Bearing the Greatest Responsibility:

Select Jurisprudence of the Special Court for Sierra Leone

Table of Contents

Preface

The Residual Special Court for Sierra Leone created BEARING THE GREATEST RESPONSIBILITY: Select Jurisprudence of the Special Court for Sierra Leone by producing verbatim the factual findings and legal conclusions from the final judgments of the two Trial Chambers of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, as affirmed by the judgments of the Appellate Chamber of that Court in its four trials concerning nine accused persons: Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor (Charles Taylor); Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, Augustine Gbao (RUF); Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, Santigie Borbor Kanu (AFRC); and Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa (CDF). This project organises the final judgements of the Trial and Appeals Chambers so as to allow researchers and the public to more easily review the Court's findings by location, time period, types of crimes committed, and modes of liability.

The Compilation is part of a legacy project begun by the Special Court for Sierra Leone and carried on by the Residual Special Court. It is, to the editors' knowledge, the only work of its kind using this methodology. Although Editor's notes have been provided to assist in the use of the book, it was considered critical to present the words of the judgments themselves, without additional annotation or interpretation, in a format that would bring all of the final Trial and Appellate judgments together in one volume and make searching that jurisprudence more convenient and accessible.

Of course, court judgments have limitations. Not every crime or injustice or event can be addressed by the Courts. The judges of the Special Court could only rule on the issues raised in the cases before them. Also, there may appear to be factual inconsistencies between judgments. This can be due to the fact that investigations and issues change depending on the focus of successive cases and new facts that were either unavailable or irrelevant in previous trials may come to light. Nevertheless, given the geographic scope of the crimes charged and the prosecution of leaders from all three sides involved in the conflict, these judgments create a significant detailed and reliable account of the atrocities committed during the conflict, the suffering of the people of Sierra Leone, and the responsibility of major perpetrators.

The Compilation was prepared by Legal Officers of the Appeals Chamber of the Special Court for Sierra Leone: Melissa Ruggiero, Jesenka Rešidović, Kamran Choudhry, Caroline Stone and Hannah Tonkin, with special thanks to interns Kasey Murray and Jennifer Wilson. Melissa Ruggiero was the project coordinator and editor, under the supervision of Senior Legal Officer Rhoda Kargbo.

The Compilation was undertaken under the directions of Presidents Jon Kamanda, Shireen Avis Fisher, Philip Waki and Renate Winter during their respective terms. Gratitude is extended to the RSCSL Registrar Binta Mansaray for her support and guidance on this project, as well as to the Registrar's Legal Officers Joseph Stefanelli, Camilla van der Walt, Lydia Aylett and Sophia Ugwu for their assistance in the final stages of editing and production.

Introduction

By Treaty between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone entered into on 16 January, 2002:

> There is hereby established a Special Court for Sierra Leone to prosecute persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996.

That mandate was completed on September 26, 2013, when the Appeals Chamber delivered its final judgment on the last of nine men charged with bearing the greatest responsibility for the atrocity crimes committed in the Sierra Leonean conflict. The prosecutions were divided into four trials: Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor (Charles Taylor); Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, Augustine Gbao (RUF); Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, Santigie Borbor Kanu (AFRC); and Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa (CDF). At the conclusion of each trial, the panel of three judges hearing the evidence recorded their findings and conclusions in a Final Judgment in which they determined whether or not each Accused was guilty of each of the crimes charged against him. In a separate Sentencing Judgment, the same panel passed sentence on those found guilty and explained those sentences according to the relevant facts and law. Each of these judgements was appealed to a five judge Appeal Chamber which produced final appellate judgements in which they reviewed the findings and conclusions challenged on appeal. This book is a compilation of the findings and conclusions which the SCSL Trial Chambers recorded in their Final Judgments and Sentencing Judgments in each of the four cases, and the Final Appellate Judgments of the Appeals Chamber on the correctness of those findings and conclusions when challenged on appeal.

The judgments speak for themselves, and thus the Compilation recites the judgments verbatim. However, judgments of international courts follow an order of presentation that is designed to address legal formalities as well as legal convenience and habit. This makes the information they contain less available to those not familiar with the legal culture of the particular international court, and it makes the job of collecting and accessing that information more daunting. We have endeavoured to remove as many barriers to accessibility as we can in this volume because we believe that the judgments of international tribunals involved in adjudicating crimes against humanity and war crimes have considerable value over and above their primary role as determinative of the guilt or non-guilt of the persons charged. Those values are historical, academic, educational and personal.

Historically these judgments present a narrative of what happened, as tested by cross examination and the rules of evidence and told by those who witnessed and bore witness to the inhumanities of the conflict. Their value to legal scholarship goes beyond their merit as judgments on the accused. They form part of the articulation of international law and can contribute to the discourse on the interpretation of relevant treaty and custom. Educationally, they put future combatants on notice as to the activities that will not be tolerated, even in times of armed conflict, and the personal criminal liability attached to those who nonetheless engage in atrocity crimes, assist others in engaging in atrocity crimes, or fail to prevent or punish those under their control who perpetrate atrocity crimes.

But perhaps the greatest value of the information contained in these judgments is as an undeniable record of the voices of those who suffered and bore witness to the suffering caused at the hands of perpetrators of unthinkable crimes. Those voices speak through the judgments and those voices should be heard by more than lawyers, judges and historians. It is to the people of Sierra Leone that this book is dedicated in the hope that we have, through this compilation, made more accessible to them the record of the crimes perpetrated against them, not as a tragic reminder of the horrors of war, but as a tribute to their courage and resilience, and as a weapon against any who might deny the atrocities they suffered and overcame.

How to use this Compilation

Overview

The Table of Contents is the key to accessing this Compilation. Chapters 1 through 11 document the eleven categories of international atrocity crimes charged against nine people found guilty of bearing the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed against the people of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996. These Chapters are subdivided according to the four cases in which the nine people were convicted:

- Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor (SCSL-03-01-T, Trial Judgement, 18 May 2012 and SCSL-03-01-A, Appeal Judgement, 26 September 2013) ("Charles Taylor");

- Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon and Augustine Gbao (SCSL-04-15-T, Trial Judgement, 2 March 2009 and SCSL-04-15-A, Appeal Judgment, 26 October 2009) ("RUF");

- Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu (SCSL-04-16-T, Trial Judgement, 20 June 2007 and SCSL-04-16-A, Appeal Judgment, 22 Feburary 2008) ("AFRC"); and

- Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa (SCSL-04-14-T, Trial Judgement, 2 August 2007 and SCSL-04-14-A, Appeal Judgment, 28 May 2008) ("CDF").

Chapters 12 and 13 explain the individual criminal responsibility of each convicted person.

Chapter 14 presents the reasoning behind the punishment pronounced by the Court for each of the convicted persons.

Annex A provides a roadmap to the judgments in the RUF case where offenses against UNAMSIL personnel are adjudicated; Annex B sets out the SCSL principles for evaluation of evidence summarised in the Taylor case; and Annex C lists the Authorities cited in each of the judgments.

The Table of Contents appears at the beginning of the Compilation and provides a sequential list of the book's organisational structure as well as the page numbers where each section begins. The Compilation is in PDF format which is digital and requires a computer or other electronic device to display. Adobe Reader or Adobe Acrobat are programs used to open PDF files. Adobe Reader is free to download, and may be found at http://get.adobe.com/reader/. The Table of Contents provides an efficient way to navigate the large volume of information contained in the Compilation by offering links to each chapter and section and sub-section within the chapters, accessible simply by clicking on the section listed in the Table of Contents to which the reader wishes to "jump".

