confirmed that they expected Ruzindana to pay them more in the following days. If the latter version of UU's testimony regarding additional payment is how the events unfolded, the evidence proffered amounts to hearsay. However, because other witnesses, such as II corroborate Ruzindana's disbursement of payments to the attackers at various sites, the Trial Chamber finds this discrepancy to be a minor one.

425. The witnesses above provide a thorough account of the role of Kayishema and Ruzindana in the Muyira attacks of 13 and 14 May 1994. The Trial Chamber need not detail the further evidence that supports the Prosecution's case. It suffices to say that the evidence of witnesses Z and AA affirms Ruzindana was participating in the Muyira Hill attacks.

Witnesses FF and KK

426. Witnesses FF and KK provided evidence that conforms generally to the accounts of the above witnesses. However, doubt exists as to the quality or reliability of their testimony. Witness FF stated that he observed the events from the peak of Gitwa Hill. The Defence proffered evidence that Gitwa Hill is about three kilometres from Muyira Hill and suggested that FF was testifying to events that were at least half that distance away. The Prosecution failed to prove otherwise. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that FF had a clear view of events and deems his evidence unreliable.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

427. Witness KK was a public official in Rwanda in 1994. He testified that on 13 May, he heard the attackers singing: "let's exterminate them, let's exterminate them, we must finish off these people who are hiding in bushes. Let's look for men, everywhere so that no one remains." [FN101] He further testified that on 14 May, Kayishema led the attackers, shot at those seeking refuge as they descended Muyira Hill, and addressed a crowd of assailants using a megaphone. In his written statements, however, KK had made no mention of Kayishema except in reference to a radio broadcast where the former Prime Minister had thanked Kayishema for being valiant. Witness KK explained this omission by stating that the Prosecution investigators had only asked him about those who came from his commune. A close review of his witness statement, however, reveals that this was not the case. The two statements made by witness KK to the investigating team, show that the investigators inquired about leaders of the attacks in general. They did not ask specific questions about the attackers' origins. For the above reasons, the Trial Chamber gives little weight to the evidence proffered by witness KK.

FN101 Trans., 26 Feb. 1998, pp. 33-34.

Attacks at Muyira Hill and Vicinity in June

428. The attacks in the Bisesero area continued into June 1994. A letter dated 12 June 1994 shows Kayishema's continued involvement in the massacres. In this letter, Kayishema requested from the Ministry of Defence a plethora of ammunition, such as "gun-propelled and hand grenades, bullets for R4 rifles and magazines for machine guns" to undertake a "clean-up operation" ("ratissage'' in French) in Bisesero. [FN102]

FN102 Pros. exh., 296.

429. Witness PP, who had seen Kayishema and Ruzindana at the attacks on Muyira Hill on 13 and 14 May, saw them again in June at Kucyapa. As PP was running through Kucyapa he saw Kayishema and Ruzindana who fired a gun at him and at the group with which he was fleeing. Later in June, PP saw Kayishema and Ruzindana for the last time near Kabanda's house. Here PP was with a group of unarmed Tutsis and saw both the accused and others fire guns and kill people. Witness PP also testified that Kabanda, a prominent businessman, was a particularly sought after target by both Kayishema and Ruzindana. Witness PP deposed that Kabanda was eventually shot by Bourgmestre Sikubwabo, decapitated and his head was delivered to Kayishema for reward. PP was hiding in a nearby bush when he saw Sikubwabo shoot Kabanda, but only heard about the beheading from others. The account of the beheading, given by PP, is not sufficient to prove particular direct acts of participation of the accused. However, with regard to the acts of those under his control, in this instance Bourgmestre Sikubwabo, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence of this witness convincing.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

430. In light of the above evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that Kayishema and Ruzindana were present at the massacres in Muyira Hill and its vicinity beginning on about 13 May 1994. Further, the Trial Chamber finds that Kayishema and Ruzindana helped transport other assailants to Muyira Hill and vicinity, instigated them to attack the Tutsis gathered there, orchestrated the method of attack, led the attacks, and personally participated in them. Additionally, with regard to Kayishema, this Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved the participation in the massacres of his subordinates, including the gendarmes, communal police, members of the Interahamwe, and local officials, such as Bourgmestre Sikubwabo.

The Cave

431. One of the most horrific mass killings in Bisesero took place at a site simply called the "cave," located in Gishyita commune, Bisesero Sector, Kigarama cellule. Hutu assailants launched an attack on the cave where Tutsis sought refuge. The assailants came in the morning and fired guns and threw grenades into the crowd of Tutsis who sought refuge at this location. The attackers then fetched and piled wood at the entrance of the cave and set fire to it. The smoke killed hundreds of people inside. By all accounts, there was apparently only one survivor. The Prosecution asserts that Kayishema and Ruzindana were amongst those leading the attack.

432. Dr. Haglund visited the cave in September 1995 and described it by stating: "I went back perhaps 40 or 50 feet -- about 10 metres. It got gradually smaller and smaller and narrower and it would make sharp turns and drops. ... '' Dr. Haglund took photographs from inside and outside the cave which the Prosecution entered into evidence. [FN103] Dr. Haglund further stated "as I went [further back into the cave] ... I did observe [the remains] of many individuals, men, women and children protruding from the mud that had covered them up in the intervening rainy season, and at minimum, I observed at least 40 people in this area." Witness QQ, who's sister died at the cave, testified that he saw the smoke coming from the cave on the day of the attack, as he was fleeing from the hill. Later, when he went back to the cave, he discovered that the attackers had set the fire at the entrance.

FN103 Pros. exh., 152-55.

433. Witness CC is the sole survivor of the massacre at the cave. On the day of the attack, in June 1994, witness CC was inside the cave. According to witness CC, the attack was launched at 9 a.m. when the attackers threw grenades into the cave that did not explode. Members of the Interahamwe then went to look for wood and dry grass and piled it and firewood and earth at the entrance of the cave and ignited. On several occasions, during the attack witness CC heard the members of the Interahamwe talking of Kayishema and Ruzindana in a manner that would suggest they orchestrated the attack. Being inside the cave, however, CC never actually saw Kayishema or Ruzindana. CC claimed that he was able to stay alive by rubbing mud on his body and sipping dripping water. He did lose consciousness later but came to when cool air flowed into the cave after other Tutsis unblocked the entrance from outside.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

434. Two witnesses, witness W and HH were hiding outside the cave and confirmed that Kayishema and Ruzindana were present and participated in the cave massacre. Witness W, who was hiding in a thorny bush less than five minutes walk from the cave entrance, testified that in May or June 1994, more than one hundred people, mostly the elderly, women and children took refuge in the cave. As the attackers arrived he heard them singing: "[w]e are going to exterminate them and put them in a hole." Kayishema, Ruzindana, Bourgmestre Sikubwabo and other local authorities were among the attackers. Witness W confirmed that the attack started in the morning when the attackers fired into the cave. Later they piled wood at the entrance of the cave and set the wood ablaze. Witness W further testified that Kayishema appeared to be leading a group of attackers and that Ruzindana was leading those attackers from Ruhengeri. After attackers departed at 5 or 6 p.m., Witness W and others re-opened the entrance to rescue any survivors.

435. Witness HH testified that he fled to the cave after his wife and children were killed in another part of Kigarama. He remained outside watching the assailants in the nearby forest. He recognised Kayishema, Ruzindana, Sikubwabo, Ndimbati, and other civil authorities amongst the attackers. He recounted that the assailants fired into the cave, then closed the mouth of the cave, piled wood at the entrance and set the wood ablaze on the orders of Kayishema and Ruzindana. Witness HH confirmed W's account that Kayishema and Ruzindana were leading the groups of assailants and he saw the two men giving them instructions, "just like an overseer who is demonstrating to workers how the work should be done." After the attack, HH and others removed the earth from partially blocking the cave's entrance. Although his testimony is not completely clear on this point, it appears that when HH went into the cave he found no survivors, but later one person came out alive. Among the victims were HH's mother, sister, sister-in-law and her three children.

436. The Defence claims that there is a discrepancy between the testimony of witnesses CC, W and HH with regard to when CC was rescued from the cave. The Defence asserts that CC claimed to have stayed in the cave for three days and nights after the attack, while HH and W testified that after the departure of the assailants on the same evening, the cave entrance was opened and CC was rescued. The Trial Chamber does not find such a discrepancy. It is true that CC deposed that he remained in the cave for three days and nights after the attack. However, careful review of the transcript shows that HH stated that, although the rescuers opened the cave the same evening, they did not find any survivors on that day. HH testified that later one person came out alive. This conforms with CC's account. Witness W supported HH's account that the rescuers opened the cave on the same day and that they were able to save one survivor but did not mention the day that the survivor emerged from the cave. Witness HH and W both named the survivor as CC. It is also possible that CC lost track of time as he was unconscious for an unknown period of time. Whatever the exact day of CC's exit from the cave, the testimony of the three witnesses in relation to the presence and role of Kayishema, his subordinates and Ruzindana at the cave are a consistent and credible.

437. The Chamber notes that no exact date of this event was established. Witness CC stated it was in June. Witness W indicated it happened in late May or June, but added that he was disoriented during this period due to starvation and other factors. According to witness HH, the massacre at the cave took place after French soldiers arrived, which he thought to be 30 June. The problem that witnesses have recollecting precise dates, and the consequential lack of specificity on when the events occurred, has been discussed above. In any event, the essential elements of the crimes depicting the location and nature of the atrocities correlate, thus clearly showing that the witnesses were testifying to the same massacre.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

438. The Trial Chamber finds that an attack occurred at the cave and assailants killed scores of Tutsis. Further, both Kayishema and Ruzindana were present at the attack and played a leading role in directing the perpetrators of this massacre; Ruzindana of a particular group of attackers and Kayishema in general. This Chamber finds that gendarmes, members of the Interahamwe and various local officials were present and participated.

5.4.3 Massacres Where Kayishema and Ruzindana Acted Separately

439. There are a number of sites within the area of Bisesero area where the witnesses testified to having seen one of the two accused. The Trial Chamber first turns to evidence in relation to Kayishema, followed by that in relation to Ruzindana. Again, the evidence is presented and analysed chronologically and per site.

Attacks for Which Kayishema is Accused Separately

Karongi Hill

440. Testimony reveals that after the massacre at the Stadium, many Tutsi civilians fled to Karongi. Witness U testified that one morning in mid April Kayishema arrived with the Conseiller of Gitesi Commune, soldiers, gendarmes and Hutu civilians. Witness U was close to the arriving vehicles and observed Kayishema wearing a black, short sleeve shirt and a pair of black trousers. They proceeded to attack Tutsis on Karongi Hill. During the siege, gendarmes and soldiers shot at the Tutsi crowd on the Hill while the Hutu civilians surrounded the Hill preventing escape. Witness U heard Kayishema, who was speaking through a megaphone, demand help for the attack. According to witnesses, the attack started around 10 a.m. and ended about 3 p.m.

441. After this attack at Karongi, witness U fled to Kigarama Hill (in the record transcribed as Muchigarama). Here, in late April, he witnessed another attack led by Kayishema. He stated that although Kayishema was not armed, "[i]t was as though he was a general of the army," [FN104] and that thousands of Tutsis lost their lives during these attacks.

FN104 Trans., 6 May 1997, p. 141.

442. Witness DD testified that a large-scale attack took place at Karongi Hill towards the end of April. He saw, from a hiding place 30 to 35 meters away, that Kayishema arrived in a white car with other civic authorities, soldiers, gendarmes, communal police, members of the Interahamwe and civilians at about 9 a.m. Witness DD testified that Kayishema was wearing a white shirt, a black jacket and a pair of dark trousers and was carrying a long gun. After having given instructions to the attackers, Kayishema proceeded to the top of the Hill with other attackers. Kayishema shot at Rutazihana, a fleeing Tutsi refugee, and killed him instantaneously. The attack continued until the evening. Witness DD described how the slaughtered bodies on the Hill were like "small insects which had been killed off by insecticide." [FN105] On that day, DD lost many members of his family, including his mother, wife, nine children, four sisters and their children, five of his brother's children, two brothers and their wives.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN105 Trans., 25 Feb. 1998, p. 28.

443. During the cross-examination, the Defence Counsel stressed the difference between the written statement signed by DD and his oral testimony. In his statement to investigators the witness had described how his friend Rutazimana was killed by the bullet of a soldier, whereas in his testimony, he asserted that Kayishema had shot Rutazimana. The doubt raised by this inconsistency, of which the accused is entitled to the benefit, was not dispelled by the explanation of the witness. With regard to prior inconsistent statements, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that greater emphasis should be placed on direct testimony than on unchallenged prior statements. Although the witness's oral testimony was truthful overall and the accused bears responsibility for the acts of his subordinates at this site as one of the leaders of the attack, we find that with regard to the shooting incident a reasonable doubt has been raised.

Gitwa Cellule and Gitwa Hill

444. Yet another site where Kayishema allegedly led and participated in the attacks is Gitwa Cellule and Gitwa Hill. Witness MM, who lost his wife, four children, two brothers and one sister during the attacks, testified that he (the witness) saw Kayishema when he was hiding at Mukazirandimbwe. Kayishema came in a white double-cabin vehicle with soldiers and members of the Interahamwe who were carrying guns, clubs, machetes and spears. Kayishema ordered and urged the assailants to exterminate the Tutsis seeking refuge there. Witness MM saw Kayishema three times at Gitwa in similar circumstances during May. He testified that although he did not see Kayishema carry a weapon or observe any killing, he stated that, "wherever one went one saw nothing but bodies." [FN106]

FN106 Trans., 24 Feb. 1998, p. 27.

Attacks for Which Ruzindana is Accused Separately

Mine at Nyiramuregro Hill

445. Nyiramurego Hill, where a mine is located, is in Bisesero sector. Witness RR testified that he saw Ruzindana arrive in a vehicle with members of the Interahamwe, park his car at the foot of the hill and distribute machetes and guns about 15 April. According to this witness Ruzindana told the attackers to "hurry up, I'm going to bring other people to help you. But each time bring me an identity card or a head and I will pay you." Although after cross- examination the exact distance at which RR observed Ruzindana remained unclear, RR maintained that he was close enough to hear and see Ruzindana on that occasion.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

9. Security Council Resolution 1315.

United Nations S/RES/1315 (2000)

Security Council

Distr.: General
14 August 2000

Resolution 1315 (2000)

Adopted by the Security Council at its 4186th meeting, on 14 August 2000

The Security Council:

Deeply concerned at the very serious crimes committed within the territory of Sierra Leone against the people of Sierra Leone and United Nations and associated personnel and at the prevailing situation of impunity,

Commending the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to bring lasting peace to Sierra Leone, Noting that the Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS agreed at the 23rd Summit of the Organization in Abuja on 28 and 29 May 2000 to dispatch a regional investigation of the resumption of hostilities,

Noting also the steps taken by the Government of Sierra Leone in creating a national truth and reconciliation process, as required by Article XXVI of the Lomé Peace Agreement (S/1999/777) to contribute to the promotion of the rule of law,

Recalling that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General appended to his signature of the Lomé Agreement a statement that the United Nations holds the understanding that the amnesty provisions of the Agreement shall not apply to international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming the importance of compliance with international humanitarian law, and reaffirming further that persons who commit or authorize serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and that the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law,

Recognizing that, in the particular circumstances of Sierra Leone, a credible system of justice and accountability for the very serious crimes committed there would end impunity and would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace,

Taking note in this regard of the letter dated 12 June 2000 from the President of Sierra Leone to the Secretary-General and the Suggested Framework attached to it (S/2000/786, annex),

Recognizing further the desire of the Government of Sierra Leone for assistance from the United Nations in establishing a strong and credible court that will meet the objectives of bringing justice and ensuring lasting peace,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 31 July 2000 (S/2000/751) and, in particular, taking note with appreciation of the steps already taken by the Secretary-General in response to the request of the Government of Sierra Leone to assist it in establishing a special court,

Noting further the negative impact of the security situation on the administration of justice in Sierra Leone and the pressing need for international cooperation to assist in strengthening the judicial system of Sierra Leone,

Acknowledging the important contribution that can be made to this effort by qualified persons from West African States, the Commonwealth, other Member States of the United Nations and international organizations, to expedite the process of bringing justice and reconciliation to Sierra Leone and the region,

Reiterating that the situation in Sierra Leone continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Sierra Leone to create an independent special court consistent with this resolution, and expresses its readiness to take further steps expeditiously upon receiving and reviewing the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 6 below;

2. Recommends that the subject matter jurisdiction of the special court should include notably crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law committed within the territory of Sierra Leone;

3. Recommends further that the special court should have personal jurisdiction over persons who bear the greatest responsibility for the commission of the crimes referred to in paragraph 2, including those leaders who, in committing such crimes, have threatened the establishment of and implementation of the peace process in Sierra Leone;

4. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring the impartiality, independence and credibility of the process, in particular with regard to the status of the judges and the prosecutors;

5. Requests, in this connection, that the Secretary-General, if necessary, send a team of experts to Sierra Leone as may be required to prepare the report referred to in paragraph 6 below;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council on the implementation of this resolution, in particular on his consultations and negotiations with the Government of Sierra Leone concerning the establishment of the special court, including recommendations, no later than 30 days from the date of this resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to address in his report the questions of the temporal jurisdiction of the special court, an appeals process including the advisability, feasibility, and appropriateness of an appeals chamber in the special court or of sharing the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda or other effective options, and a possible alternative host State, should it be necessary to convene the special court outside the seat of the court in Sierra Leone, if circumstances so require,

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include recommendations on the following:

(a) any additional agreements that may be required for the provision of the international assistance which will be necessary for the establishment and functioning of the special court;

(b) the level of participation, support and technical assistance of qualified persons from Member States of the United Nations, including in particular, member States of ECOWAS and the Commonwealth, and from the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone that will be necessary for the efficient, independent and impartial functioning of the special court;

(c) the amount of voluntary contributions, as appropriate, of funds, equipment and services to the special court, including through the offer of expert personnel that may be needed from States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(d) whether the special court could receive, as necessary and feasible, expertise and advice from the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

10. Charter of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Article 21.

2890

V. POWERS OF THE TRIBUNAL AND CONDUCT OF THE TRIAL

Article 17.

The Tribunal shall have the power

(a) to summon witnesses to the Trial and to require their attendance and testimony and to put questions to them

(b) to interrogate any Defendant,

(c) to require the production of documents and other evidentiary material,

(d) to administer oaths to witnesses,

(e) to appoint officers for the carrying out of any task designated by the Tribunal including the power to have evidence taken on commission.

Article 18.

The Tribunal shall

(a) confine the Trial strictly to an expeditious hearing of the cases raised by the charges,

(b) take strict measures to prevent any action which will cause reasonable delay, and rule out irrelevant issues and statements of any kind whatsoever,

(c) deal summarily with any contumacy, imposing appropriate punishment, including exclusion of any Defendant or his Counsel from some or all further proceedings, but without prejudice to the determination of the charges.

Article 19.

The Tribunal shall not be bound by technical rules of evidence. It shall adopt and apply to the greatest possible extent expeditious and nontechnical procedure, and shall admit any evidence which it deems to be of probative value.

Article 20.

The Tribunal may require to be informed of the nature of any evidence before it is entered so that it may rule upon the relevance thereof.

2891

Article 21.

The Tribunal shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof. It shall also take judicial notice of official governmental documents and reports of the United Nations, including the acts and documents of the committees set up in the various allied countries for the investigation of war crimes, and of records and findings of military or other Tribunals of any of the United Nations.

Article 22.

The permanent seat of the Tribunal shall be in Berlin. The first meetings of the members of the Tribunal and of the Chief Prosecutors shall be held at Berlin in a place to be designated by the Control Council for Germany. The first trial shall be held at Nuremberg, and any subsequent trials shall be held at such places as the Tribunal may decide.

Article 23.

One or more of the Chief Prosecutors may take part in the prosecution at each Trial. The function of any Chief Prosecutor may be discharged by him personally, or by any person or persons authorized by him.

The function of Counsel for a Defendant may be discharged at the Defendant's request by any Counsel professionally qualified to conduct cases before the Courts of his own country, or by any other person who may be specially authorized thereto by the Tribunal.

Article 24.

The proceedings at the Trial shall take the following course:

(a) The Indictment shall be read in court.

(b) The Tribunal shall ask each Defendant whether he pleads "guilty" or "not guilty."

(c) The prosecution shall make an opening statement.

2892

(d) The Tribunal shall ask the prosecution and the defense what evidence (if any) they wish to submit to the Tribunal, and the Tribunal shall rule upon the admissibility of any such evidence.

(e) The witnesses for the Prosecution shall be examined and after that the witnesses for the Defense. Thereafter such rebutting evidence as may be held by the Tribunal to be admissible shall be called by either the Prosecution or the Defense.

(f) The Tribunal may put any question to any witness and to any defendant, at any time.

(g) The Prosecution and the Defense shall interrogate and may crossexamine any witnesses and any Defendant who gives testimony.

(h) The Defense shall address the court.

(i) The Prosecution shall address the court.

(j) Each Defendant may make a statement to the Tribunal.

(k) The Tribunal shall deliver judgment and pronounce sentence.

Article 25.

All official documents shall be produced, and all court proceedings conducted, in English, French and Russian, and in the language of the Defendant. So much of the record and of the proceedings may also be translated into the language of any country in which the Tribunal is sitting, as the Tribunal is sitting, as the Tribunal considers desirable in the interests of the justice and public opinion.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

11. Prosecutor v. Bagosora et al., ICTR-98-41-T, Decision on Admissibility of Proposed Testimony of Witness DBY, 18 September 2003.

2894

TRIAL CHAMBER I

Before:
Judge Erik Møse, presiding
Judge Jai Ram Reddy
Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov

Registrar: Adama Dieng

Date: 18 September 2003

THE PROSECUTOR
v.
Théoneste BAGOSORA
Gratien KABILIGI
Aloys NTABAKUZE
Anatole NSENGIYUMVA

Case No. : ICTR-98-41-T

DECISION ON ADMISSIBILITY OF PROPOSED TESTIMONY OF WITNESS DBY

The Office of the Prosecutor
Barbara Mulvaney
Drew White
Segun Jegede
Alex Obote-Odora
Christine Graham
Rashid Rashid

Counsel for the Defence
Raphaël Constant
Paul Skolnik
Jean Yaovi Degli
David Martin Sperry
Peter Erlinder
André Tremblay
Kennedy Ogetto
Gershom Otachi Bw'Omanwa

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA ("the Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the objections by the Defence to proposed testimony of Witness DBY, made orally on 12 September 2003;

2895

CONSIDERING the "Joint Defence Brief Regarding the Admissibility of Evidence of Criminal Acts Alleged to Have Been Committed By the Accused Outside the Period of the Trial Chamber's Temporal Jurisdiction", filed on 15 September 2003; and the Prosecution "Response" thereto, filed on 15 September 2003;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

INTRODUCTION

1. On 12 September 2003, Prosecution Witness DBY appeared before the Chamber to testify. Based upon a witness statement taken on 2 and 3 December 1999 and the theme of questions being posed by the Prosecution, it became apparent that the witness was about to give testimony concerning actions of the Accused before 1 January 1994.[1] The Defence objected to the testimony, and requested the Chamber to rule it inadmissible and to direct that the testimony not be heard. In response to questions from the Bench, the Prosecution indicated a series of different topics in the witness statement on which it intended to elicit testimony:

> Category I: Orders and actions of Defendant Ntabakuze on four specific occasions: 3, 5, and 9 October 1990 and some date in January 1991; on one of these occasions, 5 October 1990, the Defendant Bagosora is also identified as having engaged in the same actions as Ntabakuze;
>
> Category II: A telegram seen by Witness DBY at the end of 1992 or beginning of 1993 sent by the Defendant Bagosora identifying Tutsi as the enemy and leading to the dismissal of Tutsi from the army;
>
> Category III: A telegram seen by the witness in 1992 sent by Defendant Bagosora requesting delivery of weapons to the Ministry of Defence for distribution, which the witness later saw in the possession of interahamwe.

SUBMISSIONS

2. The Prosecution acknowledges that, in accordance with the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal, the indictments charge the Accused with crimes committed between 1 January and 31 December 1994. [2] Placing reliance on a Separate Opinion of Judge Shahabudeen in the Media case, the Prosecution nevertheless argues that evidence of events prior to that period is admissible to prove the commission of those crimes in 1994. Evidence of events prior to 1 January 1994 may be admitted for one of three purposes: as proof of "ongoing criminal conduct which culminates in 1994"; to place the events of 1994 in their proper context; and under the rubric of "similar fact evidence, as authorised specifically by Rule 93".[3] These submissions are discussed in more detail in the Deliberations section below. In respect of the first purpose, the Prosecution claims in particular that the evidence is probative of an ongoing conspiracy of indeterminate length that existed at the time of the events in 1990.

3. The Defence argues that the Prosecution's reliance on Judge Shahabuddeen's Opinion is misplaced. Rather than addressing the admissibility of evidence of pre-1994 events, that opinion decided only that pre-1994 incidents may be mentioned in an indictment without ruling on the admissibility of such evidence; the question of admissibility of evidence was identified as a distinct issue for the Trial Chamber.[4] Even if evidence of pre-1994 events may, in principle, be admitted, Witness DBY's testimony does not meet the criteria for admission set forth in Rule 89(C) or Rule 93 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules"). The evidence is neither relevant nor probative of any facts in issue in this case. Further, the evidence is highly prejudicial as it suggests the bad character of the accused. Any probative value that might exist is outweighed by the improper prejudice caused to the Accused. Rule 93 gives the Prosecution no licence to extend the temporal range of events which it may tender and, in any event, should only exceptionally permit the admission of otherwise inadmissible evidence. Finally, the Defence argues that admission of this testimony will greatly complicate and lengthen the trial as it will be obliged to contest these events.

DELIBERATIONS

General Principles

4. Rule 89(C) provides that a Chamber "may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". This simple formulation sets out three distinct aspects of the process of determining admissibility. First, the evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged. Second, the evidence must have some value in proving the elements of the crimes with which an Accused is charged. The separate reference to "probative value", and to the requirement that the Chamber must "deem" that the evidence has that quality, suggests that probative value is a different and more complex hurdle than relevance. Third, even where these two criteria are met, Rule 89 (C) does not command, but merely permits, admission of the evidence.

5. The issue confronting the Chamber concerns a particular type of relevance: whether testimonial evidence of a witness concerning events prior to 1994 is relevant to, and probative of, charges of crimes committed only within that year.

6. The jurisprudence of the Tribunal on this particular question is limited. However, a discussion of general principles is to be found in decisions in the Media case which addressed whether events prior to 1994 – that is, prior to the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal -- may be recounted in an indictment.[5] The Trial Chamber ruled that:

> information that falls outside of the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal may be useful in helping the accused and the Chamber to appreciate the context of the alleged crimes, particularly due to the complexity of the events that occurred in Rwanda, during 1994. Furthermore the Chamber is of the view that the proper stage to determine the admissibility and evidential value, if any, of the paragraphs that contain information about events that occurred prior to 1 January 1994, is during the assessment of evidence.[6]

That decision was upheld by the Appeals Chamber, which confirmed that the indictment did not purport to charge the Accused with crimes committed prior to 1994, but merely to provide an introduction, and historical background and context, to the crimes committed in 1994. Two separate opinions were filed along with the decision of the Appeals Chamber, of which that of Judge Shahabuddeen is of particular assistance to the question of the admissibility of evidence of pre-1994 events. His principal concern was the jurisdictional question, but in so doing he rejected the assertion that pre-1994 events are categorically irrelevant to crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal:

> But there is a distinction between the legal elements of a crime and and the evidence of their existence. The prosecution has to prove that all the legal elements of a crime were present at the time of commission of the crime, that is to say, at the time within the mandate year when the crime is alleged to have been committed. However, there is no reason why the > evidence of their existence at that point in time cannot (in some cases, at any rate) include evidence deriving from a time prior to the commencement of the mandate year.[7]

7. Having so found, Judge Shahabuddeen specifically disclaimed ruling on the admissibility of any particular evidence that might be tendered at trial:

> My holding is only that the amended indictment does not charge the appellant with any crimes committed before the commencement of the mandate year. That holding does not exclude the competence of the Trial Chamber in the course of the actual trial from shutting out evidence of previous crimes on the ground that, in the circumstances of the case, the particular evidence is not in fact relevant or that, if it is, its prejudicial effect on the accused exceeds its probative value. That is an evidentiary issue, not a jurisdictional one....[8]

8. Evidence of events prior to 1 January 1994 is not clearly separated from crimes charged in the indictment. Such events may be relevant to, and probative of, the commission of crimes in 1994. In deciding the jurisdictional question, Judge Shahabuddeen sets out three possible avenues, all of which have been invoked by the Prosecution, by which evidence of such events may properly be considered relevant. These three bases of relevance are discussed at the outset, before considering the probative value of the specific evidence tendered, or whether its value is outweighed by its prejudicial effect.

i) Evidence Relevant to an Offence Continuing Into the Mandate Year

9. The Prosecution does not exceed its mandate by charging an individual with an offence that begins at some date prior to 1994, but continues into that year. In respect of conspiracy, "the charge could correctly be for a conspiracy made in, or continuing into, the mandate year even though the original conspiracy agreement was made prior thereto".[9] Accordingly, evidence tending to show the existence of an ongoing criminal act that began prior to 1994 but whose object was only realized in 1994 is admissible. The Prosecution claims generally that Witness DBY's testimony is relevant to the existence of a conspiracy that commenced before 1994 and continued into that year.

ii) Context or Background

10. Where an event is not itself part of the crime charged, but without which "'the account...would be incomplete or incomprehensible, then the fact that the whole account involves including evidence establishing the commission of an offence with which the accused is not charged is not of itself a ground for excluding the evidence'" [10] Evidence of the nature of the relationship between a victim and an accused, and possible motives for the commission of a crime, may be admitted on this basis.[11] Establishing motive may also be relevant to mens rea. Judge Shahabuddeen noted that this category should be viewed broadly, in light of the "scale of events, in space and time", and the fact that prejudicial background information will be less damaging when heard by professional judges than a jury.[12]

(iii) "Similar Fact Evidence"

11. The third avenue for admission of evidence of pre-1994 events is based on an exception, long-established in the common law, for admitting evidence of particular category of acts committed prior to the time of the act which is charged.

12. The exception can only be described in relation to the general rule. A long-standing principle of common law jurisdictions, adopted by the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia, is that "as a general principle of criminal law, evidence as to the character of an accused is generally inadmissible to show the accused's propensity to act in conformity therewith."[13] This means that prior criminal offences by the accused – even of precisely the same offence with which the accused is charged – are not admissible if the only purpose for their introduction is to establish that the accused was capable of committing the offence, is inclined to commit the offence, or on some prior occasion actually did have the intent to commit the criminal offence. Such evidence is excluded because the evidence may so severely blacken the reputation of the accused as to make acquittal virtually impossible, even though the direct evidence of the commission of the offence is weak. Further, dealing with evidence of past conduct may be unduly distracting and time-consuming, leading to an unfocused trial that undermines the truth-finding function.[14]

13. The definition of similar fact evidence in the Shahabuddeen Opinion is taken from an Australian case:

> '[I]f the evidence of the other offence or offences goes beyond showing a mere disposition to commit crime or a particular kind of crime and points in some other way to the commission of the offence in question, then it will be admissible if its probative value for that purpose outweighs or transcends its merely prejudicial effect. The cases in which similar fact evidence may have sufficient additional relevance to make it admissible are not confined, but recognized instances occur where the evidence is relevant to prove intent, or to disprove accident or mistake, to prove identity or to disprove innocent associations....'[15]

Shahabuddeen's gloss on this passage is that "evidence of prior offences is admissible to prove a pattern, design or systematic course of conduct by the accused where his explanation on the basis of coincidence would be an affront to common sense."[16]

14. Other discussions of similar fact evidence explain that it is admissible because it reveals a propensity that "'is so highly distinctive or unique as to constitute a signature'".[17] In such cases, the evidence is of type which is not probative of merely a general propensity to commit the criminal act, but is probative of some peculiar feature of the case which substantially enhances its probative value in relation to the charge. Defining what type of evidence is sufficiently specific so as to migrate out of the prohibited zone of general propensity evidence, is a difficult exercise which depends on the facts of each case. The prejudicial effect on the character of the accused must also be considered, and whether the prosecution can achieve its stated object using less prejudicial evidence.[18]

iv) Probative Value and Prejudice

15. Probative value is a second criterion of admissibility set out in Rule 89(C). It has been described simply as "'evidence that tends to prove an issue'" and is sometimes conceived as overlapping with the concept of relevance: "For one fact to be relevant to another, there must be a connection or a nexus between the two which makes it possible to infer the existence of one from the other. One fact is not relevant to another if it does not have real probative value with respect to the latter."[19]

16. Though not expressly mentioned in Rule 89, prejudice is also relevant to the determination of admissibility.[20] It is clear from Judge Shahabuddeen's Opinion in the Media case that relevant and probative evidence may be excluded on the grounds of "prejudice":

> It being recognised that all relevant prosecution evidence is prejudicial to the accused and the more probative the more prejudicial, still it is possible in some cases to say that the probative value of the particular evidence is outweighed by its prejudicial effect; in such a case the evidence is to be excluded.[21]

2899

17. Evidence of past crimes, introduced merely to blacken the character of the Accused and show a propensity and capacity to commit the crimes charged, is improper. This is so because the damning effect of the evidence tends to outweigh its true probative value and to obscure more direct evidence of the crime alleged. In this sense, the evidence is "prejudicial" in a manner that compels exclusion.

18. Relevance, probative value and even prejudice are all relational concepts. The content of the putative facts must be defined and then evaluated in relation to their possible value as proof of the existence of a crime as described in the indictment. The nature of this evaluation explains the discretion conferred on the Trial Chamber by Rule 89(C).

Application of General Principles to the Evidence of Witness DBY

19. The Prosecution accepts that the charges against the Accused concern crimes committed between 1 January and 31 December 1994.[22] The sole issue confronting the Chamber here is whether evidence of events prior to that period is relevant to those alleged crimes, and whether the probative value of that evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect on the assessment of the crimes alleged.

i) Ongoing Criminal Offence

20. On the basis of the case law summarized above (para. 9), it is the view of the Chamber that evidence tending to show the existence of an ongoing criminal act that began prior to 1994 but whose object was only realized in 1994 is admissible.[23] The Prosecution claims generally that Witness DBY's testimony is probative of the existence of a conspiracy that continued into 1994 and should be admitted on that basis.

21. The purported evidence in Category III is plainly relevant and admissible on this ground. It is alleged that one of the Accused requested weapons in 1992 for distribution to militia, which are alleged to subsequently have been seen in the possession of militia and used to commit criminal acts in 1994. The evidence may tend to show the existence of an ongoing criminal plan; the existence of an armed militia in 1994 and its relationship with the military; and the militia's relationship with the Accused and his individual criminal responsibility for their acts. Of course, none of these conclusions have yet been proven, and the Chamber is making no assessment here of the reliability or credibility of the evidence. The standard for admissibility, however, is simply that the evidence is relevant and has the prospect of probative value. This evidence satisfies both of these conditions and does not improperly prejudice the Accused.

22. The relevance of the evidence in Category II is difficult to assess under this heading, and is deferred to the next section, concerning background evidence.

23. The evidence in Category I relates to orders given, and actions taken, by the Accused Ntabakuze and Bagosora on occasions in October 1990 and January 1991. According to the Prosecution, this is relevant to and tends to prove the existence of a conspiracy that continued from October 1990 through the events of 1994.[24] The Defence has pointed to passages from the testimony of the Prosecution's own expert witness, Alison Des Forges, which seem to contradict that contention. In response, the Prosecution quoted Dr. Des Forges's testimony that she refused "to be pinned down to a single date," but stopped short of repeating its claim that a conspiracy existed in 1990 in respect of which the evidence is probative.[25]

2900

24. The Chamber recalls that Dr. Des Forges stated her position as follows:

> "Q.: Now a certain witness in the Akayesu case, Professor Filip Reyntjens, commenting on these events suggested that there had been a trial run, a trial-run to the massacres that happened in 1994. Do you agree with that; in other words, a dress rehearsal of the 1994 genocide; would you agree with that assessment? A.: To make that assessment requires a conclusion that from the very beginning, that is, from 1990, it was foreseen that these various smaller attacks could and probably would lead to a larger scale genocide. I have said that I myself do not support the idea that this idea of genocide or a plan of genocide was clearly established in October 1990. So I would prefer to say that it appears there was a pattern of learning and finding which elements work and then using them again the next time, rather than setting out from the start in 1990 with the notion of dress rehearsals to arrive at a final grand performance that one knew would come one day."[26]

25. Whether a conspiracy existed in October 1990 in which the Accused participated is, of course, a matter that can only be assessed after hearing the totality of the evidence. The issue here is not whether there is evidence already heard in the trial that establishes (or negates) the existence of the conspiracy, but rather whether a sufficient nexus of relevance and probativeness connects the evidence with the crime alleged. This involves comparing the evidence tendered with the specific crime alleged.

26. The connection between the proffered evidence and the crime alleged is tenuous. The events of October 1990 and January 1991 to which Witness DBY wishes to testify are said to occur in the context of repelling an invading military force from Uganda. The specific evidence here concerning the Accused Ntabakuze is that (a) on 3 October 2003 he issued an order to shoot anyone seen along a certain road in the area of military activities; (b) that on 5 October 1990, in the vicinity of Kigali, along with the Accused Bagosora, he ordered his men to arrest anyone without an identity card and "all suspicious looking Tutsis", and that some of these suspects were later beaten to death; (c) that Ntabakuze himself participated in these arrests on 5 October 1990 and appeared to use a list; (d) that on 9 October he ordered farms to be destroyed and civilians killed on the basis of a suspicion that they were aiding the invading force; and (e) that in January 1991 he ordered the execution of prisoners, both Hutu and Tutsi, who had been released from a Rwandan prison by the invading force.

27. What is required for admission is that the evidence, either on its own or viewed in the light of other evidence, be probative of a conspiracy. The Prosecution has not explained with particularity how these pieces of evidence show the existence of a conspiracy in 1990 to commit the criminal acts that were allegedly committed by the Accused in 1994. The Prosecution made no such claim or argument in its written submissions.[27] Such a connection would be obvious if, for example, the testimony concerned the content of a conspiratorial agreement; meetings at which an agreement was made; references by individuals to the existence of an agreement; or patterns of conduct showing that individuals were acting in accordance with the terms of some agreement. In light of the absence of a foundation for the contention – and, indeed, the contrary testimony in this regard from Dr. Des Forges – that an ongoing conspiracy existed in 1990, the Prosecution has failed to make the requisite showing of relevance or probative value of this particular evidence to a conspiracy that continues through 1994. However, the Chamber accepts item (c) as admissible, because the drawing up of lists may imply some sort of concerted preparation by several individuals and it cannot, at this stage of the proceedings, be ruled out that further evidence may place this incident in context.

28. Any probative value that the evidence may have is outweighed by its serious prejudicial effect. Four of the five events to which Witness DBY will testify concern allegations that the Accused Ntabakuze committed the very same acts – killings of civilians – which form the basis of the charges in the indictment, but with which he is not charged because of the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal.

2901

The Accused must be found guilty on the basis of evidence of the crimes charged, not on the basis of evidence that he committed the offence on prior occasions and, therefore, had a propensity to commit them again.[28] It is true that Chambers composed of professional judges may be less susceptible to distraction or prejudice by the admission of irrelevant or prejudicial evidence than juries.[29] But hearing extensive examination and cross-examination on the evidence in question would distract the Chamber from the proper focus of the trial, namely, the events charged in the indictment, and lengthen the trial.

29. Accordingly, the Category I evidence, concerning the orders to kill civilians and destroy the property by Ntabakuze in October 1990 and January 1991, and the arrests and killings of civilians by Ntabakuze and Bagosora on 5 October 1990, is not admissible on the basis of proof of an ongoing offence.

(ii) Context or Background

30. The evidence in Category II should be admitted as background evidence (see para. 10 above). Witness DBY is expected to testify that he saw a telegram from one of the Accused to military units which identified the Tutsi as the enemy because they were providing information to the RPF; requested that the Tutsi be "localised"; and that all Tutsi should be dismissed from the army.

31. The information is relevant to the Accused's relationship with the Tutsi as a group. It may tend to establish motives for acts that he is alleged to have committed in 1994, although the probative value at this stage is still difficult to weigh. The information is not unduly prejudicial as it does not describe any prior criminal acts charged in the indictment. The Chamber reiterates that none of the inferences that the Prosecution intends to establish are proven and that the Accused is, of course, entitled to offer explanations for these statements that negate such inference. The only issue before the Chamber now is whether the evidence should be heard.

32. The information concerning dismissal of Tutsi from the army is also relevant as an explanation of the ethnic composition of the military as it may have existed in 1994. That ethnic composition is a background fact which may assist the Chamber in understanding the milieu in which the Accused were operating. Their role in shaping that military is also helpful to the Chamber and is not significantly prejudicial.

33. The Chamber further observes that evidence of military operations in 1990 and 1991 can be relevant as background evidence. Such evidence may offer the Chamber a broader understanding of the relationship between Tutsi and Hutu as it existed in 1994, and the social and institutional context of the Accused and the military. The positions and actions of the Accused within that hierarchy before 1994 are also admissible as background.

34. However, the Prosecution may not lead evidence of the specific allegations contained in Category I as background evidence. The narrative of events would not be "incomplete or incomprehensible" without this evidence. It has not been shown that these specific incidents serve the purposes claimed by the Prosecution: to illuminate the military command structure; how orders within that command structure were given and executed; or the mechanisms of military discipline in the Rwandan army. Whatever small probative value there may be is outweighed by the improper prejudice that would be caused to the Accused by permitting evidence of these past criminal acts, up to four years before the events in 1994, with which they are not charged.[30]

(iii) Prior Acts and "Similar Fact Evidence"

35. As previously discussed (see paras. 11-14), the prior commission of the acts with which a Defendant is charged are inadmissible if the purpose for their introduction is to show a general propensity or disposition to commit the acts. This does not preclude the introduction of such evidence for other valid purposes, if those purposes exist, and if they outweigh the prejudicial effect of the evidence. In such cases, the direct link between the prior act and the act charged is said to reverse the usual balance of probative value and prejudicial effect in favour of the former.

36. The Prosecution argues that the Category I evidence should be admitted as similar fact evidence, which is said to be liberally permitted under Rule 93.

37. At the outset, the Chamber rejects the view that Rule 93 broadly authorizes the admission of evidence of prior criminal acts that are the same as acts alleged in the indictment. "Pattern of conduct" has generally not been used to introduce evidence of crimes not alleged in the indictment, but has rather been used as the basis for inferences of intent from actions which are alleged in the indictment.[31] Based on these precedents, there is reason to believe that Rule 93 has little to say about the general standard of relevance and probativeness set out as the basic test of admissibility in Rule 89(C).

38. The Chamber is of the view that the similar fact evidence exception is not satisfied in this case. No indication has been given as to why these incidents are an exceptional, unique, or peculiar form of the criminal act alleged so as to make it highly probative of the acts alleged in the indictment. On the other side of the scale, these events severely blacken the character of the accused and imply a propensity to commit the acts. The following factors mentioned in a leading Canadian decision, R v. Handy, on whether to admit evidence as similar fact evidence, are relevant here:

(1) proximity in time of the similar acts;

(2) extent to which the other acts are similar in detail to the charged conduct;

(3) number of occurrences of the similar acts;

(4) any distinctive feature(s) unifying the incidents;

(5) intervening events;

(6) any other factor which would tend to support or rebut the underlying unity of the similar acts.[32]

These factors must then be weighed against the likely prejudice to the Accused, including the "inflammatory nature of the similar acts and whether the [Prosecution] can prove its point with less prejudicial evidence", and potential for distraction of the court.[33]

39. Without reviewing the many decisions from national systems in which evidence has been introduced under the "similar fact" exception, there is little doubt that the evidence tendered by the Prosecution in Category I does not come close to meeting the criteria for admission. The Prosecution has not identified with sufficient particularity the distinctive or unique features of this evidence, or what it might prove other than that the Accused committed the same offence on prior occasions. The evidence has low probative value, but has substantial prejudicial effect for reasons already discussed. This evidence does not qualify as similar fact evidence.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

2903

GRANTS THE MOTION IN PART

DECLARES inadmissible the proposed testimony of Witness DBY that (a) on 3 October 1990, the Accused Ntabakuze issued an order to shoot anyone seen along a certain road in the area of military activities; (b) on 5 October 1990, in the vicinity of Kigali, along with the Accused Bagosora, Ntabakuze ordered his men to arrest anyone without an identity card and "all suspicious looking Tutsis" and that some of these suspects were later beaten to death; (c) on 9 October Ntabakuze ordered farms to be destroyed and civilians killed on the basis of a suspicion that they were aiding the invading force; and (d) in January 1991 Ntabakuze ordered that prisoners, both Hutu and Tutsi, who had been released from a Rwandan prison by the invading force be executed.

DECLARES admissible the proposed testimony of Witness DBY in respect of: that Ntabakuze participated in arrests on 5 October 1990 and appeared to use a list; a telegram seen by the witness at the end of 1992 or beginning of 1993 sent by the Bagosora identifying Tutsi as the enemy and leading to the dismissal of Tutsi from the army; a telegram seen by the witness in 1992 sent by Bagosora requesting delivery of weapons to the Ministry of Defence for distribution, which the witness later saw in the possession of interahamwe; general evidence concerning events in 1990 and 1991, including the general role of the Accused, but without touching on the prohibited evidence as described above.

Arusha, 18 September 2003

Erik Møse	Jai Ram Reddy	Sergei Alekseevich Egorov
Presiding Judge	Judge	Judge

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

[1] The witness statement is identified as "DBY-1".

[2] As the criteria for admission of evidence under Rule 89(C), discussed infra, depend on the purposes for which it is tendered, it is convenient to set out the Prosecution's submissions first.

[3] Prosecutor v. Théoneste Bagosora, Anatole Nsengiyumva, Gratien Kabiligi, and Aloys Ntabakuze, Prosecution Response, 15 September 2003, p. 6 ("Prosecution Response").

[4] Prosecutor v. Hassan Ngeze and Ferdinand Nahimana, Décision sur les appels interlocutoires, Separate Opinion of Judge Shahabuddeen, 5 September 2000 ("Shahabuddeen Opinion").

[5] Article 1 of the Statute states, in relevant part: "The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed...between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994...."

[6] Prosecutor v. Ferdinand Nahimana, Decision on the Defence Preliminary Motion, Pursuant to Rule 72 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 12 July 2000, p. 4. See also Prosecutor v. Ferdinand Nahimana, Decision on the Prosecutor's Request for Leave to File and Amended Indictment, 5 November 1999, para. 27: "The Trial Chamber recognizes the possibility that these allegations may be subsidiary or interrelated allegations to the principal allegation in issue and thus may have probative or evidentiary value. The Trial Chamber is therefore of the view that it is premature to address the relevance of and admissibility of these allegations at this stage of the proceedings. The appropriate stage will be at the trial of the accused."

2904

[7] Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 9.

[8] Id. para. 40 (italics added).

[9] Id. para. 14.

[10] Id. para. 21, quoting R. v. Pettman, 2 May 1985, unreported, per Purchas LJ.

[11] Id. para. 20.

[12] Id. para. 24.

[13] Prosecutor v. Kupreskic, Decision on Evidence of the Good Character of the Accused and the Defence of Tu Quoque, 17 February 1999. One type of evidence which is well-recognised in the world's common law systems as relevant and yet generally inadmissible is past conduct used to establish that the accused "has the propensity or disposition to do the type of acts charged and is therefore guilty of the offence." See also 31.

[14] R v. Handy, [2002] 2 SCR 908, paras. 139-147.

[15] Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 20, quoting Thomson v. R., (1989) 86 A.L.R. 1.

[16] Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 20.

[17] R. v. Handy, [2002] 2 SCR 908, para. 77 quoting R. v. Scopelliti (1981), 63 CCC (2d) 481 (Ont. CA).

[18] Id. at para. 83.

[19] R v. Cloutier [1979] 2 SCR 709, p. 731, as quoted in Prosecutor v. Delalic, Decision on the Prosecution's Oral Requests for the Admission of Exhibit 155 Into Evidence", etc., 19 January 1998, para. 29.

[20] Cf. Rule 89(D) of the Rules of the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia, which provides that "[a] Chamber may exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial."

[21] Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 19.

[22] Prosecution Response, p. 2.

[23] Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 11: "In the result, the charge could correctly be for a conspiracy made in, or continuing into, the mandate year even though the original conspiracy agreement was made prior thereto."

[24] Transcripts of 12 September 2003, p. 56: "This is the commencement of the conspiracy, Your Honour."

[25] Transcripts of 19 November 2002, p. 39.

[26] Transcripts of 16 September 2002, p. 122. See also Transcripts of 19 November 2002, p. 37: "You will see that in my answer I referred to 1990 and say that I do not subscribe to the thesis that there was a genocidal plan beginning in 1990. I speak instead of a pattern of learning, of incorporating certain elements that are repeated time after time, the same elements then also appearing at the time of the 1994 genocide."

[27] "More particularly, this evidence goes to the acts of Ntabakuze in both the targeting and the killings of certain individuals, such as Tutsi civilians and non-combatants; the existence of a command structure; how orders within that command structure were given and executed; the opportunity to prevent subordinates from committing criminal acts and to punish subordinates for having committed such acts." Prosecution Response, p. 7.

[28] Prosecutor v. Kupreskic, Decision on Evidence of the Good Character of the Accused and the Defence of Tu Quoque, 17

2905

February 1999. See also R v. Handy, [2002] 2 SCR 908, paras. 37, 39: "The policy basis for exclusion is that while in some cases propensity inferred from similar acts may be relevant, it may also capture the attention of the trier of fact to an unwarranted degree. Its potential for prejudice, distraction and time consumption is very great and these disadvantages will almost always outweigh its probative value. It ought, in general, to form no part of the case which the accused is called on to answer." ... 'The principal reason for the exclusionary rule relating to propensity is that there is a natural human tendency to judge a person's action on the basis of character. Particularly with juries there would be a strong inclination to conclude that a thief has stolen, a violent man has assaulted and a pedophile has engaged in pedophilic acts. Yet the policy of the law is wholly against this process of reasoning.'

[29] Cf. Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic, Hazim Delic, and Esad Landzo, Decision on the Motion of the Prosecution for the Admissibility of Evidence, 19 January 1998, para. 20; Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 24.

[30] The situation here may be contrasted with that in R v. Sidhu, referred to in the Shahabuddeen Opinion, para. 22. There, the accused was charged with possession of explosives.

[31] Prosecutor v. Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T, para. 534; Prosecutor v. Bagilishema, Case No. ICTR-951A-T, para. 50.

[32] R. v. Handy, [2002] 2 SCR 908, para. 83.

[33] Id.

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

12. Prosecutor v. Blaškić, IT-95-14-T, Judgement, 3 March 2000.

UNITED NATIONS

International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of The Former Yugoslavia since 1991

Case No. IT-95-14-T

Date: 3 March 2000

Original: English
French

IN THE TRIAL CHAMBER

Before: Judge Claude Jorda, Presiding
Judge Almiro Rodrigues
Judge Mohamed Shahabuddeen

Registrar: Mrs. Dorothee de Sampayo Garrido-Nijgh

Decision of: 3 March 2000

THE PROSECUTOR

v.

TIHOMIR BLA[KI]

JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Mark Harmon
Mr. Andrew Cayley
Mr. Gregory Kehoe

Defence Counsel:

Mr. Anto Nobilo
Mr. Russell Hayman

TABLE OF CONTENTS

ANNEX vii
I. INTRODUCTION 1
A. The Tribunal 1
B. The Indictment 1
1. The general context and form of responsibility incurred 2
2. The crimes charged 4
a) Persecution 4
b) Unlawful attacks upon civilians and civilian objects 4
c) Wilful killing and serious bodily injury 5
d) Destruction and plunder of property 5
e) Destruction of institutions dedicated to religion or education 5
f) Inhumane treatment, taking of hostages and use of human shields 6
C. The main stages of the proceedings 6
1. Issues relating to the composition of the Trial Chamber 7
2. Issues relating to the detention of the accused 8
a) Motions for modification to the detention conditions of the accused 8
b) Motions for provisional release of the accused 9
3. Issues relating to evidence 9
a) Disclosure obligations 9
b) The exception to the disclosure obligation set down in Rule 70 of the Rules 11
c) The admissibility of the evidence 13
d) Access to the confidential documents in related Lašva Valley cases 14
e) Orders for production of documents 16
i) Proceedings regarding the Republic of Croatia 16
ii) Other proceedings 18
4. Issues relating to the appearance and protection of victims and witnesses 19
5. Issues relating to the length of proceedings 20
6. The issue of the dismissal of some counts following the presentation of Prosecution evidence 21
7. The summoning of Trial Chamber witnesses pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules 22
8. The procedure for determining the sentence 23
II. APPLICABLE LAW 24
A. The requirement that there be an armed conflict 24
1. Definition 24
2. Role 25
a) A condition for charging under Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute 25
b) A condition for jurisdiction under Article 5 of the Statute 25
3. Nexus between the crimes imputed to the accused and the armed conflict 26
B. Article 2 of the Statute: Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions 27
a) International nature of the armed conflict 28
i) Direct intervention 30
ii) Indirect intervention 34
b) Protected persons and property 44
i) The "nationality" of the victims 44
ii) Co-belligerent States 47
a. Co-belligerence 47
b. Reasoning of Article 4 of the Fourth Geneva Convention 49
iii) Prisoners of war 50
iv) Protected property 51

c) The elements of the grave breaches 51
i) Article 2(a) – wilful killing (count 5) 52
ii) Article 2(b) – inhuman treatment (counts 15 and 19) 52
iii) Article 2(c) – wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health (count 8) 53
iv) Article 2(d) – extensive destruction of property (count 11) 53
v) Article 2(h) – taking civilians as hostages (count 17) 53
C. Article 3 of the Statute – Violations of the Laws or Customs of War 54
a) Scope and conditions of applicability of Article 3 of the Statute 54
i) Customary international law and conventional law 55
ii) Individual criminal responsibility 58
iii) Protected persons (Common Article 3) 59
b) The elements of the offences 59
i) Unlawful attack against civilians (count 3); attack upon civilian property (count 4) 59
ii) Murder (count 6) 60
iii) Violence to life and person (count 9) 60
iv) Devastation of property (count 12) 60
v) Plunder of public or private property (count 13) 60
vi) Destruction or wilful damage to institutions dedicated to religion or education (count 14) 61
vii) Cruel treatment (count 16 and 20) 61
viii) Taking of hostages (count 18) 61
D. Article 5 of the Statute: crimes against humanity 62
1. The Arguments of the Parties 63
a) The Prosecution 63
b) The Defence 64
2. Discussion and conclusions 65
a) The legal and factual elements 65
i) The material element 66
a. The widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population 66
i. A widespread or systematic attack 66
ii. A civilian population 70
b. The sub-characterisations 73
i. Murder 73
ii. Persecution 73
iii. Serious bodily and mental harm, infringements upon freedom and attacks against property as forms of persecution 74
iv. Legal and factual elements of the forms of persecution specified in the indictment 78
v. Discrimination 79
vi. Other inhumane acts 80
vii. Serious physical and mental injury as "other inhumane acts" 80 viii. Legal and factual elements of serious bodily or mental harm 81
ii) Mens Rea 81
a. Knowledge of the widespread or systematic attack 82
i. Knowledge of the context 82
ii. Knowing participation in the context 83
iii. The evidence 85
b. Exclusion of discriminatory intent 86
E. Article 7 of the Statute: Individual Criminal Responsibility 86
1. Individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute 86

a) Introduction 86
b) The arguments of the Parties 87
i) The Prosecution 87
ii) The Defence 89
c) Discussion and Findings 90
i) Planning, instigating and ordering 90
ii) Aiding and abetting 91
2. Individual Criminal Responsibility Within the meaning of Article 7(3) 93
a) Introduction 93
b) The Superior-Subordinate Relationship 94
i) Arguments of the parties 94
ii) Discussion and Findings 96
c) Mens Rea: "Knew or Had Reason to Know" 97
i) Arguments of the Parties 97
ii) Discussion and Findings 97
a. "Actual knowledge" 97
b. "Had reason to know" 98
d) Necessary and Reasonable Measures to Prevent or Punish 105
i) Arguments of the Parties 105
ii) Discussion and Conclusions 106
e) Concurrent Application of Articles 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute 107
III. FACTS AND DISCUSSION 109
A. The Lašva Valley: May 1992 – January 1993 109
1. The exacerbation in tensions 109
a) The municipality of Vitez 109
b) The municipality of Busova~a 113
c) The municipality of Kiseljak 117
d) Conclusions 120
2. The Vance-Owen Plan and the January 1993 conflicts 121
a) The Vance-Owen Plan 121
b) The January 1993 conflicts 122
c) Conclusions 124
B. The municipality of Vitez 125
1. Ahmici , Šanti}i , Pirici, Nadioci 125
a) A planned attack with substantial assets 126
i) An organised attack 126
ii) The troops involved 129
b) An attack against the Muslim civilian population 132
i) The absence of military objectives 132
ii) The discriminatory nature of the attack 137
iii) Arrests 138
iv) Murders of civilians 138
v) Destruction of dwellings 140
vi) Destruction of institutions dedicated to religion 141
vii) Plunder 142
c) Conclusion 142
d) General Blaškic's responsibility 143
i) The orders issued by the accused 145
ii) The accused ordered the attack of 16 April 1993 147
iii) The accused ordered an attack aimed at the Muslim population 147
a. The accused's control over the Vite{ka brigade and the Home Guard (Domobrani) 148

b. The control exercised by the accused over the special units 150
c. The accused's control over the Military Police 151
iv) The massive and systematic nature of the crimes as proof that they were committed on orders 155
v) The content of the orders 155
vi) The risk taken by the accused 157
vii) The accused knew that crimes had been committed 159
viii) The accused did not take the necessary measures 163
2. The events in Vitez and Stari Vitez 167
a) The attacks committed as from 16 April 1993 167
b) The widespread or systematic nature of the attacks 169
i) The 16 April 1993 attack 169
ii) The booby-trapped lorry attack of 18 April 1993 170
iii) The 18 July 1993 attack 171
c) The civilian and Muslim character of the target populations 171
i) The 16 April 1993 attack 171
ii) The booby-trapped lorry of 18 April 1993 173
iii) The 18 July 1993 attack 174
d) General Blaškic's responsibility 174
i) The arguments of the parties 174
ii) The individual criminal responsibility of General Blaškic 175
a. The accused's orders or reports as evidence of a relationship of subordination 176
b. The other evidence that there existed a relationship of subordination 178
c. The organized nature of the attacks 179
d. Conclusions 180
3. Other villages in the municipality of Vitez 180
a) Donja Ve~eriska and Ga~ice 180
i) The arguments of the parties 181
ii) The course of the attacks 182
a. Donja Ve~eriska 182
b. Ga~ice 185
b) Grbavica 187
i) The arguments of the parties 187
ii) The course of the attack 188
c) General Bla{ki}'s responsibility 190
C. The municipality of Busovaca 191
1. The attacks against the villages in the municipality of Busovaca 191
a) Loncari 191
b) Ocehnici 192
c) Conclusions 193
i) The organized and massive nature of the attacks 193
ii) The civilian and Muslim nature of the targeted populations 194
2. The responsibility of General Bla{ki} 195
a) The arguments of the parties 195
b) The individual criminal responsibility of General Bla{ki} 196
i) The accused was the superior of the troops involved 196
ii) The accused was responsible for the attacks on the villages of Lon~ari and O~ehni}i 197
D. The municipality of Kiseljak 199
1. The April and June 1993 attacks against the villages in the Kiseljak enclave 199
a) The attacks on the villages in the north of the municipality of Kiseljak 199

i) Behri}i and Gomionica 199
ii) Gromiljak 200
iii) Hercezi 201
iv) Polje Vi{nijica and Vi{nijica 201
v) Rotilj 202
vi) Svinjarevo 204
b) The attacks against the villages in the south of the municipality of Kiseljak 204
i) Grahovci and Han Ploca 204
ii) Tulica 206
c) Conclusions 206
i) The systematic and massive nature of the April and June 1993 attacks 207
ii) The civilian and Muslim character of the targeted populations 209
2. The responsibility of General Bla{ki} 212
a) Arguments of the parties 212
i) The Prosecution 212
ii) The Defence 213
b) Discussion 214
i) The combat preparation order and combat order 214
a. The texts of the combat preparation order and combat order 214
b. The recipient of the orders 216
c. Military assets 217
d. Conclusions 218
ii) The widespread and systematic nature of the crimes perpetrated 218
iii) The general context of persecution of the Muslim populations 220
iv) Conclusions 221
E. The shelling of Zenica 221
1. The Prosecution argument 222
2. The Defence argument 223
3. Conclusions 224
F. Detention related crimes 225
1. Inhuman and cruel treatment 226
a) Arguments of the parties 226
b) Conclusions 227
i) Busova~a municipality 228
ii) Kiseljak municipality 228
iii) Vitez municipality 230
2. Taking of hostages 233
a) Arguments of the parties 233
b) Conclusions 234
3. Inhuman and cruel treatment: human shields 235
a) The arguments of the parties 235
b) Conclusions 236
4. Individual criminal responsibility of General Bla{ki} 237
a) Arguments of the parties 237
b) Conclusions 238
i) Inhuman and cruel treatment (counts 15 and 16) 238
a. Detention centres 238
i. Tihomir Bla{ki} exercised "effective control" over the perpetrators of the crimes 238
ii. Tihomir Bla{ki} "knew or had reason to know" that crimes had been committed 239

iii. Tihomir Bla{ki} did not take the necessary and reasonable measures to punish the perpetrators of the crimes 241
b. Trench digging 242
ii) The taking of hostages (counts 17 and 18) 243
iii) Inhuman and cruel treatment: human shields (counts 19 and 20) 243
IV. FINAL CONCLUSIONS 245
V. PRINCIPLES AND PURPOSES OF SENTENCING 247
A. Applicable provisions 247
1. Statute 247
2. Rules of Procedure and Evidence 248
3. General practice regarding prison sentences 248
4. Purposes and objectives of the sentence 249
B. Sentencing 250
1. The accused 250
2. Mitigating circumstances 251
a) The material mitigating circumstances 251
b) Personal mitigating circumstances 252
3. Aggravating circumstances 256
a) The scope of the crime 256
i) How the crime was committed 256
ii) Effects of the crime upon the victims 258
b) The degree of the accused's responsibility 258
i) Command position 258
ii) Form of participation 260
iii) Premeditation 261
4. Credit for time served 261
5. The sentence 261
a) Legal bases and consequences of an objective ranking of the crimes 262
b) The principles set by the case-law of the two Tribunals 263
i) The principles 263
ii) The method for assessing seriousness 265
c) A single sentence 265
6. Conclusion 266
VI. DISPOSITION 267

ANNEX

Abbreviations

ABiH	Muslim Army of Bosnia-Herzegovina
BH	Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina
BRITBAT	UNPROFOR British Battalion
ICRC	International Committee of the Red Cross
ECMM	European Commission Monitoring Mission
UNPROFOR	United Nations Protection Force
HDZ	Croatian Democratic Community
HOS	Croatian Defence Forces
HV	Army of the Republic of Croatia
HVO	Croatian Defence Council
HZHB	Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna
JNA	Yugoslav People's Army
UN	United Nations
FRY	Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)
SDA	Party of Democratic Action
SDS	Serbian Democratic Party
SIS	HVO Security and Information Service
TO	Bosnian Territorial Defence
VJ	Army of the FRY
VRS	Army of Republika Srpska
CBOZ	Central Bosnia Operative Zone

Players

Miro Andri}	HV Colonel, he was later the "number two at the joint command of the BH armed forces" before returning to the HV in Croatia.
Mate Boban	President of the HZHB and Commander-in-Chief of the HZHB military forces.
Janko Bobetko	HV General, southern front commander.
Mario ^erkez	Commander of the HVO Vitez Brigade.
Filip Filipovi}	HVO Colonel in Travnik.
Darko Geli}	Liaison officer for General Bla{ki} to the UNPROFOR
Enver Had`ihasanovi}	ABiH 3rd Army Corps Commander.
Dario Kordi}	Vice-President of the HZHB.
Ignac Ko{troman	Secretary-General of the HZHB and the HDZ in BH.
Pa{ko Ljubi~i}	Military Police Fourth Battalion Commander.
D`emo Merdan	ABiH Chief-of-Staff.
Slobodan Milo{evi}	President of the FRY.
Milivoj Petkovi}	HV General, HVO headquarters Chief-of-Staff.
Slobodan Praljak	HV General, former Croatian deputy national defence minister in Zagreb, he was replaced by Petkovi} as HVO Chief-of-Staff on 27 July 1993.
Ivica Raji}	HVO operative zone 3 Commander (in Kiseljak).
Ante Roso	HV General in charge of the Livno region, he replaced Praljak as HVO Chief-of-Staff in October 1993.

Bruno Stoji}	Head of the HZHB Defence Department.
Gojko [u{ak	Croatian Minister of Defence.
Franjo Tudjman	President of the Republic of Croatia.
Anto Valenta	President of the HDZ in Vitez, deputy president of the HDZ for the HZHB, vice president of the HVO (April 1993).
Ivica Zeko	Deputy commander of the CBOZ responsible for intelligence activities.

Units

Brigades

a) HVO regular brigades

Ban Jela~i}	Located in Kiseljak and commanded by Mijo Bo`i} and, later, Ivica Raji}.
Bobovac	Located in Vare{ and commanded by Emil Harah.
Frankopan	Located in Gu~a Gora, Travnik and commanded by Ilija Naki}.
Jure Franceti}	Located in Zenica (until 14 May 1993 at the latest) and commanded by @ivko Toti}.
Kotromani}	Located in Kakanj and commanded by Neven Mari}.
Kralj Tvrtko	Located in Sarajevo and commanded by Slavko Zeli}.
Nikola [ubi} Zrinski	Located in Busova~a and commanded by Du{ko Grube{i}.
Stjepan Toma{evi}	Located in Novi Travnik and commanded by @eljko Sablji}.
Vite{ka	Located in Vitez and commanded by Mario ^erkez.
III XP	Located in @ep~e and commanded by Ivo Lozan~i}.
Zenica 2nd Brigade	Located in Zenica (until 14 May 1993 at the latest) and commanded by Vinko Bare{i}).

b) ABiH Chief-of-Staff

3rd Corps	Located in Zenica and commanded by General Had`ihasanovi}, the 3rd Corps commanded the ABiH brigades in central Bosnia.
7th Muslim Brigade	Brigade forming part of the 3rd Corps command structure, particularly well equipped and comprised in part of foreign soldiers (Mujahedin).
325th Mountain Brigade	3rd Corps Brigade in Vitez.

Military Police

Fourth Battalion	Located in Travnik. Commanded initially by Zvonko Vukovi} who was replaced on 18 January 1993 by Pa{ko Ljubi~i}. Pa{ko Ljubi~i} was removed from his position on 23 July 1993 and replaced by Marinko Palavra. In July 1993, the Fourth Battalion was renamed the Seventh Battalion.
Seventh Battalion	See the Fourth Battalion.

Special Units

Bruno Bu{i}	Located in Travnik and commanded by the "director of the Defence Department". The unit left the CBOZ before the April 1993 conflict
D`okeri	Anti-terrorist units formed within the Military Police (Fourth Battalion). Located in the bungalows in Nadioci (still called "Swiss chalet"). The immediate commander was Vlado [anti} whose headquarters were in the Hotel Vitez. Anto Furund`ija was appointed commander, subordinate to Vlado [anti}.
Ludwig Pavlovi}	Located at the Dubravica school (with the Vitezovi).
Maturice	Formed from the Ban Jela~i} brigade. Located in Kiseljak.
Tvrtko II	Located in Nova Bila.
Vitezovi	Located at the Dubravica school. Its members were former HOS members. Commanded by Colonel Darko Kraljevi} and his deputy Niko Kri`anac.
@uti	HVO Frankopan Brigade unit. Located at the Gu~a Gora school in Travnik and commanded by @arko Andri} (nicknamed "@uti").

Others

Domobrani	So-called Home Guard units positioned in each village pursuant to a decision of the Mostar Ministry of Defence dated 8 February 1993.
SIS	Commanded in the CBOZ by Ante Sli{kovi}, office at the Hotel Vitez.
HOS	Commanded in Bosnia by Jadranko Jandri} who was replaced by Mladen Holman before being incorporated into the HVO prior to 16 April 1993.

I. INTRODUCTION

A. The Tribunal

1. The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (hereinafter "the Tribunal") was established by the Security Council[1] pursuant to Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

B. The Indictment

2. General Tihomir Bla{ki}[2] was initially indicted along with five other accused in a single indictment, The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordi} et al, confirmed on 10 November 1995[3]. The indictment charged the accused alone with 13 counts. An Order of Judge McDonald dated 22 November 1996 authorised a new indictment to be filed, The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Bla{ki}, which incorporated seven new counts.

3. Further to the amendment, the Defence filed four preliminary motions all relating to the amended indictment. The first requested that portions of the indictment alleging "failure to punish" liability be struck out on the ground that it did not constitute an offence falling under the jurisdiction of the Tribunal[4]. The Trial Chamber rejected the request of the Defence since it deemed that, in most cases, such a failure also constituted a failure to prevent other crimes from being committed[5].

4. The Defence submitted a second preliminary motion so as to receive a more detailed explanation of the criteria for the intent required for the charges alleging command

---

[1] Resolution 827 (1993) adopted by the Security Council on 25 May 1993.
[2] At the time, the accused was a colonel. He was promoted to General of the army of the Republic of Croatia after the period covered by the indictment. In addition, the first name "Tihofil" was sometimes used in referring to him. To take this situation into account but also to ensure the presentation is consistent, the accused shall be called "General Bla{ki}", "Colonel Bla{ki}", "Tihomir Bla{ki}" or simply "the accused".
[3] Confirmation of the indictment, case no. IT-95-14-I, 10 November 1995. Originally, the document included six accused including Dario Kordi}, Tihomir Bla{ki}, Mario ^erkez and Zlatko Aleksovski. Following severances, the reference "IT-95-14" concerns Tihomir Bla{ki} only.
[4] Motion to strike portions of amended indictment alleging "failure to punish" liability, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 4 December 1996.
[5] Decision on the Defence Motion to strike portions of the amended indictment alleging "failure to punish" liability, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 4 April 1997.

responsibility[6]. The Trial Chamber did not grant the Motion on the ground that it related to the subject-matter of the prosecution and was premature at that stage of the proceedings[7].

5. In a third preliminary motion, the Defence also requested the Trial Chamber to reject those counts under Article 2 of the Tribunal's Statute based on a failure to plead adequately the existence of an international armed conflict[8]. The Motion was rejected because the Trial Chamber considered that the Prosecutor did not have to present proof at this stage of the proceedings that such a conflict did occur and that the formal validity of the indictment was in no manner undermined thereby [9].

6. This Judgement responds to the indictment The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Bla{ki} as amended for the second time on 25 April 1997 further to the Decision of the Trial Chamber on the fourth and last preliminary motion tendered by the Defence for the dismissal of the indictment based upon defects in the form thereof[10]. The Trial Chamber had granted the Defence Motion in part and ordered the Prosecutor to add details relating to the times and places of the facts characterised, the role of the accused and the type of responsibility alleged, pursuant to the criteria set down by Article 18(4) of the Statute and Sub-rule 47(B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (hereinafter "the Rules"). Following a fresh Defence motion, the Trial Chamber deemed that some of the amendments to the indictment did not comply with its previous Decision[11]. The Prosecutor ultimately withdrew count 2 of the indictment[12].

1. The general context and form of responsibility incurred

7. The indictment of 25 April 1997 (hereinafter "the indictment") contains twenty counts including six grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (counts 5, 8, 11, 15, 17 and 19),

---

[6] Motion in limine regarding mens rea required for charges alleging command responsibility and for bill of particulars re command responsibility portions of indictment, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 4 December 1996.
[7] Decision rejecting the Defence motion in limine regarding mens rea required for charges alleging command responsibility and for bill of particulars re command responsibility portions of indictment, Case no. IT-95-14-95-PT, 4 April 1997.
[8] Motion to dismiss counts 4, 7, 10, 14, 16 and 18 based on failure to adequately plead existence of international armed conflict, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 16 Decmeber 1996.
[9] Decision to reject a motion of the Defence to dismiss counts 4, 7, 10, 14, 16 and 18 based on failure to adequately plead existence of international armed conflict, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 4 April 1997.
[10] Decision on the Defence motion to dismiss the indictment based upon defects in the form thereof (vagueness/lack of adequate notice of charges), Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 4 April 1997.
[11] Decision on the Defence request for enforcement of an Order of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 23 May 1997.

eleven violations of the laws or customs of war (counts 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18 and 20)[13] and three crimes against humanity (counts 1, 7 and 10) under Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Tribunal's Statute respectively. The crimes alleged in the indictment were purportedly committed in the context of "serious violations of international humanitarian law against Bosnian Muslims" by members of the armed forces of the Croatian Defence Council (hereinafter "the HVO") between May 1992 and January 1994[14], in the municipalities of:

> Vitez, Busova~a, Kiseljak, Vare{, @ep~e, Zenica, Duvno, Stolac, Mostar, Jablanica, Prozor, ^apljina, Gornji Vakuf, Novi Travnik, Travnik, Kre{evo and Fojnica, all in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina[15].

However, it emerges from the specific counts that the particular municipalities mentioned as the setting for the crimes with which the accused is charged are Vitez, Busova~a, Kiseljak and Zenica.

8. The indictment states that, throughout the period under consideration, a state of international armed conflict and partial occupation existed in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina[16].

9. Tihomir Bla{ki} was appointed commander of the HVO armed forces headquarters in central Bosnia on 27 June 1992 and occupied the position throughout the period covered by the indictment. In this position and pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute, he was accused of having, in concert with members of the HVO, planned, instigated, ordered or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of each of the crimes alleged. In addition or in the alternative, Tihomir Bla{ki} was accused of having known or having had reason to know that subordinates were preparing to commit those crimes or that they had done so and that he had not taken the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the said crimes from being committed or to punish the perpetrators.

---

[12] Summary of the Prosecutor's Final Brief, 22 July 1999 (filed on 30 July 1999) (hereinafter "Prosecutor's Brief"), paragraph (hereinafter "para.") 8.2, p. 59.
[13] For counts 6, 9, 16, 18 and 20, the Prosecutor specifies Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 (hereinafter "the Geneva Conventions") for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field (hereinafter "the First Convention"), for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at sea (hereinafter "the Second Convention"), Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (hereinafter "the Third Convention") and relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (hereinafter "the Fourth Convention"); in addition, for counts 3 and 4, the Prosecutor refers to Articles 51(2) and 52(1) respectively of Protocol I of 8 June 1977 Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 Relating to the Protection of Victims in International Armed Conflicts (hereinafter "Protocol I").
[14] That is, in actual fact, between 1 May 1992 at the earliest and 31 January 1994 at the latest.
[15] Second amended indictment, Case no. ITR-95-14-PT, para. 1.
[16] Ibid., para. 5.10.

2. The crimes charged

10. The indictment brought by the Prosecutor groups the facts imputed to General Bla{ki} into six distinct categories.

a) Persecution

11. Under count 1, Tihomir Bla{ki} is accused of a crime against humanity for persecution[17] of the Muslim civilian population of Bosnia[18] throughout the municipalities of Vitez, Busova~a, Kiseljak and Zenica on political, racial or religious grounds from May 1992 to January 1994[19]. The persecution was allegedly implemented through a widespread, large-scale and systematic attack upon towns, villages and hamlets inhabited by Bosnian Muslims[20]. During and after the attack, Bosnian Muslim civilians were allegedly murdered and subjected to serious bodily harm[21] whilst dwellings, buildings, private property, livestock and businesses belonging to Bosnian Muslims as well as their institutions dedicated to religion or education were all allegedly plundered and wilfully destroyed[22]. Furthermore, the Prosecutor alleged that hundreds of Bosnian Muslim civilians were systematically arrested, interned, treated inhumanly[23], intimidated and coerced to leave their homes or forcibly transferred by the HVO to zones outside the municipalities of Vitez, Busova~a and Kiseljak. The forcible transfer of civilians was allegedly described "by HVO representatives as a voluntary or humanitarian transfer of civilians [...]"[24]. The persecutions allegedly resulted in a considerable reduction of the Bosnian Muslim civilian population within the three municipalities[25].

b) Unlawful attacks upon civilians and civilian objects

12. Under counts 2 to 4, Tihomir Bla{ki} was accused of three violations of the laws or customs of war[26] for the unlawful attacks upon civilians and civilian objects and for the destruction, not justified by military necessity, which were allegedly perpetrated in the

---

[17] Article 5(h) of the Statute.
[18] The Trial Chamber states the neutrality of the expression, in any case used by the Prosecutor (hereinafter "Bosnian Muslims" or "Muslim civilians").
[19] Second amended indictment, Case no. ITR-95-14-PT, para. 6.
[20] Ibid., para. 6.1.
[21] Ibid., para. 6.2.
[22] Ibid., para. 6.3.
[23] Ibid., paras. 6.4 and 6.5..
[24] Ibid., para. 6.7.
[25] Ibid., para. 7.
[26] Articles 3 and 3(b) of the Statute and Articles 51(2) and 52(1) of Protocol I for counts 3 and 4.

towns and villages of Ahmi}i, Nadioci, Piri}i, [anti}i, O~ehni}i, Vitez, Stari Vitez, Rotilj and Zenica[27].

c) Wilful killing and serious bodily injury

13. Under counts 5 to 10, Tihomir Bla{ki} was prosecuted for wilful killing and serious physical and mental injury to civilians, allegedly committed from January 1993 to January 1994 in the municipalities of Vitez, Busova~a, Kiseljak and Zenica[28]. The crimes thus alleged were prosecuted as two serious breaches of the Geneva Conventions[29], two violations of the laws or customs of war[30] and two crimes against humanity[31].

d) Destruction and plunder of property

14. Under counts 11 to 13, Tihomir Bla{ki} was accused of a serious breach of the Geneva Conventions[32] and two violations of the laws or customs of war[33] for the large-scale plunder and destruction of Bosnian Muslim dwellings, buildings, businesses, private property and livestock between January 1993 and September 1993, and more specifically in Ahmi}i, Nadioci, Piri}i, [anti}i, O~ehni}i, Vitez, Stari Vitez, Donja Ve~eriska, Ga~ice, Lon~ari, Behri}i, Svinjarevo, Gomionica, Gromiljak, Polje Vi{njica, Vi{njica and Rotilj in April 1993, in Tulica and Han Plo~a/Grahovci in June 1993, again in Stari Vitez in August 1993 and in Grbavica in September 1993[34].

e) Destruction of institutions dedicated to religion or education

15. Under count 14, Tihomir Bla{ki} was accused of a violation of the laws or customs of war[35] for the destruction or wilful damage done to Bosnian Muslim institutions dedicated to religion or education between August 1992 and June 1993 – in Duhri in August 1992, Busova~a, Stari Vitez and Svinjarevo in 1993, Ahmi}i, Kiseljak, Gromiljak and Kazagi}i in April 1993, Hercezi, Han Plo~a and Tulica in June 1993 and Vi{njica in September 1993[36].

---

[27] Second amended indictment, para. 8.
[28] Ibid., para. 9.
[29] Articles 2(a) and 2(c) of the Statute.
[30] Article 3 of the Statute and Article 3(1) of the Geneva Conventions.
[31] Articles 5(a) and 5(i) of the Statute.
[32] Article 2(d) of the Statute.
[33] Articles 3(b) and 3(e) of the Statute.
[34] Second amended indictment, para. 10.
[35] Article 3(d) of the Statute.
[36] Second amended indictment, para. 11.

f) Inhumane treatment, taking of hostages and use of human shields

16. Counts 15 to 20 concern the cruel and inhumane treatment inflicted from January 1993 to January 1994 on Bosnian Muslims detained at facilities controlled by the HVO[37], the taking of Bosnian Muslim civilians as hostages between January 1993 and January 1994 to obtain prisoner exchanges and the cessation of Bosnian military operations against the HVO[38] and, lastly, the use of Bosnian Muslim civilians between January 1993 and April 1993 as human shields to protect the HVO positions[39]. In this respect, the Prosecutor charged the accused with three grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions[40] and three violations of the laws or customs of war[41].

C. The main stages of the proceedings

17. Following Judge McDonald's confirmation of the initial indictment on 10 November 1995, the warrants of arrest ordering the transfer of the accused were sent to the authorities of the Federation of Bosnia-Herzegovina of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and to the authorities of the Republic of Croatia[42]. Copies of the indictments and warrants of arrest were subsequently sent to IFOR[43] upon an Order of Judge Jorda. Lastly, Judge Vohrah issued a warrant of arrest ordering the transfer of Tihomir Bla{ki} to the Kingdom of The Netherlands on 28 March 1996[44].

18. Tihomir Bla{ki} voluntarily gave himself up to the International Tribunal on 1 April 1996 and, pursuant to Rule 62 of the Rules, his initial appearance hearing was held on 3 April 1996 before Trial Chamber I composed of Judge Jorda, presiding, Judge Deschênes and Judge Riad. The accused pleaded "not guilty" to all the counts brought against him in the initial indictment. On 4 December 1996, Tihomir Bla{ki} pleaded "not guilty" to the new counts confirmed against him[45] following the first amendment of the indictment on 22 November 1996. The second amendment of the indictment on

---

[37] Ibid., paras. 13 and 14.
[38] Ibid., para. 15.
[39] Ibid., para. 16.
[40] Articles 2(b) and 2(h) of the Statute.
[41] Article 3 of the Statute and Article 3(1)(a) common to the four Geneva Conventions.
[42] Warrants of Arrest Order for Surrender of Tihomir Bla{ki} addressed to the Federation of Bosnia-Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, Case no. IT-95-14-I, 10 November 1995.
[43] Order rendered on 24 December 1995 by Judge Claude Jorda, Case no. IT-95-14-I, 24 December 1995.
[44] Warrant of Arrest Order for Surrender of Tihomir Bla{ki} addressed to the Kingdom of The Netherlands, Case no. IT-95-14-I, 28 March 1996.
[45] Provisional English Transcript (hereinafter "PT") of the hearing of 4 December 1996, p. 5.

25 April 1997 did not bring any new counts against the accused who, for that reason, did not have to enter a new plea.

19. The proceedings against Tihomir Bla{ki} before the Tribunal were complex and at each stage gave rise to many questions, often without precedent. Accordingly, during the fourteen-month pre-trial phase, the Tribunal rendered eighty-two interlocutory decisions. The trial proper commenced on 24 June 1997[46] and lasted a little over two years, closing on 30 July 1999. During this stage of the proceedings, seventy-eight interlocutory Decisions were rendered, 158 witnesses heard and more than one thousand three hundred exhibits filed[47]. The French version of the transcript runs to more than 18,300 pages. This chapter is intended to recall the various stages of the lengthy proceedings in brief and according to the issues. However, it will not deal with the issues relating to the indictment, which were examined in the previous chapter or the proceedings relating to binding Orders for the production of documents addressed to some States.