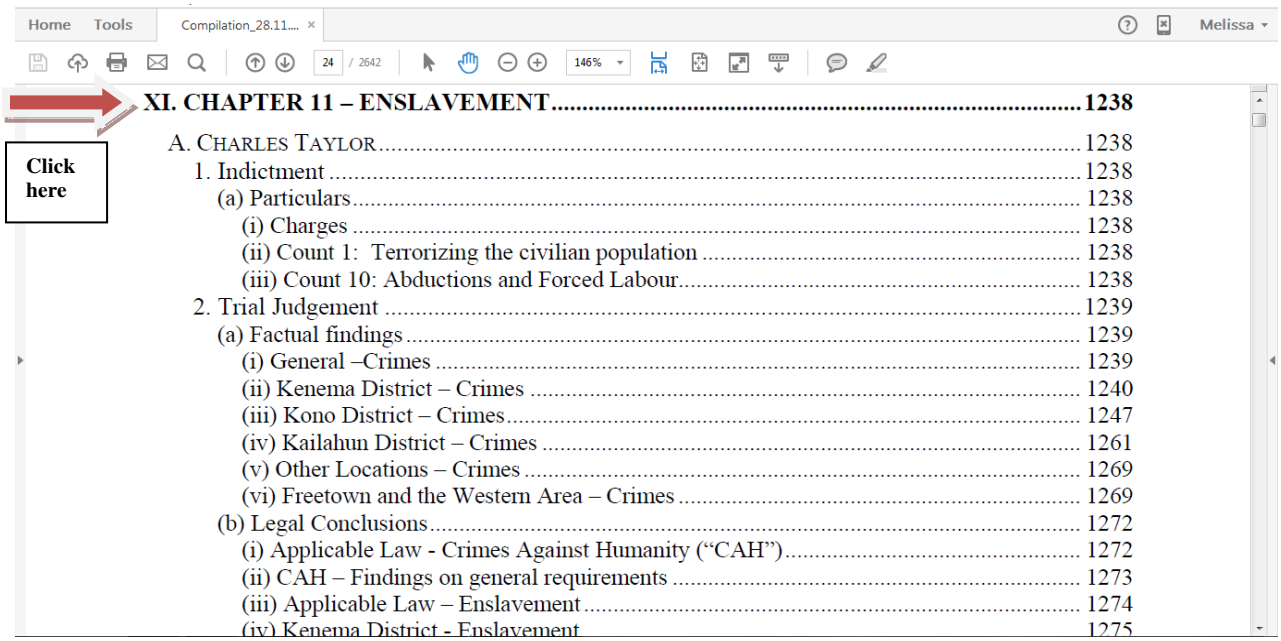
For example, if the reader would like to know the acts of terrorism committed in Kenema District from the evidence presented in the Taylor Trial, s/he should first search the Table of Contents for the Chapter entitled "Terrorism". The reader may then scroll down the Table of Contents to the "Charles Taylor" section and continue scrolling to "Trial Judgment" and click on "Kenema District". This will take the reader to the sub-section of the Compilation regarding the acts of terrorism committed in Kenema District as found by the Court in the Taylor Trial Judgment. If the reader would like to see what the Trial Chamber adjudicating the RUF case found to be acts of terrorism committed in Kenema District, s/he may return to the "Terrorism" chapter in the Table of Contents, then scroll down to the "RUF" section and continue scrolling to "Trial Judgment" and click on "Kenema District." The reader will then jump to that portion of the Compilation.

Likewise, if the reader would like to know about the facts that the Court found had been proven about enslavement, s/he should find the chapter entitled "Enslavement" in the Table of Contents, scroll down to the case or cases of interest (Taylor, RUF, AFRC, or CDF) and area of interest (general crimes or geographic location), and click on the desired sub-section to jump to that page.

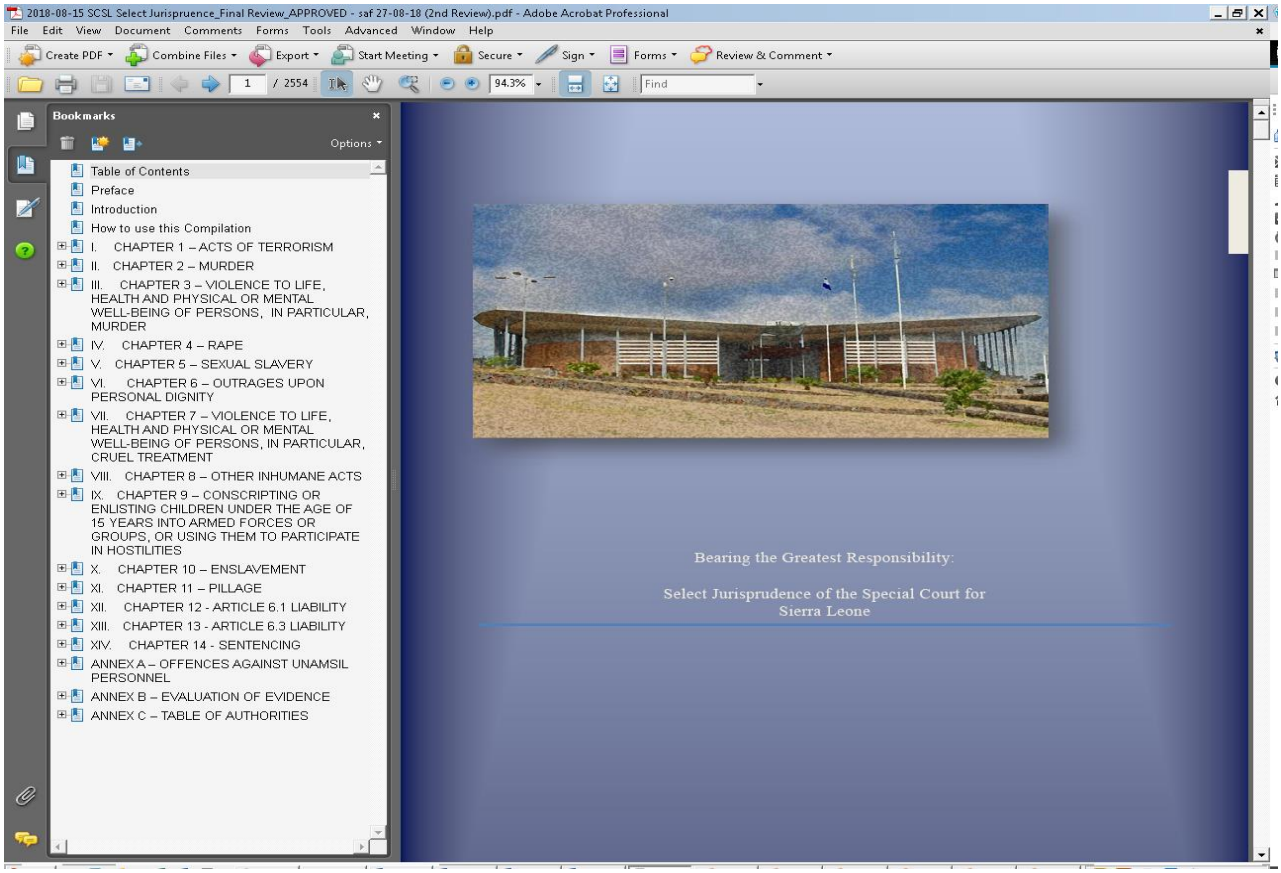


Once the reader has left the Table of Contents and jumped into the content, the reader may return to the Table of Contents to find and jump to another section of interest by returning to the top of the Compilation [shift+control+pg up] and scrolling through the Table of Contents, or by using the navigation pane.

Navigation Pane

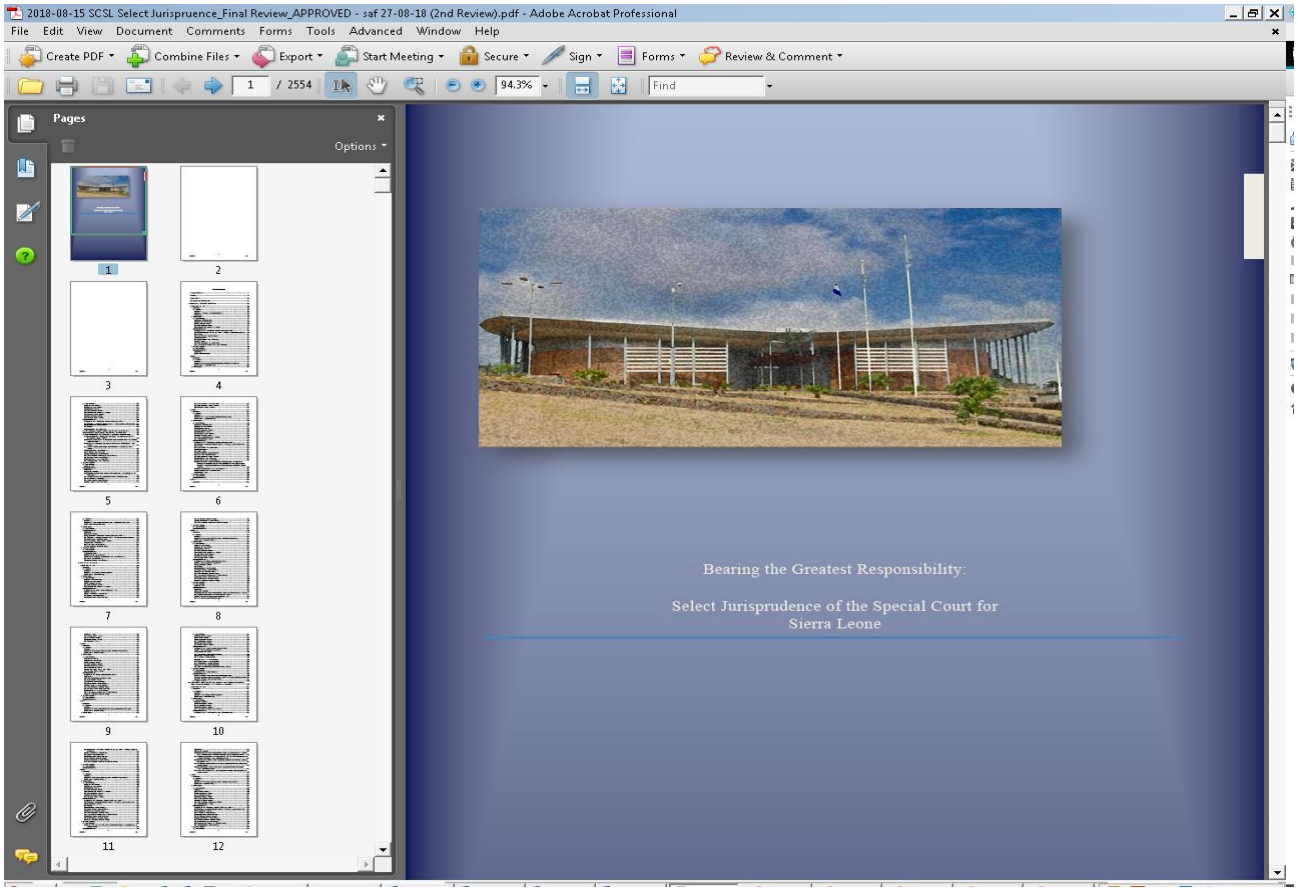
Bookmarks

The navigation pane appears in a left hand column next the PDF Compilation document and should be opened at all times when the reader is using the document. This device enables the reader to view both the Table of Contents, in the form of "Bookmarks," and the text of the Compilation at the same time ("Bookmarks" Example Below). The Bookmarks in the navigation pane will show the reader the title of the chapters. The sections and sub-sections within the chapter are "nested" within the chapter headings and will be displayed by clicking on the plus icon, located next to the title of the chapter or sections. The reader may jump to a section or sub-section of the Compilation by clicking on the desired section or sub-section in the navigation pane. When all of the subsections within a chapter or section are revealed, the plus icon will become a minus icon and can be clicked to "renest" the sections within that heading.



Thumbnails

The navigation pane may also be used to display "Thumbnails", that is, miniature reproductions of each of the pages in the Compilation ("Thumbnails" Example Below). By clicking the Thumbnail icon above the navigation pane at the upper left corner of the PDF screen the navigation pane will replace the Bookmark version of the Table of Contents with the Thumbnails of the entire Compilation, through which the reader may more easily scroll when looking for a particular page. Clicking on the Thumbnail page will allow the reader to jump to the corresponding page in the main text. To return to Bookmarks, simply click on the Bookmark icon at the top of the navigation pane.



Links

Embedded in the Compilation are links and hyperlinks. The links appear in brackets and reference a Compilation paragraph number, for example [6394]. By clicking on these links, the reader will jump to the numbered paragraph. In order to return to the previous content, the reader needs to right click, which will produce a window with various labels, then find and left click on the label titled Previous View. Hyperlinks to the Indictments and Judgments for each of the cases are provided within the Compilation in every chapter, and the reader is encouraged to click on these hyperlinks to view the original documents.

Keyword Search

To search within the Compilation for specific "keywords," such as place names, witness references, and points of law, the reader may select the Search button (an icon of a magnifying glass) from the tool bar header in Adobe Acrobat Reader, or use the keyboard shortcut Control+F. This will open the Search PDF box in a separate window or in the header toolbar (See examples below). In this box, the reader can then search the open Compilation for a "keyword" or phrase by typing that word or phrase in the box. If that word or phrase exists in the Compilation, the reader will automatically jump to a place where it appears. The reader may find all places where the word or phrase appears by clicking on the "Next" or "Previous" tab, or, alternatively by clicking on the "Next" or "Previous" arrow.

Numerical References

Indictments and Judgments are written in numbered paragraphs. In compiling this book we have reproduced the words of the original documents as they were written and have included and underlined the original paragraph numbers so that the reader may find the paragraphs in the original documents. These underlined paragraph numbers are NOT links. Several paragraphs contain footnotes. We have included the accurate footnote numbers as they appear in the judgments but the content of the footnotes is not included because of the volume. We invite the reader to consult the actual judgments, especially as to the footnotes, many of which contain valuable clarifying information. This can be easily done because the judgments and indictments are hyperlinked, and can be accessed by clicking on the citations found at the beginning of each section.

Chapters 1 through 11. Shared Crime Categories

Chapters 1 through 11 are divided according to the eleven categories of international atrocity crimes charged in three or more of the cases, and subdivided by location where the crimes were committed. Convictions for "Offenses Against UNAMSIL Personnel" were only obtained in one case (RUF) and therefore are addressed separately in Annex A, found at the end of the Compilation.

The Chambers sometimes relied on the same evidence or reasoning in whole or in part as the basis for findings or conclusions in more than one Chapter. Rather than repeat the same paragraphs each time they arise, there are references to other chapters and sections in the Compilation where the language relied upon is identical. When this occurs, links are provided in brackets to those other parts of the Compilation. Clicking on a link will allow the reader to jump to the section to which the link refers.

The example below shows that the factual findings relied on by the Taylor Trial Judgment for the crime of "outrages upon personal dignity" committed in Bombali District and reported in the Chapter entitled "Outrages" are also relevant to crimes of sexual violence as set out in the chapter entitled "Rape". If the reader wants to review those factual findings, s/he may click on the Compilation paragraph number in brackets. This will take the reader to the factual findings in the "Rape" chapter. If the reader then wishes to return to the "Outrage" chapter, s/he may right click, which will produce a window with various labels, then find and left click on the label titled Previous View until returned to the original page. Alternatively the reader may make a note of the original page before clicking the bracketed link, and then quickly scroll through and click on the desired page in the "Thumbnails" to return to the noted page (See above, Navigation Pane).

At times in the Compilation reference is made to findings in two respective chapters, for example "see chapters 3 and 4" and thereafter the pertinent judgment paragraphs are cited. When the findings in both chapters are identical, the complete findings are only quoted in the first referenced chapter. The bracketed link/s will take the reader directly to the full factual finding in the first referenced chapter.