1. Issues relating to the composition of the Trial Chamber

20. The Trial Chamber hearing the present case was initially composed of Judge Jorda, presiding, Judge Deschênes and Judge Riad. Since Judge Deschênes was unable to continue sitting in the case, the President of the Tribunal ordered the temporary assignment of Judge Li pursuant to Sub-rule 15(F) of the Rules[48]. On 18 April 1997, Judge Deschênes resigned for medical reasons and was replaced on 16 June 1997 by Judge Shahabuddeen who was assigned to the case in an Order of the President[49] on the same day of his appointment to the Tribunal.

21. Sub-rule 15(F) was implemented for a second time when Judge Riad became unavailable for approximately three months for medical reasons. Upon consulting with the parties at two status conferences[50], the Presiding Judge of the Trial Chamber, Claude Jorda, submitted a report to the President of the Tribunal expressing his preference for Judge Riad to be replaced given the circumstances[51]. The said report recalled that the Prosecutor

---

[46] Order for the holding of a hearing and the setting of a date for the start of trial, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 17 June 1997.
[47] Some of the exhibits contain several distinct parts, even up to around one hundred elements.
[48] Order of the President temporarily assigning a Judge to Trial Chamber I, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 27 January 1997.
[49] Order of the President assigning a Judge to a Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 16 June 1997.
[50] PT of 12 and 21 January 1999.
[51] Report of the Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber I pursuant to Sub-rule 15(F) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Decision on the production of discovery materials, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 26 January 1999.

favoured a solution which would enable Judge Riad to continue reviewing the case and mentioned the document filed by the accused reiterating his conditional consent to the continuation of the proceedings following the assignment of a new Judge[52]. In view of these developments, the President of the Tribunal ordered the assignment of Judge Almiro Rodrigues and the resumption of proceedings before the newly composed Trial Chamber[53].

2. Issues relating to the detention of the accused

22. The Trial Chamber considers that in this instance it is appropriate to distinguish between the requests for modification to the detention conditions presented to the President of the Tribunal pursuant to Rule 64 of the Rules and the Motions for provisional release submitted to the Trial Chamber by the accused pursuant to Rule 65 of the Rules. Although in this case, the requests were filed at the same time, they will be examined successively in this chapter.

a) Motions for modification to the detention conditions of the accused

23. On the same day as Tihomir Bla{ki}'s surrender to the Tribunal, Defence Counsel submitted to the President of the Tribunal pursuant to Rule 64 of the Rules a motion for modification to the conditions of detention of the accused. The President authorised that the accused be detained under strict conditions outside the United Nations Detention Unit facilities "within the confines of a residence designated by the Netherlands authorities" [54]. The detention conditions were later modified, in particular as regards family visits and movement of the accused outside[55]. Nonetheless, following serious threats to the security of General Bla{ki}, these detention conditions were abandoned in a Decision of the Tribunal and the accused was transferred to the United Nations Detention Unit[56].

---

[52] Conditional consent of the accused to the continuation of the proceedings following the assignment of a new Judge to the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 22 January 1999.
[53] Order of the President for the assignment of a Judge to the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 29 January 1999.
[54] Decision on the motion of the Defence filed pursuant to Rule 64 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Case no. IT-95-14-I, 3 April 1996, para. 24.
[55] Decision on the motion of the Defence seeking modification to the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 17 April 1996; Decision on the motion of the Defence seeking modification to the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 9 May 1996; Decision on motion of the Defence seeking modification of the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 9 January 1997; Decision on the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 26 May 1997.
[56] Order modifying the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 20 June 1997; Decision on the modification of the conditions of detention of General Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 23 June 1997; Decision, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 17 July 1997.

b) Motions for provisional release of the accused

24. Defence Counsel to Tihomir Bla{ki} twice presented a motion for provisional release pursuant to Rule 65 of the Rules. The first gave rise to a Decision dated 25 April 1996 and the second to a Decision dated 20 December 1996. In both instances the Trial Chamber rejected the Motion upon reviewing all the elements to be taken into consideration[57].

3. Issues relating to evidence

25. Throughout the trial, the administration of the evidence gave rise to many motions relating both to the disclosure obligations of the parties and to the admissibility of the evidence. One of the characteristics of this case is that the questions relating to disclosure obligations, which typically arise at the pre-trial phase, persisted through the trial itself. It is also appropriate to deal with the unprecedented matter of access to confidential documents in related "La{va Valley" cases and the lengthy procedure for Orders addressed to States for the production of documents.

a) Disclosure obligations

26. Seised of a Defence motion[58], the Trial Chamber rendered a Decision on 27 January 1997 setting out how it interpreted the scope of the parties' disclosure obligations under Rules 66, 67 and 68 of the Rules[59].

Pursuant to former Sub-rule 66(A) of the Rules, the Trial Chamber initially took up a broad interpretation of the notion of disclosure by concluding that all the prior statements of the accused appearing in the Prosecutor's case-file had to be disclosed to the Defence without delay whatever their nature or origin. The Judges further stated that the same criteria were to apply mutatis mutandis to the prior statements of the witnesses under that same Sub-rule 66(A). Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber attached two reservations to this interpretation, grounded on Sub-rules 66(C) and 70(A) of the Rules respectively.

Secondly, on the issue of the disclosure of the Prosecution witnesses' names to the Defence provided for under Sub-rule 67(A), the Trial Chamber found that all the names of the witnesses had to be disclosed "at the same time in a comprehensive document which thus [57] Decision rejecting a request for provisional release, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 25 April 1996. Order denying a motion for provisional release, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 20 December 1996.

[58] Motion to compel the production of discovery material, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 26 November 1996.
[59] Decision on the production of discovery materials, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 27 January 1997.

permits the Defence to have a clear and cohesive view of the Prosecution's strategy and to make the appropriate preparations"[60].

Thirdly, the Trial Chamber evaluated the scope and methods of application of Rule 68 of the Rules relating to the Prosecutor's disclosure of exculpatory material. It recalled that the obligation was boundless and unquestionably fell upon the Prosecutor alone, though under the control of the Trial Chamber, if only because she was in possession of the said exculpatory material. However, the Trial Chamber drew a parallel between the evidence identified under Sub-rule 66(B) of the Rules "material to the preparation of the Defence" and Rule 68 exculpatory evidence. Applying the case-law on the interpretation of Sub-rule 66(B) in the ^elebi}i case[61] to Rule 68, it therefore deduced that where the Defence contested the Prosecutor's execution of her obligations it "must present a prima facie case which would make probable the exculpatory nature of the materials sought"[62].

27. The Trial Chamber subsequently heard fresh motions on the matter during the same trial and clarified its case-law of 27 January 1997.

Hence, in response to a Defence motion, the Trial Chamber reviewed the notion of prior statements in the light of its foregoing case-law on the subject and found that topographical maps, personal journals and radio logs could not be likened to prior statements of witnesses within the meaning of Sub-rule 66(A) of the Rules and did not need to be disclosed to the Defence[63]. The matter was also raised in respect of written orders of Tihomir Bla{ki}. The Trial Chamber assessed, however, that these were documents within the meaning of Sub-rule 66(B) of the Rules and fell under Sub-rule 66(A):

> all statements made by the accused during questioning in any type of judicial proceedings which may be in the possession of the Prosecutor, but only such statements[64].

The Defence also approached the Trial Chamber in order to have the statements of a third party presented by a witness at a hearing disclosed to it. The Judges limited the field of

---

[60] Ibid., para. 22.
[61] Decision on the Motion by the accused Zejnil Delali} for the disclosure of evidence, Case no. IT-96-21-T, 26 September 1996.
[62] Decision on the production of discovery materials, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 27 January 1997, para. 49.
[63] Decision on the Defence Motion to preclude testimony of certain Prosecution witnesses based upon the Prosecution's violation of the Tribunal's Order compelling the production of discovery materials, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 August 1997.
[64] Decision on the Defence Motion for sanctions for the Prosecutor's failure to comply with Sub-rule 66(A) of the Rules and the Decision of 27 January 1997 compelling the production of all statements of the accused, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 15 July 1998, p. 3.

application of Sub-rule 66(A) of the Rules to the statements of only those witnesses whom the Prosecutor actually meant to call[65], in addition to the elements provided to the confirming Judge in support of the indictment.

28. In respect of application of Sub-rule 67(A) of the Rules on disclosure to the Defence of the names of the Prosecution witnesses called to appear, the Prosecutor was instructed to provide the Trial Chamber and the Defence with the list of the witnesses whom she intended to call to appear at least two working days beforehand[66]. The Trial Chamber did not adjudge it appropriate at this stage to rule on the proceedings as regards the reciprocal prior disclosure of the names of Defence witnesses[67]. It was only just before the Defence began to present its case that the Trial Chamber ordered that the names and identifying information of the Defence witnesses whom the Defence intended to call and the summary of the facts on which their testimony would bear be disclosed at least seven days before their appearance[68]. This was done for the purposes of a faster and more efficient conduct of the proceedings and pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules.

29. Being seised of a Defence motion, the Trial Chamber clarified its initial case-law on the interpretation of Rule 68 of the Rules and stated that it assumed that the Office of the Prosecutor was acting in good faith. However it reserved the possibility to verify on a case by case basis the potential failures and, at time of trial, draw the necessary conclusions as regards the probative value to be given to the evidence in question[69].

b) The exception to the disclosure obligation set down in Rule 70 of the Rules

30. Pursuant to Sub-rule 70(A) of the Rules:

> reports, memoranda, or other internal documents prepared by a party, its assistants or representatives in connection with the investigation or preparation of the case, are not subject to disclosure or notification [65] Decision on the Defence Motion to compel the disclosure of Rule 66 and 68 material relating to statements made by a person known as "X", Case no. IT-95-14-T, 15 July 1998.

[66] Decision on the Defence Motion to preclude testimony of certain Prosecution witnesses based upon the Prosecution's violation of the Tribunal's Order compelling the production of discovery materials, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 August 1997.
[67] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Prosecutor's Motion for clarification of order requiring advance disclosure of witnesses and for Order requiring reciprocal advance disclosure by the Defence, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 29 January 1998.
[68] Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for seven (7) days advance disclosure of Defence witnesses and Defence witnesses statements, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 3 September 1998.
[69] Decision on the Defence Motion for "Sanctions for Prosecutor's repeated violations of Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence", Case no. IT-95-14-T, 29 April 1998.

The Trial Chamber took note that the accused, appearing as a witness in accordance with Sub-rule 85(C) of the Rules, relied upon his personal notes made during the preparation of his defence which included a war diary kept by his assistant and a military logbook of activities held at the headquarters. The Judges were of the opinion that these materials did not constitute internal documents within the meaning of Sub-rule 70(A) of the Rules and considered it appropriate and in the interests of justice to be able to view them. In so doing and where need be, they ordered the Defence or the Federation of Bosnia-Herzegovina to disclose them to the Trial Chamber[70]. The Defence replied that it no longer had these materials in its possession.[71]

31. The other paragraphs under Rule 70 of the Rules deal with the exception to the disclosure obligation set down in Rules 66, 67 and 68 of the Rules. The Trial Chamber acknowledged that this was an exceptional and strictly governed right which benefited mutatis mutandis the accused and was intended to allow the use of confidential source information which, failing the said provision, would allegedly prove unusable[72]. In light of several Prosecution and Defence submissions[73] within the terms of Rule 70, the Judges stated its conditions of applicability and its limits.

32. In accordance with Rule 70 of the Rules, the Trial Chamber held that the information specified must meet several conditions, that is: be in the applicant's possession; have been disclosed confidentially - the holder or holding entity being the sole judge of its confidentiality; and have been used for the sole purpose of collecting new evidence which, contrary to initial information, did not enjoy Rule 70 protection.[74]

33. Pursuant to Sub-rule 70(B) of the Rules, the transmission and use in evidence of information responding to the criteria specified above are subject to the consent of the person or entity providing them. The Trial Chamber nevertheless firmly recalled the limits of this protection where the rights of the Defence were involved and affirmed that once the person or entity holding the information had consented to its use in evidence it had to be disclosed without undue delay to the Defence and that the person or entity concerned could not determine whether and, where applicable, when it was appropriate to disclose the said

---

[70] Order for the production of documents used to prepare for testimony, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 22 April 1999.
[71] No response was received from the Federation.
[72] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Prosecutor's Motion for video deposition and protective measures, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 11 November 1997, para. 10.
[73] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Application of the Defence pursuant to Sub-rule 70(F) of the Rules, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 12 January 1999 (under seal) and Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Motion to protect a witness, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 19 March 1999.
[74] Aforementioned Decision of 11 November 1997, paras. 10-23.

information[75]. The Trial Chamber further observes that recourse to this provision of the Rules allowed highly confidential evidence to be presented to the Trial Chamber, in particular by former representatives of the government of a member State of the United Nations.

c) The admissibility of the evidence

34. The admissibility of the evidence presented at trial was also the subject of Decisions on several occasions. The principle embodied by the case-law of the Trial Chamber on the issue is the one of extensive admissibility of evidence - questions of credibility or authenticity being determined according to the weight given to each of the materials by the Judges at the appropriate time.

35. In this respect, it is appropriate to point out that the Trial Chamber authorised the presentation of evidence without its being submitted by a witness. The Trial Chamber relied on various criteria for this. At the outset, it is appropriate to observe that the proceedings were conducted by professional Judges with the necessary ability for first hearing a given piece of evidence and then evaluating it so as to determine its due weight with regard to the circumstances in which it was obtained, its actual contents and its credibility in light of all the evidence tendered. Secondly, the Trial Chamber could thus obtain much material of which it might otherwise have been deprived. Lastly, the proceedings restricted the compulsory resort to a witness serving only to present documents. In summary, this approach allowed the proceedings to be expedited whilst respecting the fairness of the trial and contributing to the ascertainment of the truth.

36. Nonetheless, the discussions between the parties as to how evidence was to be administered were generally animated and acrimonious. By way of example, the Trial Chamber notes the following submissions.

Initially, the Defence filed a standing objection to the admission of hearsay with no inquiry as to its reliability. The Trial Chamber rejected this objection on the ground that Sub-rule 89(C) of the Rules authorises the Trial Chamber to receive any relevant evidence which it deems has probative value and that the indirect nature of the testimony depends on the weight which the Judges give to it and not on its admissibility[76].

---

[75] Decision on the Prosecutor's request for authorization to delay disclosure of Rule 70 information, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 6 May 1998, paras. 13-15.
[76] Decision on the standing objection of the Defence to the admission of hearsay with no inquiry as to its reliability, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 January 1998.

The Defence raised a similar issue regarding the authenticity of documents produced during testimony. The Trial Chamber found that any documentary evidence produced by a party and identified by a witness was admissible and that any dispute over its authenticity did not derive from its admissibility but from the weight which it would be appropriate to give to it[77].

Furthermore, the Trial Chamber was confronted with the problem of the admission of the statement of a deceased witness which had been given under oath to the Prosecutor's investigators. The Judges considered this to be clearly one of the exceptions to the principle of oral witness testimony, in particular for cross-examination, accepted in the different national and international legal systems and therefore they admitted the said statement in evidence but reserved the right to give it the appropriate weight when the time came[78].

Finally, in order to assist the Judges in their search for the truth, the Trial Chamber authorised that the statement of a witness who had already appeared before it be admitted into evidence. In so doing, it considered that pursuant to Rule 89 of the Rules it could admit any relevant document with probative value and reserve the right to evaluate freely the weight to be given to it at the end of the trial[79].

d) Access to the confidential documents in related La{va Valley cases

37. On 16 September 1998, Defence for the accused Dario Kordi} and Mario ^erkez (hereinafter "the Kordi}-^erkez Defence") filed a motion for access to the non-public materials in this case, that is, the hearing transcripts, exhibits, Orders and Decisions concerning events, facts and witnesses at issue in their related case, with the Trial Chamber hearing the case The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Bla{ki} (hereinafter "the Bla{ki} Trial Chamber")[80]. On 12 November 1998, the Trial Chamber hearing the case The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordi} and Mario ^erkez (hereinafter "the Kordi}-^erkez Trial Chamber") issued, at the same time, a Decision on the matter in which it requested the Trial Chambers concerned to give their reasoned opinion on the review of the issues raised and to indicate whether the

[77] Decision on the Defence Motion for reconsideration of the ruling to exclude from evidence authentic and exculpatory documentary evidence, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 30 January 1998
[78] Decision on the Defence Motion to admit into evidence the prior statement of deceased witness Midhat Ha{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 29 April 1998.
[79] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the application of the Prosecutor to admit into evidence the statement of Defence witness Mr. Leyshon, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 16 March 1999.
[80] Motion of the accused Dario Kordi} and Mario ^erkez for access to the non-public materials in this case, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 16 September 1998.

Motion could be granted and if so under what confidentiality and protective measure conditions[81].

38. The Bla{ki} Trial Chamber rendered its Opinion on 16 December 1998 pursuant to the Decision of the Kordi}-^erkez Trial Chamber[82]. Bearing in mind that the two cases had at the outset formed part of one and the same indictment, the Trial Chamber affirmed that the Prosecutor was compelled to disclose to the Kordi}-^erkez Defence all statements or evidence within the meaning of Rules 66 and 68 of the Rules. Nonetheless, the Judges stated that protective measures granted to witnesses by the Bla{ki} Trial Chamber must apply ipso facto to the parties in the Kordi}-^erkez case and proposed a set of tightened measures in order to offset the increased risk of breaches of confidentiality due to the greater number of persons in possession of confidential information. These additional measures included, inter alia, limitation on access to confidential documents to a single responsible custodian and the use of separate pseudonyms in the two cases.

39. Subsequently, the Bla{ki} Trial Chamber rendered another Decision on the disclosure to the Kordi}-^erkez Defence of a confidential transcript of a statement given by a witness appearing for the Defence. The Bla{ki} Trial Chamber recalled that, although the Defence was not subject to the same disclosure obligations as the Prosecutor, with the exception of the materials tendered under Rule 70 of the Rules the Prosecutor remained subject to her Rule 66 and 68 obligations with no distinction being made between the public or confidential nature of the documents concerned[83].

40. On 17 January 2000, the Bla{ki} Trial Chamber authorised the Prosecutor's use of a confidential document belonging to the Bla{ki} Defence, subject to the appropriate protective measures being taken by the Kordi}-^erkez Trial Chamber. The Bla{ki} Defence did not contest the principle by which the document was disclosed to the Judges and the Defence in the Kordi}-^erkez case[84].

---

[81] Decision on the Motion of the accused for access to non-public materials in the La{va Valley and related cases, Case no. IT-95-14/2-T, 12 November 1998.
[82] Opinion further to the Decision of the Trial Chamber seized of the case The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordi} and Mario ^erkez dated 12 November 1998, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 16 December 1998.
[83] Decision on the Prosecution and Defence Motions dated 25 January 1999 and 25 March 1999 respectively, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 22 April 1999.
[84] Decision on the Motion to allow non-public evidence to be revealed to the Kordi}-^erkez Trial Chamber and Defence Counsel, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 17 January 2000.

e) Orders for production of documents

41. This Trial Chamber conducted several parallel proceedings relating to the forced production of documents by certain States and entities. Beforehand, it is appropriate to point out that both the Prosecution and the Defence resorted to these proceedings. In addition, it must be recorded that the Trial Chamber was not necessarily informed of whether the measures it ordered were properly executed. It is incumbent upon the requesting party to refer any difficulties to the Trial Chamber which, however, does not intervene, or only marginally so, in the hand-over of the documents requested.

i) Proceedings regarding the Republic of Croatia

42. The issue of a subpoena duces tecum ordering the production of documents had been pending in the Bla{ki} case since 10 January 1997, the date on which the Prosecutor requested a Judge to issue a subpoena duces tecum to Croatia. The Judge issued just such a subpoena duces tecum on 15 January 1997 to Croatia and Mr. Gojko [u{ak, then Minister of Defence[85]. Her Order listed the documents to be produced by 14 February 1997 at the latest. Croatia declared in a letter dated 10 February 1997, first, that it adjudged that any request addressed to its Minister as a government official was ungrounded as, according to the Statute and the Rules, a request for assistance had to be addressed to a State and, second, that as a sovereign State, it could not accept to comply with the order of the subpoena duces tecum "but respecting its obligations under the Tribunal's Statute reiterate[d] its readiness for full co-operation under the terms applicable to all States"[86]. On 19 February 1997, Judge McDonald held a hearing at which a representative from Croatia expressed an identical view. That same day, the Prosecutor issued an official request for assistance to the Republic of Croatia pursuant to Rule 39 of the Rules asking for the same categories of documents[87]. The discussions continued for several months before Trial Chamber II ruled, on 18 July 1997, on [85] Subpoena duces tecum issued to the Republic of Croatia and to the Ministry of Defence Gojko [u{ak, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, Judge McDonald, 15 January 1997. Judge MacDonald issued the Order being the Judge who confirmed the indictment against Tihomir Bla{ki}.

[86] Reply to subpoena duces tecum, government of the Republic of Croatia, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 10 February 1997.
[87] Request for assistance to the Republic of Croatia by the Prosecutor under Rule 39 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Tribunal, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 19 February 1997.

the power of the Tribunal to issue subpoenae duces tecum[88] and the Appeals Chamber rendered a subsequent ruling[89].

43. On 29 October 1997, the Appeals Chamber ruled pursuant to Rule 108 bis of the Rules on the Request of the Republic of Croatia filed on 25 July which requested inter alia that the 18 July Decision of Trial Chamber II be reviewed and set aside and the subpoena duces tecum of 15 January 1997 be quashed[90]. In its Judgement, the Appeals Chamber decided that neither a State nor its ex officio official agents could be the subject of a subpoena duces tecum and stated the conditions under which a potential binding Order to a State to produce documents or other items could be issued and the rights and duties of the State concerned. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber set the criteria which any motion for an Order for the production of documents had to meet[91]. These criteria were: 1) an exact description of the documents requested (as opposed to broad categories); 2) the relevance of the documents to the trial; 3) comparatively simple execution of the Order; and 4) a sufficient time-period for the State to comply[92]. Furthermore, it established the "possible modalities of making allowance for national security concerns"[93].

44. On 12 January 1998, the Prosecutor, relying on Article 29 of the Statute[94], filed a motion "for the issuance of a binding Order on the Republic of Croatia for the production of documents". The Trial Chamber granted the Motion and issued confidentially and ex parte the Order of 30 January 1998[95] in which it instructed that the documents requested be provided to the Office of the Prosecutor in the shortest possible time and by 27 February 1998 at the latest. On 13 February 1998, the Republic of Croatia filed a Request pursuant to Rule 108 bis

---

[88] Decision on the objection of the Republic of Croatia to the issuance of subpoenae duces tecum, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 18 July 1997, (hereinafter "the Decision on the subpoenae duces tecum").

[89] Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia for review of the Decision of Trial Chamber II of 18 July 1997, Case no. IT-95-14-AR 108*bis*, 29 October 1997 (hereinafter "the Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia"); for a full reminder of the proceedings of the issue until the Judgement, see the Judgement, para. 2-18.

[90] In addition, Croatia requested that the Order of the Trial Chamber be suspended until the Appeals Judgement had been rendered and that no new binding Order under threat of sanctions be issued to the States or their official agents. The Appeals Chamber declared the Request admissible and suspended the subpoena duces tecum (Decision on the admissibility of the request for review by the Republic of Croatia of an interlocutory Decision of a Trial Chamber (issuance of subpoenae duces tecum) and scheduling Order, The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Bla{ki}, Case no. IT-95-14-AR 108*bis*, Appeals Chamber, 29 July 1997).

[91] The Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia, para. 32.

[92] For an exact description of the four criteria see the Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia, para. 32.

[93] The Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia, paras. 67-69.

[94] Article 29 of the Statute entitled, "Co-operation and judicial assistance" states inter alia that "States shall comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber, including but not limited to [...] the production of evidence [and] the service of documents".

of the Rules for the Order of 30 January 1998 to be reviewed and stayed[96]. A lengthy dispute ensued during which the Trial Chamber strove, within the context of the Appeals Chamber decision, to obtain production of those documents which it deemed relevant whilst taking account of the national security concerns expressed by the Republic of Croatia.

45. On 15 and 16 April 1999, following many procedural episodes, the Trial Chamber consequently heard a civil servant duly empowered by the Republic of Croatia to put forward its concerns, especially regarding national security. The proceedings allowed it to be established that the Republic of Croatia had disclosed only a very limited number of documents. Furthermore, the Republic of Croatia transmitted directly to the Trial Chamber some documents which the Prosecutor had refused on the ground that they were not responsive to her successive motions. The documents essentially touched on the humanitarian aid transited through the Republic of Croatia bound for Bosnia-Herzegovina and on the treatment given to refugees to Bosnia-Herzegovina. They could in no manner be construed as responding to the Prosecutor's motions, interesting though they might be.

46. Finally, on 16 November 1999, the Appeals Chamber found that there was reason to reject the Request for review of the Republic of Croatia without prejudice to the rights of the parties to raise an issue further to the present Judgement[97].

ii) Other proceedings

47. Other proceedings for the production of documents were undertaken against States and other entities. The spirit of co-operation of the entities came to the fore at hearings organised to enable a procedure for executing Trial Chamber decisions to be passed which took into account the legitimate confidentiality and security concerns of these entities. On a State level, some responses provided by the Croatian part of the Croat-Muslim Federation appeared to contradict other elements in the possession of the Trial Chamber, including the accused's statements[98].

---

[95] Order on the Motion of the Prosecutor for the issuance of a binding Order on the Republic of Croatia for the production of documents (confidential – ex parte), Case no. IT-95-14-T, 30 January 1998.
[96] Notice of State Request for review of Order on the Motion of the Prosecutor for the issuance of a binding Order on the Republic of Croatia for the production of documents and Request for stay of Trial Chamber's Order of 30 January 1998 (hereinafter "the Request of Croatia").
[97] Order terminating proceedings, Case no. IT-95-14-AR 108*bis*, 16 November 1999.
[98] The accused claimed that he had been able to prepare his testimony upon the basis of archives whose existence the party concerned denied.

4. Issues relating to the appearance and protection of victims and witnesses

48. On 17 June 1996, the Trial Chamber rendered its first Decision granting protective measures to Prosecution witnesses. It observed that there were exceptional circumstances covered by Sub-rule 69(A) of the Rules and authorised the sole disclosure to the Defence, by 1 September 1996 at the latest, of versions of the witnesses' statements which had been redacted of names and identifying information until the witnesses were placed under the Tribunal's protection[99]. Having rejected the Request of the Prosecutor for an ex parte hearing[100], on 18 September 1996, the Trial Chamber heard the parties in closed session regarding the Prosecutor's request for release from her obligations pursuant to the Decision of 17 June 1996 through a general Order to the Defence for non-communication of witness identification information. In its Decision of 2 October 1996, the Trial Chamber ordered that all the redacted statements be disclosed in their unabridged versions within fifteen days as well as the ten statements still not communicated from before 1 December 1996, failing which the testimony could not be used in trial. The Defence was bound by a non-disclosure obligation in respect of the identification information under pain of contempt of the Tribunal[101]. This measure imposed on the Defence was subsequently to be the focus of a general Order prohibiting it from:

> disclos[ing] to the public or to the media the name of the witnesses residing in the territory of the former Yugoslavia or any other information which would permit them to be identified, unless absolutely necessary for the preparation of the Defence[102].

Prior to the Defence commencing its case, the Trial Chamber held that there was reason to apply mutatis mutandis the relevant provisions of the Rules to the Defence witnesses who accordingly enjoyed protection under the same terms[103].

49. In all, thirty-three witness testified in closed session. Each time that tightened protection was required for witnesses who were heard in open session, the Trial Chamber went into private session.

---

[99] Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion requesting protective measures for witnesses and victims, Case no. IT-95-14- PT, 17 June 1996.
[100] Decision rejecting the Request of the Prosecutor for ex parte proceedings, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 18 September 1996.
[101] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Applications of the Prosecutor dated 24 June and 30 August 1996 in respect of the protection of witnesses, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 2 October 1996.
[102] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Requests of the Prosecutor of 12 and 14 May 1997 in respect of the protection of witnesses, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 6 June 1997, para. 12.
[103] Decision on the Defence Motion for protective measures for Defence witnesses, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 30 September 1998.

50. The matter of anonymous testimony was raised by the Prosecutor in respect of two of her witnesses. The Trial Chamber asserted on the matter that:

> the victims and witnesses merit protection, even from the accused, during the preliminary proceedings and continuing until a reasonable time before the start of the trial itself; from that time forth, however, the right of the accused to an equitable trial must take precedence and require that the veil of anonymity be lifted in his favour, even if the veil must continue to obstruct the view of the public and the media[104].

Concurring with the conclusions of the Trial Chamber hearing the case The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi}[105], the Judges nevertheless deemed that the fundamental exceptional circumstance which would justify that anonymity be granted to one or several witnesses, namely an ongoing armed conflict in central Bosnia, no longer existed.

51. The Defence requested that several Defence witnesses enjoy safe-passage, failing which they would refuse to appear. Mindful of the need to respect the principle of appearance of witnesses in person, the Trial Chamber granted such immunity limited ratione materiae to the facts within the Tribunal's jurisdiction, ratione temporis to seven days at the most after the said witnesses had finished testifying and ratione loci to the territory of the Netherlands and those territories crossed by the said witnesses when travelling from this country to their country of origin[106].

52. Lastly, some witnesses requested the authorisation of the Trial Chamber to testify by video-link. Accordingly and bearing in mind the situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and the crucial command role played by the witness, the Trial Chamber permitted General Milivoj Petkovi}[107] to testify by video-link from Zagreb[108].

5. Issues relating to the length of proceedings

53. The Trial Chamber always took care to ensure that the ongoing trial, already long in itself, was not subject to additional delays and guaranteed the accused that he would be tried without undue delay, a guarantee provided for by Article 21(4)(c) of the Statute. Once the parties had "agreed on the need to limit the number of hearing days which they would use respectively for the presentation of their evidence", the Trial Chamber was moved by a

---

[104] Decision on the Application of the Prosecutor dated 17 October 1996 requesting protective measures for victims and witnesses, Case no. IT-95-14-PT, 5 November 1996, para. 24.
[105] Hereinafter "the Tadi} Trial Chamber".
[106] Orders granting safe-passage to Defence witnesses "D/A","D/B", "D/C", "D/E", "D/F" and "D/G", Case no. IT-95-14-T, 7 September 1998.
[107] Cf. infra the section on the appearance of the Trial Chamber witnesses pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules.
[108] Order relative to the testimony of General Milivoj Petkovi}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 17 June 1999.

concern for vigilance to set the number of hearing days each party would be authorised to use for the presentation of their evidence. Thus, the Prosecution and the Defence were accorded seventy-five and sixty hearing days respectively [109]. The rebuttal and rejoinder each took a little over the equivalent of one hearing day.

54. With a mind to enable the expeditious and efficient conduct of the trial, the Trial Chamber decided that when one of its members was exceptionally and temporarily unable to sit, it would proceed by deposition as provided for under Rule 71 of the Rules. Sub-rule 71(A) sets forth that, in the interests of justice and at the request of one of the parties, the Trial Chamber may in exceptional circumstances order depositions be taken by a duly mandated presiding officer. Upon obtaining the consent of the accused, the Trial Chamber granted the joint Motion of the parties to implement such a procedure and mandated the two remaining members of the Trial Chamber as presiding officers whilst the case-file relative to the depositions was subsequently transmitted to the full Trial Chamber.[110]

6. The issue of the dismissal of some counts following the presentation of Prosecution evidence

55. After the close of the Prosecution case, the Defence filed a motion based on Rule 54 of the Rules alleging that, in legal terms, the Prosecutor had not managed to present evidence which enabled her to establish sufficient grounds justifying the proceedings brought against the accused. It consequently requested that fifteen counts be dismissed and that the scope of the five remaining counts be restricted[111].

Upon the basis of new Rule 98 bis of the Rules and the foregoing Tribunal case-law grounded on Rule 54 of the Rules, the Trial Chamber confined the review of the Motion to only those theoretical cases where the Prosecutor had allegedly failed to provide the factual proof of one of the counts and a strong legal prima facie case in support of her allegations. In so doing, the Judges observed that none of the counts could be dismissed, in whole or in part, at this stage of the trial[112].

---

[109] Decision on the length of proceedings and the time allocated to the parties to present their evidence, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 17 December 1997. One "hearing day" equates to a productive session lasting five hours and twenty minutes. One calendar day is often not long enough to constitute a whole hearing day, if only because of unforeseen technical issues.
[110] Decision on Prosecutor and Defence Motions to proceed by deposition, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 19 February 1998.
[111] Motion to dismiss, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 10 August 1998.
[112] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the Defence Motion to dismiss, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 3 September 1998.

7. The summoning of Trial Chamber witnesses pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules

56. On 25 March 1999, the Trial Chamber ordered proprio motu the appearance of several witnesses in accordance with Rule 98 of the Rules [113]. At this stage of the proceedings, when the principal Prosecution and Defence witnesses had been heard, it held that in order to ascertain the truth about the crimes ascribed to the accused it was vital to make appear General Philippe Morillon[114], Mr. Jean-Pierre Thébault[115], Colonel Robert Stewart[116], General Enver Had`ihasanovi}[117], General Milivoj Petkovi}[118] and the successive commanders of the Seventh Muslim Brigade, namely, Colonels [erif Patkovi}, Amir Kubara and Asim Kori~i}[119].

57. The Trial Chamber rendered several subsequent Orders for each of the witnesses concerned in order to set the date and modalities of their testimony, the protective measures which they would enjoy and the subjects on which they were invited to testify. In this respect, it is appropriate to note that a procedure was established which ensured that the witness could give a spontaneous but not pre-drafted statement whilst guaranteeing the equality of the parties who were granted equal time to put their questions. The questions were restricted to the witnesses' initial statements and were, in fact, asked before those of the Judges[120].

---

[113] So as to be comprehensive, it should be pointed out that the Trial Chamber also made a Defence witness appear, Professor Jankovi} (PT pp. 17336-17337).

[114] Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of the appearance of General Philippe Morillon, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[115] Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of the appearance of Mr. Jean-Pierre Thébault, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[116] Decision of Trial Chamber I on the appearance of Colonel Robert Stewart, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[117] Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of the appearance of General Enver Had`ihasanaovi}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[118] Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of the appearance of General Milivoj Petkovi}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[119] Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of the appearance of the commanders of the Seventh Muslim Brigade of the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 25 March 1999.

[120] Decision of Trial Chamber I on protective measures for General Philippe Morillon, witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 12 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I on protective measures for Mr. Jean-Pierre Thébault, witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 13 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I summoning Mr. Robert Stewart as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 19 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I to call General Enver Had`ihasanaovi} as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I to call General Milivoj Petkovi} as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 May 1999; Order relative to the testimony of General Milivoj Petkovi}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 17 June 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I in respect of protective measures for General Milivoj Petkovi}, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 22 June 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I to call Colonel [erif Patkovi} as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I to call Colonel Amir Kubura as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 May 1999; Decision of Trial Chamber I to call Colonel Asim Kori~i} as a witness of the Trial Chamber, Case no. IT-95-14-T, 21 May 1999.

8. The procedure for determining the sentence

58. The Judges proved their flexibility in letting the witnesses testify, where need be, on elements which might have appeared more specifically relevant to determining a possible sentence, at the very least once the Rules were amended to provide for trials' being one single stage[121]. This held all the more true for the accused whom the Defence called in this context even before the start of his cross-examination as a witness. The Prosecution did not present any witnesses in this respect.

[121] During the 18th plenary, the Judges decided that the amendment, which did not impinge upon the rights of the accused, was to come into immediate effect.

II. APPLICABLE LAW

59. Both the case-law of the Tribunal and the arguments of the parties show that a close legal connection exists between Articles 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the Statute and in particular between Articles 2 and 3. As the Appeals Chamber concluded in the Tadi} Appeal Decision[122], under certain conditions Article 3 operates as a residual clause covering all those violations of international humanitarian law which do not fall under Article 2 or are not covered by Articles 4 and 5:

> Article 3 may be taken to cover all violations of international humanitarian law other than the "grave breaches" of the four Geneva Conventions falling under Article 2 [and as conferring] on the International Tribunal jurisdiction over any serious offence against international humanitarian law not covered by Article 2, 4 or 5[123].

60. In addition, the existence of an armed conflict is one of the conditions for Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Statute to apply. Application varies, however, depending on whether in question are Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute or Article 5 thereof.

61. Lastly, the Prosecutor puts forward the criminal responsibility of the accused on the basis of Articles 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute.

62. Consequently, the Trial Chamber will deal briefly with the question of the armed conflict in relation to the relevant articles of the Statute before reviewing Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute and addressing separately crimes against humanity and individual criminal responsibility.

A. The requirement that there be an armed conflict

1. Definition

63. According to the Tadi} Appeal Decision:

> an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a State[124].

---

[122] Decision on the Defence Motion for interlocutory appeal on jurisdiction, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi} a/k/a "Dule", Case no. IT-94-1-AR72 (hereinafter the "Tadi} Appeal Decision"), para. 87.
[123] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 91.
[124] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 70.

64. This criterion applies to all conflicts whether international or internal. It is not necessary to establish the existence of an armed conflict within each municipality concerned. It suffices to establish the existence of the conflict within the whole region of which the municipalities are a part. Like the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber asserts that:

> International humanitarian law applies from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extends beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached; or, in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement is achieved. Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply in the whole territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there[125].

2. Role

a) A condition for charging under Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute

65. The requirement that an armed conflict exist and that there be a nexus between the crimes alleged and that conflict was presented in detail in the Judgement of the case The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delali} et al[126]. The Trial Chamber accepts that reasoning. None of these conditions has been challenged in the case in point. The Trial Chamber will therefore limit itself to setting forth its opinion in brief after having shown the specificity of Article 5.

b) A condition for jurisdiction under Article 5 of the Statute

66. An armed conflict is not a condition for a crime against humanity but is for its punishment by the Tribunal. Based on an analysis of the international instruments in force[127], the Appeals Chamber affirmed[128] the autonomy of that charge in relation to the conflict since it considered that the condition of belligerence had "no logical or legal basis" and ran contrary to customary international law[129].

67. Neither Articles 3 or 7 of the Statutes of the ICTR and the International Criminal Court nor a fortiori the case law of the Tribunal for Rwanda require the existence of an [126] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delali} et al, Case no. IT-96-21-T, 19 November 1998, (hereinafter the "^elebi}i Judgement"), paras. 182 to 185 and 193 to 195).

---

[125] Id.
[127] Cf. inter alia Article II 1-c of Law No. 10, Article 1 of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 9 December 1948, 78 United Nations Treaty Series (hereinafter the "UNTS") 277 and Articles 1 and 2 of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 30 November 1973, UNTS 243.
[128] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 140; Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi}, Case no. IT-94-1-A, 15 July 1999 (hereinafter the "Tadi} Appeal Judgement"), para. 251.
[129] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 140.

armed conflict as an element of the definition of a crime against humanity[130]. In his Report to the Security Council on the adoption of the Statute of the future Court, the Secretary-General also explicitly refused to make this condition an ingredient of the crime:

> Crimes against humanity are aimed at any civilian population and are prohibited regardless of whether they are committed in an armed conflict, international or internal in character.[131]

68. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber stated that whether internal or international, the existence of an armed conflict was a condition which gave the Tribunal jurisdiction over the offence. In its analysis of Article 5 of the Statute in the Tadi} Appeal Decision, the Appeals Chamber concluded that:

> [...] Article 5 may be invoked as a basis of jurisdiction over crimes committed in either internal or international armed conflicts[132]

This position was reasserted in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement:

> The Prosecution is, moreover, correct in asserting that the armed conflict requirement is a jurisdictional element, not "a substantive element of the mens rea of crimes against humanity" (i.e. not a legal ingredient of the subjective element of the crime)."[133]

3. Nexus between the crimes imputed to the accused and the armed conflict

69. In addition to the existence of an armed conflict, it is imperative to find an evident nexus between the alleged crimes and the armed conflict as a whole. This does not mean that the crimes must all be committed in the precise geographical region where an armed conflict is taking place at a given moment. To show that a link exists, it is sufficient that:

> the alleged crimes were closely related to the hostilities occurring in other parts of the territories controlled by the parties to the conflict[134].

70. The foregoing observations demonstrate that a given municipality need not be prey to armed confrontation for the standards of international humanitarian law to apply there. It is also appropriate to note, as did the Tadi} and ^elebi}i Judgements, that a crime need not:

---

[130] Cf. Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case no. ICTR-96-4-T, 2 September 1998 (hereinafter the "Akayesu Judgement"), paras. 563-584; Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case no. ICTR-95-1-T, 21 May 1999 (hereinafter the "Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement"), paras. 119-134.

[131] Report of the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 2 of Security Council resolution 808 (1993) (hereinafter the "Report of the Secretary-General"), para. 47 (emphasis added).

[132] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 142.

[133] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 249.

[134] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 70.

> be part of a policy or practice officially endorsed or tolerated by one of the parties to the conflict, or that the act be in actual furtherance of a policy associated with the conduct of the war or in the actual interest of a party to the conflict[135].

71. With particular regard to Article 5 of the Statute, the terms of that Article[136], the Tadi} Appeal Judgement[137], the Decision of the Trial Chamber hearing the Tadi} case[138] and the statements of the representatives of the United States, France, Great Britain and the Russian Federation to the United Nations Security Council[139] all point out that crimes against humanity must be perpetrated during an armed conflict. Thus, provided that the perpetrator's act fits into the geographical and temporal context of the conflict, he need not have the intent to participate actively in the armed conflict.

72. In addition, the Defence does not challenge that crimes were committed during the armed conflict in question but rather that the conflict was international and that the crimes are ascribable to the accused.

B. Article 2 of the Statute: Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions

73. Article 2 of the Statute "grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions" stipulates that:

> The International Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed grave breaches of the Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949, namely the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention:
>
> (a) wilful killing;
>
> (b) torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments;
>
> (c) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health;
>
> (d) extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly;
>
> (e) compelling a prisoner of war or civilian to serve in the forces of a hostile power;

---

[135] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi} a/k/a "Dule", Case no. IT-94-1-T, 7 May 1997 (hereinafter the "Tadi} Judgement"), para. 573; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 195.

[136] The condition required by the provisions of Article 5 of the Statute is temporal: "The International Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed in armed conflict" (emphasis added).

[137] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 251. According to the Judges of the Appeals Chamber "[t]he armed conflict requirement is satisfied by proof that there was an armed conflict; that is all the Statute requires, and in so doing, it requires more than does customary international law".

[138] Tadi} Judgement, paras. 618-660.

[139] Provisional transcript of the 3217th meeting, UN document S/PV. 3217 (25 May 1993), p. 11 (French declaration), p. 16 (United States declaration), p. 19 (United Kingdom declaration) and p. 45 (Russian Federation declaration).

(f) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial;

(g) unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a civilian;

(h) taking civilians as hostages.

74. Within the terms of the Tadi} Appeal Decision and Tadi} Appeal Judgement, Article 2 applies only when the conflict is international. Moreover, the grave breaches must be perpetrated against persons or property covered by the "protection" of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Neither party challenged these two conditions. The Defence, however, refuted that these two conditions were met in the instance. The Trial Chamber will now address the issue of the nature of the armed conflict and that of the status of the victims as protected persons by relying on the Tadi} Appeal Judgement and on other applicable sources of law.

a) International nature of the armed conflict

75. The legal criteria which allow the international nature of an armed conflict to be demonstrated were set out in great detail by the Appeals Chamber in its Judgement of 15 July 1999 in the Tadi} case. The Trial Chamber, which agrees with the conclusions in that Judgement, does not intend to reproduce the lengthy analysis set forth therein. It prefers to limit itself to drawing on those essential elements necessary for ruling on the present case.

76. An armed conflict which erupts in the territory of a single State and which is thus at first sight internal may be deemed international where the troops of another State intervene in the conflict or even where some participants in the internal armed conflict act on behalf of this other State[140]. The intervention of a foreign State may be proved factually. Analysing this second hypothesis is more complex. In this instance, the legal criteria allowing armed forces to be linked to a foreign power must be determined. This link confers an international nature upon an armed conflict which initially appears internal.

77. The Prosecution put forward that the direct military intervention of Croatia and the involvement of its armed forces (hereinafter the "HV") alongside those of the Croatian Defence Council (hereinafter the "HVO") in the armed conflict against the Bosnian Muslims conferred on it an international nature by January 1993 at the latest. The Prosecution pointed out however that the engagement of the HV had extended to central Bosnia even before the date marking the start of the period covered by the indictment charging the accused with having committed grave breaches[141].

[140] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 84.

78. The Defence maintained that the conflict pitting the HVO against the Muslim element of the Bosnia-Herzegovina army (hereinafter the "ABiH")[142] in central Bosnia was internal.

79. The Defence stated first that the HVO had been organised to fight the Serbian aggression in Bosnia. After a conflict pitting Croats against Serbs in Ravno, President Izetbegovi} allegedly stated: "this was not our war"[143]. This was a reaction to the statement that the Bosnian Croats were allegedly attempting to organise their own defence against the Serbian threat. Fighting the Muslims was allegedly never the HVO's objective.

80. The Defence therefore referred to the agreement signed in May 1992 under the auspices of the ICRC between the Croatian Democratic Community (hereinafter the "HDZ"), the Serbian Democratic Party (hereinafter the "SDS") and the Party of Democratic Action (hereinafter the "SDA" – Muslim), according to which, it claimed, the latter were committed to honouring the provisions regarding internal armed conflicts as covered in Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and to observing certain rules applicable to international armed conflicts. The Defence considered that the agreement demonstrated the conviction of the ICRC that the conflict was internal[144].

81. On this point, the Trial Chamber does not consider that the cited agreement clearly showed a conviction on the part of the ICRC that the conflict was internal. The preamble of the agreement[145] stipulates that:

> The parties agree that, without any prejudice to the legal status of the parties to the conflict or to the international law of armed conflict in force, they will apply the following rules...[146]

82. Whatever the case, the parties to the conflict may not agree between themselves to change the nature of the conflict, which is established by the facts whose interpretation, where applicable, falls to the Judge. In May 1992, the ICRC was certainly responsible for

---

[141] Prosecutor's summary, p. 6, para. 1.9.
[142] Originally, the HVO was a component of the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina and came under the supreme authority of Sarajevo. However, it detached from it quickly and became the armed wing of the Bosnian Croats and received its orders only from its large headquarters in Mostar (see below, section II).
[143] Submissions, PT p. 24940.
[144] Defence Final Brief, 22 July 1999 (hereinafter the "Defence Brief"), p. 32.
[145] P786 (the exhibits will be specified by their number, preceded by the letters P, D or C according to who submitted them during the trial, the Prosecutor, the Defence or a witness of the Trial Chamber).

fulfilling its mandate to provide the best possible protection to civilians and persons placed hors de combat whilst the war unfolded around them. Nonetheless, it is this Trial Chamber which is responsible for evaluating the facts before it and determining the true nature of the conflict.

i) Direct intervention

83. The first issue to be resolved is whether Croatian HV troops intervened in the conflict in question. The Prosecutor's assertion that the HV was allegedly present in the territory of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone (hereinafter the "CBOZ") which the accused commanded, in particular in the La{va Valley, was contested by the Defence. The Defence relied inter alia on testimony stating that some units of the Croatian army were present and engaged in an armed conflict not in the La{va Valley but in other parts of Bosnian territory (in Herzegovina and in the border regions between Bosnia and Herzegovina)[147].

84. The presence of HV soldiers or units in Bosnia-Herzegovina (hereinafter "BH") has been amply demonstrated and, indeed, the Defence acknowledged that the Prosecutor established the presence of HV soldiers or units in BH but not in the CBOZ[148]. The Trial Chamber heard the testimony of several witnesses on the subject of which it took especial note of the following.

85. One witness stated that he heard from a high-ranking Croatian government official that HV soldiers had been sent to BH in 1993 to combat the Muslim forces[149]. Another witness spoke of HV soldiers who had been dismissed from their positions because they did not want to got to Bosnia and of other soldiers who had to exchange their HV insignia for HVO insignia while they were in Bosnia[150]. One Defence witness, Admiral Domazet, confirmed that, along with other Croatian army personnel, he was in Bosnia-Herzegovina in April 1993 when he was "head of personnel" of the HV intelligence service[151]. He also testified that General Bobetko could never have defended and liberated the southern portion of the territory of Croatia without entering the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina[152]. The

---

[146] Emphasis added.
[147] Witness Degan, PT pp. 16180-16181.
[148] Defence Summary, p. 32.
[149] Witness DX, PT p. 20004
[150] Witness II, PT pp. 7169-7171.
[151] Witness Domazet, PT pp. 11563, 11572.
[152] Witness Domazet, PT pp. 11583-11584. Cf. also document P406/49 (27 March 1993): authorisation given by Milivoy Petkovi} to an HV unit to enter BH territory.

presence of the HV in BH was even confirmed by one witness who discussed the nature of the intervention of the HV[153] and another who was of the view that the Croatian troops in Bosnia between 1992 and 1994 were not there lawfully given that such a decision had never been taken in the Sabor (parliament of the Republic of Croatia)[154]. Other evidence also demonstrated a general HV presence in Bosnia[155].

86. Those places where the presence of HV soldiers was noted have been specified. The Croatian army penetrated into BH territory at least as far as Livno[156] and Tomislavgrad[157]. In October 1992, when he was Deputy Minister of Defence of the Republic of Croatia, General Praljak was seen in Mostar[158]. Other witnesses spoke of the presence of the HV in the Mostar region[159] and in the Prozor and Gornji Vakuf regions from mid-January to February 1993[160]. In July 1993, UNPROFOR noted that the HVO in Mostar was being supported by HV soldiers "in great numbers"[161]. Other written evidence attesting to the HV presence was detailed in the Prosecutor's brief. Some documents recall the HV's "massive presence" in Bosnia in Jablanica, Prozor and Gornji Vakuf[162] and provide clarification as to who the troops involved were and what materiel and weapons these troops had[163].

87. On 13 May 1993, the government of Bosnia-Herzegovina brought a complaint against the armed aggression upon its territory:

> The government of Bosnia and Herzegovina states, once again, that it wishes to develop all encompassing relations in co-operation with the Republic of Croatia on the basis of mutual trust and respect; however, unless the attacks are immediately stopped and the units of the state of Croatia are withdrawn immediately from the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina will be forced to turn to the international community and request protection from the aggression[164].

88. In a letter dated 4 September 1993 addressed to the UNPROFOR commander in Bosnia-Herzegovina, the Presidency of Bosnia-Herzegovina described the attack on certain

---

[153] Witness Degan, PT p. 16206.
[154] Witness II, PT pp. 7169-7170.
[155] Witness Vulliamy, PT p. 7711; P406/38 (under seal); P303 (report of the European Commission Monitoring Mission (hereinafter the "ECMM")); see also the Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 149 , para. 6.95.
[156] Witness Domazet, PT p. 11591. Cf. also P406/89.
[157] Witness Domazet, PT p. 11591. Cf. also P406/94.
[158] Witness DX, PT pp. 20002-20003.
[159] Witness VV, PT pp. 9556-9557, pp. 9562-9565.
[160] Witness Buffini, PT pp. 5581-5588, p. 5599; witness Short, PT p. 24244; witness Duncan, PT p. 9083; P601, P747.
[161] P406/72.
[162] P741, p. 3. P406/90; P406/91 (these documents date from November 1993). Cf. also witness Short, PT p. 24244.
[163] P406/20, P406/74; P406/76; P406/78; P406/94.
[164] P556; witness Degan, PT pp. 16142-16143.

towns by HVO and Croatian army forces[165]. Another letter, dated 28 January 1994 from the Permanent Representative of Bosnia-Herzegovina to the United Nations addressed to the Security Council President, contained an annex which included a description of the military intervention by the armed forces of the Republic of Croatia against Bosnia-Herzegovina[166].

89. The Trial Chamber also points to the existence of United Nations documents (hereinafter the "UN") confirming the presence of the HV in BH. United Nations Security Council resolutions 752 of 15 May 1992[167] and 787 of 16 November 1992[168] demanded that the elements of the HV respect the territorial integrity of the BH and withdraw[169]. In correspondence dated 1 February 1994 and 17 February 1994, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the support lent to the HVO by Croatia[170]. In particular, the United Nations Secretary-General wrote to the Security Council on 1 February 1994:

> The Croatian army has directly supported the HVO in terms of manpower, equipment and weapons for some time. Initially the level of support was limited to individual and small sub-units, many of them volunteers. As the offensives of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Government forces against the HVO have become successful, the number of Croatian soldiers appears to have increased. It is assessed that in total there is the equivalent of three Croatian Brigades of regular army personnel in Bosnia and Herzegovina, approximately 3,000 to 5,000 (this is an estimation, as it is impossible with UNPROFOR's assets to obtain the required information for a more accurate account).

90. Other United Nations reports and correspondence dealt with the same subject[171] In a letter dated 11 February 1994 addressed to the Secretary-General, the Croatian Vice-Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs explained inter alia that his government was prepared to withdraw some units from the Bosnia-Herzegovina border areas but simultaneously urged the government of that Republic "immediately to order its army to cease all hostilities and offensive actions against Croatian population centres, especially in the region of central Bosnia. Following the cessation of hostilities, we shall issue an appeal to all Croat volunteers in central Bosnia to lay down their arms and return to normal civilian lives"[172].

91. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that proof exists as to the presence of the HV within the CBOZ itself. Over the period in question, HV officers, in particular Colonel

---

[165] P557; witness Degan, pp. 16147*ff*.
[166] P406/95; witness Degan, PT pp. 16151-16152.
[167] P406/14.
[168] P406/29
[169] Several documents make reference to the withdrawal of the HV troops from BH: cf. in particular, P406/99 and P406/101 to P406/104.
[170] P406/96 and P406/100.
[171] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 171, para. 6.106. Cf. P406/38.

Vido{evi} from the Split Brigade along with two other Croatian army officers, were "frequently" seen at the Hotel Vitez. In April 1993, representatives of the Croatian Defence Council, Dragan]ur~i} and Bo`o]ur~ija, were seen there too[173]. Soldiers wearing insignia bearing the initials "HV" set up in a Dubravica school near the Hotel Vitez[174]. Soldiers from Croatia were also observed in Busova~a whilst the HVO forces were grouping between May 1992 and January 1993[175] and at the Vitez Health Centre in January 1993[176]. At the same time, soldiers wearing badges which identified them as members of the HV arrived in the Kiseljak zone[177]. The Muslim victims of the attacks launched against villages in the Vitez and Busova~a municipalities declared that they had seen members of HV units participating in the assaults[178].

92. One example of the presence of the HV is particularly significant. HV Colonel Miro Andri} and members of the 101st National Guards Brigade of the President of the Republic of Croatia were sent to the BH southern front by the Croatian Defence Minister, Gojko [u{ak[179]. They continued to operate in central Bosnia in 1993[180]. Miro Andri}, along with Tihomir Bla{ki} and Milivoj Petkovi}, represented the HVO at meetings in Vitez on 28 and 29 April 1993 and during negotiations with the ECMM and the ABiH on the establishment of a joint command[181]. Bla{ki} declared that "Miro Andri} [...] was the number two in the joint command of the armed forces of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina on behalf of the HVO"[182]. Subsequently, Andri} returned to the HV in Croatia.

93. In the CBOZ, several orders were given to the members of the HV serving in the HVO to remove their HV insignia so that observers would not detect their presence in BH[183]. Further, a helicopter from Croatia "frequently" landed at the quarry some two kilometres south of the UNPROFOR British battalion base (hereinafter "BRITBAT") during the summer

---

[172] UN Document S/1994/117 (16 February 1994), P406/99 (emphasis added).
[173] Witness HH, PT pp. 6800-6803.
[174] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4797-4798; witness HH, PT p. 6837.
[175] Witness FF, PT p. 6164.
[176] Witness Mujezinovi}, PT pp. 1723-1724.
[177] P406/45. One witness stated that when the accused was in Kiseljak his personal guard was an individual who wore the Croatian coat of arms (witness HH, PT pp. 6820-6821; this assertion has not however been confirmed).
[178] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 172, para. 6.111.
[179] P406/17. This order, dated 10 June 1992, affects the parties concerned on a "temporary" basis while indicating that they will continue to have the same rights as beforehand and that they must report to General Bobetko, Chief-of-Staff of the "southern front – Plo~e" command. Amongst other equipment, the parties were supposed to be supplied with four VHF radios and a cellular telephone.
[180] P604.
[181] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 19050.
[182] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 19210.
[183] P406/7, P406/26, P406/31, P406/36, P406/55.

of 1993[184], apparently to provide direct communication between Croatia, in particular, and the HVO enclave in central Bosnia.

94. Ultimately, the evidence demonstrated that, although the HV soldiers were primarily in the Mostar, Prozor and Gornji Vakuf regions and in a region to the east of ^apljina[185], there is also proof of HV presence in the La{va Valley. The Trial Chamber adds that the presence of the HV in the areas outside the CBOZ inevitably also had an impact on the conduct of the conflict in that zone. By engaging the ABiH in fighting outside the CBOZ, the HV weakened the ability of the ABiH to fight the HVO in central Bosnia. Based on Croatia's direct intervention in BH, the Trial Chamber finds ample proof to characterise the conflict as international.

ii) Indirect intervention

95. Aside from the direct intervention by HV forces, the Trial Chamber observes that Croatia exercised indirect control over the HVO and HZHB.

96. In order to establish whether some of the participants in the armed internal conflict acted on behalf of another State, the Appeals Chamber in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement took as its starting point Article 4 of the Third Geneva Convention which defines those situations in which militia and paramilitary groups may be likened to legitimate combatants. The Appeals Chamber deemed that the condition of belonging to another Party to the conflict provided for in this Article constituted an implicit reference to a control criterion[186]. Therefore, some degree of control exercised by a Party to a conflict over the perpetrators of the breaches is needed for them to be held criminally responsible[187] on the basis of Article 2 of the Statute. The question of determining the degree of control required then arises.

97. In this respect, the Tadi} Appeal Judgement contains a meticulous analysis of the notion of control. Upon examining the reasoning and control criteria set forth by the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case[188], the majority of the Appeals Chamber ultimately rejected the position of the Court on the ground that the criteria in question agreed [184] Witness Hunter, PT p. 5141.

[185] As suggested by witness DX, PT pp. 20034-20035.
[186] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 95.
[187] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 96.
[188] Case concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgement of 27 June 1986, ICJ Report 1986 (hereinafter "the Nicaragua Judgement" or "Nicaragua").

neither with "the logic of the law of State responsibility" nor with "judicial and State practice"[189]. The Defence contended that the Tadi} Appeal Judgement wrongly dismissed the criterion of "effective control" set by the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case[190]. For the Defence, this is the appropriate criterion to apply in the instance, notwithstanding the conclusions of the Tadi} Appeal Judgement. Nonetheless, this Trial Chamber is of the opinion that it is correct to follow the reasoning of the Appeals Chamber.

98. The Appeals Chamber concluded that although State and legal practice adopted the Nicaragua criterion for unorganised groups or individuals acting on behalf of a State, it applied another when military or paramilitary groups were at issue[191]. Thus:

> the Appeals Chamber holds the view that international rules do not always require the same degree of control over armed groups or private individuals for the purpose of determining whether an individual not having a status of a State official under internal legislation can be regarded as a de facto organ of the State.[192]

99. The Appeals Chamber clearly laid out the three control criteria which allow the acts of individuals or groups to be ascribed to a foreign State, circumstances which transform what at first sight is an internal armed conflict into an international one. The first criterion is applicable to individuals or unorganised groups and demands the issuance of specific instructions for the acts at issue to be perpetrated or, in the alternative, proof that the foreign State endorsed a posteriori the said acts.[193] Another criterion relates to a situation wherein, even though no instructions are given by a State, individuals may be likened to State organs because of their effective behaviour within the structure of the said State[194]. Neither of these criteria is relevant in this case and this is why we will not analyse them here.

100. The matter is one of possibly imputing the acts of the HVO to the Republic of Croatia which would then confer an international nature upon the conflict played out in the La{va Valley. It is the third criterion[195] which applies in this instance. This criterion allows the degree of State control required by international law to be determined in order to be able to ascribe to a foreign State the acts of armed forces, militia and paramilitary units (hereinafter "organised groups"). The Appeals Chamber characterised it as a criterion of overall control when it stated:

---

[189] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, paras. 99 to 145.
[190] Defence Brief, pp. 50 to 53.
[191] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 124.
[192] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 137.
[193] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 137.
[194] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 141.

> control by a State over subordinate armed forces or militias or paramilitary units may be of an overall character (and must comprise more than the mere provision of financial assistance or military equipment or training). This requirement, however, does not go as far as to include the issuing of specific orders by the State, or its direction of each individual operation. Under international law it is by no means necessary that the controlling authorities should plan all the operations of the units dependent on them, choose their targets, or give specific instructions concerning the conduct of military operations and any alleged violations of international humanitarian law. The control required by international law may be deemed to exist when a State (or, in the context of an armed conflict, the party to the conflict) has a role in organising, co-ordinating or planning the military actions of the military group, in addition to financing, training and equipping or providing operational support to that group[196].

101. How may it be established that a State exercises overall control over an organised military group? The Appeals Chamber stated numerous factors whose conjunction indicated that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (hereinafter "the FRY") exercised an overall control over the Army of Republika Srpska (hereinafter the "VRS"), i.e. the transfer of non-Bosnian Serb former officers of the old Yugoslav National Army (hereinafter the "JNA") to BH, the payment of the wages of Bosnian Serbs by the FRY administration, the fact that the reorganisation and change of name of the JNA in no way altered the military objectives and strategies, the fact that the VRS had structures and ranks identical to those of the army of the FRY (hereinafter "the VJ") and that the VJ continued to direct and supervise the VRS (well beyond the generous financial, logistical and other support which it lent) and the persistence of the VJ's direct intervention[197]. However, for the Appeals Chamber, these factors do not define overall control but instead constitute indications thereof. Accordingly, the factors which permit the existence of overall control to be proved may vary depending on the circumstances.

102. In this instance, the direct intervention of the HV in Bosnia and in the CBOZ has already been demonstrated above. Mention may be made of several other indications of Croatia's involvement in the conflict which rebut the Defence argument that the HV did indeed direct HVO operations, but only between March and June 1992 before the HVO became organised and prior to the outbreak of the conflict in central Bosnia between the Croatian and Muslim forces[198]. The Trial Chamber concurs that the involvement of the HV and Croatia may appear more clear-cut at the start of the period under consideration but deems that it persisted throughout the conflict.

---

[195] This is the second criterion presented in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement.
[196] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 137.
[197] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, paras. 150 to 151.
[198] Defence Brief, book 3, p. 52.

103. This involvement does not seem to be the result only of the particular circumstances prevailing at the time. In fact, according to one Defence witness, Croatia had harboured ambitions in respect of the Croatian territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina for 150 years[199]. President Tudjman aspired to partitioning this neighbouring country. In his book entitled Nationalism in Contemporary Europe Franjo Tudjman argued that Bosnia-Herzegovina should form part of the federal Croatian unit because it was linked historically to Croatia. Moreover, Tudjman observed that from an ethnic and linguistic viewpoint most Muslims were of Croatian origin[200]. On the partitioning of Bosnia-Herzegovina, Tudjman wrote:

> But large parts of Croatia had been incorporated into Bosnia by the Turks. Furthermore, Bosnia and Herzegovina were historically linked with Croatia and together they comprise an indivisible, geographic and economic entity. Bosnia and Herzegovina occupy the central part of this whole, separating southern (Dalmatian) from northern (Pannonian) Croatia. The creation of a separate Bosnia and Herzegovina makes the territorial and geographic position of Croatia extremely unnatural in the economic sense and therefore in the broadest nationalist political sense very unfavourable for life and development and in the narrower administrative sense unsuitable and disadvantageous. These factors largely explain why the 1939 agreement between Belgrade and Zagreb included the following areas of Bosnia into the Banovina of Croatia: the whole of Herzegovina and Mostar and those Bosnian districts where the Croats have a clear majority[201].

104. Franjo Tudjman's nationalism and his desire to annex a part of BH were apparent to Lord David Owen to whom President Tudjman staked his claim that 17.5% of Bosnian territory should revert to a republic with a Croatian majority[202]. Witness P also confirmed that Franjo Tudjman had in mind the partition of BH[203].

105. These aspirations for a partition were furthermore displayed during the confidential talks between Franjo Tudjman and Slobodan Milo{evi} in Karadjordjevo on 30 March 1991[204] on the division of Bosnia-Herzegovina. No Muslim representative participated in these talks which were held bilaterally between the Serbs and Croats[205]. Following Karadjordjevo, Franjo Tudjman opined that it would be very difficult for Bosnia to survive and that the Croats were going to take over the Banovina plus Cazin, Kladu{a and Biha}[206]. Preliminary secret negotiations were held using maps to come to an agreement with the Serbs on how to partition Bosnia[207]. An interview of the Defence witness Biland`i} published on 25

---

[199] Witness Biland`i}, PT pp. 11366-11367.
[200] Witness Biland`i}, PT pp. 11384-11385; P18, Tudjman's book, Nationalism in Contemporary Europe (1981).
[201] P18, witness Donia, PT pp. 169-171.
[202] P19, witness Donia, PT p. 178.
[203] Witness P, PT pp. 4708-4709.
[204] Witness II, PT p. 7136.
[205] Witness Biland`i}, PT pp. 11363-11364,
[206] Witness II, PT. p. 7137.
[207] Witness II, PT pp. 7247-7248, 7249-7250.

October 1996 by the Croatian weekly Nacional confirms that, following negotiations with Slobodan Milo{evi}, "it was agreed that two commissions should meet and discuss the division of Bosnia and Herzegovina"[208]. The agreement entered into by the Serbs and Croats on the partition of Bosnia was reportedly confirmed at a meeting between the Bosnian Serb and Bosnian Croat political leaders, Radovan Karad`i} and Mate Boban, in Graz in Austria on 6 May 1992. They allegedly agreed to resort to arbitration to determine whether certain zones would fall within Serbian or Croatian "constituent entities"[209].

106. The aspirations of Franjo Tudjman to annex "Croatian" regions of Bosnia persisted throughout the conflict. On 6 May 1995, during a dinner at which he was sitting beside Mr. Paddy Ashdown, leader of the Liberal Democrat Party in the United Kingdom, who was called as a witness by the Prosecutor, President Tudjman clearly confirmed that Croatia had aspirations to territory in Bosnia. Having sketched on the back of a menu[210] a rough map of the former Yugoslavia showing the situation in ten years time, Franjo Tudjman explained to Mr. Ashdown that one part of Bosnia would belong to Croatia and the other part to Serbia. He also said that there would no longer be a Muslim region within the former Yugoslavia, that it would constitute only a "small element of the Croat State". Franjo Tudjman was convinced that the Serbs would ultimately exchange Banja Luka for Tuzla[211]. President Tudjman also said that he intended to retake Knin and the Krajina region[212] which Croatia did indeed subsequently do. According to the witness, Franjo Tudjman and Slobodan Milo{evi} seemed to have reached an agreement on some territories[213].

107. The Defence claimed, however, that the opinions expressed by President Tudjman were purely personal and did not reflect the official position of the Republic of Croatia[214]. Admittedly, the distinction in principle between President Tudjman's personal comments and Croatia's official policy is justified. The Trial Chamber notes nonetheless that President Tudjman was so dominant in the government of Croatia that his personal opinions in fact represented the position of the official authorities. According to Witness P, President [208] P464. The witness denied some of what was said in this interview but not this particular fact.

[209] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 68, para. 5.76.
[210] P275; Witness Ashdown, PT pp. 7330-7331.
[211] Witness Ashdown, PT p. 7331.
[212] Witness Ashdown, PT p. 7332.
[213] Witness Ashdown, PT, pp. 7349, 7351. Although the Defence attempted to make it seem that Tudjman's statements to the witness were merely words said after a few drinks, the Trial Chamber considers that the testimony of the witness is totally credible and coherent in all respects even when what the Defence raised is taken into account. Nor can there be any doubt as to what the partition of territory between Croatia and Serbia as shown in the sketch drawn by President Tudjman represents.
[214] Submissions, PT pp. 25245-25246.

Tudjman exercised his responsibilities within an authoritarian regime where only he held the power[215]. For this reason, the distinction cannot apply in the case in point.

108. Furthermore, it appears that the HVO and Croatia shared the same goals. The HVO and some paramilitary or assimilated forces fought for Croatia, defended the "Croatian" people and territory and wanted the territory which they regarded as Croatian to be annexed to the Republic of Croatia[216]. The members of these armed forces saw Tudjman as their President[217]. Mate Boban, President of Herceg-Bosna, rejected the constitution of Bosnia-Herzegovina which he thought protected only the rights of the Muslims in Bosnia. According to Mate Boban, Herceg-Bosna was culturally, spiritually and economically part of Croatia and had only been separated from it for regrettable reasons[218]. For him, the HDZ was the Bosnian branch of the party founded by Franjo Tudjman[219].

109. The minutes of a meeting held on 12 November 1991 in Grude between the representatives of the regional communities of the Herzegovina and Travnik HDZ regional communities are particularly revealing. The two communities declared that they "have unanimously decided that the Croatian people in Bosnia and Herzegovina must finally embrace a determined and active policy which will realise our eternal dream – a common Croatian state" and that they must "show ... which territories in BH are Croatian territories [...]. Our people will not accept, under any conditions, any other solution except within the borders of a free Croatia"[220].

110. These common goals did indeed have consequences on the decision-making mechanism of the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna (hereinafter "the HZHB"). Croatia was able to control the decisions either through Croatian officers detached from the HV so as to serve in the HVO or through Bosnian Croats who shared the same goals as Croatia and who effectively followed the instructions issued by the Croatian government.

111. On 21 March 1992, Pa{ko Ljubi~i}, commander of the "HB Defence", requested the Defence Minister of the Republic of Croatia, Gojko [u{ak, for a meeting inter alia "to

---

[215] Witness P, PT p. 4700.
[216] Witness HH, PT pp. 6884-6887.
[217] Witness HH, PT pp. 6774-6775.
[218] Witness Vulliamy, PT pp. 8496-8497.
[219] Witness Vulliamy, PT pp. 7769-7770. The Defence concedes that some of the leaders of Croatia and the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna had common aspirations. See Defence Brief, p. 32.
[220] P406/2 (emphasis in document in the original language); document signed by Jozo Mari}, Dario Kordi} and Mate Boban.

receive your instructions for further actions [in central Bosnia]"[221]. President Tudjman announced that Croatia officially recognised the independence of BH on 7 April 1992[222]. For this reason, any involvement of Croatia in the setting up of the HVO after that date was intervention in the internal affairs of BH. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that although Croatia's action in BH was less obvious after that date, it did not stop.

112. Croatia was thus directly involved in the control of the HVO forces which were created on 8 April by the HZHB presidency[223]. On 10 April 1992, President Tudjman appointed General Bobetko of the HV as commander of the "Southern Front"[224]. His duties included commanding HV and HVO units in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina. Three of General Bobetko's subordinates, officers in the HV, subsequently took command of HVO units. On 21 April 1992, General Bobetko ordered General Ante Roso to take responsibility for the Livno region in BH[225]. By 19 May, General Bobetko had already established a forward command post in Gornji Vakuf in BH[226]. On 14 June 1992, General Bobetko ordered offensive activities to commence, HVO forces to manoeuvre in a certain direction and specific operations to be launched as part of a military campaign[227]. On 27 June 1992 while still an HV General, Ante Roso promoted Tihomir Bla{ki} to the rank of HVO Colonel and made him commander of the CBOZ[228]. General Petkovi} was replaced in his post as Chief-of-Staff by General Praljak, the former Croatian national Deputy Minister of Defence in Zagreb[229]. In October 1993, General Praljak was replaced by General Roso. The decisions to make these replacements were taken by the Croatian government[230] and affected an army in principle answering to a distinct sovereign State.

113. The HDZ in Croatia had overall control of the HDZ in Bosnia:

> formally the HDZ in Croatia was separate from the HDZ in Bosnia-Herzegovina – that is formally, but, in reality, all decisions are made in Zagreb and I think that there is no doubt

---

[221] P406/4 (emphasis added); among the participants put forward for this meeting was the name of "Dario Kordi}, head of the Crisis Committee for Central Bosnia, vice-president of the HZ /Croatian Community of/ Herceg-Bosna".
[222] P406/5. In this document signed by President Tudjman on 7 April 1992, the Republic of Croatia "recognises the independent and sovereign socialist Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a State of three constituent nations" (emphasis added).
[223] P457; P38/1
[224] P406/6.
[225] P406/11.
[226] P406/16.
[227] P406/20; witness Degan, PT p. 16180.
[228] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 17914.
[229] P406/79; P406/80.
[230] Witness DX, PT pp. 20002: "The HVO was monitored or controlled by Zagreb, and so the political leadership in Zagreb appointed [the] leadership of the HVO". See also PT pp. 20030-20031.

> about it. I do not think that – there is no question of the HDZ in Bosnia being an independent party in Bosnia-Herzegovina – formally yes, but not in reality.[231]

114. The Defence furthermore did not challenge the fact that the HVO shared personnel, often from BH, with the HV. According to Admiral Domazet, officers in the army of the Republic of Croatia voluntarily resigned from the HV in order to serve in Bosnia-Herzegovina. These officers needed official authorisation and were regarded as temporarily detached officers. It appears that these officers continued to receive their wage from Croatia[232]. Those who wished to rejoin the ranks of the Croatian army could do so if they obtained the official approval of the HV authorities which, bearing in mind how the Trial Chamber interpreted the elements of the case, was but a formality.

115. The Trial Chamber heard evidence indicating that Milivoj Petkovi}, Ante Roso, Slobodan Praljak and General Tolj, all high-ranking officers within the Croatian army, went to serve in the HVO for a time before returning to the Croatian army[233]. Before becoming HVO Chief-of-Staff, General Milivoj Petkovi} was a senior officer in the army of the Republic of Croatia. Slobodan Praljak left the army of the Republic of Croatia and became an HVO General. He then returned to the armed forces of the Republic of Croatia, was promoted to the rank of General and pensioned off[234]. It was only on 15 October 1993 that General Roso resigned from the HV to "leave for Bosnia-Herzegovina" and become the HVO Chief-of-Staff. On 23 February 1995, he requested to be taken back into the HV, a request which was granted[235]. Ivan Tolj was a deputy of the Sabor, a general, chief of the Croatian army's political department and also a member of the HVO[236]. The aforementioned HV Colonel, Miro Andri}, also belonged to the HVO. Even at junior levels, the HVO was in part made up of Croats who had returned from Croatia after having fought in the Croatian army[237].

116. President Tudjman also ordered the replacement of Bosnian Croats who did not agree with him. Stepan Kljuji} was President of the HDZ in Bosnia but was replaced because he

---

[231] Witness II, PT p. 7112.
[232] Witness Domazet, PT pp. 11607-11608.
[233] Witness II, PT p. 7173. This witness stated that Ivan Tolj, a member of the Croatian Parliament "was a general of both armies" and that along with other "members of the Croat Parliament [who went] to Bosnia and Herzegovina [and] to Herceg-Bosna [was] photographed there wearing HVO uniforms, while at the same time being members of the Croat Parliament. Those same people in the Croat Parliament are satanising, to the limit of the permissible, the Muslims and their right to defend Bosnia and Herzegovina" (PT p. 7283).
[234] Witness Domazet, PT p. 11583.
[235] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 159, para. 6.70; P586, P587.
[236] Witness II, PT p. 7162.
[237] Witness DX, PT pp. 19933-19934. Cf. also P406/61; The ABiH granted a request from the ICRC to return a captured soldier to the HVO so that he could then be returned to the HV.

was fighting for a united Bosnia. Lastly, Mate Boban was appointed President of Herceg-Bosna. Before taking an important decision related to Herceg-Bosna, Mate Boban always consulted Franjo Tudjman[238] and effectively followed his instructions. Delegations from the Bosnian HDZ regularly went to consult President Tudjman[239].

117. General Bla{ki} himself was appointed by a procedure which stressed the need to select loyal people prepared to implement the policy dictated by Zagreb. In order to implement the BH HDZ partisan policy, it was decided, during the meeting in Grude presided over by Mate Boban[240], to "strengthen its membership, and select people who [could] see these tasks through to the end" and "to prepare better militarily for the struggle against all the forces trying to hinder the inevitable process of the creation of a free Croatian state"[241]. General Bla{ki} could not have been appointed to the post he held if he had not fully endorsed this policy.

118. The Bosnian Croat leaders followed the directions given by Zagreb or, at least, co-ordinated their decisions with the Croatian government[242]. Co-ordination was manifest at various levels. The day after the establishment of the Territorial Defence (hereinafter the "TO") on 9 April 1992 as the legitimate military organisation in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Mate Boban issued an order prohibiting the TO from entering HZHB territory[243]. The order was confirmed in a similar one issued by General Roso on 8 May 1992[244]. On 11 May 1992, in the municipality of Kiseljak, Tihomir Bla{ki} issued an order[245] to execute the one from Anto Roso by which the HVO became the sole legal military unit and which outlawed the TO. Dario Kordi} allegedly issued a similar order in the municipality of Busova~a[246]. An order of HV General Anto Roso was therefore quickly put into effect. Even on the subject of control of the munitions factory in Vitez, President Tudjman and Tihomir Bla{ki} promoted the same policy by threatening to blow it up if the ABiH attacked[247].

---

[238] Witness II, PT pp. 7115-7116, 7295-7296.
[239] Witness II, PT pp. 7112-7113, 7115-7116.
[240] See supra para. 110.
[241] P406/2. Translated from the French: "mieux se préparer militairement à la lutte contre toutes ces forces qui tentent d'entraver l'inévitable processus de création d'un Etat croate libre" (emphasised in the original).
[242] "Oftentimes the operations of the Croat army were co-ordinated with those of the HVO", Witness II, PT pp. 7294-7296. See also the authorisation for publishing a collective work to which Tihomir Bla{ki} contributed entitled Offensives and Operations of the HV and HVO, P406/112.
[243] P583; Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 160, para. 6.75.
[244] P584.
[245] P502b (bis).
[246] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 160, para. 6.76.
[247] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 163, para. 6.85.

119. Accordingly, the evidence demonstrates that there were regular meetings with President Tudjman and that the Bosnian Croat leaders, appointed by Croatia or with its consent, continued to direct the HZHB and the HVO well after June 1992.

120. Apart from providing manpower, Croatia also lent substantial material assistance to the HVO in the form of financial and logistical support[248]. The person responsible for all the intelligence services in Croatia publicly declared that Croatia had spent a million German marks (DM) a day on providing aid to all of Herceg-Bosna's structures including the HVO[249]. Croatia supplied the HVO with large quantities of arms and materiel in 1992, 1993 and 1994[250]. The presence of T-55 tanks and howitzers with the HV acronym was raised before the Trial Chamber. In September 1993, witness DX observed Croatian T-55 assault tanks in the Gornji Vakuf region being crewed by HV teams and that these tanks seemed to have been intended for participation in the hostilities between the HVO and the ABiH[251]. Equipment was also supplied to the ABiH but this ceased in 1993 during the conflict between the HVO and the ABiH[252]. HVO troops were trained in Croatia[253].

121. Finally, in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber also found that:

> Where the controlling State in question is an adjacent State with territorial ambitions on the State where the conflict is taking place, and the controlling State is attempting to achieve its territorial enlargement through the armed forces which it controls, it may be easier to establish the threshold [254].

122. In the light of all the foregoing and, in particular, the Croatian territorial ambitions in respect of Bosnia-Herzegovina detailed above, the Trial Chamber finds that Croatia, and more specifically former President Tudjman, was hoping to partition Bosnia and exercised such a degree of control over the Bosnian Croats and especially the HVO that it is justified to speak of overall control. Contrary to what the Defence asserted, the Trial Chamber concluded that the close ties between Croatia and the Bosnian Croats did not cease with the establishment of the HVO.

---

[248] P741, p. 1.
[249] Witness II, PT p. 7168. For example, the HDZ leadership in the municipality of Bugojno used 540,000 DM made available to it in a Viennese bank by the Ministry of Finance of the Republic of Croatia to move the equipment necessary for its defence (P406/3; document dated 3 March 1992).
[250] P406/1: supply of petrol; P406/89: vehicles; P406/25: order of the accused dated 19 September 1992 regarding the movement of arms, munitions and military equipment to and from Croatia.
[251] Witness DX, PT pp. 20004-20005.
[252] P558 (under seal), Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 170, para. 6.104.
[253] P406/23: order of the accused for reconnaissance group to undergo 10-day training in Croatia as "specific tasks are to be carried out" dated 24 July 1992.
[254] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 140.

123. Croatia's indirect intervention would therefore permit the conclusion that the conflict was international.

b) Protected persons and property

124. Once it has been established that a conflict is international, it becomes necessary to examine the last condition for Article 2 of the Statute to apply, namely, to determine whether the victims or property were protected under the Geneva Conventions.

i) The "nationality" of the victims

125. Article 4(1) of the Fourth Geneva Convention states that:

> Persons protected by the Convention are those who, at a given moment and in any manner whatsoever, find themselves, in case of a conflict or occupation, in the hands of a party to the conflict or Occupying Power of which they are not nationals.

126. The Defence maintained that since the Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats were nationals of the same country, they did not enjoy the protection accorded to the persons protected within the meaning of Article 4(1). The Defence argued that in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement the Appeals Chamber incorrectly found that the criterion of nationality was not a decisive factor for this article to apply. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber follows the conclusion arrived at by the Appeals Chamber which chose a "legal approach hinging more on substantial relations than on formal bonds" [255], an approach which it deemed best adapted to contemporary international armed conflicts:

> While previously wars were primarily between well-established States, in modern inter-ethnic armed conflicts such as that in the former Yugoslavia, new States are often created during the conflict and ethnicity rather than nationality may become the grounds for allegiance. Or, put another way, ethnicity may become determinative of national allegiance. Under these conditions, the requirement of nationality is even less adequate to define protected persons. In such conflicts, not only the text and the drafting history of the Convention but also, and more importantly, the Convention's object and purpose suggest that allegiance to a Party to the conflict and, correspondingly, control by this Party over persons in a given territory, may be regarded as the crucial test[256].

127. Consequently, the Defence argument on this particular point is rejected and the principle put forward by the Prosecution[257] confirmed. In an inter-ethnic armed conflict, a

---

[255] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 166.
[256] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 166. Cf. also the ^elebi}i Judgement, in which the Trial Chamber concluded as follows: "The provisions of domestic legislation and citizenship in a situation of violent State succession cannot be determinative of the protected status of persons caught up in conflicts which ensue from such events" (para. 263). The Trial Chamber continued by concluding that since the victims of the alleged acts had been arrested and detained principally on the basis of their ethnicity, they should be regarded as protected persons within the meaning of the Fourth Geneva Convention "as they were clearly regarded by the Bosnian authorities as belonging to the opposing party in an armed conflict and as posing a threat to the Bosnian State" (para. 265).
[257] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, pp. 151-154, paras. 6.48-6.60.

person's ethnic background may be regarded as a decisive factor in determining to which nation he owes his allegiance and may thus serve to establish the status of the victims as protected persons. The Trial Chamber considers that this is so in this instance.

128. Several of the explanations on the international nature of the conflict elaborated above by the Trial Chamber may be restated here. The disintegration of Yugoslavia occurred along "ethnic" lines. Ethnicity became more important than nationality in determining loyalties or commitments. One historian, a Defence witness, stated that Yugoslavia was a multi-ethnic State in which each of the nations that had formed had followed differing "ideologies": Orthodox, Catholic or Muslim[258]. The witness made reference to the ethnic principle and the historic principle whereby even 150 years ago Serbia and Croatia considered that they had a right to Bosnia. For their part, the Bosnians regarded themselves as a distinct people[259].