Chapters 12 and 13. Individual Criminal Responsibility and Command Responsibility

Chapters 12 and 13 are each organised in the same order as Chapters 1 through 11. The RUF, AFRC and CDF section headings for Chapters 12 and 13 refer to findings and conclusions by specific locations. Due to the organisation of the content of the Taylor Trial and Appeal Judgments dealing with criminal responsibility, the Taylor Trial Judgment section is not organized by location, but refers instead to the findings and conclusions regarding the modes of responsibility such as joint criminal enterprise, aiding and abetting, and planning, and is further divided by time period.

Chapter 14. Sentencing

Chapter 14 recites the sentencing judgements of the Trial Chambers and the portions of the Appellate judgements related to sentencing. Following the format of the previous Chapters, Chapter 14 is divided according to the four cases. Each section includes verbatim paragraphs from the Trial Judgments and Appeal Judgments pronouncing the sentences delivered by the Court for each person convicted of crimes, the factors the Court considered when it decided on the sentence, and the law on which it relied.

Annex A - Offenses against UNAMSIL Personnel

Offenses against UNAMSIL Personnel were charged only in one case (RUF), and thus fail to meet the commonality criteria for inclusion in the main body of the Compilation. However, because of the importance of these charges in the jurisprudence of the SCSL, Annex A contains an annotated guide to the paragraphs and pages of the RUF Appellate, Trial, and Sentencing Judgments where those charges were adjudicated. Annex A also provides an online hyperlink for access directly to each of the Judgments and is meant to be a roadmap for navigating references to offenses against UNAMSIL personnel where they appear in each RUF Judgement.

Annex B - Evaluation of Evidence

Annex B is a summary of the Special Court's approach to the principles and application of evidence as digested and abridged from the Taylor appeal judgment. The Appeals Chamber took the opportunity in that judgment to systematically set out its jurisprudence on evidence as it was applied throughout its mandate. Although the wording of the judgment has not been altered, Annex B extracts from that judgment, where possible, principles that are not case specific, and omits the facts in dispute unless they are intrinsic to the understanding of the section.

Annex C – Table of Authorities

Annex C reproduces the table of authorities referenced in each of the four Trial and Appellate Judgments.

Not Included in the Compilation

This document does not include the SCSL's trial or appellate motion decisions or its jurisprudence on post-judgment matters such as contempt and early release. The pre-trial procedural history for each of the cases may be found in the annexes of each of the Trial Judgments, to which hyperlinks are provided multiple times in this document. For all other decisions, the reader is referred to the website of the Residual Special Court for Sierra Leone (RSCSL) where these decisions may be accessed. http://www.rscsl.org/

Citing This Document

Although every effort has been made to accurately reproduce the language of the judgments and indictments verbatim, it is inevitable that a document this size will contain some mistakes and typographical errors. Use of quotations should be checked against the original documents and cited thereto. Hyperlinks to the original documents are provided throughout this Compilation.

CHAPTER 1 – ACTS OF TERRORISM

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

1. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[1]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the Civilian Population

> Count 1: Acts of Terrorism, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.d. of the Statute

2. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2]

(iii) Burning

3. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, engaged in widespread destruction of civilian property by burning, including the following:[3]

i. Kono District – Between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, in various locations including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Sewafe or Njaima Sewafe, Wendedu and Bumpe;[4]

ii. Freetown and Western Area – Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, in locations throughout Freetown, including Kissy and eastern Freetown and the Fourah Bay, Upgun, State House, Calaba Town, Kingtom and Pademba Road areas of the city, and Hastings, Goderich, Kent, Grafton, Wellington, Tumbo, Waterloo and Benguema in the Western Area.[5]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Evidence and Deliberations

a. Primary purpose of certain acts of violence

4. para. 1966: As a preliminary observation, the Trial Chamber is of the view that certain acts of violence are of such a nature that the primary purpose can only be reasonably inferred to be to spread terror among the civilian population regardless of the context in which they were committed.[4382]

5. para. 1967: Conversely, the purpose behind an individual act of violence may not necessarily correspond with that of the campaign in which it simultaneously occurs. It follows that certain acts of violence, even when committed in the context of other acts of violence in a campaign whose primary purpose may be to terrorise the civilian population, may not have been committed in furtherance of such a campaign.[4383] The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that this is the case with regards to certain acts of violence underlying Counts 9 (Child Soldiers), 10 (Enslavement) and 11(Pillage), which will now be discussed.

b. Enlistment, conscription and use of children under the age of 15 years to actively participate in hostilities

6. para. 1968: The Trial Chamber has found that children under the age of 15 years were abducted and conscripted into the RUF and AFRC to be trained as SBUs in places such as

Tonkolili,[4384] Kailahun,[4385] Kono,[4386] Port Loko[4387] and Bombali Districts.[4388] The Trial Chamber has also found that children under the age of 15 years were used by the RUF and AFRC for military purposes such as participating actively in hostilities by fighting at the frontlines, acting as armed bodyguards to commanders, taking part in armed food-finding missions, guarding mines, carrying loads, including arms and ammunition, and committing crimes against civilians. Such instances occurred in the districts of Kenema,[4389] Kono,[4390] Kailahun,[4391] Koinadugu,[4392] Port Loko,[4393] Bombali,[4394] and in Freetown and the Western Area.[4395]

7. See below: Chapter 9 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Child Soldiers – paras. 1367 [4759], 1377-1378 [4760], 1416-1422 [4774], 1430-1432 [4782], 1434 [4785], 1438-1439 [4786], 1445-1446 [4788], 1449-1450 [4790], 1453-1456 [4792], 1467-1468 [4797], 1470-1472 [4799], 1476-1482 [4802], 1485 [4808], 1489-1490 [4812], 1492-1493 [4814], 1495 [4816], 1497 [4817], 1502-1505 [4818], 1509 [4822], 1512 [4823], 1516 [4824], 1519 [4824], 1526 [4829], 1528-1529 [4830], 1540-1541 [4832], 1546-1547 [4834], 1533 [4699], 1564-1565 [4836] , 1573-1575 [4839], 1581-1582 [4842], 1455-1458 [4844].

c. Enslavement

8. para. 1970: The Trial Chamber has found that wide-spread and large scale abductions of civilians were carried out by the RUF and AFRC in Kenema District,[4396] Kono District,[4397] Kailahun District[4398] and in Freetown and the Western Area.[4399] In all of those areas civilians were used as forced labour. In Kenema District, civilians were forced to work in diamond mines. In Kono District, civilians were not only forced to work in diamond mines but to carry loads, go on food-finding missions, carry out domestic chores and undergo military training. In Kailahun District, civilians were forced to carry loads, farm, fish, carry out domestic chores, go on food-finding missions, undergo military training and construct an airfield. In Freetown and the Western Area, civilians were forced to carry loads, perform domestic chores and destroy a bridge.

9. See below: Chapter 10 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Enslavement – paras. 1649-1658 [5422], 1663 [5432], 1672-1678 [5433], 1681 [5440], 1686-1688 [5441], 1691 [5444], 1694 [5445], 1705-1710 [5446], 1716-1718 [5452], 1764-1766 [5465], 1769 [5468], 1771 [5469], 1778-1780 [5470], 1788-1789 [5473], 1792-1794 [5475], 1800-1803 [5478], 1807-1808 [5482], 1812-1813 [5484], 1815 [5486], 1821-1823 [5487], 1828-1830 [5490], 1833 [5493], 1838-1839 [5495], 1842 [5497], 1857-1864 [5498], 1870-1874 [5506].

d. Pillage

10. para. 1973: The Trial Chamber has found that there were numerous instances of looting that occurred in Masiaka, Port Loko District, and Makeni, Bombali District, as part of Operation Pay Yourself.[4400] It has also found that in Kono District, money was looted from the Commercial Bank in Koidu Town sometime between February and April 1998, and that other items were looted from individuals in Koidu Town and Tombodu.[4401] Further, the Trial Chamber has found that civilian property was looted by rebels during the Freetown attack and during the retreat from Freetown in various locations including State House and several areas of Kissy.[4402]

11. para. 1974: The declaration of an operation known as "Operation Pay Yourself" in Masiaka suggests that AFRC and RUF rebels appropriated civilian property for their own personal gain, as they were not being paid by the rebel forces. Witnesses testified that there was a strategic decision that "each soldier should take responsibility for feeding himself".[4403] This is reinforced by the fact that much of what was looted during this period in Bombali and Port Loko Districts consisted of food, money and clothing.

12. para. 1975: The fact that the looting in February-March 1998 in Kono District was part of "Operation Pay Yourself" suggests that AFRC and RUF rebels appropriated civilian property for their own personal gain, as they were not being paid by the rebel forces. Moreover, the instances of looting that the Trial Chamber has found to have been proved in Kono District were cases in which items were looted opportunistically. Similarly, the Trial Chamber further finds that those who looted the Commercial Bank in Koidu Town were motivated by profit.

13. para. 1976: Given that many of the items that were taken during the advance and the retreat from Freetown were food, money and clothing, the Trial Chamber finds that much of this looting was undertaken in order to maintain the rebel forces during the attack and the retreat from Freetown. TF1-143, for example, testified that the rebels took drinks to sustain themselves on the advance to Freetown[4404] and Alimamy Bobson Sesay indicated that in their advance towards Freetown, they took "logistics like rice and other things".[4405] In addition, the Trial Chamber heard evidence that property such as vehicles may have been appropriated for logistical or military purposes. Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified, for example, that he and other AFRC forces commandeered vehicles from the UN House which were later used by Gullit and other commanders.[4406]

(ii) Kenema District - Crimes

15. para. 1979: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the murders committed in Kenema District that the elements of the crime of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4407]

16. See below: Chapters 2 and 3 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Murder or Unlawful Killings – paras. 589 [1412], 591 [1413], 595-597 [1414], 599-600 [1417], 602-603 [1419], 605-606 [1421], 609-610 [1423], 622-624 [1425], 627 [1428], 631-632 [1429], 635-636 [1431], 640-641 [1433], 643-644 [1436].

(iii) Kono District - Crimes

a. Burning – Kono District - Crimes

17. para. 1980: The Indictment alleges that between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance and or/Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused, engaged in widespread destruction of property by burning in Kono District between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, in various locations, including Koidu, Tombudu or Tumbodu, Sewafe or Njaima Sewafe, Wendedu and Bumpe.[4408]

18. para. 1981: The Prosecution submits that the burning of civilian houses and property "was an essential part of the strategy to make an area fearful".[4409] In Kono District, it contends that

> [w]hen the rebel forces retreated to Kono District following the Intervention, the strategy to be pursued against civilians in this District was made clear by [Johnny Paul Koroma]. At a meeting in Tankoro village attended by Hassan Papa Bangura, Dennis Mingo, Issa Sessay, Mike Lamin and other commanders, he declared that "Kono…should be a no go area for civilians", and specifically directed that houses should be burned down. Between about 1 February and about 31 December 1998, this strategy underpinned the forces' actions and operations throughout the District resulting in attacks on various towns and villages including those specifically mentioned in the Indictment […][4410]

19. para. 1982: The Prosecution submits that operations in Kono District occurred pursuant to an articulated strategy of actions and operations which resulted in attacks on various towns and villages in Kono. Specifically, it submits that the attacks "pursued against civilians in this District" were ordered by Johnny Paul Koroma, who declared that Kono "should be a no go area for civilians" and that houses should be burnt down.[4411]

20. para. 1983: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified he attended a meeting in Tankoro village near Gandorhun in mid-March 1998[4412] after retreating RUF and AFRC fighters reached Koidu Town.[4413] The witness stated that he, Hassan Papa Bangura, Denis Mingo, Issa Sesay, Mike Lamin and others were present at the meeting.[4414] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that,

> [I]n that meeting Johnny Paul [Koroma] said now that we have seen the people in Koidu Town, that is Kono, they don't like the junta and that they will go to places and bring the Kamajors to base in Koidu and launch attacks on the junta, he said now he declares that Kono should serve as a strong base for the junta forces and it should be a no go area for civilians. And that as he was leaving we shouldn't encourage civilians and that, if we encouraged them, the civilians will find a way to get them again to come back to town and start fighting against us. So he said we should declare Kono a no go zone for civilians, and then he said we should get some able bodied civilians who will assist us and they will serve as recruits and that we should make sure that we burn down houses in Kono so that people will not be able to base there. He said that now he was leaving and he was going to Liberia to meet former President Taylor to see how they could arrange to get logistics to serve as support for us and then he will send them to Kono, because he said since Kono was a [diamondiferous] area…[4415] He said that if we allow the civilians to come and base in those houses again they will find ways to fight against us. So, he said we should not allow that to happen.[4416]

21. para. 1984: Alimamy Bobson Sesay further testified that in March/April 1998, there was a continuing attack against areas in Kono that involved the burning of houses.[4417] During this period, there was no "enemy threat".[4418]

22. para. 1985: In addition to the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses TF1-371 and Issa Sesay, as according to Alimamy Bobson Sesay, they were also present at this meeting 1986. TF1-371 does not mention the occurrence of such a meeting. Rather, he testifies that a meeting took place in Masiaka to reorganise the command.[4419] After TF1-371 left Masiaka, he travelled to Makeni and then through Magburaka, Masingbi, Njaima Sewafe, and Koidu en route to Kailahun District.[4420] The only order to burn houses that he heard was given by Morris Kallon in Koidu Town (as discussed below).[4421]

23. para. 1987: Issa Sesay testified for the Defence that Johnny Paul Koroma gave instructions to withdraw to Kono at a meeting held in his village, Magbonkineh. Morris Kallon was the only one of the RUF not present at the meeting because he was not in Makeni. Other senior commanders were present, including the witness, Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor, Superman, Eldred Collins, Peter Vandi, SAJ Musa, Charles Conteh, Brigadier Mani, SFY Koromo, General Bropleh and Boise Palmer of the AFRC. Johnny Paul Koroma told those present that he had spoken with Bockarie and he then instructed Superman to mobilise the RUF to move to Kono.[4422]

24. para. 1988: In Exhibit P-078, Amnesty International reported that,

> In the days immediately after their removal from power by ECOMOG, AFRC and RUF forces indiscriminately killed unarmed civilians, looted and burned houses, both in Freetown and other towns. As the rebel forces were pursued eastwards by ECOMOG forces through towns such as Bo in Southern Province, Kenema and Koidu in Eastern Province and Makeni in Northern Province during February, March and April 1998, they were responsible for widespread killings, torture and ill-treatment including rape and other forms of sexual assault, and abduction. Villages and towns were burnt to the ground, destroying thousands of homes. Koidu, a major town in the diamond-rich Kono District, was almost totally destroyed by AFRC and RUF forces and villages between Njaiama-Sewafe and Koidu were repeatedly attacked.[4423]

25. para. 1989: This evidence of burning in Kono District corroborates the following evidence of burning in specific places within that district.

b. Koidu – Kono District - Crimes

26. para. 2005: While there is some evidence that the buildings burnt in late February/March and late April/May 1998 in Koidu were suspected of being the houses of Kamajors, Tamboros or, in the case of burnings in May 1998, that the buildings were used by the RUF, the evidence of the number of properties burnt and the articulated strategy behind the burnings establishes beyond reasonable doubt that, overall, the acts of burning were intentionally directed against civilians or their properties.