129. These trends became manifest in 1990 during the first multi-party elections held in Yugoslavia. The parties with nationalist leanings won in each constitutive republic. In Bosnia-Herzegovina, the dominant parties were the SDS, the SDA and the HDZ[260].

130. Croatia's policy towards the Bosnian Croats placed more emphasis on their ethnic background than on their nationality. A provision adopted by the Republic of Croatia gave to all members of the Croatian nation the right to citizenship[261]. General Bla{ki} himself asked to take advantage of this measure[262]. Another law authorised all Croats to vote in the elections in Croatia, thus allowing the Bosnian Croats with Bosnian nationality to vote in the parliamentary elections in the Republic of Croatia. The "Agreement on Friendship and Co-operation between the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia" stipulated that the two republics would reciprocally authorise their citizens to obtain dual nationality[263]. The Trial Chamber deems that all these texts were used by Croatia to steer the Croats of Bosnia-Herzegovina towards Croatia[264] and contributed to the fact that the people identified more with ethnicity than formal nationality when expressing their loyalty. Approximately 10% of the representatives in the Sabor came from the diaspora. Two Bosnian Croat members of the HVO were elected to the Croatian parliament – Vice Vukojevi} and [258] Witness Biland`i}, PT pp. 11281-11282.

[259] Witness Biland`i}, PT pp. 11452-11456.
[260] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 8, para. 3.10.
[261] P406/5.
[262] P765.
[263] Agreement of 21 July 1992, para. 7 (D572).
[264] Witness II, PT pp. 7156-7158.

Ivan Tolj[265]. UNPROFOR basically looked upon the HVO and the HV as being on the same side during the conflict against the ABiH and referred to them collectively as the "HV/HVO"[266]. The ECMM spoke of the need to put strong pressure on Croatia and the Bosnian Croats[267].

131. President Tudjman himself thought that BH was comprised of different nations:

> International recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina shall imply that the Croatian people, as one of the three constituent nations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, shall be guaranteed their sovereign rights[268]; and the Bosnian Croat officials considered the Bosnian Muslims and Serbs to be people of another nationality or another people altogether:

> The Croatian Defence Council of the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna shall respect the competence of the authorities in provinces where the other two nations are in the majority[269].

In April 1993, the vice-president of the HVO, Anto Valenta, requested "a province for every of these three nations"[270].

132. In the La{va Valley, one observer saw flags symbolising the various ethnic groups[271]. General Bla{ki} himself announced that the BH authorities in Sarajevo had no legitimacy in Kiseljak, that Kiseljak would be part of a Croatian canton and would look more to the west than the east[272]. A report submitted to the Trial Chamber mentioned "separate schools, only for Croats, [...] with new school books coming from Zagreb, using the 'traditional Croat language'"[273].

133. The supporters of the HVO were in no doubt that Croatia was their ally and that the Bosnian Muslims were their adversaries. They treated the Muslims as foreigners in Croatian territory. "Balija", a pejorative term for a Muslim, was commonly used. Keeping in mind the sense in which the notion of nationality was used in the former Yugoslavia and more specifically in central Bosnia, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the Bosnian Muslim

---

[265] Witness II, PT pp. 7156-7158
[266] P406/66, P406/72, P406/75, P406/80, P406/82.
[267] P741, p. 6.
[268] P406/5 (emphasis added).
[269] P24 (emphasis added).
[270] P741, p. 5.
[271] Witness DX, PT p. 19953. Cf. also P741.
[272] P545.
[273] P741, p. 1.

victims in the hands of the HVO must be considered as protected persons within the meaning of the Geneva Conventions[274].

ii) Co-belligerent States

134. The Prosecution considered that the Bosnian Muslim civilians were persons protected within the meaning of the Fourth Geneva Convention because Croatia and BH were not co-belligerent States and did not have normal diplomatic relations when the grave breaches were committed[275].

135. The Defence contended that even if the conflict had been international, the Bosnian Muslim victims of acts imputed to the HVO still would not have had the status of "protected" persons since Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina were co-belligerent States united against the aggression of the Bosnian Serbs. It draws its argument from Article 4(2) of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which provides inter alia that:

> nationals of a co-belligerent State shall not be regarded as protected persons while the State of which they are nationals has normal diplomatic representation in the State in whose hands they are.

136. The Defence argument may be tested from three perspectives: co-belligerence, normal diplomatic relations and the reasoning underlying Article 4 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

a. Co-belligerence

137. Firstly, the reasoning of the Defence may be upheld only if Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina were co-belligerent States or allies within the meaning of Article 4. The Defence first stated that none of these States had declared war on the other. It then suggested that the status of co-belligerent could be deduced from a review of the treaties signed between the two countries and whether or not there were diplomatic relations between the States in question. The Trial Chamber considers that it is important not to limit oneself to the formal or superficial elements but also to examine the actual relations between the two countries at the relevant time and region. It therefore comes down to deciding whether the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia were allies and acted as such in conducting operations in the Central Bosnia Operative Zone.

[274] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, pp. 151-152, footnote on p. 75.
[275] Prosecutor's Summary, p. 7, para. 1.10.

138. Granted, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina did enter into agreements over the course of the conflict. One of these, dated 14 April 1992, stipulated that the diplomatic and consular missions of Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina abroad would be responsible for defending the interests of the nationals of the other State when there was only a mission of one of the two party-States in the territory of a given country[276]. On 21 July 1992, an agreement on friendship and co-operation was signed[277] and on 25 July the two States entered into an agreement establishing diplomatic relations.

139. However, the true situation was very different from that which these agreements might suggest. Bosnia-Herzegovina perceived Croatia as a co-belligerent to the extent that they were fighting alongside each other against the Serbs. Nonetheless, it is evident that Bosnia did not see Croatia as a co-belligerent insofar as Croatia was lending assistance to the HVO in its fight against the ABiH over the period at issue[278].

140. The Croats had an ambivalent policy towards Bosnia-Herzegovina. The nationalist Croats benefited from the Serb aggression in Bosnia to expand the territory of Croatia into some regions of the newly independent Bosnia. Furthermore, the Serbian aggression forced the Croats and Muslims to form alliances, temporarily at least[279]. In fact, they were allies only when it served Croatian interests as for example in the Biha} pocket[280]. Following pressure exerted by the international community, the official declarations of the Croatian government admittedly tended to make it appear that Croatia was respecting the territorial integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina[281] and sought to demonstrate that the Croats and Muslims were co-operating. Croatia thus always denied that its troops were in the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina which the Security Council had nonetheless noted and deplored. At the same time, it supported gathering the Bosnian Croats into a distinct community parallel to the legitimate governmental authorities. To this end, during the conflict between the HVO and the ABiH in 1993, it stopped supplying the Bosnian Muslims[282], behaviour which runs contrary to that of an ally.

141. On the Bosnian side there was no doubt as to what was unfolding in Bosnia. The commander of the ABiH, Arif Pa{ali}, said on the subject of the HVO-ABiH conflict: "This

[276] Witness Degan, PT p. 16169.
[277] Witness Degan, PT p. 16134; D572.
[278] See above P556.
[279] Witness Donia, PT pp. 202-203.
[280] Witness DT, PT pp. 16395-16397.
[281] Witness II, PT p. 7281.

is not some local squabble. This is the implementation of a plan, a policy coming from Grude and Mate Boban"[283]. The division and conflict between the Bosnian Croats and Muslims were reproduced in Vitez, Novi Travnik and other locations in central Bosnia[284]. The intervention of the HV against the ABiH was characterised by a Defence witness as "unlawful armed intervention"[285]. On 8 May 1992, General Roso issued an order which outlawed the legitimate ABiH armed forces[286], an act which is not one of a co-belligerent. The Bosnian Croats who wished to co-operate with the ABiH faced internal opposition. For example, in autumn 1992, in Vare{, the local HVO attempted to co-operate with the Muslim army but Ivica Raji}, Tihomir Bla{ki}'s successor at the head of the Kiseljak HVO, sent troops to prevent the Croatian leaders from co-operating with the Muslims[287]. In Travnik, Colonel Filipovi} of the HVO declared that Mate Boban and Colonel Bla{ki} had exerted considerable pressure on him not to ally with the Muslims[288].

142. In any case, it seems obvious if only from the number of casualties they inflicted on each other that the ABiH and the HVO did not act towards each other within the CBOZ in the manner that co-belligerent States should[289].

143. In summary, the Trial Chamber deems it established that, in the conflict in central Bosnia, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina were not co-belligerent States within the meaning of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

b. Reasoning of Article 4 of the Fourth Geneva Convention

144. The Trial Chamber adjudges a final observation appropriate. The Commentary of the Fourth Geneva Convention reaffirms that the nationals of co-belligerent States are not regarded as protected persons so long as the State of which they are nationals has normal diplomatic representation in the other co-belligerent State[290]. The reasoning which underlies [282] P558 (under seal), Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 170, para. 6.104.

[283] Witness Vulliamy, PT pp. 7766-7767.
[284] Witness Vulliamy, PT pp. 7768-7769.
[285] Witness Degan, PT p. 16181.
[286] P584.
[287] Witness Vulliamy, PT pp. 8556-8557.
[288] Witness Vulliamy, PT p. 7791 and pp. 8535-8539.
[289] D345, P462.
[290] Commentary, p. 49.

this exception is revealing: "It is assumed in this provision that the nationals of co-belligerent States, that is to say, of allies, do not need protection under the Convention"[291].

145. In those cases where this reasoning does not apply, one might reflect on whether the exception must nevertheless be strictly heeded. In this respect, it may be useful to refer to the analysis of the status of "protected person" which appears in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement. The Appeals Chamber noted that in the instances contemplated by Article 4(2) of the Convention:

> those nationals are not "protected persons" as long as they benefit from the normal diplomatic protection of their State; when they lose it or in any event do not enjoy it, the Convention automatically grants them the status of "protected persons"[292].

Consequently, in those situations where civilians do not enjoy the normal diplomatic protection of their State, they should be accorded the status of protected person.

146. The legal approach taken in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement to the matter of nationality hinges more on actual relations than formal ties. If one bears in mind the purpose and goal of the Convention, the Bosnian Muslims must be regarded as protected persons within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention since, in practice, they did not enjoy any diplomatic protection.

iii) Prisoners of war

147. In accordance with the Third Geneva Convention, those persons defined in Article 4 are protected "from the time they fall into the power of the enemy and until their final release and repatriation"[293]. The Prosecution contended that all the Bosnian Muslim combatants held by the HVO suffered inhumane treatment and were used as human shields as alleged in counts 15 and 19 of the indictment, had the status of protected persons within the meaning of the Third Geneva Convention[294]. The Trial Chamber is of the view that all the persons identified as prisoners of war did enjoy the protection accorded by the Third Geneva Convention and points out that those who did not enjoy this protection were civilians and thereby enjoyed the protection accorded by the Fourth Geneva Convention. However, the Trial Chamber cannot envisage that the Third Geneva Convention may apply in respect of

[291] Commentary, p. 49.
[292] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 165.
[293] Third Geneva Convention, Article 5.
[294] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, p. 156, para. 6.66.

count 19 as the indictment specifies only Muslim civilians[295]. Nonetheless, the provisions of the Fourth Convention still remain applicable.

iv) Protected property

148. Pursuant to Article 53 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, the extensive destruction of property by an occupying Power not justified by military necessity is prohibited. According to the Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention, this protection is restricted to property within occupied territories:

> In order to dissipate any misconception in regard to the scope of Article 53 it must be pointed out that the property referred to is not accorded general protection; the Convention merely provides here for its protection in occupied territory[296].

149. The Prosecution maintained that the property of the Bosnian Muslims was protected because it was in the hands of an occupying Power[297]. The occupied territory was the part of BH territory within the enclaves dominated by the HVO, namely Vitez, Busova~a and Kiseljak. In these enclaves, Croatia played the role of occupying Power through the overall control it exercised over the HVO, the support it lent it and the close ties it maintained with it. Thus, by using the same reasoning which applies to establish the international nature of the conflict, the overall control exercised by Croatia over the HVO means that at the time of its destruction, the property of the Bosnian Muslims was under the control of Croatia and was in occupied territory. The Defence did not specifically address this issue.

150. Following to a large extent the reasoning of the Trial Chamber in the Raji} Decision[298], this Trial Chamber subscribes to the reasoning set out by the Prosecution.

c) The elements of the grave breaches

151. Once it has been established that Article 2 of the Statute is applicable in general, it becomes necessary to prove the ingredients of the various crimes alleged. The indictment contains six counts of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions which refer to five sub-headings of Article 2 of the Statute.

---

[295] Amended indictment, para. 16.
[296] Commentary, p. 301.
[297] Prosecutor's Summary, p. 7, para. 1.9.
[298] Review of the indictment pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Raji}, Case no. IT-95-95-12-R61, 13 September 1996, para. 42.

152. The Defence claimed that it is not sufficient to prove that an offence was the result of reckless acts. However, according to the Trial Chamber, the mens rea constituting all the violations of Article 2 of the Statute includes both guilty intent and recklessness which may be likened to serious criminal negligence. The elements of the offences are set out below.

i) Article 2(a) – wilful killing (count 5)

153. The Trial Chamber hearing the ^elebi}i case[299] defined the offence of wilful killing in its Judgement. For the material element of the offence, it must be proved that the death of the victim was the result of the actions of the accused as a commander. The intent, or mens rea, needed to establish the offence of wilful killing exists once it has been demonstrated that the accused intended to cause death or serious bodily injury which, as it is reasonable to assume, he had to understand was likely to lead to death.

ii) Article 2(b) – inhuman treatment (counts 15 and 19)

154. Article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention states that protected persons "shall at all times be humanely treated". The ^elebi}i Judgement analysed in great detail the offence of "inhuman treatment"[300]. The Trial Chamber hearing the case summarised its conclusions in the following manner:

> inhuman treatment is an intentional act or omission, that is an act which, judged objectively, is deliberate and not accidental, which causes serious mental harm or physical suffering or injury or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity [...]. Thus, inhuman treatment is intentional treatment which does not conform with the fundamental principle of humanity, and forms the umbrella under which the remainder of the listed "grave breaches" in the Conventions fall. Hence, acts characterised in the Conventions and Commentaries as inhuman, or which are inconsistent with the principle of humanity, constitute examples of actions that can be characterised as inhuman treatment.[301]

155. The Trial Chamber further concluded that the category "inhuman treatment" included not only acts such as torture and intentionally causing great suffering or inflicting serious injury to body, mind or health but also extended to other acts contravening the fundamental principle of humane treatment, in particular those which constitute an attack on human dignity. In the final analysis, deciding whether an act constitutes inhuman treatment is a question of fact to be ruled on with all the circumstances of the case in mind[302].

---

[299] Hereinafter the "^elebi}i Trial Chamber".
[300] ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 512 to 544.
[301] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 543.
[302] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 544.

iii) Article 2(c) – wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health (count 8)

156. This offence is an intentional act or omission consisting of causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, including mental health. This category of offences includes those acts which do not fulfil the conditions set for the characterisation of torture, even though acts of torture may also fit the definition given[303]. An analysis of the expression "wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" indicates that it is a single offence whose elements are set out as alternative options[304].

iv) Article 2(d) – extensive destruction of property (count 11)

157. An occupying Power is prohibited from destroying movable and non-movable property except where such destruction is made absolutely necessary by military operations. To constitute a grave breach, the destruction unjustified by military necessity must be extensive, unlawful and wanton. The notion of "extensive" is evaluated according to the facts of the case – a single act, such as the destruction of a hospital, may suffice to characterise an offence under this count[305].

v) Article 2(h) – taking civilians as hostages (count 17)

158. Within the meaning of Article 2 of the Statute, civilian hostages are persons unlawfully deprived of their freedom, often arbitrarily and sometimes under threat of death[306]. However, as asserted by the Defence[307], detention may be lawful in some circumstances, inter alia to protect civilians or when security reasons so impel. The Prosecution must establish that, at the time of the supposed detention, the allegedly censurable act was perpetrated in order to obtain a concession or gain an advantage. The elements of the offence are similar to those of Article 3(b) of the Geneva Conventions covered under Article 3 of the Statute.

---

[303] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 511.
[304] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 506.
[305] Commentary, p. 601.
[306] Commentary, pp. 600-601.
[307] Defence Brief, pp. 58-59.

C. Article 3 of the Statute – Violations of the Laws or Customs of War

159. Article 3 of the Statute states that:

> The International Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons violating the laws or customs of war. Such violations shall include but not be limited to:
>
> (a) employment of poisonous weapons or other weapons calculated to cause unnecessary suffering;
>
> (b) wanton destruction of cities, towns or villages, or devastation not justified by military necessity;
>
> (c) attack, or bombardment, by whatever means, of undefended towns, villages, dwellings, or buildings;
>
> (d) seizure of, destruction or wilful damage done to institutions dedicated to religion, charity and education, the arts and sciences, historic monuments and works of art and science;
>
> (e) plunder of public or private property.

160. The two parties acknowledged that the existence of an armed conflict and a nexus between the alleged acts or omissions and that armed conflict set conditions for the implementation of Article 3 of the Statute. The Trial Chamber has set out its position on the matter above[308]. Nonetheless, the parties did not agree upon the nature of the conflict and the scope of Article 3 is contested. The Trial Chamber must therefore rule on the issue before examining the elements of the offences under this Article of the Statute[309].

a) Scope and conditions of applicability of Article 3 of the Statute

161. At the outset, it is appropriate to note that Article 3 of the Statute applies to both internal and international conflicts. This conclusion was reached in the Tadi} Appeal Decision and was not challenged by the parties:

> In the light of the intent of the Security Council and the logical and systematic interpretation of Article 3 as well as customary international law, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, under Article 3, the International Tribunal has jurisdiction over the acts alleged in the indictment, regardless of whether they occurred within an internal or an international armed conflict[310].

---

[308] See above, II, A.

[309] The Trial Chamber points out that the Prosecution expressly withdrew count 2 insofar as count 12 reproduces the charges therein (Prosecutor's Summary, para 8.2, p. 59).

[310] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 137 (emphasis added). Cf. also the Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Anto Furund`ija, Case no. IT-95-17/1-T, 10 December 1998 (hereinafter the "Furund`ija Judgement"), para. 132.

162. The Prosecution asserted that the enumeration of the laws or customs of war appearing in Article 3 of the Statute is illustrative and not exhaustive[311]. It also contended that Additional Protocol I bound the parties pursuant to a series of special agreements which they signed under the auspices of the ICRC and to customary international law which prohibits unlawful attacks upon civilians and civilian property whatever the nature of the conflict[312].

163. The Defence nevertheless maintained that Article 3 represented a limited body of customary and conventional law. It contested inter alia that some of the provisions of the Hague Convention of 1907 are contained therein[313] as the Convention allegedly acquires a customary aspect only in international armed conflicts. The Defence moreover deemed that Additional Protocol I did not apply to counts 3 and 4 because it did not constitute part of established customary international law[314]. It also challenged the applicability of Additional Protocol II to count 3 of the indictment since the HVO and the HZHB never formally agreed to the application of the whole of Additional Protocol II as conventional law and were not bound by the agreement that the Croatian and Bosnian authorities might have given to the said Protocol[315].

i) Customary international law and conventional law

164. In interpreting Article 3, it is appropriate to refer to the Report of the Secretary-General[316]. According to this Report, the Statute of the Tribunal should apply the rules of international humanitarian law which form part of customary law in order to account for the principle of nullum crimen sine lege[317]. The Report sets out that the part of conventional international humanitarian law which has "beyond doubt" become part of customary international law is:

> the law applicable in armed conflict as embodied in: the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims; the Hague Convention (IV) respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land and the regulations annexed thereto of 18 October 1907; the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948; and the Charter of the International Military Tribunal of 8 August 1945[318].

---

[311] Reaffirmed in the Tadi} Appeal Decision, par. 87; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 278; and Furund`ija Judgement, para. 133.
[312] Prosecutor's Brief, pp. 168 and 169, paras. 7.7 to 7.12.
[313] Defence Brief, p. 60.
[314] Defence Brief, p. 65.
[315] Defence Brief, pp. 62 and 63
[316] S/25704, 3 May 1993.
[317] Report of the Secretary-General, para. 34.
[318] Report of the Secretary-General, para. 35.

165. The Security Council subsequently approved the Report and, thereby, the term adopted by the Secretary-General to define those rules which constitute international customary humanitarian law. That law allows perpetrators of violations of the rules to be prosecuted without risking infringing the principle of nullum crimen sine lege.

166. Common Article 3 must be considered a rule of customary international law[319]. The ^elebi}i Judgement points this out very explicitly and sets forth inter alia that:

> While in 1949 the insertion of a provision concerning internal armed conflicts into the Geneva Conventions may have been innovative, there can be no question that the protections and prohibitions enunciated in that provision have come to form part of customary international law[320].

The Akayesu Judgement rendered by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, expresses the same viewpoint:

> It is today clear that the norms of Common Article 3 have acquired the status of customary law in that most States, by their domestic penal codes, have criminalized acts which if committed during internal armed conflict, would constitute violations of Common Article 3[321].

167. It is important to note that Common Article 3 lays down minimum criteria that the parties must respect during a conflict, expressing "the fundamental principle underlying the four Geneva Conventions", that is, humane treatment[322].

168. Further, the Trial Chamber must take note of the very explicit terms of Article 3 of the Statute in which violations of the laws or customs of war are in no manner enumerated as a closed list. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that it is the Hague Convention (IV) of 1907 respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (hereinafter "the Regulations of The Hague"), as interpreted and applied by the Nuremberg Tribunal, which is the basis for Article 3 of the Statute[323]. Hence, although Article 3 of the Statute subsumes Common Article 3[324], it nevertheless remains a broader provision inasmuch as it is also based on the

---

[319] Report of the Secretary-General; paras. 98, 102 and 134 of the Tadi} Appeal Decision; paras. 609-611 of the Tadi} Judgement and para. 218 in the Nicaragua case.
[320] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 301.
[321] Akayesu Judgement, para. 608.
[322] Commentary, p. 38: "With Common Article 3 representing, as it does, the minimum which must be applied in the least determinate of conflicts, its terms must a fortiori be respected in the case of international conflicts proper, when all the provisions of the Convention are applicable". Cf. also the Akayesu Judgement, para. 601; the Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 102; Nicaragua case, para. 218.
[323] Report of the Secretary-General, paras. 41-44; Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 86.
[324] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 87; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 298.

Regulations of The Hague which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, also undoubtedly form part of customary international law. As the Secretary-General noted in his Report:

> The Hague Regulations cover aspects of international humanitarian law which are also covered by the 1949 Geneva Conventions. However, the Hague Regulations also recognise that the right of belligerents to conduct warfare is not unlimited and that resort to certain methods of waging war is prohibited under the rules of land warfare[325].

169. The Report of the Secretary-General also states that the law applied by the Tribunal must be customary international law so that "the problem of adherence of some but not all States to specific conventions does not arise"[326]. In line with this reasoning, the Trial Chamber is also empowered to apply any agreement which incontestably bound the parties at the date the crime was perpetrated. Thus, the risk would not be run of infringing the principle of nullum crimen sine lege where a belligerent did not adhere to a particular treaty[327].

170. Taking into account the effect of the application of the fundamental principles of Article 3 of the Statute in this case, the Trial Chamber considers that it should not be necessary to rule on the applicability of Protocol I. The specific provisions of Article 3 of the Statute satisfactorily cover the provision of the said Protocol relating to unlawful attacks upon civilian targets. The specific provisions of Common Article 3 also satisfactorily cover the prohibition on attacks against civilians as provided for by Protocols I and II.

171. Taking into account the arguments of the parties on this point, and in particular of the Defence, the Trial Chamber will nonetheless deal rapidly with the issue of the Additional Protocols.

172. The Trial Chamber deems that Article 3 covers the violations of the agreements binding the parties to the conflict - agreements which are regarded as falling under conventional law, that is, which have not become customary international law[328]. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that this applies to the Additional Protocols. There are at least two arguments for this. Firstly, Croatia ratified the two Protocols (and the four Geneva Conventions) on 11 May 1992. Bosnia-Herzegovina ratified them on 31 December 1992. Consequently, as of 1 January 1993, the two parties were bound by the provisions of the two Protocols, whatever their status within customary international law. Secondly, in an agreement signed on 22 May 1992 under the auspices of the ICRC, the two parties expressly

[325] Report of the Secretary-General, para. 43.
[326] Report of the Secretary-General, para. 34.
[327] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 143.

agreed that they would be bound during the conflict by provisions 51 and 52 of Additional Protocol I[329].

173. The Defence's argument that Additional Protocol I is not part of customary international law is therefore not relevant. Finally, once it has been established that Protocol I applies, the application of Additional Protocol II is excluded pursuant to Article 1 of this Protocol[330].

174. Lastly, a violation of the laws or customs of war within the meaning of Article 3 of the Statute is a serious violation of international humanitarian law within the meaning of the Statute which the Tribunal was ipso facto established to prosecute and punish. Still to be verified is whether the violation in question entails individual criminal responsibility and whether, as regards the counts based on Common Article 3, the violations were committed against persons protected by the said article.

ii) Individual criminal responsibility

175. The Prosecution contended that the provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907 constitute international customary rules which were restated in Article 6(b) of the Nuremberg Statute. Violations of these provisions incur the individual criminal responsibility of the person violating the rule[331]. Conversely, the Defence did not acknowledge that violations of the laws or customs of war within the meaning of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions had ever been upheld to impose criminal sanctions upon individuals[332].

176. The Trial Chamber recalls that violations of Article 3 of the Statute which include violations of the Regulations of The Hague and those of Common Article 3 are by definition serious violations of international humanitarian law within the meaning of the Statute. They are thus likely to incur individual criminal responsibility in accordance with Article 7 of the Statute. The Trial Chamber observes moreover that the provisions of the criminal code of the [328] Prosecutor's Brief, p. 167, para. 7.4.

---

[329] P786, para. 2.5.
[330] "This Protocol [...] shall apply to all armed conflicts which are not covered by Article 1 of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I) ...".
[331] Prosecutor's Brief, pp. 171-173, paras. 7.24-7.32.
[332] Defence Brief, p. 61.

SFRY[333], adopted[334] by Bosnia-Herzegovina in April 1992, provide that war crimes committed during internal or international conflicts incur individual criminal responsibility[335]. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that, as was concluded in the Tadi} Appeal Decision, customary international law imposes criminal responsibility for serious violations of Common Article 3[336].

iii) Protected persons (Common Article 3)

177. Where the charges are specifically based on Common Article 3[337], it is necessary to show that the violations were committed against persons not directly involved in the hostilities[338]. The criterion applied in the Tadi} Judgement comes down to asking:

> whether, at the time of the alleged offence, the alleged victim of the proscribed acts was directly taking part in hostilities, being those hostilities in the context of which the alleged offences are said to have been committed. If the answer to that question is negative, the victim will enjoy the protection of the proscriptions contained in Common Article 3[339].

178. The conclusions grounded on this criterion will depend on an analysis of the facts rather than the law.

b) The elements of the offences

179. Having determined that Article 3 is applicable, it must still be proved that one of the particular offences enumerated therein has occurred. The indictment alleges nine offences under Article 3 in ten counts. The Prosecutor maintained that the mens rea which characterises all the violations of Article 3 of the Statute, as well as the violations of Article 2, is the intentionality of the acts or omissions, a concept containing both guilty intent and recklessness likeable to serious criminal negligence[340]. The elements of the offences which must be proved are set forth below.

i) Unlawful attack against civilians (count 3); attack upon civilian property (count 4)

---

[333] Ed. 1990, Articles 142 and 143.
[334] Subject to certain amendments.
[335] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 312.
[336] Tadi} Appeal Decision, para. 134. In this instance, the position is supported by the Prosecution (Prosecutor's Brief, p. 170, para. 7.17).
[337] Counts 6, 9, 16, 18 and 20.
[338] Having set out above that the violations must have been committed within the context of an armed conflict and that there is a close nexus between them and the said conflict.
[339] Tadi} Judgement, para. 615.
[340] Prosecutor's Brief, pp. 35-36, paras. 4.33-4.36.

180. As proposed by the Prosecution[341], the Trial Chamber deems that the attack must have caused deaths and/or serious bodily injury within the civilian population or damage to civilian property. The parties to the conflict are obliged to attempt to distinguish between military targets and civilian persons or property. Targeting civilians or civilian property is an offence when not justified by military necessity. Civilians within the meaning of Article 3 are persons who are not, or no longer, members of the armed forces. Civilian property covers any property that could not be legitimately considered a military objective. Such an attack must have been conducted intentionally in the knowledge, or when it was impossible not to know, that civilians or civilian property were being targeted not through military necessity.

ii) Murder (count 6)

181. The content of the offence of murder under Article 3 is the same as for wilful killing under Article 2[342].

iii) Violence to life and person (count 9)

182. This offence appears in Article 3(1)(a) common to the Geneva Conventions. It is a broad offence which, at first glance, encompasses murder, mutilation, cruel treatment and torture and which is accordingly defined by the cumulation of the elements of these specific offences. The offence is to be linked to those of Article 2(a) (wilful killing), Article 2(b) (inhuman treatment) and Article 2(c) (causing serious injury to body) of the Statute. The Defence contended that the specific intent to commit violence to life and person must be demonstrated. The Trial Chamber considers that the mens rea is characterised once it has been established that the accused intended to commit violence to the life or person of the victims deliberately or through recklessness.

iv) Devastation of property (count 12)

183. Similar to the grave breach constituting part of Article 2(d) of the Statute, the devastation of property is prohibited except where it may be justified by military necessity. So as to be punishable, the devastation must have been perpetrated intentionally or have been the foreseeable consequence of the acts of the accused.

v) Plunder of public or private property (count 13)

[341] Prosecutor's Summary, annex 1, pp. 1-2.

184. The prohibition on the wanton appropriation of enemy public or private property extends to both isolated acts of plunder for private interest and to the "organized seizure of property undertaken within the framework of a systematic economic exploitation of occupied territory". Plunder "should be understood to embrace all forms of unlawful appropriation of property in armed conflict for which individual criminal responsibility attaches under international law, including those acts traditionally described as 'pillage'"[343].

vi) Destruction or wilful damage to institutions dedicated to religion or education (count 14)

185. The damage or destruction must have been committed intentionally to institutions which may clearly be identified as dedicated to religion or education and which were not being used for military purposes at the time of the acts. In addition, the institutions must not have been in the immediate vicinity of military objectives.

vii) Cruel treatment (count 16 and 20)

186. The Defence asserted inter alia that using human shields and trench digging constituted cruel treatment only if the victims were foreigners in enemy territory, inhabitants of an occupied territory or detainees[344]. The Trial Chamber is of the view that treatment may be cruel whatever the status of the person concerned. The Trial Chamber entirely concurs with the ^elebi}i Trial Chamber which arrived at the conclusion that cruel treatment constitutes an intentional act or omission "which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity. As such, it carries an equivalent meaning and therefore the same residual function for the purposes of Common article 3 of the Statute, as inhuman treatment does in relation to grave breaches of the Geneva Convention"[345].

viii) Taking of hostages (count 18)

187. The taking of hostages is prohibited by Article 3(b) common to the Geneva Conventions which is covered by Article 3 of the Statute. The commentary defines hostages as follows:

---

[342] As decided by the Trial Chamber in the ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 422.
[343] ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 590-591.
[344] PT, submission, p. 25290; Defence Brief, p. 68.
[345] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 552.

> hostages are nationals of a belligerent State who of their own free will or through compulsion are in the hands of the enemy and are answerable with their freedom or their life for the execution of his orders and the security of his armed forces[346].

Consonant with the spirit of the Fourth Convention, the Commentary sets out that the term "hostage" must be understood in the broadest sense[347]. The definition of hostages must be understood as being similar to that of civilians taken as hostages within the meaning of grave breaches under Article 2 of the Statute, that is - persons unlawfully deprived of their freedom, often wantonly and sometimes under threat of death. The parties did not contest that to be characterised as hostages the detainees must have been used to obtain some advantage or to ensure that a belligerent, other person or other group of persons enter into some undertaking. In this respect, the Trial Chamber will examine the evidence as to whether the victims were detained or otherwise deprived of their freedom by the Croatian forces (HVO or others).

D. Article 5 of the Statute: crimes against humanity

188. The provisions of Article 5 of the Statute, entitled "Crimes against humanity", grant the Tribunal jurisdiction to:

> "[..] prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population:
>
> (a) murder
>
> (b) extermination
>
> (c) enslavement
>
> (d) deportation
>
> (e) imprisonment
>
> (f) torture
>
> (g) rape
>
> (h) persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds
>
> (i) other inhumane acts.

[346] Commentary, p. 229.
[347] Commentary, p. 230.

This text primarily draws on Article 6(c) of the Statute of the Nuremberg Tribunal of 8 August 1945[348] which constitutes the benchmark definition of a crime against humanity and is also the source of the provisions of Article 3 of the Statute of the Tribunal for Rwanda (hereinafter the "ICTR") and Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court.

1. The Arguments of the Parties

189. The Trial Chamber will present in brief the legal arguments of the Prosecutor and the Defence as they appear in their respective final briefs.

a) The Prosecution

190. Firstly, the Prosecutor contended that a crime against humanity must be committed within the context of a widespread or systematic operation[349]. She also considered that for the crime to be ascribed to the accused he must be aware of this context[350]. Finally, she asserted that it must be committed as part of an armed conflict[351].

191. The Prosecutor alleged first that the two characteristics "widespread nature" and "systematic nature" of the "widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population" are not cumulative[352]. She noted that the first characteristic relates to the scale of the criminal acts and to the number of victims[353]. She then stated that the second refers to the plan or policy according to which the crimes are committed[354] which must not necessarily be expressly set out and may be inferred from the factual circumstances particular to the case in hand[355].

192. Moreover, the Prosecutor was of the view that the notion of "civilian population" must be defined broadly and include, inter alia, persons taking no active part in the hostilities[356] or who are not fit for combat[357]. She drew attention in this respect to the fact that [348] Annex to the Agreement for the Prosecution and Punishment of Major War Criminals of the European Axis, signed in London on 8 August 1945, 85 "Recueil des traités des Nations Unies /United Nations Treaty Series/", (p. 251 in the French /no English version has been locatable/).

[349] Prosecutor's Brief, book 1, paras. 5.10–5.20.
[350] Ibid., para. 5.4.
[351] Ibid., paras. 5.6–5.9.
[352] Ibid., paras. 5.10–5.11.
[353] Ibid., paras. 5.13–5.16.
[354] Ibid., paras. 5.13–5.16.
[355] Ibid., para. 5.14.
[356] Ibid., para. 5.269.
[357] Ibid., para. 5.267.

the presence of resistance fighters or soldiers amongst the civilian population does not alter the civilian nature of that population[358].

193. As regards the mens rea, the Prosecutor deemed it sufficient to demonstrate that the perpetrator of a crime against humanity is aware of the general context within which his act is framed at the instant that he commits the crimes[359]. Moreover, the Prosecutor argued that it need not be proved that the perpetrator was motivated by discriminatory intent except, however, for the crime of persecution[360]. To be found guilty of persecution the accused must know that his act forms part of a discriminatory attack against a civilian population[361]. She noted in this respect that persecution may encompass acts enumerated in the Statute under Articles 2, 3 and 5 and all other violations of fundamental human rights[362].

b) The Defence

194. The Defence did not accept the same interpretation of either the material elements or the mens rea of a crime against humanity.

195. It considered that the two criteria of the "widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population" are cumulative[363]. It also noted that a crime against humanity must be committed as part of an official policy of a State or organisation[364].

196. In addition, the Defence asserted that the population targeted by the perpetrator of the crime must be civilian[365]. It noted in this respect that the criterion which allows a distinction to be made between a civilian population and an "organised defence" is not the number of civilians involved but the objective of the organised defence[366].

197. In respect of the mens rea, the Defence maintained that the perpetrator of the crime must intend to implement the official policy of the State or organisation concerned[367]. It submitted in this regard that persecution requires proof of a clearly defined mens rea, that is,

---

[358] Ibid., para. 5.267.
[359] Ibid., para. 5.4 and paras. 5.278–5.282.
[360] Ibid., paras. 5.283–5.284.
[361] Prosecutor's Brief, book 3, para. 2.16.
[362] Ibid., paras. 2.2–2.13.
[363] Defence Brief, book 2, E, pp. 75-77.
[364] Ibid., pp. 77-78.
[365] Ibid., pp. 74-75.
[366] Ibid., p. 75.
[367] Ibid., pp. 78-80.

the intent to carry out the discriminatory State policy[368]. More specifically, it put forth that the accused may not be found guilty of persecution for crimes such as the forcible transfer of civilians or the plunder of property[369].

2. Discussion and conclusions

198. A preliminary comment is appropriate before examining the constituent elements of a crime against humanity as they stood in customary international law prevailing at the time the crimes imputed to the accused were allegedly committed[370] and, more specifically, in both texts and international and national case-law. The sub-characterisations specified in the indictment brought against General Bla{ki} – that is murder, persecutions and other inhumane acts – will be integrated into the examination of the legal and factual elements of a crime against humanity. However, for the "underlying crimes", each with its own characteristics, to be characterised as a crime against humanity, they must be part of a single category - that of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population - which gives this offence its specificity and distinguishes it fundamentally from other violations of humanitarian law defined by the Statute[371]. As stated by the International Law Commission (hereinafter the "ILC"),

> "[t]he particular forms of unlawful act (murder, enslavement, deportation, torture, rape, imprisonment etc.) are less crucial to the definition than the factors of scale and deliberate policy, as well as in their being targeted against the civilian population in whole or in part"[372].

a) The legal and factual elements

199. Two essential elements derive from the definition of a crime against humanity - firstly, a material criterion, which consists of the commission of one of the enumerated

---

[368] Ibid., p. 80.
[369] Ibid., pp. 81-84.
[370] The customary character of the provisions of Article 5 of the Statute and of the individual criminal responsibility of the perpetrators of crimes against humanity has been recognised by the Trial Chamber Judges in the Tadi} Judgement (para. 623) and the Tadi} Appeal Decision (para. 141). In the assessment of the Appeals Judges, "There is no question, however, that the definition of crimes against humanity adopted by the Security Council in Article 5 comports with the principle of nullum crimen sine lege". The Trial Chamber itself noted that "[...] since the Nürnberg Charter, the customary status of the prohibition against crimes against humanity [...] ha[s] not been seriously questioned".
[371] According to the report of the International Law Commission (hereinafter the "ILC") on the work of its 43rd session "each of the subparagraphs concerning the criminal acts should be read in conjunction with the chapeau of the article, under which they are a crime only if they constitute systematic or mass violations of human rights" (emphasis added) (Report of the ILC on the work of its 43rd session, 29 April – 19 July 1991, supplement no. 10 (A/46/10) (hereinafter the "1991 ILC Report"), p. 266).
[372] Report of the ILC on the work of its 46th session, 2 May – 22 July 1994, supplement no. 10 (A/49/10) (hereinafter the "1994 ILC Report"), p. 76.

crimes as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population and, secondly, a mental criterion, that is, awareness of participating in this attack.

i) The material element

200. Having presented the general conditions of the offence, the Trial Chamber will define the three sub-characterisations imputed to General Bla{ki}.

a. The widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population

201. A crime against humanity is made special by the methods employed in its perpetration (the widespread character) or by the context in which these methods must be framed (the systematic character) as well as by the status of the victims (any civilian population).

i. A widespread or systematic attack

202. The "widespread or systematic" character of the offence does not feature in the provisions of Article 5 of the Statute which mention only acts "directed against any civilian population". It is appropriate, however, to note that the words "directed against any civilian population"[373] and some of the sub-characterisations set out in the text of the Statute imply, both by their very nature and by law, an element of being widespread or organised, whether as regards the acts or the victims. "Extermination", "enslavement" and "persecutions" do not refer to single events.

Moreover, the assertion that the "widespread or systematic" character is a constituent element of a crime against humanity is found in Article 3 of the Statute of the ICTR[374] and Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court[375]. The Appeals Chamber in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement[376] rendered consequent to the Judgement of Trial Chamber II of the ICTY dated 7 May 1997 and Trial Chambers I and II of the ICTR in their Judgements pronounced [373] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 248. The Appeal Judges maintained that "[...] it may be inferred from the words "directed against any civilian population" in Article 5 of the Statute that the acts of the accused must comprise part of a pattern of widespread and systematic crimes directed against a civilian population and that the accused must have known that his acts fit into such a pattern".

[374] Article 3 of the Statute of the ICTR characterises inhumane acts "committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population" as crimes against humanity (emphasis added).

[375] Within the terms of Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (PCMICC/1999/INF/3), a crime against humanity means "any of the following acts when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any population, with knowledge of the attack" (emphasis added).

[376] Tadi} Judgement, para. 648. According to the Judgement "It is therefore the desire to exclude isolated or random acts from the notion of crimes of humanity that led to the inclusion of the requirement that the acts must be directed against a civilian "population", and either a finding or widespreadness, which refers to the number of victims, or systematicity, indicating that a pattern or methodical plan is evident, fulfils this requirement".

on 2 September 1998 and 21 May 1999 in the cases The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu[377] and The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana[378] respectively all made the widespread or systematic characteristic an essential element of the offence. That being the case, there can be no doubt that inhumane acts constituting a crime against humanity must be part of a systematic or widespread attack against civilians.

203. The systematic character refers to four elements which for the purposes of this case may be expressed as follows:

- the existence of a political objective, a plan pursuant to which the attack is perpetrated or an ideology, in the broad sense of the word, that is, to destroy, persecute or weaken a community[379];

- the perpetration of a criminal act on a very large scale against a group of civilians or the repeated and continuous commission of inhumane acts linked to one another[380];

- the preparation and use of significant public or private resources, whether military or other[381];

- the implication of high-level political and/or military authorities in the definition and establishment of the methodical plan.

---

[377] Akayesu Judgement, paras. 579-581. Paragraph 579 commences with the affirmation: "The Chamber considers that it is a prerequisite that the act must be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack and not just a random act of violence" (emphasis added).

[378] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 123.

[379] The case-law of both this Tribunal, in the Tadi} Judgement, (para. 648), and the ICTR, in the Akayesu (para. 580) and Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgements (para. 123), refer to the plan or policy in order to define the element of "systematicity".
In the case The Prosecutor v. Menten the Dutch Supreme Court evoked the condition of "systematicity" in reference particularly to a policy consciously directed against a group of persons (75, International Law Report, (hereinafter the "ILR"), 1987, pp. 362-363): "The concept of crimes against humanity also requires – although this is not expressed in so many words in the [...] definition – that the crimes in question form part of a system based on terror or constitute a link in a consciously pursued policy directed against particular groups of people" (emphasis added).

[380] According to the Report of the ILC on the work of its 48th session, the term systematic means "pursuant to a preconceived plan or policy. The implementation of this plan or policy could result in the repeated or continuous commission of inhumane acts" (emphasis added) (Report of the ILC on the work of its 48th session, 6 May – 26 July 1996, supplement no. 10 (A/51/10) (hereinafter the "1996 ILC Report"), p. 94).
This definition is in keeping with the preceding work of the ILC and, in particular, that of its 43rd session which created the offence of "Systematic or mass violations of human rights" under Article 21 and which stated that the systematic characteristic related to a "constant practice or to a methodical plan to carry out [...] violations of human rights" (emphasis added) (1991 ILC Report, p. 266).

[381] In the Akayesu Judgement, the Judges referred to the concerted policy and use of "substantial public or private resources" to characterise the systematic nature (para. 580).

204. This plan, however, need not necessarily be declared expressly or even stated clearly and precisely [382]. It may be surmised from the occurrence of a series of events[383], inter alia:

- the general historical circumstances and the overall political background against which the criminal acts are set;

- the establishment and implementation of autonomous political structures at any level of authority in a given territory;

- the general content of a political programme, as it appears in the writings and speeches of its authors;

- media propaganda;

- the establishment and implementation of autonomous military structures;

- the mobilisation of armed forces;

- temporally and geographically repeated and co-ordinated military offensives;

- links between the military hierarchy and the political structure and its political programme;

- alterations to the "ethnic" composition of populations;

- discriminatory measures, whether administrative or other (banking restrictions, laissez-passer,...)

- the scale of the acts of violence perpetrated – in particular, murders and other physical acts of violence, rape, arbitrary imprisonment, deportations and expulsions or the destruction of non-military property, in particular, sacral sites.

---

[382] Cf. especially, the Tadi} Judgement, para. 653.

[383] Review of the Indictments Pursuant to Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Radovan Karad`i} and Ratko Mladi}, Case no. IT-95-5-R61, 11 July 1996, (hereinafter "Article 61 Karad`i} and Mladi}"), para. 43; Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Dragan Nikoli}, Case no. IT-94-2-R61, 20 October 1995, (hereinafter "Article 61 Nikoli}"), para. 27; Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Milan Marti}, Case no. IT-95-11-R61, 8 March 1996, para. 27.

205. Nor must the plan necessarily be conceived at the highest level of the State machinery. Trial Chambers I and II of both this Tribunal[384] and the ICTR[385] have constantly refused to characterise a crime against humanity as an "act of criminal sovereignty"[386]. To support the argument they relied inter alia upon the opinion of the ILC on the work of its 43rd session according to which individuals "with de facto power or organized in criminal gangs" are just as capable as State leaders of implementing a large-scale policy of terror and committing mass acts of violence[387]. As pointed out by Advocate-General Dontenwille at the end of his application to the French Cour de Cassation in the case Fédération nationale des déportés et internés résistants et patriotes et autres v. Barbie (hereinafter the "Barbie Case"),

> "Are there not forces and organizations whose powers might be greater and whose actions might be more extensive than those of certain countries represented institutionally at the United Nations? Care is required because other methods of total abuse of the human condition could equal in horror, albeit from other aspects, those of which we have just spoken."[388]

Moreover, Article 18 of the Draft ILC Code defined a crime against humanity as committing crimes "in a systematic manner or on a large scale and instigated or directed by a government or by any organization or group"[389] .

The texts of the Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted by 120 States of the international community confirm this interpretation. They hold that criminal acts must be committed "pursuant to or in furtherance of a State or organizational policy [...]".[390]

206. The widespread characteristic refers to the scale of the acts perpetrated and to the number of victims. According to the draft Code of the ILC, to which Trial Chamber II explicitly refer in the case The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi},

> "inhumane acts [must] be committed on a large scale meaning that the acts are directed[391] against a multiplicity of victims. This requirement excludes an isolated inhumane act

---

[384] Article 61 Nikoli}, para. 26 and Tadi} Judgement, para. 654. According to the Judgement "As the first international tribunal to consider charges of crimes against humanity alleged to have occurred after the Second World War, the International Tribunal is not bound by past doctrine but must apply customary international law as it stood at the time of the offences. In this regard the law in relation to crimes against humanity has developed to take into account forces which, although not those of a legitimate government, have de facto control over, or are able to move freely within, defined territory" (emphasis added).
[385] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 126 and Akayesu Judgement, para. 580. Within the terms of the Akayesu Judgement "There is no requirement that this policy must be adopted formally as the policy of a state."
[386] J.Graven, "Les crimes contre l'humanité", Recueil des cours de l'Académie de droit international, 1950, p. 566. Translated from the French: "... acte de souveraineté criminel...".
[387] 1991 ILC Report, p. 266.
[388] Vol. 78, ILR, 1988, p. 147.
[389] 1996 ILC Report, p. 93 (emphasis added).
[390] Article 7(1)(a) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (emphasis added).

committed by a perpetrator acting on his own initiative and directed against a single victim"[392].

A crime may be widespread or committed on a large-scale by "the cumulative effect of a series of inhumane acts or the singular effect of an inhumane act of extraordinary magnitude"[393].

207. As asserted by Trial Chambers I and II of the ICTY and ICTR in the cases The Prosecutor v. Mile Mrk{i}, Miroslav Radi} and Veselin [Ijivan~anin[394], Tadi}[395], Akayesu[396] and Kayishema and Ruzindana[397] and as it appears in the Report of the Secretary-General[398], the Statute of the International Criminal Court[399] and the work of the ILC[400], the conditions of scale and "systematicity" are not necessarily cumulative. This means that for inhumane acts to be characterised as crimes against humanity it is sufficient that one of the conditions be met. The fact still remains however that, in practice, these two criteria will often be difficult to separate since a widespread attack targeting a large number of victims generally relies on some form of planning or organisation. The quantitative criterion is not objectively definable as witnessed by the fact that neither international texts nor international and national case-law set any threshold starting with which a crime against humanity is constituted.

ii. A civilian population

208. The contention that acts of violence perpetrated systematically or on a widespread basis against a population must not be characterised as a crime against humanity on the sole ground that the victims were soldiers and regardless of the fact that they were not combatants when the crimes were perpetrated is not in conformity with either the letter or spirit of Article 5 of the Statute. The terms of this provision are in no manner restrictive in this respect since a

---

[391] The term "directed" appears to refer more to the intention of the perpetrator of the crime to commit a massive or widespread crime than the physical result of his action.
[392] 1996 ILC Report, pp. 94-95.
[393] Ibid. p. 95.
[394] Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, The Prosecutor v. Mile Mrk{i}, Miroslav Radi} and Veselin [Ijivan~anin, Case no. IT-95-13-R61, 3 April 1996, (hereinafter "Article 61 Mrk{i}, Radi} and [Ijivan~anin") para. 30.
[395] Tadi} Judgement, paras. 646-647
[396] Akayesu Judgement, para. 579.
[397] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para 123.
[398] Report of the Secretary-General, para 48.
[399] Article 7(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court.
[400] Cf. 1996 ILC Report, pp. 94-95: "The opening clause of this definition [of crimes against humanity] establishes the two general conditions which must be met for one of the prohibited acts to qualify as a crime against humanity covered by the present Code. The first condition requires that the act was "committed in a systematic manner or on a large scale". This condition consists of two alternative requirements ... Consequently, an act could constitute a crime against humanity if either of these conditions is met" (emphasis added).

crime against humanity applies to acts "directed[401] against any civilian population". As far as the spirit of the text is concerned, it must be remembered that the specificity of a crime against humanity results not from the status of the victim but the scale and organisation in which it must be committed.

209. In this spirit, it is appropriate to state that Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions, whose customary nature was recognised, in particular, by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadi} Appeal Decision, protects not only persons taking no active part in the hostilities but also members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause. Moreover, Trial Chamber I of the ICTR which heard the Akayesu case[402] relied on this provision to classify as civilians within the meaning of Article 3 of the ICTR Statute persons who for one reason or another were no longer directly involved in fighting.

210. The case-law of this Tribunal in the cases Mrk{i}, Radi} and [ljivan-anin[403] and Tadi}[404] has also interpreted broadly the notion of a civilian population, adjudging that it must include persons involved in resistance movements[405].

211. Moreover, relying on the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 50(3) of Protocol I, Trial Chamber II of this Tribunal[406] and Trial Chambers I[407] and II[408] of the ICTR stated that "[t]he presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character". Very recently, Trial Chamber II hearing the Kupreski} case also considered that: [401] The term "directed" indicates that international legislation seems to have placed more importance on the intention of the agent responsible for the widespread or systematic attack than on the physical result of the attack. In other words, if it is demonstrated that the perpetrator of the acts of violence had the primary intention of inflicting injury upon a civilian population, he could be found guilty of a crime against humanity even if the attack caused military casualties as well as civilian victims.

---

[402] Akayesu Judgement, para. 582.
[403] Article 61 Mrk{i}, Radi} and [ljivan-anin, paras. 29-32.
[404] Tadi} Judgement, paras. 636-647.
[405] The Supreme Court in the British zone broadly interpreted Law No. 10 by accepting that the characterisation of crime against humanity was applicable to acts whose victims were soldiers (cf. inter alia the case P et al., 7 December 1948 (S. Sts 111/148), O.G.H. br. Z. I, p. 228 and the case H, 10 October 1949, (S. Sts 309/49) O.G.H. br. Z. II, pp. 223-238). As stated by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadi} Appeal Judgement, "the [...] court gave a very liberal interpretation to the notion of crimes against humanity as laid down in Control Council Law No. 10, extending it among other things to inhumane acts committed against members of the military" (Tadi} Appeal Judgement, note 351).
[406] Tadi} Judgement, para. 639.
[407] Akayesu Judgement, para. 582.
[408] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 128.

> [...] the presence of those actively involved in the conflict should not prevent the characterization of a population as civilian and those actively involved in a resistance movement can qualify as victims of crimes against humanity.[409]

212. In the Barbie case, the Criminal Chamber of the French Cour de Cassation also maintained that resistance fighters could rely on the judicial regime relating to the provisions for crimes against humanity[410]. Following this line of reasoning, French law recently incorporated under crimes against humanity inhumane acts committed as part of a concerted plan against those fighting the regime in whose name the said crimes were perpetrated[411].

213. Lastly, the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780 (hereinafter the "Commission of Experts") extended the status of civilian to persons who strictly speaking did not carry out military operations although they did bear arms.

> "It seems obvious that article 5 applies first and foremost to civilians, meaning people who are not combatants. This, however, should not lead to any quick conclusions concerning people who at one particular point in time did bear arms. A head of family who under such circumstances tries to protect his family gun-in-hand does not thereby lose his status as a civilian. Maybe the same is the case for the sole policeman or local defence guard doing the same, even if they joined hands to try to prevent the cataclysm"[412].

214. Crimes against humanity therefore do not mean only acts committed against civilians in the strict sense of the term but include also crimes against two categories of people: those who were members of a resistance movement and former combatants - regardless of whether they wore wear uniform or not – but who were no longer taking part in hostilities when the crimes were perpetrated because they had either left the army or were no longer bearing arms or, ultimately, had been placed hors de combat, in particular, due to their wounds or their being detained. It also follows that the specific situation of the victim at the moment the crimes were committed, rather than his status, must be taken into account in determining his standing as a civilian. Finally, it can be concluded that the presence of soldiers within an intentionally targeted civilian population does not alter the civilian nature of that population.

---

[409] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Kupre{ki}, case no. IT-95-16-T, 14 January 2000 (hereinafter the "Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 549.
[410] Barbie Case, Cass. Crim., 20 December 1985.
[411] Article 212-2 of the French Criminal Code.
[412] Final Report of the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780 (1992), S/1994/674, (hereinafter the "Final Report of the Commission of Experts") para. 78.

b. The sub-characterisations

215. The sub-characterisations with which the accused is charged, that is, murder, persecutions and other inhumane acts[413], must be defined individually because, beyond any possible common link with a widespread or systematic attack, each has its own nature and specificity.

i. Murder

216. It is appropriate to point out first that the French version of the Statute uses the term "assassinat" – a crime with a very precise meaning in French national law[414] - whilst the English version adopts the word "murder" which translates in French as "meurtre". Relying on Article 7(1)(a) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, Article 18 of the ILC Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind[415] and the assertions of Trial Chamber I of the ICTR in the Akayesu case[416] which all refer to murder ("meurtre"), the Trial Chamber is of the view that it is murder ("meurtre") and not premeditated murder ("assassinat") which must be the underlying offence of a crime against humanity.

217. Guided by the work of the ILC[417], the Trial Chamber will refer to the legal and factual elements of the offence as commonly recognised in national law to define murder, that is:

- the death of the victim;

- the death must have resulted from an act of the accused or his subordinate

- the accused or his subordinate must have been motivated by the intent to kill the victim or to cause grievous bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that the attack was likely to result in death[418].

ii. Persecution

218. Unlike the sub-characterisation of murder which represents only one crime, that of "persecution" may assume several different criminal forms. The indictment against General

[413] Second amended indictment, counts 1, 7 and 10.
[414] According to Article 221-3 of the French Criminal Code, an "assassinat" means a premeditated murder - "meurtre commis avec prémeditation".
[415] 1996 ILC Report, p. 93.
[416] Akayesu Judgement, para. 588.
[417] According to the ILC, "Murder is a crime that is clearly understood and well defined in the national law of every State. This prohibited act does not require any further explanation" (1996 ILC Report, p. 96).

Blaškić specifies physical and mental injury (murders and other forms of bodily harm[419] including the use of civilians as human shields[420] and forcing them to dig trenches[421]), infringements upon individual freedom (arbitrary arrest and detention[422] and forcible transfer of civilians[423]) and attacks against property (destruction and plunder of property[424]), all directed against the "Bosnian Muslim civilian population"[425].

219. Although the Statute of the Nuremberg Tribunal and those of the Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda all sanction persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds under crimes against humanity, none defines this sub-characterisation or states which forms it may take. The Trial Chamber will therefore refer to customary international law to determine whether the violations covered in the indictment may constitute persecution and under what condition they may be characterised as such.

iii. Serious bodily and mental harm, infringements upon freedom and attacks against property as forms of persecution

220. There is no doubt that serious bodily and mental harm and infringements upon individual freedom may be characterised as persecution when, as will be indicated below, they target the members of a group because they belong to a specific community. The Trial Chamber considers that infringements of the elementary and inalienable rights of man, which are "the right to life, liberty and the security of person", the right not to be "held in slavery or servitude", the right not to "be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" and the right not to be "subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile" as affirmed in Articles 3, 4, 5 and 9 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights[426], by their very essence may constitute persecution when committed on discriminatory grounds.

221. This interpretation is reaffirmed by the established case-law of the Nuremberg Tribunal, the tribunals acting in accordance with Law No. 10 promulgated by the Allied

---

[418] Akayesu Judgement, para. 589.
[419] Second amended indictment, paras. 6.2, 6.5 and 6.7.
[420] Ibid., para. 6.5.
[421] Ibid., para. 6.5.
[422] Ibid., paras. 6.4 and 6.5.
[423] Ibid., paras. 6.6 and 6.7.
[424] Ibid., para. 6.3.
[425] Ibid., para. 5.2.
[426] The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was passed by the United Nations Security Council on 10 December 1948.

Control Council for Germany on 20 December 1945 (hereinafter "Law No. 10"),[427] the Supreme Court of Israel and the ILC reports.

222. In the part of the Judgement of the major war criminals specifically devoted to the persecution of the Jews, the Nuremberg Tribunal affirmed that the murder of the Jews, the brutal acts which they suffered, their confinement in ghettos and their being used to perform forced labour were all forms of persecution[428]. The Nuremberg Tribunal thus noted inter alia that:

> "The Nazi persecution of Jews in Germany before the war, severe and repressive as it was, cannot compare, however, with the policy pursued during the war in the occupied territories [...][429].
>
> In the summer of 1941, however, plans were made for the "final solution" of the Jewish question in Europe. This "final solution" meant the extermination of the Jews [...]"[430].
>
> "Beating, starvation, torture and killing were general. The inmates were subjected to cruel experiments [...]"[431].

In the paragraphs describing the role played by SS units in the persecution of the Jews, that Tribunal also brought out the fact that the units had participated in their deportation and extermination[432]. Furthermore, in its analysis of the individual responsibility of the accused Frank, it pointed out that:

> "The persecution of the Jews was immediately begun in the General government. The area originally contained from 2½ million to 3½ million Jews. They were forced into ghettos, subjected to discriminatory laws, deprived of the food necessary to avoid starvation, and finally systematically and brutally exterminated"[433].

As regards the accused Bormann, the Judges also stated that:

> "Bormann was extremely active in the persecution of the Jews, not only in Germany but also in the absorbed and conquered countries. He took part in the discussions which led to the removal of 60,000 Jews from Vienna to Poland in co-operation with the SS and the Gestapo. He signed the decree of 31 May 1941 extending the Nuremberg Laws to the annexed Eastern territories. In an order of 9 October 1942 he declared that the permanent elimination of Jews in Greater German territory could no longer be solved by emigration, but only by applying "ruthless force" in the special camps in the East. On 1 July 1943 he

---

[427] Law Reports of Trials of War Criminals, London, H.M.S.O., 1946-1949, (hereinafter the "LRTWC"), vol. XV, p. 41.
[428] Trial of Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal, Nürnberg, 14 November 1945 – 1 October 1946, Judgement, 1947 (hereinafter the "Nürnberg Judgement"), pp. 249-253.
[429] Ibid., p. 249 (emphasis added).
[430] Ibid., p. 250.
[431] Ibid., p. 252. (emphasis added)
[432] Ibid., p. 271.
[433] Ibid., pp. 297-298. (emphasis added)

signed an ordinance withdrawing Jews from the protection of the law courts and placing them under the exclusive jurisdiction of Himmler's Gestapo"[434].

223. In line with the Nuremberg Tribunal, the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland[435] and the Netherlands Special Court in Amsterdam[436], both acting in accordance with Law No. 10, categorised physical and mental injury and infringements upon freedom, in particular, murder, wounding and deportations, as persecutions.

224. The Supreme Court of Israel found Eichmann guilty of persecution for inter alia the "murder, extermination, enslavement, starvation and deportation of the civilian Jewish population"[437].

225. Lastly, the ILC report on the work of its 48th session explicitly specified that "persecution may take many forms with its common characteristic being the denial of the human rights and fundamental freedoms to which every individual is entitled without distinction"[438] and which by their very nature incorporate a person's right to life and respect for his physical and mental well-being.

226. The Kupre{ki} Trial Chamber reached a similar conclusion when it considered that the crime of persecution could include attacks on persons such as murder, extermination or torture.[439]

227. However, persecution may take forms other than injury to the human person, in particular those acts rendered serious not by their apparent cruelty but by the discrimination they seek to instil within humankind. As put forward by the Prosecutor in the indictment against the accused[440], persecution may thus take the form of confiscation or destruction of private dwellings or businesses, symbolic buildings or means of subsistence belonging to the Muslim population of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

228. The Nuremberg International Tribunal expressly recognised that, as of autumn 1938, the persecution of the Jews was designed to exclude them from German life and was particularly apparent in the "[p]ogroms [which] were organized, which included the burning

---

[434] Ibid., pp. 339-340. (emphasis added)
[435] LRTWC, vol. XIII, 1949, p. 105.
[436] LRTWC, vol. XIV, 1949, p. 141.
[437] Eichmann Case, 29 May 1962, 36, ILR, 1968, count 5, p. 277.
[438] 1996 ILC Report, p. 98 (emphasis added).
[439] Kupre{ki} Judgement, paras. 600 and 615.
[440] Second amended indictment, para. 6.3.

and demolishing of synagogues, the looting of Jewish businesses, and the arrest of prominent Jewish business men"[441] and the imposition of a billion mark fine[442]. Furthermore, the Nuremberg Tribunal found Göring guilty of crimes against humanity, in particular, for being " [...] the active authority in the spoliation of conquered territory"[443] and for having imposed the fine of a billion reichsmarks on the Jews[444]. It added that:

> "Göring persecuted the Jews [...] not only in Germany [...] but in the conquered countries. His own utterances then and his testimony now shows this interest was primarily economic – how to get their property and how to force them out of the economic life of Europe"[445].

Rosenberg too was convicted of war crimes and crimes against humanity for "a system of organised plunder of both public and private property throughout the invaded countries of Europe". The Judgement also noted in this respect that:

> "[a]cting under Hitler's orders of January 1940 to set up the "Hohe Schule", he organized and directed the "Einsatzstab Rosenberg", which plundered museums and libraries, confiscated art treasures and collections, and pillaged private houses"[446].

In addition, the Nuremberg Tribunal found the accused Streicher guilty of crimes against humanity inter alia for the boycott on Jewish businesses and the fire at the Nuremberg synagogue[447].

229. Although the Tribunals acting pursuant to Law No. 10[448] proved less definite on this matter, they explicitly declared that the collective fine of a billion marks was a "typical piece of the persecution to which German Jews were subjected"[449]. Lastly, they maintained that the confiscation and liquidation of property belonging to German Jews by the Reich comprised part of a programme to persecute the Jews in Germany[450].

---

[441] Nürnberg Judgement, p. 248.
[442] Ibid., p. 248.
[443] Ibid., p. 281.
[444] Ibid., p. 282.
[445] Ibid., p. 282.
[446] Ibid., p. 295.
[447] Ibid., p. 302.
[448] In the cases Flick (Trials of War Criminals (hereinafter "TWC"), vol VI, pp. 1215-1216) and Farben (TWC, vol VIII, part 2, pp. 1129-1130), the Judgements of the American military tribunals refused to have crimes against property characterised as crimes against humanity.
[449] Ibid., p. 676.
[450] Ibid., p. 678.

230. The Jerusalem District Court confirmed this interpretation. It stated in the Eichmann case that from the moment Hitler came to power[451] the persecution of the Jews became manifest in the systematic destruction of the synagogues[452] and the boycott of their businesses and shops[453].

231. The 1991 and 1996 ILC reports similarly asserted that "persecution may take many forms"[454]. The first expressly cited the example of the "systematic destruction of monuments or buildings representative of a particular social, religious, cultural or other group"[455].

232. Lastly, the Kupre{ki} Trial Chamber ruled that persecution includes a variety of other discriminatory acts involving attacks on political, social, and economic rights.[456]

233. The Trial Chamber finds from this analysis that the crime of "persecution" encompasses not only bodily and mental harm and infringements upon individual freedom but also acts which appear less serious, such as those targeting property, so long as the victimised persons were specially selected on grounds linked to their belonging to a particular community.

iv. Legal and factual elements of the forms of persecution specified in the indictment

234. The Trial Chamber will now deal with the legal and factual elements of the forms of persecution specified in the indictment – the destruction and plunder of property, unlawful detention and the forcible transfer of civilians – except for murder and physical and mental injury which are defined in paragraphs 224 and 250 of this Judgement.

- The destruction and plunder of property. In the context of the crime of persecution, the destruction of property must be construed to mean the destruction of towns, villages and other public or private property belonging to a given civilian population or extensive [451] According to the Jerusalem District Court: "With the rise of Hitler to power, the persecution of Jews became official policy and assumed the quasi-legal form of laws and regulations published by the government of the Reich in accordance with legislative powers delegated to it by the Reichstag on March 24, 1933 and of direct acts of violence organised by the regime against the persons and property of Jews. The purpose of these acts carried out in the first stage was to deprive the Jews of citizens rights, to degrade them and strike fear into their hearts, to separate them from the rest of the inhabitants, to oust them from the economic and cultural life of the State and to close to them the source of livelihood" (emphasis added) (District Court Judgment, Eichmann case, 36 ILR, 1968, para. 56.

[452] Ibid., para. 57.
[453] Ibid., para. 57.
[454] 1996 ILC Report, p. 98.
[455] 1991 ILC Report, p. 268.
[456] Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 615.

devastation not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully, wantonly and discriminatorily[457]. In the same context, the plunder of property is defined as the unlawful, extensive and wanton appropriation of property[458] belonging to a particular population, whether it be the property of private individuals or of state or "quasi-state" public collectives[459].

- The unlawful detention of civilians. The unlawful detention of civilians, as a form of the crime of persecution, means unlawfully depriving a group of discriminated civilians of their freedom.

- The deportation or forcible transfer of civilians. The deportation or forcible transfer of civilians means "forced displacement of the persons concerned by expulsion or other coercive acts from the area in which they are lawfully present, without grounds permitted under international law"[460].

v. Discrimination

235. The underlying offence of persecution requires the existence of a mens rea from which it obtains its specificity. As set down in Article 5 of the Statute, it must be committed for specific reasons whether these be linked to political views, racial background or religious convictions. It is the specific intent to cause injury to a human being because he belongs to a particular community or group[461], rather than the means employed to achieve it, that bestows on it its individual nature and gravity and which justifies its being able to constitute criminal acts which might appear in themselves not to infringe directly upon the most elementary rights of a human being, for example, attacks on property[462]. In other words, the perpetrator of the acts of persecution does not initially target the individual but rather membership in a specific racial, religious or political group.

---

[457] Cf. inter alia paragraphs 2(d) of the Statute, 6(b) of the Statute of the Nuremberg Tribunal and 2(1)(b) of Law No. 10 and Articles 50 of Protocol I, 51 of Protocol II and 147 of the I[st] Geneva Convention and the ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 584-592.
[458] Cf. inter alia Articles 50 of Protocol I, 51 of Protocol II and 147 of the IV[th] Geneva Convention.
[459] Ibid.
[460] Article 7(2)(d) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (Cf. in particular the 1996 ILC Report, pp. 100-101).
[461] As affirmed by Trial Chamber II in the case Kupre{ki} et al, it is the discrimination which distinguishes persecution from the other crimes (Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 607) [462] Cf. (b) The Mens Rea.

236. The Trial Chamber notes in this respect the negative definition of the persecution "victim group" provided by the Tadi} Trial Chamber[463], that is, the one of which the perpetrator of the crimes is not a member.

vi. Other inhumane acts

237. As with the underlying crime of "persecution" the sub-characterisation "other inhumane acts" laid down in Article 5(i) of the Statute is a generic charge which encompasses a series of criminal activities not explicitly enumerated. Indeed, as the commentary on Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions states regarding the notion of "humane treatment",

> "[...] it is always dangerous to try to go into too much detail – especially in this domain. However much care were taken in establishing a list of all the various forms of infliction, one would never be able to catch up with the imagination of future torturers who wished to satisfy their bestial instincts; and the more specific and complete a list tries to be, the more restrictive it becomes"[464].

238. The indictment characterises as inhumane acts under crimes against humanity the "assault causing injury", excluding murder, which the Muslim population of Bosnia-Herzegovina allegedly suffered - in this instance "the wilful infliction of serious injury and great suffering, both physically and mentally, to civilians"[465].

vii. Serious physical and mental injury as "other inhumane acts"

239. As shown by the case-law of the ICTR, the provisions of Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court and the ILC Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind, serious physical and mental injury – excluding murder – is without doubt an "inhumane act" within the meaning of Article 5 of the Statute and may, on this ground and if it fits into a widespread or systematic context, assume the characterisation of a crime against humanity.

240. Trial Chamber II of the ICTR expressly asserted in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case that inhumane acts were, inter alia, acts or omissions intended to cause deliberate mental or physical suffering to the individual[466].

---

[463] Tadi} Judgement, para. 714.
[464] Jean Pictet, Commentary on the I^st^ Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949, Geneva, 1952, p. 54.
[465] Second amended indictment, para. 9.
[466] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para 151.

241. According to Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court "other inhumane acts" are those "of a similar nature intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health".[467]

242. Article 18(k) of the ILC Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind also clearly permits this interpretation by making "other inhumane acts which severely damage physical or mental integrity, health or human dignity, such as mutilation or severe bodily harm" an offence under "crimes against humanity."[468] The ILC adds in its commentary that:

> "[...] the notion of other inhumane acts is circumscribed by two requirements. First, this category of acts is intended to include only additional acts that are similar in gravity to those listed in the preceding subparagraphs. Second, the act must in fact cause injury to a human being in terms of physical or mental integrity, health or human dignity"[469].

Serious physical and mental injury not constituting murder obviously fulfils these conditions.

viii. Legal and factual elements of serious bodily or mental harm

243. In defining serious bodily and mental harm, the Trial Chamber will refer to the legal and factual elements of the offence as unanimously recognised in national law, that is:

- the victim must have suffered serious bodily or mental harm; the degree of severity must be assessed on a case by case basis with due regard for the individual circumstances;

- the suffering must be the result of an act of the accused or his subordinate;

- when the offence was committed, the accused or his subordinate must have been motivated by the intent to inflict serious bodily or mental harm upon the victim.

ii) Mens Rea

244. For the underlying crimes to be constituted, a mental factor specific to crimes against humanity must be adjoined to the required criminal intent. The perpetrator must knowingly participate in a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population. However, to be judged guilty of crimes against humanity, except in the case of persecution, he must not have had the intent of targeting civilians because of their race or their religious or political beliefs.

[467] Emphasis added.
[468] Emphasis added.
[469] ILC 1996 Report, p. 103.

a. Knowledge of the widespread or systematic attack

245. The provisions of Article 3 of the Statute of the Tribunal for Rwanda and of Article 5 of the Statute of the Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia do not state the nature of the mens rea of a crime against humanity. Only Article 7 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court provides that criminal acts must be perpetrated "in the knowledge" of the widespread or systematic attack[470].

246. For this reason, for the purposes of this case, three aspects of the mens rea, as they derive from international and national case-law, must be borne in mind:

i. Knowledge of the context

247. The accused must first have knowledge of the general context in which his acts occur and then of the nexus between his action and that context.

248. This contention relies on the Judgement rendered by the Trial Chamber hearing the Tadi} case which stated that "the perpetrator must know of the broader context in which his act occurs"[471], which relies in particular on the Decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case Regina v. Finta[472].

249. It is also based upon the Decision rendered by the ICTR Trial Chamber hearing the Kayishema and Ruzindana case which considered that the mens rea contained two parts, that is, knowledge of the attack and its widespread or systematic character and awareness of the fact that the criminal activity constitutes part of the attack:

> "[...] to be guilty of crimes against humanity the perpetrator must know that there is an attack on a civilian population and that his act is part of the attack"[473].

The Trial Chamber thus stated that:

---

[470] According to the Tadi} Appeal Judgement "Article 7(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court thus articulates a definition of crimes against humanity based solely upon the interplay between the mens rea of the defendant and the existence of a widespread or systematic attack directed against a civilian population" (note 354).
[471] Tadi} Judgement, para. 656.
[472] Regina v. Finta, (1994) 1, Recueil de la Cour Suprême, 701, p. 819.
[473] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 133.

> "[p]art of what transforms an individual's act into a crime against humanity is the inclusion of the act within a greater dimension of criminal conduct; therefore an accused should be aware of this greater dimension in order to be culpable thereof. Accordingly, actual or constructive knowledge of the broader context of the attack, meaning that the accused must know that his act is part of a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population and pursuant to some kind of policy or plan, is necessary to satisfy the requisite mens rea element of the accused"[474].

250. This assertion relies on the Tadi} Appeal Judgement which expressly recognises that:

> "[...] the acts of the accused must comprise part of a pattern of widespread or systematic crimes directed against a civilian population and that the accused must have known that his acts fit into such a pattern"[475].

ii. Knowing participation in the context

251. The accused need not have sought all the elements of the context in which his acts were perpetrated; it suffices that, through the functions he willingly accepted, he knowingly took the risk of participating in the implementation of that context.

252. This is what emerges from the spirit of the Statute, from the case-law of both this Tribunal and the ICTR and from the Judgement of the French Cour de Cassation rejecting Maurice Papon's appeal against the Judgement of the Indictments Chamber of the Bordeaux Appeals Court (hereinafter the "Papon case")[476].

253. As concerns the spirit of the Statute, the Trial Chamber is of the view that an accused who, in his capacity as a commander, participates in the commission of a mass crime must question the malevolent intentions of those defining the ideology, policy or plan in whose name the crime is perpetrated.

254. Moreover, the nexus with the institutional or de facto regime, on the basis of which the perpetrator acted, and the knowledge of this link, as required by the case-law of the Tribunal and the ICTR and restated above, in no manner require proof that the agent had the intent to support the regime or the full and absolute intent to act as its intermediary so long as proof of the existence of direct or indirect malicious intent or recklessness is provided. Indeed, the Trial Chambers of this Tribunal[477] and the ICTR[478] as well as the Appeals Chamber[479] required only that the accused "knew" of the criminal policy or plan, which in

---

[474] Ibid. para. 134. (emphasis added)
[475] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 248. (emphasis added)
[476] Papon case, Cass. Crim., 23 January 1997.
[477] Tadi} Judgement, para. 656.
[478] Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 133.
[479] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, para. 248.

itself does not necessarily require intent on his part or direct malicious intent ("... the agent seeks to commit the sanctioned act which is either his objective or at least the method of achieving his objective"[480]). There may also be indirect malicious intent (the agent did not deliberately seek the outcome but knew that it would be the result[481]) or recklessness, ("the outcome is foreseen by the perpetrator as only a probable or possible consequence"[482]). In other words, knowledge also includes the conduct "of a person taking a deliberate risk in the hope that the risk does not cause injury"[483].

255. The person who has "knowledge' of the plan, policy or organisation as part of which the crimes take place is not only the one who fully supports it but also the one who, through the political or military functions which he willingly performed and which resulted in his periodic collaboration with the authors of the plan, policy or organisation and in his participation in its execution, implicitly accepted the context in which his functions, collaboration and participation must most probably have fit.

256. In the Papon case, the French Cour de Cassation confirmed this approach and maintained that Article 6 of the Nuremberg Statute did not require that an aider and abettor to a crime against humanity necessarily support the policy set by the principal perpetrators. The Criminal Chamber of the Court stated:

> "the last sub-paragraph of Article 6 of the International Military Tribunal [...] does not require that the accomplice to a crime against humanity support the policy of ideological hegemony of the principal perpetrators [...]"[484].

257. It follows that the mens rea specific to a crime against humanity does not require that the agent be identified with the ideology, policy or plan in whose name mass crimes were perpetrated nor even that he supported it. It suffices that he knowingly took the risk of participating in the implementation of the ideology, policy or plan. This specifically means that it must, for example, be proved that:

---

[480] C. Hennau, J. Verhaegen, Droit pénal général, Brussels, 1991, p. 270. Translated from the French: "l'agent recherche la réalisation du fait incriminé dont il fait son objectif".
[481] Ibid., p. 271.
[482] J. Pradel, Droit pénal général, 11th edition, 1997, no. 471. Translated from the French: "le résultat n'est qu'une conséquence probable ou possible, envisagé par l'auteur".
[483] F. Desportes, F. Le Gunehec, Le nouveau droit pénal, Economica, Paris, 1996, p. 384. Translated from the French: "de la personne qui prend un risque de façon délibérée, tout en espérant que ce risque ne provoque aucun dommage".
[484] Papon case, Cass. Crim., 23 January 1997. Translated from the French: "[l]e dernier alinéa de l'article 6 du statut du tribunal militaire international [...] n'exige pas que le complice de crimes contre l'humanité ait adhéré à la politique d'hégémonie idéologique des auteurs principaux [...]".

- the accused willingly agreed to carry out the functions he was performing;

- that these functions resulted in his collaboration with the political, military or civilian authorities defining the ideology, policy or plan at the root of the crimes;

- that he received orders relating to the ideology, policy or plan; and lastly

- that he contributed to its commission through intentional acts or by simply refusing of his own accord to take the measures necessary to prevent their perpetration.

iii. The evidence

258. The Judges will seek evidence of the mens rea required by the charges in the circumstances of the case.

259. As the Trial Chambers of this Tribunal and the ICTR have already asserted in respect of the mens rea of the crime of genocide in the Rule 61 Karad`i} and Mladi} proceedings[485] and in the Akayesu case,[486] and as Trial Chamber II of this Tribunal stated regarding the mens rea of a crime against humanity in the Tadi}[487] case, knowledge of the political context in which the offence fits may be surmised from the concurrence of a number of concrete facts. Principally, these are:

- the historical and political circumstances in which the acts of violence occurred;

- the functions of the accused when the crimes were committed;

- his responsibilities within the political or military hierarchy;

- the direct and indirect relationship between the political and military hierarchy;

- the scope and gravity of the acts perpetrated;

---

[485] Article 61 Karad`i} and Mladi}, para. 94. According to the Trial Chamber, the specific intention of a crime of genocide may "be inferred from a certain number of facts such as the general political doctrine which gave rise to the acts possibly covered by the definition in Article 4, or the repetition of destructive or discriminatory acts. The intent may also be inferred from the perpetration of acts which violate, or which the perpetrators themselves consider to violate, the very foundation of the group – acts which are not in themselves covered by the list in Article 4(2) but which are committed as part of the same pattern of conduct".

[486] Akayesu Judgement, paras. 523-524.

[487] Tadi} Judgement, para. 657. According to the Trial Chamber "[w]hile knowledge is thus required, it is examined on an objective level and factually can be implied from the circumstances" (emphasis added) (cf. also

- the nature of the crimes committed and the degree to which they are common knowledge.

b. Exclusion of discriminatory intent

260. It ensues from the Tadi} Appeal Judgement that for a widespread or systematic attack and the resultant crimes – murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture, rape or other inhumane acts with the exception of persecution – to be characterised as crimes against humanity they need not have been perpetrated with the deliberate intent to cause injury to a civilian population on the basis of specific characteristics[488]. In other words, to be found guilty of such an offence, those responsible for the attack need not necessarily have acted with a particular racial, national, religious or political intent in mind.

E. Article 7 of the Statute: Individual Criminal Responsibility

261. The accused Tihomir Bla{ki} was prosecuted under Article 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute of the Tribunal. The Trial Chamber will review successively these provisions and their application to the case in point taking into account in particular the position of command authority held by the accused at the time of the facts. The Trial Chamber notes that at issue is the criminal responsibility of a military commander. In this respect, it is appropriate to distinguish between the charges based on Article 7(1) of the Statute and those concurrently advanced by the Prosecution under Article 7(3). Whilst Article 7(1) deals with the commander's participation in the commission of a crime, Article 7(3) enshrines the principle of command responsibility in the strict sense which entails the commander's individual criminal responsibility if he did not prevent crimes from being committed by his subordinates or, where applicable, punish them.

1. Individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute

a) Introduction

262. The Prosecutor considers that all the crimes covered in the indictment entail the accused's individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute, which provides that: case no. 38, Annual Digest and Reports of Public International Law Cases for the Year 1947, London, 1951, pp. 100-101).

---

> [a] person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.

263. In this respect, the Trial Chamber hearing the ^elebi}i case held that > [t]he principles of individual criminal responsibility enshrined in Article 7, paragraph 1, of the Statute reflect the basic understanding that individual criminal responsibility for the offences under the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal is not limited to persons who directly commit the crimes in question[489].

264. The Trial Chamber concurs with the views deriving from the Tribunal's case-law, that is, that individuals may be held responsible for their participation in the commission of offences under any of the heads of individual criminal responsibility in Article 7(1) of the Statute. This approach is consonant with the general principles of criminal law[490] and customary international law[491].

265. In the case in point, the accused was not prosecuted for having personally committed any of the alleged crimes, that is, for being the actual perpetrator of the actus reus of any of the crimes. However, he was held criminally responsible for the crimes committed by others, on the ground that he "ordered, planned, instigated or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation, or execution of those crimes"[492].

266. The Trial Chamber will therefore limit its analysis of Article 7(1) of the Statute to defining the legal elements of these particular modes of participation.

b) The arguments of the Parties

i) The Prosecution

267. To establish that the accused "ordered", "planned" or "instigated" crimes within the meaning of Article 7(1) of the Statute, the Prosecution submitted that the following elements must be proved: (i) the actus reus of the crime was committed by a person other than the accused; (ii) the conduct of that other person was in execution of an order or plan of the accused, or instigated by him; and (iii) the accused had the mens rea of the crime. To establish the mens rea of the superior who orders, plans or instigates, requires direct or

---

[488] Tadi} Appeal Judgement, paras. 273-305.
[489] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 319.
[490] Ibid., para. 321.
[491] Tadi} Judgement, para. 669; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 321.
[492] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XI, para. 1.1.

indirect intent, it is necessary to prove his direct or indirect intent, the latter corresponding to the notion of recklessness in common law and the notion of dolus eventualis in civil law[493].

268. The Prosecution submits that "ordering" implies a superior-subordinate relationship between the person who orders and the one who carries it out. In other words, the person in authority uses that authority to cause another to commit an offence. This may be proved by circumstantial or direct evidence. There is no requirement as to the form of the order, which may be implied or express. Moreover, an order does not need to be issued by the accused directly to the person(s) who perform(s) the actus reus of the crime. Nor is it necessary that the order explicitly required the commission of the crime[494].

269. "Planning" implies that one or several persons plan, design or organise the commission of the actus reus of a crime. This may be proved by circumstantial evidence. It is not required that the planners intervene in the execution of the crime[495].