27. para. 2006: There is also some evidence that the purpose of burning was to gain military advantage by depriving enemy forces of the use of the buildings. However, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of the large-scale nature of the burnings of buildings, some of which were occupied by persons at the time, and of the stated objective of making the area "fearful", proves beyond reasonable doubt that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

c. Tombodu – Kono District - Crimes

28. para. 2017: Based upon the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that civilian houses were burnt by members of the AFRC/RUF forces in Tombodu in February/March 1998. The Trial Chamber further finds that the evidence of TF1-375 and Alimamy Bobson Sesay proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made civilian persons and their property the object of the attacks and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror, in that the objective of the attacks was to make the area "fearful" so as to cause civilians to leave the area.

d. Sewafe – Kono District - Crimes

29. para. 2021: Based on the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that houses were burnt in Sewafe by AFRC, RUF and STF fighters on the orders of Johnny Paul Koroma, that the fighters wilfully made civilian homes the object of their attack, and that the primary purpose of the burning was to terrorise the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of collaborating with the enemies of the RUF and AFRC.

e. Wendedu (a.k.a. Wondedu) – Kono District - Crimes

30. para. 2025: Based on the first-hand evidence of Alex Tamba Teh, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that at least five houses were burnt in Wendedu village after April 1998 on the orders of an AFRC commander, and that civilians or their property were wilfully made the objects of such violence.

31. para. 2026: Unlike other places in Kono District in which the burning of civilian property by the AFRC/RUF forces occurred, in the case of Wendedu there was no evidence in which the purpose of the burning was explicitly stated. However, the nature, manner and timing of the wanton burning of the houses in Wendedu followed a pattern of similar burnings by AFRC/RUF forces in other towns in Kono District which had the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population. In the Trial Chambers view, all of the circumstances lead to the inescapable inference that the burnings in Wendedu were part of the same campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that primary purpose of the burning of the houses in Wendedu was to spread terror among the civilian population.

f. Bumpe – Kono District - Crimes

32. para. 2031: Based on the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that civilian houses in Bumpe were burnt by members of the RUF/AFRC, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons and their property the object of the burnings, and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

g. Unlawful Killings – Kono District - Crimes

33. para. 2032: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to a number of murders which were perpetrated in various pleaded locations in Kono District that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4530]

34. See below: Chapters 2 and 3 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Murder or Unlawful Killings – paras. 658-663 [1438], 670-672 [1444], 674-675 [1447], 682-684 [1449], 686-687 [1452], 691-692 [1454], 697-698 [1456], 702-704 [1458], 709-710 [1461], 712-713 [1463], 715-716 [1465], 721-722 [1467], 729-730 [1469], 735-736 [1471], 739-740 [1473], 746-747 [1475], 749-750 [1478].

h. Sexual Violence – Kono District - Crimes

35. para. 2033: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that Finda Gbamanja was raped in Koidu Town by a rebel named Peppe in February 1998; that Finda Gbamanja was raped by Sergeant Foday in Koidu Town and at Superman Ground in 1998; that TF1- 189 was raped in Koidu Town by her AFRC and RUF captors between March and April 1998, that AFRC commanders, including Alimamy Bobson Sesay, raped an unknown number of women and girls in Tombodu between March and June 1998; that Sia Lappia was raped by Staff Alhaji in Tombodu in approximately April 1998; that Rebecca and an unknown number of women were raped at Wondedu by men under the command of Rocky in 1998; that an unknown number of women were raped in Superman Ground by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters in or about April 1998; and that an unknown number of women and girls were raped at PC Ground by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters including Isaac Mongor in or about April 1998.[4531]

36. para. 2034: Further, the Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of women were used as sex slaves by RUF and AFRC fighters in Koidu Town in February 1998; that an unknown number of women were used as sex slaves by RUF and AFRC fighters in Koidu Town in March to June 1998; that an unknown number of women were used as sex slaves by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters at Superman Ground and PC Ground in around April 1998; that TF1-189 was used as a sex slave by members of the RUF in Koidu Town from 12

March 1998 to August 1998; that Finda Gbamanja was used as a sex slave by a member of the RUF in Koidu Town from approximately March/April 1998; that Finda Gbamanja was used as a sex slave by rebels loyal to Superman at Superman Ground from approximately April to October 1998.[4532] The Trial Chamber has also found that all of these instances constitute outrages upon personal dignity.[4533]

37. para. 2035: It is well established that rape, sexual slavery, forced marriages, and outrages on personal dignity, when committed against a civilian population with the specific intent to terrorise, amount to an act of terror.[4534] Expert witness Beth Vann stated in her report that sexual violence was used as a tactic by the AFRC/RUF to "send a message" to the enemy.4535 Exhibit P-330, a Human Rights Watch report, states that the "rebel forces have used sexual violence as a weapon to terrorize, humiliate and punish, and to force the civilian population into submission".[4536] Experts who worked with victims of sexual violence during the conflict in Sierra Leone reported that the victims suffered from sexually transmitted diseases, exhibited signs of post-traumatic stress disorder, and were often socially isolated, stigmatized and rejected by their families.[4537] Such sexual violence was therefore deliberately aimed at destroying the traditional family nucleus, thus undermining the cultural values and relationships which held society together.[4538]

38. para. 2036: In her expert report, in which she interviewed refugees from Kono and Kailahun District, Beth Vann indicated that all of the interviewees described witnessing at least one public rape.[4539] There was evidence that Sia Lappia was forced at gunpoint to take off her clothes in public and was then raped in front of a group of civilians, including her own child.[4540] Not only were victims publicly undressed and violated, but some were subjected to perverse methods of sexual violence. For example, after Sia Kamara was raped, one rebel inserted a stick into her vagina.[4541]

40. See below: Chapter 5 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Sexual Slavery – paras. 1089 [3167] , 1092 [3168], 1094 [3169], 1098 [3170], 1102 [3171], 1108 [3172], 1116-1118 [3173], 1127 [3176], 1132 [3177], 1142-1146 [3178].

i. Physical Violence - Tombodu – Kono District - Crimes

42. para. 2039: The Trial Chamber has found that 15 civilians had their hands amputated and/or were mutilated by Savage, Guitar Boy and Staff Alhaji in March or April 1998, that six persons, including witnesses Ibrahim Fofana and Mustapha Mansaray, had their hands amputated by Staff Alhaji or Rambo in April 1998, and that Samuel Komba's right hand was mutilated in Tombodu by rebels after March 1998.[4542]

43. para. 2040: The amputations and mutilations practised by the RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG.

44. para. 2041: Moreover, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, whose evidence the Trial Chamber has accepted in relation to these incidents, testified that the civilians whose hands were amputated by Savage, Guitar Boy and Staff Alhaji were targeted because they were thought by Savage to be ECOMOG supporters, and that after their hands had been amputated, they were urged to seek relief from ECOMOG troops.[4543] These amputations occurred in the context of the commission of widespread burnings and other crimes. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of these amputations and/or mutilations was to spread terror among the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with ECOMOG.

45. para. 2042: The Trial Chamber further finds that the amputations of Fofana's and Mansaray's hands and the unsuccessful amputation of Komba's hand were also perpetrated with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

46. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Physical Violence – para. 1217 [3860].

j. Physical Violence - Kayima – Kono District - Crimes

47. para. 2043: The Trial Chamber has found that 18 captured persons, including the witness Sorieh Kondeh, had their bodies carved with the letters "RUF" and/or "AFRC" by AFRC fighters in Kayima in mid-1998.[4544]

48. para. 2044: The carvings practiced by the RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting or escaping from the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the AFRC fighters who carved the words "AFRC" or "RUF" into the bodies of 18 captured persons were acting with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

49. See below: Chapters 9 and 10 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1221-1223 [3861].

k. Physical Violence - Wondedu – Kono District - Crimes

50. para. 2045: The Trial Chamber has found that an unknown number of civilians had the letters "RUF" and/or "AFRC" carved on their bodies by RUF fighters in Wondedu after April 1998, and that Alex Tamba Teh was physically injured in a serious and permanent manner by AFRC Commander Banya, who used the butt of his gun to knock out his teeth.[4545]

51. para. 2046: Such disfigurements practised by the RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. In addition, Tamba Teh, whose evidence the Trial Chamber has accepted in relation to this incident, testified that the rebels "said that people shouldn't escape and go to ECOMOG. In fact they shouldn't escape and go, so with that carving if you go to the side of ECOMOG they will kill you, so you never had anywhere else to go".[4546] The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of these disfigurements was to terrorise the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of escaping from the AFRC or RUF, or of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with ECOMOG.

52. para. 2047: However, with respect to the injuries caused to Alex Tamba Teh, the Trial Chamber finds that this act was not perpetrated with the primary purpose of terrorizing the civilian population, but was rather a spontaneous punishment inflicted upon him by AFRC Commander Banya.

53. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1228-1232 [3864].

(iv) Kailahun District - Crimes

a. Unlawful Killings – Kailahun District - Crimes

54. para. 2050: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the unlawful killings perpetrated in Kailahum District that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4548]

b. Sexual Violence – Kailahun District - Crimes

56. para. 2051: The Trial Chamber has found that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of women and girls captured in Kenema District were used by the AFRC and RUF as sex slaves after February 1998 in Buedu and Kailahun Town; that an unknown number of women and girls were used as sex slaves by RUF members in Buedu and that TF1-189 was used as a sex slave by a member of the RUF in Kailahun Town from August to September 1999.[4549] The Trial Chamber also recalls that it has found that each of these instances constitutes an outrage upon personal dignity.[4550]

57. para. 2052: The Trial Chamber has found that in Kailahun District the crime of sexual slavery was both widespread and systematic. There was evidence that girls as young as 7-15 years were used as sex slaves in Kailahun District,[4551] and that victims of sexual slavery were also humiliated and degraded. For example, witness Dennis Koker testified that in Buedu, CO Kallon brought a woman who had been subjected to sexual slavery to his office saying that she had disrespected him. He had then stripped her to her underwear and beaten her.[4552] As in Kono District, Trial Chamber is further satisfied from this evidence that the public nature of these crimes of sexual violence was a deliberate tactic on the part of the perpetrators to instil fear among civilians.

58. See below: Chapters 5 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Sexual Slavery – paras. 1053 [3159], 1060 [3160], 1066 [3161], 1071-1075 [3162].

59. See below: Chapters 6 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Outrages Upon Personal Dignity – paras. 1202 – 1204 [3472].

c. Physical Violence – Kailahun District - Crimes

60. para. 2054: The Trial Chamber has found that the evidence of physical violence perpetrated in Kailahun District is relevant to proof of the chapeau requirements only.[4553]

61. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1263 [3869].

(v) Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

a. Burnings – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

62. para. 2068: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of all of these witnesses as proof beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta burned civilian property in Freetown and the Western Area, wilfully made civilians or their property the object of such acts, and that the primary purpose of such acts was to spread terror among the civilian population.

63. para. 2069: The Prosecution also adduced the following evidence of incidences of burning at specific places within Freetown and the Western Area.

b. Waterloo– Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

64. para. 2068: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of all of these witnesses as proof beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta burned civilian property in Freetown and the Western Area, wilfully made civilians or their property the object of such acts, and that the primary purpose of such acts was to spread terror among the civilian population.

65. para. 2069: The Prosecution also adduced the following evidence of incidences of burning at specific places within Freetown and the Western Area.

c. Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

66. para. 2082: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt by the foregoing evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4620] burned civilian property in Waterloo and wilfully made civilians or their property the object of such acts. Moreover, the similar circumstances of the two separate instances of the burning of civilian property in Waterloo on around 22 December 1998 and in January 1999 respectively lead to the inescapable inference that they were part of the same campaign to terrorise the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of the burning of civilian property in Waterloo in December 1998 and January 1999 was to spread terror among the civilian population.

d. Tumbo – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

67. para. 2088: Based on the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4633] burned civilian property in Tumbo and wilfully made civilians or their property the object of those acts. Moreover, the nature, manner and timing of the burning of houses in Tumbo followed a pattern of similar burnings by AFRC/RUF forces in other parts of Freetown and the Western Area which had the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of the burnings in Tumbo was to spread terror among the civilian population.

e. Kissy and Fourah Bay in Eastern Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

68. para. 2122: The evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned civilian properties in Kissy and Fourah Bay, that they wilfully made persons or their property the object of such acts, and that such acts were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

f. State House and Pademba Road – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

69. para. 2132: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned civilian property in Freetown, including State House and Pademba Road, and that they wilfully made persons and their property the object of the burnings, the primary purpose of which was to spread terror amongst the civilian population.

g. Kingtom – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

70. para. 2138: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4756] burned civilian property in Kingtom and that they wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings.

71. para. 2139: Although there is some evidence to suggest that the purpose of the attack on Kingtom was to repel ECOMOG forces, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of the burning of homes, some of which had people locked inside, and the evidence that one of the stated objectives was to punish civilians for supporting ECOMOG, establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

h. Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

72. para. 2141: The only evidence of civilian property being burned in Upgun is Exhibit P-285 (the interview notes of TF1-169), which simply records that "few private houses were burned in the Upgun area but the number of government buildings burnt down was about 10".[4758]

73. para. 2142: The paucity of the available evidence does not permit the Trial Chamber to draw the inference submitted by the Prosecution. Such evidence is not capable of proving beyond reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Upgun was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

74. para. 2143: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Upgun have been established.

i. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

75. para. 2151: The evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4783] burned civilian property in Wellington, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

j. Calaba Town – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

76. para. 2162: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned down civilian houses in Calaba Town, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

k. Hastings, Grafton and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

77. para. 2164: Confidential Exhibit P-284 records that during TF1-169's inspection he saw that a few civilian houses and vehicles were burned and damaged in Grafton, Hastings, Waterloo, Goderich, Kent, Tombo and Benguema. However, TF1-169 was concerned with government property and so could not say the amount of the damage as he did not pay attention to privately owned property.[4805]

78. para. 2165: There is no other evidence of civilian property being burned in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema.

79. para. 2166: The paucity of the available evidence does not permit the Trial Chamber to draw the inference submitted by the Prosecution. Such evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Grafton, Hastings and Benguema was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

80. para. 2167: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema have been established.

l. Goderich and Kent – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

81. para. 2169: The only evidence of burning in these areas is in Confidential Exhibit P-284, in which TF1-169 records that during his inspection he saw that a few houses and vehicles were burned and damaged in Grafton, Hastings, Waterloo, Goderich, Kent, Tombo, and Benguema. However, TF1-169 was concerned with government property and so could not say the amount of the damage as he did not pay attention to privately owned property.[4806]

82. para. 2170: The paucity of the available evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Goderich and Kent was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

83. para. 2171: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Goderich and Kent have been established.

m. Unlawful Killings – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

84. para. 2172: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the unlawful killings perpetrated in Freetown and the Western Area that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4807]

85. See below: Chapters 2 and 3 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions– Murder or Unlawful Killings – paras. 785-788 [1484], 805-808 [1488], 813-814 [1492], 830-831 [1494], 839-841 [1496], 843-844 [1499], 853-854 [1501], 859-860 [1503], 862 [1505], 867-870 [1506].

n. Sexual Violence – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

86. para. 2173: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that: men and boys under the command of Gullit raped an unknown number of women and girls in the grounds of the State House over three nights in January 1999;[4808] AFRC and RUF commanders and fighters raped an unknown number of girls inside State House during the Freetown attack of January 1999; Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a commander in the AFRC, captured and raped a young girl in Freetown during the 1999 attack; RUF fighters raped an unknown number of girls on Blackhall Road during the Freetown attack on January 1999; rebels, some under the command of Captain Blood, raped an unknown number of girls in Kissy on or about 22 January 1999.[4809]

87. para. 2174: The Trial Chamber has also found proved beyond reasonable doubt that: an unknown number of women and girls were used as sexual slaves by AFRC fighters in Benguema until approximately March 1999; TF1-029 was used as a sex slave by Major Arif, an ex-SLA/AFRC soldier, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema from late January to March 1999; Akiatu Tholley was used as a sex slave by an STF fighter named James from approximately late January through early April 1999; TF1-023 was used as a sex slave by a member of the AFRC in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile from late January through March 1999.[4810] The Trial Chamber has also found that all of these instances constitute outrages upon personal dignity.[4811]