270. The essence of instigating is that the accused causes another person to commit a crime. Although it must be proved that the instigation was a clear contributing factor to the commission of the crime, it need not be a conditio sine qua non. Instigation can take many different forms; it can be express or implied, and entail both acts and omissions[496].

271. The Prosecution contended that although aiding and abetting both constitute acts of complicity, they are two different concepts. "Aiding" means giving assistance to someone whereas "abetting" assumes facilitating the commission of an offence. The conduct of the person who aids or abets (hereinafter "the aider and abettor"[497]) must have a "direct and substantial" effect on the commission of the crime, although the adjective "direct" adds little to the definition. The aiding and abetting need not have been a conditio sine qua non for the actual perpetration of the offence. Nor is a pre-existing plan between the aider and abettor and the perpetrator required. The assistance may be provided before, after (even without prior agreement) or during the commission of the crime. Proof is not required that the aider and abettor actually participated in or that he was present during the physical perpetration of the crime. Both acts and omissions may constitute a form of aiding and abetting, at least in circumstances where the omission is in breach of a duty to act. The aiding and abetting need

[493] Ibid., paras. 1.3-1.14.
[494] Ibid., paras. 1.15-1.19.
[495] Ibid., paras. 1.20-1.25.
[496] Ibid., paras. 1.26-1.28.
[497] And by reference, "complicity".

not assume the provision of tangible or practical assistance but may also consist in giving encouragement or moral or psychological support to the perpetrator of the crime through words or attitude or even by merely being present at the crime scene[498].

272. As to the mens rea requirement for aiding and abetting, the Prosecution submitted that it suffices that the aider and abettor knew that his conduct would assist the principal in the commission of the offence. This may be inferred from the relevant circumstances. It is not necessary that he knew the precise crime that was intended and which in the event was committed[499].

ii) The Defence

273. The Defence submitted that in order to establish the criminal responsibility of an accused within the meaning of Article 7(1) of the Statute, proof of the commission of a "deliberate act" by the accused is required, that is, proof that he planned, instigated, ordered or otherwise aided and abetted the planning, preparation or execution of crimes; proof of specific intent on the part of the accused to commit the deliberate act facilitating the commission of crimes; and, lastly proof that a causal link between the deliberate act and the crimes exists[500].

274. In addition, the Defence submitted that according to the Tadic Appeals Chamber Judgement, individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute may be established through the active participation in a common design. Three situations may be distinguished: (a) all participants in the common design share the same criminal intent to commit a crime, (b) the requisite mens rea comprises knowledge of the nature of a system of ill-treatment and intent to further the common design of ill-treatment, and (c) the accused intends to take part in a joint criminal enterprise and to further individually and jointly the criminal purposes of that enterprise, whereas other members of the group commit offences that do not constitute the object of the common criminal purpose but were nonetheless foreseeable by the accused. Therefore, any form of common design liability requires at least proof of a criminal common design and the accused's intent to further this design[501].

---

[498] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XI, paras. 1.29-1.44.
[499] Ibid., paras. 1.45-1.49.
[500] Defence Brief, p. 37.
[501] Id.

275. Finally, in the view of the Defence, the mens rea satisfying Article 7(1) is intent to commit an act facilitating offences. The deliberate act cannot be presumed even if the evidence were to satisfy the criminal omission element of Article 7(3) of the Statute[502].

c) Discussion and Findings

276. The Appeals Chamber in the Tadi} case and the Trial Chambers in other cases brought before both this Tribunal and the ICTR, notably the Tadi}, Akayesu, ^elebi}i and Furund`ija cases[503], defined those legal elements which under customary international law refer to the various forms of individual criminal responsibility included in Article 7(1) of the Statute. This Trial Chamber will consider their findings in order to ascertain their applicability to the present case.

277. Following the approach taken by the Prosecution, the Trial Chamber will determine the actus reus and mens rea required for holding an accused individually criminally responsible for having "planned", "instigated", "ordered" or "aided and abetted" the offences alleged in the indictment.

i) Planning, instigating and ordering

278. The Trial Chamber holds that proof is required that whoever planned, instigated or ordered the commission of a crime possessed the criminal intent, that is, that he directly or indirectly intended that the crime in question be committed. However, in general, a person other than the person who planned, instigated or ordered is the one who perpetrated the actus reus of the offence. In so doing he must have acted in furtherance of a plan or order. In the case of instigating, as appears in the definition below, proof is required of a causal connection between the instigation and the fulfilment of the actus reus of the crime. In defining each of the forms of participation, the Trial Chamber concurs with the relevant findings of the Trial Chamber in the Akayesu case.

279. Accordingly, planning implies that "one or several persons contemplate designing the commission of a crime at both the preparatory and execution phases"[504]. The Trial Chamber is of the view that circumstantial evidence may provide sufficient proof of the existence of a plan.

---

[502] Ibid., p. 38.
[503] Tadi} Judgement; Akayesu Judgement; ^elebi}i Judgement; Furund`ija Judgement.
[504] Akayesu Judgement, para. 480.

280. Instigating entails "prompting another to commit an offence"[505]. The wording is sufficiently broad to allow for the inference that both acts and omissions may constitute instigating and that this notion covers both express and implied conduct. The ordinary meaning of instigating, namely, "bring about"[506] the commission of an act by someone, corroborates the opinion that a causal relationship between the instigation and the physical perpetration of the crime is an element requiring proof.

281. The Akayesu Trial Chamber was of the opinion that ordering > implies a superior-subordinate relationship between the person giving the order and the one executing it. In other words, the person in a position of authority uses it to convince another to commit an offence[507].

>
> There is no requirement that the order be in writing or in any particular form; it can be express or implied. That an order was issued may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

It is not necessary that an order be given in writing or in any particular form. It can be explicit or implicit. The fact that an order was given can be proved through circumstantial evidence.

282. The Trial Chamber agrees that an order does not need to be given by the superior directly to the person(s) who perform(s) the actus reus of the offence[508]. Furthermore, what is important is the commander's mens rea, not that of the subordinate executing the order. Therefore, it is irrelevant whether the illegality of the order was apparent on its face.

ii) Aiding and abetting

283. As a starting point, the Trial Chamber concurs with the opinion of the Trial Chamber in the Furund`ija case which states that > the legal ingredients of aiding and abetting in international criminal law to be the following: the actus reus consists of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. The mens rea required is the knowledge that these acts assist the commission of the offence[509].

---

[505] Ibid, para. 482.
[506] The Concise Oxford Dictionary, 10th edition (1999), p. 734.
[507] Akayesu Judgement, para. 483.
[508] As to criminal responsibility of commanders for passing on criminal orders, the Trial Chamber notes the High Command case in which the military tribunal considered that "to find a field commander criminally responsible for the transmittal of such an order, he must have passed the order to the chain of command and the order must be one that is criminal upon its face, or one which he is shown to have known was criminal" (U.S.A. v. Wilhelm von Leeb et al., in Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuremberg Military Tribunals Under Control Council Law No. 10, (hereinafter the "Trials of War Criminals") Vol. XI, p. 511)
[509] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 249.

284. The Trial Chamber holds that the actus reus of aiding and abetting[510] may be perpetrated through an omission, provided this failure to act had a decisive effect on the commission of the crime and that it was coupled with the requisite mens rea[511]. In this respect, the mere presence at the crime scene of a person with superior authority, such as a military commander, is a probative indication for determining whether that person encouraged or supported the perpetrators of the crime[512].

285. Proof that the conduct of the aider and abettor had a causal effect on the act of the principal perpetrator is not required[513]. Furthermore, participation may occur before, during or after the act is commnitted and be geographically separated therefrom[514].

286. As to the mens rea requirement for aiding and abetting, a distinction is to be made between "knowledge" and "intent"[515]. As held earlier in this Judgement, the mens rea required for establishing the responsibility of an accused for one of the crimes in Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Statute is "willingness", comprising both direct and indirect intent. In the case of aiding and abetting, the Prosecution relies on inter alia the Furund`ija Judgement and argues that the applicable mens rea applicable to the aider and abettor is "knowledge" that his acts assist the commission of the offence. In the submission of the Defence, however, Article 7(1) of the Statute requires proof of the specific intent on the part of the accused to commit the deliberate act to facilitate the commission of a crime[516]. The Trial Chamber is of the view that in addition to knowledge that his acts assist the commission of the crime, the aider and

---

[510] The Trial Chamber notes that in the Akayesu Judgement, the Trial Chamber distinguished between, on the one hand, aiding and, on the other, abetting, as constituting two different heads of individual criminal responsibility. The Akayesu Trial Chamber held that whereas the prior means giving assistance, the latter entails the facilitation of an act by being sympathetic thereto. See Akayesu Judgement, para. 484. In this respect, the Trial Chamber further takes note of Article 25(3)(c) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, where aiding and abetting appear to be considered two separate forms of assistance to the commission of a crime. Likewise, the 1996 ILC Report, p. 24.

[511] Tadi} Judgement, para. 686; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 842; Akayesu Judgement, para. 705.

[512] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Zlatko Aleksovski, Case no. IT-95-14/1-T, 25 June 1999, (hereinafter the "Aleksovski Judgement"), para. 65; Akayesu Judgement, para. 693.

[513] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 233; Aleksovski Judgement, para. 61.

[514] Aleksovski Judgement, para. 62.

[515] The Trial Chamber takes note of Article 30 ("mental element"), paragraph 1, of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which applies to any form of criminal responsibility under that Statute: "Unless otherwise provided, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court only if the material elements are committed with intent and knowledge" (emphasis added).

[516] Defence Brief, p. 37. In fact, this also appears to be the Prosecution's view: "If the aider and abettor is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he or she has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime" (Prosecutor's Brief, Part XI, para. 1.46 (emphasis added)) abettor needs to have intended to provide assistance, or as a minimum, accepted that such assistance would be a possible and foreseeable consequence of his conduct[517].

287. Finally, the Trial Chamber concurs with the following finding in the Furund`ija Judgement:

> [I]t is not necessary that the aider and abettor should know the precise crime that was intended and which in the event was committed. If he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor[518].

288. The Trial Chamber deems it appropriate to point out that a distinction is to be made between aiding and abetting and participation in pursuance of a purpose or common design to commit a crime[519]. In the case in point, it notes that the only question raised is the question of aiding and abetting.

2. Individual Criminal Responsibility Within the meaning of Article 7(3)

a) Introduction

289. The accused faces concurrent charges under Article 7(3) of the Statute, which provides that

> [t]he fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

290. As found by the Trial Chamber in the ^elebi}i case[520], the Trial Chamber first holds that the principle of command responsibility strictu sensu forms part of customary international law.

291. The Prosecution submitted that for an accused to be held criminally responsible within the meaning of Article 7(3) of the Statute, proof is required that: an offence was committed; the accused exercised superior authority over the perpetrator of the offence or over his or her superiors; the accused knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was

---

[517] In Tadic it was held that "intent [...] involves awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate by planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the commission of a crime" (Tadi} Judgement, para. 674). This was corroborated in the ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 326, and the Aleksovski Judgement, para. 61.
[518] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 246.
[519] Cf. Tadic Appeal Judgement, paras. 178-229.

about to commit a crime or had done so; and the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the offence or to punish the perpetrator[521].

292. The Defence, however, submitted that Article 7(3) of the Statute requires fulfilment of the following conditions: the commission of crimes by direct subordinates of the accused; the accused knew or had reasons to know that his subordinates were going to commit such crimes or had done so; the accused had the legal authority and actual ability to prevent or punish the acts committed by his subordinates; and the accused failed to prevent or punish the acts of his subordinates[522].

293. In the submission of the Defence, it needs to be additionally demonstrated that the commander's failure to act caused the crime, that is, that the crime was the direct result of the commander's omission, and that the commander foresaw or knew that the omission could reasonably and foreseeably lead to the crime[523].

294. As to the essential elements of command responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber concurs with the views of the Trial Chambers in the ^elebi}i and Aleksovski cases[524]. Accordingly, for a conviction under Article 7(3) of the Statute in the present case, proof is required that:

(1) there existed a superior-subordinate relationship between the commander (the accused) and the perpetrator of the crime;

(2) the accused knew or had reason to know that the crime was about to be or had been committed; and

(3) the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the crime or punish the perpetrator thereof.

b) The Superior-Subordinate Relationship

i) Arguments of the parties

---

[520] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 343. Corroborated in the Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 209.
[521] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, p. 125.
[522] Defence Brief, p. 37-38.
[523] Ibid., p. 38 and p. 45.
[524] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 346; Aleksovski Judgement, para. 69.

295. The Prosecution submitted that the term "superior" is not limited to commanders who are above the perpetrators of crimes in the regular chain of command. The determining factor in the case in point is whether or not the commander exercised control over the acts of his subordinates. Proof is required that the superior has effective control over the persons committing the violations of international humanitarian law in question, that is, has the material ability to prevent the crimes and to punish the perpetrators thereof.

296. In the view of the Prosecution, formal designation as a commander is not a necessary prerequisite for superior responsibility. Such responsibility may be imposed by virtue of a person's de facto as well as de jure position of authority or power of control. A person may be a "superior" for the purpose of Article 7(3) on the basis of effective influence that person exercises which amounts to forms of control giving to him the ability to intervene to prevent a crime. The fact that the commander had de jure authority to take all the necessary measures to punish the subordinates in question is also not a necessary prerequisite to entail the commander's responsibility. It suffices that he could have taken some measures. The fact that the commander is the only one who can take all the necessary measures to punish the subordinates in question is also not a necessary prerequisite incurring the commander's responsibility.

297. On a factual note, the Prosecution submitted that this legal criterion when duly applied to the evidence can only lead to the conclusion that the accused was also the "superior" of some independent units such as the Vitezovi, the D`okeri and the HVO Military Police Fourth Battalion[525].

298. The Defence submitted that proof is required that the accused possessed the legal authority and the actual ability to impose measures to prevent or punish the commission of crimes by his subordinates. For a commander's responsibility to apply not only to his direct subordinates but also to the local civilian population, the Prosecution must proof that the commander exercised executive or sovereign power in his area of command, and that there was a state of total occupation by his forces.

299. In the case in point, the Defence contended that the accused did not possess sovereign power within an occupied area during the relevant period of the indictment. Therefore, the accused's responsibility is limited to the crimes committed by his direct subordinates whose conduct he had the legal authority and actual ability to prevent and punish. Furthermore, the Defence submitted that the accused did not have the legal authority to punish the criminal acts of any soldiers in the CBOZ and that he did not have the legal authority to impose disciplinary sanctions against members of certain autonomous units[526].

[525] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 1.1-1.12.

ii) Discussion and Findings

300. The Trial Chamber in the ^elebi}i case held that in order for Article 7(3) of the Statute to apply, the accused must be in a position of command. This principle is not limited to individuals formally designated commander but also encompasses both de facto and de jure command.[527] On the basis of judicial precedents and the concept of "indirect subordination" defined in Article 87 of the 1977 Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949[528], the ^elebi}i Trial Chamber held that > in order for the principle of superior responsibility to be applicable, it is necessary that the superior have effective control over the persons committing the underlying violations of international humanitarian law, in the sense of having the material ability to prevent and punish the commission of these offences[529].

301. The Trial Chamber concurs with this view. Accordingly, a commander may incur criminal responsibility for crimes committed by persons who are not formally his (direct) subordinates, insofar as he exercises effective control over them[530].

302. Although the Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence that the "actual ability" of a commander is a relevant criterion, the commander need not have any legal authority to prevent or punish acts of his subordinates. What counts is his material ability[531], which instead of issuing orders or taking disciplinary action may entail, for instance, submitting reports to the competent authorities in order for proper measures to be taken[532].

---

[526] Defence Brief, p. 42-44.
[527] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 370.
[528] Ibid., para. 364-378.
[529] Ibid., para. 378.
[530] The Trial Chamber takes notice of Article 28(1) of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which limits a military commander's criminal responsibility to crimes which are about to be or which are being committed by "forces under his or her effective command and control".
[531] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 395: "a superior may only be held criminally responsible for failing to take such measures that are within his powers" (emphasis added). Likewise, Article 86(2) of Additional Protocol I refers to superiors and "feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress" (emphasis added).
[532] Aleksovski Judgement, para. 78, concerning reporting to the appropriate authorities the commission of crimes.

303. Finally, as recognised in the Aleksovski Judgement[533], the Trial Chamber holds that the test of effective control exercised by the commander implies that more than one person may be held responsible for the same crime committed by a subordinate.

c) Mens Rea: "Knew or Had Reason to Know"

i) Arguments of the Parties

304. Both Prosecution and Defence agreed that actual knowledge may be proved either through direct or circumstantial evidence. In respect of the latter, the Prosecution submitted a number of relevant factors, such as the number, type and scope of the illegal acts[534].

305. In the Prosecution's view a commander "had reason to know" if he had information putting him on notice or tending to suggest that subordinates were about to commit or had committed crimes or if the fact that he did not have this information stemmed from a serious dereliction of his duty to obtain information of a general nature concerning the conduct of his subordinates to which he could reasonably have had access[535].

306. The Defence submitted that for a commander to know or have reason to know of a crime, the Prosecution must prove that the commander actually knew or wantonly disregarded information within his possession which could only lead to the conclusion that such an act was going to occur or had occurred[536].

ii) Discussion and Findings

a. "Actual knowledge"

307. Knowledge may not be presumed[537]. However, the Trial Chamber agrees that "knowledge" may be proved through either direct or circumstantial evidence. With regard to circumstantial evidence, the Trial Chamber concurs with the view expressed by the Trial Chamber in the ^elebi}i case and holds that in determining whether in fact a superior must have had the requisite knowledge it may consider inter alia the following indicia enumerated by the Commission of Experts in its Final Report: the number, type and scope of the illegal

[533] Ibid., para. 106.
[534] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 2.2-2.3; Defence Brief, p. 39.
[535] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 2.4-2.15.
[536] Defence Brief, p. 39-42.

acts; the time during which the illegal acts occurred; the number and type of troops involved; the logistics involved, if any; the geographical location of the acts; the widespread occurrence of the acts; the speed of the operations; the modus operandi of similar illegal acts; the officers and staff involved; and the location of the commander at the time[538].

308. These indicia must be considered in light of the accused's position of command, if established. Indeed, as was held by the Aleksovski Trial Chamber, an individual's command position per se is a significant indicium that he knew about the crimes committed by his subordinates[539].

b. "Had reason to know"

309. In the ^elebi}i case, the Trial Chamber conducted a survey of post-World War II jurisprudence and held that > the principle can be obtained that the absence of knowledge should not be considered a defence if, in the words of the Tokyo judgement, the superior was "at fault in having failed to acquire such knowledge"[540].

310. However, the ^elebi}i Trial Chamber went on to state that since it was bound to apply customary law as it stood at the time of the alleged offences[541], it must in addition fully consider the standard established by Article 86 of Additional Protocol I[542]. It held that, read in accordance with its ordinary meaning, the provision reflects the following position of customary law at the relevant time:

> a superior can be held criminally responsible only if some specific information was in fact available to him which would provide notice of offences committed by his subordinates. This information need not be such that it by itself was sufficient to compel the conclusion of the existence of such crimes. It is sufficient that the superior was put on further inquiry by the information, or, in other words, that it indicated the need for additional investigation in order to ascertain whether offences were being committed or about to be committed by his subordinates[543].

311. The ^elebi}i Trial Chamber added that this is without prejudice to the current state of customary international law. In this respect, it noted Article 28(1)(a) of the Statute of the [537] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 386. The Trial Chamber notes that in the submission of the Defence, the Prosecution at some stage during the trial argued that knowledge may be presumed in certain circumstances, a position which the Defence opposes. Defence Brief, p. 41-42.

---

[538] Final Report of the Commission of Experts, para. 58; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 386.
[539] Aleksovski Judgement, para. 80.
[540] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 388 (footnote omitted). See also ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 389.
[541] 1992.
[542] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 390.
[543] Ibid., para. 393.

International Criminal Court which imposes individual criminal responsibility on a military commander if he "either knew or, owing to the circumstances at the time, should have known" that his subordinates were committing or were about to commit crimes[544].

312. Both parties disagreed with this finding in ^elebi}i but for different reasons. The Prosecution argued that Article 86 of Additional Protocol I is complementary to Article 87 which requires that a superior supervise his subordinates and remain apprised of their acts. Accordingly, the knowledge requirement does not differ from the standard established in the case-law arising out of World War II, as reflected in Article 28(1)(a) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court. According to the Prosecution, as a minimum, a commander is required to rely on or to establish an effective reporting system to ensure that any violation is brought to his attention. Based on the Commentary to Article 86 of Additional Protocol I, the Prosecution listed a number of issues about which the commander must remain informed such as the tactical situation in general and the level of training of subordinate troops[545].

313. The Defence, however, argued that the post-World War II jurisprudence focused on information compelling the conclusion that crimes had been committed. It submitted that the phrase "had reason to know" must not be interpreted as including "ordinary negligence" in the mens rea of the offence[546].

314. The Trial Chamber will now state its own interpretation of the "had reason to know standard" in accordance with customary international law. It will first turn to the relevant jurisprudence issuing from the aftermath of the Second World War.

315. In dealing with the responsibility for war crimes against prisoners, the International Military Tribunal for the Far East (hereinafter the "IMTFE") stated that:

> It is the duty of all those on whom responsibility rests to secure proper treatment of prisoners and to prevent their ill treatment by establishing and securing the continuous and efficient working of a system appropriate for these purposes. Such persons fail in this duty and become responsible for ill treatment of prisoners if:
>
> (1) They fail to establish such a system.
>
> (2) If having established such a system, they fail to secure its continued and efficient working.

---

[544] Id.
[545] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 2.9-2.14.
[546] Defence Brief, p. 39-41.

> Each of such persons has a duty to ascertain that the system is working and if he neglects to do so he is responsible. He does not discharge his duty by merely instituting an appropriate system and thereafter neglecting to learn of its application.
>
> [...]
>
> Nevertheless, such persons are not responsible if a proper system and its continuous efficient functioning be provided for and conventional war crimes be committed unless:
>
> (1) They had knowledge that such crimes were being committed, and having such knowledge they failed to take such steps as were within their power to prevent the commission of such crimes in the future, or
>
> (2) They are at fault in having failed to acquire such knowledge.
>
> If such a person had, or should, but for negligence or supineness, have had such knowledge he is not excused for inaction if his office required or permitted him to take any action to prevent such crimes. On the other hand it is not enough for the exculpation of a person, otherwise responsible, for him to show that he accepted assurances from others more directly associated with the control of the prisoners if having regard to the position of those others, to the frequency of reports of such crimes, or to any other circumstances he should have been put upon further enquiry as to whether those assurances were true or untrue[547].

The IMTFE further specified that:

> Army or Navy commanders can, by order, secure proper treatment and prevent ill treatment of prisoners. So can Ministers of War and of the Navy. If crimes are committed against prisoners under their control, of the likely occurrence of which they had, or should have had knowledge in advance, they are responsible for those crimes. If, for example, it be shown that within the units under his command conventional war crimes have been committed of which he knew or should have known, a commander who takes no adequate steps to prevent the occurrence of such crimes in the future will be responsible for such future crimes[548].

316. In the Toyoda case, the law member of the war crimes tribunal delivered the Tribunal's opinion when he stated:

> In the simplest language it may be said that this Tribunal believes the principle of command responsibility to be that, if this accused knew, or should by the exercise of ordinary diligence have learned, of the commission by his subordinates, immediate or otherwise, of the atrocities proved beyond a shadow of a doubt before this Tribunal or of the existence of a routine which would countenance such, and, by his failure to take any action to punish the perpetrators, permitted the atrocities to continue, he has failed in his performance of his duty as a commander and must be punished.
>
> In determining the guilt or innocence of an accused, charged with dereliction of his duty as a commander, consideration must be given to many factors. The theory is simple, its application is not. [...] His guilt cannot be determined by whether he had operational command, administrative command, or both. If he knew, or should have known, by use of reasonable diligence, of the commission by his troops of atrocities and if he did not do everything within his power and capacity under the existing circumstances to prevent > their occurrence and punish the offenders, he was derelict in his duties. Only the degree of his guilt would remain[549].

[547] Tokyo Trial Official Transcript, p. 48,444-48,445 (emphasis added).
[548] Ibid., p. 48,446 (emphasis added).

317. One of the defendants in the Pohl case was Karl Mummenthey, an SS officer in control of concentration camp enterprises. In its Judgement, the military tribunal hearing the case held that "Mummenthey's assertions that he did not know what was happening in the labor camps and enterprises under his jurisdiction does not exonerate him. It was his duty to know"[550]. It seems, however, that the tribunal held that in actual fact the accused must have known:

> Mummenthey could not help knowing about concentration camp labor in the DEST enterprises. In Sachsenhausen-Oranienburg the inmate workers daily passed by the very building in which Mummenthey had his office. Their poor physical condition was obvious[551].

318. The Roechling case dealt with the criminal responsibility of directors of the Roechling firm for ordering or consenting to the ill-treatment of forced labourers. Responding to the accused Hermann Roechling's defence that he did not know of the conditions of the workers at the Voelklingen plant, the tribunal of first instance held that > it was his duty as the head to inquire into the treatment accorded to the foreign workers and to the prisoners of war whose employment in his war plants was, moreover, forbidden by the rules of warfare, of which fact he must have been aware; that he cannot escape his responsibility by stating that the question had no interest for him[552][.]

The appellate court affirmed the rejection of the defence of lack of knowledge, holding that > [n]o superior may prefer this defense indefinitely; for it is his duty to know what occurs in his organization, and lack of knowledge, therefore, can only be the result of criminal negligence[553].

---

[549] U.S.A. v. Soemu Toyoda (emphasis added), Official Transcript of Record of Trial, p. 5006. The President of the Tribunal summarised the charges against Admiral Toyoda as follows: "He is charged with violation of the laws and customs of war whilst holding the appointments of Commander-in-Chief of the Yokosuka Naval District, the Combined Fleet, the Combined Naval Forces, the Naval Escort Command as well as when Chief of the Naval General Staff, all these appointments being held for varying periods of time between the 21st of May, 1943, until shortly after the conclusion of the Pacific War" (Toyoda case, Official Transcript of Record of Trial, p. 5008).

[550] U.S.A. v. Oswald Pohl et al., in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. V, p. 1055 (emphasis added).

[551] Ibid., p. 1053. Further on, the tribunal referred to "the wholesale suffering of which he could not but be aware". Ibid., p. 1054.

[552] General Tribunal of the Military Government of the French Zone of Occupation in Germany, Judgement Rendered on 30 June 1948 in the Case versus Hermann Roechling and Others Charged With Crimes Against Peace, War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity, in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. XIV, Appendix B, p. 1088 (emphasis added).

[553] Superior Military Government Court of the French Occupation Zone in Germany, Judgement of 25 January 1949 in the Case Versus Hermann Roechling and Others Charged with Crimes Against Peace, War Crimes, and Crimes Against Humanity. Decision on Writ of Appeal Against the Judgement of 30 June 1948, in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. XIV, Appendix B, p. 1106 (emphasis added).

319. In respect of the "duty to know", the military tribunal hearing the Hostage case stated the following when it rejected the defence of the accused General List that he had no knowledge of many unlawful killings committed by subordinates:

> A commanding general of occupied territory is charged with the duty of maintaining peace and order, punishing crime, and protecting lives and property within the area of his command. His responsibility is coextensive with his area of command. He is charged with notice of occurrences taking place within that territory. He may require adequate reports of all occurrences that come within the scope of his power and, if such reports are incomplete or otherwise inadequate, he is obliged to require supplementary reports to apprize him of all the pertinent facts. If he fails to require and obtain complete information, the dereliction of duty rests upon him and he is in no position to plead his own dereliction as a defense. Absence from headquarters cannot and does not relieve one from responsibility for acts committed in accordance with a policy he instituted or in which he acquiesced[554].

320. In the same way, the following extract of the opinion in the Hostage case was adopted by the military tribunal hearing the High Command case:

> Want of knowledge of the contents of reports made to him is not a defense. Reports to commanding generals are made for their special benefit. Any failure to acquaint themselves with the contents of such reports, or a failure to require additional reports where inadequacy appears on their face, constitutes a dereliction of duty which he cannot use in his own behalf[555].

321. In clear rejection of the so-called concept of strict liability, the Tribunal in the High Command case further held the following:

> Criminality does not attach to every individual in this chain of command from that fact alone. There must be a personal dereliction. That can occur only where the act is directly traceable to him or where his failure to properly supervise his subordinates constitutes criminal negligence on his part. In the latter case it must be a personal neglect amounting to a wanton, immoral disregard of the action of his subordinates amounting to acquiescence[556].

322. From this analysis of jurisprudence, the Trial Chamber concludes that after World War II, a standard was established according to which a commander may be liable for crimes by his subordinates if "he failed to exercise the means available to him to learn of the offence and, under the circumstances, he should have known and such failure to know constitutes criminal dereliction"[557].

323. This principle of command responsibility was further introduced in domestic legislation. For example, the Field Manual issued by the U.S. Department of Army provides as follows:

---

[554] U.S.A. v. Wilhelm List et al., in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. XI, p. 1271 (emphasis added).
[555] Ibid.; U.S.A. v. Wilhelm von Leeb et al., in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. XI, p. 603.
[556] U.S.A. v. Wilhelm von Leeb et al., in Trials of War Criminals, Vol. XI, p. 543-544.
[557] W. H. Parks, Command Responsibility for War Crimes, 62 Mil. L. Rev. 1 (1973) (hereinafter "Parks"), p. 90.

> The commander is [...] responsible, if he had actual knowledge, or should have had knowledge, through reports received by him or through other means, that troops or other persons subject to his control are about to commit or have committed a war crime and he fails to use the means at his disposal to insure compliance with the law of war[558].

324. The Trial Chamber now turns to codification at the international level, namely the adoption of Additional Protocol I in 1977. The pertinent question is this: was customary international law altered with the adoption of Additional Protocol I, in the sense that a commander can be held accountable for failure to act in response to crimes by his subordinates only if some specific information was in fact available to him which would provide notice of such offences? Based on the following analysis, the Trial Chamber is of the view that this is not so.

325. Article 86 ("failure to act"), paragraph 2, of Additional Protocol I reads as follows:

> The fact that a breach of the Conventions or of this Protocol was committed by a subordinate does not absolve his superiors from penal or disciplinary responsibility, as the case may be, if they knew, or had information which should have enabled them to conclude in the circumstances at the time, that he was committing or was going to commit such a breach and if they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach[559].

326. As a preliminary matter, a difference of meaning appears to exist between the English and the French version of Article 86(2). Whereas the English text reads "information which should have enabled them to conclude", the latter reads "des informations leur permettant de conclure", which literally means "information enabling them to conclude". In keeping with Article 33(4) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (1969), the Trial Chamber deems that the French version is truer to the object and purpose of the text[560].

327. The Trial Chamber will interpret Article 86(2) in accordance with Article 31 of the Vienna Convention, that is, "in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of the treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose". In this respect, the Trial Chamber considers fundamental the provision enshrined in Article 43(1) of Additional Protocol I according to which the armed forces are to be placed "under a command responsible [...] for the conduct of its subordinates"[561].

---

[558] U.S. Department of Army, Field Manual No. 27-10, Law of Land Warfare, para. 501 (1956), cited in Parks p. 95. The British Manual of Military Law employs exactly the same wording. Cf. Great Britain War Office, The Law of War on Land: Being Part 3 of the Manual of Military Law, para. 631 (1958), cited in: L.C. Green, Command Responsibility in International Humanitarian Law, 5 Transnt'l L. & Contp Prbs 319, p. 343 (1995).
[559] Emphasis added.
[560] Pursuant to Article 102 of Additional Protocol I, the two texts are equally authentic.
[561] This Article was preceded by virtually identical provisions in Article 1 of the 1907 Regulations Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, and in Article 4A(2) of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949.

328. In the Trial Chamber's view, the words "had information" in Article 86(2) must be interpreted broadly. In this respect, it is noted that on the basis of post-World War II jurisprudence, the Commentary on Additional Protocol I explains that the information includes "reports addressed to [the superior], [...] the tactical situation, the level of training and instruction of subordinate officers and their troops, and their character traits"[562].

329. Moreover, a commander "cannot claim to be ignorant" of this information[563]. The Trial Chamber considers instructive the Commentary's guidance that Article 86(2) should be read in conjunction with article 87 ("duty of commanders"), paragraph 1[564], which provides as follows:

> The High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall require military commanders, with respect to members of the armed forces under their command and other persons under their control, to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and to report to competent authorities breaches of the Conventions anc of this Protocol.

Given the essential responsibilities of military commanders under international humanitarian law, the Trial Chamber holds, again in the words of the Commentary, that '[t]heir role obliges them to be constantly informed of the way in which their subordinates carry out the tasks entrusted them , and to take the necessary measures for this purpose"[565].

330. The Trial Chamber also notes that according to the Commission of Experts, "a commander has a duty to do everything reasonable and practicable to prevent violations of the law. Failure to carry out such a duty carries with it responsibility"[566]. Apart from circumstances in which knowledge can be proved or deduced, the Commission considered "such serious personal dereliction on the part of the commander as to constitute wilful and wanton disregard of the possible consequences" [567] to satisfy the mens rea requirement under Article 7(3) of the Statute.

331. Lastly, the Trial Chamber considers that the findings of the Israeli Commission of Inquiry responsible for investigating the atrocities perpetrated in the Shatilla and Sabra refugee camps in Beirut in 1982 constitute further evidence of the state of customary [562] Y. Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 (1986) (hereinafter the "Protocol Commentary"), para. 3545, p. 1014.

---

[563] Id.
[564] Ibid., para. 3541, p. 1011.
[565] Ibid., para. 3560, p. 1022.
[566] Final Report of the Commission of Experts, para. 59.
[567] Final Report of the Commission of Experts, para. 58.

international law[568]. With respect to the responsibility of the Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Forces, the Commission held that his knowledge of the feelings of hatred of the particular forces involved towards the Palestinians did not justify the conclusion that the entry of those forces into the camps posed no danger. Accordingly,

> The absence of a warning from experts cannot serve as an explanation for ignoring the danger of a massacre. The Chief of Staff should have known and foreseen – by virtue of common knowledge, as well as the special information at his disposal – that there was a possibility of harm to the population in the camps at the hands of the Phalangists. Even if the experts did not fulfil their obligation, this does not absolve the Chief of Staff of responsibility[569].

The Commission clearly held that the applicable standard for imputing responsibility is negligence:

> If the Chief of Staff did not imagine at all that the entry of the Phalangists into the camps posed a danger to the civilian population, his thinking on this matter constitutes a disregard of important considerations that he should have taken into account. [...] We determine that the Chief of Staff's inaction [...] constitute[s] a breach of duty and dereliction of the duty incumbent upon the Chief of Staff[570].

332. In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that if a commander has exercised due diligence in the fulfilment of his duties yet lacks knowledge that crimes are about to be or have been committed, such lack of knowledge cannot be held against him. However, taking into account his particular position of command and the circumstances prevailing at the time, such ignorance cannot be a defence where the absence of knowledge is the result of negligence in the discharge of his duties: this commander had reason to know within the meaning of the Statute.

d) Necessary and Reasonable Measures to Prevent or Punish

i) Arguments of the Parties

333. The Prosecution put forth several measures which a commander can take in order to discharge his obligation to prevent offences from being committed. Accordingly, the exercise of effective command and control through the proper and diligent application of discipline is

---

[568] Final Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Events at the Refugee Camps in Beirut, February 7, 1983 (authorised translation) (hereinafter "Kahan Report"), reproduced in 22 International Legal Materials 473-520 (1983). Although the Commission was not a criminal court, its membership justifies attributing considerable weight to its findings. The Commission members were: Yitzhak Kahan, President of the Supreme Court, Commission Chairman; Aharon Barak, Justice of the Supreme Court; and Yona Efrat, Major General (Res.), Israel Defense Forces.
[569] Kahan Report, p. 35.
[570] Kahan Report, p. 35 and 37.

a common thread. The duty to punish entails the obligation to establish the facts, to put an end to the offences and to punish. "Necessary measures" are those required to discharge the obligation to prevent or punish, in the circumstances prevailing at the time. "Reasonable" measures are those which the commander was in a position to take in the circumstances prevailing at the time. The lack of formal legal jurisdiction does not necessarily relieve the superior of his criminal responsibility. If subordinates act pursuant to criminal orders passed down from higher up in the chain of command the commander remains under an obligation to take all measures within his power[571].

334. The Defence submitted that if the commander makes a reasonable effort to prevent or punish the crimes of his subordinates, command responsibility is entailed only if his effort is patently disproportionate to the crime committed. Hence, if the evidence demonstrates that a commander took reasonable steps to prevent or punish the commission of crimes, command responsibility cannot be imposed[572].

ii) Discussion and Conclusions

335. The Trial Chamber has already characterised a "superior" as a person exercising "effective control" over his subordinates. In other words, the Trial Chamber holds that where a person has the material ability to prevent or punish crimes committed by others, that person must be considered a superior. Accordingly, it is a commander's degree of effective control, his material ability, which will guide the Trial Chamber in determining whether he reasonably took the measures required either to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator[573]. As stated above in the discussion of the definition of "superior", this implies that, under some circumstances, a commander may discharge his obligation to prevent or punish by reporting the matter to the competent authorities.

336. Lastly, the Trial Chamber stresses that the obligation to "prevent or punish" does not provide the accused with two alternative and equally satisfying options. Obviously, where the accused knew or had reason to know that subordinates were about to commit crimes and failed to prevent them, he cannot make up for the failure to act by punishing the subordinates afterwards.

---

[571] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 3.1-3.16.
[572] Defence Brief, p. 44-45.
[573] Likewise, ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 395; Kayishema-Ruzindana Judgement, para. 229-231; Aleksovski Judgement, para. 81.

e) Concurrent Application of Articles 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute

337. It would be illogical to hold a commander criminally responsible for planning, instigating or ordering the commission of crimes and, at the same time, reproach him for not preventing or punishing them. However, as submitted by the Prosecution[574], the failure to punish past crimes, which entails the commander's responsibility under Article 7(3), may, pursuant to Article 7(1) and subject to the fulfilment of the respective mens rea and actus reus requirements, also be the basis for his liability for either aiding and abetting or instigating the commission of further crimes.

338. In this respect, it should be noted that the regulations concerning the application of the international law of war to the armed forces of the SFRY, under the heading "Responsibility for the acts of subordinates", provide the following:

> The commander is personally responsible for violations of the law of war if he knew or could have known that his subordinate units or individuals are preparing to violate the law, and he does not take measures to prevent violations of the law of war. The commander who knows that the violations of the law of war took place and did not charge those responsible for the violations is personally responsible. In case he is not authorized to charge them, and he did not report them to the authorized military commander, he would also be personally responsible.
>
> A military commander is responsible as a participant or an instigator if, by not taking measures against subordinates who violate the law of war, he allows his subordinate units to continue to commit the acts[575].

While the first paragraph corresponds to individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute, the second supports the Trial Chamber's view regarding the concurrent application of Articles 7(3) and 7(1) in cases of subsequent crimes being committed.

339. As stated earlier in this Judgement, in the case of instigation, proof is required of a causal connection between the instigation, which may entail an omission, and the perpetration of the act. In the scenario under discussion, this means it must be proved that the subordinates would not have committed the subsequent crimes if the commander had not failed to punish the earlier ones[576]. However, with respect to the Defence's submission that under Article 7(3) of the Statute proof is required that the commander's omission caused the commission of the crime by the subordinate, the Trial Chamber is of the view that such a causal link may be

---

[574] Prosecutor's Brief, Part XIII, paras. 4.1-4.3.
[575] Cited in the ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 341 (emphasis added).
[576] The ^elebi}i Trial Chamber held that such a causal connection is "not only possible but likely" to exist. ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 400.

considered inherent in the requirement that the superior failed to prevent the crimes which were committed by the subordinate. In other words, > the superior may be considered to be causally linked to the offences, in that, but for his failure to fulfil his duty to act, the acts of his subordinates would not have been committed[577].

* * *

340. After having set the legal framework for its considerations and established the international nature of the armed conflict in which the crimes covered in the indictment occurred, the Trial Chamber will examine the facts and the responsibility of the accused Tihomir Bla{ki}.

[577] Ibid., para. 399.

III. FACTS AND DISCUSSION

A. The Lašva Valley: May 1992 – January 1993

341. In its discussion of Article 2 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber explained that the armed conflict in question was an international conflict. In that connection, it pointed out that the objectives of the Croatian nationalists in Croatia were clearly shared by many members of the HVO and the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna (HZHB): Mate Boban, president of that community, but also Anto Valenta (leader of the HDZ in Vitez and later President of the HDZ for the HZHB), whose nationalistic writings were revealing; Ignac Koštroman (Secretary-General of the HZHB) and Dario Kordic whose speeches inflamed the Bosnian Croats. The example given by the Trial Chamber is from the minutes of a meeting held on 12 November 1991, signed by Mate Boban and Dario Kordic: "the Croatian people in Bosnia and Herzegovina must finally embrace a determined and active policy which will realise our eternal dream – a common Croatian state".

342. Those nationalists could not accept that the Muslims could want to have their own defence. On 10 April 1992, Mate Boban decreed that the Bosnian Territorial Defence (TO), which had been created the day before, was illegal on HZHB territory. The Croatian General Roso confirmed the proscription by an Order of 8 May[578]. On 11 May, Tihomir Blaškic implemented that Order declaring the TO illegal on the territory of the Kiseljak municipality. Tensions continued to increased between May 1992 and January 1993. The Trial Chamber will now set out a brief summary of the important events of the period since they were at the root of the torching of the Lašva Valley in April 1993.

1. The exacerbation in tensions

a) The municipality of Vitez

343. In the municipality of Vitez, as in many others, the rivalries between communities and the struggle for political power started in November 1990 with the election of the members of the Municipal Assembly[579]. The Croatian Democratic Union party won most of the seats, followed by the SDA, made up mainly of Muslims and the Communist Party. Ivan Santic, a Bosnian-Croat, was elected President of the Assembly, which was responsible, inter alia, for the police and for defence. The Municipal Council, an executive body, was chaired by a Muslim, Fuad Kaknjo[580].

[578] P584

344. Tensions increased in November 1991 with the formation of the HZHB. The creation of that institution marked the beginning of the breakdown in inter-ethnic relations in Vitez[581]. Several political and social events, the most important of which are briefly summarised here, demonstrate the HDZ's desire to take progressive political and social control of the town and to initiate a policy of discrimination towards the town's Muslims, whereas an independent Muslim political organisation was being set up in tandem.

345. In March 1992 the last meeting of the Vitez Municipal Assembly took place. A Crisis Committee, officially supervised by the Municipal Assembly, chaired by Ivan Santic and made up of five Croats and five Muslims, was set up in order to cope with the problem of refugees in Vitez[582].

346. In April 1992, the Leader of the HDZ in Vitez, Anto Valenta, told the SDA representatives that they should take their orders from the "Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna"[583].

347. On 20 May 1992, an ABiH soldier was killed in front of the Vitez Hotel and two others were captured and beaten. Nothing came of Prosecutor Vladomir Miskovic's investigation[584].

348. On 18 June 1992, military formations of the HVO took over the headquarters in Vitez and the Municipal Assembly building and raised the flags of Herceg-Bosna and of Croatia[585].

---

[579] Witness Djidic, PT of 25 July 1997, p. 1036.
[580] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1631-1633.
[581] Witness Djidic, PT of 25 July 1997, pp. 1037-1038.
[582] Witness Djidic, PT of 28 July 1997, pp. 1164-1165; Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1637-1639.
[583] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1650-1652.
[584] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1642-1646.
[585] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1646-1647. According to the statement of Witness Djidic, "with the formation of the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna, the Croats placed flags on all institutions and

349. On 12 July 1992, Muslim political leaders created the Co-ordination Committee for the protection of Muslim interests under the Chairmanship of Fuad Kakjno. That Committee addressed numerous public statements about the daily problems facing Muslims in Vitez to the government of BH, to the HVO and to UNPROFOR[586].

350. On 20 October 1992, the first clashes between Croatian and Muslim forces occurred in Ahmici. Muslim forces sought to block the passage of Croatian troops coming from Busovaca. According to the Defence, these troops were going as reinforcements to the Serbian front in Jajce[587]. The Muslims wanted to stop the Croatian forces for fear that they were in fact going towards Novi Travnik where clashes had broken out between Croatian and Muslim forces[588]. On 19 October 1992, roadblocks were erected on the main road linking Busova~a to Vitez and Travnik[589], especially at Ahmici[590]. One of them had been set up by a unit of twenty or so Muslim soldiers based at Ahmici[591], on the orders of the headquarters of the territorial defence[592].

351. On 20 October 1992, Dario Kordic is alleged to have ordered the Muslims to take down the blocks and threatened to set their village alight[593]if they did not. According to the Witness Abdullah Ahmic, the roadblock was taken down by the Croatian forces as early as 06:30 hours[594] whereas General Bla{kic stated that it was only lifted at 18:00 hours[595]. However, the clashes were not limited to the taking down of the roadblock, as attested to, factories and even private homes, flags which were those of a neighbouring state, that is the Republic of Croatia, that is the national flag, as if no-one else lived in Vitez except the Croats ", PT of 25 July 1997, p. 1039.

---

[586] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1654-1660.
[587] That front fell to the Serbs on 28 October 1992 (Witness Blaškic, PT p. 21323).
[588] See especially the report sent by General Bla{kic on 20 October 1992 at 20:07 hours and addressed to Mate Boban, Bruno Stojic and Milivoj Petkovic (P644; Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21339-21340). Controlling Novi Travnik was of particular strategic interest because that town had a military factory (the Bratstvo factory) with the necessary equipment for arms production. In accordance with the philosophy of the ex-JNA, each military factory had to have available what was known as "war stocks", which enabled it to be productive for about six months during periods of war (Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21318-21319). Clashes had already occurred at Novi Travnik between Muslim forces and Croatian forces in June 1992, with a view to gaining control of a petrol station (Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21344-21345). The Serbian front was about ten kilometres from the town of Novi Travnik (Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21321-21322).
[589] P647.
[590] Witness Mujezinovic (PT of 21 August 1997 pp. 1743-1744), alleged that the order to put up a roadblock at Ahmici was given orally to Sefkija Djidic by Dzemo Merdan.
[591] Witness HH, PT pp. 6889-6901. This witness, who was of Muslim origin, was a soldier in the HVO from the summer of 1992 to April 1993, after having served in the Croatian Defence Forces under Darko Kraljevic. He was in the Military Police from October 1992 (PT p. 6811).
[592] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 2793-2794; Mujezinovic, PT of 21 August 1997 pp. 1743-1744.
[593] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3800-3801.
[594] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3722.
[595] Witness Bla{kic, PT p. 18012.

inter alia, in the accused's report dated 21 October 1992. That report shows not only that "the barricade in the village of Ahmici, Vitez municipality, was completely destroyed and the Muslim forces were driven out of the village and crushed entirely"[596]. The witness Abdullah Ahmic explained that the HVO had first of all fired on the minaret of the Donji Ahmici mosque after the Muslims had used the mosque to call for the Croats to surrender their arms[597]. It is alleged that the HVO then began an infantry attack on the village, from 08:00 hours to nightfall[598], setting four houses and ten stables[599] alight with incendiary bullets[600]. According to the Witness Abdullah Ahmic, 80% of the village was evacuated and a young boy was killed[601]. General Bla{kic reported that one HVO soldier and one territorial defence soldier were dead and that a few buildings around the roadblock had been burned down.

352. According to the witness HH, the operation was led by Mario ^erkez[602]. According to the accused, however, the action was carried out by the Military Police[603].

353. The consequence of those clashes was the disarming of the Muslim troops stationed in Ahmici[604] and in the surrounding villages. Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic[605] and Casim Ahmic[606] stated that Muslims in the Zume[607] area had been disarmed during the cease-fire negotiations which followed the clashes. Likewise, the witness O testified that the inhabitants of [anti}i had had to surrender their arms to Nenad Santi}, HVO Commander in [anti}i, shortly after the clashes caused by the roadblock[608].

354. General Bla{kic's afore-mentioned report noted that the Muslim troops in Ahmici were entirely disarmed after the attack and the village of Ahmici placed under the exclusive control of the HVO. However, General Bla{kic declared before the Trial Chamber that the [596] P647; witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21381-21382.

---

[597] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3722.
[598] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3722.
[599] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3723.
[600] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3722.
[601] By the name of Halid Pezer. Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3723-3724.
[602] PT pp. 6889-6901. The witness testified that he had heard ^erkez give the following order over the radio: "Go forward and do not take prisoners".
[603] Witness Bla{kic, PT p. 18012. According to the Kupreskic judgement, the attack was led by HVO forces from outside Ahmici although a few local Croats also took part (para. 162).
[604] See General Bla{kic's report dated 21 October 1992, P647 : "The Muslim forces also surrendered their weapons on their own initiative ... since yesterday, the village is under full control of the HVO" (witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21381-21382).
[605] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3725.
[606] PT of 1 October 1997, pp. 3130-3131.
[607] Zume is an area of the town of [antici (Witness Djula Djidic, PT p. 4328).
[608] Witnesses O, PT p. 4500; Haris ([antici), PT p. 4004.

HVO had stopped exercising control of the village between 20 and 25 October 1992 as soon as a local cease-fire between the HVO and the ABiH was signed[609]. According to General Bla{kic, a joint municipal committee was then set up[610] and operated until 4 November when the Muslim leaders chose not to participate in it any longer[611].

355. The Trial Chamber considers that the attack on the roadblock at Ahmici on 20 October 1992 was not unlawful and that, given the circumstances, the damage caused to certain dwellings were actions which General Bla{kic could not prevent and which he had not ordered. It considered however that the events were characteristic of increasingly strident nationalistic attitudes and that they led to the Muslim population of Ahmici being disarmed.

356. In November 1992, General Blaškic organised the command structure, transformed the municipal headquarters into brigades and set up the CBOZ's headquarters in the Hotel Vitez[612]. Furthermore, the municipality introduced new taxes, asked members of staff to sign a declaration of allegiance to the new Government, threatening those that did not obey with dismissal[613]. Many Muslims were refused access to public institutions because they had refused to sign the declaration[614] and they were unable to get the laissez-passer necessary to drive on the roads that the HVO had taken over[615]. Finally, the Chairman of the Vitez Red Cross (Sead Cajnic) was replaced by a Croat, who forbade the registration of Muslim refugees on his lists. They were sent back to Muslim municipalities[616].

b) The municipality of Busova~a

357. Many significant social and political events also occurred in Busova~a during 1992 and demonstrated the HVO authorities' resolve to take over all the powers of the municipality and to exclude Muslims from them.

---

[609] Witness Bla{kic, PT p. 21390.
[610] Witness Bla{kic, PT p. 18012.
[611] Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 21390-21391.
[612] Witness Bla{kic, PT pp. 18060-18061.
[613] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1661-1662.
[614] P406/45.
[615] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1662-1663.
[616] P456/95.

358. At the celebrations for the first year of Croatian independence, which were held on 16 January 1992 at the Town Hall in Busova~a[617], influential members of the HDZ, including Dario Kordic, Vice-President of the HZHB and Ignac Koštroman, General-Secretary of the HZHB, made extremely nationalistic speeches[618], which were evidence of their ambitions at the time: they publicly expressed their wish to see the creation of a sovereign Bosnian-Croatian State and for that State to be attached to Croatia[619].

359. On 10 May 1992, Dario Kordic and Ivo Brnada, Commander of the HVO municipal headquarters took the following decisions[620]:

- to revoke the arms distribution agreement[621] which had been concluded with the Territorial Defence[622];

- to seize "all weapons, equipment, material as well as the barracks"[623];

- to issue an ultimatum to all military units calling on them to surrender their weapons and "to place themselves under HVO command"[624];

- to issue a decree mobilising all Croatian military forces[625];

- to impose a general curfew[626];

- to seize the "Public Security Section" and to create the "Busova~a Police Station"[627];

- to make the HVO Military Police exclusively responsible for the maintenance of law and order[628];

---

[617] Witness FF, PT pp. 6119-6120.
[618] P234. According to Witness FF, "that event was celebrated in the presence of a large number of HDZ members from the entire La{va region, from virtually all the villages, Kresevo, Kiseljak, Busova~a, Vitez, Novi Travnik, Travnik, Vareš, and so on" (PT pp. 6120-6121) (See also PT pp. 6147-6155).
[619] P234/2.
[620] Witness FF spoke of a putsch or military coup d' état after the HVO had seized the barracks and the weapons (PT p. 6131).
[621] Witness T, PT p. 5763.
[622] P208, para. 1.
[623] P208.
[624] P208, para. 3.
[625] P208, para. 7.
[626] P208, para. 10.
[627] P208, para. 8.

- to take control of "the PTT building"[629];

- to prohibit "the passage [of] all carriers passing of through the territory of our municipality"[630];

- and finally, to dissolve the "Municipal crisis committee" and to confer its powers on the HVO[631].

360. Then, by a decree dated 22 May 1992, Dario Kordic and Florian Glavocevic, President of the HVO Command in Busova~a, gave the HVO general administrative powers over the municipality. They provided that:

> The internal organisation and the responsibilities of the government bodies of the (Busova~a) Municipal Assembly will be regulated by a special order by the (Busova~a) HVO Municipal Command [...][632].

They also decreed that:

> because the HVO of the Busova~a municipality is leading the whole organisation of life and defence of Busova~a, the Busova~a Municipal Assembly, Busova~a Municipal Executive Council and the Busova~a Municipal Crisis Command will not do their duties any more, nor will they make any decisions, until the conditions are improved[633].

361. After those two decrees had been adopted, tension considerably increased between the Croatian and Muslim communities during the remainder of 1992 and their relations deteriorated:

- legal power holding organs were abolished[634];

- Muslims were progressively excluded from all structures with any powers[635];

---

[628] P208.
[629] P208, para. 15.
[630] P208, para. 13.
[631] P208, para. 11. According to witness FF, after this decree was signed, "a curfew [for three days], ban on movement for all citizens, whether Bosniak or Croat in the city of Busova~a" (PT p. 6133).
[632] P209 (emphasis added).
[633] P209 (emphasis added).
[634] Witness T, PT pp. 5764-5765; Witness FF, PT pp. 6134-6136.
[635] Witness FF, PT p. 6191.

- the HVO seized the television broadcasting station at Skradno and created its own local radio and television[636];

- the HVO seized the town hall, the post office, the police, the post and telecommunications[637] buildings and those of the other public institutions[638];

- the HVO set up roadblocks on all major roads and controlled movement of persons and goods going through the municipality[639];

- the Croatian flag was raised over, inter alia, the police station, the town hall and the post and telecommunications building[640];

- the Muslims were forced to sign an act of allegiance to the HVO in order to be allowed to work[641];

- the Croatian Dinar was imposed as the unit of currency[642];

- an increasing number of armed Croatian soldiers[643] wearing military uniform were see moving about the streets of Busova~a[644];

- there were numerous attacks on businesses and shops belonging to Muslims[645];

- and finally, Muslims gradually left the area fearing that they would be the victims of crimes[646].

---

[636] Witness FF, PT p. 6134, p. 6161.
[637] Witness FF, PT p. 6161.
[638] Witness FF, PT p. 6162.
[639] Witness FF, PT p. 6134, p. 6161.
[640] P237/1-237/3; witness FF, PT p. 6142; witness T, PT pp. 5764-5765.
[641] Witness FF, PT p. 6137, p. 6159.
[642] Witness FF, PT pp. 6142-6143. Telephone bills were expressed in Croatian Dinars.
[643] Witness FF, PT p. 6163. According to witness FF, HVO soldiers confiscated weapons during the checks they carried out at roadblocks.
[644] Witness FF, PT p. 6163.
[645] Witness T, PT pp. 5766-5767, 5787-5788.
[646] Witness T, PT pp. 5766-5767.

c) The municipality of Kiseljak

362. As in the municipalities of Vitez and Busova~a, several incidents occurred in Kiseljak in the period from April to November 1992 that demonstrated the HVO authorities' resolve to take political and military control of the Kiseljak municipality.

363. Many events showed that during 1992 the local HVO authorities seized the civil, political and military powers in the municipality progressively and with increasing violence.

364. The most significant event during that period was the creation, on 21 April 1992, of a crisis staff in which Croatians had an absolute majority[647]. It took over the powers of the Municipal Assembly although under the constitution of Bosnia-Herzegovina, only the Municipal Assembly is entitled to exercise those powers[648]. That crisis staff, which was at the root of many discriminatory measures taken against the Muslim authorities and population, took the following significant decisions:

- on 23 April 1992, it set up the HVO Headquarters in the municipality of Kiseljak, of which General Blaškic was appointed head also on that day[649];

- on 27 April 1992, it assigned the Kiseljak barracks, which had hitherto belonged to the JNA[650], to the HVO[651];

- on 12 May 1992, it ordered that all the "manpower, material assets and technical equipment of the reserve structure of the Public Security Station" be made available to the HVO[652];

- on 25 May 1992, it cancelled "the giro account of the Municipal TO /Teritorial Defence/ Staff and nullifie[d] the use of the seal of this body"[653];

[647] Witness MM, PT p. 8087.
[648] Witness MM, PT p. 8087.
[649] P314, witness MM, PT pp. 8115-8116.
[650] Witness MM, PT p. 8090; witness KK, PT pp. 7917-7918.
[651] P315.
[652] P318, witness MM, PT pp. 8116-8117.
[653] P319, witness MM, PT pp. 8099-8100.

- on 25 May and 1 June 1992, it requisitioned the quarters of the former JNA for the benefit of HVO officers[654], including Tihomir Blaškic[655], Ivica Rajic[656] and Mato Lu~ic[657];

- on 15 June 1992, it imposed the Croatian Dinar "on the territory of the Kiseljak municipality as the currency of account [...]"[658] and ordered that "all commercial service companies [were] obliged to display the prices of products and services in CRO (Croatian) Dinars"[659], and finally

- on 25 June 1992, the crisis staff unilaterally renamed the "Executive Committee of the Kiseljak Municipal Assembly" the "Croatian Defence Council of Kiseljak", made up exclusively of Croatian representatives[660].

365. Other incidents occurred during that period and should also be pointed out by the Trial Chamber because of their discriminatory impact on the Muslim population of the region:

- the municipal authorities raised the Croatian flag over the town hall and the police station as soon as they had seized them[661];

- the authorities imposed Croatian as the language to be used in schools[662];

- the HVO took over most of the roadblocks in the area[663] and the Croats appropriated part of the humanitarian aid destined for Muslims, in particular those in the enclave of Tuzla[664];

- the Croatian authorities made it a requirement for Muslims wishing to cross these roadblocks to obtain a laissez-passer beforehand[665];

---

[654] Witness MM, PT pp. 8101-8102, pp. 8117-8118, pp. 8147-8148, pp. 8149-8150.
[655] P321.
[656] P322.
[657] P320.
[658] P323; witness LL, PT pp. 8010-8011; witness MM, PT pp. 8101-8102.
[659] P324; witness KK, PT p. 7912; witness MM, PT p. 8120.
[660] P325; witness MM, PT p. 8120.
[661] Witness KK, PT pp. 7917-7918; witness LL, PT pp. 8010-8011; witness MM, PT pp. 8106-8107.
[662] Witness KK, PT p. 7913; witness LL, PT pp. 8010-8011.
[663] Witness KK, PT pp. 7908-7909; witness MM, PT pp. 8147-8148.
[664] Witness KK, PT pp. 7917-7918.
[665] Witness MM, PT pp. 8147-8148.

- the HVO appropriated a large part of the weapons which had been in the Kiseljak barracks[666], despite the decree dated 6 May 1992 issued by the Municipal Crisis Staff which provided that "those weapons [should] be distributed proportionally between ethnic groups"[667];

- the HVO gradually excluded the Muslim authorities from power at the local level[668];

- the Croatian authorities took over the Kiseljak schools, public enterprises[669], Post Office, the medical centre and the police station[670];

- the HVO appropriated Muslim business premises[671];

- the authorities created a radio station which broadcast nationalist propaganda[672];

- HVO soldiers moved about in military uniform in the municipality and intimidated the Muslim population;

- members of the police force in the Kiseljak municipality were forced to wear the Croatian crest on their uniform[673] as from April 1992;

- General Blaškic expelled the Territorial Defence from the former JNA buildings on 14 May 1992[674];

- at the beginning of August 1992 the HVO arrested Sead Sinanbašic, the Commander of the Territorial Defence in Kiseljak, and detained him for several weeks in the Busova~a prison[675];

---

[666] Witness MM, PT p. 8096.
[667] P317.
[668] Witness MM, PT pp. 8103-8104.
[669] Witness KK, PT p. 7912.
[670] Witness KK, PT pp. 7916-7918.
[671] P541.
[672] Witness LL, PT pp. 8010-8011 and witness Morsink, PT pp. 9830-9848. According to the testimony of witness Liebert, "[...] radio Kiseljak played a very active role in terms of propaganda for the HVO or HDZ, the Bosnian Croat forces" (PT p. 8757).
[673] Witness WW, PT pp. 9683-9684.
[674] P631.
[675] Witness MM, PT p. 8130.

- during the month of August 1992 the HVO launched attacks on the villages of Duhri[676], Potkraj[677], Radanovi}i and Topole[678] and these attacks involved more violent incidents, including setting fire to homes where Muslims lived and vandalising their businesses[679];

- many Muslim civilians who feared attack started to leave the Kiseljak enclave as from the summer of 1992[680].

d) Conclusions

366. In sum, during 1992 discriminatory acts were regularly carried out against the Muslim authorities of Vitez, Busova~a and Kiseljak and against the Muslim population of those municipalities. Those acts sought to exclude those Muslim authorities from civil, political and military functions for the benefit of HVO representatives. They made life so onerous for Muslim civilians at that point that many of them decided to leave the area and to move to other municipalities where they were in the majority. Those who chose, despite everything, to remain in those municipalities had to accept that they would be subject to persecution by a political and military regime[681] increasingly hostile to them.

367. In those three municipalities, tensions increased between Muslim and Croatian populations, with incidents breaking out especially when one party thought it could gain a tactical or strategic advantage: control of a village, a town, former military warehouses or a road. Provocation and incidents increased, such as raising a Croatian flag over public buildings or the abduction of officers of Croatian origin. The first acts of destruction of mosques and Muslim houses, the first murders of civilians and the first acts of pillage occurred. On a small territory, groups of refugees, some Croatian but most Muslims, forced

[676] Witness FF, PT p. 6170.
[677] Witness MM, PT p. 8143.
[678] Witness MM, PT pp. 8136-8137, pp. 8137-8138, pp. 8207-8209.
[679] Witness Christie, PT p. 7853; witness LL, PT pp. 8013-8014.
[680] The Trial Chamber noted moreover that the HVO appropriated the commercial premises of Kiseljak on 25 February 1993 (P451).
[681] Witness KK, PT p. 7912. According to the witness: "[...] as far as the political situation in Kiseljak is concerned, in my opinion, the political leadership of the HDZ as well as the military leadership was one and the same. To me [...] they were the same [...]".

to leave their homes by Serbian forces, were joined by internal movements of displaced Muslim populations forced from their dwellings by the Croats.

2. The Vance-Owen Plan and the January 1993 conflicts

a) The Vance-Owen Plan

368. Those were the conditions in which the Vance-Owen Plan was presented, on 2 January 1993, at the first plenary session of the Bosnian parties, summoned to Geneva by the International Conference for the former Yugoslavia. That peace plan proposed, inter alia, a decentralised Bosnia-Herzegovina, organised into ten provinces, each one substantially autonomous and administered by a democratically elected local government. According to the explanation given by one of the Trial Chamber's witnesses, the whole logic of the plan was one of power-sharing with predominance of one nationality in certain zones but not without denying the other nationalities. Power was to be exercised with respect for minorities. That witness also testified that the plan could only be implemented if the parties co-operated perfectly, since they would both have to make concessions as regards not only the territory over which they had nominal control, but also government of their population and the setting up of their administration.

369. According to the Vance-Owen Plan, the Lašva valley would largely be in Province 10, and the rest (Southern part of the Kiseljak municipality) in Province 7 (Sarajevo). Province 8 (Mostar) extended from Bosnia-Herzegovina's Southern border with Croatia to Prozor and Konic in the North. The Plan assigned the main responsibilities in Provinces 8 and 10 to the Croats and in Province 7 to the Muslims. In the minds of Croatian nationalists, and in particular of Mate Boban, this meant that Province 10 was Croatian. However, he believed that lands, which were historically Croatian, would end up in Province 7 and thus would be lost to them. He considered it necessary to ensure Croatian domination in the regions in question.

370. The Croats, and in particular the Bosnian-Croats, provoked an open conflict between Croats and Muslims in central Bosnia by anticipating the implementation of the Vance-Owen Plan then by wanting to implement it unilaterally.

b) The January 1993 conflicts

371. The first violent clashes broke out in January 1993. On 15 January, Bruno Stojic, Head of the HZHB Defence Department, called for the ABiH forces to surrender to the authority of the HVO in Bosnian Provinces 3,8 and 10 or to leave these territories before 19:00 hours on 20 January[682]. Paragraph 3 of the ultimatum also provided that:

> unit members of the HVO Armed Forces and BH army [...] who refuse to leave the region and acknowledge the superior command shall be regarded as members of paramilitary units and shall be disarmed and arrested.

372. In the face of the Muslim forces' refusal to obey the ultimatum, Croatian forces embarked on a series of actions intended to implement the "Croatisation" of the territories by force. The Muslim community was subjected to of an increasing number of acts of aggression: ill treatment, plunder, confiscation, intrusion into private homes, beatings, thefts, arrests, torching of homes and murder of prominent Muslims[683]. Hundreds of Muslims were arrested and many were imprisoned in Kaonik in the former JNA warehouses. Many were beaten. Most of them were forced to dig trenches, often in inhumane conditions, exposed to enemy fire, beaten or even killed, and sometimes serving as a human shield.

373. Tensions were high. The British Battalion military information summary of 16 January 1993 recorded the presence in the region of "extremists on [both the Muslim and Croat] sides, who do not appear to be under the control of their respective commanders"[684], who made the situation worse.

374. Following the Muslim army commanders' refusal to obey the ultimatum, HVO forces launched an attack on the town of Busova~a during the night of 20 to 21 January[685].

375. Indeed, by order of 16 January 1993, General Blaškic placed all troops on the highest state of alert, in particular those of the HVO, the Vitezovi Unit and the Military Police Fourth

---

[682] P658. See also P657, P659.
[683] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, p. 1576; witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1678-1679.
[684] P663.
[685] P671. According to witness T, the purpose of the offensive was to take control of the positions of the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina (PT pp. 5789-5790).

Battalion and called upon them to prepare for battle[686]. Three days later, on 19 January, soldiers from the Vitezovi Unit were placed under his command by General Petkovic[687], and with the help of the Ludvig Pavlovic Brigade, they carried out reconnaissance operations on troop movements of the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina[688]. The following evening, and further to the ABiH authorities' refusal to obey Bruno Stojic's ultimatum, on the orders of Bozo Raji}[689], the HZHB Defence Minister, the HVO launched attacks against Muslims in the Busova~a region, attacks which, as we have already stated, were at the root of torching of businesses and private homes. Croatian forces fired on eight businesses belonging to Muslims and damaged them using explosives, including grenades[690]. These forces also looted private Muslim homes[691] and killed a soldier of the Territorial Defence[692]. Subsequently, according to the report drawn up by Major Vinac, Deputy Commander of the Vitezovi, a battalion of fifteen soldiers from that unit was sent to the Busova~a zone on 26 January 1993[693]. The report also stated that that battalion was still there on 9 February 1993[694].

376. According to the British Battalion's report of 21 January 1993, this was "a pre-planned, co-ordinated attack on the Muslim population"[695]. That report also stated that roadblocks had been set up at each end of the town, on 20 January between 20:00 hours and 21:00 hours[696]. The telephone lines were also cut a few hours before the start of the offensives[697].

377. Other attacks followed. On 24 January 1993, the HVO set fire to around 19 Muslim houses in Busova~a and forced out their inhabitants[698]. It kept some of them in Kaonik prison[699]. On 25 January 1993, Croatian forces[700] shelled the Grablje and Merdani villages[701],

---

[686] P456/6.
[687] P666.
[688] D250.
[689] Witness T, PT pp. 5766-5768.
[690] P238, P669 and witness FF, PT p. 6139.
[691] P671; witness FF, PT p. 6174.
[692] P671; witness FF, PT p. 6139.
[693] D250.
[694] D250.
[695] P669.
[696] P669.
[697] Witness T, PT pp. 5768-5769.
[698] Witness T, PT pp. 5769-5771.
[699] Witness T, PT pp. 5770-5771.
[700] Witness FF, PT p. 6176.
[701] Witness FF, PT p. 6144, p. 6175.

which caused many civilians to flee[702]. Those two villages were however defended by ABiH units from Visoko and Maglaj[703] and Muslim artillery pounded Busova~a from Grablje[704].

378. Even if the HZHB Ministry of Defence did order the attacks, the accused was directly responsible for their implementation, because he was the commander in charge of the units deployed on the ground at the time of the criminal acts.

379. It should be noted that at the same time, similar incidents were occurring in the municipality of Gornji Vakuf. On 17 January 1993, @ivko Toti}, local commander of the HVO, ordered the ABiH commander to place himself under the authority of the HVO[705]. Following the refusal to carry out that order, the HVO launched attacks against the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina[706] on 19 January 1993 at 00:30 hours and set fire to several Muslim villages in the area[707]. According to Major Short who personally went to these places after the attacks:

> it became apparent to me that a number of villages had been reduced to ashes and in one particular area had actually been blown up using military explosives[708].

Despite Mate Boban's order to stop fighting on 19 January 1993, hostilities continued until 27 January 1993[709].

c) Conclusions

380. Throughout the period from January to April 1993, the Muslim population would continue to be subjected to increasing persecution from the Croatian political and military authorities. Many civilians left the area to go to Kacuni or Zenica. According to Witness FF's account, > things became more and more complicated, and practically, factually speaking, we became two different sides, even though there was no conflict between us yet, but the HVO worked independently on their own, organised their life and the Bosniaks on the

[702] Witness FF, PT p. 6176.
[703] Witness FF, PT p. 6203.
[704] P671.
[705] Witness Short, PT p. 24239.
[706] Witness Short, PT pp. 24239-24240.
[707] Witness Short, PT p. 24240.
[708] Witness Short, PT pp. 24240-24241.
[709] P591.

> other side organised themselves and prepared for defence on their own and they did this in the area of Kacuni which is also a part of the Busova~a municipality[710] [...] As a result of all these events, the Bosniak people as such were totally negated, there was a ban on assembly, they were thrown out of work, their nationhood was completely denied and what was considered to be the highest value was belonging to the Croatian people, whereby all the values of the individual were denied[711].

381. There were considerable efforts made by the ECMM and UNPROFOR first of all to try to get prisoners released and secondly to contain the conflict. A joint Committee was appointed in Busova~a on 13 February.

382. On 27 January 1993, General Blaškic gave an order that firing should cease within 24 hours[712]. The same day, he received a report from Franjo Nakic, Chief-of-Staff, summarising the situation[713]. That report announced however that there would be future conflicts in Vitez, in Busova~a or in Kiseljak. It was noteworthy in that it used expressions like "to create feelings of insecurity and fear on the enemy side" and especially "the enemy regrouped their forces and entered our villages"[714] or "our forces disarmed the villages of Strane and Skradno where 100 rifles were captured"[715]. A relatively calm situation prevailed until April 1993.

383. Still the report predicted that the conflict would explode in April 1993 and the following months. The Trial Chamber will now examine the conflict municipality by municipality and will look separately at the questions concerning the detention of Muslims by Croatian forces.

B. The municipality of Vitez

1. Ahmici , Šanti}i , Pirici, Nadioci

384. The villages of Ahmici, Šanti}i, Pirici, Nadioci, situated about 4 to 5 kilometres from the town of Vitez[716], belong to the municipality of Vitez. According to the last official census taken in 1991, the municipality had 27 859 inhabitants, made up of 45.5% Croats, 5.4%

---

[710] Witness FF, PT p. 6137.
[711] Witness FF, PT p. 6143 (emphasis added).
[712] P456/8 and D348.
[713] D408. Franjo Nakic was also General Blaškic's representative at the Joint Committee in Busova~a.
[714] D408 (emphasis added).
[715] D408, emphasis in original text.
[716] P706. For the exact distances between the Hotel Vitez and these villages, see also P79.

Serbs, 41.3% Muslims and 2.8% other nationalities[717]. These villages are about 1000 meters away from each other and their total population was about 2 000 inhabitants[718]. Šantici, the biggest of the villages, had a population of about 1 000 inhabitants, the majority of whom were Croats[719], whereas Pirici, the smallest of the villages, was a mere hamlet with a mixed population[720]. Nadioci was also a village with a substantial majority of Croats[721]. Ahmici had about 500 inhabitants[722], of whom about 90% were Muslims[723], which meant 200 Muslim houses and fifteen or so Croat ones[724].

385. On Friday 16 April 1993 at 05:30 hours[725], Croatian forces simultaneously attacked Vitez, Stari Vitez, Ahmici, Nadioci, Šantici, Pirici, Novaci, Puti{[726] and Donja Ve~eriska. General Blaškic spoke of 20 to 22 sites of simultaneous combat all along the road linking Travnik, Vitez and Busova~a[727]. The Trial Chamber found that this was a planned attack against the Muslim civilian population.

a) A planned attack with substantial assets

i) An organised attack

386. Several factors proved, beyond a doubt, that the 16 April attack was planned and organised.

387. The Trial Chamber notes, first of all, that the attack was preceded by several political declarations announcing that a conflict between Croatian forces and Muslim forces was imminent. Mate Boban issued an ultimatum requiring the troops of the Bosnian army on the

---

[717] P46; P193; witness Kajmovic, PT pp. 5647-5648.
[718] 2173 inhabitants according to the 1991 census, of whom 32% were Muslims and 62% were Croats (same finding as in the Kupreskic judgement, para. 149).
[719] According to the 1991 census (P46), 782 inhabitants out of 1 008 were Croats.
[720] According to the 1991 census (P46), the hamlet of Pirici had 225 inhabitants of whom 110 were Muslim and 98 were Croats.
[721] According to the 1991 census (P46), out of 474 inhabitants recorded in the census as living in Nadioci, 386 were Croats and 42 were Muslims (P46).
[722] 466 inhabitants recorded in the 1991 census (P46).
[723] Report of the Commission on Human Rights, P184, p. 5, para. 13. According to witness Kajmovic, Ahmici had a population of 508 Bosnians in 1991 (PT pp. 5680-5681).
[724] P184, p. 7, para. 20.
[725] All the witnesses agree about the time the attack began.
[726] This village was not mentioned in the indictment.
[727] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 22052 and 22939-22940.

territories of provinces 8 and 10 under the Vance-Owen Plan, to surrender their weapons or to leave these territories[728]. Witness Mujezinovic alleged that in early March 1993, Dario Kordic had stated on television that the "Muslims would disappear from Bosnia"[729]. Several witnesses who lived in the area at the material time moreover reported that the accused and Dario Kordic had declared during the course of a television interview broadcast on 15 April 1993, that "their soldiers" stationed in the bungalow at Nadioci had been attacked by Muslim forces and that consequently the negotiations with the Muslims had to be broken off since only war could resolve the matter[730].

388. The declarations were made together with orders issued by the political authorities to the Croatian population in Herceg-Bosna. In particular, on 14 April, Anto Valenta ordered the Croatian officials in the of municipalities in central Bosnia to impose a curfew from 21:00 hours to 06:00 hours and to close the schools until 19 April[731].

389. The evidence showed moreover that the Croatian inhabitants of those villages were warned of the attack and that some of them were involved in preparing it. Several witnesses, who lived in Ahmici at the material time, testified that Croatian women and children had been evacuated on the eve of the fighting[732]. The witness Fatima Ahmic furthermore stated that a Croatian neighbour had informed her that the Croatian men were holding regular meetings and preparing to "cleanse Muslim people from Ahmici"[733]. Witness S testified that the same thing happened in Nadioci: several Croatian families were said to have left the village several days before the attack and a Croatian neighbour is alleged to have advised the witness to hide[734]. The witness Abdullah Ahmic stated that an "enormous" rally of Croats from Ahmici and the neighbouring villages had taken place on Sunday 11 April 1993[735]. Witness M gave evidence of having seen that many armed soldiers in uniform had gathered [728] PT p. 21765. The municipality of Vitez was situated in Province no. 10. Other earlier speeches also implied that this might happen. See in particular P679, a summary of an interview given by Dario Kordic on 13 March 1993, in which he sent the following warning to the Muslim population: "If you attack other municipalities, not only [will there] be no Bosnia–Herzegovina, but there will be no Muslims left".

---

[729] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, p. 1654.
[730] Witnesses Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3941-3945 and 3977-3980; Nura Pezer, PT pp. 3883-3884; Sefik Pezer, PT of 20 August 1997 pp. 1557-1558; Haris Hrnjic, PT pp. 4006-4007; M, PT pp. 4416-4417; O, PT p. 4517.
[731] P687.
[732] Witnesses Elvir Ahmic (Ahmici), PT pp. 3245-3246, 3296; Zec, PT pp. 4274-4276, 4320. According to these two witnesses, Croatian children did not go to school on 15 April and the women and children had been taken out of the village by the Croatian men who then returned to the village.
[733] Witness Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3987-3988.
[734] Witness S, PT pp. 4878-4879.
[735] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3806-3807.

in the house of Ivica Kupreskic the day before the attack[736]. Witness HH stated that the D`okeri stationed in the Nadioci bungalow[737] spoke of an attack on Ahmici long before it had actually occurred. They were even alleged to have advised the witness to warn his friends or his family living in Ahmici to leave the village[738].

390. The method of attack also displayed a high level of preparation. Colonel Stewart stated that he had received many reports indicating an increased presence of HVO troops shortly before the events[739]. The witness Sefik Pezer also said that on the evening of 15 April he had noticed unusual HVO troop movements[740]. On the morning of 16 April, the main roads[741] were blocked by HVO troops[742]. According to several international observers, the attack occurred from three sides and was designed to force the fleeing population towards the south where elite marksmen, with particularly sophisticated weapons[743], shot those escaping[744]. Other troops, organised in small groups of about five to ten soldiers, went from house to house setting fire and killing[745]. It would seem that a hundred or so soldiers took part in the operation[746]. According to the witness Thomas, the attacks in the built-up areas, such as those carried out in the Ahmici area were "operations [were] planned in minute detail"[747]. According to Colonel Stewart, the attacks on the villages of Ahmici, Šantici, Pirici and Nadioci needed about half a day's planning[748]. The attack was carried out in a morning[749].

---

[736] Witness M, PT pp. 4400-4401 and P147 no. 1.
[737] The bungalow was also known as the "Swiss chalet".
[738] Witness HH, PT p. 6858.
[739] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23756. That finding was corroborated by witnesses Landry (PT pp. 7508-7509) and Baggesen (PT of 22 August 1997 pp. 1918-1919).
[740] Witness Sefik Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997 pp. 1555-1556.
[741] This refers to two roads, one a mountain road and the other the road through the valley.
[742] Witnesses Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509 and Stewart, PT p. 23860.
[743] See especially the photographs of the rifles used by the hidden marksmen, P82/Z2/469 and p82/Z2/470.
[744] Witnesses Watters, PT pp. 3440-3441; Stewart PT p. 23589; Commission on Human Rights report, P184, para. 15, p. 4.
[745] P184, para. 15, p. 5.
[746] Witnesses Zec, PT p. 4296 (the witness stated that he had a hundred or so soldiers in Ahmici on 16 April); Akhavan, P184 para. 23 p. 6 ("At least 50 and possibly up to 150 soldiers are reported to have been involved in the operation, according to the testimonies gathered"); Stewart, PT p. 23773 (the witness estimated at between 40 and 70 the number of soldiers who took part in the Ahmici massacre). The Defence did not challenge that estimate (Defence Brief, book VI, p. 304).
[747] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997 p. 2688.
[748] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23861.
[749] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19155-19156.

391. All the international observers, military experts for the most part, who went to the site after the attack had occurred, stated without hesitation that such an operation could only be planned at a high level of the military hierarchy[750].

392. The accused himself also consistently expressed that view. Both in the statements he made shortly after the attack in April 1993 and before the Trial Chamber, General Blaškic expressed his conviction that this was "an organised, systematic and planned crime"[751].

393. Like Trial Chamber II in the Kupreskic case[752], the Trial Chamber therefore finds, and this finding is not open to challenge and was indeed unchallenged, that the attack carried out on Ahmici, Nadioci, Šanti}i and Piri}i was planned at a high level of the military hierarchy.

ii) The troops involved

394. According to the Prosecution, those participating in the attack were not only the Military Police Fourth Battalion and in particular the D`okeri stationed at the bungalow in Nadioci, but also the Vitezovi, the Viteška brigade of the municipality of Vitez, the Nikola Šubic Zrinski brigade of Busova~a, together with Domobrani units (units set up in each village in accordance with a decision from Mostar dated 8 February 1993[753]) stationed at Ahmici, Šantici, Pirici and Nadioci[754].

395. According to the accused, the Military Police Fourth Battalion and its special unit, the D`okeri, carried out the attack[755]. The Defence specifically maintained that no regular unit of the central Bosnia operational zone took part in the fighting[756].

396. The Trial Chamber notes that many witnesses mentioned the presence of soldiers in camouflage uniform or dressed in black. Their faces were painted and they had sophisticated

---

[750] Witnesses Watters, PT p. 3633; Akhavan, PT pp. 5291 and 5367-5368; Thomas, PT pp. 2429-2430; Morsink, PT pp. 9877-9879; Macleod, P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993" Annex J; Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 pp. 1893-1894 and PT of 25 August 1997 pp. 1934-1935 and 2126-2131 (the witness considered that the attack was planned at a level higher than brigade level); Ellis, PT of 30 August 1997 pp. 3112-3113 (the witness based his opinion in particular on the fact that the restocking of ammunition required a logistical chain which had to have been prepared in advance); Parrott, PT pp. 5032-5033.
[751] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 19029; see also pp. 19155-19156 and 22020 (cross-examination).
[752] Kupre{kic Judgement, para. 761.
[753] P769 (signed by General Milivoj Petkovic).
[754] Prosecutor's Brief, book VI, pp. 47-48.
[755] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18609-18610.

equipment[757]. According to several witnesses, the black uniform had been that of the "Ustasha" during the Second World War[758]. It was worn by the D`okeri, an anti-terrorist squad with twenty or so members[759], created in January 1993, from within the Military Police on the order of Zvonko Vokovic[760], and whose mission was to carry out special assignments such as sabotage or ant-terrorist operations[761]. Other witnesses also noticed that some soldiers wore white belts which were a distinctive feature of the HVO Military Police[762].

397. The evidence given however proved that the Military Police was not the only unit involved in the actions. The Vitezovi, special HVO unit created on 10 September 1992[763] and placed under Dario Kraljevic's authority also wore black uniforms[764] and several witnesses stated that they recognized their emblem on the uniform of some of the soldiers[765]. According to a few witnesses, HVO soldiers themselves sometimes wore black[766]. The witness Ellis stated that the accused sometimes wore that uniform himself[767]. Owing to the apparent confusion displayed by some witnesses and stemming from the fact that different troops wore similar uniforms, the Trial Chamber was unable to conclude with certainty that the Vitezovi participated in the operations on these villages. The Trial Chamber notes in this connection that the Kupreskic Trial Chamber did not make a finding that the Vitezovi were present during the attack on Ahmici. Many witnesses also referred to soldiers in camouflage uniforms being present[768], wearing the HVO insignia[769] and some even claimed to have seen soldiers

---

[756] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 303.
[757] Witnesses Nura Pezer, PT p. 3888; Haris Hrnjic, PT pp. 4011-4012; G, PT pp. 3854-3856; H, PT pp. 3912 and 3921-3922; I, PT p. 4040-4041; M, PT pp. 4405-4408; Djula Djidic, PT pp. 4332-4334.
[758] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3747-3748; R, PT pp. 4923-4924, 5001-5002.
[759] Witnesses Marin, PT p. 12898; HH, PT p. 6833.
[760] P481; witness HH, PT p. 6854. Zvonko Vukovic was replaced by Paško Ljubicic on 18 January 1993 (P457/1A/46).
[761] Witness HH, PT pp. 6856-6857.
[762] Witnesses Parrott, PT p. 5021; Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3734-3736; J, PT p. 4082; Elvir Ahmic, PT p. 3260-3261.
[763] D250; witness Marin, PT p. 12186.
[764] Witness Zec did however testify that the Vitezovis' commander, Dario Kraljevic, wore a camouflage uniform with HVO insignia (PT of 26 September 1997 p. 2803).
[765] Witnesses Zec, PT pp. 4293-4294; F, PT pp. 3662-3663 and Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3823-3825, although he was not entirely sure. The Kupre{kic Trial Chamber did not hold that there had been Vitezovi present.
[766] Witness G (PT pp. 3855-3856) specified that the soldiers in black uniforms wore the emblems of the D`okeri, the Vitezovi and the HVO on their shirts.
[767] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997 pp. 3115-3116. See also photographs P88/Z2/446 and 447.
[768] Witnesses I, PT pp. 4040-4041; J (Zume), PT pp. 4080-4082; M, PT pp. 4405-4406; Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3948-3949; O, PT p. 4505.
[769] Witnesses Zec, PT pp. 4293-4324; Elvir Ahmic, PT pp. 3254-3255; G, PT pp. 3855-3856; Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3750; M, PT pp. 4405-4406; S (Nadioci), PT pp. 4881-4882 (he described camouflage uniforms with the emblem of a red and black checkerboard characteristic of the HVO; he also noted the presence of "U" insignia); J (Zume), PT p. 4071; F, PT p. 3666; Hrnjic (Šantici), PT pp. 4010-4017; Djula Djidic (Šantici), PT pp. 4331-4333.

wearing the emblem of the HV[770]. Exhibit D245 showed that on 14 April, 20 members of the Viteška brigade of the HVO were stationed in Nadioci, 12 in Šantici and 19 in Dubravica. Those soldiers were part of the first company of the first battalion of the Viteška brigade and were under the command of Slavko Papic. Several certificates, issued by the HVO, certified that on the day of the attack soldiers who were members of that brigade were wounded in the sector in the exercise of their duties[771]. Witness Parrott, who was then a sergeant with the Cheshire Regiment, went on a Warrior to the Ahmici area and saw HVO soldiers recognisable by their emblems and badges. They wore either a very dark green uniform or black fatigues and had small arms (assault rifles or similar weapons)[772]. Finally, other witnesses noticed emblems depicting an oak leaf[773].

398. Several Croatian inhabitants of these villages participated in these operations as members of the HVO. The witness Abdullah Ahmic in particular gave the names of a certain number of local HVO commanders, who were each responsible for a specific sector. They were members of the Domobrani. Those named included Slavko Milicevic for the Donji Ahmici sector, Zarko Papic for the Zume area, Branko Perkovic in Nadioci, Zoran Kupreskic in Grabovi (an area in the centre of Ahmici), Nenad Šantic[774] and Colic[775] in Šantici.

399. There was a certain amount of indirect evidence attesting to HVO participation. In particular, several witnesses stated that, on the day of the attack, the telephone lines had been cut[776]. Indeed, all the communications exchanges in the municipality of Vitez were under HVO control[777].

---

[770] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3750 and Zec, PT pp. 4290-4291.

[771] P691: certificate showing that Ivica Semren, member of the Viteška Brigade from 8 April 1993, was wounded at Ahmici on 16 April 1993 when "carrying out combat duties by order of the competent commander"; P692: certificate showing that Nikola Omazic, member of the Viteška Brigade from 16 April 1993, was wounded at Pirici on 16 April 1993 during combat operations.

[772] Witness Parrott, PT p. 5021.

[773] According to Witness Mujezinovic, the units wearing that emblem came from Herzegovina (PT of 21 August 1997 p. 1749).

[774] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3829. According to exhibit P772, Nenad Šantic was appointed temporary Commander of the Domobran unit in Vitez on 12 March 1993 by the Head of the Defence Bureau, Marijan Skopljak. According to exhibit P776, Nenad Šantic had been a member of the HVO from 26 April 1992.

[775] Witness Hrnji}, PT pp. 44016-4017.

[776] Witnesses Kavazovic, PT of 27 August 1997, pp. 2381-2382 and G, PT p. 3854.

[777] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9908-9909. According to witness Baggesen (PT of 21 August 1997 pp. 1844-1845), the post and telecommunications were controlled by the ABiH in Zenica and by the HVO in Travnik, Vitez and Kiseljak.

400. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that not only the Military Police, and especially the D`okeri Unit, but also regular HVO units, and in particular the Viteška brigade[778], took part in the fighting on 16 April 1993.

401. Oral evidence also established beyond a doubt that those troops acted in a perfectly co-ordinated manner. The witness Abdullah Ahmic stated that he saw soldiers wearing the emblem of the HV acting in concert with HVO soldiers[779]. The witnesses G[780], H[781] and Zec[782] also indicated that the soldiers worked in a very co-ordinated manner. Several witnesses declared that the soldiers worked in groups of five to ten, each of these groups having differently-coloured ribbons attached to their arms[783]. Those troops communicated by way of little Motorola radios or walkie-talkies[784]. The witness Morsink noted on this point that HVO soldiers normally wore these portable radios[785]. Moreover, a superior of the accused was of the view that the Viteška brigade must have co-operated with the Military Police in the operation against Ahmici[786].

b) An attack against the Muslim civilian population

i) The absence of military objectives

402. The Defence put forward different arguments in order to explain the fighting[787]. First of all, it pointed to the strategic nature of the road linking Busova~a and Travnik[788]. That road was controlled by the HVO at the material time[789], but the HVO intelligence services are said to have noted a movement of Muslim troops on 15 April from Travnik towards Ahmici and [778] Same finding as in the Kupre{kic Judgement, para. 334.

[779] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3825-3826.
[780] Witness G, PT pp. 3856-3857.
[781] Witness H, PT p. 3922.
[782] Witness Zec, PT pp. 4293-4294, 4323-4324.
[783] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic (Ahmici), PT pp. 3748-3749 (red and other colour armbands); Elvir Ahmic (Ahmici), PT p. 3251 (white and orange armbands); Djula Djidic (Šantici), PT pp. 4333-4334 (blue armbands). According to the witness Parrott, the use of those armbands showed that those troops were acting in concert (PT pp. 5074-5075).
[784] Witnesses Zec, PT pp. 4292-4293; Djula Djidic, PT pp. 4333-4334; G, PT pp. 385-3857; Elvir Ahmic, PT pp. 3254-3255.
[785] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9908-9909.
[786] PT. p. 2410.
[787] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 268.
[788] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 270.
[789] See in particular witness O, PT p. 4507-4508.

the neighbouring villages[790], which led them to believe that the Muslims were seeking to regain control of the road. That submission could not however be deemed to have been sufficient justification for the attack on the villages which with the exception of Šantici, were not directly on the main road[791]. Furthermore the accused said in his evidence that the HVO's intelligence services had informed him that ABiH forces from Zenica were moving towards Mount Kuber, a strategic point in the Lašva Valley from which, he stated, it was possible to control the whole valley[792]. It was alleged that shots had been heard on 15 April in the area around Ahmici[793]. Another justification given was terrorist activities carried out by the ABiH, in particular the abduction on 15 April in Zenica of Major Totic[794].

403. A report from the command of the Military Police Fourth Battalion (Paško Ljubi~ic), transmitted to the accused on 16 April[795], alleged that Muslim forces had attacked the D`okeri's bungalow early that morning. The Trial Chamber cannot however accept that that incident was the source of the conflict. The extent and the planned character of the attack in which several units took part in a perfectly co-ordinated manner would be sufficient to discount that justification. The Trial Chamber also notes that the accused had addressed an order to the Croat forces before he had even received that report[796]. The accused acknowledged that the information was incorrect and that its sole purpose was "to justify further activities" in Nadioci and Ahmici[797].

---

[790] These reasons were put forward by General Blaškic during his interview with an ECMM monitor on 8 May 1993, P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", annex G, ECMM H/S 720 dated 15 May 1993.
[791] See in particular P29; PT pp. 23698-23699.
[792] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18484-18486 and 21930-21931.
[793] P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", annex G, ECMM H/S 720, dated 15 May 1993.
[794] The accused alleged that he had been told of this by Holman on 15 April at 11:00 hours (witness Blaškic, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 18477-18478). That abduction followed the abduction on 14 April of four members of the HVO main staff in Travnik and Novi Travnik, which gave rise to a complaint from the accused to the ECMM. The accused suspected the Seventh Muslim Brigade of being responsible for this crime (witness Baggesen, PT pp. 1864-1873).
[795] D280. The report referred to the accused's order no. 01-04-243/93 (which was not available to the Trial Chamber).
[796] That order was issued at 01:30 hours whereas the Military Police's report was received at 11:42 hours. As regards the order (D269), described either as an combat preparation order or an attack order, depending on the party, see discussion below.
[797] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18621-18622.

404. The Defence also invoked the presence of units of the 325th ABiH Mountain Brigade in Ahmici[798] and the neighbouring villages. General Blaškic claimed that the command of these units was located at the primary school in Ahmici[799]. But documents submitted in support of that assertion mention only the village of Ahmici with no further details as to the number of soldiers, the amount of equipment there or the precise location of their headquarters. Moreover, the "defense" orders issued by the accused on the eve of the attack did not mention the presence of the 325th Brigade at all. Those orders, and in particular the order issued on 15 April at 15:45 hours[800], only refer to the threat which the seventh Muslim Brigade allegedly posed.

405. General Blaškic claimed that, in the night of 15 to 16 April, HVO members informed him that soldiers from the first and seventh brigades of the ABiH were coming towards Vitez by truck. These were soldiers going home on leave to Krusica and Ahmici. The HVO maintained that those soldiers were drunk and excited[801]. There again, that information was not enough to justify the attack. On the contrary, it highlighted the fact that the soldiers were on leave and were not preparing to fight in the municipality of Vitez.

406. The Defence also explained that "authorised CBOZ military activity at times included a legitimate military tactic known as fighting in built-up areas (FIBUA)"[802] defined by the witness Thomas as "clearing of a built-up area on a house-by-house area"[803], usually with automatic weapons and grenades. The Defence recognised that such a tactic often results in many victims, the number of which may even exceed that of the hostile soldiers. The Defence submitted however that those civilian victims should be considered "collateral casualties"[804] and that such an attack could be legal in certain circumstances. That is an incorrect interpretation of Witness Baggesen's statements to the Trial Chamber. He said that on the contrary there could be no justification for the death of so many civilians[805]. Furthermore, General Blaškic himself acknowledged in his oral evidence that the tactic normally used by [798] The Defence based its statement on, inter alia, a situation report issued by the Military intelligence services of the Vitez Brigade on 10 April 1993 (D192) and which claimed that units of the Fourth Battalion of the 325th Mountain Brigade of the ABiH were to be found in Ahmici, Santici and Nadioci. Defence Submissions, book VI, p. 268.

---

[799] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 21389-21390.
[800] D268.
[801] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 19224.
[802] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 281.
[803] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 281.
[804] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 282.
[805] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 p. 2001.

professionals avoided all combat operations inside villages[806]. The witness Landry, who was an ECMM monitor from February to August 1993, also explained that in "this kind of cleansing operation, especially for an area of tactical significance [...], you would destroy certain buildings or houses, [...] those areas which contain[ed] some sort of military munitions but it was quite usual [...] to actually go ahead and burn a village"[807]. He went to Ahmici on 16 April and noted however that there was no longer any military presence there in the evening of 16 April[808] whereas that morning he had noticed a high concentration of HVO troops on the main roads linking Vitez and Zenica[809]. According to that witness: "if this village did have some tactical importance, perhaps it would have been for the HVO to be able to consolidate their position and to maintain some sort of observation post or stop post for the military operations"[810]. And he added: "it is very difficult for me to say from a military perspective, to say what was the military reason to carry out such a carnage"[811].

407. The Trial Chamber also notes that much of the evidence contradicted the Defence submission that the ABiH forces were preparing for combat. Witness Abdullah Ahmic, inter alia, described the armed Muslim units present in the Ahmici area in April 1993 to the Trial Chamber. According to his testimony, the territorial defence was starting to organise in the area and consisted of about 120 men[812] whose main task was to carry out night watches[813]. According to that witness, their participation was purely voluntary and there was no disciplinary sanction for those who failed to take their turn on guard[814]. It was therefore a sort of civil defence[815] rather than an army strictly speaking. The members of the territorial defence were very badly equipped and most of them were dressed as civilians and did not think of themselves as soldiers[816]. There was no barracks in Ahmici[817]. Witness [806] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 22941-22942. According to General Blaškic: "there is no commander whatever who would agree to planning an operation and forget the fact that it would be fighting in the centre of a village".

[807] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7515-7516. The Witness Thomas made the same comment, PT of 24 September 1997 p. 2633.
[808] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509.
[809] The two main roads were a mountain road and a road through the valley. Witness Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509.
[810] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7516-7517.
[811] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7515-7516.
[812] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3720-3721 and 3788-3789.
[813] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3721.
[814] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3831-3833.
[815] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3788-3789.
[816] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3720-3721 and 3787-3789. See also Witness Kavazovic (PT of 27 August 1997 pp. 2354-2355 and 2452-2453) who stated that he joined the TO voluntarily and nonetheless thought of himself as a civilian when he was not in uniform. In fact, he only wore his uniform during the day and in the evening went back home and did not exercise any official function. In other words, he thought of himself as a soldier when he was in uniform and as a civilian when he was not.

Hadzihasanovic confirmed this information, stating that owing to the lack of men and of equipment, and in particular of barracks, the only armed presence in the village of Ahmici and those nearby was a territorial defence unit from Zenica in case of a Serb parachute attack[818]. The Trial Chamber notes moreover that the HVO had already disarmed the Muslim forces in these villages in October 1992, following the conflicts which occurred when a roadblock was erected by Muslim forces on the main Busova~a to Vitez road at Ahmici.[819]

408. The international observers who gave evidence before the Trial Chamber unanimously confirmed that those villages had not prepared for an attack. According to the ECMM monitors, there were no Muslim troops stationed in Ahmici[820]. Colonel Stewart stated that on 15 and 16 April, he saw no ABiH formation ready to carry out an attack in the Lašva Valley[821]. He did, however, receive numerous reports suggesting a reinforced HVO presence shortly before the events[822].

409. Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas, UNPROFOR commander at the material time, went to Ahmici on 17 April 1993 and stated that he saw no evidence suggesting that there had been a conflict between two separate military entities, nor any evidence of resistance such as trenches, sandbags or barbed wire indicating the presence in the village of an armed force ready for combat[823]. Furthermore, the bodies he saw were not in uniform[824] and not a single weapon was found in the destroyed buildings[825]. On the contrary, there were women and children amongst the bodies strewn on the ground[826]. The witnesses Watters[827], Bower[828], Stewart[829], Landry[830], Parrott[831], Kujawinski[832] and Ellis[833] stated that they had seen the same

---

[817] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3802-3803.
[818] Witness Had`ihasanovic, PT pp. 23221-23225.
[819] P647: report submitted by the then Colonel Blaškic to the authorities in Mostar on 21 October 1992.
[820] PT p. 23699; witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1923-1924.
[821] Witness Stewart, PT, p. 23755.
[822] Witness Stewart, PT, p. 23756. Witness Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509, corroborated that evidence.
[823] Same evidence as that of witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1931-1932.
[824] Evidence confirmed, inter alia, by witness Kujawinski, PT pp. 4112-4113.
[825] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997 pp. 2583-2588 and 2645-2650.
[826] Witness Kujawinski, PT pp. 4112-4113.
[827] PT pp. 3639-3640.
[828] PT pp. 9361 and 9405. The witness stated, inter alia, that he had not seen any actual trench systems or any military installations.
[829] PT p. 23864.
[830] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509.
[831] Witness Parrott, PT pp. 5046-5047.
[832] Witness Kujawinski, PT p. 4121.
[833] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997 p. 3115.

thing. In its second periodical report on the human rights situation on the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Commission on Human Rights even found that "by all accounts, including those of the local Croat HVO commander and international observers, this village contained no legitimate military targets and there was no organised resistance to the attack"[834]. The accused himself admitted before the Trial Chamber that the "villagers of Ahmi}i, that is Bosniak Muslims," had been the victims of the attack without there having been any attempt to distinguish between the civilian population and combatants[835].

410. The Trial Chamber is therefore convinced beyond any reasonable doubt that no military objective justified these attacks.

ii) The discriminatory nature of the attack

411. Although the village of Ahmici had no strategic importance which justified the fighting, it was however of particular significance for the Muslim community in Bosnia. Many imams and mullahs came from there. For that reason, Muslims in Bosnia considered Ahmici to be a holy place[836]. In that way, the village of Ahmici symbolised Muslim culture in Bosnia. The witness Watters was certain that Ahmici had been chosen as a target for that reason[837].

412. The eyewitnesses who saw the attack all describe the same method of attack[838]. It began between 05:00 hours and 06:00 hours, that is to say when the inhabitants were asleep or at their prayers. Woken by a detonation caused by artillery fire[839], the inhabitants did not attempt to defend themselves but hid in their houses, most of them seeking refuge in their cellars. Some time after the artillery shots, soldiers organised in groups of between five and ten[840] went into each Muslim house shouting insults against the Muslims, referring to them as

---

[834] E/CN.4/1994/4 (19 May 1993), P184, p. 4, para. 14 (emphasis added).
[835] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18609-18610.
[836] PT p. 23589; witness Watters, PT pp. 3634 and 3453-3454.
[837] Witness Watters, PT pp. 3453-3454.
[838] In that connection, the Trial Chamber would point out that the references given in the context of describing the facts were not at all exhaustive. The evidence cited here better reflected what the Trial Chamber heard during the trial.
[839] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic (Ahmici), PT pp. 3728-3729; Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3980-3982; Djula Djidic (Šantici), PT p. 4329; G, PT p. 3854; Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 pp. 1911-1912 (machine guns and shells).
[840] Witnesses G, PT pp. 3855-3856; Cazim Ahmic, PT of 1 October 1997 pp. 3142-3143; Pjanic, PT pp. 4445-4446.

"balijas"[841]. The groups of soldiers sometimes forced the inhabitants out of their houses, without however allowing them the time to dress. Most of them were still in their night-clothes, some not even having had time to put anything on their feet before fleeing[842]. The soldiers killed the men of fighting age at point blank range and set fire to the Muslims' houses and stables with incendiary bullets, grenades[843] and petrol[844]. Some houses were torched before their inhabitants even had a chance to get out.

iii) Arrests

413. Some inhabitants were transferred to the school in Dubravica[845]. According to the Commission on Human Rights, "approximately 150 Muslims were rounded up and detained for sixteen days in the Braca Ribara school in Dubravica. [...] The vast majority of those detained were women and children"[846].

iv) Murders of civilians

414. Most of the men were shot at point blank range. Several witnesses described how the men of their families had been rounded up and then killed by Croatian soldiers[847]. To cite only a few examples, the witness Abdullah Ahmic described how, after having lost his father and his brother, he was himself severely wounded by a bullet[848]. The witnesses Nura Pezer [841] Witnesses Cazim Ahmic, PT of 1 October 1997 pp. 3136-3137 and 3142-3143; Pjanic, PT pp. 4445-4446; M, PT pp. 4402-4404; Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3948-3949; G, PT pp. 3855-3856.

[842] Witnesses O (Šantici), PT p. 4505; F (Ahmici), PT pp. 3688-3689; Zec (Ahmici), PT pp. 4292-4293; I (Donji Ahmici), PT p. 4040; M, PT pp. 4404-4405; J (Zume), PT, p. 4072.
[843] Witnesses Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3946-3947; Elvir Ahmic, PT pp. 3248-3250; Nura Pezer (Zume), PT pp. 3885-3886; O, PT pp. 4502-4503; Akhavan, PT pp. 5284-5285.
[844] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic (saw soldiers with cans of petrol) PT pp. 3729-3730; Akhavan, PT p. 5283; O, PT pp. 4503-4505; Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3946-3949, (saw petrol poured over curtains and sofas); the witness Nura Pezer (Zume) saw eight soldiers carrying cans of petrol to set light to houses (PT p. 3888); witness G, PT pp. 3858-3859; Djula Djidic (Šantici), PT pp. 4333-4334.
[845] Witness G, PT pp. 3867-3868; Elvir Ahmic, PT p. 3264.
[846] P184: report of the Commission on Human Rights, E/CN.4/1994/4, pp. 6-7, para. 21. That information was confirmed by the witness Abdullah Ahmic (PT pp. 3766-3768 and 3867) who said that a hundred or so Muslims were transferred to the school in Dubravica. See also P117.
[847] Witnesses O (whose husband was killed in front of her and her children) PT pp. 4503-4504; Hrinjic (Šantici), PT pp. 4013-4014; Pjanic (saw his son killed in cold blood after he had been forced to jump from a second floor window), PT pp. 4436-4437; Zec, PT pp. 4283-4284; Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3733; Fatima Ahmic, PT pp. 3987-3988; G, PT pp. 3860-3861. The witness Djula Dzidic, PT p. 4337 described the systematic murder of Muslim men in the village of Šantici.
[848] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3733-3734.

and H stated that they had lost their son and husband during the attack[849]. The witness Zec saw his parents and two of his sisters murdered[850]. The international observers also saw bodies lying in the road[851], many of whom had been killed by a bullet to the head fired at short range[852].

415. Twenty or so civilians were also killed in Donji Ahmici as they tried to flee the village. The fleeing inhabitants had to cross an open field before getting to the main road. About twenty bodies of people killed by very precise shots[853] were found in the field. Military experts concluded that they had been shot by marksmen[854].

416. Other bodies were found in the houses so badly charred they could not be identified and in positions suggesting that they had been burned alive[855]. The victims included many women and children[856]. The British UNPROFOR battalion reported that: "[o]f the 89 bodies which have been recovered from the village, most are those of elderly people, women, children and infants"[857]. An ECMM observer said he had seen the bodies of children who, from their position, seemed to have died in agony in the flames: "some of the houses were absolute scenes of horror, because not only were the people dead, but there were those who were burned and obviously some had been - - according to what the monitors said, they had been burned with flame launchers, which had charred the bodies and this was the case of several of the bodies"[858].

417. According to the ECMM report, at least 103 people were killed during the attack on Ahmici[859].

---

[849] Witnesses Nura Pezer, PT pp. 3887 and 3897-3898; H, PT p. 3912. See also witness M, PT pp. 4401-4403.
[850] Witness Zec, PT pp. 4290-4293.
[851] See, inter alia, witness Watters, PT pp. 3386-3387 and 3442.
[852] Witness Parrott, PT p. 5022.
[853] P184, para. 15, p. 4 and witness Akhavan, PT pp. 5284-5285.
[854] PT p. 23589. See also the corroboration given by witness Akhavan, P184, para. 15 p. 4; witness Watters, PT pp. 3440-3441; Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3825-3826.
[855] Report of the Commission on Human Rights, E/CN.4/1994/4, P184, p. 5, para. 18; witness Bower, PT pp. 9422-9423.
[856] Witness Watters, PT pp. 3386-3387 and 3442.
[857] P184, p. 5, para. 19.
[858] PT p. 23584.
[859] P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova-a and Zenica in April 1993", Appendix 2 to Annex N to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993.

v) Destruction of dwellings

418. According to the Centre for Human Rights in Zenica, 180 of the existing 200 Muslim houses in Ahmici were burned during the attack[860]. The Commission on Human Rights made the same finding in its report dated 19 May 1993[861]. Prosecution exhibit P117 also showed that nearly all the Muslim houses had been torched, whereas all the Croat houses had been spared[862]. The witnesses Bower[863] and Casim Ahmic[864] confirmed the information. The witness Nura Pezer stated, on this point, that the day before the attack, she had seen a Croat from the village, named Ivica Vidovic, who, in the presence of another man, was pointing out the Croat houses and the Muslim houses[865]. The British UNPROFOR battalion reported having seen houses burning in Šantici on 17 April[866]. According to the ECMM observer Morsink, practically all the Muslim houses in the villages of Ahmici, Nadioci, Pirici, Sivrino Selo, Ga~ice, Gomionica, Gromiljak and Rotilj had been burned[867]. He stated that the houses had all been set alight with petrol and oil[868]. Likewise, according to the witness Watters, the Muslim houses had been systematically burned in Nadioci, Ahmici and Šantici[869]. The witness Baggesen, ECMM observer, reported that "it was a whole area that was burning"[870]. The report of the Joint Busova~a Commission, dated 21 April, showed that the ICRC had made enquiries that afternoon in Ahmici and noted that all the Muslims situated in Ahmici-west had left and that 90% of the houses together with the area's mosque, had been destroyed[871]. The report stated moreover that about 200 Muslim women and children were crowded into 3 houses in Novaci, and that half of them wished to be evacuated[872].

---

[860] P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Annex N to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993. Meeting with the Centre for Human Rights in Zenica, p. N-2.
[861] P184, p. 5, para. 20.
[862] Witnesses Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3768; M, PT p. 4410; Elvir Ahmic, PT p. 3255-3256.
[863] This witness, a member of the Prince of Wales Regiment in Bosnia Herzegovina (2nd British Battalion which succeeded the Cheshire Regiment), who remained in the area from April to November 1993, stated that some houses, where Croats lived, remained intact. PT p. 9361.
[864] PT of 1 October 1997 p. 3136.
[865] Witness Nura Pezer, PT pp. 3883-3884.
[866] P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Annex N to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993. Events reported by ECMM and UN, 13-30 April 1993, Annex R to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993, p. R-3.
[867] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9900-9901.
[868] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9901-9902.
[869] Witness Watters, PT pp. 3602-3605.
[870] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 p. 1928.
[871] This information appears also in the report of the ECMM whose team accompanied the ICRC team. P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Annex N to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993. Events reported by ECMM and UN, 13-30 April 1993, Annex R to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993, p. R-7.
[872] P696: report of the Joint Busova~a Commission dated 21 April (witness Morsink), para. D.

vi) Destruction of institutions dedicated to religion

419. Several religious edifices were destroyed. The Defence did not deny the destruction of the mosque at Donji Ahmici or of the matif mesjid [873]at Gornji Ahmici. However, it did maintain that the reason for this destruction was that "the school and church in Ahmici became locations of fighting following the attack by the Fourth Military Police Battalion"[874].

420. Conversely, the Prosecutor contended that "both mosques were deliberately mined and given the careful placement of the explosives inside the buildings, they must have been mined after HVO soldiers had control of the buildings"[875].

421. The Trial Chamber notes at the outset that according to the witness Stewart, it was barely plausible that soldiers would have taken refuge in the mosque since it was impossible to defend[876]. Furthermore, the mosque in Donji Ahmici was destroyed by explosives laid around the base of its minaret[877]. According to the witness Kaiser, this was "an expert job" which could only have been carried out by persons who knew exactly where to place the explosives[878]. The witness Zec stated that he had heard a Croatian soldier speaking on his radio asking for explosives "for the lower mosque in Ahmici"[879]. The destruction of the minaret was therefore premeditated and could not be justified by any military purpose whatsoever. The only reasons to explain such an act were reasons of discrimination.

422. The Trial Chamber notes that that mosque had just been built. The inhabitants of Ahmici had collected the money to build it and were extremely proud of its architecture[880].

423. It is undeniable that the matif mesjid in Gornji Ahmici was destroyed[881]. The ECMM also noted the destruction of the mosque in the eastern quarter of the village[882].

---

[873] Mosque with no minaret. P47
[874] Defence Brief, book X, p. 490.
[875] Prosecutor's Brief, book V, p. 45.
[876] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23864.
[877] Witness Thomas, PT pp. 2645-2650; PT p. 23660.
[878] Witness Kaiser, PT p. 10663. See also witness Thomas, PT p. 2650.
[879] Witness Zec, PT p. 4286-4287.
[880] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 p. 1931; Abdullah Ahmic, PT pp. 3769-3770.
[881] See in particular P47/49, P47/77, P47/78, P47/80, and P47/81.
[882] P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Events reported by ECMM and UN, 13-30 April 1993, Annex R to ECMM H/S 720, p. R-7.

vii) Plunder

424. The soldiers also set fire to the stables and slaughtered the livestock[883] as the accused noted himself when he visited the site on 27 April[884]. Several Croatian soldiers were also alleged to have stolen money from private individuals. One member of the D`okeri was alleged to have seized DM 2000 and jewels belonging to Elvir Ahmic[885]. Two HVO soldiers were alleged to have taken money from Haris Hrnjic's wallet after he had surrendered[886]. It was also alleged that DM 400 were taken from the body of Alija Ahmic[887]. The witness Casim Ahmic[888] also accused a group of five Croatian soldiers of stealing DM 300-400. The victims of these thefts were always Muslim. Finally, the witness Akhavan reported seeing HVO soldiers looting the houses that were still intact in Ahmici when he visited the village on 1 May 1993[889].

c) Conclusion

425. The methods of attack and the scale of the crimes committed against the Muslim population or the edifices symbolising their culture sufficed to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the attack was aimed at the Muslim civilian population. An ECMM observer noted that, further to his visit to Ahmici on 22 April 1993, "apart from the systematic destruction and the religious edifices that had been dynamited, what was most striking was the fact that certain houses remained intact, inhabited even, and one wondered how those islands had been able to survive such a show of violence"[890]. Several international observers who went to the village a few days after the attack on Ahmici reported finding "a phenomenon of a ferocity and a brutality almost impossible to describe"[891]. The accused went to Ahmici on the morning of 27 April and noted the scale of the damage: houses burnt, livestock slaughtered and an entirely deserted village[892]. He conceded, both to the Commission on Human Rights [883] Witness Zec, PT pp. 4288-4289; M, PT pp. 4405-4407; Pjanic, PT pp. 4435-4436; Elvir Ahmic, PT p. 3253.

[884] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19036-19037.
[885] Witness Elvir Ahmic, PT p. 3263.
[886] Witness Haris Hrnjic, PT p. 4010-4011.
[887] Witness Abdullah Ahmic, PT p. 3759.
[888] PT p. 3142.
[889] Witness Akhavan, PT pp. 5286-5287.
[890] PT p. 23584.
[891] Witness Thomas, PT pp. 2672 and 2674.
[892] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19036-19037.

representatives on 5 May 1993[893] and in his testimony[894] before the Trial Chamber that crimes had been committed in Ahmici.

426. Witness Baggesen said of the attack on Ahmi}i: "We think that this operation, military operation against the civilian population was to scare them and to show what would happen to other villages and the Muslim inhabitants in other villages if they did not move out. So I think this was an example to show"[895], especially given what Ahmici symbolised for the Muslim community.

427. The Commission on Human Rights noted that all the Muslims had fled from Ahmici. Only a few Croats had remained[896]. According to the witness Kajmovic, the Ahmici Muslim population had completely disappeared in 1995[897]. According to the Centre for Human Rights in Zenica, the four Muslim families living in Nadioci had been exterminated[898]. As an overview, the Muslim population in the canton of Vitez dropped from 41.3% in 1991[899] to 33.83% in 1995[900], a reduction that also saw very great movements of population within the area. According to witness Kajmovic, only 80 Muslims, that is to say 0.49%, were still living in the territory of the Vitez municipality in 1995[901].

428. All that evidence enables the Trial Chamber to conclude without any doubt that the villages of Ahmici, Pirici, Šantici and Nadioci had been the object of a planned attack on the Muslim population on 16 April 1993.

d) General Blaškic's responsibility

429. The accused himself did not commit any of the crimes set out above. He could therefore be liable only for ordering, planning, inciting or otherwise aiding and abetting the

---

[893] P 184; witness Marin, PT p. 13631.
[894] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19025-19026: "I toured a part of the village. I saw burned houses in the village, and there was still some embers. They may have been burned during the night or set fire to. I saw the minaret and mosque and other signs of destruction".
[895] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 august 1997 p. 1935.
[896] P184, p. 7, para. 20.
[897] Witness Kajmovic, PT p. 5680. See also P199.
[898] Charles Macleod, P242, "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Annex N to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993, Meeting with the Centre for Human Rights in Zenica, p. N-1. According to the 1991 census, Nadioci had 42 Muslim inhabitants.
[899] P46.
[900] P207.
[901] P199.

crime, in accordance with Article 7(1) of the Statute. By default, he could, however, be convicted on the basis of Article 7(3) if it was established that he was the superior of the perpetrators of the crimes and that he did not take the necessary measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

430. The Prosecutor claimed that the accused gave the order to attack the villages of central Bosnia on 16 April 1993 to the Vite{ka brigade, to the Nikola Šubic Zrinski unit, to the Military Police Fourth Battalion, including the D`okeri special unit, to the Vitezovi and to the Domobrani of the villages in question. Irrespective of their nature - written, oral, express or implied - those orders instructed all the units to destroy and burn the Muslims' houses, to kill the Muslim civilians and to destroy their religious institutions.[902].

431. As indicated earlier, the accused himself considered that, in view of its scale and very short duration, the Ahmici massacre must have been organised[903]. He further considered that the order to commit that crime could not have come from the Commander of the Military Police Fourth Battalion. The Commander did not have sufficient standing, in his view, to take the initiative for an operation of such magnitude alone. Consequently, the accused admitted that the order came from a higher authority in the hierarchy[904].

432. The accused did however deny that he gave an order capable of justifying such acts. In support of that claim, the Defence submitted three orders given by the accused the day before the attack[905] which it put forward as being "defence" orders following a report from the HVO Busova~a intelligence services, dated 14 April 1993, notifying him of a probable attack by the ABiH on Vitez from Zenica, through Vrohdine and Ahmici[906].

---

[902] Prosecutor's Brief, book VII, pp. 26-27.
[903] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19029 and 22020.
[904] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19155-19156. The Defence suggests that the order could have been given by Ivica Rajic (Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19156-19157).
[905] D267, D268, D269.
[906] Defence Brief, book I, pp. 13 and 272. P242 "Report on inter-ethnic violence in Vitez, Busova~a and Zenica in April 1993", Annex G to ECMM H/S 720, 15 May 1993.

i) The orders issued by the accused

433. The first order submitted is dated 15 April and was allegedly transmitted to the units concerned at 10:00 hours[907]. It was addressed to the Military Police, the Vitezovi and to the HVO operative zone brigades[908]. The "preparatory combat command"[909] asked the brigades to keep themselves in readiness to carry out a decisive defence operation and instructed the Military Police to ensure that the Muslim forces did not block the main road linking Travnik to Busova~a[910]. The accused also ordered the Vitezovi to keep themselves in readiness for any intervention and the HVO brigades to defend their area. The reasons relied upon in this order were: combat operations to prevent terrorism aimed at the HVO and ethnic cleansing of the region's Croats by extremist Muslim forces.

434. The second order is dated 15 April at 15:45 hours[911]. According to the witness Marin[912], that "order for action" was given in response to information from the HVO intelligence services pointing to a general mobilisation in Zenica of Muslim forces assumed to be arriving via Mount Kuber[913]. The accused further referred to the abduction of Commander Totic by the ABiH at Zenica on 15 April, which allegedly caused a great frenzy in the population and was described by the accused as "pure terrorism" designed to eliminate the Commanders of the HVO brigades[914]. The enemy designated in that order was the seventh Muslim brigade which the order accused of being responsible for a new wave of terrorist activities. That order was addressed to the Vite{ka brigade of the HVO and to the Military Police Fourth Battalion. They were asked to ensure that "combat readiness [...] be increased to the highest level" and that they were ready "to take defensive action". Paragraph 2.4 states that those units must show perfect co-ordination and promote team work while ensuring that the members of the command of all the units are completely interchangeable over a 24 hour period. The order further called on those units to ensure total control of the consumption of all products, particularly fuel and to take measures to rationalise consumption. The accused also required there to be organised a system of uninterrupted command at all levels and regular reports to be submitted to him at 18:00 hours and 06:00

[907] D267.
[908] Witness Marin, PT pp. 12275-12276.
[909] Witness Marin, PT p. 12266.
[910] Witness Marin, PT pp. 12273-12274.
[911] D268
[912] The witness Bla{ki} testified that he had dictated the order to the witness (witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18481-18482) hours each day, together with special reports where events so warranted. Even though the order was not an order to carry out combat operations, the accused admitted that action could be taken by virtue of that order in particular to combat terrorist activities[915].
[913] Witness Marin, PT p. 12282.

435. A third order, which again referred to "planned terrorist activities" on the part of the enemy and to the risk of its engaging in an open offensive designed to destroy everything Croatian, was given on 16 April at 01:30 hours and addressed to the Vite{ka brigade and to the Tvrtko independent units[916]. That "combat command order to prevent attack activity by the enemy" ordered Commander Cerkez and the Tvrtko independent units "to occupy the defence region, blockade villages and prevent all entrances to and exits from the villages". The order stated that "in the event of open attack activity by the Muslims", those units should "neutralize them and prevent their movement with precise fire" in counterattack. That order indicated that the forces of the Military Police Fourth Battalion, the N. Š. Zrinski unit and the civilian police would also take part in the combat[917]. The order required the forces to be ready to open fire at 05:30 hours and, by way of combat formation, provided for blockade (observation and ambush), search and attack forces[918]. General Blaškic stated in that order that "the commander of the Vitez HVO brigade, Mario Cerkez is personally responsible to me for the performance of this mission". The order closed by saying that the "instruction given previously [should be] complied with", although the Trial Chamber was not able to establish what that instruction was.

436. A cease-fire was agreed between the representatives of the ABiH and the HVO on about 12:30 hours on 16 April under the aegis of UNPROFOR[919], following which General Blaškic ordered the N.Š.Zrinski brigades to stop fighting immediately[920].

---

[914] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18478-18479.
[915] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18481-18482.
[916] D269.
[917] D269, para. 3: "in front of you are the forces of the IV Police VP, [...] to the right of you are the forces of the Unit N. [. Zrinski, and to the left of you are the forces of the civilian police".
[918] D269, para. 2: "Time of readiness at 0530 hours on 16 April 1993
Combat formation
Blockade forces (observation, ambush)
Search forces
Forces for offensive activity".
There is no reference number for the order on this exhibit.
[919] D278: Report sent by Bla{ki} to the Croatian Defence Council (the HVO) in Mostar on 16 April at 15:30 hours covering this agreement. A joint declaration was moreover signed on 20 April by the representatives of the Croats and of the Muslims in the municipality of Vitez (P86).
[920] D279; Witness Marin PT pp. 12322-12323.

ii) The accused ordered the attack of 16 April 1993

437. The Trial Chamber finds that the third order[921], dated 16 April at 01:30 hours is very clearly an order to attack. That order, which was addressed in particular to the Vite{ka brigade, also expressly mentions other units, such as the Military Police Fourth Battalion, the forces of the N. Š. Zrinski unit and the forces of the civilian police which were recognised on the ground as being those which had carried out the attack. The time to commence hostilities which is set out in that order corresponds very precisely to the start of fighting on the ground. Admittedly, the order is presented as "a combat command order to prevent attack activity by the enemy". Accordingly, the attack purportedly formed part of a defensive rather than offensive strategy. However the Trial Chamber has already concluded that no military objective justified that attack. It is therefore unnecessary here to go back over the reasons given for the issue of that order, which, in any event, remains an order to attack. The Trial Chamber considers that that evidence sufficed to show that all those troops, acting in concert, attacked on the accused's order.

438. Apart from the fact that nothing has been adduced to substantiate the claim that an imminent attack justifying General Blaškic's attack order, the question is whether the troops acted beyond the accused's orders.

iii) The accused ordered an attack aimed at the Muslim population

439. The Defence submitted that all the crimes committed in the Ahmici area were carried out by the Military Police, in particular its special unit, the D`okeri. According to the Defence, the accused did not control those troops, who, at the time when the crimes were committed, came directly under the Ministry of Defence of the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna in Mostar.

440. The Trial Chamber pointed out in this regard that the evidence established on the contrary that the crimes committed were not the work of the Military Police alone but were also ascribable to the regular HVO units, in particular, the Vite{ka Brigade and the Domobrani.

[921] D269.

441. The trial showed that, in addition to the regular units placed under the direct authority of the accused, a number of independent units were acting in the territory of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone, units for which the accused denied responsibility. It is therefore necessary to appraise the control exercised by the accused over those different units.

a. The accused's control over the Vite{ka brigade and the Home Guard (Domobrani)

442. There is no doubt whatsoever that the Vite{ka Brigade was directly answerable to the accused[922]. The order of 16 April, which triggered the attack, again stated this[923].

443. The Domobrani also were under the direct orders of the accused[924]. On 6 April at 10:00 hours, he called a meeting of all the Domobrani commands of the villages of Travnik, Vitez, Novi Travnik, Kreševo, Fojnica, Kakanj, Vareš, Žep~e, Zavidovi}i, Maglaj and Usora so that they could work out the arms and materiel which each had at its disposal. The accused stated again, in the order calling the meeting, that "the commands of the Domobrani units are responsible to me for the conduct of the command"[925].

444. The Defence however depicted the Croatian troops in Bosnia as bands of "armed villagers", very much influenced by local alliances. The lack of qualified officers, of training and of equipment for the troops as well as a inadequate communication system would explain that such crimes could have been committed. Thus without challenging the accused's de jure authority, the Defence submitted that he had no de facto authority over his troops[926].

---

[922] See in particular D241.

[923] The accused said again in order D269 that "Personally responsible to me for the execution of the given assignment is the commander of the HVO Brigade Vitez, Mario Cerkez".

[924] See in particular:
P769: document issued by the Croatian Defence Council in Mostar (signed by General Milivoj Petkovic) dated 8 February 1993 setting up the national guard. Paragraph 1.7 of that document states: "after being formed, the units shall be under the command of the appropriate operations zone commander". According to that document, the Domobrani were formed in order to support the regular army forces.
P770 (p. 3): this document, issued by the accused and dated March 1993, stated that the Domobrani were directly responsible to the operational zone commander.
P773, order of Zvonko Vukovic dated 13 March 1993, para. 2: "Command and leadership of the home guard shall be exercised by the provisional commands of the home guard units of the municipalities. These units and commands shall be under the command of the commander of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone".

[925] P777.

[926] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 538.

445. The accused explained that the Vite{ka brigade was in the process of being created[927]. The brigade had been set up by an order of 12 March 1993 appointing Mario Cerkez as commander[928] and was not yet very well organised as of 16 April.

446. Yet the accused congratulated himself on several occasions on how perfectly well organised and controlled his troops were[929]. The witness Mujezinovic also stated that in Vitez, the HVO had very well organised and very well armed troops[930]. According to several international observers, the HVO had very precise organisation charts defining everyone's tasks and areas of responsibility. The hierarchy seemed very clear, with each unit having a number, an area of activity and a grade[931]. The witness Bower stated that the military personnel were generally well trained since they had been trained in the JNA, which provided for two years of military service[932].

447. The Defence further maintained that the accused had insufficient means of communication. Being blocked in the basement of Hotel Vitez, he claimed he had only two telephones and a packet-transmission system, which did not enable him to maintain constant contact with all the troops deployed on the ground.

448. According to the witness Duncan, on the contrary, the accused had a fax machine available to him together with access to a local telecommunication network[933]. He also had access to an intelligence network and a Motorola satellite communication system[934]. An ECMM observer accordingly found that the communications facilities available to the Bosnian Croat army were generally relatively good[935]. According to the witness Morsink, the HVO controlled all the communication centres covering the municipality of Vitez and decided who could have access to the network[936]. According to that witness, the HVO

---

[927] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 18646.
[928] D241. Witness Blaškic, PT p. 22044.
[929] See in particular P647, dated 21 October 1992: "the activities of our forces are organised, fully co-ordinated and controlled by the command"; P456/32, dated 7 May 1993: "command and control function properly and all missions precede in a planned fashion according to orders, with detailed knowledge of the situation, full co-ordination and control".
[930] Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997 p. 1742.
[931] PT p. 23689.
[932] Witness Bower, PT p. 9782.
[933] Witness Duncan PT pp. 9062-9063.
[934] Witness Duncan PT p. 9062-9063.
[935] PT p. 23712.
[936] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9908-9909. According to the witness Baggesen (PT of 21 August 1997, pp. 1878-1879), the postal services were under ABiH control in Zenica and HVO control in Travnik, Vitez and Kiseljak.

officers carried mobile radios[937] of the sort carried by Croatian soldiers during the attack on 16 April. Witness Baggesen, for his part, mentioned that radio equipment was present at the Hotel Vitez [938].

b. The control exercised by the accused over the special units

449. According to the Defence, a number of "special" units acted outside the accused's de jure and de facto control. The accused claimed that those special units had been set up on the initiative of the Defence Department of the HZHB and answered directly to that ministry. Although they could be deployed throughout the territory of the community of Herceg-Bosna, in particular in the Central Bosnia Operative Zone, these units remained under the sole command of the civilian authority of the Ministry of Defence of the HZHB. Thus, according to the accused, '[n]one of these units were ever part of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone structure and its organisation [...] They were never under the command of the main headquarters of the Croatian Defence Council"[939].

450. This in fact tallies with what the accused said to General Hadžihasanovic, according to whom the special units of the HVO and the Military Police were under the command of someone higher up in the chain of command[940].

451. The Trial Chamber first notes that it is inconsistent with military principles for the commander of an operational area not to have authority over all the troops acting within the confines of his area of responsibility. Witness Baggesen explained, for example, that "there was no doubt that those troops were commanded by General Blaškic. This is because, normally in the army, when a person is in command of a specific area of responsibility, he commands ipso facto all the military units located in that area"[941]. The accused himself admitted that that organisation was contrary to the principle of unity of command, albeit that principle was applied in the JNA[942].

---

[937] Witness Morsink, PT p. 9908-9909.
[938] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, p. 1895.
[939] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18105-18106.
[940] Witness Had`ihasanovi}, PT p. 23236.
[941] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1901-1902.
[942] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18070: "in the JNA, you had unity of command and unity of responsibility, which meant that in one single area there is a single commander and that he commands all forces. For instance, a commander of a brigade in the JNA had direct command over the military police company". See also PT p. 18074.

452. The Trial Chamber further finds that the accused gave orders with regard to the special units. Thus, on 26 September 1992, the accused gave an order providing for training for the special units[943]. Accordingly, an order of 16 January 1993 was addressed to several special units, including the Vitezovi, and to the Military Police[944]. Order 01-1-217/93 dated 18 January 1993 was addressed to all commands of all the brigades of the HVO and to the independent units of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone[945]. A number of orders of March 1993 were addressed to the HVO brigades and to the special units, in particular the Vitezovi, and the Military Police Fourth Battalion[946]. General Blaškic stated as follows in one of his orders: "brigade and independent unit commanders shall be responsible to me for carrying out the order"[947]. Other orders, dating from June 1993, which were addressed by the accused to the independent units, were submitted to the Trial Chamber[948]. The three orders submitted by the Defence as described above constitute further examples.

c. The accused's control over the Military Police

453. The military policy, which was established on 10 April 1993, was organised in battalions. The Fourth Battalion was in the Central Bosnia Operative Zone.

454. According to an operations report of the military policy for January to June 1993[949], the administration and organisation of the battalions of the military policy were reorganised in January 1993[950]. It was decided in particular to form light assault companies. One of those was the D`okeri unit, which operated in the Central Bosnia Operative Zone[951]. The report

---

[943] P456/2 and witness Marin, PT pp. 12901-12903.
[944] P456/6 of 16 January 1993, 11:40 hours. General Bla{ki} explained that those units had been temporarily assigned to him for those combats on the basis of an order from General Petkovi} dated 15 January 1993 (Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18156-18157) [945] D208; witnesses Bla{ki}, PT p. 18125 and Marin PT, p. 12090.
[946] D42, D211, P456/16; witnesses Bla{ki}, PT p. 18358; Marin PT p. 12110: order of 17 March 1993 sent to commanders of the HVO brigades, to independent units, to the Vitezovi, to the Military Police in Vitez and to the HVO civilian representatives (for information).
D358: order of 18 March so as to ensure that ECMM had freedom of movement. That order was addressed to ECMM representatives in Zenica for information, to commanders of the HVO brigades, to commanders of independent units, to the commander of the Military Police Fourth Battalion and to the person in charge of the police department in Travnik (witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18366) [947] D42, D211, P456/16 (emphasis added).
[948] P422, point 4: request to HVO brigades and to independent units, including the Military Police, the Vitezovi and the @utis, to report any developments in the situation on the ground and on the efforts taken to achieve a cease-fire agreement (witness Morsink, PT, p. 9883).
P423 and P443: orders given by Bla{ki} to all the commanders of HVO brigades, to the Military Police Fourth Battalion and to the special unit of the Vitezovi (witness Morsink, PT, p. 9884).
[949] P457.
[950] P457, p. 17.
[951] P457, pp. 17-18.

states that those units "participate[d] in the most difficult war operations achieving great success, mostly with great sacrifice"[952].

455. For all that, although they acted in the CBOZ, the Fourth Battalion and its D`okeri special unit were allegedly not placed under the sole authority of General Blaškic. That formation was placed under a dual chain of command as from 13 December 1992[953], whereby the accused gave the orders for certain tasks and the administration in Mostar for others. The Defence based this claim in particular on the rules on the formation and the activity of the administration of the Military Police[954]. According to Articles 9 and 10 of that document, the accused was entitled to give orders relating to routine operational tasks of the Military Police, but was not entitled to give them combat orders, this being only within the competence of the defence department[955]. The accused further explained that the Military Police were placed under the authority of Pa{ko Ljubi~ic, who himself was answerable to the accused, but only for routine tasks, not including combat operations[956].

456. Apart from absence of authority under the regulations, the Defence has argued that the Commander of the Fourth Battalion, Pa{ko Ljubi~ic, had considerable power in the region and did not obey the accused's orders[957]. Accordingly, it is alleged that the accused had no de jure or de facto authority over the Military Police Fourth Battalion and the D`okeri.

457. The accused further explained that he could not in any event take disciplinary measures against its members[958].

458. In reliance principally on the testimony of witness Marinko Palavra, the Commander of the Fourth Battalion as from 1 August 1993, the Prosecutor argued on the contrary that the distinction referred to in these rules had become obsolete at the material time and that the

---

[952] P457, p. 18.
[953] Date of a meeting in Vitez between General Petkovi}, Colonel Bla{ki} and the representatives of the Mostar administration, in the presence of the commander of the Military Police Fourth Battalion, Pa{ko Ljubi~i}.
[954] D523.
[955] Article 9: "in carrying out daily operative military police tasks, Military Police units shall be subordinated to the commander of the Military District or the commander of the HVO in the highest position in the sphere of activity of a Military Police unit".
Article 10: "Military Police shall carry out tasks and duties relating to: [...] participation in carrying out combat assignments along the front line on the orders of the Minster of Defence of the Croatian Republic of Herceg-Bosna".
Witness Bla{ki}, PT, pp. 19231-19232. See also PT pp. 24016-24018.
For the Defence arguments, see the Defence Brief p. 40.
[956] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19231-19232.
[957] Defence Brief, book V, p. 201.

accused had de facto all the powers of command over the Fourth Battalion and the D`okeri special unit[959].

459. The accused acknowledged that those troops could be "attached" to him[960] for ad hoc missions pursuant to specific requests[961]. He explained in this connection that certain rules provided that a commander of high rank in the military hierarchy could reinforce the units under him with supplementary units put at his disposal for ad hoc operations. According to the accused, the high command therefore defined how "a superior command [could] reinforce certain subordinate units with additional units, and during the period in which these combat operations [were] carried out, [how] such reinforcements [we]re subordinated to the commander of the overall operation"[962].

460. The accused acknowledged that the Military Police had been "attached" to him in that way as from 15:00 hours on 15 April on the order of the Chief of the General Staff[963]. General Petkovic thereby gave an order that "all forces of the Military Police" and the special units should be attached to him in the event of an "all-out attack"[964]. Consequently, those units were subordinated to him only for the duration of the combat mission. According to the accused, the attachment took effect as soon as the commander of the attached unit placed himself under the orders of the commander of the unit to which his unit was detached[965], that is to say, as regards the events in question and the Military Police, as from 11:42 hours on 16 April 1993[966]. The accused therefore claimed that the Military Police committed the crimes before they were attached to him.

461. The Trial Chamber observes in this regard that the accused admitted in another connection that he had a meeting in the afternoon of 15 April with the commanders of the Military Police Fourth Police, the Vitezovi and the Tvrtko special unit. He allegedly informed them during that meeting that General Petkovic had given orders that they should be attached

---

[958] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 19138.
[959] Prosecutor's Brief, book II, p. 54.
[960] The question of whether these troops were "attached", "assigned" or "subordinate" was debated at length before the Trial Chamber.
[961] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 19138.
[962] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18110.
[963] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18625 and 21930.
[964] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18624-18625.
[965] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18626.
[966] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18626.

to him[967]. He allegedly also read them the two orders D267 and D268, which, according to the accused, had not yet sent to the units concerned[968].

462. The Trial Chamber further notes that Vladimir [antic, the commander of the first battalion of the Military Police in active service[969], had an office in the Vitez Hotel, as the accused himself mentioned[970].

463. A number of witnesses moreover stated, that the accused had de facto authority over the Military Police Fourth Battalion. According to witness H.H., Pa{ko Ljubicic received orders from the accused and never refused to carry them out[971]. According to witness Baggesen, "the only one who had command over the Military Police was Mr. Blaškic"[972]. That witness testified to the attempt by the Commander of the Travnik Military Police to abduct Dzemo Merdan as a protest against the slowness of the inquiry carried out into the abduction of four officers of the Stjepan Tomaševic brigade. When requests made by UNPROFOR and the ECMM remained unsatisfied, the commander in question abandoned this forthwith after receiving an order by telephone from the accused.

464. As far as his power to impose sanctions was concerned, the accused explained that he did not have the power directly to punish individuals guilty of abuses. On the contrary, he had to contact the soldier's commander in the event of an abuse. It was then for the commander of the unit concerned to take the necessary measures. According to his own statements, the accused had in parallel to contact the Chief-of-Staff, who was then to contact the person responsible in the Defence Department[973]. That obligation on the accused to report any abuse committed to the competent authorities sufficed, as has been stated above[974], to establish command responsibility.

465. That evidence confirmed that General Blaškic had command authority over the Military Police Fourth Battalion and its special D`okeri unit during the period in question.

---

[967] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21930-21932. The detachment order was issued at 15:00 hours and the meeting was held at 17:00 hours.
[968] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21948-21949.
[969] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22052.
[970] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21937-21938.
[971] Witness HH, PT pp. 6917-6918.
[972] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, p. 1907.
[973] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19505-19506.
[974] See above, discussion of Article 7 (3) of the Statute.

466. The Trial Chamber therefore cannot accept the argument that the accused did not have control over the troops acting on the ground.

iv) The massive and systematic nature of the crimes as proof that they were committed on orders

467. Lastly, the idea that these crimes could have been committed by uncontrolled elements is impossible to reconcile with the scale and uniformity of the crimes committed on 16 April in the municipality of Vitez. The Trial Chamber adopts the opinion expressed by witness Morsink, a professional soldier acting as an observer for the ECMM at the material time:

> I believe that one or two minor cases may have been committed by small, uncontrolled groups, but the large-scale and systematic manner in which these events took place, entire villages being burned, and other villages, we saw that it was the Muslim houses that were systematically selected, and we saw that the same type of events were taking place at the same time period in different locations, and it would be impossible, in my opinion, for this to have been carried out by uncontrolled groups[975].

The planned nature and, in particular, the fact that all these units acted in a perfectly co-ordinated manner presupposes in fact that those troops were responding to a single command, which accordingly could only be superior to the commander of each of those units.

468. In this connection, it is worth recalling that that was the opinion expressed by the accused himself[976].

v) The content of the orders

469. The Trial Chamber observes that the reasons adduced in order to justify the order of 16 April (D269) are based on propaganda designed to incite racial hatred. Order D267, for instance, alleges that extremist Muslim forces intended to carry out "ethnic cleansing" on the Croats in the region. Order D269 refers to the intention of the Muslim forces to destroy everything Croatian. Several international observers have stated that those words gave a very exaggerated picture as compared with the real situation[977]. According to an ECMM observer: "the fighting began without doubt on the initiative of the HVO, claiming that it was only answering a systematic anti-Croat attitude. It was obviously an attempt to seize and secure 'Croatian provinces'"[978].

[975] Witness Morsink, PT, p. 9878.
[976] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 19029, pp. 19155-19156 and p. 22020.

470. The Trial Chamber further notes that those orders recommend the modes of combat that were actually used on the ground on 16 April. In this way, order D268 stresses co-ordination among the different units. It also asks the forces to take care to ensure that they have total control over fuel consumption, which was one of the main weapons used by the Croatian forces during the attack on 16 April. It is hard to image how the systematic use of petrol as a combat weapon could have been possible in that period of fuel shortage without the approval of the military and/or civilian authorities[979]. Order D269 refers to blocking (observation and ambush), search and offensive forces. The main (mountain and valley) roads between Vitez and Zenica were in fact blocked by HVO blocking forces on the morning of 16 April[980], in particular by the Vite{ka brigade[981]. According to witness Landry, the area was subjected to a so-called "cleansing" operation, which was carried out by establishing a cordon outside the village by means of check points on the roads leading to the villages, whilst lighter, more mobile troops, notably search troops, carried out the "cleansing" of the village[982].

471. The attack started with artillery fire and the Trial Chamber recalls that, according to the accused's own statements, the use of the artillery was placed under his direct command[983].

472. The testimony of the victims of the massacres tended to show that the civilians were killed in response to orders. Accordingly, witness Fatima Ahmic testified that she heard an HVO soldier in a van say by walkie-talkie: "Yes, the operation was successful, they are lying

---

[977] See especially P414: special report of the ECMM dated 8 June 1993 regarding Travnik; P415: special report of the ECMM dated 19 June 1993, specifically regarding the events at Gu~a Gora; witness Morsink, PT, pp. 9840-9842.
[978] PT p. 23575 and P741 (ECMM report dated 1/5/93), p. 8.
[979] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22031.
[980] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7508-7509.
[981] Their use was confirmed by order D284 delivered in the night of 16 to 17 April by the accused to the Vite{ka Brigade; witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18644-18646.
[982] Witness Landry, PT p. 7515.
[983] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18521-18522.

in front of houses like pigs"[984]. When she asked them why they had killed her son, the soldiers said that "it was the force majeure who ordered it...the orders came from above"[985]. Witness Abdullah Ahmic testified that he saw a soldier say to another soldier who refused to kill a man: "do as you are ordered"[986]. Witness Cazim Ahmic testified to what an officer, Ibrica Kupre{kic, said to him: "go and run for your life. No Muslim may stay here. If they learn that I let you go, I will be executed"[987]. According to witness F, the D`okeri and the Vitezovi said that they had been given orders to kill all the Muslims so that Muslims would never ever live there again[988]. Witness A said that he heard a person named Cicko speak in these terms with regard to the events of 16 April: "everyone is washing their hands now as regards Ahmici, but we all know that Blaškic has ordered that no prisoners of war were of interest to him, only dead bodies"[989].

473. The Trial Chamber further finds that, in seeking to locate the centre of operations when the attack began on 16 April, the Cheshire Regiment found that it was near a sports stadium close to the Vitez Hotel[990].

vi) The risk taken by the accused

474. Even if doubt were still cast in spite of everything on whether the accused ordered the attack with the clear intention that the massacre would be committed, he would still be liable under Article 7(1) of the Statute for ordering the crimes. As has been explained above[991], any person who, in ordering an act, knows that there is a risk of crimes being committed and accepts that risk, shows the degree of intention necessary (recklessness) so as to incur responsibility for having ordered, planned or incited the commitment of the crimes. In this case, the accused knew that the troops which he had used to carry out the order of attack of 16 April had previously been guilty of many crimes against the Muslim population of Bosnia. The order given by the accused on 4 November 1992 expressly prohibiting the troops from burning the houses[992] proves this. Moreover, the accused admitted before the Trial Chamber

[984] Witness Fatima Ahmi} PT pp. 3959-3960.
[985] Witness Fatima Ahmi} PT p. 3955.
[986] Witness Abdullah Ahmi} PT p. 3836.
[987] Witness Cazim Ahmi} PT of 1 October 1997 p. 3144.
[988] Witness F.
[989] Witness A, PT p. 5444.
[990] Witness Parrott, PT pp. 5014-5015.
[991] See above, discussion on Article 7 of the Statute.
[992] Order of 4 November 1992, D347.

that he had been informed about the crimes committed by troops acting in the area for which he was responsible. In particular, the disciplinary reports were forwarded to him[993]. Likewise, the accused stated that he asked the Commander of the main general staff and the head of the Defence Department in January 1993 that the independent units be withdrawn from the Central Bosnia Operative Zone on account of the troubles they were causing[994]. Furthermore, the accused was aware that there were criminals acting in the ranks of the Military Police[995]. Witness Marin, who was a subordinate of the accused at the time, himself acknowledged that there were criminals in the ranks of the Military Police[996]. Admittedly, the accused did give an order on 18 January 1993 for the attention of the regular units of the HVO, the independent units and the Military Police Fourth Battalion instructing them to make sure that all soldiers prone to criminal conduct were not in a position to do any harm[997]. However, that order remained without effect, even though the accused issued a reminder on 6 February 1993[998]. On the contrary, according to the witness Marin the situation deteriorated thereafter[999]. The Defence also presented an order issued by the accused on 17 March 1993 requiring the commanders of all HVO brigades to identify their members who were prone to criminal conduct[1000]. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber finds that the accused did not ensure himself, before calling on their services on 16 April, that measures had indeed been taken so as to be sure that those criminal elements were not in a position to do any harm. On the contrary, according to the accused it was not until he received the letter from Colonel Stewart on 22 April 1993 that he realised that he could not rely on the reports sent to him by the Military Police commander Ljubicic[1001]. It was not until 30 April that the accused asked the commander of the main staff to replace Paško Ljubicic and to change the structure of that unit[1002].

475. The Trial Chamber has further established that the Vitezovi and the Military Police Fourth Battalion took part in the fighting at Busova~a in January 1993[1003] on the accused's orders.

---

[993] See D204; witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18122-18123.
[994] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18126-18127.
[995] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18395-18396.
[996] Witness Marin, PT pp. 12080-12081.
[997] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18125-18126; witness Marin, PT pp. 12089-12090.
[998] D208.
[999] Witness Marin, PT p. 12091.
[1000] D42, D211 and P456/16: order of 17 March 1993; witness Marin, PT pp. 12103-12105.
[1001] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19144-19145.
[1002] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19144-19145.

476. The Trial Chamber further notes that the accused used the Military Police for subsequent operations. In particular, the attack launched against Grbavica on 7 and 8 September 1993 was carried out by the Military Police Seventh Battalion, which took over from the Military Police Fourth Battalion. Consequently, the members of that unit were the same as those who had committed the crimes at Ahmici, as the defence witness Marin acknowledged[1004]. Admittedly, the accused stated that he had removed the criminal elements once he had obtained overall control of that battalion on 23 July 1993. The accused testified that he sent off a report on 30 April concerning breaches of his orders by the Military Police and asked that disciplinary proceedings be taken against them. He further asked the Supreme Commander of the headquarters general staff to discharge the Commander of the Military Police, Paško Ljubicic, from his duties. He further claimed that he repeated this request on 29 May and 10 June[1005]. The accused claimed that during the months of June and July, he urged the main staff to make the Military Police subordinate to the Central Bosnia Operative Zone. This request was only granted on 23 July. Paško Ljubicic was then discharged from his duties and replaced by Marinko Palavra. According to the accused, it was not until this time that elements of the Military Police with criminal records were dismissed[1006].

vii) The accused knew that crimes had been committed

477. As the Trial Chamber has shown above, since he had reason to know that crimes had been, or were, about to be, committed, as the hierarchical superior of the forces in question, the accused was bound to take reasonable measures to forestall or prevent them. Having regard to the criteria laid down by the Trial Chamber[1007] and the facts as established by it, the Trial Chamber considers that the accused knew that crimes had been or were about to be committed and took no action as a consequence. The Trial Chamber construes the reluctance that he showed in letting the truth about the crimes committed be known as additional evidence of his guilt under Article 7(1) of the Statute.

478. The Trial Chamber is unable to believe the accused's assertions that he was unaware until 22 April 1993 that crimes had been committed. In fact, the accused maintained that he

---

[1003] See discussion above.
[1004] Witness Marin, PT pp. 13705-13706.
[1005] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19140-19144.
[1006] Defence Brief, book V, pp. 336-337.
[1007] See above, discussion of Article 7 of the Statute.

had had no knowledge of the extent of the crimes committed until he received a letter from Colonel Stewart dated 22 April[1008], to which he replied forthwith proposing that a committee of inquiry be set up[1009]. Apart from the fact that it is difficult to believe that the accused had no foreknowledge of an attack planned in an area coming within his area of responsibility only a few kilometres from his headquarters, several pieces of evidence disproved the accused's assertions. The accused maintained that he was blocked in the basement of the Vitez Hotel[1010], to which his headquarters had been transferred on account of the shelling of Vitez and Stari Vitez and which, for safety reasons[1011], he had been unable to leave until 27 April. The accused claimed that he had no means of observing for himself the extent and exact location of the fighting and that he was also not informed by his team on account of the lack of adequate means of communication: General Blaškic asserted that at that time he had available to him only two telephones and the packet transmission system[1012]. The only information which he purportedly had on 16 April came in the report forwarded by the commander of the Military Police, Paško Ljubicic, at 11:42 hours which mentioned neither murders of civilians nor the torching of houses[1013].

479. In the first place, the Trial Chamber casts doubt on the claim that the accused remained in the Vitez Hotel throughout the day on 16 April. Indeed, Colonel Stewart attempted to visit him there at 10:00 hours on 16 April and was informed that Colonel Blaškic was not there[1014]. The ECMM also tried to contract the accused on 16 April and was told that he was not at the headquarters[1015]. Be that as it may, Defence exhibit D278 shows that at least two of the accused's colleagues left the Vitez Hotel during the day of 16 April to negotiate a cease-fire with the Muslim forces at UNPROFOR headquarters at Bila[1016]. The accused said that when they returned, the two HVO representatives told him that they had

[1008] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 23761-23762.
[1009] P456/57 and D340: letter from General Bla{ki} sent on 23 April to Colonel Stewart and in which the accused claimed to be ready to assemble a committee of enquiry, to look into the events at Ahmi}i especially, and asking that a meeting be held with the commander of the third corps of the ABiH in order to prevent the conflict from degenerating again. See witness Marin, PT p. 12452.
[1010] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22049-22050.
[1011] According to the witness Marin the HVO did not have any armoured vehicle (witness Marin, PT pp. 12294-12295).
[1012] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22052-22053. What he said was corroborated by witness Marin, PT p. 12294-12295. As regards the accused's arguments see also the Defence Brief, book VI, p. 15 and 95.
[1013] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18622-18623.
[1014] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23743.
[1015] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, p. 1920. According to those witnesses his absence was not surprising since " it is normal during a military operation that the commander is at the forward headquarters so he can be closer to the front and command his soldiers."
[1016] D278: report on the meeting with the Muslim forces. "Upon the initiative of the British Battalion at the UNPROFOR headquarters in Bila, a meeting was held today with enemy representatives". Marko Prskalo and Piskuli} were the HVO representatives. Witness Marin, PT pp. 12318-12319.

seen some corpses of civilians at the side of road, but did not mention the torched houses. The accused's explanation for this was that the HVO representatives were travelling in armoured vehicles with very small windows[1017]. For his part, witness Landry described the situation in the following terms: "we could see that there was an immense fire coming from that area"[1018]. Likewise, witness Baggesen stated that "the whole sky was illuminated like a big fire"[1019]. The Trial Chamber notes how hard those two accounts are to reconcile with each other, to the say the least

480. Moreover, a superior of the accused testified to the Trial Chamber that the accused had informed him by telephone on 18 April that some members of the Military Police had behaved in an uncontrolled manner and committed crimes[1020]. That very day, General Petkovic had sent the accused an order asking in particular that "4. reliable information should be gathered concerning the protagonists of the conflict, the expulsion of the civilian population, the killing of captured soldiers and civilians, the torching of houses and other buildings"[1021], which order the accused caused to be forwarded to the units under his orders[1022].

481. Further, on 20 April the accused attended a meeting at Zenica during which Dzemo Merdan, the ABiH chief-of-staff, protested about the massacre at Ahmici, where he maintained that 500 civilians had been killed. Witness Marin testified to the Trial Chamber that the accused had told him upon his return from that meeting about the crimes committed in Ahmici[1023]. The accused claimed that he had then immediately proposed setting up a joint investigating commission but the ABiH representatives had rejected this offer[1024]. The accused also stated that on that very evening he had ordered all the reports received by the command to be collected and that any report which might confirm Dzemo Merdan's allegations be identified[1025]. However, no order requesting additional information about those events was sent to the Military Police Fourth Battalion[1026]. Furthermore, the accused made no mention of such information in the document that he sent on the following day, 21 April,

[1017] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22050-22053.
[1018] Witness Landry, PT p. 7515.
[1019] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, p. 1926.
[1020] PT pp. 24100 and 24024-24027.
[1021] P316; witness Marin, PT p. 13620.
[1022] P318; witness Marin, PT p. 13621.
[1023] Witness Marin, PT. pp. 13617-13618.
[1024] Defence Brief, book V, p. 311.
[1025] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22125.
[1026] Witness Marin, PT pp. 13617-13618.

to Dario Kordic, Ignac Ko{troman and Ivica Zeko[1027]. His explanation for that omission was that Dzemo Merdan's accusations had remained vague. He further told the Trial Chamber that the civilian protection units had received the order to gather up the bodies at Ahmici on 21 April 1993[1028]. Although the accused asserted that that order came from the civil authorities and not from himself, it is hard to believe that such an undertaking could have been carried out without the accused's having been informed of the scale of the massacre.

482. Several international observers who attempted to go to the scene of the massacre stated that they encountered resistance from the HVO soldiers in control of the area. An ECMM team attempted to go to Ahmici on the morning of 16 April but was prevented from doing so by the HVO soldiers manning a roadblock at the entry to the village[1029]. Moreover, the team from the Commission on Human Rights came under fire from snipers[1030]. In addition, HVO soldiers sought to bar Colonel Stewart's passage when he came to visit the scene on 22 April[1031].

483. There is, moreover, a surprising discrepancy between what the accused said both before international observers and the international community and what he has said vis-à-vis the Croatian public. On 22 April he gave an immediate answer to Colonel Stewart's letter in which he stated that he was "ready to send immediately the investigating commission to the village of Ahmici"[1032]. When he met Colonel Stewart on 24 April at 13:00 hours, he accepted that crimes had been committed in the zone for which he was responsible[1033] and, according to the witness Stewart, seemed devastated by the scale of the massacre[1034]. However, in his report to the Croatian authorities dated the same day, the accused showed no regret, remorse or anger over the crimes committed on 16 April. On the contrary, the accused complained that the international community had given a biased presentation of the events thus proving its anti-Croatian attitude[1035]. Likewise, in an interview in the magazine Danas that appeared on 5 October 1993[1036], General Blaškic stated that the HVO were set up in Ahmici and that in any event, those crimes were the responsibility of the HOS which had a large majority of

[1027] Witness Marin, PT p. 13629.
[1028] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22126-22131. According to witness Zec, a lorry is alleged to have collected the bodies from Ahmi}i six days after the massacre, that is to say 22 April (witness Zec, PT pp. 4303-4304).
[1029] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1929-1931.
[1030] P184, p. 2 para. 4.
[1031] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23776.
[1032] P456/57; witness Marin, PT. pp. 13653-13654.
[1033] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23762.
[1034] Witness Stewart, PT pp. 23765-23766 and 23866; P742.
[1035] P466/58; witnesses Stewart, PT pp. 23766-23767 and Marin PT pp. 13662-13663.

Muslims among its troops, and of the armed forces of the MOS (Muslim troops). He went on to assert that the massacres in Ahmici had been "staged and skilfully shown to [...] the EC observer mission [and] Bob Stewart"[1037].

484. It is also difficult to see how these crimes which the accused himself thought had been organised and ordered at a high level of the military hierarchy, could have escaped his knowledge, and that of Dario Kordic, Ignac Koštroman or Anto Valenta. After all, the accused held a press conference condemning the Ahmici massacre in the presence of these people on 27 April 1993[1038].

485. Other witnesses stated that they had heard about it before 22 April. In particular, the president of the HDZ in Vitez, Anto Valenta, stated that he had been informed of it on 17 April by a report from the Central Bosnia Operative Zone. That report noted the destruction of buildings and the deaths of 70 to 80 civilians whose ethnic origin was not specified[1039]. However, according to the accused, at that time, Anto Valenta used the office of Franjo Nakic, Chief-of-Staff, which was in the Hotel Vitez[1040]. A meeting between Mate Boban and President Izetbegovic was allegedly scheduled for 18 April to discuss the situation in central Bosnia[1041]. One of General Blaškic's superiors said that he had been informed of the scale of the massacre on 18 April[1042] and that on 19 April General Morillon had told him in Medjugorje that the Military Police had been recognized at the scene[1043]. The Defence witness DY, who was not in the military, said that he had heard about the events at Ahmici the day they occurred or the next day[1044].

viii) The accused did not take the necessary measures

486. The Defence explained that the accused had given a whole series of orders after hearing of the Ahmici massacre on 22 April[1045]. In particular, on 18 April, he gave the order

---

[1036] P380.
[1037] Witnesses Bell, PT p. 17638; Duncan, PT pp. 9057-9058.
[1038] P572; witness Bell, PT pp. 17620-17622.
[1039] PT p. 24090.
[1040] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19177-19178.
[1041] PT p. 24091.
[1042] P695; witness Stewart, PT pp. 23769-23770.
[1043] PT p. 24091.
[1044] Witness DY, PT p. 23457.
[1045] D284, D318, D334, D336, D338, D353, D361, D362, D364, D365, D370, D374, D376, P456/27.

to all HVO units in his command zone not to torch homes and he transmitted that order to UNPROFOR and to the ECMM[1046].

487. However, the accused only gave these "preventive" orders after the order to attack on 16 April[1047]. In that connection, the Trial Chamber agrees with the Prosecutor that "the preventative nature of prior punishment was lost [...]. His subordinates clearly understood that certain types of illegal conduct were acceptable and would not lead to punishment"[1048]

488. The efforts made by the accused to see that the crimes committed were investigated and the perpetrators prosecuted and punished were also hardly convincing. In particular, the accused did not attempt to contact the commander of the Military Police, Paško Ljubi~ic, although he suspected from the outset that the Military Police had committed the crimes[1049]. Nor did he take any measures to seal off the area and ensure that evidence was preserved, despite being required to do so by Article 60 of the military discipline regulations. He did not, for example, order an autopsy on any body before it was buried[1050], and did not attempt to interview any survivors although they were detained at the school in Dubravica.

489. The accused stated that he sought the help of international organisations, especially the ECMM and UNPROFOR, in carrying out the investigation and that he never obtained this help[1051]. However, international observers who gave evidence before the Trial Chamber challenged this version of events. The witnesses Stewart and Morsink testified that the accused had never sought their help[1052]. On the contrary, Colonel Stewart complained on 24 April that no investigating commission had been set up yet: "No-one has yet taken responsibility, and no commission has been formed; This is a political catastrophe for the HVO; The HVO wants to destroy the Muslims"[1053].

490. Colonel Stewart once again asked about the setting up of an investigating commission at a meeting with Anto Valenta and Tihomir Blaškic on 4 May 1993[1054]. The witness Stewart

---

[1046] P456, P55.
[1047] D269.
[1048] Prosecutor's Brief, book VII, p. 158/2.
[1049] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18935-18937 and 18948. See also PT pp. 24100-24101.
[1050] Witness Marin, PT pp. 13679-13682.
[1051] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 19168; Defence Brief, p. 29.
[1052] Witness Stewart, PT p. 23760.
[1053] P456/58; witness Marin, PT pp. 13655-13656.
[1054] Witnesses Stewart, PT pp. 23747 and 23769; Blaškic, PT pp. 19177-19178.

stated that no investigation had been initiated before his departure on 10 May[1055]. There was another meeting on 9 May in the presence of his replacement, Colonel Duncan, then Commander of the Prince of Wales Regiment in Central Bosnia[1056]. The accused allegedly explained to Colonel Duncan that the crimes committed at Ahmici had been carried out either by Muslims wearing HVO uniforms or by Muslim extremists who were out of control, or even by Serbs who could have infiltrated the HVO controlled zone[1057]. The witness Duncan said he asked once again for an investigation to be set up and 25 May was agreed as the date for completion of the investigation and publication of the results[1058]. According to the witness Duncan, that investigation was never carried out[1059]. Likewise, the witness Morsink stated that the ECMM had never received the findings of the investigation which was supposed to have been undertaken into the events in Ahmici[1060].

491. Thus there were many occasions on which the accused could have asked for help from the international authorities. However, far from having been asked for such help, the authorities had, on the contrary, had to get in touch with the accused and to insist on an investigation being carried out.

492. The accused maintained that as early as 24 April, he had asked the SIS representative, Anto Sliškovic, to carry out the investigation. However, no evidence was adduced of this request. General Blaškic testified that he had made the request orally[1061], through the intermediary of his subordinate Marin[1062]. The witness Marin did not mention such an order however. His request was in any event never fulfilled. He testified that he again met the SIS representative on 8 May and reiterated his request. It was only on 10 May that the accused gave a written order[1063], that is to say after the bodies had been buried, the surviving eyewitnesses released from the Dubravica detention centre and Colonel Stewart replaced by Colonel Duncan. That order asked Anto Sliškovic to submit his report by 25 May at the [1055] Witnesses Stewart, PT p. 23750.

[1056] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9038-9039.
[1057] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9055-9056. The accused has always denied saying this. However, what he is alleged to have said here echoes what he said in Danas magazine on 5 October 1993 (P380).
[1058] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9055-9056.
[1059] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9056-9057.
[1060] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9858-9859.
[1061] The accused explained in that connection that it was very rare for him to give a written order to his closest colleagues: "these exceptional situations [...] were telling proof in their own right that I was not fully satisfied with the action that I ordered previously" (witness Blaškic, PT pp. 22922-22923).
[1062] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 22924. Marin appeared as a defence witness and gave evidence to the Trial Chamber for several weeks.
[1063] P456/59 and D341 (same document); witness Blaškic, PT p. 19248.

latest[1064]. The report submitted on that date was, even in the view of the accused, "not complete"[1065]. The report concluded in fact that the attack had been initiated by Muslim forces whose artillery shots were alleged to have been the cause of most of the material damage suffered by these villages. The report also indicated the presence of "men in black" whose military affiliation was not specified and who were deemed to be responsible for the pillage and the murders. According to the report, this was the action of Muslim forces who had thus sought to draw the international community's attention to the suffering of the Muslim population and consequently get an international force into the region. According to the report, there had been sixty or so victims of the fighting in Ahmici, which figure is much below the finding of the ECMM on 15 May 1993[1066]. It was only on 17 August that the accused asked the SIS to carry out a second investigation and to finish it by 30 September at the latest[1067]. The accused however testified that that report had never been communicated to him, Anto Sliškovic having informed him on 30 September that the results of the investigation, including the names of the guilty parties, had been transmitted to the SIS in Mostar and that the affair was no longer any of his concern[1068].

493. He had another chance in 1994. The accused, then appointed HVO Deputy Chief-of-Staff, was put in charge, from June to October 1994, of a major campaign against ordinary crime, known as operation "Pauk" or "Spider". He broadened the scope of the operation in order to be able to investigate war crimes. In that context, he ordered an SIS officer to check whether a criminal report on the subject of Ahmici had actually been submitted. He claimed that the SIS officer told him that he was not able to find the criminal report giving the names of the suspects[1069]. The Trial Chamber further notes that the accused had not shown that he had made any sustained efforts to recover the report before appearing before the Tribunal, although that report was the item of evidence most likely to exonerate him. Consequently, these findings cast doubt on the very existence of such a report.

494. In sum, no soldier has ever been convicted for the crimes at Ahmici, Pirici, Šantici and Nadioci. The Defence witness Marin recognised that no member of the HVO or of any other unit of the Croatian forces had ever been punished for crimes committed against the [1064] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19248-19250.

[1065] D608 and D342. See also PT p. 24112.
[1066] That report found that there had been at least 103 victims.
[1067] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19296-19300 and 19617-19628; D342 and D343; witness Marin PT p. 13700-13701.
[1068] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19741.
[1069] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 19640.

Muslim population or their possessions after the Ahmici massacres[1070]. The witness Morsink testified that he had never seen the HVO authorities carry out investigations into the atrocities against the Muslims[1071]

495. In the final analysis, the Trial Chamber is convinced that General Blaškic ordered the attacks that gave rise to these crimes. In any event, it is clear that he never took any reasonable measure to prevent the crimes being committed or to punish those responsible for them.

2. The events in Vitez and Stari Vitez

496. In April 1993, Croatian political and military forces controlled the town of Vitez[1072]. Access to the town was controlled by roadblocks. Towards mid-April, tension between the two communities had increased considerably in Vitez as in the whole of the Lašva Valley[1073]. On the eve of the conflict hatred towards the Muslim minority in Vitez was exacerbated, generalized and borne by the media. As the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights explained in his 19 May 1993 report:

> relatively minor incidents involving Croats are exaggerated and sensationalised. It is reported that in the days prior to the attack on Muslim civilians in the area of Vitez and the Lašva valley, a prominent local member of the Croatian Democratic Union (HDZ) suggested on the radio, without any apparent justification, that a massive attack by government forces was imminent, that "Mujahidin" forces would destroy the entire town and commit atrocities against women and children. All Muslim residents in Vitez were identified as conspirators in this plan, portrayed as "Islamic fundamentalists" and threatened with death. This is reported to have added greatly to the climate of fear and hatred in the area[1074].

a) The attacks committed as from 16 April 1993

497. The political and social events of 1992 and the start of 1993 led to the conflict breaking out between the HVO and ABiH troops in Vitez and Stari Vitez as from 16 April 1993. The headquarters of the two parties to the conflict were then a few hundred meters apart. General Blaškic's headquarters were in the Hotel Vitez and the Territorial Defence

[1070] Witness Marin, PT p. 13640.
[1071] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9851-9852.
[1072] P45C and P53.
[1073] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, p. 2618 ; witness Watters. PT pp. 3381-3382; witness McLeod, PT p. 6361.

headquarters in Stari Vitez were in the Muslim quarter of the town. That proximity only increased the frequency of confrontations between the two warring factions.

498. Three major events marked the period covered by the indictment: the attack of 16 April 1993, the booby-trapped lorry attack of 18 April 1993 and the attack of 18 July 1993. Those tragic events stood out because of their sheer scale and brutality[1075].

499. On 16 April 1993, between 05:00 hours and 06:00 hours, various areas of the town of Vitez such as Kolonija (town centre), Rijeka, Stari Vitez (old town and Muslim quarter) and Novaci were shelled and then came under fierce infantry fire[1076]. Many houses were looted and torched[1077], Muslims were arrested, segregated on the basis of their age and sex and the men of fighting age were driven to detention areas or to the battle front lines[1078]. Near Stari Vitez, in the vicinity of a building known as "the yellow building"[1079], a group of soldiers armed with explosives attacked several cafés belonging to Muslims and looted and torched Muslim houses[1080]. They opened fire on Stari Vitez from the roof of the "yellow building" and later in the day they arrested Muslims[1081]. The attacks carried on the next day with fierce artillery fire, in particular on Stari Vitez and Novaci[1082].

500. On 18 April 1993, a tanker containing 500 kilograms of explosives[1083] exploded near the Stari Vitez mosque. The conflagration, which was unusually intense[1084], caused major material damage and claimed a great many victims[1085].

[1074] P184.
[1075] Witness Thomas PT of 24 September 1997, p. 2629.
[1076] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1199-1200; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, p. 1562; witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1695-1697; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, pp. 2280-2281; witness Thomas PT of 24 September 1997 p. 2650; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2687-2689; witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, p. 2808; witness E, PT of 29 September 1997, p. 2908-2910.
[1077] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1207-1208; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1563-1565; witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997 p. 2656; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2694-2730; witness E, PT of 29 September 1997, pp. 2908-2910; witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997 p. 2979 and pp. 3042-3045; witness Kujawinski PT pp. 4106-4107; witness Parrott, PT p. 5045-5046.
[1078] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1201-1202; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, p. 1568-1569; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, pp. 2280-2288; witness Kavazovic, PT pp. 2255-2259; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2695-2702; witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, p. 2810-2812; witness E, PT of 29 September 1997, pp. 2912-2913; witness N, PT pp. 4470-4471; witness Hunter PT pp. 5132-5133; witness Kajmovic, PT pp. 5668-5669.
[1079] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, p. 1223.
[1080] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1562-1566.
[1081] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1567-1569.
[1082] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1211-1213. Witness Thomas PT of 24 September 1997 pp. 2649-2650; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2691-2693; witness Kujawinski PT pp. 4126-4127.
[1083] P242, witness Watters, PT pp. 3635-3636.
[1084] Witness Thomas PT of 24 September 1997 p. 2590; Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, p. 2815.

501. As from 17 April 1993, and until the Washington accords of February 1994, Stari Vitez became a Muslim enclave and was under siege for ten months[1086]. The period was characterized by confrontations of varying intensity[1087], in particular by a violent attack on 18 July 1993[1088]. That day, a great many homemade weapons known as "baby bombs" were fired on Stari Vitez and killed many Muslims. That quarter of the town was also targeted by multi-tube rocket-launchers and mortars.

b) The widespread or systematic nature of the attacks

502. Several facts bear witness to the organized and planned nature of the aforementioned attacks on Vitez and Stari Vitez.

i) The 16 April 1993 attack

503. According to the witness Parrott, the soldiers involved in the 16 April 1993 operation on Vitez and Stari Vitez seemed "well organized" and "appeared to be using military [...] tactics"[1089]. Indeed, the attack was organized into two separate phases in order to achieve maximum efficiency. First of all, it started with an artillery attack and was followed by an infantry attack with torching of houses and expulsion of the inhabitants[1090].

504. Several clues suggest that the attack was well prepared, in particular:

- increased control of the town by HVO forces[1091]: on 15 April, the witness Kavazovic saw groups of HVO soldiers in combat gear "who were blocking all the entrances to buildings"[1092] and explained that, on 15 April, he had been warned by a Croatian friend [1085] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1214-1216. Witness Mujezinovic, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1697-1698; witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2816-2817; witness Watters, PT pp. 3403-3404; witness Hughes, PT pp. 4534-4535.

[1086] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1233-1234.
[1087] Witness Bower, PT pp. 9389-9390.
[1088] P708 ; Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1238-1239.
[1089] Witness Parrott, PT pp. 5032-5033.
[1090] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1206-1207 ; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1563-1570; witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, pp. 2988-2989.
[1091] P45C, P53 ; witness Watters, PT pp. 3538-3539.
[1092] Witness Kavazovic, PT of 26 august 1997, pp. 3538-3539.

that "bad things were about to happen in Vitez"[1093]. That same day, the witness Pezer saw that access to the Vitez-Zenica road was closed and noted "unusual movements by HVO soldiers" and HVO members filling their vehicles with fuel[1094]. The witness Bower explained that the HVO controlled access to Stari Vitez[1095]. HVO soldiers were seen filling three tow trucks with bags of sand[1096]. Those bags were set out at the crossroads that led to the Hotel Vitez and in the old town[1097]. The witness S noticed the presence of snipers, machine guns and cannons, which were aimed at the two Muslim areas of Stari Vitez and Treskavica[1098]. Finally, on the day of the attack, the witness Ellis saw twenty or so soldiers wearing the HVO insignia at a checkpoint and more heavily armed than usual[1099].

- Preparation of the necessary equipment: the organizers of the attack used heavy, sophisticated weaponry which was "designed specifically for air defence"[1100]. Some witnesses saw a very large calibre anti-aircraft gun mounted on a vehicle and a very modern anti-tank weapon[1101].

- Creation of a system for regrouping soldiers and patrolling in small groups[1102].

ii) The booby-trapped lorry attack of 18 April 1993

505. Prosecution and Defence alike described this act as terrorism, designed principally to instil a feeling of terror in the target population[1103]. The Trial Chamber has no doubt that this terrorist operation was premeditated. The organisers had to acquire a considerable quantity of explosives, organize the transportation of the booby-trapped vehicle and plan where it was to [1093] D53, p. 4.

[1094] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, p. 1556.
[1095] Witness Bower, PT pp. 9375-9377. The witness added that to the west, the road which leads to Stari Vitez was blocked by a roadblock, explosives and landmines.
[1096] Witness S, PT pp. 4876-4877.
[1097] Witness S,PT pp. 4898-4900 and 4905-4906.
[1098] Witness S, PT pp. 4898-4900 and pp. 4905-4907.
[1099] Witness Ellis, PT of 29 September 1997, pp. 2970-2974.
[1100] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, pp. 2988-2989.
[1101] P106 ; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1555-1556; witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, pp. 2987-2988.
[1102] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, pp. 3113-3114. The witness Hughes noticed that there existed an efficient system of reconnaissance between the soldiers, with the probable aim of better recognizing one another. The HVO soldiers wore ribbons attached to the epaulettes of their uniforms, PT p. 4537.
[1103] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2646-2647.

be placed (near a mosque). This evidence was sufficient to show the operation had been planned.

iii) The 18 July 1993 attack

506. Darko Gelic, General Blaškic's liaison officer with UNPROFOR, admitted that HVO troops attacked Stari Vitez that day and that the attack had been planned. The attack bore the same hallmarks of planning as that of 16 April 1993, in particular the organisation of the operation into two phases[1104]. Darko Gelic also confirmed that the artillery barrage was the first phase of the attack[1105].

c) The civilian and Muslim character of the target populations

507. Generally speaking, the three attacks described above targeted the Muslim civilian population and were not designed as a response to a military aggression. At the very least, even if there had been such aggression, the assets and the method used could not be deemed proportionate to it. In each of the aforementioned events, the majority of the victims were civilians[1106], Muslim[1107](out of 101 civilians killed, 96 Muslims and 5 Croats were identified after the 16 April attack[1108]) and it seems obvious that men, women and children were attacked without distinction[1109].

i) The 16 April 1993 attack

508. The Defence maintained that "ABiH soldiers from Stari Vitez were continuously using civilian buildings for military purposes"[1110]and that the fighting occurred in the middle [1104] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, p. 1238.

[1105] P708.
[1106] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2656-2690 ; witness Bower, PT pp. 9490-9491 ; witness Whitworth, PT pp. 10376-10377.
[1107] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1565-1569 ; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, p. 2281; witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, p. 2675 ; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2693-2694.
[1108] P184.
[1109] P83, P100/4, P100/5 ; witness Watters, PT p. 3597 ; witness Kujawinski, PT pp. 4107-4108 ; witness Hughes, PT pp. 4532-4569 ; witness Bower, PT p. 9385.
[1110] Defence Brief, book II, p. 302.

of an urban area. Consequently, any attempt to gain some of the enemy's terrain was likely to entail greater losses and damage than are usual in other situations.

509. The Trial Chamber dismisses this approach. Granted troops from the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina were present in the town that day[1111]. But they were the ones attacked and not the other way around. There were several reasons, which emerged from the evidence of the witness Thomas, to infer that conclusion:

- there was no military installation, fortification or trench in the town on that day[1112];

- at the material time, the front line was fluctuating and changed from day to day depending on the commanders of the different troops[1113];

- until 16 April, there had been no confrontations between the HVO troops and the Bosnia-Herzegovina army. War broke out suddenly on 16 April 1993[1114];

- that day, there were no reports of any military victims[1115] or of the presence of soldiers from the Bosnia-Herzegovina army[1116];

- the Muslim military did not put up any defence because the target was not military but civilian[1117]. The houses that were torched belonged to civilians and could not in any circumstances be construed as military targets[1118];

[1111] According to the statement of the witness Djidic : "At the time of the attack, there were approximately 50 to 100 soldiers in Vitez. They were deployed. They were accommodated in one room, in one building called the fire-fighting house. And some soldiers and officers were in the headquarters, in the building which I pointed out. A certain number of soldiers were in their own houses, resting; and another set of soldiers was on the front line in Visoko and in Vla{i} [so that there] were only two military buildings in Stari Vitez", PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1205-1206.

[1112] Witness Ellis, PT p. 3115 and p. 2989 ; witness Parrott, PT pp. 5034-5035. The witness Thomas stated that there were no military installations, that it was not a military sector or objective: "It was merely a strip of residential houses that were lived in by Muslims. That goes down to the point that none of the buildings were fortified for defence because they did not have to be because they were simply people's homes", PT of 24 September 1997, p. 2681.

[1113] Witness Djidic, PT of 31 July 1997, pp. 1477-1478; witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2633-2634.

[1114] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2633-2634.

[1115] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2635-2636.

[1116] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2641-2642.

[1117] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, p. 2681.

[1118] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1207-1208.

- the artillery was not aiming particularly at the front lines where most of the ABiH soldiers were[1119].

510. Consequently, it was impossible to ascertain any strategic or military reasons for the 16 April 1993 attack on Vitez and Stari Vitez. In the event that there had been, the devastation visited upon the town was out of all proportion with military necessity. On the contrary, the attack was designed to implement an expulsion plan, if necessary by killing Muslim civilians and destroying their possessions[1120]. As the witness Bower explained,

> [i]t appeared to be more of a containment campaign, not to try and seize and hold the ground of Stari Vitez, but more to ensure that the occupants of Stari Vitez didn't expand their enclave or attempt to break out of their enclave. It was more static, more containment[1121].

The Croatian or mixed areas in the town were thus not damaged during the attack[1122].

ii) The booby-trapped lorry of 18 April 1993

511. The explosion occurred near houses belonging to civilians, thus causing numerous civilian victims together with many possessions of a civilian[1123] or religious nature, such as the roof of the mosque[1124]. Not one of the victims was in uniform[1125]. It seemed that the purpose of the attack was solely to terrorize the Muslim civilians in order to make them flee[1126]. As Colonel Watters explained, > it was an act of terrorism, and certainly it was not a legitimate act of war in pursuit of military objectives. The design of terror weapons or terrorist weapons is to terrorise, and it certainly worked. The people of Stari Vitez were absolutely terrorised by it. Very many of them wanted to leave their homes[1127].

[1119] Witness Bower, PT pp. 9386-9387.
[1120] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1563-1566 ; witness N, PT p. 4477.
[1121] Witness Bower, PT pp. 9386.
[1122] Witness Watters, PT p. 3598.
[1123] P81 ; witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1218-1220.
[1124] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1220-1221.
[1125] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2646-2647.
[1126] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, pp. 2983-2984.
[1127] Witness Watters, PT pp. 3404-3405.

iii) The 18 July 1993 attack

512. The Trial Chamber inferred from the arms used that the perpetrators of the attack had wanted to affect Muslim civilians. The "baby-bombs" are indeed "home-made mortars"[1128] which are difficult to guide accurately. Since their trajectory is "irregular" and non-linear[1129], they are likely to hit non-military targets. In this case, these blind weapons were sent onto Stari Vitez where they killed and injured many Muslim civilians[1130]. They also resulted in substantial material civilian damage[1131].

d) General Blaškic's responsibility

i) The arguments of the parties

513. According to the Prosecution, the HVO and the Vitezovi committed the aforementioned crimes. The Prosecution claimed that the Vitezovi obeyed General Blaškic's orders in the same way as the HVO troops. General Blaškic is alleged to have assigned the Vitezovi to the Stari Vitez sector on 15 April and then to have given them orders to attack the area, with the help of the HVO, on 16 April, 18 April and 18 July 1993[1132].

514. The Defence did not deny that HVO troops were responsible for some of the attacks on Stari Vitez but considered that those troops attacked military targets and were always acting in response to an ABiH attack, thus meeting the requirement of proportionality[1133]. It stated that the above crimes were committed by the Vitezovi alone, and refused to recognize the existence of a permanent relationship of subordination between the Vitezovi and General Blaškic.

515. The Defence maintained that the Vitezovi answered directly to the Ministry of Defence of the HZHB in Mostar and were not acting, at least not in any permanent way, under the command of General Blaškic. Although the units were sometimes temporarily

[1128] Defence Brief, p. 301.
[1129] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1242-1243.
[1130] P758 to 763.
[1131] Witness Djidic, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1238-1239.
[1132] Prosecutor's Brief, book VII, p. 62.
[1133] Defence Brief, pp. 294-302.

attached to the Central Bosnia Operative Zone, Tihomir Blaškic "did not possess the legal authority or actual ability to punish or discipline Vitezovi members" according to the Defence[1134]. It added that, during the periods of temporary attachment, "the Vitezovi, armed with the knowledge that Blaškic could not execute disciplinary or criminal sanctions against members of the unit, determined how [to] implement Blaškic's orders. On numerous occasions the Vitezovi conducted operations of which Blaškic had no knowledge. Even when the Vitezovi was attached to the OZSB, Bla{ki} could not enforce any of his orders by imposing sanctions on the Vitezovi"[1135].

ii) The individual criminal responsibility of General Blaškic

516. In limine, the Trial Chamber observes that there was no basis to the Defence's claim that responsibility for the commission of the crimes lay with the Vitezovi alone. As the testimony mentioned above showed, HVO troops clearly participated in the attacks on Stari Vitez on 16 April and 18 July 1993.

517. There is no doubt that there was a relationship of subordination between General Blaškic and the HVO troops strictly speaking. The Trial Chamber had however to resolve the question of whether there was such a link, either structural or factual, between the accused and the Vitezovi.

518. The Trial Chamber found several clues showing that, at the material time, General Blaškic was responsible for the Vitezovi as their superior. First of all, it analyzed the tenor and content of the orders given by the accused to the Vitezovi. Then it considered the evidence given by different international observers and analyzed the orders given by persons other than the accused in the HVO chain of command in the light of that evidence. Finally, the Trial Chamber concluded that the troops could not have committed the 18 April and 18 July crimes without obeying the orders of, or at least without the assistance of, General Blaškic.

[1134] Defence Brief, pp. 158-160.
[1135] Defence Brief, p. 159.

a. The accused's orders or reports as evidence of a relationship of subordination

519. During the course of 1993, the accused drafted many orders addressed, amongst others, to the Vitezovi. According to General Blaškic, the relationship of subordination between the Vitezovi and the command of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone applied only for the duration of the assigned mission for each order given to the Vitezovi. The relationship of subordination did not apply for the whole of the period between 16 April 1993 and the Washington Accords. During that period, the Vitezovi were solely assigned to the CBOZ command without being permanently legally subordinate to it, according to the accused[1136].

520. The Trial Chamber is unable to accept the distinction made by the accused. By analyzing General Blaškic's orders to the Vitezovi chronologically, the Trial Chamber was able to conclude that he exercised effective control over the Vitezovi for the whole of 1993 at least, or in any event as from 19 January[1137]. The Trial Chamber considers that the distinction between the notion of temporary subordination and that of permanent attachment is a legal fiction, at least as far as the accused's ability to give orders directly to the Vitezovi or to send a report on their potentially criminal activities to the competent authorities is concerned.

521. The orders given to the Vitezovi showed that, in 1993, there was a permanent relationship of superiority between General Blaškic and those troops giving him effective control over them. That is sufficient to prove that there was a relationship of subordination.

522. By analysing the content of the orders, the Trial Chamber was able to confirm that General Blaškic exercised effective control over the Vitezovi and that there was a permanent relationship of subordination between Blaškic and those troops. The Trial Chamber notes that the orders often related to aspects of organisation [1138] and conduct[1139]of the troops and therefore, owing to their content, were of a permanent nature, and that in any event they clearly went beyond the context of a specific operation.

523. The Vitezovi seemed to have participated to the same extent as the regular HVO troops in the implementation of the troops' general organization. On 13 February 1993,

[1136] Witness Blaškic, PT pp. 18111-18112.
[1137] P456/6; P456/16; D42; D267; P456/26; D77; D359; P456/27; D78; D39; P456/30; P456/31; P456/32; P456/33; P456/34; P456/37; P456/40; D384; P456/41; D389; D391. According to General Blaškic, the Vitezovi unit was broken up on 15 January 1994.
[1138] P456/16; P456/30; P456/31; P456/32; P456/33.
[1139] D42; P456/26; D77; D359; P456/27; D78; D39; P456/34; P456/37; P456/40; D384; P456/41; D389; D391.

General Blaškic asked the Vitezovi, inter alia, to organize their lines of defence, to establish "a complete record of conscripts", to carry out "a shooting test with the civilian and military police units" and to draw up additional and thorough assessments of the situation in cooperation with HVO chairmen, Heads of the Offices for defence matters and Commanders of police stations in the brigade's zone of responsibility[1140]. On 3 May 1993, General Blaškic asked the Vitezovi to submit a list of the Croatian soldiers killed during the fighting with the ABiH[1141] and, on 26 May 1993, he enjoined those same troops to submit the data on the demographic structure of the pre-war populations by zone of responsibility in the form of a report[1142].

524. The Vitezovi also received orders relating to the general conduct management of the troops. On 21 April 1993, General Blaškic asked the HVO regular troops as well as the special intervention forces to protect the civilian population and to ensure that the ICRC had free access and that the injured received medical treatment[1143]. On 17 June 1993, General Blaškic demanded that arrests of civilians during military actions cease and asked for religious effects to be protected. On that occasion, he stated that the brigade and independent unit commanders should be answerable to him for implementing that order and asked those commanders to let him know that it was being properly applied by way of regular reports[1144].

525. More fundamentally, the Vitezovi obeyed preparatory orders given by General Blaškic. On 16 January 1993, the accused gave the Vitezovi an order to intensify the preparations for combat at the highest level of all the HVO formations in the CBOZ[1145]. On 15 April 1993, General Blaškic enjoined the Vitezovi to prepare for an action by the ABiH troops from Stari Vitez towards the Vitez headquarters, in the event that there would be a break through the front line. He therefore ordered the Vitezovi to hold a front line between Stari Vitez and his headquarters, a few hundred meters away from the Muslim quarter[1146].

[1140] P456/15.
[1141] P456/31.
[1142] P456/33.
[1143] P456/26, D77.
[1144] P456/37.
[1145] P456/6.
[1146] D267. The front line from Stari Vitez was 300 metres from the accused's HQ (P79).

b. The other evidence that there existed a relationship of subordination

526. Some independent observers pointed out how effective General Blaškic's command of the Vitezovi was[1147]. The witness Whitworth stated that those units formed an integral part of the HVO's strategy in the Lašva Valley and that they "came under the command of General Blaškic and were used [...] in actually carrying out the HVO's military intention, establishing, strengthening and regaining ground lost to the ABiH"[1148].

527. In the Trial Chamber's view, the Vitezovi came under the accused's command responsibility regardless of the legal form of their link with the Defence Ministry. An order dated 19 January 1993[1149] drawn up by Lieutenant-General Milivoj Petkovic, the HVO Chief-of-Staff, indicated that the Vitezovi were "attached in all matters" to General Blaškic and that any independent action on their part was forbidden. A witness heard by the Trial Chamber further explained that he and General Blaškic were the only two authorities who could have commanded the Vitezovi[1150]. The witness acknowledged that the Defence Minister could theoretically have given the Vitezovi orders, but stated that, in practice, he considered that it would have been impossible for the Minister to give orders without General Blaškic or himself knowing about them[1151]. He stated that the Vitezovi were attached to the operative zone and that he had never received any report saying that it was practically impossible to command those units[1152]:

> Finally, in relation to [...] all the problems concerning these units, I found out about them only when this trial began. Until then, I did not receive any information that these units were troublesome and that they could not be commanded[1153].

528. Lastly, the commander of the Vitezovi, Darko Kraljevic, explained in a letter dated 15 April 1993 that his troops came under "the unified system of command and control in the SB /Central Bosnia/ OZ /Operative Zone/"[1154]. The frequency of the meetings between the accused and the commander of the Vitezovi is evidence that such a system existed. On 15 April 1993, Darko Kraljevic went to the Hotel Vitez and had a meeting with Tihomir

---

[1147] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1901-1902 ; witness Buffini, PT pp. 5636-5637.
[1148] Witness Whitworth, PT p. 10237.
[1149] P666 "Protest" addressed to the Vitez TO and the 325th ABiH Brigade.
[1150] PT p. 24171.
[1151] PT p. 24171.
[1152] PT pp. 24186-24204.
[1153] PT pp. 24198-24199.
[1154] P456/20.

Blaškic[1155]. The witness Kavazovic stated that he saw Darko Kraljevic three times at the Hotel Vitez in June, July and September 1992[1156]. Likewise, witness HH testified that Darko Kraljevic often went to the Hotel Vitez for meetings with General Blaškic[1157].

c. The organized nature of the attacks

529. The crimes described above were committed on a large scale and hence their execution required precise organization, determined by a general command structure. It would in fact have been physically impossible for the Vitezovi, with 60 to 80 men[1158], to have planned and executed operationally the crimes in question on an isolated basis[1159]. They could not have procured between 450 and 700 kilograms of explosives which were placed in the booby-trapped lorry without the authorization of General Blaškic, who controlled the Vitez explosives factory[1160]. By the same token, the troops could not have undertaken the attacks on 16 April and 18 July 1993 without obeying the accused's orders on the operational level or without his assistance. General Blaškic was the only person in Vitez entitled to authorize the use of artillery[1161].

530. As a result, the attack of 16 April 1993, the explosion of the booby-trapped lorry on 18 April 1993 and the attack of 18 July 1993 could not physically have been carried out if General Blaškic had not given the order for their execution or at least allowed them to take place. He was the only one empowered to authorize the use of the assets necessary to carry out those operations. The quantity of arms and explosives used were clear evidence of the accused's involvement in the organization and planning of those operations. In relation to 16 April 1993, the witness Ellis testified that:

> there was an enormous amount of ammunition fired, a lot more than I had seen. [...] to achieve that amount of ammunition in a particular area - - that must have been an orchestrated move to actually gather ammunition into that area[1162].

More generally, the work of organising those operations could not have been carried out independently by the small Vitezovi unit. That unit must have had recourse not only to the

---

[1155] P276.
[1156] Witness Kavazovic, PT of 26 August 1997, pp. 2305-2306.
[1157] Witness HH, PT pp. 6809-6810.
[1158] PT pp. 24187-24203.
[1159] PT pp. 24210-24211.
[1160] Defence Brief, book 2, p. 21; see also PT p. 24045.
[1161] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18518.
[1162] Witness Ellis, PT of 30 September 1997, p. 2992.

material available to the accused, but also to an effective command structure, which only General Blaškic could provide. As witness Thomas explained, > they were carried out by an organised force operating with a coherent command and control structure, operating to a certain plan[1163].

d. Conclusions

531. The Trial Chamber considers that General Blaškic must be found guilty on the basis of Article 7(1) of the Statute of ordering the attack of 16 April 1993 on Vitez and Stari Vitez, the detonation of the booby-trapped lorry on 18 April 1993 at Stari Vitez and the attack of 18 July 1993 on Stari Vitez. At the very least, he took no step to prevent those crimes being committed or to punish the perpetrators.

3. Other villages in the municipality of Vitez

532. In the context of the conflict which rocked the municipality of Vitez, the Prosecutor drew a distinction between the villages of Donja Ve~eriska, Ga~ice and Grbavica, which were attacked by Croatian forces in April and September 1993.

a) Donja Ve~eriska and Ga~ice

533. Donja Ve~eriska and Ga~ice were two mixed villages of the municipality of Vitez[1164]. The two villages face, from opposite sides, the Slobodan Princip Selo weapons factory (hereinafter "the SPS factory")[1165]. The Defence submitted, and the Trial Chamber agrees, that the SPS factory was a sensitive position as far as the HVO was concerned[1166]. The SPS factory was one of the largest industrial complexes making explosives in Bosnia (and in Europe) and was of considerable strategic importance for both sides[1167]. Consequently, there were military reasons for fighting to gain control of the neighbouring villages. But the HVO

[1163] Witness Thomas, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2679-2680.
[1164] Donja Ve~eriska had about 240 houses, divided 60/40% between Muslims and Croats (D71). Ga~ice had a hundred or so houses, divided 50/50% between Muslims and Croats (witness Mati}, PT, (PV) p. 16968. Donja Ve~eriska is 3.9 km from the Hotel Vitez, Ga~ice is 1.9 km from the Hotel Vitez (P79).
[1165] Witness R, PT p. 4957.
[1166] Defence Brief, book IV, p. 392.
[1167] Witness Hunter, PT pp. 5126-5127.

had taken control of the SPS factory in October or November 1992[1168], well before the events considered here. In view of the context of those operations, it appears appropriate to review the parties' arguments.

i) The arguments of the parties

534. According to the Prosecutor, the HVO attacked Donja Ve~eriska on 16 April 1993 and Ga~ice on 20 April 1993. The attacks against those two villages formed part of the persecution of Muslim civilians referred to in the indictment. Those villages witnessed the destruction, devastation and large-scale pillaging of Muslim-owned property[1169]. Several Muslim civilians were killed during the attacks and the Muslim inhabitants of those villages were expelled. Muslim homes were torched and looted and Croats appropriated them[1170]. The accused is responsible for all those criminal acts.

535. The Defence did not deny that the Vitezovi attacked Ga~ice on 20 April 1993[1171], but it argued that the "independent" unit was acting on its own initiative, that the Vitezovi were attacking an ABiH formation[1172] and that the houses were torched as reprisals for the death of a Vitezovi soldier[1173]. The Defence further submitted that Tihomir Blaškic did not give any order to that unit concerning action at Ga~ice.

536. As far as the destruction carried out at Donja Ve~eriska is concerned, the Defence argued that it must be regarded as the collateral damage of a justified military operation and that therefore it was not the outcome of a punishable act. The HVO and the ABiH were equally (or virtually equally) matched and dwellings were burned as a result of the fighting. The Defence argued that no more than 10% of the houses in the village of Donja Ve~eriska burned as a result of the fighting. There were no attacks against civilians in the sense of an intention to destroy the buildings in question, but fighting did take place in the village concerned[1174]. Furthermore, Tihomir Blaškic did not order the destruction found in Donja [1168] According to one witness, HVO soldiers in Herzegovina had already come in October 1992 (Witness R, PT pp. 4922-4923, pp. 4964-4965); according to another, the HVO was installed since November 1992 (Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4829-4831).

[1169] Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, pp. 84-85, paras. 2.330 to 2.333.
[1170] Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, p. 85, para. 2.335
[1171] Defence Brief , book VI, p. 352.
[1172] Defence Brief , book VI, p. 352.
[1173] Defence Brief , book VI, p. 353.
[1174] During R's testimony, PT pp. 4974-4975.

Ve~eriska. The destruction and the looting were the outcome of criminal acts which the accused could neither control nor punish[1175].

ii) The course of the attacks

537. As in the case of the other villages in the municipality of Vitez, the two orders given by General Blaškic prior to those attacks must be examined. First, on 15 April 1993[1176], there was the order to the HVO brigades and the independent units, including the Vitezovi, to prepare to fight in order to defend the HVO and Vitez. There was also the order given on 01:30 hours on 16 April[1177] to fight in order to "forestall enemy attacks (extremist Muslim forces) and to block the larger territory of [...] D. Ve~eriska"[1178].

a. Donja Ve~eriska

538. On 15 April 1993, the HVO held a press conference in their local centre attended by Tihomir Bla{ki} and Ignac Ko{troman and during which Dario Kordi} declared: "my Croat brothers, it is time to defend our Croatianhood"[1179]. Later that day, the Croatian civilians of Donja Ve~eriska left the village[1180].

539. The Defence maintained that the HVO was attacked and that that provoked the conflict[1181]. The Trial Chamber considers instead that on the morning of 16 April, towards 06:00 hours, the HVO attacked the village of Donja Ve~eriska[1182]. During the attack, bombs fell[1183] and Croats fired on the Muslims from the SPS factory[1184]. The HVO used mortar shells and anti-aircraft gun mortars[1185]. HVO soldiers[1186], fifteen or so members of the Tvrtko unit[1187], other soldiers wearing black uniforms[1188]with the "U" insignia (standing for [1175] Defence Brief , book VI, p. 374.

[1176] D267.
[1177] D269.
[1178] Given to the command of the Vitez HVO Brigade (Mario ^erkez) and to the Tvrtko independent units.
[1179] D71, p. 5.
[1180] Witness R, PT pp. 4913-4914.
[1181] Witness Bla{ki} PT pp. 18530-18531.
[1182] Witness R, PT pp. 4913-4915.
[1183] Between forty and fifty bombs in the space of an hour, according to witness R (PT pp. 4916-4917).
[1184] Witness R, PT pp. 4929-4930.
[1185] Witness R, PT pp. 4930-4931.
[1186] Soldiers wearing the HVO emblem on their sleeve with the checkerboard, an armband (maybe blue) around the sleeve (witness R, PT pp. 4923-4924).
[1187] Witness Lovric, PT p. 17785.
[1188] Witness R, PT pp. 4914-4915, pp. 4923-4924.

"Ustasha"[1189]), and yet more wearing the "HV" insignia were on the Croatian side . All those groups attacked together[1190]. There were at least fifty soldiers in all[1191].

540. The Muslims tried to defend themselves on 16 and 17 April. During those two days, houses were burned[1192] and the mekteb, the Muslim religious and cultural centre of the village, was destroyed[1193]. Muslim residents were driven from their homes by the HVO[1194]. Eight Muslims, including at least seven civilians, were killed[1195], and others injured, including a woman called Hadzira Ba{i}[1196], as she was attempting to escape across the fields. When the UNPROFOR mission arrived at the top of the village on 17 April, it saw that the HVO sign had been painted on most of the houses in that part of the village. It also saw HVO soldiers, recognisable by their insignia[1197]. As regards the houses: "these were not military targets, this was just where people lived" [1198]. According to one witness, the purpose of the attack and the murders was "to intimidate us so that we would leave from there, simply to cleanse us from there"[1199].

541. Finally, on the morning of 18 April, towards 03:00 or 04:00 hours, Muslim residents abandoned the village going on foot as far as the UNPROFOR base in Divjak[1200]. As they left the village, the column was subjected to shots from the SPS factory and three women were killed[1201]. The conflict therefore lasted until the HVO had succeeded in entering the second part of the village on 18 April 1993[1202].

[1189] Witness R, PT pp. 5002-5004. Sometimes soldiers wore two of the insignia.
[1190] Witness R, PT pp. 4931-4932.
[1191] Witness R, PT p. 4969.
[1192] Thirty burnt houses were identified by the witness R from an aerial photograph. "All the houses and stables were on fire" (Witness R, PT p. 4916). On 17 April, "there was at least one house but possibly more that were burning"(witness Parrott, PT p. 5026). One witness said of Donja Ve~eriska that from Ga~ice he could see the houses "one by one going up in flames", (witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4803). It was possible to see the flames rising above the village from Vitez (witness Parrott, PT p. 5050; witness Hunter PT p. 5107-5108). Defence exhibits acknowledged the HVO torching of 22 homes and stables (D70, D71). One witness maintained that there were fourteen burnt houses on each side (witness Lovri}, PT p. 17764).
[1193] Witness R, PT p. 5001.
[1194] On the morning of 17 April, Sergeant Parrott of UNPROFOR met some Muslims on the road, including maybe two members of the armed forces who had been driven from their homes by the HVO (PT p. 5026).
[1195] D71; witness R, PT pp. 4921-4922. The witness Lovri} maintained that it was seven civilians and one soldier (PT p. 17765).
[1196] That woman was in a house separated from other Muslim houses by a field, and she tried to escape. According to witness R, "Hadjira and her small child tried to escape across the field and Zoran shot her in her thigh [...] Hadjira was lying in the field for a long time, she was wounded around 8 a.m. and we could not get to her [...] during the night we made up stretchers and we were able to pick up Hadjira"(D71, p. 6)
[1197] Witness Parrott, PT p. 5026.
[1198] Witness R, PT pp. 5001-5002.
[1199] Witness R, PT p. 5001.
[1200] Witness R, PT pp. 4933-4934. The UNPROFOR base was the headquarters of the British Battalion.
[1201] Habiba Ha{ki}, her younger sister and her daughter (witness R, PT p. 4920).
[1202] Witness R, PT p. 4981.

542. The Trial Chamber heard contradictory oral testimony and received contradictory evidence on the point of the ABiH participation in the conflict. According to the Prosecution, the civilians effectively put up the Muslim defence: there were only a very few members of the armed ABiH forces and only a handful of rifles[1203]. According to that argument, the Defence of the village was not organised and everyone did what he could[1204]. However, there was also evidence of a noteworthy ABiH presence. Contrary to his evidence before the Trial Chamber, one Prosecution witness stated to the Prosecutor that "only about 40 Muslim men were part of the TO from the village"[1205] and that as regards the Muslims' retreat from the village,

> The Territorial Defence was running out of ammunition so approximately one or two o'clock in the morning all civilians had to retreat from the village by following an UNPROFOR vehicle. Then the members of the Territorial Defence retreated because we were out of bullets [...] The members of the Territorial Defence went to the village of Grbavica[1206].

543. Even though the Trial Chamber could not confirm the Defence argument that there were one hundred and twenty-eight members of the armed forces among the Muslims in the village[1207], it was not able characterise the attack as being targeted only against a Muslim civilian population. Consequently, until the Muslims' retreat on the morning of 18 April, the conflict at Donja Ve~eriska was characterised as a conflict between the HVO and independent Croatian units on the one hand and the ABiH on the other. Before the retreat of the Muslims, it was not clear that the criteria of proportionality of a military attack against positions defended by the military had not been met as regards the destruction of property, nor that the injuries to Hadzira Ba{i} and the deaths could not be considered the result of a conflict between the ABiH and the HVO.

[1203] Witness R, PT pp. 4958, 4931, 4982-4983. That witness maintained that the villagers merely defended their families (PT pp. 4993-4994). The UNPROFOR Sergeant also noted two men of fighting age, with rifles, seeming more civilian than military (witness Parrott PT p. 5077).
[1204] Witness R, PT p. 5005.
[1205] P169, p. 3.
[1206] D71, p. 5. That statement seemed to be confirmed by the witness Lovri} who mentioned ABiH units which were following those fleeing on the morning of 18 April(PT pp. 17765-17767); see also witness Bla{ki}, PT, p. 18800. Other signs of ABiH presence "A front line was made between the HVO and Territorial Defence near the kitchen"(D71, p. 5) and "at one point I had helped the Territorial Defence after a member was wounded"(D71, p. 6). See also witness R, PT p. 5004; "they were not classic soldiers, they did not have uniforms, they were just defending from the Serbs, Montenegrin aggression, so some of them when they would come to be relieved back to the village, they would some of them bring their weapons with them". The witness Marin also confirmed that there was an ABiH presence, PT p. 12455.

544. The Trial Chamber notes however that much of the destruction and damage occurred after the assaults on the villages were over and the HVO had taken control of the villages. In particular, members of the HVO set fire to the Muslim houses[1208] and no-one made any effort to put out the fires. It was possible to see houses burning from the UNPROFOR base[1209]. Moreover, there was looting of property from the mekteb after the Muslim civilians had left the village[1210]. Those houses and the mekteb could not be considered to be military targets as from 18 April. The Trial Chamber considers that these events were large-scale destruction or devastation with no military necessity[1211].

b. Ga~ice

545. From the time when the conflict broke out in Donja Ve~eriska on 16 April 1993, the Croats and Muslims tried to negotiate in order to prevent there being problems in Ga~ice, but without success[1212]. The Prosecution maintained that on 17 April the HVO issued an ultimatum to the Muslim inhabitants of Ga~ice to surrender their arms and sign an oath of allegiance to the Croatian community of Bosnia, which the Muslims rejected[1213]. On 19 April, the day before the attack, Croatian residents (women and children) left the Muslim part of the village[1214].

546. At 05:50 hours on 20 April, mortar fire started and shells fell[1215]. The village was pounded with shells from all sides and the attack came from three different directions[1216]. The HVO soldiers fired shots on the village from the SPS factory. In the village, there were only about thirty Muslim men with a few hunting rifles and a few bombs and grenades[1217]. The Muslims took refuge in a few houses. The men withdrew in the direction of the forest,

---

[1207] Witness R, PT p. 4958. Moreover, the Defence maintained that there was a command structure in place (witness Lovric, PT pp. 17754-17756).
[1208] Captain Ellis of Britbat confirmed that "several" houses were on fire after the Muslims had fled the village on the morning of 18 April (Provisional Transcript, Public Version (hereinafter "PTPV") of 30 September 1997 p. 3074).Some houses were still burning on 20 May (witness Hunter, PT pp. 5104-5105).
[1209] Witness R, PT pp. 4935-4936.
[1210] Witness Kaiser, PT p. 10623; P455/17.
[1211] The Trial Chamber agrees with the Prosecution on this point (Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, p. 94, para 2.369 to 2.371 and p. 96, para. 2.377). The Defence did not deny that there was no military necessity for the burnt houses after the retreat of the Muslims (Defence Brief, book VI, p. 372).
[1212] Witness Matic, PTPV p. 17086.
[1213] Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, p. 89, para. 2.351. Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4807-4808. The witness explained the reasons for the refusal: "because we knew approximately what was going on in other villages and we knew if we surrendered the weapons that they would slaughter us, that they would kill us"(PT p. 4837).
[1214] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4808-4809.
[1215] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4805-4806, 4809-4810. Another witness said how he had heard two or three rather violent explosions towards 07:00 hours that day, witness Matic, PTPV p. 17087.
[1216] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4812-4813.

whereas the women and children stayed in the cellars. After the shelling of the village, the Muslim inhabitants (therefore women and children for the most part) were encircled by soldiers wearing insignia such as those of the HVO, HV, U and Vitezovi[1218]. Some of the soldiers called the Muslims "balijas"[1219] and drove them out of their houses[1220], which they then burned[1221].

547. There were at least four Muslim deaths in the village[1222], including a Muslim who burned in his house, Fikret Hrusti}[1223]. One witness maintained that the attack against the Muslims in Ga~ice was "a plan, well-planned and very well organised"[1224]. According to certain sources, the ABiH held the Vitezovi responsible for the massacres in Ga~ice[1225]. But clearly the members of that unit were not the only ones involved in the attack.

548. The Defence contended that the village was defended by Muslim militia. The Trial Chamber heard little evidence to that effect[1226]. Even if that was the case, the torching of houses continued after the HVO soldiers and other units had taken control of the village.

549. Once the HVO soldiers had taken control of the village, they took the residents of Ga~ice (247 Muslim civilians) on a forced march towards Vitez and forced them to sit opposite the Hotel Vitez as human shields, for about three hours[1227]. Afterwards, they were taken back to the village and made to live in the seven houses which remained standing. Subsequently, those same people were taken in lorries and driven by force out of the village by the HVO[1228].

[1217] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4807-4808.
[1218] Witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4810-4811, 4854-4855. The witness maintained that the HVO received the help of a Brigade from Split and of the 125th Vara`din Brigade (PT p. 4820).
[1219] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4809-4811, 4857.
[1220] Witness Morsink, PTPV pp. 10266-10271.
[1221] The Muslim civilians returning from Vitez later that day saw the houses and the stables still on fire (witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4816). An ECMM observer confirmed that the Muslim houses had been burned after the conflict (witness Morsink, PTPV p. 10264). The Trial Chamber considers that between fifteen (witness Matic, PTPV p. 17093) and thirty five (witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4849) Muslim houses were torched and notes that a few Croatian houses were also burning (witness Matic, PTPV p. 17090).
[1222] Witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4842. Another witness maintained that the dead were all soldiers and that one of the Muslim victims was killed by another Muslim (witness Matic, PTPV p. 17094).
[1223] Witness Matic, PTPV p. 17094. It seemed that the man had burned alive.
[1224] Witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4860.
[1225] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9169-9170. Another witness confirmed that he had heard it said that the soldiers were Vitezovi (witness Matic, PTPV p. 17112).
[1226] Witness Matic, PTPV p. 17092.
[1227] See discussion below.
[1228] Witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4825-4826.

550. The Trial Chamber finds that these events amount to devastation without any military necessity and forcible transfers of civilians.

b) Grbavica

551. The village of Grbavica was a mixed village 1.5 km from Stari Vitez[1229]. The Grbavica hill had a certain strategic importance[1230], which enabled the ABiH, if it occupied it, to block the HVO and the Croatian civilians' access to the main Travnik-Busova~a road.

i) The arguments of the parties

552. The Prosecution submitted that the HVO attacked Grbavica on 7 September 1993. The purpose of the attack was not at issue. The HVO took Grbavica in the afternoon of 8 September 1993. Once all the combatants and the Bosnian Muslim civilians had been driven out of the village, the HVO set about systematically plundering and destroying the Muslims' houses. Subsequently, the Bosnian Croats moved into the houses that were still habitable[1231].

553. The Defence contended that Tihomir Bla{ki} authorised a legitimate military attack on the ABiH positions at Grbavica, justified by military necessity, and that all damage caused by the HVO offensive was collateral damage of a lawful military operation[1232]. Moreover, the accused did not order and was not otherwise directly involved in the looting of civilian property which followed the attack. The HVO attacked on 7 September 1993 and achieved all its goals the next day. Then, in accordance with what had been agreed, the HVO withdrew and the Vitez civilian police arrived in order to maintain law and order in the village. The acts of destruction were those of civilian looters. The civilian police tried unsuccessfully to prevent those criminal acts[1233].

[1229] Witness Djidi}, PT of 29 July 1997, p. 1262.
[1230] Witness Duncan, PT p. 9212-9213.
[1231] Prosecutor's Brief, p. 25, para. 5.15.
[1232] Defence Brief, book VI, pp. 162-163.
[1233] Defence Brief, book VI, pp. 162.

ii) The course of the attack

554. The parties agreed to consider that there were legitimate reasons for the 7 September attack by the HVO on the village of Grbavica[1234]. That the ABiH took part in the conflict was not at issue[1235]. Tihomir Bla{ki} acknowledged that he planned the military operation and personally took part in it[1236]. It was carried out in an organised military manner[1237]. The operation was carried out by HVO men Bla{ki} had chosen and who were under his command[1238]. Members of the D`okeri[1239], of the "Nikola [ubi} Zrinski" Brigade[1240], of the "Tvrtko II"[1241] unit and of the Military Police[1242] took part in the attack.

555. On the first day of the attack, the HVO launched attacks using artillery and explosive devices, including "babies"[1243]. The ABiH was reinforced in the night of 7-8 September 1993, and UNPROFOR evacuated the civilian population from houses built on the Grbavica hill[1244]. On the morning of 8 September, the HVO infantry troops attacked and proceeded with the systematic rooting out of enemy soldiers and of Muslims from the houses they were occupying[1245]. Finally the HVO took control of its targets and the Vitez HVO civilian police entered Grbavica to keep law and order[1246].

[1234] The Prosecution maintained that the attack started at 13:55 hours (Prosecutor's Brief, book V , p. 162, para. 2.688) whereas the Defence maintained that it started at 14:20 hours (Defence Brief, book VI, p. 162).
[1235] The Prosecution agreed that the ABiH command post was one of the main targets on the first day of the attack (Prosecutor's Brief, book V , pp. 162-163, para. 2.688). See also P713 (Milinfosum of 9 September 1993): "The C/S [...] in the burnt out village of Grbavica discovered the body of a dead ABiH soldier which had been decapitated and disembowelled"
[1236] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 20808. Bla{ki} told Brigadier General Duncan in advance that he would be obliged to attack and to eliminate some of the Muslims in that zone (witness Duncan PT pp. 9213-9214). See also witness Whitworth, PT, pp. 10268-10269.
[1237] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 399. See also witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 2810-2811. That view was confirmed by the witness Bower: "It appeared to be a professional, well-coordinated military offensive to seize and hold an area of ground" (PT pp. 9401-9402).
[1238] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 2809-2810.
[1239] Witness Palavra PT p. 16793. The witness Bower learned from the British liaison officers that the D`okeri were involved in the attack on Grbavica (PT p. 9423). See also witness Whitworth, PT pp. 10274-10275; P712, P713.
[1240] P173.
[1241] Witness Whitworth, PT pp. 10274-10275.
[1242] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22632. See also the witness Marin who agreed that part of the forces of the Military Police were engaged in the Grbavica operation. He maintained: "we did not have other forces that could have carried out the task of this attack operation, except for the units for special purposes together with the military police"(PT p. 13701).
[1243] The witness Djidi} saw the "babies" in flight when he was in Stari Vitez (PT of 29 July 1997, p. 1262). See also the witness Whitworth, PT pp. 10278-10279; P433/28. The accused formally denied having used that type of device (Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22649).
[1244] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19692-19693.
[1245] Witness Whitworth PT pp. 10270-10272.
[1246] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19692-19694.

556. As far as the destruction of houses in Grbavica was concerned, the Trial Chamber accepts the idea that the ABiH was occupying certain private houses and that, consequently, those dwellings became legitimate military targets[1247]. The Defence claimed that that was the reason the houses were burned during the conflict[1248]. Moreover, the looting and the torching was said to be the result not of the soldiers' actions but those of civilians who arrived in the village after the HVO took control, in particular criminals and unruly elements[1249].

557. The evidence showed that in fact only a few houses were occupied by soldiers[1250]. Moreover, it was clear that many houses were burned after the fighting, including, by definition, houses that were not legitimate targets[1251]. As far as the fires were concerned, they were not necessary from a military point of view. General Duncan testified:

> There was a requirement to get to the buildings on top of the hill because they represented a good defensive area, which is why it had held out for so long. There was not a requirement, in my opinion, to destroy those buildings, which is what happened, because the military worth of the buildings - on the top of the hill - was they provided the cover and protection and ability to hold a strong defensive position, which is what they've done. By setting fire to them, which is what happened after the initial assault, that achieved no -- - to my mind, [...] no military purpose whatsoever[1252].

558. As regards the pillage, the Trial Chamber does accept that civilians could have taken part, as the Defence maintained[1253]. But the testimony and exhibits clearly show that, having driven the ABiH out of the sector, the soldiers indulged in systematic pillage of the Muslim dwellings[1254] of Grbavica prior to setting them on fire:

[1247] Defence Brief, book VI, p. 395.
[1248] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 19693-19694. The Defence maintained that most of the houses in Grbavica were damaged between October 1993 and March 1994, and accordingly were not torched during the attack (Defence Brief, book VI, p. 396).
[1249] Witness Marin, PT p. 13701; witness Palavra, PT p. 16797. The Croats who moved into the Muslim houses in Grbavica were refugees from other villages or towns (witness Palavra, PT p. 16790).
[1250] Witness Whitworth PT p. 10412.
[1251] The witness Marin maintains that some houses were 80% burnt (PT pp. 13701-13702). P712 (Milinfosum of 8 September 1993); "the majority of the houses (approx. 50) in the village are at present ablaze". See also witness Hunter, PT pp. 5087-5088; P433/21-23; P433/25-27, P433/29-31.
[1252] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9187-9188. Furthermore, the witness maintained that it would have been in the interest of the HVO to leave these buildings as they were (PT pp. 9213-9214). He added that, having spent seven months in the La{va Valley, [he understood that] the procedure of attacking and then torching was consistent with the attacks the HVO had launched in the whole of the La{va Valley (PT pp. 9212-9213).
[1253] Witness Bower, PT pp. 9402-9403.
[1254] The witness Bower said of the pillage: "initially it was by HVO soldiers. They were taking electrical items, furniture" (PT pp. 9402-9403). He noted that "there were some Croat families living in the village and their houses remained untouched, but the Muslim population were cleared out of their houses" (PT pp. 9402-9403).

> After they had actually been through and cleared it, there was a systematic burning of all the buildings that we saw in there [...] I observed numerous soldiers and [...] there was some looting going on by the HVO soldiers and all the buildings had been set on fire[1255]

559. The Trial Chamber favours the view expressed by the witnesses who maintained that the Bosnian Croats burned Muslim houses in order to dissuade Muslims from returning[1256]. Those acts of destruction were not justified by military necessity and acts of looting were committed.

c) General Bla{ki}'s responsibility

560. As stated above, the Trial Chamber accepts that the villages of Ve~eriska, Ga~ice and Grbavica could have represented a military interest such as to justify their being the target of an attack. But the Trial Chamber also observes that, at the time or afterwards, the attacks gave rise to destruction, pillage, forcible transfer of civilians, all committed by the troops the Trial Chamber has established the accused controlled.

561. The Trial Chamber points out in that connection that, for those attacks, General Bla{ki} used forces which he knew, according to his own testimony, were, at least in part, difficult to control, and at the very time when they were being called into question for the perpetration of earlier crimes. Finally, the Trial Chamber notes that it has established that the accused was the commander of the troops involved, including the police forces.

562. The Trial Chamber concludes that General Bla{ki} is responsible for the crimes committed in the three villages on the basis of his negligence, in other words for having ordered acts which he could only reasonably have anticipated would lead to crimes.

[1255] Witness Whitworth, PT p. 10273. See also witness Djidi}: "And on the second day I saw houses burning. At first I thought they were set on fire by ammunition, flammable ammunition, but it was a mistake. I looked more closely and saw soldiers, and not only soldiers but also civilians who were looting houses in Grbavica, probably even them, as early as then the army had retreated from Grbavica. When they took whatever they wanted to take from the houses they set them on fire. At one point, one could see over 100 houses on fire. All of those houses belonged to Muslims. Only a few houses belonging to Muslims escaped this fate in a village which had over 200 houses". The witness also noted that the Grbavica mosque had burned (PT of 29 July 1997 pp. 1262-1263).
[1256] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9213-9214. See also the witness Whitworth, PT pp. 10275-10276.

C. The municipality of Busovaca

563. As a general rule, the Defence did not deny that crimes had been committed in the villages of Loncari and Ocehnici, inter alia[1257]. It claimed however that Tihomir Blaškic was not responsible for those crimes.

1. The attacks against the villages in the municipality of Busovaca

564. Around mid-April 1993, at nearly the same time as they were launching offensives against villages in the municipality of Vitez and Kiseljak, HVO and Military Police troops took the villages of Loncari and Ocehnici by assault.

a) Loncari

565. Before the April 1993 attacks, Loncari was an essentially Muslim village. At the 1991 census, it was made up of 44 Croats, 249 Muslims and 1 Yugoslav[1258]. Puti{, Jelinak and Merdani were neighbouring villages.

566. In the evening of 16 April 1993, Croatian women and children, warned of imminent attacks, left the area[1259]. A few hours later, the HVO artillery pounded the villages of Jelinak, Merdani and Puti{[1260]. The civilians from these villages then fled in the direction of Busovaca[1261].

567. In the morning of 17 April, HVO soldiers[1262] belonging to the Nikola Šubic Zrinski brigade[1263] and members of the D`okeri unit[1264] entered Loncari and systematically searched the Muslim houses, looking for men of fighting age[1265] and weapons[1266]. Twenty-five of [1257] Defence Brief, book 6, F, p. 352 and book 6, J, p. 368.

[1258] P46 and witness Q, PT p. 5150.
[1259] Witness Q, PT pp. 5151-5152.
[1260] Witness Q, PT pp. 5167-5170.
[1261] Witness Q, PT pp. 5168-5169.
[1262] Witness Q. PT pp. 5154-5155. According to this witness, the soldiers who entered Loncari on 16 April 1993 wore the HVO insignia on their uniform (PT, pp. 5154-5155) them[1267] were arrested and taken to Kaonik prison where they were detained. Moreover, around 200 people, including women, children and old people, from the villages of Jelinak and Puti{[1268]were assembled at the mekteb of the mosque[1269]. They were threatened with death if they escaped[1270]and several of them were beaten[1271]. During that time, Croatian soldiers were torching homes and stables by dousing them with petrol[1272]. Many Muslim civilians were forced to leave the village and to go to Vrhovine[1273]. Once there, they took refuge in cellars and once again had to endure heavy shelling[1274].
[1263] Witness Blaškic, PT p. 21726.
[1264] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5255-5257.
[1265] Witness Q, PT pp. 5152-5153.

568. The houses and stables belonging to the Muslims of Loncari were torched[1275]. The houses in the villages of Jelinak and Puti{ were also set on fire[1276]. The livestock were burned alive[1277]. Around ten people have since been declared missing[1278].

b) Ocehnici

569. Before the April 1993 hostilities, Ocehnici was an entirely Muslim hamlet. At the 1991 census, it was made up of 33 Muslims[1279].

570. On 27 January 1993, HVO soldiers entered the village, arrested the men of fighting age and seized their weapons[1280]. They drove them to Kaonik prison[1281], where they were detained until February[1282]. During their detention, they were subjected to all sorts of brutality[1283].

[1266] Witness Q, PT p. 5158-5159.
[1267] Witness Q, PT pp. 5168-5169.
[1268] Witness Q, PT pp. 5159-5160.
[1269] Witness Q, PT pp. 5159-5160.
[1270] Witness Q, PT pp. 5159-5160.
[1271] Witness Q, PT pp. 5163-5164.
[1272] Witness Q, PT pp. 5158-5160.
[1273] Witness Q, PT pp. 5164-5165.
[1274] Witness Q, PT pp. 5164-5165.
[1275] Witness Q, PT pp. 5160-5161, pp. 5170-5171.
[1276] Witness Q, PT pp. 5169-5170.
[1277] Witness Q, PT pp. 5170-5171.
[1278] Witness Q, PT pp. 5179-5180.
[1279] P46.
[1280] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5213-5214.
[1281] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5214-5215.
[1282] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5216-5217.
[1283] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5213-5214.

571. Three months later, in the afternoon of 19 April, soldiers from the Military Police, and more precisely the Fourth Battalion, acting on the orders of Paško Ljubi~ic[1284], entered the village[1285], fired shots and systematically set fire to the houses and farms belonging to Muslims[1286]. They killed around five civilians, women included[1287], and burned the bodies[1288].

572. The Muslim homes in the village of Ocehnici were torched[1289]. Several people were wounded[1290] and at least five civilians were killed[1291]. Livestock were also slaughtered[1292]

c) Conclusions

i) The organized and massive nature of the attacks

573. The Trial Chamber is convinced that the aforementioned crimes were organized in advance, as is evidenced by the following facts:

- the assaults on Loncari and Ocehnici were launched respectively on 17 and 19 April 1993, that is to say practically at the same time as offensives were being carried out in the areas of Vitez and Kiseljak;

- the consequences of the attacks were similar to those on the villages in the municipalities of Vitez and Kiseljak: unlawful confinement of the men of fighting age, rounding up then deportation of the elderly, women and children, intimidation of civilians by murder and beating, and systematic torching and pillage of homes and farms;

- finally and more specifically, the Croatian inhabitants of Loncari were warned of the attacks and left the village several hours before the start of the hostilities.

[1284] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5235-5236.
[1285] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5234-5235. According to witness Nuhagic's account, the soldiers who entered the village wore masks so as not to be recognised.
[1286] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5217-5218.
[1287] Witness Nuhagic, PT p. 5219, pp. 5247-5248.
[1288] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5248-5249.
[1289] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5217-5218.
[1290] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5217-5218.
[1291] P242.
[1292] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5234-5235.

574. The Trial Chamber also considered that the attacks were massive. Although the Croatian soldiers mainly targeted only two villages in the municipality of Busovaca, those villages were totally destroyed and most of their inhabitants were driven out.

575. Busova~a, which had a population of two to three thousand Muslims before the hostilities, only has thirty or so Muslims living there today[1293].

ii) The civilian and Muslim nature of the targeted populations

576. The Trial Chamber finds that the offensives were not justified by military reasons, but essentially targeted Muslim civilians and their possessions[1294].

577. The Trial Chamber recognised that a Muslim resistance army had progressively been formed: groups of soldiers had organised themselves in order to take turns in patrolling the village[1295]. It also noted that the villages of Jelinak, Merdani and Puti{ together with the hamlet of Lon~ari were at the front line which separated the HVO forces from those of the ABiH and that there was intense fighting between the factions there. In that connection, the Trial Chamber noted that trenches had been dug, particularly in the village of Lon~ari[1296]. It found, finally, that the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina controlled in particular the villages of Jelinak and Merdani at the material time[1297].

578. However, the Trial Chamber points out that the inhabitants of O~ehni}i[1298]and Lon~ari[1299] had been disarmed before the attacks and were therefore unable to put up any resistance to the regular HVO troops' and Military Police's assaults.

579. More fundamentally, the Trial Chamber is convinced, given the nature and scale of the crimes committed, that the target for these troops was not only military but essentially

[1293] Witness FF, PT p. 6187.
[1294] According to the witness Nuhagi}, the attack on the town of O~ehni}i was in reprisal for the torching of the Draga barracks by the ABiH (PT p. 5231-5232).
[1295] Witness Q, PT p. 5150. The witness Q told investigators from the Office of the Prosecutor that Muslim men aged between 15 and 50 had been mobilised (PT pp. 5176-5177).
[1296] Witness Q, PT pp. 5177-5178.
[1297] Witness Q, PT pp. 5181-5183.
[1298] Witness Nuhagic, PT pp. 5213-5214.
[1299] Witness Q, PT pp. 5176-5177.

civilian. Indeed, it was private dwellings belonging to Muslims that were pillaged and then destroyed and farms and livestock that were burned. Moreover, it was in very large part Muslim civilians who were killed or unlawfully confined or beaten, then finally driven away towards territories under the control of the Bosnia-Herzegovina army.

2. The responsibility of General Bla{ki}

a) The arguments of the parties

580. According to the Prosecutor, General Bla{ki} orally ordered the commands of the HVO units involved in the crimes to take Lon~ari and O~ehni}i[1300] by assault and to "cleanse" them. In support of that allegation, the Prosecution relied on the fact that the villages were attacked in exactly the same way as all the villages in the La{va Valley[1301]. Furthermore, the Prosecution maintained that regular HVO forces and members of the D`okeri unit carried out the crimes at Lon~ari[1302] and at O~ehni}i[1303].

581. The Defence argued however that the accused did not order the destruction of the village of Lon~ari[1304]. In that connection, it said that the order given by General Bla{ki} to the Military Police on 16 April 1993 at 1:30 was only to defend the Vitez-Busova~a road and to prevent any attack by the ABiH from Zenica and from Kuber[1305]. The Defence added that the crimes were probably committed by the D`okeri over which it claimed that the accused had no control[1306]. Finally, it asserted that the destruction of Muslim homes could have been collateral damage resulting from the fighting between ABiH and HVO forces which was taking place in Jelinak and in Puti{[1307]. As regards the crimes committed at O~ehni}i, the Defence recognised that the attack was carried out by the commander of the Military Police Fourth Battalion and his men[1308]. It maintained however that that unit was not under the control of the accused but answered directly to the central office of the Military Police[1309].

[1300] Prosecutor's Brief, book VII, para. 2.164
[1301] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.165.
[1302] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.157 to 2.159.
[1303] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.162 to 2.163
[1304] Defence Brief, book VI, J, p. 366.
[1305] Defence Brief, book VI, J, p. 366.
[1306] Defence Brief, book VI, J, p. 367.
[1307] Defence Brief, book VI, J, p. 368.
[1308] Defence Brief, book IV, F, p. 351.
[1309] Defence Brief, book IV, F, p. 351.

Moreover, the Defence asserted that because General Bla{ki} had not received a report on these events, he could not know of the punishable acts carried out at O~ehni}i[1310].

b) The individual criminal responsibility of General Bla{ki}

582. The Trial Chamber will first of all show that at the time of the attacks, General Bla{ki} was the superior of the troops involved in the crimes. Then it will show from the content of the orders and reports which were submitted at the hearing and especially the general background against which the atrocities were committed that the accused was directly implicated in the offensives in the villages of Lon~ari and O~ehni}i.

i) The accused was the superior of the troops involved

583. The soldiers guilty of the crimes committed in April 1993 at Lon~ari and O~ehni}i belonged to the regular HVO forces[1311], the Military Police Fourth Battalion, and more specifically the D`okeri unit[1312].

584. It was not denied that the regular HVO troops in Busova~a – including the Nikola [ubi} Brigade which operated in the area – took orders directly from the accused[1313].

585. The Trial Chamber is convinced, despite the Defence assertions to the contrary, and, as it already found in respect of the crimes committed in the municipality of Vitez, that the Military Police Fourth Battalion and the D`okeri unit were also under the authority of General Bla{ki} at the material time.

586. That finding is essentially based on the accused's testimony. It is further confirmed by the corroborating allegations of several witnesses. During his evidence before the Trial Chamber, the accused himself said that the Military Police was under his command at the [1310] Defence Brief, book IV, F, p. 351.

[1311] Witness Q, PT pp. 5153-5154, pp. 5168-5169.
[1312] Witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5235-5236, pp. 5255-5257.
[1313] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 20579.

time of the criminal events which took place at Lon~ari and O~ehni}i[1314]. Several witnesses also accepted that the Military Police was subordinate to the command of the accused[1315].

587. That allegation was corroborated by the fact that during 1993 the accused regularly addressed orders to the Military Police. Those orders took many different forms[1316] and referred both to organisational aspects[1317] and to the conduct of the troops[1318]. Moreover, the accused also gave the Military Police several combat preparation orders[1319] and combat orders [1320], which is undeniably evidence of the control he exercised over it.

ii) The accused was responsible for the attacks on the villages of Lon~ari and O~ehni}i

588. The Trial Chamber asserted that during the material time, General Bla{ki} gave numerous orders to the units involved in the crimes, and especially to the Nikola [ubi} Zrinski Brigade, and deployed them in the area where the crimes were committed[1321]. Moreover, the reports that the accused received from the commanders of that brigade are evidence that he was fully informed of the developments of their mission on the ground[1322].

589. Admittedly, the Trial Chamber does not stricto sensu have in its possession any order to seize the villages of Lon~ari and O~ehni}i addressed to those units. But then clearly it does not have all the orders issued by the accused during the events, as is obvious from the irregular numbering of the exhibits submitted during the hearing. In that regard, the Trial Chamber noted that it received only ten or so of General Bla{ki}'s orders covering the period from 17 April at 04:00 hours to 19 April at 18:45 hours[1323], whereas forty numbers separate the first document from the last[1324]. It also noted that the accused often addressed his troops orally.

[1314] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 18627, p. 20592.
[1315] Witness HH, PT p. 6917; see also witness Baggesen, PT p. 1907.
[1316] See P422, P456/5, P456/7, P456/26, P456/30, P456/33, P456/34, P456/38, P498/9 and D87, D208, D263, D380, D382, D400, D405, D511.
[1317] See P456/21, P456/31.
[1318] See P423, P424, P456/40, P456/27, P456/41, P456/77, P498/7, P498/8 and D354, D357, D368, D384, D386, D388, D389, D391, D456/44.
[1319] See P456/6, P456/35, P456/85, D267, D298.
[1320] See D268, D296.
[1321] See D268, D296.
[1322] D277, D288, D289, D299, D300, D301.
[1323] P456/45 and D284, D296, D297, D298, D299, D300, D301.
[1324] The first order given on 17 April at 04:00 hours is numbered 291/93 whereas the last is numbered 331/93.

590. More fundamentally, the Trial Chamber is convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that it followed from the scale of the atrocities carried out, from the scale of the assets used to achieve them and especially from the fact that the attacks were carried out at the same time and in the same way on the municipalities of Busova~a, Vitez (particularly the villages of Ahmi}i, Nadioci, Piri}i and [anti}i) and Kiseljak (particularly the villages of Behri}i, Gomionica, Gromiljak, Polje Vi{njica, Rotilj and Vi{njica) that General Bla{ki} had ordered the offensives against Loncari and Ocehnici.

591. In that connection, the Trial Chamber points out, as it did earlier[1325], that the crimes committed at Busova~a were similar to those carried out in other municipalities: murders, beatings, unlawful confinements and forced expulsions of Muslim civilians and torching of private homes. It notes, finally, that all these crimes are set against the same background of persecution of Muslim populations in central Bosnia of which they are the most extreme form.

592. The Trial Chamber is also convinced beyond any reasonable doubt that by giving orders to the Military Police in April 1993, when he knew full well that there were criminals in its ranks[1326], the accused intentionally took the risk that very violent crimes would result from their participation in the offensives. Granted, in November 1992 and March 1993, General Bla{ki} ordered that the torching of houses stop and had asked commanders, in particular those of regular HVO troops and of the Military Police, to identify the criminals responsible for those acts[1327]. But he almost never punished these criminals and never took steps to put them in a position where they could do no harm by imposing measures that would have prevented the very serious crimes that occurred at Loncari and Ocehnici from being repeated .

[1325] Witness Morsink, PT pp. 9877-9879 (see above, discussion of Ahmici).
[1326] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18395-18396.
[1327] P456/16.

D. The municipality of Kiseljak

593. From a general point of view, the Defence did not deny that the HVO committed crimes against the Muslim civilian populations in the region of Kiseljak in April and June 1993[1328]. However it did deny that the accused was responsible for these crimes.

1. The April and June 1993 attacks against the villages in the Kiseljak enclave

594. On 18 April, the villages with a high Muslim population in the north of the region, Behri}i, Gomionica, Gromiljak, Hercezi, Polje Vi{njica, Vi{njica, Rotilij and Svinjarevo were systematically taken by assault by HVO troops. On 12 June, it was the turn of the Muslim villages to the south of the municipality, Grahovci, Han Plo~a et Tulica and their inhabitants to suffer the offensives of the Bosnian Croat army.

a) The attacks on the villages in the north of the municipality of Kiseljak

i) Behri}i and Gomionica

595. Before the April 1993 hostilities, Behri}i and Gomionica were essentially Muslim villages. At the 1991 census, Behri}i was made up of 153 Muslims and 45 Croats, whereas Gomionica had 417 Muslims and 6 Croats[1329]. Those villages are situated about 6.5 km from the Kiseljak barracks.

596. The attacks on these entities took place in two successive stages: first an artillery offensive then an infantry offensive. From 18 to 21 April 1993, the HVO artillery shelled the two villages with at least 50 shells, including incendiary shells[1330]. Many civilians then took refuge in the Visoko municipality[1331]. As soon as the shelling ended and the soldiers who were attempting to resist these assaults withdrew[1332], the HVO infantry systematically set fire to and looted houses and stables belonging to Muslims of the lower part of Gomionica[1333].

[1328] The Defence acknowledged on several occasions in its Brief that HVO soldiers carried out crimes in the Kiseljak region (see book VI, N, p. 400, p. 410, p. 418, p. 419, p. 420 and p. 421).
[1329] P46.
[1330] Witness SS, PT pp. 9267-9269.
[1331] Witness SS, PT pp. 9268-9269.
[1332] Witness SS, PT pp. 9269-9271.
[1333] Witness SS, PT pp. 9269-9274.

Many Muslims, including soldiers[1334], then took refuge for several weeks in the higher part of the village. During June 1993, the HVO artillery and the infantry launched fresh offensives against Gomionica[1335].

597. All the Muslim inhabitants were finally expelled from these villages. A hundred and thirty-one homes and 98 stables were destroyed[1336]. The two religious sites there were also torched[1337].

ii) Gromiljak

598. Before the April 1993 attack, Gromiljak was a mainly Croatian village. At the 1991 census, it was made up of 425 Croats, 143 Muslims and 16 Yugoslavs[1338]. The village is 5.3 km to the north of the Kiseljak barracks.

599. On 18 April 1993, the HVO infantry entered Gromiljak in order to disarm its Muslim inhabitants[1339]. Then it held part of them in the basement of a private home[1340]. The women and children were released one week later whereas the men of fighting age were held for a fortnight and taken to the front lines and made to dig trenches[1341]. After they were released, the Croatian authorities forced the Muslims to report each day to the local police station and to comply with a curfew imposed upon them from 21:00 hours to 05:00 hours[1342].

600. The HVO soldiers pillaged[1343] and torched the Muslim homes of the village and drove away their inhabitants. They slightly damaged the mosque by setting fire to it[1344].

[1334] Witness SS, PT pp. 9279-9280.
[1335] Witness SS, PT pp. 9275-9278.
[1336] Witness SS, PT pp. 9277-9280.
[1337] Witness SS, PT pp. 9278-9280.
[1338] P46.
[1339] D305; witness LL, PT pp. 8014-8015.
[1340] Witness LL, PT pp. 8016-8017.
[1341] Witness LL, PT pp. 8016-8018.
[1342] Witness LL, PT pp. 8017-8018.
[1343] Witness LL, PT pp. 8062-8064.
[1344] Witness LL, PT p. 8031.

iii) Hercezi

601. Before the April 1993 fighting, Hercezi was a mainly Muslim village. At the 1991 census, 42 Croats and 143 Muslims lived there[1345].

602. On 18 April 1993, the HVO attacked the area around Hercezi with artillery fire[1346]. The Muslim soldiers who were defending the village then fled into the forest for around two days[1347]. The Croatian military then entered the village and demanded that the Muslims surrender any weapons they possessed, threatening to kill all the inhabitants, including the women, children and the elderly[1348]. After having obeyed that order[1349], the Muslim residents of the village were put under house arrest for several months and forced by the HVO to report three times a day to a specific location[1350]. As from August, the men of fighting age were taken to the front in order to dig trenches[1351].

603. In September, all the inhabitants of Hercezi were taken to the Rotilj camp[1352], then to the Kiseljak barracks where they were driven to the front to dig trenches[1353].

604. The HVO soldiers pillaged the private homes and seized all the livestock[1354]. Croats moved into the houses originally occupied by Muslims, whom they had forced to leave the village[1355].

iv) Polje Vi{nijica and Vi{nijica

605. Before the April 1993 hostilities, Vi{nijica was a village with a Muslim majority. At the 1991 census, it had 216 Croats, 714 Muslims and 1 Serb[1356]. The village is situated 5.2 km from the Kiseljak barracks. 444 Croats, 175 Muslims and 3 Serbs lived in Polje Vi{nijica[1357].

[1345] P46.
[1346] Witness JJ, PT p. 7398.
[1347] Witness JJ, PT p. 7398.
[1348] Witness JJ, PT p. 7399.
[1349] Witness DD, PT pp. 7035-7036. According to the witness, since the inhabitants of the village accepted to surrender their weapons, the village was not torched like the other villages in the area.
[1350] Witness DD, PT pp. 7036-7037; witness JJ, PT p. 7399.
[1351] Witness DD, PT pp. 7036-7037; witness JJ, PT pp. 7400-7401.
[1352] Witness DD, PT pp. 7037-7038; witness JJ, PT pp. 7404-7406.
[1353] Witness JJ, PT pp. 7410-7414.
[1354] Witness JJ, PT pp. 7400-7402.
[1355] Witness DD, PT pp. 7041-7042.
[1356] P46.
[1357] P46.

606. Around 13 April 1993, HVO soldiers dug trenches above Vi{njica[1358]. The Croatian inhabitants, warned of an imminent attack, then left the village[1359].

607. The HVO attacked the villages of Polje Vi{nijica and Vi{nijica during the morning of 18 April 1993[1360]. As with the other villages apart from Gromiljak, Vi{njica was attacked in two phases: first artillery fire for half a day[1361], then, once Muslim resistance had been overcome[1362], the assaults of the infantry soldiers. Soldiers picked out the men of fighting age whom they sent to dig trenches[1363]. They also killed several civilians[1364] and locked some civilians in silos situated at the border of the village. They looted their houses and torched them by dousing them with petrol[1365].

608. At Vi{jnica, they burned 40 of the 150 houses belonging to Muslims[1366]. They looted the mosque and expelled the civilians[1367]. At Polje Vi{njica, the HVO also burned most of the Muslim houses and forced their inhabitants to flee[1368].

v) Rotilj

609. Before the April 1993 attack, Rotilj was a mainly Muslim village. At the 1991 census, it was made up of 440 Muslims, 17 Croats and 1 Yugoslav[1369]. The village is 4.6 km to the west of the Kiseljak barracks.

610. In the night of 17 to 18 April 1993, the HVO forces surrounded Rotilj[1370]. On 18 April, the Commander of the Parizovici HVO, Mato Bojo asked those responsible for the TO to surrender all the weapons in the possession of the Muslim inhabitants of the village[1371].

[1358] Witness AA, PT p. 6618.
[1359] Witness Christie, PT p. 7857.
[1360] Witness Christie, p. 5842 of the French transcript of the video entitled "We are all neighbours".
[1361] Witness AA, PT pp. 6621-6622; Witness Christie, PT, p. 5842 of the French transcript of the video entitled "We are all neighbours".
[1362] According to witness AA, the village of Vi{njica included a military unit of 10 to 20 very poorly armed men (PT pp. 6621-6622)
[1363] Witness AA, PT p. 6624.
[1364] Witness AA, PT pp. 6626-6627.
[1365] Witness AA, PT pp. 6626-6627.
[1366] P95; witness Baggesen, PT pp. 1965-1966, 22 August 1997.
[1367] Witness AA, PT pp. 6638-6640.
[1368] P95.
[1369] P46.
[1370] Witness KK, PT pp. 7928-7929.
[1371] Witness KK, PT p. 7931.

Despite the fact that the TO leaders agreed to the demand and although very few people had any weapons[1372], the HVO soldiers attacked the village early in the afternoon of 18 April 1993. The offensive started with artillery fire from the direction of Przevici[1373]. The civilians who had not resisted then took refuge in the basements of their homes[1374]. The attack was carried out by HVO[1375] infantry soldiers who searched the houses looking for weapons[1376] as soon as the shelling stopped and set fire to several of them. They also killed some civilians[1377].

611. Moreover, the HVO rounded up around 600 Muslims[1378], mainly women and elderly people[1379], including some from neighbouring villages[1380], in the south-east of the village. Those people could not leave[1381]the fifteen to twenty houses abandoned by their owners[1382], since they were constantly watched over by HVO marksmen[1383] hidden in the hills overlooking the village[1384]. They suffered from overcrowding, from the lack of electricity and especially from the lack of water and food[1385]. Several of them were taken by HVO soldiers to the front lines to dig trenches[1386].

612. During these assaults, seven Muslim civilians were killed[1387]. Commander Baggesen heard it said that a woman was raped before being killed, that an elderly couple had been burned alive and that a father and his son had been decapitated[1388]. Captain Lanthier, an officer with the Canadian armed forces who served with UNPROFOR from April to November 1993, also related that several people had been killed violently[1389]. Several dwellings were pillaged[1390]and torched[1391].

[1372] Witness KK, PT p. 7931.
[1373] Witness KK, PT p. 7932.
[1374] Witness KK, PT p. 7932.
[1375] Witness KK stated that he saw HVO soldiers in the village of Rotilj wearing black scarves on their faces (PT p. 7934).
[1376] Witness KK, PT p. 7934.
[1377] Witness KK, PT p. 7935; witness Lanthier, PT pp. 8255-8256.
[1378] P298; witness Liebert, PT. p. 8792.
[1379] Witness Lanthier, PT pp. 8296-8297.
[1380] Witness JJ, PT p. 7404; witness Liebert, PT p. 8792.
[1381] Witness AA, PT p. 6658; witness JJ, PT pp. 7409-7410.
[1382] Witness JJ, PT p. 7404; witness Liebert, PT p. 8792.
[1383] P298; witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997 p. 1954.
[1384] Witness Baggesen, PT pp. 1952-1953.
[1385] P298; witness Landry, PT p. 7543; witness Liebert, PT p. 8792.
[1386] Witness JJ, PT pp. 7406-7407; witness KK, PT p. 7936; witness Lanthier PT pp. 8297-8298.
[1387] Witness KK, PT pp. 7943-7944; witness Liebert PT p. 8767.
[1388]Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1952-1953.
[1389] Witness Lanthier PT pp. 8255-8256.
[1390] Witness KK, PT pp. 7944-7945.

vi) Svinjarevo

613. Before the April 1993 fighting, Svinjarevo was an almost exclusively Muslim village. At the 1991 census, it was made up of 282 Muslims and one Yugoslav[1392]. The village is 7.3 km north of the Kiseljak barracks.

614. On 18 April 1993, towards 06:00 hours, the HVO launched its attack by firing[1393] 60, 80 and 120 millimetre mortars and anti-aircraft weapons[1394]. As soon as the shelling stopped, soldiers from the TO organised the evacuation of about 200 civilians from the village who went in the direction of the municipality of Visoko[1395]. The HVO infantry entered Svinjarevo and the neighbouring villages of Rausevac, Purišević, Japojrevo and Jehovac. It torched several houses belonging to Muslims[1396], sometimes using petrol[1397]. The soldiers also took civilians to the Kiseljak barracks where they were imprisoned for several weeks. The attacks carried on until 23 April 1993[1398].

615. During the offensives, ten Muslim civilians were killed[1399]. Several hundred people fled in the direction of Visoko. Not a single Muslim remained in Svinjarevo after these events[1400]. Ten houses were torched in Purišević and four houses in Rausevac[1401].

b) The attacks against the villages in the south of the municipality of Kiseljak

i) Grahovci and Han Ploca

616. Before the June 1993 hostilities, Grahovci was inhabited by 66 Muslims and 2 Croats[1402]. Han Ploca had a population of 259 Muslims and 45 Croats[1403]. Those villages are about ten km to the south of Kiseljak.

[1391] The witness Lanthier attempted to go to the village of Rotilj on 19 April, but was prevented from doing so by HVO soldiers forming a roadblock at the entry to the village (PT pp. 8279-8280).
[1392] P46.
[1393] Witness WW, PT pp. 9688-9689.
[1394] Witness WW, PT pp. 9732-9733.
[1395] Witness WW, PT p. 9691.
[1396] Witness WW, PT pp. 9689-9696.
[1397] Witness WW, PT pp. 9738-9739.
[1398] Witness WW, PT pp. 9698-9699.
[1399] Witness WW, PT pp. 9698-9699.
[1400] Witness WW, PT p. 9705.
[1401] Witness WW, PT pp. 9709-9710.

617. On 12 June 1993, the HVO ordered the inhabitants of the two villages to surrender their weapons[1404], which they refused to do[1405], partly because of the proximity of the Serbian front [1406]. Towards 14:00 hours[1407], the HVO artillery then shelled Grahovci and Han Ploca[1408]. The shelling was carried out with the assistance of the Bosnian Serb army[1409]. Many Muslim civilians fled, especially into the neighbouring woods[1410].

618. Once any resistance was overcome, on 13 June towards 18:00 hours[1411], the HVO infantry[1412] erupted into the villages and systematically looted and torched the houses and stables belonging to Muslims[1413]. It also beat[1414] and violently killed several inhabitants[1415]. The Han Ploca mosque was burned[1416] and its imam killed[1417]. Many civilians, mainly men of fighting age[1418], were taken prisoner and detained in the Kiseljak barracks[1419]. They were deprived of sufficient food, beaten and made to dig trenches[1420] .

619. All the Muslims left the village during the offensives and about sixty of them have since been declared missing[1421]. Their houses were burned and looted by the HVO soldiers[1422].

[1402] P46.
[1403] P46.
[1404] Witness QQ, PT p. 8936; witness RR, PT pp. 8973-8974.
[1405] Witness TT, PT p. 9343; witness UU, PT p. 9530.
[1406] Witness QQ, PT p. 8935. The villages of Grahovci and Han Ploca were 700m and 1 km respectively from the Serbian front.
[1407] Witness QQ, PT p. 8936.
[1408] Witness RR, PT pp. 8974-8975; witness UU, PT pp. 9530-9531.
[1409]. Witness TT, PT pp. 9328-9329; witness UU, PT pp. 9530-9531. The witness QQ stated that he saw a tank of the Serbian artillery firing six shells in the direction of Grahovci (PT p. 8938).
[1410] Witness RR, PT pp. 8975-8976; witness TT, PT pp. 9328-9329.
[1411] Witness QQ, PT p. 8937.
[1412] Witness QQ, PT p. 8939; witness UU, PT pp. 9531-9532.
[1413] Witness QQ, PT pp. 8937-8940; witness TT, PT pp. 9328-9329; witness UU, PT pp. 9531-9532.
[1414] Witness UU, PT pp. 9531-9532.
[1415] Witness RR, PT pp. 8989-8995.
[1416] Witness QQ, PT p. 8937; witness TT, PT pp. 9328-9329; witness UU, PT pp. 9532-9533.
[1417] Witness QQ, PT p. 8950; witness RR, PT pp. 8979-8980.
[1418] Witness TT, PT pp. 9329-9330.
[1419] Witness RR, PT pp. 8995-8996.
[1420] Witness TT, PT pp. 9329-9331.
[1421]Witness QQ, PT p. 8950. The witness UU put forward the figure of 95 to 100 for missing persons (PT pp. 9533-9534).
[1422] Witness RR, PT pp. 8983-8984.

ii) Tulica

620. Before the June 1993 hostilities, Tulica was a Muslim village. At the 1991 census, it was inhabited by 278 Muslims and one Croat[1423]. It is 12 km to the south of the Kiseljak barracks.

621. On 12 June 1993, Tulica was attacked by HVO soldiers and by the Maturice sabotage unit[1424]. As in April, they acted in two phases. Assisted by the Serbian forces stationed not far from the village[1425], they started their offensives at about 10:00 hours with artillery fire which went on until about 16:00 hours[1426]. The soldiers then launched an infantry attack. They held the women, children and elderly in a private dwelling. The men of fighting age were taken, then held in the Kiseljak barracks[1427]. Several prisoners were beaten by the barracks guards[1428] and taken to the front to dig trenches[1429]. During the digging work, they were again beaten by HVO soldiers[1430].

622. The HVO forces deliberately looted and torched most of the Muslim dwellings of the village[1431]. They also killed 12 people including 3 women[1432] and drove all the other Muslim residents away from Tulica[1433].

c) Conclusions

623. The offensives of April and June 1993 carried out by the HVO against the municipality of Kiseljak were systematic and massive. Moreover, they were all aimed against the Muslim civilian populations of the region.

[1423] P46.
[1424] Witness NN, PT pp. 8464-8471.
[1425] Witness OO, PT pp. 8662-8663; witness PP, PT p. 8724.
[1426] Witness OO, PT pp. 8634-8636.
[1427] Witness NN, PT pp. 8475-8476.
[1428] Witness NN, PT pp. 8477-8478; witness OO, PT pp. 8654-8655.
[1429] Witness NN, PT p. 8480; witness OO, PT pp. 8655-8656.
[1430] Witness OO, PT pp. 8655-8656.
[1431] Witness NN, PT pp. 8465-8469.
[1432] Witness NN, PT pp. 8470-8477; witness PP, PT pp. 8726-8727.
[1433] Witness OO, PT pp. 8671-8672.

i) The systematic and massive nature of the April and June 1993 attacks

624. There is no doubt whatsoever that these offensives were carried out in execution of a plan or an organised action agreed at a high level of the military hierarchy. This is shown by the fact that the following events occurred together:

- the attacks were launched by the HVO simultaneously on 18 April 1993 against all the villages to the north of the Kiseljak enclave and on 13 June against the villages to the south of the enclave[1434];

- the telephone lines in Rotilj were cut and that village encircled on the eve of the military operations ;

- the Croatian inhabitants of the village of Višnjica were warned of the offensives and left the area before the start of the hostilities;

- the offensives were carried out each time mainly by the same "Ban Jelaci}" Brigade with the help of other units which had been placed under the control of that brigade[1435];

- the attacks on the north of the Kiseljak enclave were carried out 48 hours after those carried out, in a similar manner, against the Muslim villages in the municipality of Vitez, in particular Ahmici, Nadioci, Pirici, and Šantici;

- several of these offensives, mainly those which were launched against the villages of Gomionica, Grahovci, Han Ploca and Tulica were carried out in concert with the Bosnian Serbs' artillery[1436];

[1434] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8295. As Captain Lanthier, a Canadian army officer who served with UNPROFOR from October 1992 to May 1993, pointed out, the attacks had to be "synchronised" and not "the result of chance". According to witness KK, the 18 April attack: "was carried out in an organised manner. When I say "organised manner" I do that because I had – I know certain facts; namely, at the same time, the HVO attacked the villages of Rotilj, Vi{njica, Hercezi, Doci, Gromiljak, Gomionica, Jehovac, Svinjarevo. Therefore, these villages were all attacked on the same day, on 18 April 1993, so I believe this [...] was carried out with a previous plan" (PT p. 7925).

[1435] D300.

[1436] According to the witness Liebert: "We had ample evidence of very close co-ordination and co-operation between the HVO forces, the Bosnian-Croat forces and the Bosnian-Serb forces in our area"(PT p. 8793). That collaboration between the army of the Bosnian Serbs and the HVO was particularly evident in two other ways. The former helped the latter to operate displacements of civilian Croatian populations by providing methods of transport and by allowing them to pass onto their territory, towards HVO controlled zones, especially towards Vare{ and Kiseljak (Witness Liebert, PT, pp. 8773-8775 and witness Morsink, PT p. 9968). The Croatian

- roadblocks were put up by the HVO at the entrance to the main roads leading to Gomionica and Polje Višnjica[1437];

- finally, and more significantly, the offensives were carried out in the same manner.

On that last point, the Trial Chamber notes that all the attacks, except that on Gromiljak[1438], occurred in two clear phases: heavy artillery fire intended to defeat any Muslim inhabitants who refused to surrender, followed by infantry offensives.

625. Those soldiers proceeded in the same way each time: they violently killed certain Muslim civilians, confined those they had decided to spare and from among those, picked out the men of fighting age. The men were mainly taken to the Kiseljak barracks, where they were detained for several months and sent to the front in small groups to dig trenches. Other people, mainly women, children and the elderly were driven to the part of the village of Rotilj which was under HVO surveillance. In most of the villages, the infantry systematically looted, damaged or even destroyed the houses, farms and places of worship of the Muslims, usually by torching them.

626. It was also established that the attacks were massive. They affected at least ten Muslim villages in the Kiseljak municipality. During the attacks, around forty civilians were killed and 250 houses torched. Nearly all the Muslim dwellings in the villages of Behrici, Gromiljak, Gomionica and Polje Višnjica were destroyed. The mosques in Behrici, Gomionica, Gromiljak, Višnjica and Han Ploca were also looted, damaged or demolished.

---

authorities supplied fuel to the Serbian army which was subject to an embargo (witness Lanthier, PT pp. 8305-8306 and see also witness Morsink, PT p. 9968). According to the witness KK, as from the end of May 1992, "[...] there was an agreement between the Kiseljak HVO and the Serb Army" (PT pp. 7914-7915). The witness TT also testified that "co-operation between the Serbs and Croats in these parts was extremely good" (PT pp. 9332-9333).

[1437] Witness LL, PT pp. 8045-8046. The witness Baggesen tried to get to Gomionica and Polje Višnjica after the April 1993 events and was prevented from doing so by lots of HVO road blocks (PT pp. 2003-2007; P93).

[1438] That was probably because the village of Gromiljak was inhabited mainly by Croats that it was spared the HVO artillery.

ii) The civilian and Muslim character of the targeted populations

627. There is no doubt whatsoever that the attacks carried out by the HVO in April and June 1993 were not justified by strictly military reasons but also targeted Muslim civilians and their possessions.

628. In April 1993, the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina was mainly occupied in defending the regions of Visoko[1439], Koscan and Kralupi, which were being subjected to offensives by the Bosnian Serb army[1440]. Furthermore, the villages to the north of the Kiseljak enclave had hardly any military facilities to speak of, nor any trenches[1441].

629. Furthermore, the assets used by the Muslim soldiers to fight against these attacks were trivial compared to those used by the HVO[1442]. The HVO used heavy artillery and anti-tank artillery[1443], 60, 80 and 120 mm mortars and hand-held grenade launchers (RPG7)[1444].

630. Finally, and more fundamentally, it is undeniable that military surveillance had been organised[1445], particularly at Gomionica[1446], Hercezi[1447], Svinjarevo[1448] and Višnjica[1449], and that the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina was present at the time of the offensives carried out in the villages of Svinjarevo and especially Grahovci and Han Plo~a[1450]. Those two villages were very close to the Serbian front lines[1451] and to the territories under the control of the ABiH[1452]. It follows however from the nature and the scale of the crimes perpetrated that the [1439] P298. As regards the village of Rotilj, the ECMM report signed by Lieutenant-Colonel Landry stated that "the village wasn't defended by any ABiH force, since all of the soldiers were deployed in the Visoko area".

[1440] Witness KK, PT p. 8001; witness LL, PT pp. 8044-8045; witness Lanthier, pp. 8331-8332.
[1441] Witness SS, PT pp. 9297-9300 and witness UU, PT p. 9545. The witness KK testified that there were no trenches nor any barracks at Rotilj (PT pp. 7995-7996).
[1442] Witness Liebert, PT pp. 8795-8798; witness RR, PT p. 8008; witness SS, PT pp. 9245-9246; witness UU, PT pp. 9530-9541. The witness KK stated that the Muslims from the village of Rotilj did not counterattack when attacked on 18 April 1993 because they were surrounded by HVO troops (PT pp. 7957-7958).
[1443] Witness Baggesen, PT pp. 1956-1957 of 22 August 1997
[1444] Witness Baggesen, PT pp. 1966-1967 of 22 August 1997
[1445] The witness KK stated that the headquarters of the Jasikovika military unit were in Vi{njica (PT pp. 7975-7976, 7978-7980)
[1446] Witness SS, PT pp. 9244-9245.
[1447] Witness JJ, PT p. 7398. According to the witness: "we organised ourselves in the village. There were about 15 able-bodied men there. We split between two ends of the village; we knew what we needed to protect."
[1448] A unit of about 70 people was stationed in the village of Svinjarevo (Witness WW, PT p. 9718)
[1449] Witness AA, PT pp. 6621-6622. In relation to the defence of the village of Vi{njica, the witness Christie stated that : "Muslim men decided to conduct their own patrol within the village. This amounted to six men who would gather in a house and two at a time they would walk around the village at night, between about 10.00 and 1.00 in the morning to protect their own houses"(PT pp. 9852-9853).
[1450] Witness WW, PT pp. 9719-9721.
[1451] P345.
[1452] Witness QQ, PT p. 8936.

HVO soldiers were not fighting only in order to overcome that armed resistance. They were also seeking to make the Muslim civilian populations flee the municipality and to ensure that they did not return[1453]. In order to achieve this the HVO soldiers mainly acted as follows:

- they terrorised the civilians by intensive shelling, murders and sheer violence;

- they systematically torched and destroyed their private homes and places of worship[1454], usually after looting them;

- they slaughtered the livestock and seized agricultural reserves;

- and finally, they arrested and detained in camps, then finally exchanged or expelled Muslim civilians towards territories under the control of the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

631. In that connection, the Trial Chamber notes that the Kiseljak authorities created an official commission responsible for driving civilians out of the region[1455]. Finally, it points out that the municipality in which 10,000 Muslims lived before the hostilities had only 800 remaining after[1456].

632. All these facts emerge clearly from the consistent findings of many witnesses, including several ECMM officers. According to the report of Major Lars Baggesen, the village of Gomionica was totally destroyed and all its inhabitants had gone[1457]. The report mentioned in relation to Polje Vi{njica that "most of the Muslim houses had been burned and most of the Muslims had left the village"[1458]. Captain Lanthier expressed his "horror in the face of the savagery of the acts"[1459]. He added that "the very nature of these acts was just [1453] The witness Baggesen went to the municipality of Visoko a few days after the events and personally noted that there were 18,908 refugees there, including 1,038 from the municipality of Kiseljak from the villages of Svinjarevo, Jehovac, Gromiljak, Behri}i, Gomionica and Bilalovac (PT p. 2010; P94).

[1454] As witness LL said: "Only Muslim houses, exclusively Muslim houses, not a single Croat house was ever on fire. In the village of Gomionica, which was a Muslim village, there were several Croat houses, maybe two or three, and they remained standing, not a single bullet was shot at them. The targets were only Muslim houses"(PT p. 8069).
[1455] Witness LL, PT p. 8026, p. 8050; witness WW, PT p. 9705.
[1456] Witness Meijboom, PT. p. 10131.
[1457] P95.
[1458] P95.
[1459] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8289.

horrifying"[1460]. Captain Liebert, a Canadian army officer, also noted the "surgical" nature of the damage inflicted on Rotilj and after his visit to the village declared:

> The impression it left with me is very vivid and very striking, because I was taken aback by the surgical nature of the damage, and I use that term because, as you drove through this area, there would be houses that were burnt out. There would be one or two or three, and right in the middle of them you would see another house that was still intact, and indeed, inhabited. And then a little further down the road, there would be more destroyed houses. There was no pattern to this or no immediate pattern and upon talking to the inhabitants, it quickly became clear that the damaged houses were basically the property of Bosnian Muslim civilians, and, in a lot of cases, the undamaged ones were the property of Bosnian Croats[1461]

He added:

> I think it was very discriminating, sir, and I believe the damage for the most part was relegated to Bosnian Muslim houses[1462].

According to the account given by Lieutenant-Colonel Remy Landry:

> Once we arrived, we saw that there had absolutely been some atrocities which had been committed. Specific houses had been burned, burnt houses between houses which had not at all been set on fire. [...] It was clear that the Muslim houses had been burned; that at least one women who was not able to escape on time had been raped and then killed with machine-gun bursts [...] We went to visit a house, if you can call it a house, where the people had been burned[1463].

633. Deborah Christie, a BBC journalist, testified to the discriminatory nature of the destruction at Vi{njica: "there would be a Croat house, then a Muslim house, then a Croat house and the Muslim one in the middle would be destroyed, severely damaged and on several occasions burned out"[1464]. She also said: "it was clear from the state of the houses, which we knew quite well by then, that the people had had to leave in a terrible hurry, that they had taken absolutely nothing"[1465].

634. In conclusion, and as was pointed out by Captain Lanthier, who was able to visit many of the villages in the Kiseljak enclave after the hostilities:

> What had happened in the Kiseljak pocket is what is known as ethnic cleansing, where deliberately the citizens had been attacked, that is, those citizens of Muslim origin and

[1460] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8289.
[1461] Witness Liebert, PT, pp. 8753-8754.
[1462] Witness Liebert, PT, p. 8866 (emphasis added).
[1463] Witness Landry, PT pp. 7542-7543. See also P298.
[1464] Witness Christie, PT p. 7857 (emphasis added).
[1465] Witness Christie, PT p. 7857 (emphasis added).

> only them. The others had been left untouched. It wasn't specifically the villages that were attacked but specifically people within the villages. That was what allowed me – that is the conclusion I came to[1466]. [...] In my mind, it was clear, and even more so in retrospect, that the operations that were carried out in the Vitez and Kiseljak pockets constituted ethnic cleansing of the Muslim population living there. They were carried out in the military fashion. The tactics utilised and the use of the land and all the other factors, which I have already mentioned, indicates quite clearly that [the situation was not] that one day to the next, a farmer decides to exterminate his neighbours, but rather a systematic extermination [...] When you look at what happened in Vitez two days later, this thing continued in the Kiseljak pocket, and then several days later, in Breza, in this 302nd Brigade, I was told that the same thing was being prepared for Vare{ and Stupni Do. And I was told by this brigade that he feared for Stupni Do. History showed later on that the exact same thing was to happen there. So it was systematic, it was organised, and there was no doubt whatsoever that this was a military operation against a civilian population[1467].

He also stated: "except for [in one] house, [...] around Gromiljak, I didn't see any presence of human beings in those villages"[1468]. Major Baggesen also acknowledged that "it was obvious that ethnic cleansing had taken place in the area"[1469].

2. The responsibility of General Bla{ki}

635. To begin, the Trial Chamber will very succinctly recall the main arguments advanced by the Prosecution and the Defence. It will then analyse General Bla{ki}'s individual criminal responsibility for the crimes described above.

a) Arguments of the parties

i) The Prosecution

636. The Prosecutor asserted that General Bla{ki} ordered HVO units, and more specifically the Ban Jela~i} Brigade, to attack the villages in the north and south of the Kiseljak enclave on 18 April and 12 June 1993[1470]. She also maintained that by issuing such orders the accused must have known that violations of humanitarian law would very probably result[1471]. In support of these assertions, she presented inter alia two combat orders dated 17 April 1993 in which the accused instructed the commander of the Ban Jela~i} Brigade to seize the villages of Gomionica and Svinjarevo[1472]. Moreover, from the scope of the military

---

[1466] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8293 (emphasis added).
[1467] Witness Lanthier, PT pp. 8337-8338 (emphasis added).
[1468] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8293 (emphasis added).
[1469] Witness Baggesen. PT of 22 August 1997, p. 1967. Witness LL also maintained that the attacks were "followed by ethnic cleansing and evictions" (PT p. 8046).
[1470] Prosecutor's Brief, book VII, para. 2.204.
[1471] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.210.
[1472] Prosecutor's Brief, paras. 2.204 and 2.207.

operations conducted in April and June 1993 and the manner in which they were carried out, she surmised that they were planned by General Bla{ki} at a very high level in the command structure[1473]. The Prosecutor stated lastly that even though the HVO headquarters were geographically isolated from the Kiseljak region, the accused was closely connected to the military units deployed there as the combat reports which he received during the events showed[1474]. In view of this, she also noted that General Bla{ki} travelled to the Kiseljak[1475] enclave on several occasions and that he had available to him advanced communications[1476].

ii) The Defence

637. However, the Defence alleged that the accused did not know of the crimes perpetrated during the unlawful attacks upon the villages[1477]. It asserted firstly that since the army of Bosnia-Herzegovina controlled the road linking the Busova~a and Kiseljak entities as of January 1993, General Bla{ki} could only rarely travel to the enclave[1478]. The Defence further declared that he could only get there with UNPROFOR's assistance[1479]. It finally maintained that the telephone communications between the accused's headquarters and Kiseljak headquarters were regularly cut and intercepted by the ABiH[1480] and that the packet transmission system was neither effective nor rapid[1481].

638. In addition, the Defence contended that on 17 April 1993 the accused ordered the Ban Jela~i} Brigade to seize the positions held by the ABiH in Gomionica and Svinjarevo so as to prevent that army from coming to the aid of the Muslim forces attacking the HVO in the Busova~a and Vitez regions[1482]. Moreover, following the combat operations conducted by the ABiH in the Kiseljak region after 17 April, the accused issued a new order dated 19 April directing the Ban Jela~i} Brigade to take control of the Gomionica heights[1483]. According to the Defence, his objective was strictly military[1484]. Furthermore, in light of the reports which he received as to the progress of the fighting on the ground, he had no "reason to know, [1473] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.252.

[1474] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.204.
[1475] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.208.
[1476] Prosecutor's Brief, para. 2.209.
[1477] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 403.
[1478] Defence Brief, book VI, N, pp. 403-406.
[1479] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 403, p. 405.
[1480] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 406.
[1481] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 407.
[1482] Defence Brief, book VI, N, pp. 408-409.
[1483] Defence Brief, book VI, N, pp. 409-410.
[1484] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 409.

however, that his orders were being destroyed and that civilians and civilian property were being deliberately attacked"[1485].

639. Lastly, the Defence supported that the Mostar HVO General Staff had a forward command post in the Kiseljak region[1486] and directly controlled the "operative group" in this zone[1487]. It asserted too that the return of Ivica Raji} in May 1993 as "HVO Operative Group Commander in Kiseljak"[1488] made the exercise of his functions especially difficult and uncertain[1489]. The Defence claimed that commander Raji} received orders directly from General Petkovi}, his personal friend[1490], and was highly regarded by the soldiers in the Kiseljak HVO, unlike General Bla{ki}[1491].

b) Discussion

640. Initially, the Trial Chamber will analyse the content of the military orders sent by the accused to the commander of the Ban Jela~i} Brigade. It will then infer from the systematic and widespread nature of the crimes perpetrated and the general context within which they occurred that the military operations conducted in April and June 1993 in the Kiseljak enclave were ordered by General Bla{ki} himself.

i) The combat preparation order and combat order

641. The Trial Chamber will first look at the contents of the combat preparation order[1492] and the combat order[1493] of 17 April 1993. It will next determine to whom the orders were sent and the military assets ordered to be used.

a. The texts of the combat preparation order and combat order

642. In orders issued at 09:10 hours and 23:45 hours on 17 April 1993, General Bla{ki} instructed the Kiseljak Ban Jela~i} Brigade to seize several Muslim villages in the municipality.

[1485] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 410.
[1486] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 412.
[1487] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 412.
[1488] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 413.
[1489] Defence Brief, book VI, N, pp. 412-419.
[1490] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 415.
[1491] Defence Brief, book VI, N, p. 415.
[1492] D299.
[1493] D300.

643. The first, a combat preparation order, was addressed to the commander of the brigade instructing him to prepare his troops inter alia to "engage in the blockade of Vi{njica and other villages that can be used by the enemy to launch an attack"[1494], to "take control of Gomionica and Svinjarevo "[1495] and to inform the accused as soon as he was ready to launch the offensives[1496]. The second order directed the "Ban Jela~i} Brigade Command Kiseljak" to launch those military operations at 05:30 hours on 18 April 1993 and to "capture Gomionica and Svinjarevo"[1497].

644. The Trial Chamber observes that in these orders General Bla{ki} used terms which were not strictly military and had emotional connotations which were such as to incite hatred and vengeance against the Muslim populations. The opening paragraph of the combat order began with the following assertion:

> [the] enemy continues to massacre Croats in Zenica where Muslim forces are using tanks to fire at people, mostly women and children[1498]

Using the same terms, the fourth paragraph added:

> Persist tomorrow with the attack or we will be wiped out because the MOS /Muslim armed forces/ and the Mujahedin are advancing against the Croats in Zenica supported by tanks[1499]

The ninth paragraph included an emphatic call to the responsibility of the commander who received the order to "maintain a sense of historic responsibility"[1500].

645. The same terms were again to be found in the combat preparation order of 17 April 1993, in particular in the opening paragraph:

> [t]he enemy is continuing the intense attacks against the forces of HVO and is trying to completely eradicate the Croats from the region and destroy all the institutions of HVO in the valley of the La{va. The probable goal of the aggressor, after the accord with the chetniks about the surrender of Srebrenica and other regions, is the military defeat of

---

[1494] D299.
[1495] D299.
[1496] D299.
[1497] D300.
[1498] D300 (emphasis added).
[1499] D300 (emphasis added).
[1500] D300 (emphasis added).

> HVO and the inclusion of our regions into some kind of a greater Serbia or New Yugoslavia.
>
> In the combats that raged yesterday, the enemy used the favourite method of the chetniks: pushing women and children in front, to use them as a shield and then to occupy the main strategic objects[1501].

The order's ninth paragraph also emphatically conferred an historic role upon the Kiseljak HVO commander and his troops:

> [k]eep in mind that the lives of the Croats in the region of La{va depend upon your mission. This region could become a tomb for all of us if you show a lack of resolution[1502].

646. Based only on the text, the Trial Chamber notes that the accused used particularly clear terms in entrusting the commander of the Ban Jela~i} Brigade with an attack mission. He gave the order to "engage in the blockade of Vi{njica and other villages"[1503] and to "take control of"[1504] or "capture"[1505] Gomionica and Svinjarevo. Despite the contention of the Defence, the terms used do not suggest that General Bla{ki} ordered the commander to capture only the ABiH positions allegedly located in the towns. On the contrary, the eighth paragraph implied that his task went well beyond that. The accused employed radical words in the order which have connotations of "eradication": "All assault operations must be successful and to that end, use units of the Military Police and civilian police for the mop-up"[1506].

b. The recipient of the orders

647. On 17 April 1993, the accused sent the combat preparation order and combat order to Mijo Bo`i} whom he had previously appointed to the post of Ban Jela~i} Brigade commander

---

[1501] D299 (emphasis added).
[1502] D299 (emphasis added). These same affirmations are also to be found in the combat orders issued at 18:45 hours and 21:40 hours on 19 April. The first states that "[t]he future of all Croats of Busova~a, Travnik, Vitez and Novi Travnik depends upon your success, whereas in Zenica /words illegible/ in any concentration camp, particularly in Gornja Zenica, where our people who fled from the centre of Zenica are being slaughtered even today. There is a massacre" (P456/49) (emphasis added). The second asserts that "[a]t the moment, the Croatian people of Zenica are going through a most critical period. They are literally being slaughtered" (P456/50).
[1503] D299.
[1504] D299.
[1505] D300.
[1506] D300 (emphasis added).

[1507]. Furthermore, at 16:45 hours on 18 April 1993, Mijo Bo`i} reported to the accused informing him, amongst other things, that the conflict had spread to Rotilj, Vi{njica, Doci, Hercezi and Bretovsko[1508].

648. It was Mijo Bo`i} himself who issued a criminal order on 27 January 1993[1509] which read: "After the preparation has been completed the local population is to be called to surrender unconditionally all weapons; otherwise the villages will be burnt to the ground. In case of refusal to surrender arms open strong and concentrated fire on all targets with PAT /anti-aircraft guns/, PAM /anti-aircraft machine guns/, and MB /mortars/ and proceed with mopping up the area"[1510]. It also stated that "Bukovci village must be taken by nightfall on condition that we burn anything standing in our way"[1511].

649. Despite the fact that Mijo Bo`i} never carried out this January order, by turning to him in April 1993 to direct military operations designed to "seal off", attack and "cleanse" villages inhabited to a very large extent by civilians, General Bla{ki} ordered or at least provoked the commission of crimes against Muslims and their property, including the razing of their houses.

c. Military assets

650. In the second paragraph of the combat order, the accused instructed that "all available artillery" be used and that Gomionica and Svinjarevo be captured "through systematic targeting (60, 82 and 120 mm MB /mortar launchers/)"[1512]. In paragraph 6 of the same order, he also ordered that "fire preparations for the attack must be strong and guarantee a successful attack"[1513].

651. By advocating the vigorous use of heavy weapons to seize villages inhabited mainly by civilians, General Bla{ki} gave orders which had consequences out of all proportion to military necessity and knew that many civilians would inevitably be killed and their homes destroyed.

[1507] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21699-21700.
[1508] D306.
[1509] General Bla{ki} was in Kiseljak on the day the order was issued (witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21700-21701).
[1510] P510 (emphasis added).
[1511] P510 (emphasis added).
[1512] D300.
[1513] D300.

d. Conclusions

652. Before reaching any conclusions, the Trial Chamber recalls that the attack of April on the villages, especially Svinjarevo, Gomionica and Vi{njica, proceeded according to the combat order signed by the accused[1514] – heavy artillery fire followed up by infantry sent in to "mop up".

653. The Trial Chamber maintains that even though General Bla{ki} did not explicitly order the expulsion and killing of the civilian Muslim populations, he deliberately ran the risk of making them and their property the primary targets of the "sealing off" and offensives launched on 18 April 1993. It draws this assertion from the following in particular:

- the categorical and hate engendering content of the combat preparation order and combat order;

- the fact that the orders were addressed to a commander who had himself previously threatened to burn a village down;

- and finally, the fact that they advocated the use of heavy weapons against villages inhabited for the most part by civilians.

ii) The widespread and systematic nature of the crimes perpetrated 654. The Trial Chamber points out that the two aforesaid orders did not initiate all the military operations conducted in Kiseljak in April and June 1993.

655. To start, the Trial Chamber indicates that other orders were sent by the accused to the Ban Jela~i} Brigade at the same period, in particular at 18:45 hours[1515] and at 21:40 hours[1516] on 19 April. The former explained inter alia that it was necessary to "attack in groups and only diagonally from Ko~atale and [ikulja"[1517]. The latter recalled that Gomionica had to be [1514] D300. Paragraph 10 of the order states: "Begin the operation on 18 April 1993 at 0530 hours".

[1515] P456/49.
[1516] P456/50.
[1517] P456/49.

taken "tonight or in the early morning, because the main forces of the MOS /Muslim armed forces/ are at Busova-a [...]"[1518].

656. The Trial Chamber also sets forth that General Bla{ki} often spoke to his troops. It asserts that even though it was difficult to reach Kiseljak due to the war-time circumstances the HVO army had taken hold of the town's communications buildings and had sufficiently advanced technical means in order to communicate with the officers in the field on a regular basis[1519]. In this connection, the Trial Chamber points out that the combat preparation order demanded a report from the commander of the Ban Jela~i} Brigade before 23:30 hours confirming that he was ready to conduct operations. At 23:45 hours, the accused sent out the attack order. It is thereby proved that, contrary to the claims of the accused, the communications between Vitez and Kiseljak were indeed working.

657. Further, as it has affirmed previously, the Trial Chamber is convinced that it does not have all the orders issued by the accused during the period covered by the charges. This is borne out by the irregular numbering of the documents provided to the Trial Chamber by the parties to the hearings.

658. Moreover, the reports which the accused received during the events[1520] and the orders which he issued during 1993, especially those appointing[1521] and dismissing[1522] commanders, persuaded the Trial Chamber that General Bla{ki} did indeed command military operations in the Kiseljak region and effectively controlled how they developed. In addition, he claimed in a interview for the newspaper Danas in October 1993:

[1518] P456/50.

[1519] Witness Lanthier affirmed that "[...] the HVO had excellent communications among the various locations of its headquarters, particularly the presence of telephones and civilian lines, because the PPT building was under HVO control in Kiseljak and those telephone lines were working so they could use telephones to communicate. They could use faxes. [...] Also, that there were high frequency antennae, and there were also telephones that showed that there were satellite dishes on the roofs of the headquarters. I saw all of that and so they could see that there was a great deal of possibility to maintain communications among the various headquarters, which allowed the commander to exercise commander control over his troops" (PT p. 8333). According to witness Liebert: "[...] what I did see was the – what I would say was symptomatic of an effective chain of command and communication system" (PT p. 8797). Witness Morsink also pointed out that the HVO soldiers "[...] had good telephone communications, they had good fax communications, and I saw several HVO officers carrying small portable radios, so I think also the communication part was well-organised. They controlled all the switching stations of the telephone lines, so they could, in fact, decide who was having connections, who not" (PT p. 9909).

[1520] D305, D306, D323.

[1521] Cf. P456/68.

[1522] Cf. P456/53, P456/64, P456/68.

> [the separated municipalities] are carrying out, in a co-ordinated and organised manner, all commands connected with the defence of the people and Croatian territories. This physical separation is not an essential or decisive factor, because we figured in our planning that the temporary physical separation of these areas could occur. Travnik is the first operative group, Kiseljak the second, @ep~e the third, and Sarajevo the fourth. All operative groups are under my command, and the chain of leadership and command functions absolutely. Without interruption.[1523]

659. More fundamentally and in addition to these important elements, the Trial Chamber holds that the indubitable conclusion to be drawn from the manner in which the offensives progressed and the systematic and widespread nature of the crimes perpetrated is that the military operations of April and June 1993 were ordered at the highest level of the HVO military command by the Central Bosnia Operative Zone commander - General Bla{ki}. In this regard, the Trial Chamber will recall three striking points already brought out:

- the offensives conducted in April in the municipality of Vitez and to the north of Kiseljak and in June to the south of Kiseljak all evolved along similar lines;

- the attacks on Kiseljak were on each occasion led mostly by HVO troops, and more precisely by the Ban Jela~i} Brigade whose commander received orders directly from the accused.

- and finally, the offensives all produced the same result: the systematic expulsion of Muslim civilian inhabitants from their villages and, in most cases, the destruction of their dwellings and the plunder of their property.

iii) The general context of persecution of the Muslim populations

660. The Trial Chamber observes that the HVO military offensives were merely the ultimate outcome of an overall policy of persecution of the Muslim populations pursued by the Croatian military and political authorities. In agreeing to be the Kiseljak region military commander in April 1992 and then Central Bosnia Operative Zone commander in June of that same year, the accused fully subscribed to this policy from the very moment of his posting.

[1523] P380 (emphasis added). The Trial Chamber interprets the statement as a reflection of the actual situation and, not as the Defence preferred, as a propaganda operation to maintain the HVO troops' morale.

iv) Conclusions

661. The Trial Chamber is of the view that the content of the military orders sent to the Ban Jela~i} Brigade commander, the systematic and widespread aspect of the crimes perpetrated and the general context in which these acts fit permit the assertion that the accused ordered the attacks effected in April and June 1993 against the Muslim villages in the Kiseljak region. It also appears that General Bla{ki} clearly had to have known that by ordering the Ban Jela~i} Brigade to launch such wide-ranging attacks against essentially civilian targets extremely violent crimes would necessarily result. Lastly, it emerges from those same facts that the accused did not pursue a purely military objective but that by using military assets he also sought to implement the policy of persecution of the Muslim civilian populations set by the highest HVO authorities and that, through these offensives, he intended to make the populations in the Kiseljak municipality take flight.

E. The shelling of Zenica

662. Towards midday on 19 April 1993, Zenica town centre was targeted by several artillery shells. The testimony and exhibits admitted by the Trial Chamber indicate that the shells hit very busy parts of town, such as the shopping district and the municipal market[1524] - moreover, at a peak time. In fact, it seems that at this exact time of day, commercial traffic was considerable and there were between two to three thousand people in the geographical area bombarded[1525].

663. The Prosecution contended that many civilians died or were severely wounded by the shelling. The exhibits and testimony confirmed the allegation which the Defence, moreover, did not dispute[1526]. That the persons killed or wounded were civilians is also beyond doubt.

664. Likewise, the Defence did not contest that much civilian property was destroyed. In view of the exhibits, the civilian nature of the material damage inflicted by the shelling is [1524] P224; witness Veseljak, PT of 22 January 1998, p. 5946.

[1525] P221/10, P221/11, P221/13, P221/14, P221/15; witness Veseljak, PT of 22 January 1998, p. 5946.

unquestionable[1527]. In addition, witnesses attested to the fact that there were no military facilities near the impact points of the shelling - nor even facilities of a military nature[1528].

665. The precise number of shells fired into Zenica town centre remains unknown but was not argued over by the parties. The Prosecution put the figure at nine shells[1529] whilst the Defence mentioned several shells[1530] without providing any further details.

666. The main difficulty which the Trial Chamber had to resolve centred on how to establish which troops were involved in the shelling. On this point, it became apparent that the arguments of the parties differed greatly and that identification of the perpetrators and those responsible for the bombardment was less important than a study of the case-file conducted in as much detail as possible and, in particular, of the information available on the artillery pieces probably used and their technical characteristics.

667. The Trial Chamber first need an exact understanding of the arguments and method used by each of the two parties.

1. The Prosecution argument

668. The Prosecution maintained that the shells were fired from a 122 mm howitzer belonging to the HVO troops positioned in Puti~evo 16 km west of Zenica[1531]. This assertion was based on the analysis of the depositions given by witnesses Baggesen, Veseljak and W. The Prosecution argument, supported by the testimony of the three said persons, was presented in two main sections which formed the bases for the calculation method used by the Prosecutor.

669. The first section consisted of determining the calibre of the shell by analysing the depth and size of the crater formed by the artillery piece and how the shell fragmented within the craters. Relying on examination of the craters at the sites shelled, witnesses Baggesen and

---

[1526] P220, P221; witness Beganovi}, PT of 21 January 1998, pp. 5899-5901; witness Veseljak, PT of 22 January 1998, pp. 5944-5945.
[1527] P221 and P224.
[1528] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, pp. 1941-1942; witness W, PT p. 6103.
[1529] Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, pp. 135-136.
[1530] Defence opening statement, PT p. 11236-11237.
[1531] Prosecutor's Brief, book 7, p. 70.

W reached the conclusion that the shell's calibre was 122 mm[1532]. Determining the shell's calibre allowed its azimuth and range to be subsequently established.

670. The second section consisted of establishing from which direction the shell was fired. The direction can be ascertained from the position of the crater and examination of the marks left by the shell's explosion, bearing in mind that the trajectory followed by the shell is inversely related to the direction of the shell impact marks. In the present case, the three witnesses considered that the shells originated from the west of Zenica, in particular from the HVO positions to the west of the town[1533].

671. According to the Prosecution, the conclusion reached as to the calibre and trajectory of the shells was a decisive argument which demonstrated that the HVO troops were behind the Zenica shelling. The Prosecutor further deemed that additional evidence corroborated the conclusion. She claimed that the contemporary military context strongly suggested that the shelling of Zenica was an intentional riposte by the HVO to the ABiH counter-offensive[1534]. Moreover, she asserted that the VRS artillery could not have been responsible for the shelling in light of the type of shell employed and the geographical location of the troops when the shelling occurred[1535].

2. The Defence argument

672. The Defence contended that the shelling could not be ascribed to HVO troops. It claimed that even if it was "not possible to identify with precision the origin of those shells"[1536] everything went to prove that, on the contrary, it was the Bosnian Serb army which was behind the attack on Zenica. In order to demonstrate that the HVO was not responsible, the Defence put forth several arguments relating both to the military context and to the analysis of the calibration of the shells used.

673. Firstly, the VRS allegedly shelled Zenica on a regular basis from April to July 1993 and the marketplace was within firing range of the Serbian artillery positioned around Vla{i}[1537].

[1532] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, PT pp. 1940-1941; witness W, PT pp. 6019-6020.
[1533] Witness Baggesen, PT of 22 August 1997, PT pp. 1940-1941; witness Veseljak, PT pp. 5592-5593; witness W, PT p. 6027.
[1534] Prosecutor's Brief, book 5, p. 142 and book 7, p. 70.
[1535] Prosecutor's Brief, book 7, pp. 72-73.
[1536] Defence opening statement, PT pp. 11237-11238.
[1537] Defence opening statement, PT p. 11237-11238; Defence Brief, p. 92.

674. In addition, a telephone call between Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart and Tihomir Bla{ki} shows that the calibre of the shell which hit the marketplace was not 122 mm but 155 mm[1538]. It was, moreover, only during his trial that Tihomir Bla{ki} supposedly learnt of the theory that a 122 mm howitzer had been used[1539]. The Defence maintained that the HVO troops were not equipped with this type of artillery piece at the time of the acts since they had been moved from Travnik to Mostar on 8 January 1993[1540].

675. Lastly, the Defence further submitted that Professor Jankovi}'s testimony refuted the arguments advanced by the Prosecution witnesses. Based on mathematical calculations made according to standardised models and using the hypothetical calculations put forward by the Prosecution, the witness considered that the two types of Russian and Yugoslav 122 mm howitzer likely to have been used in the acts could not have reached the centre of Zenica from the HVO positions west of the town because of their insufficient range[1541]. In addition, Professor Jankovi} thought that the method of examining the shell crater employed by the Prosecution witnesses to determine the range, angle of descent and direction of the projectile fired was incorrect[1542].

3. Conclusions

676. Analysis of the respective arguments propounded by the Prosecution and Defence allowed the Trial Chamber to focus in on the nature and specificity of the two arguments. It actually appeared that the calculation method employed by the Prosecution was pragmatic and deductive in that it opted for reasoning based on observation. It thus differed from that of the Defence which was based on the data presented by the Prosecution and was more abstract and mathematical insofar as it relied on rules and official standards.

677. Admittedly, the arguments put forward by the Defence were not such as to invalidate wholly the Prosecution argument. The Trial Chamber had to note in particular the coincidence of the attacks of the Croatian forces of 16-18 April 1993, the necessary reaction of the Muslim forces in the face of such attacks and the circumstance by which Zenica was

[1538] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18985-18986.
[1539] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18988-18989.
[1540] Defence Brief, pp. 92 and 93.
[1541] Witness Jankovi}, PT pp. 17254-17259.

both the town with the largest Muslim population near to Vitez and the headquarters of the ABiH 3rd Corps[1543]. Notwithstanding this, in the eyes of the Trial Chamber, the Prosecutor's demonstration was not sufficiently convincing and the Defence produced evidence such as to cast reasonable doubt onto whether the shelling at issue could be imputed to the HVO. The Prosecution's demonstration relative to the calibre and trajectory of the shells used to shell Zenica town seemed insufficient when compared to that of the Defence. The sketches submitted by the Prosecution in support of its demonstration suffered from vagueness[1544] whilst those produced by the Defence witness were unquestionably scientific[1545]. Professor Jankovi}, whom the Trial Chamber further asked for additional information pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules[1546] with the consent of the Prosecution, offered comparative mathematical calculations liable to contradict those presented by the Prosecution. Even though the Prosecution attempted to prove in other ways that the shell used was 122 mm, it did not sufficiently demonstrate that the HVO artillery positions, as located to the west of the city by the Prosecution, could reach Zenica town with this type of shell as occurred on 19 April 1993. Moreover, despite the fact that, in the eyes of the Trial Chamber, the argument that the howitzer was moved several kilometres by the HVO is plausible, the Prosecution was not able to prove that such was the case.

678. Consequently, the issue of the identity of the troops involved in the shelling of Zenica could not be resolved by the Trial Chamber because the Prosecutor did not demonstrate beyond all reasonable doubt that the HVO troops or other elements under the command of the accused were behind the shelling. The Trial Chamber is therefore of the view that there is reason to declare General Bla{ki} not guilty of the counts brought against him based on the shelling of Zenica town on 19 April 1993.

F. Detention related crimes

679. Counts 15 to 20 were grouped together because they all deal with the deprivation of freedom suffered by many Muslims and the crimes committed against them at the time.

[1542] Witness Jankovi}, PT pp. 17276-17283.
[1543] The inverse would equally be true: if one were to suppose that the ABiH were responsible for the break out of the conflict on 16 April 1993, the Croatian forces would evidently have wanted to conduct a terrorisation operation to halt the Muslim attacks.
[1544] See for example P230.
[1545] D526 and C1.

1. Inhuman and cruel treatment

680. The indictment alleges that from January 1993 to January 1994, Bosnian Muslims were detained by the HVO in Vitez cinema hall, Kaonik prison near Busova~a, Vitez veterinary station, Dubravica primary school, the SDK offices in Vitez, Kiseljak barracks, Rotilj village and the houses of Ga~ice[1547].

681. The detainees were allegedly used as human shields, beaten, forced to dig trenches and subjected to physical and mental violence, threats and inhuman treatment, in particular by being confined in cramped or overcrowded facilities and being deprived of sufficient food and water. Some of them were reportedly killed or wounded while being forced to dig trenches in the Kiseljak, Vitez and Busova~a municipalities[1548].

682. Accordingly, the accused allegedly committed a grave breach covered by Article 2(b) of the Tribunal's Statute (inhuman treatment - count 15) and a violation of the laws or customs of war covered by Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions (cruel treatment - count 16)[1549].

a) Arguments of the parties

683. The Prosecution submitted that the acts or omissions constituting inhuman or cruel treatment committed by General Bla{ki} or his subordinates caused great physical or mental suffering or serious physical and mental injury to the Bosnian Muslim detainees and attacked their human dignity. The acts on which the counts rely cover most of the physical or mental violence, especially the verbal abuse, beatings, theft of the detainees' personal effects, forced labour, digging of trenches and rape. The criminal omissions purportedly concerned the failure of the HVO to meet their obligations to treat the Bosnian Muslim detainees with humanity and to guarantee them acceptable living conditions[1550].

[1546] PT p. 17337.
[1547] Second amended indictment, para. 12.
[1548] Second amended indictment, paras. 13-14.
[1549] The unlawful detention of these persons is not specified in the indictment. See also the Prosecutor's Brief, book 6, VIII, 2.2.
[1550] Prosecutor's Brief, book 6, IX, 6-7.

684. The Defence held that the Bosnian Muslims' freedom of movement in the village of Rotilj was not limited and that they could not consequently have been detained. It argued that a roadblock was erected by the HVO at the village's checkpoint in order to protect the Muslim inhabitants from any danger. This checkpoint did not supposedly prevent the Muslim inhabitants from leaving Rotilj because the main road was not the only route out of the village[1551].

685. The Defence further deemed that Tihomir Bla{ki} was not guilty of the charges by which the Bosnian Muslim detainees were deprived of sufficient food and water and confined in cramped facilities. It contended that both the supply of food and water and the facilities were adequate at the detention sites at Vitez cinema, Kaonik prison, Vitez veterinary hospital, Kiseljak barracks, Rotilj village and the houses in Ga~ice. Likewise, the persons assigned to the work teams were neither short of food or water nor confined in cramped facilities. In any case, the Defence maintained that the Prosecution had not managed to demonstrate that the detainees were in a worse situation that the Croats detained by the ABiH[1552].

686. Finally, the Defence contended that the work conditions of the teams were not generally dangerous, improper or discriminatory and thereby did not constitute a breach of the Geneva Conventions. Moreover, the teams were formed in accordance with the law of the HZHB and the Republic of BH and the accused was convinced that they were lawful. In the opinion of the Defence, even if the use of work teams constituted a breach of the Conventions, General Bla{ki}'s mistake as regards the law should exonerate him of all responsibility in this respect. In conclusion, the Defence claimed that the Prosecution did not charge the accused with the use of work teams in dangerous conditions and that, accordingly, such an indictment could not incur his responsibility[1553].

b) Conclusions

687. The Trial Chamber will review the crimes alleged by municipality.

[1551] Defence Brief, IX, B.
[1552] Defence Brief, IX, D.
[1553] Defence Brief, IX, F.

i) Busova~a municipality

688. During the first half of 1993, male Muslim civilians, particularly from Busova~a municipality[1554], were imprisoned by the HVO at Kaonik prison[1555], a former JNA warehouse a little over 10 kilometres from the Hotel Vitez[1556]. The prison was made up of approximately twenty rooms, about 9 square metres, transformed for the purpose into cells to hold Muslims[1557]. With perhaps as many as 400 persons detained by the HVO, as for example after the January 1993 campaign, the prison was overcrowded[1558]. The hygiene and comfort conditions as well as the quality and quantity of food were poor[1559]. Personal valuables were confiscated there[1560]. Further, exaction was sadistically meted out upon detainees[1561] by HVO soldiers. For example, detainees were forced to beat one another[1562].

689. Detainees at Kaonik prison were also compelled to dig trenches under guard of HVO soldiers. They were led in groups to different sites[1563]. The detainees taken off to the front were in danger – some were killed by gunfire[1564]. Work was strenuous and long, food insufficient[1565]. In addition, detainees were abused by their guards. For instance, some were refused permission to take cover while fire was being exchanged, some were beaten[1566] and others underwent mock executions[1567].

ii) Kiseljak municipality

690. On 23 April 1992, the HVO took over a former JNA barracks in Kiseljak where Tihomir Bla{ki} set up one of his headquarters[1568]. As of April 1993 until approximately November 1993[1569], the barracks were also used as a detention centre to hold many male [1554] The prisoners in Kaonik did not originate solely from the Municipality of Busova~a. Witness Y, for example, was arrested in Vitez and detained at the cultural centre in the town. Then, along with 13 other detainees, he was transferred to Kaonik prison where he remained from 5 to 14 May 1993. PT pp. 6509-6511.

[1555] Witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5214-5215, pp. 5228-5229, pp. 5247-5248; witness T, PT pp. 5769-5770, pp. 5771-5805.
[1556] Witness Leach, PT of 27 June 1997, PT p. 259; witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5228-5229.
[1557] Witness T, PT pp. 5771-5772; witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5228-5229.
[1558] Witness Mcleod, PT p. 6388.
[1559] Witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5215-5217, pp. 5228-5229; witness T, PT pp. 5804-5806.
[1560] Witness BB, PT pp. 6677-6678, pp. 6681-6682.
[1561] Witness Y, PT pp. 6522-6523.
[1562] Witness U, PT pp. 5880-5882. The Trial Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber seised of the Aleksovski case reached the same conclusion. Aleksovski Judgement, para. 228.
[1563] Witness U, PT pp. 5877-5880; witness Z, PT pp. 6594-6596.
[1564] Witness BB, PT pp. 6684-6685.
[1565] Witness BB, PT pp. 6686-6688.
[1566] Witness BB, PT pp. 6684-6685.
[1567] Witness Z, PT pp. 6594-6596.
[1568] Witness MM, PT p. 8229; witness Friis-Pedersen, PT pp. 5485-5486.
[1569] Witness Friis-Pedersen, PT pp. 5485-5486.

Muslim civilians captured by the HVO in the villages of Kiseljak municipality[1570]. At one time, there were also women and children interned at the prison[1571]. The detainees endured difficult living conditions. In particular, hygiene and food were poor[1572]. Furthermore, HVO soldiers and military policemen were responsible for many beatings and for brutal physical and mental violence inflicted on detainees. Thus, for instance, in pitch darkness detainees received engine oil with which to "wash"[1573].

691. In addition, from April 1993 until January 1994[1574], Muslims from Kiseljak municipality were held captive in the village of Rotilj. The Trial Chamber recalls that the detainees were prevented from leaving the village, especially because they were being watched by snipers positioned in the hills around the village. The Muslims were therefore kept in an HVO detention camp.

692. The prisoners of Rotilj were forced to endure particularly harsh living conditions. The village was overcrowded and the people crammed into those houses which had not been destroyed. They lacked medicines and there was insufficient water and food. The Trial Chamber points to the murders and acts of physical violence, including rape, which occurred in the village.

693. Furthermore, the men detained in Kiseljak barracks and Rotilj were compelled by the HVO to dig trenches[1575]. In so doing, some detainees near the front-line were killed or wounded during exchanges of fire[1576]. Forced labour sometimes lasted a long time and the detainees were exposed to bad weather[1577]. In addition, they were mistreated by the Military Police[1578] who, for example, sometimes inflicted sadistic bodily harm on them. Thus, one witness related how they placed a cigarette up his nostril while threatening to kill him[1579]. The guards prohibited the detainees from taking cover whilst fire was being exchanged[1580].

[1570] Witness AA, PT p. 6619, pp. 6652-6653; witness DD, PT pp. 7035-7038, pp. 7058-7059; witness JJ, PT pp. 7393-7394, pp. 7410-7411.
[1571] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8303.
[1572] Witness TT, PT pp. 9332-9334.
[1573] Witness TT, PT pp. 9332-9334, p. 9348.
[1574] In fact, up until March, witness TT, PT pp. 9334-9335.
[1575] Witness DD, PT pp. 7050-7051; witness AA, PT pp. 6656-6658.
[1576] Witness AA, PT p. 6655; witness TT, PT p. 9342.
[1577] Witness TT, PT p. 9342.
[1578] Witness TT, PT p. 9342.
[1579] Witness OO, PT p. 8657.
[1580] Witness OO, PT p. 8657.

iii) Vitez municipality

694. On 16 April 1993, HVO soldiers detained a large number of male Muslim civilians in Vitez veterinary station[1581]. The station was inside a municipal building located approximately 900 metres from the Hotel Vitez[1582]. Seventy-six detainees were locked in the basement and in rooms at the top of the building[1583]. In the basement there was so little room that the detainees could only crouch. The air inside was humid and suffocating. The elderly were finally transferred to the veterinary station's examination room[1584]. On the fourth day of detention[1585], the detainees were taken off to other detention centres such as Dubravica school[1586].

695. Located in a municipal building near to Vitez railway station and just over two and a half kilometres from the Hotel Vitez[1587], Dubravica primary school was the billet for the Vitezovi unit and the Ludwig Pavlovi} Brigade[1588]. During the second half of April 1993, the school also served as an HVO detention centre. Two hundred Muslim men, women and children from the villages of Vitez municipality were detained there[1589]. They suffered from a lack of food and comfort[1590]. Furthermore, the women and children were terrorised and threatened by their guards[1591]. Women were raped by HVO soldiers and members of the Military Police[1592].

696. Vitez cultural centre was in a municipal building barely a hundred metres from Bla{ki}'s headquarters at the Hotel Vitez[1593]. The building was originally used as a head office by the political parties in Vitez. Mario ^erkez, commander of the HVO Vitez Brigade, had established his headquarters there[1594]. Beginning on 16 April 1993, between 300 to 500

[1581] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2808-2810; witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2700-2701; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, PT p. 2217, p. 2219.
[1582] Witness Leach, PT of 27 June 1997, pp. 272-273.
[1583] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2809-2811.
[1584] Witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2700-2701.
[1585] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2818-2819.
[1586] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2818-2819.
[1587] P32, witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2818-2819; witness Leach, PT of 27 June 1997, pp. 272-274.
[1588] Witness Sefkija Djidi}, PT of 29 July 1997, pp. 1226-1227; witness HH, PT p. 6836.
[1589] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2819-2820; witness XX, PT p. 10466 and pp. 10468-10469.
[1590] Witness Fatima Ahmi}, PT pp. 3967-3968; witness G, PT pp. 3867-3868.
[1591] Witness Fatima Ahmi}, PT pp. 3967-3968.
[1592] Witness Elvir Ahmi}, PT pp. 3265-3268; witness Fatima Ahmi}, PT pp. 3967-3970.
[1593] Witness Leach, PT of 27 June 1997, pp. 272-273.
[1594] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22469-22470.

Muslim civilians were detained under guard of the Military Police and HVO soldiers[1595]. In the cellar, a large number of detainees, including some ill pensioners, had to sit or stand on the coal stored there[1596]. Since the number of detainees grew rapidly, they were transferred to other rooms in the building, such as the cinema hall, which also became overcrowded[1597]. Towards the end of the month some of the pensioners and ill were released[1598] but other detainees, particularly ABiH or SDA members and intellectuals[1599], were transferred to other detention centres, such as Kaonik prison[1600].

697. The village of Ga~ice lies in the municipality of Vitez approximately two kilometres from the town of Vitez[1601]. After the attack on the village on 20 April 1993, a group of 180 women, children, elderly men and Muslim civilians were assembled in a few of the remaining houses[1602] under the control of the HVO soldiers[1603]. The living conditions were particularly harsh[1604]. After approximately two weeks, the HVO took them off to territory controlled by Muslim forces[1605].

698. In mid April 1993, 63 men mostly of fighting age were detained by the HVO for several days in the SDK building in Vitez. Guarded by the Military Police, the detainees were confined in three overcrowded and cold facilities[1606].

699. A significant number of the detainees at the cultural centre, the veterinary station, Dubravica school and the SDK building were forced to dig trenches by HVO soldiers [1607]. It was strenuous and dangerous work. At the front-line, some were killed or wounded[1608], especially when the HVO did not allow them to lie down to protect themselves from

---

[1595] Witness Y, PT p. 6509, pp. 6512-6514; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, p. 2232; witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1570-1571.
[1596] Witness Mujezinovi}, PT of 20 August 1997, p. 1711.
[1597] Witness Y, PT p. 6509; witness Beso, PT of 26 August 1997, p. 2232.
[1598] Witness Y, PT p. 6510.
[1599] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1577-1578.
[1600] Witness Y, PT p. 6510.
[1601] Witness Hrusti}, PT p. 4791.
[1602] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4815-4817.
[1603] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4818-4819; witness ZZ, PT pp. 10845-10846.
[1604] Witness ZZ, PT pp. 10845-10846.
[1605] Witness ZZ, PT pp. 10846-10847; witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4825-4826.
[1606] Witness Kavazovi}, PT of 26 August 1997, pp. 2319-2321.
[1607] Witness Pezer, PT of 19 August 1997, pp. 1570-1571; witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, p. 2816; witness G, PT pp. 3868-3869; witness Kavazovi}, PT of 26 August 1997 pp. 2320-2321.
[1608] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2817-2818; witness XX, PT pp. 10470-10471; witness Y, PT p. 6515.

shooting[1609]. During one incident in particular, HVO soldiers killed one detainee and threatened to kill another[1610].

700. In conclusion, the Trial Chamber adjudges that in the case in point the material element and mens rea of the crimes of inhuman treatment (count 15) and cruel treatment (count 16) as defined above have been satisfied. The Trial Chamber takes note of the following acts and omissions:

- inflicting physical and mental violence upon the detainees, at the various aforesaid detention sites and whilst they were forced to dig trenches;

- placing the detainees in a life-threatening situation by taking them to the front or nearby;

- the atmosphere of terror reigning in the detention facilities;

- the cases of long-term detention[1611], in several camps under difficult circumstances[1612].

Moreover, the Trial Chamber adds that the cruel or inhuman treatment was inflicted by HVO soldiers and the Military Police and that the victims were Bosnian Muslims. For the most part they were civilians - the remainder being hors de combat - and therefore were protected persons for the reasons explained earlier.

[1609] Witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2704-2705.
[1610] Witness D, PT of 24 September 1997, pp. 2707-2708.
[1611] In general the maximum stay in detention within a single facility does not seem to have been extremely long: Kaonik – 2 months; Kiseljak barracks – 2 months; Rotilj – 2 months; veterinary station – 4 days; Dubravica school – 20 days; cultural centre - 2 weeks; Ga-ice – 16 days; and, finally, the SDK building – a few days.
[1612] For example, after the HVO attack in April, witness DD was forced to remain in his village. He was interned in Rotilj village from 6 September to 20 September and then in the Kiseljak barracks until 30 September. He then dug trenches for a month at Kre{evo before again being interned at the Kiseljak barracks until 15 November. In the end, he was interned in Rotilj village until he was exchanged on 14 January 1994, witness DD, PT pp. 7035-7060. Likewise, between April and 6 November 1993, witness JJ was interned in his village, in Rotilj and at the Kiseljak barracks. Witness JJ, PT p. 7399, p. 7405, pp. 7410-7411, p. 7421. Lastly, witness TT was detained from June 1993 until March 1994 in various locations, including the Kiseljak barracks. Witness TT, PT pp. 9328-9335.

2. Taking of hostages

701. The indictment states that from January 1993 to January 1994 Bosnian Muslim civilians were taken hostage by the HVO and used both in prisoner exchanges and in order to bring to a halt Bosnian military operations against the HVO[1613]. The accused thus allegedly committed a grave breach covered by Article 2(h) of the Tribunal's Statute (taking civilians as hostages - count 17) and a violation of the laws or customs of war covered by Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions (taking of hostages - count 18).

a) Arguments of the parties

702. The Prosecution explained that counts 17 and 18 were based on the HVO's taking of Bosnian Muslim detainees incarcerated inter alia at the cinema, the veterinary station, Dubravica school and Kaonik prison as hostages on 19 and 20 April 1993.

703. The Prosecution contended that the large number of detainees (2,223) to whom death threats were allegedly made on 19 and 20 April led to the unavoidable conclusion that all the Bosnian Muslim detainees in the hands of the Croatian forces in the region at all the detention facilities must be considered as HVO hostages. To begin with, very many civilians were at the detention facilities. In any case, and for the purposes of Article 3 of the Statute, the Prosecution asserted that the victims had not taken an active part in the hostilities. The HVO next clearly sought to use all means available to it to compel the ABiH to end its counter-attack. Lastly, the Prosecution alleged that a death threat hung over the lives of the hostages[1614].

704. In the opinion of the Defence, even though General Bla{ki} exercised command responsibility within the CBOZ, the detention of Bosnian Muslim civilians was justified on security and safety grounds. A lawful act of this type could not therefore be characterised as taking of hostages. Moreover, the Defence asserted that it had not been established that the persons who participated in the alleged hostage-taking had had the specific intention to profit therefrom[1615].

[1613] Second amended indictment, para. 15.
[1614] Prosecutor's Brief, book 6, IX, 8.
[1615] Defence Brief, IX, C.

b) Conclusions

705. In order to reconstruct the incidents of 19 and 20 April 1993, the Trial Chamber will rely inter alia on the testimony of Dr. Muhamed Mujezinovi}, a Bosnian Muslim and member of the Vitez War Presidency at the time[1616].

706. On 19 April 1993, Dr. Mujezinovi} was taken off by two HVO soldiers to Vitez cultural centre. In an office were Mario ^erkez and five other persons all wearing HVO uniforms. Mario ^erkez said that the ABiH troops were advancing into town and that the witness had to obey his orders. He told the witness:

> that [he] had to call the command of the Third Corps, to call Alija Izetbegovi}, Haris Silajd`i}, Ejub Gani} and whoever [he] knew, and to tell them that if the BH-Army continued advancing towards the town, that they have 2,223 captured Muslims. [^erkez] emphasised, women, children, and that he would kill all of them. [^erkez] also told [him] that [he] would have to go on local television, and to ask the Muslims of Stari Vitez to surrender their arms.[1617]

Dr. Mujezinovi} telephoned the ABiH 3rd Corps commander, General Had`ihasanovi}, and made a speech on television calling the Muslims to hand over their arms. Other persons called together by Dr. Mujezinovi} also sent Dario Kordi}'s message to their respective acquaintances[1618].

707. On the following morning, two local HDZ officials, Ivan [anti} and Pero Skopljak, arrived to repeat the threat made by Mario ^erkez. Lastly, Dr. Mujezinovi} was forced to sign a document put in front of him by Ivan [anti} according to which the Muslims and Croats agreed inter alia to implement the Vance-Owen Plan even before it had been signed by the Serbs[1619].

708. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber is of the view that all the Muslims in the hands of the Croatian forces interned at the aforesaid detention facilities on 19 and 20 April 1993 were threatened with death. This is incontestably so at least for those detained at Vitez cultural centre. Although not all were necessarily civilians, all were persons placed hors de [1616] Witness Muhamed Mujezinovi}, PT of 20 August 1997, pp. 1673-1674, pp. 1705-1722.

[1617] Witness Muhamed Mujezinovi}, PT of 20 August 1997, p. 1707.
[1618] This part of the testimony is corroborated by witness Y, PT p. 6656.
[1619] P86.

combat. Moreover, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that, in this instance, detention could in no way be deemed lawful because its main purpose was to compel the ABiH to halt its advance. The Trial Chamber points out that Mario ^erkez was the commander of the HVO Vitez Brigade and, in this role, was directly under the orders of General Bla{ki}. The offences mentioned in counts 17 and 18 are hereby constituted.

3. Inhuman and cruel treatment: human shields

709. According to the indictment, Bosnian Muslim civilians were used as human shields to prevent the Bosnian army from firing on HVO positions or to force Bosnian Muslim combatants to surrender. The HVO allegedly used human shields in January or February 1993 in the village of Merdani and on 16 and 20 April 1993 in Vitez[1620].

710. Thus, the accused allegedly committed a grave breach covered by Article 2(b) of the Tribunal's Statute (inhuman treatment - count 19) and a violation of the laws or customs of war covered by Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions (cruel treatment - count 20).

a) The arguments of the parties

711. The Prosecution submitted that the HVO's use of Bosnian Muslim detainees as human shields was based on three events or distinct types of action. First, on 19 and 20 April 1993, the Bosnian Muslims detained at Vitez cinema were allegedly used as human shields in an attempt to halt the ABiH shelling the CBOZ and Vitez Brigade headquarters. Then, on 20 April 1993, the HVO purportedly placed 250 Muslim men, women and children around the Hotel Vitez for about three hours in order to try and halt the ABiH shelling of that zone. Last, the HVO was allegedly engaged in a widespread practice consisting of using the detainees forced to dig trenches on the front-line positions as human shields. The detainees thus placed in a dangerous situation around (or in) buildings constituting military objectives were allegedly victims of great physical and mental suffering or of serious attacks upon their human dignity[1621].

[1620] Second amended indictment, para. 16.
[1621] Prosecutor's Brief, book 6, IX, 9.

712. On this point, the Defence did not prefer any other arguments than those used more generally in respect of detention issues.

b) Conclusions

713. To start with, the Trial Chamber reiterates its conclusion that the use of detainees to dig trenches at the front under dangerous circumstances must be characterised as inhuman or cruel treatment. The motive of their guards is of little significance.

714. Around 20 April 1993, Vitez and in particular the HVO headquarters at the Hotel Vitez were shelled[1622]. That same day, following the attack on Ga~ice village by Croatian forces, a column of 247 Muslim men, women and children[1623] was directed to a spot just in front of the Hotel Vitez. Once there, the men were led off elsewhere[1624]. Witness Hrusti} was seated in a shell crater opposite the Hotel:

> One of the soldiers said, while we were standing there, "you are going to sit here now and let your people shell you, because they have been shelling us up to now, and you better sit down and wait".[1625]

The persons assembled were watched over by soldiers inside the Hotel Vitez. They told them that whoever moved would be instantly cut down. After about two and a half to three hours, the persons were taken back to their village[1626].

715. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls that on 19 and 20 April 1993, many Muslim civilians were detained at Dubravica school, also the billet of the Vitezovi, and at Vitez cultural centre, the headquarters of Mario ^erkez. Nonetheless, although it is conceivable that a military force might seek to protect its headquarters unlawfully by detaining members of the enemy there, the Prosecution did not prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the detainees in question were aware of a potential attack against which they were allegedly used as protection. Unlike for the Hotel Vitez, it was not established that the detainees at Dubravica school and Vitez cultural centre suffered as a result of being used as human shields.

[1622] P187; D273; witness Marin, PT pp. 12307-12309 ; PT pp. 24084-24085.
[1623] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4809-4816; witness ZZ, PT pp. 10844-10845.
[1624] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4814-4815.
[1625] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4814-4816.
[1626] Witness Hrusti}, PT pp. 4815-4816.

716. In conclusion, the Trial Chamber is of the view that on 20 April 1993, the villagers of Ga~ice served as human shields for the accused's headquarters in Vitez. Quite evidently, this inflicted considerable mental suffering upon the persons involved. As they were Muslim civilians or Muslims no longer taking part in combat operations, the Trial Chamber adjudges that, by this act, they suffered inhuman treatment (count 19) and, consequently, cruel treatment (count 20).

4. Individual criminal responsibility of General Bla{ki}

a) Arguments of the parties

717. The Prosecution submitted that the crimes described above were committed by persons either acting pursuant to an order or plan of Tihomir Bla{ki}, at his incitement or with his aid and encouragement[1627]. Moreover, the Prosecutor highlighted that pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Statute the evidence also demonstrated that the accused was criminally responsible for the crimes[1628].

718. The Defence maintained that none of the evidence proved that General Bla{ki} gave the orders or actively participated in any other way in committing the detention related crimes. In addition, the Defence asserted that General Bla{ki} had no command responsibility over the detention related crimes since he did not know nor had he any reason to know that ill-treatment was being meted out. In the opinion of the Defence, the accused took many measures either to prevent the crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof and he had no authority to control or sanction the administrators of the detention centres in central Bosnia[1629].

[1627] Prosecutor's Brief, book 7, XII, 3.
[1628] Prosecutor's Brief, book 7, XIV, 3.
[1629] Defence Brief, IX.

b) Conclusions

i) Inhuman and cruel treatment (counts 15 and 16)

719. The Trial Chamber will first determine General Bla{ki}'s responsibility for the crimes committed in the detention centres and then examine his responsibility in respect of the trench digging.

a. Detention centres

720. The above analyses demonstrate that the illegal confinement and detention of male Muslim civilians was a recurring feature of the attacks conducted by the HVO in the municipalities of Busova~a, Kiseljak and Vitez. Hence, these persons were detained in a manifestly organised way. In this respect, the Trial Chamber highlights that HVO soldiers informed some Muslims that they were being detained under order[1630]. Other persons were transported in HVO buses to the prison in Kiseljak[1631]. Lastly, as the Trial Chamber will conclude below, General Bla{ki} ordered that many detainees be used to dig trenches throughout the CBOZ and some detainees were ultimately exchanged[1632]. The Trial Chamber deems that such a degree of organisation demonstrates that the highest levels of authority within the HVO were involved and therefore finds that the evidence establishes beyond all reasonable doubt that General Bla{ki} ordered the detentions.

721. The Trial Chamber holds that General Bla{ki} is responsible for the violence committed in the detention facilities pursuant to the principle of command responsibility enshrined in Article 7(3) of the Statute.

i. Tihomir Bla{ki} exercised "effective control" over the perpetrators of the crimes

722. The Trial Chamber recalls that all the detention centres were located in the CBOZ which General Bla{ki} commanded from 27 June 1992[1633]. The perpetrators of the crimes at the detention centres were HVO soldiers and also members of the Military Police.

[1630] Witness T, PT pp. 5770-5771; witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2809-2810.
[1631] Witness TT, PT pp. 9330-9331.
[1632] Witness Djula Djidi}, PT pp. 4344-4345; witness Z, PT pp. 6595-6596.
[1633] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 21299.

723. It is not contested that General Bla{ki} commanded the regular troops of the HVO. The Trial Chamber is moreover convinced that the accused exercised effective control over the Military Police within the meaning of Article 7(3) of the Statute.

724. In this respect, as it has already asserted, the Trial Chamber recalls that General Bla{ki} was in command of the soldiers and Military Police implicated in the attacks on Ahmi}i, Lon~ari and O~ehni}i in April 1993. It further affirms that pursuant to the rules on the training and activities of the Military Police[1634], this group was under the authority of the accused as commander of the CBOZ when it came to accomplishing daily operational tasks. As one witness heard by the Trial Chamber explained:

> The commander of the Operative Zone vis-à-vis a military policeman, regardless of whether he is in the reserve formation or active formation, could impose only disciplinary measure, and the greatest disciplinary measure that he could take was 15 days' detention. After a 15-day detention, the military policeman would be returned to his unit and would continue to perform his regular duties. The commander of the Operative Zone, if there was a criminal act in question on the part of the military policeman, the commander could [...] make a proposal for the prosecution of that individual and send that request to the military disciplinary judiciary or the chief of the military police, head of the military police administration, for him to undertake such measures[1635].

725. The Trial Chamber thereby concludes that, throughout the period during which the previously described crimes were committed, General Bla{ki} incontestably held at least the material power to prevent the Military Police from perpetrating crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

ii. Tihomir Bla{ki} "knew or had reason to know" that crimes had been committed

726. Having arrived at the conclusion that General Bla{ki} ordered that Muslims be detained, the Trial Chamber will next review whether he knew that crimes were being perpetrated at each of the detention sites.

727. The Trial Chamber recalls that the detainees at Kaonik prison were Muslim civilians. They were detained by HVO soldiers who were also responsible for violent acts at the prison.

[1634] D523.
[1635] PT pp. 24020-24021.

728. The Defence contended that in January 1993 General Bla{ki} was isolated in Kiseljak and therefore did not know that civilians were being detained and subjected to ill-treatment[1636]. However, the accused himself declared that on 27 January 1993 he ordered the release of civilian detainees at Kaonik prison[1637]. His power to order the release of prisoners[1638] shows that he could actually find out about the circumstances in which the civilians were being detained. In this connection, the Trial Chamber notes that at the time, Bla{ki} knew that the Red Cross had become involved when it was informed that detainees were being ill-treated[1639].

729. Moreover, Kaonik prison was very near Vitez and the warden of Kaonik prison admitted to being under the authority of the Vitez and Busova~a HVO commanders[1640]. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber reaches the conclusion that General Bla{ki} did know of the acts of violence which occurred over the first half of 1993 at Kaonik prison.

730. The Trial Chamber recalls that for about 8 months in 1993 many Muslims were detained in Kiseljak barracks. Violence was inflicted upon the detainees by HVO soldiers and military policemen. The particular fact that the detention centre was located in the same complex as Kiseljak HVO headquarters[1641] allows the Trial Chamber to conclude that General Bla{ki} must have known that acts of violence were taking place.

731. Murders and physical violence took place in Rotilj for the extended period of time that the HVO held Muslim civilians there. The Trial Chamber is of the view that through his subordinates, General Bla{ki} must have known what was going on in the village which lay 4.6 kilometres from HVO Kiseljak headquarters[1642]. From this perspective, the Trial Chamber underlines in particular that Mario Bradara, deputy commander of the Kiseljak HVO, acknowledged that he was aware of the detentions in Rotilj[1643].

[1636] Defence Brief, IX, A.1 and G.
[1637] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21659-21660.
[1638] The delay between Bla{ki}'s order and the actual release of the prisoners has nothing to do with Bla{ki}'s authority over his subordinates but was down to the involvement of the Red Cross. Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21660-21661.
[1639] Witness Nuhagi}, PT pp. 5216-5217.
[1640] General Bla{ki} issued orders to the prison wardens directly and in particular to the warden of the Busova~a district military prison, D373 and D391, witness Mcleod, PT p. 6387.
[1641] General Bla{ki} even had his headquarters there, witness Friis-Pedersen, PT pp. 5485-5486.
[1642] Witness Leach, PT of 27 June 1997, p. 262.
[1643] Witness Lanthier, PT p. 8260, pp. 8299-8300.

732. General Bla{ki} admitted to the Trial Chamber that he knew that civilians were being detained at Dubravica primary school[1644]. These included inter alia the women and children who had been placed around General Bla{ki}'s command post for two weeks. Nonetheless, he announced that he had not made any effort to investigate the circumstances under which people were detained because the civilian authorities and Red Cross were dealing with the matter[1645]. In addition, the Trial Chamber points out that the school also served as the billet of the Vitezovi. As a result, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, General Bla{ki} could not have been unaware of the atmosphere of terror and the rapes which occurred at the school.

733. The Trial Chamber accordingly concludes that General Bla{ki} did know of the circumstances and conditions under which the Muslims were detained in the facilities mentioned above. In any case, General Bla{ki} did not perform his duties with the necessary reasonable diligence. As a commander holding the rank of Colonel, he was in a position to exercise effective control over his troops in a relatively confined territory[1646]. Furthermore, insofar as the accused ordered that Muslim civilians be detained, he could not have not sought information on the detention conditions. Hence, the Trial Chamber is persuaded beyond all reasonable doubt that General Bla{ki} had reason to know that violations of international humanitarian law were being perpetrated when the Muslims from the municipalities of Vitez, Busova~a and Kiseljak were detained.

iii. Tihomir Bla{ki} did not take the necessary and reasonable measures to punish the perpetrators of the crimes

734. The Defence highlighted that General Bla{ki} had no authority to control or sanction the detention centre administrators[1647]. Nevertheless, as established above, the Trial Chamber identified HVO soldiers or the Military Police as being the perpetrators of the crimes. The evidence demonstrated that the accused did not duly carry out his duty to investigate the crimes and impose disciplinary measures or to send a report on the perpetrators of these crimes to the competent authorities[1648].

[1644] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22225-22226.
[1645] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22226-22227.
[1646] Witness Duncan, PT pp. 9061-9063; witness Lanthier, PT pp. 8260-8265; D333 and D334, General Bla{ki} ordered captured civilians be treated humanely; D366, General Bla{ki} ordered that the civilians be released and provided with security.
[1647] Defence Brief, IX, A.3.
[1648] Witness Marin, PT pp. 13822-13823 , pp. 8898-8901; witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 21808-21811.

b. Trench digging

735. The Trial Chamber concluded that many detainees were forced to dig trenches on the front in dangerous conditions. These persons were detained at various facilities within the CBOZ – Kaonik prison, Kiseljak barracks, Rotilj village and in the town of Vitez at the cultural centre, the veterinary station, Dubravica school and the SDK building. While the detainees worked they suffered mental and physical violence inflicted by HVO soldiers and the Military Police.

736. The Defence refused to acknowledge that General Bla{ki} ordered or endorsed the use of civilian detainees to dig trenches[1649]. It argued that he was convinced that the work teams were lawful[1650]. Further, both the Kaonik prison warden[1651] and some HVO commanders admitted that using civilian detainees to dig trenches was necessary and that they were carrying out orders[1652]. One international observer considered that the HVO had deliberately used detainees for the purposes[1653].

737. General Bla{ki} declared that it was not he who decided where the work teams went. He also stated that he was aware that the Geneva Conventions forbade forced labour on the front-lines[1654]. Notwithstanding this, the evidence proves that the accused effectively directed work teams by requiring them to dig trenches on the front-line[1655]. In this respect, the Trial Chamber further recalls that those performing forced labour at the front were guarded by HVO soldiers.

738. With particular regard for the degree of organisation required, the Trial Chamber concludes that General Bla{ki} ordered the use of detainees to dig trenches, including under dangerous conditions at the front. The Trial Chamber also adjudges that by ordering the forced labour Bla{ki} knowingly took the risk that his soldiers might commit violent acts against vulnerable detainees, especially in a context of extreme tensions.

[1649] Defence Brief, IX, F.
[1650] Defence Brief, IX, F.
[1651] Witness Mcleod, PT pp. 6384-6387.
[1652] Witness Zeco, PT of 26 September 1997, pp. 2826-2827; witness Morsink, PT pp. 9895-9897.
[1653] Witness Buffini, PT pp. 5576-5577.
[1654] Witness Bla{ki}, PT p. 22773.
[1655] P715; P716; P717 .

ii) The taking of hostages (counts 17 and 18)

739. Bla{ki} admitted knowing that civilian detainees were at various locations in Vitez around 17 April 1993 but denied having ordered their detention[1656]. He then contradicted himself by stating that he had ordered that the detainees be treated humanely and he also stated that he had had the power to release them[1657].

740. The Trial Chamber notes that Mario ^erkez (commander of the Vite{ka Brigade and a direct subordinate of Bla{ki})[1658], other HVO military representatives and Ivan [anti} and Pero Skopljak (local HVO civilian officials) were all directly involved in the taking of hostages on 19 and 20 April 1993. In addition, they clearly referred to the threat posed by the ABiH's military advance towards the town of Vitez[1659].

741. The Trial Chamber concludes that although General Bla{ki} did not order that hostages be taken, it is inconceivable that as commander he did not order the defence of the town where his headquarters were located. In so doing, Bla{ki} deliberately ran the risk that many detainees might be taken hostage for this purpose.

iii) Inhuman and cruel treatment: human shields (counts 19 and 20)

742. On 20 April 1993, 247 detainees were in front of the Hotel Vitez, General Bla{ki}'s headquarters in Vitez. Despite his presence in the building for a large part of the afternoon, the accused claimed that he knew nothing of it[1660]. However, there were many HVO soldiers in and around the Hotel whose frontage was glass[1661]. One of the soldiers said to one of the detainees in front of the Hotel that he would go and tell the commander[1662]. Moreover, the officer responsible for operations under General Bla{ki}, Slavko Marin, implicitly admitted that the civilians from Ga~ice village were put in danger[1663]. Finally, the Trial Chamber [1656] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22469-22470, pp. 22475-22476.

[1657] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22475-22477.
[1658] D242.
[1659] The Trial Chamber notes that on 19 and 20 April 1993, the ABiH was successfully attacking the HVO which was in a difficult military situation; P242; witness Walters, PT p. 3406.
[1660] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 22463-22464.
[1661] Witness Hrusti}, pp. 4815-4816.
[1662] Witness Hrusti}, pp. 4814-4815.
[1663] Witness Marin, pp. 13567-13568.

recalls that on 20 April 1993 the ABiH set in motion an extremely threatening offensive of which General Bla{ki} was well aware.

743. The Trial Chamber is therefore convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that on 20 April 1993 General Bla{ki} ordered civilians from Ga~ice village to be used as human shields in order to protect his headquarters.

IV. FINAL CONCLUSIONS

744. The Trial Chamber concludes that the acts ascribed to Tihomir Bla{ki} occurred as part of an international armed conflict because the Republic of Croatia exercised total control over the Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna and the HVO and exercised general control over the Croatian political and military authorities in central Bosnia.

745. The accused was appointed by the Croatian military authorities. Following his arrival in Kiseljak in April 1992, he was designated chief of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone on 27 June 1992 and remained there until the end of the period covered by the indictment. From the outset, he shared the policy of the local Croatian authorities. For example, he outlawed the Muslim Territorial Defence forces in the municipality of Kiseljak.

746. From May 1992 to January 1993, tensions between Croats and Muslims continued to rise. At the same time, General Bla{ki} reinforced the structure of the HVO armed forces with the agreement of the Croatian political authorities.

747. In January 1993, the Croatian political authorities sent an ultimatum to the Muslims, inter alia, so as to force them to surrender their weapons. They sought to gain control of all the territories considered historically Croatian, in particular the La{va Valley. Serious incidents then broke out in Busova~a and Muslim houses were destroyed. After being detained, many Muslim civilians were forced to leave the territory of the municipality.

748. Despite the efforts of international organisations, especially the ECMM and UNPROFOR, the atmosphere between the communities remained extremely tense.

749. On 15 April 1993, the Croatian military and political authorities, including the accused, issued a fresh ultimatum. General Bla{ki} met with the HVO, military police and Vitezovi commanders and gave them orders which the Trial Chamber considers to be genuine attack orders. On 16 April 1993, the Croatian forces, commanded by General Bla{ki}, attacked in the municipalities of Vitez and Busova~a.

750. The Croatian forces, both the HVO and independent units, plundered and burned to the ground the houses and stables, killed the civilians regardless of age or gender, slaughtered the livestock and destroyed or damaged the mosques. Furthermore, they arrested some civilians and transferred them to detention centres where the living conditions were appalling and forced them to dig trenches, sometimes also using them as hostages or human shields. The accused himself stated that twenty or so villages were attacked according to a pattern which never changed. The village was firstly "sealed off". Artillery fire opened the attack and assault and search forces organised into groups of five to ten soldiers then "cleansed" the village. The same scenario was repeated in the municipality of Kiseljak several days later. The Croatian forces acted in perfect co-ordination. The scale and uniformity of the crimes committed against the Muslim population over such a short period of time has enabled the conclusion that the operation was, beyond all reasonable doubt, planned and that its objective was to make the Muslim population take flight.

751. The attacks were thus widespread, systematic and violent and formed part of a policy to persecute the Muslim populations.

752. To achieve the political objectives to which he subscribed, General Bla{ki} used all the military forces on which he could rely, whatever the legal nexus subordinating them to him.

753. He issued the orders sometimes employing national discourse and with no concern for their possible consequences. In addition, despite knowing that some of the forces had committed crimes, he redeployed them for other attacks.

754. At no time did he even take the most basic measure which any commander must at least take when he knows that crimes are about to be or have actually been committed. The end result of such an attitude was not only the scale of the crimes, which the Trial Chamber has explained, but also the realisation of the Croatian nationalists' goals - the forced departure of the majority of the Muslim population in the La{va Valley after the death and wounding of its members, the destruction of its dwellings, the plunder of its property and the cruel and inhuman treatment meted out to many.

V. PRINCIPLES AND PURPOSES OF SENTENCING

A. Applicable provisions

755. In imposing the appropriate sentence on the accused, the Trial Chamber is guided by the Statute and the Rules which make reference to the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia.

1. Statute

756. The relevant provisions of the Statute are Articles 7, 23 and 24. Article 7, which deals with individual criminal responsibility, stipulates inter alia that:

> 2. The official position of any accused, whether as Head of State or Government or as a responsible Government official, shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment.
>
> 4. The fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a government or of a superior shall not relieve him of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the International Tribunal determines that justice so requires.

757. Articles 23 and 24 state:

> Article 23
> Judgement
>
> 1. The Trial Chambers shall pronounce judgements and impose sentences and penalties on persons convicted of serious violations of international humanitarian law.
>
> 2. The judgement shall be rendered by a majority of the judges of the Trial Chamber, and shall be delivered by the Trial Chamber in public. It shall be accompanied by a reasoned opinion in writing, to which separate or dissenting opinions may be appended.
>
> Article 24
> Penalties
>
> 1. The penalty imposed by the Trial Chamber shall be limited to imprisonment. In determining the terms of imprisonment, the Trial Chambers shall have recourse to the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia.

2. In imposing the sentences, the Trial Chambers should take into account such factors as the gravity of the offence and the individual circumstances of the convicted person.

2. Rules of Procedure and Evidence

758. Rule 101 of the Rules, entitled "Penalties", determines the maximum sentence which the Tribunal may pass, that is life imprisonment, and the elements which the Trial Chamber takes into consideration when passing sentence, notably:

> the factors mentioned in Article 24, paragraph 2, of the Statute, as well as such factors as [...] any aggravating circumstances; [...] any mitigating circumstances including the substantial co-operation with the Prosecutor by the convicted person before or after conviction; [...] the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia [...]

3. General practice regarding prison sentences

759. Keeping in mind the foregoing provisions, the Trial Chamber has recourse to the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia[1664]. Reference to the practice is only indicative and not binding. Whenever possible, the Tribunal examines the texts and relevant judicial practice of the former Yugoslavia. However, it could not be legally bound by them in determining the sentences and sanctions it imposes for crimes falling under its jurisdiction[1665].

760. The practice for determining prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia is based on the provisions of Chapter 16[1666] and Article 41(1)[1667] of the SFRY criminal code.

[1664] Article 23 of the Statute and Rule 101 of the Rules.

[1665] Sentencing Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Dra`en Erdemovi}, Case no. IT-96-22-T, 29 November 1996 (hereinafter the "Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996"), para. 40; Judgement and Sentence, The Prosecutor v. Jean Kambanda, Case no. ICTR-97-23-S, 4 September 1998 (hereinafter the "Kambanda Judgement and Sentence"), para. 23; Furund`ija Judgement, para. 285; Aleksovski Judgement, para. 242; Sentence, The Prosecutor v. Jean Paul Akayesu, Case no. ICTR-96-4-T, 2 October 1998 (hereinafter the "Akayesu Sentence"), paras. 12-14; Sentence, The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case no. ICTR-95-1-T, 21 May 1999 (hereinafter the "Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence"), paras. 5-7.

[1666] Chapter XVI of the Criminal Code of the former Yugoslavia "Crimes against peace and international law", Articles 141-156 and Articles 38 "Imprisonment", 41 "Sentences" and 48 "Concurrence of offences". Crimes against peace and international law were subject to 5 to 15 years in prison or the death penalty, or twenty years in prison where the death sentence is replaced by a prison sentence or for aggravated murder.

[1667] Article 41(1) of the Criminal Code of the SFRY: "For a given offence, the court shall set the limits prescribed by law for the offence and shall consider all the circumstances which might influence the severity of the penalty (mitigating and attenuating circumstances) and, in particular: the level of criminal responsibility, the motives for the offence, the intensity of the threat or assault on the protected object, the circumstances under which the offence was committed, the previous history of the perpetrator of the offence, his personal circumstances and conduct subsequent to the perpetration of the offence and any other circumstances relating to the character of the perpetrator."

Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber is not limited by the practice of the courts of the former Yugoslavia and it may draw upon other legal sources in order to determine the appropriate sentence.

4. Purposes and objectives of the sentence

761. The determination of a "fair" sentence, that is to say a sentence consonant with the interests of justice, depends on the objectives sought. The Trial Chamber hearing the ^elebi}i case noted four parameters to be taken into account in fixing the length of the sentence: retribution, protection of society, rehabilitation and deterrence. According to the Trial Chamber, deterrence:

> is probably the most important factor in the assessment of appropriate sentences for violations of international humanitarian law. Apart from the fact that the accused should be sufficiently deterred by appropriate sentence from ever contemplating taking part in such crimes again, persons in similar situations in the future should similarly be deterred from resorting to such crimes[1668].

762. As the Trial Chamber hearing the Tadi} case recently recalled, pursuant to Security Council resolutions 808 and 827, the Tribunal's mission is to put to an end serious violations of international humanitarian law and to contribute towards the restoration and maintenance of peace in the former Yugoslavia[1669]. To achieve these objectives, the Trial Chamber must, in accordance with the case-law of the two ad hoc Tribunals, pass a sentence consonant with the above defined objectives[1670].

763. In addition, as observed in the Erdemovi} case:

> the International Tribunal sees public reprobation and stigmatisation by the international community, which would thereby express its indignation over heinous crimes and denounce the perpetrators, as one of the essential functions of a prison sentence for a crime against humanity[1671]

[1668] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1234.
[1669] Sentencing Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi}, Case no. IT-94-1-T*bis*-R117, 11 November 1999 (hereinafter the "Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment"), para. 7.
[1670] Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment, para. 9; ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 1231 and 1234; Furund`ija Judgement, para. 288; Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 2; Sentence, The Prosecutor v. Omar Serushago, Case no. ICTR-98-39-S, 5 February 1999 (hereinafter the "Serushago Sentence"), para. 20; Akayesu Sentence, para. 19; Kambanda Judgement and Sentence, para. 28.
[1671] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996, para. 65.

764. Finally, the Trial Chamber shares the opinion of the Trial Chamber hearing the Furund`ija case, that is, such reasoning is not applicable only to crimes against humanity but also to war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law[1672].

B. Sentencing

765. The factors taken into account in the various Judgements of the two International Tribunals to assess the sentence must be interpreted in the light of the type of offence committed and the personal circumstances of the accused. This explains why it is appropriate to identify the specific material circumstances directly related to the offence in order to evaluate the gravity thereof and also the specific personal circumstances in order to adapt the sentence imposed to the accused's character and potential for rehabilitation. Notwithstanding this, in determining the sentence, the weight attributed to each type of circumstance depends on the objective sought by international justice. Keeping in mind the mission of the Tribunal, it is appropriate to attribute a lesser significance to the specific personal circumstances. Although they help to explain why the accused committed the crimes they do not in any event mitigate the seriousness of the offence. Furthermore, these circumstances may aggravate the responsibility of an accused depending on the position he held at the time of the acts and on his authority to prevent the commission of crimes.

1. The accused

766. Tihomir Bla{ki} was born on 2 November 1960 in the municipality of Kiseljak in Bosnia-Herzegovina. He lived in the town of Bretovsko. His parents were working class and his father died at the front during the conflict. He has a sister and a brother. Tihomir Bla{ki} has been married since 1987 and is the father of two young boys. His wife looks after their children and Tihomir Bla{ki}'s brother[1673]. Tihomir Bla{ki} was trained at the Belgrade Military Academy from 1979-1980 and subsequently promoted at regular intervals, first to the rank of Captain First Class within the former JNA, then to the ranks of Colonel and Chief-of-Staff of the HVO Mostar headquarters within the HVO and lastly to the rank of General assigned to the General Inspectorate within the army of the Republic of Croatia. He is a member of the General Inspectorate of this army. Tihomir Bla{ki} surrendered to the Tribunal on 1 April 1996. He is presently being detained at the United Nations Detention Unit in Scheveningen, The Hague, The Netherlands.

[1672] Furund`ija Judgment, para. 289.
[1673] PT pp. 20186-20187.

2. Mitigating circumstances

767. Superior orders and co-operation with the Prosecutor are the only two mitigating circumstances explicitly set forth by the Statute and the Rules[1674]. The Tribunal has full discretion in respect of any other relevant mitigating circumstances.

a) The material mitigating circumstances

768. The fact that the accused did not directly participate may be taken as a mitigating circumstance when the accused holds a junior position within the civilian or military command structure. However, the Trial Chamber considers that the fact that commanders, such as Tihomir Bla{ki} at the time of the crimes, played no direct part cannot act in mitigation of the sentence when found guilty.

769. Duress, where established, does mitigate the criminal responsibility of the accused when he had no choice or moral freedom in committing the crime. This must consequently entail the passing of a lighter sentence if he cannot be completely exonerated of responsibility. The Trial Chamber points out that over the period covered by the present indictment Tihomir Bla{ki} did not act under duress whilst in his post. Accordingly, he does not enjoy any mitigating circumstances.

770. It appears that, independently of duress, the context in which the crimes were committed, namely the conflict, is usually taken into consideration in determining the sentence to be imposed. Such was the case in the Tadi}[1675], ^elebi}i[1676] and Aleksovski[1677] cases. Though mentioned in these cases, this factor does not seem to have been decisive in [1674] Article 7(4) of the Statute and Rule 101(B)(ii) of the Rules.

[1675] Sentencing Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi}, Case no. IT-94-1-T, 14 July 1997, (hereinafter the "Tadi} Sentencing Judgment"), para. 70: "the Trial Chamber cannot ignore these events, how they may bear on the offences of Du{ko Tadi}, and how they illuminate his role and thus his personal circumstances", and para. 72: "the virulent propaganda that stoked the passions of the citizenry [...] was endemic and contributed to the crimes committed in the conflict".
[1676] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1248: "It is relevant, and crucial, to take into account the circumstances in which the events occurred as well as the social pressures and hostile environment within which the accused was operating". For application in each instance: para. 1245 (Muci}) and 1283-1284 (Land`o).

fixing the sentence. Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber brings out the explanations given by Tihomir Bla{ki} whilst testifying to the disorganisation of the armed forces due, essentially, to the lack of experienced troops and the want of proper training and suitable materiel. It also observes the crimes allegedly committed by the other party and the difficulty of controlling the spontaneous reactions of some Croats. Nonetheless, even were they verified, these allegations are still not such as to constitute an excuse for a commander such as Tihomir Bla{ki} - a fortiori once it has been established as in this instance that the accused acted in accordance with a discriminatory policy which he deliberately implemented. The Trial Chamber finds the accused guilty of crimes against humanity and thereby excludes the possibility of disorder ensuing from an armed conflict constituting a mitigating circumstance.

b) Personal mitigating circumstances

771. Article 24(2) of the Statute allows the personal status of the accused to be taken into account in determining the sentence. Thus, where the elements effectively contribute to the determination of the sentence, the sanction must fit the crime's perpetrator and not merely the crime itself[1678] in accordance with the requirement of individualisation. As a human being, the accused has a conscience, a personal history and a character which may explain the process which led to the accused committing the crimes whose seriousness justifies his being tried before the Tribunal.

772. The Trial Chamber notes that the mental state of the accused was not invoked in this case[1679].

773. The accused's conduct after committing the crimes says much about his personality insofar as it reveals both how aware the accused was of having committed crimes and, to some extent, his intention to "make amends" by facilitating the task of the Tribunal[1680]. Such conduct includes co-operation with the Prosecutor, remorse, voluntary surrender and pleading guilty.

[1677] Aleksovski Judgement, para. 6.
[1678] Lafave and Israel, Criminal Procedure (1991), p. 1102, quoted from the Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 61.
[1679] Sub-rule 67(A)(ii) of the Rules.

774. Co-operation with the Prosecutor is the only circumstance explicitly provided for within the terms of the Rules[1681]. By this simple fact, it takes on a special importance. The earnestness and degree of co-operation with the Prosecutor decides whether there is reason to reduce the sentence on this ground. Therefore, the evaluation of the accused's co-operation depends both on the quantity and quality of the information he provides[1682]. Moreover, the Trial Chamber singles out for mention the spontaneity and selflessness of the co-operation which must be lent without asking for something in return[1683]. Providing that the co-operation lent respects the aforesaid requirements[1684], the Trial Chamber classes such co-operation as a "significant mitigating factor"[1685]. The Trial Chambers have, on several occasions, ruled that failure to co-operate constitutes an aggravating circumstance. Here, the Trial Chamber notes that the accused has not co-operated with the Office of the Prosecutor.

775. Remorse was taken into account as a mitigating circumstance in the Erdemovi}[1686], Akayesu[1687] and Serushago cases[1688]. The Trial Chamber hearing the Kambanda case noted that the accused did not express any regrets even when the Trial Chamber presented him with the opportunity to do so[1689]. However the remorse expressed by the accused must be established as being real and sincere. Consequently, the Trial Chamber in the Jelisi} case indicated that it was not satisfied that the remorse expressed by the accused was sincere[1690]. In this instance, the Trial Chamber notes that the feeling of remorse must be analysed in the light of not only the accused's statements but also of his behaviour (voluntary surrender, guilty plea). The Trial Chamber points out that, from the very first day of his testimony, Tihomir Bla{ki} expressed profound regret and avowed that he had done his best to improve the [1680] Kambanda Judgement and Sentence, para. 54: "The Trial Chamber has furthermore been requested to take into account in favour of Jean Kambanda that his guilty plea has also occasioned judicial economy, saved victims the trauma and emotions of trial and enhanced the administration of justice".

---

[1681] Sub-rule 101(B)(ii) of the Rules.
[1682] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996, para. 99-101 and the Sentencing Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Dra`en Erdemovi}, Case no. IT-96-22-T*bis*, 5 March 1998 (hereinafter the "Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998"), para. 16 (iv); Kambanda Judgement and Sentence, para. 47.
[1683] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1279: "the Trial Chamber does not consider any attempt at plea bargaining to be a mitigating factor in the matter of sentencing".
[1684] And especially when it has contributed not only to the disclosure of information which is new or corroborates known information but also to the identification of other perpetrators of crimes (against whom the accused agrees to testify during their trial).
[1685] Kambanda Judgement and Sentence, para. 47; the Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16 (iv).
[1686] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement, paras. 96-98; Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16.
[1687] Akayesu Sentence, para. 35(i).
[1688] Serushago Sentence, paras. 40-41.
[1689] Kambanda Judgement, para. 51.
[1690] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Goran Jelisi}, Case no. IT-95-10-T, 14 December 1999 (hereinafter the "Jelisi} Judgement"), para. 127.

situation although this proved insufficient[1691]. The Trial Chamber observes that there is a flagrant contradiction between this attitude and the facts it has established - having given orders resulting in the commission of crimes the accused cannot claim that he attempted to limit their consequences. His remorse thus seems dubious.

776. Voluntary surrender is deemed a significant mitigating circumstance in determining the sentence. The factor has been analysed in three cases to date. In the Erdemovi} case, it was deemed to indicate that the remorse expressed by the accused was sincere and thus a ground for reducing the sentence. However, it was selected as a self-contained mitigating circumstance in the Serushago case[1692]. More recently, the Trial Chamber in the Kupre{ki} case indicated that the voluntary surrender of accused constituted a factor operating in mitigation of the sentence[1693]. In the present case, even though his name appeared in an indictment alongside those of five other co-accused, Tihomir Bla{ki} voluntarily surrendered himself on 1 April 1996, that is approximately a year before the arrest of one of the other co-accused and eighteen months before another of the co-accused was handed over. However, as he himself stated during the hearings, he only surrendered himself once he had very carefully prepared his defence, to the point that he could retrace his movements down to the very minute even at the most critical moments of the conflict. The accused declared that he made preparations using documents which were no longer in his possession and which the Trial Chamber was unable to obtain.

777. A guilty plea, where entered, may in itself constitute a factor substantially mitigating the sentence. In this case, Tihomir Bla{ki} did not plead guilty. Although the Trial Chamber understands that the accused would contest the ascribability of the crimes, it does not however accept the fact that he took so much time to acknowledge that the crimes did indeed take place, particularly in Ahmi}i, crimes which the accused himself had ascribed to the Muslims or Serbs[1694], before stating at trial that they had been perpetrated, more specifically, by the Military Police[1695].

778. The case-law of the two ad hoc criminal Tribunals on rehabilitation takes the young age of the accused into account as a mitigating circumstance. The assessment of youth varies

[1691] PT pp. 17286-17287.
[1692] Serushago Sentence, para. 34.
[1693] Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 853: "The fact that Zoran Kupre{ki} and Mirjan Kupre{ki} voluntarily surrendered [...] is a factor in mitigation of their sentence"; cf. also paras. 860 and 863.
[1694] P380; witness Duncan, PT pp. 1198-1199.

– whilst the ICTY considers accused aged between 19 and 23 at the time of the facts as being young[1696], the ICTR selects ages from 32 to 37[1697]. In the present case, the Trial Chamber notes that Tihomir Bla{ki}, now 39 years old, was 32 at the time of the facts. It points out that this is not an unusually young age for a operative zone commander in time of armed conflict. However it must be stated that the accused was given considerable responsibilities, notably in organising the army and the conduct of military operations at a particularly critical period. Although he was a professional officer, the Trial Chamber considers that his age is to some degree a mitigating circumstance.

779. Finally, the Trial Chambers have often found it appropriate to review the accused's personal history - socially, professionally and within his family. It is essential to review these factors because they may bring to light the reasons for the accused's criminal conduct.

780. The character traits are not so much examined in order to understand the reasons for the crime but more to assess the possibility of rehabilitating the accused. The Judgement rendered in the Erdemovi} case states that the accused can be reformed and that he represents no danger[1698]. High moral standards are also indicative of the accused's character[1699]. Thus, the Trial Chamber bears in mind not only the fact that Tihomir Bla{ki} does not have a criminal record but also his keen sense for the soldiering profession which he considers a duty. In this respect, the Trial Chamber must take note of the exemplary behaviour of the accused throughout the trial, whatever the judgement as to his statements as a witness. The accused also appeared particularly at ease as regards the military aspect. It is appropriate to note that several witnesses attested to the professionalism of the accused and his organisational skills. He is a man of duty. He is also a man of authority who barely tolerated non-compliance with his orders. He is a man of conviction and his commitment to the Croatian cause is undoubted.

[1695] Witness Bla{ki}, PT pp. 18935-18937 and p. 18948.
[1696] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 284: 23 years; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1283: Land`o 19 years; Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996, para. 109 and Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16 (iv): 23 years.
[1697] Serushago Sentence, para. 39; Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 12 (Ruzindana).
[1698] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996, para. 110 and Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16 (i).
[1699] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16 (i); Akayesu Sentence, para. 35 (iii). A contrario, see the ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1256.

781. Another indication that the accused's character is reformable is evident in his lending assistance to some of the victims[1700]. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes that Tihomir Bla{ki} allegedly maintained, here and there, good relations with the Muslims throughout the conflict. Accordingly, he supposedly participated in Muslim festivals, stayed in touch with the family of a Muslim friend and protected a Muslim woman whose husband was threatened[1701]. Notwithstanding this, the Trial Chamber observes that these good relations were sporadic and above all on an individual basis. These factors are all the less decisive when one notes that criminals frequently show compassion for some of their victims even when perpetrating the most heinous of crimes.

782. Nevertheless, in a case as serious as this and also insofar as many accused share these personal factors, the Trial Chamber must find that their weight is limited or even non-existent when determining the sentence[1702].

3. Aggravating circumstances

a) The scope of the crime

i) How the crime was committed

783. The fact that the crime was as egregious as it was is a qualitative criterion which can be gleaned from its particularly cruel or humiliating nature. The Trial Chambers have pointed out, in this regard, the extreme cruelty of the beatings[1703], the sadism with which they were inflicted and the especial humiliation which ensued. The cruelty of the attack is clearly a significant consideration when determining the proper sentence. In this case, the heinousness of the crimes is established by the sheer scale and planning of the crimes committed which resulted in suffering being intentionally inflicted upon the Muslim victims regardless of age,

---

[1700] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1270; Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 16 (i); Serushago Sentence, para. 37 (v): assistance to victims; Akayesu Sentence, para. 35 (ii).
[1701] On 5 November 1993 (PT pp. 19851-19852).
[1702] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 284. Having recalled the personal mitigating circumstances, the Trial Chamber notes: "this may be said of many accused persons and cannot be given any significant weight in a case of this gravity".
[1703] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 11 and the detailed description of the bodily harm given in the third part of the Tadi} Judgement; Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 18; ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 1260-1267 and paras. 1272-1276.

sex or status. In this respect, the Trial Chamber wishes to bring out the particularly heinous nature of the crimes at Ahmi}i where, during a carefully prepared attack, many Muslim children, women and adults were systematically murdered and sometimes burnt alive in their homes, the houses plundered and set alight and the mosques and religious buildings destroyed. Such facts constitute a decisive aggravating circumstance.

784. The number of victims has been raised on several occasions as an aggravating circumstance and reflects the scale of the crime committed[1704]. By noting that the crimes were committed systematically, the Trial Chambers also took into account as aggravating circumstances the recurrence of the crimes[1705]. The number of victims must also be considered in relation to the length of time over which the crimes were perpetrated[1706]. In this case, the Trial Chamber not only points to the high number of victims but also the violence of the crimes and the fact that they were repeated, discriminatory and systematic. The Trial Chamber recalls that a very large number of Muslim civilians had their homes forcibly taken away from them. This excludes the very large number of victims who had to take flight. The brutal murder of Muslim civilians in Ahmi}i over a brief time-span is a blatant illustration.

785. The motive of the crime may also constitute an aggravating circumstance when it is particularly flagrant. Case-law has borne in mind the following motives: ethnic and religious persecution[1707], desire for revenge[1708] and sadism[1709]. Resultantly, the Trial Chamber considers that it is essential to review the motives of the crimes violating international humanitarian law imputed to the accused[1710]. Here, the Trial Chamber takes note of the ethnic and religious discrimination which the victims suffered. In consequence, the violations are to be analysed as persecution which, in itself, justifies a more severe penalty.

[1704] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, paras. 11-55. The Trial Chamber reviewed in detail the circumstance surrounding each offence and the role of the accused in each of them by performing a victim by victim analysis which ultimately resulted in particular in highlighting the number of victims. Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 15. Kambanda Judgement and Sentence, para. 42: "The magnitude of the crimes involving the killing of an estimated 500,000 civilians in Rwanda, in a short span of 100 days constitutes an aggravating fact" (footnote removed); Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 26: passing down a more severe sentence on Kayishema was justified, inter alia, by the fact that he was found guilty on 4 counts of genocide (compared to 1 for Ruzindana).

[1705] Aleksovski Judgement, para. 235; in the instance, the Trial Chamber did not retain "repeated malice". A contrario, had it been established, there is no doubt that it would have been regarded as an aggravating factor.

[1706] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996, para. 85 and Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, para. 15; Kambanda Sentence, para. 42; Akayesu Sentence, para. 26 (iv).

[1707] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 45.

[1708] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1235.

[1709] Ibid. para. 1269 and para. 1281.

[1710] Ibid. para. 1235.

ii) Effects of the crime upon the victims

786. The status of the victims may be taken into account as an aggravating circumstance. Judgements have indicated that the victims were civilians and/or women[1711]. This Trial Chamber notes that in this case many crimes targeted the general civilian population and within that population the women and children. These acts constitute an aggravating circumstance[1712].

787. The physical and mental effects of the bodily harm meted out to the victims were also seen as aggravating circumstances[1713]. The criterion is thus characterised by its subjectiveness. In the Tadi}, ^elebi}i and Furund`ija cases, the Trial Chambers observed that the offences had been committed in circumstances which could only aggravate the crimes and the victims' suffering[1714]. Those cases where bodily injury led to death have also been noted[1715]. Consequently, victims' suffering is one factor to be taken into account when determining the sentence. The Trial Chamber here points not only to the suffering inflicted upon the victims while the crimes were being committed through the use of indiscriminate, disproportionate and terrifying combat means and methods, such as "baby bombs", flame-throwers, grenades and a booby-trapped lorry, but also the manifest physical and mental suffering endured by the survivors of these brutal events. Thus, along with the physical or emotional scars borne by the victims, their suffering at the loss of loved ones and the fact that most of them are still unable to return to their homes to this day must also be mentioned.

b) The degree of the accused's responsibility

i) Command position

788. In the case-law of the two Tribunals, there can be no doubt that command position may justify a harsher sentence, which must be that much harsher because the accused held a [1711] Furund`ija Judgement, para. 283.

[1712] Ibid. and Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 56; ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1268.
[1713] ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 1226, 1260 and 1273.
[1714] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 56.
[1715] Ibid., para. 29: "While Du{ko Tadi} was not found guilty of having killed any of the prisoners, his participation in the beating of prisoners encouraged the beating of other prisoners by camp guards and visitors in such circumstances that death could and in fact did result, which aggravates the nature of his crime".

high position within the civilian or military command structure[1716]. In this instance, actual authority exercised seems more decisive than command authority alone[1717]. The Judgements of the ICTR on the issue are of particular importance in view of the high level of command authority held by some of the accused[1718]. The Trial Chambers observed that the case-law of the Tribunal classifies command position as an aggravating circumstance[1719]. In the Judgement rendered in the ^elebi}i case, the Trial Chamber nevertheless noted that command position does not necessarily entail a harsher sentence and that the accused may enjoy mitigating circumstances if he had only "constructive knowledge" of the crimes[1720]. However the Trial Chamber stated that:

> it would constitute a travesty of justice, and an abuse of the concept of command authority, to allow the calculated dereliction of an essential duty to operate as a factor in mitigation of criminal responsibility[1721].

789. Therefore, when a commander fails in his duty to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator thereof he should receive a heavier sentence than the subordinates who committed the crime insofar as the failing conveys some tolerance or even approval on the part of the commander towards the commission of crimes by his subordinates and thus contributes to encouraging the commission of new crimes. It would not in fact be consistent to punish a simple perpetrator with a sentence equal or greater to that of the commander. From this viewpoint, the Trial Chamber recalls that in the Tadi} case the Appeals Chamber found that a prison sentence above twenty years would be excessive given the relatively low rank of Du{ko Tadi} within the command structure.[1722] Command position must therefore systematically increase the sentence or at least lead the Trial Chamber to give less weight to the mitigating circumstances, independently of the issue of the form of participation in the crime. The Trial Chamber observes that as commander of the Central Bosnia Operative Zone at the time of the facts, Tihomir Bla{ki} held a senior command position. As indicated above, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the accused had more than a constructive knowledge of the crimes. It is satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that General Bla{ki} ordered attacks

---

[1716] Eichmann case, 29 May 1962, 36, ILR, 1968, p. 237: "The degree of responsibility generally increases as we draw further away from the man who uses the fatal instrument with his own hands and reach the higher level of commands".
[1717] Serushago Sentence, para. 29: "He was a de facto leader of the Interahamwe in Gisenyi. Within the scope of the activities of these militiamen, he gave orders which were followed"; Akayesu Sentence, para. 36(ii).
[1718] Kambanda Judgement, paras. 44, 61, 62; Akayesu Sentence para. 26.
[1719] Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 862; Furund`ija Judgement, para. 283 and ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 1240-1243 and para. 1268.
[1720] ^elebi}i Judgement, paras. 1219-1220.
[1721] Ibid. para. 1250.

which targeted the Muslim civilian population and thereby incurred responsibility for crimes committed during these attacks or at least made himself an accomplice thereto and, as regards those crimes not ensuing from such orders, he failed in his duty to prevent them and did not take the necessary measures to punish their perpetrators after they had been committed.

ii) Form of participation

790. Active and direct participation in the crime means that the accused committed by his own hand all or some of the crimes with which he is charged. Direct participation in the crime is accordingly an aggravating circumstance which will more often than not be held against the actual perpetrators rather than against the commanders[1723]. The relevant precedents set down by the Judgements delivered in the Tadi} and Furund`ija[1724] cases are quite significant. In the case in hand, the Trial Chamber points out that Tihomir Bla{ki} did not take a direct and active part in the crimes. Nonetheless, at the time of the facts, the accused held a command position which made him responsible for the acts of his subordinates. Accordingly, although the fact that he did not take a direct and active part does not constitute an aggravating circumstance in itself, it can in no way counterbalance the aggravation arising from the accused's command position[1725].

791. Therefore, it can be concluded that command position is more of an aggravating circumstance than direct participation. This holds true insofar as, although direct participation by the commander does constitute an aggravating circumstance, the fact that he does not participate directly may not conversely justify a reduction in the sentence

792. Informed and voluntary participation means that the accused participated in the crimes fully aware of the facts. It was specified as an aggravating circumstance in the Tadi}[1726] case and in all the Judgements rendered by the ICTR[1727]. The importance of this factor varies in

---

[1722] Discussion, The Prosecutor v. Du{ko Tadi}, Case no. IT-94-1-A and IT-94-1-A*bis* (hereinafter the "Judgement in Sentencing Appeals"), paras. 55-57.
[1723] Taking into account abuse of command authority as an aggravating circumstance results in raising the sentence of a superior to at least the same level if not higher.
[1724] Furund`ija Judgement, paras. 281-282.
[1725] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1252.
[1726] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 57 and Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment, para. 20: in determining the sentence the Chamber took into account the fact that Tadi} knew of the attack upon the non-Serb civilian population and his enthusiastic support for the attack.
[1727] Kambanda Sentence, para. 61(B)(vi); Akayesu Sentence, para. 36(i); Serushago Sentence, para. 30; Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 13.

case-law depending on the degree of enthusiasm with which the accused participated. Informed participation is consequently a less aggravating circumstance than willing participation. Not only does the accused's awareness of the criminality of his acts and their consequences and of the criminal behaviour of his subordinates count but also his willingness and intent to commit them. Once such intent is established, it is likely to justify an additional aggravation of the sentence. In the case in hand, the Trial Chamber brings out the informed and voluntary participation of Tihomir Bla{ki} in the crimes ascribed to him. As a professional soldier who, as he himself explained, took a course on the law of armed conflicts while in the former JNA, the accused knew perfectly well the range of his obligations. It is inconceivable that Tihomir Bla{ki} was unable to assess the criminal consequences stemming from the violations of such obligations.

iii) Premeditation

793. The premeditation of an accused in a crime tends to aggravate his degree of responsibility in its perpetration and subsequently increases his sentence. Premeditation is a classic aggravating circumstance in national legal practice. For this reason, it was taken into account by the ICTY and ICTR in the Tadi}, ^elebi}i, Kambanda and Serushago cases. The Trial Chamber here holds that, insofar as the accused has been found guilty of crimes against humanity, these circumstances may not be taken into account.

4. Credit for time served

794. Under Sub-rule 101(D) of the Rules, any person found guilty is entitled to "the period which [he] was detained in custody pending surrender to the Tribunal or pending trial or appeal" being deducted from the sentence. Consequently, in calculating the sentence, the fact that the accused has been detained by the Tribunal since 1 April 1996, that is three years, eleven months and two days as of the day of this Judgement, must be considered.

5. The sentence

795. Neither the Statute nor the Rules lays down expressly a scale of sentences applicable to the crimes falling under the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. Article 24(2) of the Statute draws no distinction between crimes when determining the sentence. The Trial Chamber passes only prison sentences, the maximum being life imprisonment pursuant to Sub-rule 101(A) of the Rules.

796. However, the principle of proportionality, a general principle of criminal law, and Article 24(2) of the Statute call on the Trial Chamber to bear in mind the seriousness of the offence and could consequently constitute the legal basis for a scale of sentences. The first question which arises therefrom concerns the existence of a scale of seriousness of the crimes over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction. The question of transposing this scale when determining the sentence only comes up later.

a) Legal bases and consequences of an objective ranking of the crimes

797. To date, the issue of the legal basis for ranking the crimes does not appear to have been the focus of many discussions[1728]. In the Erdemovi} case, the Appeals Chamber outlined the principle of a scale of seriousness of the crimes although the legal arguments put forward in support of the said principle were not unanimously agreed upon. In their separate opinion, Judges McDonald and Vohrah advanced two arguments for a scale of seriousness of the crimes. First, they indicated a natural distinction between crimes against humanity and war crimes in order to justify the intrinsically more serious nature of the crimes against humanity[1729]. In their respective separate opinions in the Erdemovi} and Tadi} cases[1730], Judge Li and Judge Robinson signalled their disagreement on the matter noting that a crime against humanity is not a crime against the whole of mankind but a crime against "humaneness, i.e. a certain quality of behaviour". The Trial Chamber however observes that although the two meanings of the word "humanity" are allowable, the second in no way acts [1728] Judgement, The Prosecutor v. Dra`en Erdemovi}, Case no. IT-96-22-A, 7 October 1997 (hereinafter the "Erdemovi} Judgement"), Joint Separate Opinion of Judge McDonald and Judge Vohrah, paras. 20-27 and Separate and Dissenting Opinion of Judge Li; Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998, Separate Opinion of Judge Shahabuddeen; Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment, Separate Opinion of Judge Robinson.

[1729] Erdemovi} Judgement, para. 21: "It is in their very nature that crimes against humanity differ in principle from war crimes. Whilst rules proscribing war crimes address the criminal conduct of a perpetrator towards an immediate protected object, rules proscribing crimes against humanity address the perpetrator's conduct not only towards the immediate victim but also towards the whole of humankind" (emphasis added) and the Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 29 November 1996: "But crimes against humanity also transcend the individual because when the individual is assaulted, humanity comes under attack and is negated. It is therefore the concept of humanity as victim which essentially characterises crimes against humanity".

[1730] Erdemovi} Judgement, Separate and Dissenting Opinion of Judge Li, para. 26 and reference to definition given by Egon Schwelb in "Crimes against Humanity", 23 British yearbook of International Law (1946), p. 195; Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment, Separate Opinion of Judge Robinson, page 9.

in mitigation of the seriousness per se of a crime against humanity which retains a different nature from a war crime.

798. Secondly, the fact that a crime against humanity is distinguishable from a war crime by its ingredients is raised – crimes against humanity are not isolated acts committed at random but rather acts which, as their perpetrator is aware, have much more serious consequences because of their additional contribution to a widespread pattern of violence[1731]. However, a crime against humanity must not necessarily be considered more serious than a war crime[1732]. The comparison must be made between two similar underlying crimes[1733].

799. Accordingly, an outline of the hierarchy of crimes emerges from the case-law of the two ad hoc Tribunals but its legal value does not seem to have been established at the present time[1734].

b) The principles set by the case-law of the two Tribunals

i) The principles

800. A hierarchy of crimes seems to emerge from the case-law of the ICTR. The Trial Chamber seised of the Kambanda case[1735] established a complete scale of seriousness of the crimes which was taken up in the subsequent Judgements of the ICTR[1736]. The following hierarchy of crimes falling under the jurisdiction of the Tribunal may therefore be compiled:

[1731] Erdemovi} Judgement, Joint Separate Opinion of Judge MacDonald and Judge Vohrah, para. 21 and reference to the analysis of the legal ingredients of a crime against humanity made in the Tadi} Sentencing Judgement.
[1732] Ibid., Separate and Dissenting Opinion of Judge Li, para. 19-20.
[1733] An assessment of the seriousness of crimes is made "all things being equal".
[1734] Tadi} Appeals Sentencing Judgment, Separate Opinion of Judge Robinson, p. 2: "That decision of the Appeals Chamber in Erdemovi}, which is discussed in this Sentencing Judgment ("Judgment"), is, of course, binding on Trial Chambers as to the relative gravity of crimes against humanity and war crimes; and it is only because I am bound by it that I have concurred in those sections of this Judgment" (emphasis added).
[1735] Kambanda Sentence, para. 10-16.
[1736] Akayesu Sentence, paras. 3-11; Serushago Sentence, paras. 12-16; Kayishema-Ruzindana Sentence, para. 9.

1) "The crime of crimes": genocide[1737]

2) Crimes of an extreme seriousness: crimes against humanity

3) Crimes of a lesser seriousness: war crimes[1738]

The ICTR has thus supposedly established a genuine hierarchy of crimes and this has been used in determining sentences as witnessed by the fact that the crime of genocide was punished by life imprisonment[1739].

801. The ICTY has not yet transposed this hierarchy of crimes to the sentencing phase. Until now only the Tadi} case has the distinctive feature whereby the accused has been found guilty of crimes against humanity and war crimes for the same acts and was sentenced separately for each characterisation specified. In view of this, it should also be noted that the sentences imposed for crimes against humanity were systematically one year longer than those for war crimes. Even in the Erdemovi} case, the Appeals Chamber did not clearly use the hierarchy of offences, as established in the Judgement, in order to determine the corresponding applicable sentence[1740]. Recently in the Tadi} case, the Appeals Chamber noted that in determining the sentence there is no distinction in law between the seriousness of a crime against humanity and that of a war crime[1741]. In setting the sentence, the Chamber indicated:

> [t]he authorized penalties are also the same, the level in any particular case being fixed by reference to the circumstances of the case[1742].

802. Ultimately, it appears that the case-law of the Tribunal is not fixed. The Trial Chamber will therefore confine itself to assessing seriousness based on the circumstances of the case.

[1737] Kambanda Judgement, para. 16: "The crime of genocide is unique because of its element of dolus specialis (special intent) which requires that the crime be committed with the intent 'to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group as such'".
[1738] Ibid., para. 9.
[1739] Except for the sentences passed down on Serushago and Ruzindana.
[1740] Erdemovi} Sentencing Judgement of 5 March 1998: if the sentence was reduced to 5 years for violations of the laws or customs of war from 10 years for a crime against humanity, the recharacterisation of the crime was not the sole decisive factor in determining the sentence, since in the Sentencing Judgement duress was selected as a decisive mitigating circumstance; cf. Separate Opinion of Judge Shahabuddeen, p. 10.
[1741] Tadi} Judgement in Sentencing Appeals, para. 69. Also note the Separate Opinion of Judge Cassese.
[1742] Ibid., para. 69.

ii) The method for assessing seriousness

803. The objective method for assessing the seriousness of a crime is linked to the intrinsic seriousness of the crime's legal characterisation. It is not the seriousness of the crime committed in the case in point which is borne in mind but the seriousness of the characterisation specified. The subjective method for assessing the seriousness relates to the seriousness in personam of the crime[1743].

804. In addition to the seriousness per se of the crime, it is also appropriate to take into account its seriousness in personam[1744]. Although the subjective seriousness is not taken into account in the scale of seriousness of the crimes, it is a factor in the second phase of determining the sentence and thereby ensures that the circumstances of the case may be duly taken into account in setting the sentence. It is not contrary to the principle of individualisation of the sentence to rely on a scale of seriousness of the crimes. The scale of sentences will follow from the relationship between and the evaluation of the objective seriousness, if relevant, and the subjective seriousness of the crimes. It is understood that the weight of the second factor, that is the subjective seriousness, should not, other than in exceptional circumstances, cancel out the first factor, that is the objective seriousness. Furthermore and where necessary, the imposition of a minimum sentence to be served would give some scope for the sentence to be fine-tuned[1745]. However, the Trial Chamber notes that this notion is not universally accepted in the various legal systems.

c) A single sentence

805. The Trial Chamber is of the view that the provisions of Rule 101 of the Rules do not preclude the passing of a single sentence for several crimes. In this regard, the Trial Chamber takes note that although until now the ICTY Trial Chambers have rendered Judgements imposing multiple sentences, Trial Chamber I of the ICTR imposed single sentences in the Kambanda[1746] and Serushago[1747] cases.

[1743] ^elebi}i Judgement, para. 1226.
[1744] Erdemovi} Judgement, para. 10; Kambanda Sentence, para. 29.
[1745] Tadi} Sentencing Judgement, para. 76: "Minimum term recommendation"; Article 132-133 of the French Criminal Code.
[1746] Kambanda Sentence.
[1747] Serushago Sentence.

806. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls that in the cases brought before the military Tribunals at Nuremberg and Tokyo, a single sentence was passed even for multiple crimes.

807. Here, the crimes ascribed to the accused have been characterised in several distinct ways but form part of a single set of crimes committed in a given geographic region during a relatively extended time-span, the very length of which served to ground their characterisation as a crime against humanity, without its being possible to distinguish criminal intent from motive. The Trial Chamber further observes that crimes other than the crime of persecution brought against the accused rest fully on the same facts as those specified under the other crimes for which the accused is being prosecuted. In other words, it is impossible to identify which acts would relate to which of the various counts - other than those supporting the prosecution for and conviction of persecution under count 1 which, moreover, covers a longer period of time than any of the other counts. In light of this overall consistency, the Trial Chamber finds that there is reason to impose a single sentence for all the crimes of which the accused has been found guilty.

6. Conclusion

808. In conclusion, the Trial Chamber holds that in this case, the aggravating circumstances unarguably outweigh the mitigating circumstances and that the sentence pronounced accurately reflects the degree of seriousness of the crimes perpetrated and the faults of the accused given his character, the violence done to the victims, the circumstances at the time and the need to provide a punishment commensurate with the serious violations of international humanitarian law which the Tribunal was set up to punish according to the accused's level of responsibility.

VI. DISPOSITION

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER, in a unanimous ruling of its members, FINDS Tihomir Bla{ki} GUILTY:

of having ordered a crime against humanity, namely persecutions against the Muslim civilians of Bosnia, in the municipalities of Vitez, Busova~a and Kiseljak and, in particular, in the towns and villages of Ahmi}i, Nadioci, Piri}i, [anti}i, O~ehni}i, Vitez, Stari Vitez, Donja Ve~eriska, Ga~ice, Lon~ari, Grbavica, Behri}i, Kazagi}i, Svinjarevo, Gomionica, Gromiljak, Polje Vi{njica, Vi{njica, Rotilj, Hercezi, Tulica and Han Plo~a/Grahovci between 1 May 1992 and 31 January 1994 (count 1) for the following acts:

- attacks on towns and villages;

- murder and serious bodily injury;

- the destruction and plunder of property and, in particular, of institutions dedicated to religion or education;

- inhuman or cruel treatment of civilians and, in particular, their being taken hostage and used as human shields;

- the forcible transfer of civilians; and by these same acts, in particular, as regards an international armed conflict, General Bla{ki} committed:

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 51(2) of Additional Protocol I: unlawful attacks on civilians (count 3);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 52(1) of Additional Protocol I: unlawful attacks on civilian objects (count 4);

- a grave breach, under Article 2(a) of the Statute: wilful killing (count 5);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions: murder (count 6);

- a crime against humanity, under Article 5(a) of the Statute: murder (count 7);

- a grave breach under Article 2(c) of the Statute: wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health (count 8);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions: violence to life and person (count 9);

- a crime against humanity under Article 5(i) of the Statute: inhumane acts (count 10);

- a grave breach under Article 2(d) of the Statute: extensive destruction of property (count 11);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3(b) of the Statute: devastation not justified by military necessity (count 12);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3(e) of the Statute: plunder of public or private property (count 13);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3(d) of the Statute: destruction or wilful damage done to institutions dedicated to religion or education (count 14);

- a grave breach under Article 2(b) of the Statute: inhuman treatment (count 15);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions: cruel treatment (count 16);

- a grave breach under Article 2(h) of the Statute: taking civilians as hostages (count 17);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3(1)(b) of the Geneva Conventions: taking of hostages (count 18);

- a grave breach, under Article 2(b) of the Statute: inhuman treatment (count 19);

- a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute and recognised by Article 3(1)(a) of the Geneva Conventions: cruel treatment (count 20),

In any event, as a commander, he failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures which would have allowed these crimes to be prevented or the perpetrators thereof to be punished, and

NOT GUILTY of counts 3 and 4 in relation to the shelling of the town of Zenica, and therefore,

SENTENCES Tihomir Bla{ki} to forty-five years in prison;

STATES that the length of time he has been detained for the Tribunal, that is the period from 1 April 1996 until the date of this Judgement, shall be deducted from the overall length of the sentence.

Done in French and English, the French version being authoritative.

Done this third day of March
At The Hague
The Netherlands.

/signed/

Claude Jorda
President of the Trial Chamber

/signed/

Mohamed Shahabuddeen

/signed/

Almiro Rodrigues

[Seal of the Tribunal]

Judge Shahabuddeen appends a declaration to this Judgement.

DECLARATION OF JUDGE SHAHABUDDEEN

I agree with the judgment but, as I had made a reservation in a previous case concerning the subject of international armed conflict, I state below my views on some aspects of that matter as it relates to this case.

The main question concerns the test to be applied where the impugned state is alleged to have acted through a foreign military entity, as distinguished from direct military intervention. Paragraph 27 of a joint opinion of Judges Vohrah and Nieto-Navia spoke of "overall control"; that was in Aleksovski, decided by a Trial Chamber on 25 June 1999. A test similarly named appeared in the judgment rendered, shortly afterwards, by the Appeals Chamber in Tadic on 15 July 1999. It was in respect of this test that I entered the reservation above-mentioned. The present Trial Chamber applies this test. Institutionally, I agree with the Trial Chamber in following the judgment of the Appeals Chamber on the point. Individually, however, I have a different approach and would like to preserve it, although it leads to the same conclusion as that produced in this case by the overall control test.

A prefatory consideration is that, as it was said by Judge Gros, "a change in terminology does not suffice to avoid a problem".[1] The problem of determining whether a state is in armed conflict with another state through a foreign military entity is not resolved by asking whether there is "overall control" unless this term is understood by reference to a criterion which enables the court to decide whether such control exists in the particular circumstances of any case.

It seems to me that this criterion is to be found by asking what is the degree of control which is effective in any set of circumstances to enable the impugned state to use force against the other state through the intermediary of the foreign military entity concerned. It is only that standard which can help to determine whether "overall control" for one purpose is "overall control" for another. For example, what is overall control for the purpose of committing breaches of international humanitarian law need not be overall control for the purpose of using force short of committing such breaches, as is possible. It was in respect of the former purpose (which is not germane here) that Nicaragua spoke of the need for specific instructions.[2] I do not read that case as intended to say that, as a matter of law, proof of specific instructions is necessarily required where the question is whether a state was using force through a foreign military entity short of committing breaches of international humanitarian law, which is all that the prosecution has to prove in support of its proposition that an "armed conflict" had arisen between two states within the meaning of Article 2, first paragraph, of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

[1] Gulf of Maine, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 363, para. 6, dissenting opinion.

In all cases, the juridically meaningful criterion is whether there is effective control. Whether there is such control has to be considered in the light of the particular purpose in view. This means that it may be necessary to distinguish between the criterion and evidence of satisfaction of the criterion. In some cases, proof of satisfaction of the criterion may conceivably require evidence of specific instructions; in others it may not. But, whatever may be the evidence required to satisfy it, the criterion remains that of effectiveness. There is no way of eliminating the concept; it is both constant and ineradicable. Any needed flexibility is provided by its operation.

Thus, a criterion of universal applicability displaces a number of tests (apparent in the Tadi} appeal judgment) to determine what is but a single issue, namely, whether the acts of others (individuals or groups, organised or not) are acts of the impugned state – whether a neighbouring state or a distant state. In the result, it may be doubted whether analysis is promoted by adding the word "overall" to the word "control" unless recourse is had to a criterion of effectiveness to determine whether there is overall control in any circumstances. A test is not by itself sufficient and is not therefore adequate if, to apply it in particular circumstances, it is necessary to have recourse to another test of more fundamental applicability.

As mentioned above, as a matter of institutional correctness, I agree with the Trial Chamber in following the Appeals Chamber as to the test to be applied. In my respectful individual opinion, however, the effective control test to be extracted from the judgment of the International Court of Justice in Nicaragua is sound. The defence was right in contending for that test, but I cannot see that, in the circumstances of this case, it produces effects which differ from those resulting from the overall control test.

A second question concerns the argument of the defence that the ICRC-sponsored agreement of 22 May 1992 showed that the parties, together with the ICRC, regarded the conflict as internal, and not as international.[3] The argument is based on the fact that, under the agreement, the parties committed themselves to abide by the substantive rules of internal armed conflict set out in common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and in addition agreed, on the strength of the third paragraph of that article, to apply certain provisions of the Conventions concerning international armed conflict.

---

[2] Nicaragua v United States of America, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 14.

It appears to me that the proposition that the ICRC must have held the view that the conflict was internal is not the same as the proposition that the ICRC must have held that it was only internal. The Appeals Chamber itself recognised that the same armed conflict may have both internal and international aspects.[4] As the Appeals Chamber put it:

> "Taken together, the agreements reached between the various parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia bear out the proposition that, when the Security Council adopted the Statute of the International Tribunal in 1993, it did so with reference to situations that the parties themselves considered at different times and places as either internal or international armed conflicts, or as a mixed internal-international conflict".[5]

It was therefore open to the parties to agree on the regulation of their conflict in so far as it was internal without thereby excluding the possibility that it also had international aspects. An admission that it had these latter aspects was not likely to be made so long as any intervening external state was in a position to exercise influence on key parties to the agreement; if there had to be such an admission, there might have been no agreement. Likewise, it was competent for the ICRC to encourage the parties to regulate the conflict in so far as it was internal without thereby necessarily taking the position that the conflict was only internal.

Further, the position was an evolving one. The agreement was made on 22 May 1992. Even if the armed conflict was exclusively internal on that date, it did not follow that it remained so. From paragraph 26 of their opinion in Aleksovski, it appears that the majority in that case accepted that the conflict became international but that they considered that this happened after the end of the period covered by the indictment in that

---

[3] For supporting argument, see Tadic Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, (1994-1995)1 ICTY JR, p. 433, para. 73, and para. 16 of the joint opinion in Aleksovski, IT-95-14/1-T of 25 June 1999.
[4] Tadi} Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, (1994-1995), 1 ICTY JR 357, p. 433, para. 72; and see ibid., p. 441, para. 77.
[5] Ibid., p. 435, para. 73.

case. Their view of the time (seemingly, April 1993) with effect from which the conflict became international does not of course bind this Trial Chamber.

A third question concerns a view that there could have been no international armed conflict in this case because, if there were, that would lead to the absurdity of holding that persons having the nationality of Bosnia and Herzegovina who were held by the HVO were protected persons on the ground that the HVO was acting for a foreign state[6] whose nationality the victims did not have, but that such persons were not protected persons if held by the ABiH since they would have the nationality of the state for which the latter was acting. In the result, atrocities would be punishable as grave breaches in the former case, but not in the latter.

The difficulty can be overcome by argument to the effect that, on one ground or another, in a particular situation Bosnian Croat victims of the ABiH did not in fact have the nationality of Bosnia and Herzegovina for purposes of the Fourth Geneva Convention, recourse being had to the broad objects of the relevant provisions. But it is right to recognise that those possibilities have a limit beyond which the victims indisputably have the same nationality as that of the state in whose hands they find themselves. What then, when that limit is reached?

The hypothesis given above in relation to victims of the HVO assumes a common nationality of the victims and those by whom they were directly victimised, the former being nevertheless protected persons on the ground that the latter were acting as agents of a state whose nationality the victims did not have. That agency element is missing in a case in which citizens of a state are victimised by the armed forces of the same state who are acting only for that state and not for another. In such a situation, the victims have the nationality of the party in whose hands they find themselves and are not protected persons.

The resulting difference between the two situations is obvious. But the lack of symmetry is superficial and does not attract an absurdity argument. In one case, the captors would have been acting as agents of a foreign state; not so in the other. The law itself is symmetrical. If a party puts itself within the reach of its sanctions for a reason which does not apply to another, there can be no complaint on the ground of inequality in the operation of the law. In the result, there is no such absurdity as to justify rejection of the view that there was an international armed conflict in this case.

---

[6] See Tadic Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, p. 439, para. 76; and see and compare Prosecutor v. Delalic, IT-96-21-T, 16 November 1998, paras. 245-266.

A fourth and last question concerns a submission by the defence that, in accordance with the Tadi} Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction decision rendered by the Appeals Chamber on 2 October 1995 and the judgment given by the Trial Chamber in Aleksovski on 25 June 1999, the mere intervention of foreign troops in a conflict between local forces does not convert the conflict from a local one into an international one. This holding, said the defence, denies the judgment rendered in Celebi}i on 16 November 1998 and the review decision given in the Raji} Indictment case on 13 September 1996, when the opposite position was taken.[7]

I understand the submission to contemplate this situation: There is an armed conflict between a secessionist group and the government of the state. A foreign state intervenes militarily in support of the secessionist group and is resisted by the local state. The external military intervention clearly constitutes an armed conflict between states for the purpose of making the Fourth Geneva Convention applicable. But does the internal conflict itself become an armed conflict between states?

The answer is in the affirmative if the foreign state assumes control over the secessionist group such that the use of force by the secessionist group becomes a use of force by the foreign state against the local state, thereby giving rise to an armed conflict between states within the meaning of Article 2, first paragraph, of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

Where that is so, a remaining question is whether the local armed conflict can retain any part of its original internal character. It seems to me that an affirmative answer is indicated both by principle and by authority. As to principle, it is difficult to see why an ongoing internal armed conflict should suddenly and necessarily lose that character altogether because of foreign intervention. The circumstance that a secessionist group is using force under the control of a foreign state does not necessarily mean that it cannot be also using the same force on its own account. As to authority, words used in the Tadi} Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction decision suggest the possibility of dual characterisation. For example, paragraph 72 of that decision spoke of the armed conflict in that case being "characterised as both internal and international" or as having "some combination" of internal and international aspects.

---

, T.25248-9, Mr Nobilo.

Thus, I think the defence is right to the extent that foreign intervention does not of necessity deprive an internal armed conflict of its internal character altogether – it may, but it may not. However, I do not think it is necessary to pursue the matter further. The conclusion of the Trial Chamber, with which I respectfully agree, is that, in the particular circumstances of the case, Croatia was always in overall control of the HVO; that conclusion is unqualified. No room is left for a finding that the armed conflict was in part internal or to explore the legal implications of such a finding.

Done in both English and French, the English text being authoritative.

Mohamed Shahabuddeen

Dated this third day of March 2000
At The Hague
The Netherlands

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

13. Prosecutor v. Delalić et al., IT-96-21-T, Decision on the Motion of the Prosecutor for the Admissibility of Evidence, 19 January 1998.

3198

IN THE TRIAL CHAMBER

Before: Judge Adolphus G. Karibi-Whyte, Presiding

Judge Elizabeth Odio Benito

Judge Saad Saood Jan

Registrar: Mrs. Dorothee de Sampayo Garrido-Nijgh

Decision of: 19 January 1998

PROSECUTOR

v.

ZEJNIL DELALIC
ZDRAVKO MUCIC also known as "PAVO"
HAZIM DELIC
ESAD LANDZO also known as "ZENGA"

DECISION ON THE MOTION OF THE PROSECUTION FOR THE ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Grant Niemann

Ms. Teresa McHenry

Mr. Giuliano Turone

Counsel for the Accused:

Ms. Edina Residovic, Mr. Ekrem Galijatovic, Mr. Eugene O'Sullivan, for Zejnil Delalic

Mr. Zeljko Olujic, Mr. Michael Greaves, for Zdravko Mucic

Mr. Salih Karabdic, Mr. Thomas Moran, for Hazim Delic

Mr. John Ackerman, Ms. Cynthia McMurrey, for Esad Landzo

I. INTRODUCTION

3199

1. Pending before this Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 ("International Tribunal") is a motion requesting the admission of a number of documents and videotapes into evidence ("Motion") which the Office of the Prosecutor ("Prosecution") orally presented on 31 October 1997. Oral arguments continued on 3, 5 and 6 November 1997. The background to the Motion is the following.

2. On 18 March 1996 members of the Austrian police, in response to a request for co-operation from the Prosecution, carried out searches in a number of locations in Vienna, Austria. Among the localities searched were the premises of the company "Inda-Bau", a firm with which the accused Zejnil Delalic ("Delalic") is alleged by the Prosecution to have close links, and the apartment of the accused Zdravko Mucic ("Mucic"). In the course of this operation a large number of videotapes and twelve folders containing documents were seized at the premises of Inda-Bau. A further four videotapes and certain documents were seized in Mucic's apartment.

3. After having heard the testimony of four officers of the Austrian police appearing as witnesses for the Prosecution on matters relating to this operation, the Trial Chamber, in an oral decision of 12 September 1997, admitted the twelve folders found at the premises of the Inda-Bau company into evidence. In this decision, the Trial Chamber was satisfied that the chain of custody had been established, and admitted the folders but not their contents. In a subsequent decision on 22 October 1997, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence two of the documents allegedly originally contained in these folders, together with portions of a video-recording allegedly seized at Inda-Bau (exhibits 137, 141 and portions 00.00 - 02. 41 and 11.49 - 16.26 of exhibit 114). These exhibits were admitted on the basis of the evidence given by the Prosecution witness General Pasalic, who in his testimony was able to authenticate the documents and who recognised the contents of the videotape as a recording of an interview given by himself in December 1992.

4. Among the four members of the Austrian police who appeared before the Trial Chamber was District Inspector Thomas Moerbauer, who in his evidence described how he, subsequent to the seizures, had examined and prepared an index of the documents contained in the twelve folders found at Inda-Bau. In the course of his testimony Moerbauer was presented by the Prosecution with a number of documents and asked to verify them as documents originally contained in the twelve folders seized at Inda-Bau.

5. The Prosecution now moves to have the documents presented to Moerbauer, together with a number of videotapes allegedly seized at Inda-Bau and the accused Mucic's apartment, admitted into evidence. These are exhibit numbers 110, 111, 112, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 143, 144, 145, 146 and 147 A-C ("the exhibits").

THE TRIAL CHAMBER, HAVING CONSIDERED the oral arguments of the parties, HEREBY ISSUES ITS DECISION.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Applicable Provisions

3200

6. It is appropriate to set out in full certain provisions of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Tribunal ("Rules") which were cited to the Trial Chamber during oral argument.

Rule 89

General Provisions

(A) The Rules of evidence set forth in this Section shall govern the proceedings before the Chambers. The Chambers shall not be bound by national rules of evidence.

(B) In cases not otherwise provided for in this Section, a Chamber shall apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.

(C) A Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.

(D) A Chamber may exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial.

(E) A Chamber may request verification of the authenticity of evidence obtained out of court.

Rule 95

Exclusion of certain evidence

No evidence shall be admissible if obtained by methods which cast substantial doubt on its reliability or if its admission is antithetical to, and would seriously damage the integrity of the proceedings.

B. Pleadings

1. The Prosecution

7. The Prosecution asserts that the exhibits should be admitted into evidence since they are relevant to the charges set out in the Indictment and have probative value. According to the Prosecution, the oral decision of 12 September 1997 confirmed that the chain of custody of the exhibits has been established. Moreover, the Prosecution argues that the exhibits have been recognised by the witness Moerbauer during his testimony as documents and tapes seized in Vienna by the Austrian police.

8. The Prosecution states that in order to establish the relevance and probative value of the exhibits, some showing of reliability is required. In this respect the Prosecution asserts that the contents of the exhibits, together with the place and circumstances in which they were found, provide sufficient indicia of reliability. In the opinion of the Prosecution, the fact that some of the other items which were seized at the Inda-Bau premises have been admitted into evidence already, after authentication by the witness General Pasalic, further adds to the reliability of the exhibits. It is further argued that there exists an inter-relationship between the exhibits, and that the showing of this inter-relationship proceeds to demonstrate the authenticity and reliability of the documents and tapes now sought to be admitted.

3201

9. The exhibits are, according to the Prosecution, relevant and of probative value to the charges since they directly or indirectly relate to the position held by Delalic, and to a lesser extent Mucic, in the Konjic area in 1992. This is essential to the question of command responsibility with which Delalic and Mucic are charged in the Indictment. Moreover, the Prosecution is of the opinion that all the exhibits corroborate the evidence already received by the Trial Chamber relating to the situation in the Konjic area at the time of the alleged offences.

2. The Defence

10. Counsel for all four accused ("Defence") object to the admission of the exhibits. The Defence argues that the documents and videotapes sought to be admitted are both irrelevant and lack probative value as they are completely unreliable. Moreover, Counsel for Delalic insists that the Prosecution has been unable to demonstrate the origins of the exhibits. Counsel submits that although the witness Moerbauer in his testimony stated that he, in the process of preparing an index of the documents seized at Inda-Bau, put a mark on every individual document, he was during the course of his testimony unable to identify any such mark on the documents now sought to be admitted. Counsel therefore submits that there is no proof that the documents presented to the Trial Chamber are the same as those seized at Inda-Bau. Concerning those videotapes allegedly seized at Inda-Bau which the Prosecution now presents to the Trial Chamber (exhibits 115 and 116), Counsel argues that it is not proven that they were indeed found at the Inda-Bau company. According to the Defence the Prosecution has not explained a discrepancy which exists between the number of tapes initially reported seized and the number subsequently counted in the process of indexing and filing of the tapes.

11. The Defence suggests that the Trial Chamber adopts a clear procedure for the admission of evidence. According to the Defence, what needs to be established is first the authenticity and reliability of the documents. The Defence adopts the view that proof of the authorship of the documents is crucial in this respect, and divides the documents now before the Trial Chamber into three categories. First, there are those which purport to be written by a third person who is not a party to the present proceedings and who has not been called to testify and authenticate the documents. According to the Defence, these documents are in effect hearsay evidence and it is submitted that their admission would be contrary to the right of the accused to have the witnesses against themselves examined. The Defence asserts that since the Prosecution has failed to call the alleged authors of these documents to give evidence in court so that they could be cross-examined, there is no way by which the reliability of the contents of this category of documents can be tested. A second set of documents is those that are purported to be written by one of the accused. The Defence emphasises that the Prosecution never has made any attempt to have the relevant accused authenticate any of these documents, and concludes that there is no proof whatsoever that they were in fact written by the accused. A third type of document presented is those which bear no signature and where there is no clear indication of who the author might be. According to the Defence it is, in view of this lack of evidence of authorship, simply impossible to demonstrate reliability and trustworthiness in relation to this category of documents.

12. The Defence rejects the approach taken by the Prosecution whereby one document, the reliability of which has not been established and which is not in evidence, is used to corroborate another document. In the opinion of the Defence it is an improper procedure when one unreliable document is used to corroborate another, and it is submitted that the alleged links between the documents are tenuous and consist of suppositions by the Prosecution. The Defence maintains that the authenticity and reliability of the documents sought to be admitted has not been established and therefore objects to their admission.

3202

13. According to the Defence, it is only as a second step in the process of deciding the admissibility of evidence that the Trial Chamber can move on to consider the relevance and probative value of the exhibits. In this respect the Defence contends that the evidence sought to be admitted by the Prosecution is completely irrelevant and should for that reason not be admitted. The Defence argues that the documents do not refer to the Celebici camp and often only give an account of events which are wholly unrelated to the charges in the Indictment and which go beyond the time-frame with which the Indictment is concerned.

14. The Defence concludes that these irrelevant and unreliable documents clearly cannot have any probative value. The Defence, therefore, submits that the exhibits should not be admitted.

C. Findings

15. The question before the Trial Chamber is that of the admissibility of evidence, a matter where the national legal systems of the world have adopted diverging approaches. The procedure of the International Tribunal, with its unique mixture of common and civil law features, does not conform to any one tradition in this respect. In contrast to the common law, where questions of admissibility and exclusion of evidence occupy a prominent place in criminal procedure, the ten provisions of the Rules which regulate all evidentiary matters in the proceedings before the International Tribunal do not contain a detailed set of technical rules relating to this issue.

16. The question of admissibility of evidence before the International Tribunal is governed by Section 3 of the Rules which is entitled "Rules of evidence". The approach adopted by the Rules is clearly one in favour of admissibility as long as the evidence is relevant and is deemed to have probative value (Sub-rule 89(C)), and its probative value is not substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial (Sub-rule 89(D)). Evidence may further be excluded on the grounds given in Rules 95 and 96. Sub-Rule 89(E) relates to the authentication of evidence out of Court. Finally, Sub-rule 89(B) contains a provision of a residual nature which, in cases not otherwise provided for in the Rules, permits the application of such rules of evidence as will best favour a fair determination of the matter in question and which are consistent with the Statute and general principles of law.

17. Of these provisions, Sub-rule 89(C) is of particular pertinence to the issue before the Trial Chamber. According to the plain text of this provision, the two requirements for the admissibility of evidence are those of relevance and probative value. In relation to the question of the substantive meaning of these requirements, the Trial Chamber notes that evidence which is of probative value within the common law tradition has been defined as "evidence that tends to prove an issue"[1]. As concerns relevance, it is often said that this concept in itself contains an implicit requirement of probative value. Thus it has been remarked by one prominent commentator on the subject that:

> [t]here are two components to relevant evidence: materiality and probative value. Materiality looks to the relation between the propositions for which the evidence is offered and the issues in the case....The second aspect of relevance is probative value, the tendency of evidence to establish the proposition that it is offered to prove[2].

Similarly the Supreme Court of Canada, in R. v. Cloutier (2 S.C.R. 709, 731) has endorsed the following statement by Sir Rupert Cross[3]:

3203

> For one fact to be relevant to another, there must be a connection or nexus between the two which makes it possible to infer the existence of one from the existence of the other. One fact is not relevant to another if it does not have real probative value with respect to the latter.

As the Trial Chamber noted in its Decision on the Prosecution's Oral Request for the Admission of Exhibit 155 into Evidence and For an Order to Compel the Accused, Zdravko Mucic, to Provide a Handwriting Sample (19 January 1998) ("Mucic Handwriting Decision") it is, however, obvious that these are concepts that beg of a clear and easy definition in abstracto. Their application calls for evaluations based on human experience as well as logic[4], and will depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence sought to be admitted.

18. In its decision on the admissibility of hearsay evidence in the case of Prosecutor v. Dusko Tadic (Decision on the Defence Motion on Hearsay, 5 August 1996, IT-94-1-T, 5 August 1996,), Official Record at Registry page ("RP") D 11597 - D 11588) ("Hearsay Decision") a majority of Trial Chamber II (Judges McDonald, presiding and Vohrah, separate opinion by Judge Stephen) found that the Rules implicitly require that reliability be a component of admissibility. The Trial Chamber agrees with the reasoning of that decision, and considers reliability to be an inherent and implicit component of each element of admissibility in the sense described below. It is clear that if evidence offered is unreliable, it cannot be either relevant or of probative value. As such, it is inadmissible under Sub-rule 89(C).

19. The Defence contends, however, that a determination of reliability should be seen as a separate, first step in assessing a piece of evidence offered for admission, and argues that it is only if this first hurdle has been passed that the Trial Chamber can proceed to consider the relevance and probative value of the evidence. This view of reliability as a separate requirement, independent of those provided for by Sub-rule 89(C), has been rejected by the Trial Chamber in the Mucic Handwriting Decision. As the Trial Chamber there noted, it is a cardinal rule of construction of legislation that where the words of a provision are clear and unambiguous, the task of interpretation does not arise. So it is with Sub-rule 89 (C) and it is, therefore, neither necessary nor desirable to add to that provision a condition of admissibility which is not expressly prescribed for by that provision.

20. While the importance of the rules on admissibility in common law follows from the effect which the admission of a certain piece of evidence might have on a group of lay jurors, the trials before the International Tribunal are conducted before professional judges, who by virtue of their training and experience are able to consider each piece of evidence which has been admitted and determine its appropriate weight. As noted above, it is an implicit requirement of the Rules that the Trial Chamber give due considerations to indicia of reliability when assessing the relevance and probative value of evidence at the stage of determining its admissibility. However, this terminology may leave some room for misunderstanding, and could possibly be misperceived as demanding that a binding determination be made at this stage as to the genuineness, authorship or credibility of evidence. For this reason the Trial Chamber wishes to make clear that the mere admission of a document into evidence does not in and of itself signify that the statements contained therein will necessarily be deemed to be an accurate portrayal of the facts. Factors such as authenticity and proof of authorship will naturally assume the greatest importance in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the weight to be attached to individual pieces of evidence. The threshold standard for the admission of evidence, however, should not be set excessively high, as often documents are sought to be admitted into evidence, not as ultimate proof of guilt or innocence, but to provide a context and complete the picture presented by the evidence gathered.

3204

21. The Defence argues that the admission of documents whose alleged authors are not appearing as witnesses in the present proceeding amounts to a deprivation of the right of the accused under Article 21 (4)(e) of the Statute of the International Tribunal ("Statute") to have the witnesses brought against them examined, and that as such it is incompatible with the Trial Chamber's obligation under Article 20(1) of the Statute to ensure a fair trial. For this reason, and with reference to Rules 89(D) and 95, it is asserted that the Trial Chamber should refuse admission of such documents into evidence.

22. It is clear from the relevant provisions of the Rules that there is no blanket prohibition on the admission of documents simply on the ground that their purported author has not been called to testify in the proceedings. Instead the conditions for admissibility are those contained in Sub-rule 89(C) which have been discussed above. Furthermore, should the Trial Chamber consider the probative value of any particular exhibit of this character to be substantively outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial, it may be excluded in accordance with Sub-Rule 89(D). There is, however, no ground for a general finding to the effect that the probative value of documents of this category is so outweighed by any prejudicial effects that they should be considered generally inadmissible. It is a different matter that the probative value of such evidence by necessity will be affected by the fact that it has not received the scrutiny involved in the cross-examination of a witness. This is an important factor to which the Trial Chamber will give due consideration at the stage of assessing the weight to be attached to exhibits of this nature.

23. The Trial Chamber will now proceed to consider the admissibility of the exhibits at issue. In its discussion the Trial Chamber will distinguish between the documents on the one hand and the videotapes on the other. The Trial Chamber does not consider it necessary to treat each exhibit separately, but will rather group them into appropriate categories.

1. Documents

24. In considering the documents which allegedly form part of material seized at the Inda-Bau premises in Vienna, the Trial Chamber will first address the objection of the Defence that the Prosecution has not proven where the documents come from. Secondly, the documents will be grouped into three categories and discussed per group.

25. The Defence alleges that the witness, Moerbauer who was brought before the International Tribunal to authenticate the documents, was unable to retrieve the marks he had put on the documents subsequent to their seizure. The Prosecution, on the other hand, correctly points to the testimony of this witness who, on the basis of the inventory he prepared, was able to confirm that each of the documents now sought to be admitted was seized at the premises of the Inda-Bau company and put in one of the binders admitted into evidence by the Trial Chamber by its decision of 12 September 1997. Moreover, in his testimony Moerbauer was able to identify from which particular binder the individual documents presented to him were taken. There can be, therefore, no doubt that the witness Moerbauer positively identified every document now before the Trial Chamber as being a document found at the Inda-Bau premises.

26. For the admissibility of each individual exhibit it needs to be shown that the offered evidence is both relevant and of probative value. In view of their common origin and context, however, the Trial Chamber considers it appropriate to evaluate the admissibility of the documents grouped into the following three categories. The first group consists of documents which have already been admitted. Secondly, there are a number of documents which are particularly relevant to the case. A third, larger group of documents are suggested to be of more general relevance only.

(a) Documents already admitted.

3205

27. Of the documents seized at Inda-Bau, the Trial Chamber has already admitted the documents numbered as exhibits 137 and 141. These exhibits have been admitted through the testimony of General Pasalic who was able to authenticate the documents on 22 October 1997. The Defence has not presented any additional information which could give rise to the exclusion of these documents at this stage. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider those documents again. The exhibits 137 and 141 remain admitted into evidence.

28. Exhibit 118 consists of the order for appointment of Zejnil Delalic as commander of Tactical Group 1 and was recognised by the accused Delalic during an interview with the Prosecution on 22 and 23 August 1996 at Scheveningen. A copy of the document was consequently annexed to the record of interview which has been admitted as exhibit 99 by the Trial Chamber's Decision on the Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence by the Accused Zejnil Delalic, dated 25 September 1997 (RP D 5162- D 5180). The exhibit is further identical to the document which was admitted through the testimony of Dr Marie-Janine Calic as exhibit 71 by the Trial Chamber's decision of 24 March 1997. The Defence has not presented any information which could give rise to the exclusion of exhibits 71 and 99, and they remain admitted into evidence. It is not necessary to reconsider the admissibility of this document. On the Prosecutor's motion it is admitted as exhibit 118.

(b) Documents of particular relevance.

29. The second group of documents presented to the Trial Chamber for admission consists of document of particular relevance to the charges of command responsibility against the accused Delalic. The documents numbered as exhibits 117, 130, 131, 132, 144 and 147A all refer in some way to the position of Delalic as commander of Tactical Group 1. It is clear that these documents fulfil the first requirement for admissibility under Sub-rule 89(C) since they are directly relevant to certain of the charges set out in the Indictment.

30. Exhibit 144 is a report allegedly written by Delalic which gives an account of the incidents which occurred in the Konjic area in 1992. The letter produced as exhibit 117 contains very similar information, as does exhibit 130 which is a report allegedly written by Mucic giving a rather detailed account of the incidents which occurred in Konjic in 1992, and the role played by certain persons including Delalic. Similarly exhibit 147 A, which is a registration card for the United Association of War Veterans of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, contains a description of Delalic as co-ordinator and later commander of Tactical Group 1. Exhibits 131 and 132 are purportedly written by the Deputy Commander of Tactical Group 1, Edib Saric. This account of the events and the position held by Saric corresponds to the information contained in the document previously admitted as exhibit 137. The information provided by these documents is further consistent with that given by the witness General Pasalic, and that contained in other documents now presented to the Trial Chamber.

31. The documents now at issue were all found at the premises of Inda-Bau, a company with which Delalic had some form of association and where he was observed by the Austrian Police a few days before the seizure. The pattern of events described in the documents is, to an extent, consistent between the documents themselves, and generally corresponds to witness statements and documents already admitted into evidence. It is therefore warranted to conclude, at this stage, that sufficient indicia of reliability have been established for the documents presented to the Trial Chamber to be deemed both relevant and prima facie of probative value. As such they are admissible. It should again be emphasised that this decision does not in any way constitute a binding determination as to the authenticity or trustworthiness of the documents sought to be admitted. These are matters to be assessed by the Trial Chamber at a later stage in the course of determining the weight to attached to these exhibits.

(c) Documents of general relevance

32. The third group of documents which the Prosecution seeks to admit are numbered exhibits 119, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 133, 135, 143, 145, 146 and 147 B - C. The general focus of these exhibits is again to show that Zejnil Delalic was appointed commander of Tactical Group 1, that he regarded himself as such and was so regarded by others. Similarly, Mucic appears as commander of the Celebici prison. Altogether these exhibits tell a story of the activity of Delalic and Mucic in the Konjic area in 1992. As such, they corroborate the exhibits 118, 137, 141, 144 and 147A which have been properly admitted into evidence. They are documents which were found in the Inda-Bau premises, and which were not obtained under circumstances which render reliance upon them objectionable. Specifically relating to exhibit 125, the Trial Chamber notes that the Defence's challenge to the authenticity and reliability of this document must be seen in the light of the fact that an identical document was submitted by Counsel for Delalic on 27 October 1997 and was marked but not tendered as Defence (Delalic) exhibit D82/1.

33. In English law, according to the doctrine of res gestae, a fact may be held relevant to a fact in issue on account of its contemporaneity with the matter under investigation. This may be so if it throws light on the matter under investigation by reason of the proximity in time, place or circumstance in such a manner as to constitute part of the event being investigated. Hence, when a statement is made contemporaneously with the occurrence of the act or event being inquired, such a statement is admissible for the purposes of explaining the existence of the act or event. Such evidence is therefore, as an exception to the hearsay rule, admissible as part of the res gestae.

34. It is a correct proposition of law that the proper person to justify or explain the circumstances of an act or event is the person who acted. However, it is difficult in certain circumstances to have direct evidence of the act or statement of the actor. Hence, statements are admissible if made roughly contemporaneously with the subject matter under enquiry by the actor related to the issue, and having connections with it. This is, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, the position of this third category of the exhibits. That the statement was made by the actor or another participant can be determined from circumstantial evidence unequivocally pointing towards the fact. For instance, exhibits 124 and 125 are statements relating to the escape of Delalic from Konjic. Statements which acknowledge the escape, statements that Zejnil Delalic had donated 2000 uniforms to soldiers and had worked without rest for twenty-four hours, can only be referable to Delalic as the maker. Similarly, other exhibits contain spontaneous statements relating to the events in which the accused Delalic was involved. This is the case for instance with his assertion of innocence of accusations of dishonesty or flight from the region. It is not necessary in the situation to prove that the statements are true. It is sufficient that they were made: that in the circumstances it is part of the res gestae.

35. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the exhibits tendered contain statements made contemporaneously with the issue of the position of Delalic and Mucic in the period of hostilities under enquiry. They shed light on the role played and positions occupied by them. Being part of the entire transaction, they are admissible as evidence in these proceedings.

2. Videotapes

36. In addition to the documents discussed above, the Trial Chamber was also asked to consider the admissibility of five videotapes. Of these five, three tapes had been seized at the premises of the accused Zdravko Mucic in Vienna, and the other two are alleged to have been found at the Inda-Bau premises.

37. The first set of tapes was recovered by the witness Wolfgang Panzer, District Inspector at the Vienna Police Department, who testified before the Trial Chamber and recognised the tapes. The videotapes, exhibits 110 to 112, show different scenes at the Celebici camp. The tapes are relevant since they relate to the accused Mucic and his activities at the Celebici camp. The tapes were found at the apartment of Mucic, who is easily recognisable on the tapes. The tapes, therefore, demonstrate indicia of reliability and are deemed to have probative value. Exhibits 110, 111 and 112 are admitted into evidence.

3207

38. The two other tapes now presented by the Prosecution for admission are exhibits 115 and 116. The Prosecution submits that both tapes formed part of a larger number of fifty-four tapes recovered from the Inda-Bau premises in Vienna. The Defence points out that in the initial record of the seizure (the "Niederschrift") prepared at the time of the search by the witness Wolfgang Navrat of the Vienna Police Department, the number of tapes seized at Inda-Bau was given as fifty-one. It was only one month after the seizure that the witness Moerbauer, when making an inventory of all the documents and videotapes recovered, counted fifty-four tapes. In the opinion of the Defence this discrepancy makes it impossible to conclude with certainty that the tapes sought to be admitted were in fact found at the premises of Inda-Bau in Vienna.

39. Exhibit 115 is a video of an interview with the witness General Divjak and Delalic, together with another man. The second tape submitted as exhibit 116 consists of two parts of which the Prosecution seeks to admit the first, being a recording of the Zagreb television program "Slikom na Sliku" of May 1992 which contains an interview with Delalic. Both videotapes contain information concerning the general situation in the Konjic area and the activities of the accused Delalic in 1992 and are therefore relevant.

40. The nature of the contents of the two exhibits - that is recordings of recognisable persons conducting interviews - is further such that their probative value is not necessarily excluded by a certain remaining uncertainty concerning the source of these exhibits. The Trial Chamber notes that it has earlier admitted portions of another videotape alleged by the Prosecution to have been seized at Inda-Bau on the same occasion. This is Exhibit 114 which shows an interview with General Pasalic, who testified before the Trial Chamber that he remembered the interview. On this basis portions of the tape were admitted into evidence on 22 October 1997. As concerns the two videotapes now sought to be admitted, the witness General Divjak has testified before the Trial Chamber and recognised the portion of exhibit 115 showing the interview given by himself and Delalic. Although not shown exhibit 116 as such, Delalic has, when asked about it by the Prosecution in the interview conducted in Scheveningen on 23 August 1996, acknowledged that he did participate in such an interview for the television program "Slikom na Sliku" at the relevant time. In this context it should further be noted that parts of this latter tape were shown to the witness Branko Gotovac by Counsel for the accused Esad Landzo on 25 March 1997, upon which it was subsequently admitted as Defence (Landzo) exhibit D5/4. On this occasion Counsel informed the Trial Chamber that this tape, which had been given to the Defence by the Prosecution, was one of the tapes that had been seized from Delalic. An excerpt from the tape has also been used by Counsel for Delalic and has been admitted as Defence exhibit (Delalic) D11 6/1. As the Prosecution correctly has pointed out this would seem to indicate that also members of the Defence are placing some credibility on this exhibit.

41. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that sufficient indicia of reliability have been shown for the tapes to be deemed both relevant and of probative value. Exhibits 115 and 116 are therefore admissible. The portions of exhibit 114 earlier admitted remains admitted into evidence.

III. DISPOSITION

For the foregoing reasons, THE TRIAL CHAMBER, being seized of the motion of the Prosecution and 3258

PURSUANT TO RULE 54,

IN ACCORDANCE WITH RULE 89,

HEREBY ADMITS exhibits 110, 111, 112, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 143, 144, 145, 146 and 147A - C into evidence.

Done in both English and French, the English text being authoritative.

_____

Adolphus Godwin Karibi-Whyte

Presiding Judge

Dated this nineteenth day of January 1998

At The Hague,

The Netherlands.

[Seal of the Tribunal]

---

1. Henry C. Black, Black's Law Dictionary 1203 (6th ed. 1991).

2. Charles T. McCormick, McCormick on Evidence, pp. 338-339 (4th ed. 1992).

3. Cross on Evidence, p. 16 (4th ed. 1974).

4. Cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 17, para 5 (4th ed. 1976).

PROSECUTION INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

14. ICTR Press Release ICTR/INFO-9-13-22.EN dated 8 July 2002.

3210

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda
Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda

United Nations
Nations Unies

PRESS BRIEFING (non official - for media information only)

ICTR/INFO-9-13-22.EN
Arusha, 8 July 2002

PRESS BRIEFING BY THE SPOKESMAN OF THE ICTR

Kingsley Chiedu Moghalu, Legal Advisor and Spokesman for the International Tribunal, today gave the following briefing to the media.

Twelfth Plenary Session of the Tribunal

The 12th Plenary Session of the Judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) was held last weekend from 5-6 July 2002 at the seat of the Tribunal at Arusha, Tanzania. The Judges of the Tribunal's Trial Chambers and Appeals Chamber, the Prosecutor, and the Registrar participated in the Plenary. A number of important amendments and additions to the Rules were adopted by the Judges and will be posted on the ICTR Website as soon as the definitive texts are available. They include but are not limited to:

New Rule 11 bis

This new rule provides for the transfer of cases from before the Tribunal to national courts for prosecution. The circumstances in which this can happen are: where, on application by the Prosecutor, or by its own decision, it appears to a Trial Chamber that:

(i) The authorities of the country in which the accused was arrested (the arresting State) are prepared to prosecute the accused in their own courts; or (ii) the authorities of another country (the receiving State) are prepared to do so, and the authorities of the arresting State do not object; and (iii) It is appropriate in the circumstances for the courts of the arresting or receiving State to exercise jurisdiction over the accused.

However, the Trial Chamber may rescind an order made under this Rule at any time after making the order, and before the accused is convicted or acquitted by a national court, upon the Prosecutor's application and after affording an opportunity to the authorities of the State concerned to be heard. The Chamber would then issue a formal request for the case to be deferred to the ICTR in exercise of the primacy of the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.

The purpose of this new Rule is to enable the International Tribunal to concentrate on a limited number of important cases in order to accomplish its completion strategy that seeks to finish trials at first instance by 2008. The new Rule, which is inspired by the notion of universal jurisdiction, will allow the exercise of concurrent jurisdiction for crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Rwanda in 1994 between national courts and the International Tribunal, while retaining the primacy of the latter's jurisdiction.

3211

You will recall that, under the previous state of things, judicial cooperation to prosecute accused persons of suspects for these crimes was a "one-way street" in which national jurisdictions must transfer such persons to the ICTR if the Tribunal wished to try them. But the Tribunal was not empowered to hand over persons it had indicted to a national jurisdiction. Perhaps the classic demonstration of this scenario was the Ntuyahaga case in 1999, in which Trial Chamber I granted the Prosecutor's request to drop charges against the accused, but denied the request that he be handed over to the Tribunal's Host Country (Tanzania) or Belgium.

Another important aspect of the new Rule 11 bis is that it is the first time that any international criminal tribunal of the United Nations has been judicially empowered to transfer its cases to a national jurisdiction other than the State in which the accused was arrested, where it is deemed appropriate, under the notion of universal jurisdiction. Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia at The Hague provides for the possibility of that Tribunal transferring an accused person to the arresting State.

New Rule 45 quater

This new Rule provides that a Trial Chamber may, if it decides that it is in the interest of justice, instruct the Registrar to assign a counsel to represent the interests of the accused. The Rule formalizes a power that the Tribunal has previously exercised under its "inherent powers" in cases where an accused person has either declined to engage a lawyer to defend him or her, or is indigent and has declined counsel assigned by the Tribunal.

You will recall that, in the ongoing "Media Trial " of three former senior Rwandan media executives at the ICTR, Trial Chamber I instructed the Registrar to assign a counsel to represent the interests of one of the three defendants, Mr. Jean Bosco Barayagwiza, in these circumstances. By way of comparative illustration also, you are aware that, at the ICTY, Mr Slobodan Milosevic declined to formally appoint a lawyer or accept the assignment of a lawyer by that Tribunal to represent his interests, hence the appointment by that Tribunal of a number of lawyers as a*micus curiae* (Friend of the Court) to perform similar roles. The New Rule 45 quater of the ICTR is the first such provision in the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of an international criminal tribunal.

New Rule 92 bis

This New Rule provides for proof of facts other then by oral evidence. It provides that a Trial Chamber may admit, wholly or partially, the evidence of a witness in the form of a written statement in place of oral testimony where such a statement seeks to prove a matter other than the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment.

Factors that would favour the admission of such a written statement include, but are not limited to, circumstances in which oral testimony of facts similar to the evidence in question has already been admitted, where the evidence relates to revelant historical, political or military background, or consists of a general or statistical analysis of the ethnic composition of the population in the places to which the charges relate. Other factors that would favour admission of such written statements include where it concerns the impact of crimes upon victims, relates to the character of the accused or to factors to be taken into account in determining sentence.

3212

Factors against the admission of evidence in such a form include the existence of an overriding public interest in the evidence in question being presented orally and where a party objects that its nature or source make it unreliable. If the prejudicial effect of such evidence outweighs it probative value, this would also be a factor against its admission.

New Rule 92 bis is an important judicial reform measure. It has the potential to further speed up proceedings before the ICTR by significantly reducing as much as possible the consideration of time-consuming evidence inside the courtroom. A similar rule already exists in the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the ICTY.

New Article 5 bis of the Code of Professional Conduct for Defence Counsel: Fee splitting.

The new provision in the Code of Conduct for Defence Counsel at the ICTR expressly prohibits fee-splitting in its various forms, between defence counsel remunerated by the Tribunal under its legal aid programme, and their clients (any detainee of the Tribunal). Where defence counsel are being requested, induced or encouraged by their clients to enter into fee splitting arrangements, they are required by this new provision to advise their clients on the unlawfulness of such practice and report the incident to the Registrar. The new provision recognizes that fee-splitting is not limited to financial arrangements. Where a counsel is found to have engaged in fee-splitting, the Registrar will take action in accordance with the Tribunal's Directive on Assignment of Defence Counsel. It will be recalled that the Registrar has already taken strong disciplinary action in a case where a defence counsel at the Tribunal, Mr. Andrew McCartan of the Bar of Scotland, was found to have engaged in financial malfeasance. Mr. McCartan was discharged from the case in which he was defence counsel and the Bar Association of which he was a member was notified of the measure and the reasons for it. He appealed against the decision to the President of the Tribunal but the latter upheld the Registrar's decision.

Current Status of detainees

There are currently 22 persons on trial at the ICTR. Twenty-nine persons are awaiting trial. The Tribunal has convicted eight persons and acquitted one. Six of the eight convicts including former Rwandan Prime Minister Jean Kambanda are serving their prison sentences in Mali

For further information please consult our website: http://www.ictr.org or contact the Press & Public Affairs Unit, ICTR Arusha International Conference Centre, PO Box 6016, Arusha, Tanzania
Telephone: 1 (212) 963 2850 or 255 27 250 4367-72;
Fax: 1 (212) 963 2848 or 255 27 250 4000/250 4373;
e-mail: ictr-press@un.org

BLANK PAGE