88. para. 2175: The evidence establishes that the commission of acts of rape and sexual slavery in Freetown and the Western Area by the rebel forces were widespread and systematic, both during the attack on Freetown and during the retreat. In particular, the Trial Chamber has found that there was a recognized system of ownership and hierarchy among captured women in the rebel forces in Freetown and the Western Area, as illustrated by TF1-023 being accorded special treatment as a commander's wife.[4812]

89. para. 2176: There was evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that girls were raped publicly outside State House, that they were raped publicly on Blackhall Road in the presence of other civilians, including TF1-028 who tried to stop them, and that girls were raped publicly in Kissy.[4813] Many of the victims of these rapes were girls as young as 13.[4814] Victims were also humiliated and degraded, as they were often undressed prior to having intercourse, and in some cases, were subjected to perverse methods of sexual violence. For example, Tholley, who at that time had not yet had her menses, testified that a commander called James "damaged her in the vagina" when she refused to have sex with him.[4815] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from this evidence that the public nature of these crimes of sexual violence was a deliberate tactic on the part of the perpetrators to instil fear among civilians.

90. para. 2177: Given the geographical and temporal proximity of these crimes to each other, and to the burnings, killings and amputations that occurred in Freetown and the Western Area during the advance towards Freetown, the attack and the retreat, the Trial Chamber finds that the rebels regularly used rape and sexual slavery to spread terror among the civilian population of Freetown and the Western Area.

91. para. 2178: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces wilfully made the girls and women of Freetown and the Western Area the object of acts of sexual violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

o. Physical Violence - Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

93. para. 2179: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that two civilians had their hands amputated, one civilian had his hands and tongue amputated, and one civilian had both her eyes mutilated by rebels in Freetown in January 1999.[4816]

94. para. 2180: The amputations and carvings practiced by the AFRC and RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. The gruesome nature of these particular amputations and mutilations included the amputation of tongues, and a woman whose eyes were pulled out so that they protruded from their sockets.[4817] TF1-158 testified that he had treated patients who had been attacked and amputated or mutilated by the rebels, and that when they were being attacked, "their immediate families were positioned such that … they will be in full view of what they were doing, especially for those who suffered amputations and rape".[4818] The Trial Chamber is satisfied on this evidence that these amputations and mutilations were perpetrated with the primary intention of spreading terror.

95. para. 2181: The Trial Chamber has also found that Abu Bakarr Mansaray was beaten and physically harmed in a permanent manner by rebels outside State House on 8 January 1999.[4819] However, the evidence is not sufficient to establish the intent of the perpetrators, and the Trial Chamber is thus not able to conclude that they acted with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

96. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1272-1273 [3870].

p. Physical Violence - Kissy, including Kissy Mental Hospital – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

97. para. 2182: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that: a Nigerian man called Ike had his ear amputated and was wounded on his thigh in Kissy on 18 January 1999;[4820] three persons, including witness James Kpumgbu, had their hands amputated or mutilated near Kissy Mental Home by rebels on 6 January 1999;[4821] two civilians had their hands amputated by TF1-143 and another boy in Kissy Market in January 1999;[4822] Ibrahim Wai was physically harmed and his hand was amputated by Captain Blood in January 1999;[4823] the brother of the brother-in-law of Ibrahim Wai had his hand amputated in Kissy in January 1999;[4824] Mohamed Sampson Bah's hand was amputated in Kissy by rebels led by Tafaiko in January

1999;[4825] Mohamed Sesay's arms were amputated on 19 January 1999;[4826] Alusine Conteh and Boi Barrie's hands were amputated on 20 January 1999;[4827] TF1-083, Pa Sorie and Musa had their hands amputated by rebels on 21 January 1999;[4828] three 13-year-old girls had their arms amputated by rebels around 20-22 January 1999;[4829] three civilians had their hands amputated by Changa Bulanga at Shell Old Road in Kissy in January 1999.[4830]

98. para. 2183: In several of these cases, the rebels told their victims that they should show these amputations to Kabbah, or ask him for new hands. Kpumgbu, for example, testified that the rebel who amputated his hands then said that Kpumgbu "should go and tell Tejan Kabbah that they were fighting for power".[4831] Wai also testified that Captain Blood told him that he should go to Pa Kabbah,[4832] because "Pa Kabbah had brought so many hands for us, for those whose hands are…off, they should go to him".[4833] The rebel who amputated Boi Barrie's arms told him "go and tell Tejan Kabbah, no more politics no more votes", and that rebels told Alusine Conteh, who had both hands amputated, that he should tell Kabbah that he was a messenger.[4834] Similar statements were made in relation to the amputations of TF1- 083, Pa Sorie, and Musa, where the rebels told them they should go to Kabbah to get new hands. Several of these amputations were performed by child soldiers, who were often incapable of performing the amputations successfully, leaving victims with mangled hands, or needing older rebels to finish the amputations, such as in the case of the Mohamed Sesay.[4835]

99. para. 2184: These amputations occurred in the context of widespread burning, rape and killing, and in situations where rebels had been ordered to target civilians who they believed were Kamajors or supporters of ECOMOG. In the case of the amputations performed by Changa Bulanga at Old Shell Road, this operation was ordered by Gullit in order to punish civilians who he believed had welcomed ECOMOG to Freetown. These incidents also occurred in a context where witnesses observed bunches of human hands that had been tied together and buried in the dirt at Kissy Road.

100. para. 2185: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the amputations that occurred in Kissy from 6 January to 22 January 1999 were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

101. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1272-1273 [3870], 1279 [3873], 1284-1285 [3874], 1289-1293 [3876], 1297 [3881], 1301-1302 [3882], 1304 [3884], 1309 [3885], 1314-1315 [3886], 1321-1325 [3888].

q. Physical Violence - Fourah Bay – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

102. para. 2186: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that seven civilians, including witness Alpha Jalloh, had their hands amputated at Fourah Bay by members of the SLA around 18 January 1999, and that an unknown number of civilians had their hands amputated by Major Mines and Kabila at Fourah Bay.[4836]

103. para. 2187: After the civilians had been amputated, the rebels told the amputees that they could go to Pah Kabbah to get more hands.[4837] The amputations also served as a message to Kabbah and ECOMOG of the atrocities of which the rebels were capable. These amputations also took place in the context of widespread burning, rape and killing in Freetown.

104. para. 2188: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the amputations that occurred in Kissy from 6 January to 22 January 1999 were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

105. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – paras. 1329-1331 [3893].

r. Physical Violence - Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

106. para. 2189: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that three captured civilians had their hands amputated by Five-Five in Upgun in January 1999. One civilian was given a "short-sleeve" amputation and the others "long-sleeve" amputations.[4838] For the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, and given that this amputation was performed by Five-Five as a "demonstration", the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

107. See below: Chapters 7 and 8 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Physical Violence – para. 1334 [3896].

s. Physical Violence - Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area - Crimes

108. para. 2190: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that Sarah Koroma's left hand was amputated and her right hand mutilated in Wellington on 6 January 1999; that seven civilians had their hands amputated in Wellington on 6 January 1999; that the hand of a child between 3 to 4 years old was amputated in Wellington in January 1999 and that Akiatu Tholley was beaten and physically harmed in a serious manner in Wellington in late January 1999.[4839]

109. para. 2191: The rebels who amputated Koroma's arm told her to go tell Kabbah that the rebels wanted peace.[4840] The rebels also amputated the arm of a 3 to 4 year old child. Based on this evidence, given the widespread burning, rape and killing that occurred during both the rebels' advance into Freetown in early January and their retreat in late January, and for the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

111. para. 561: Article 3 of the Statute, entitled 'Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II', provides that:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977. These violations shall include:
> a. Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment;
> b. Collective punishments;
> c. Taking of hostages;
> d. Acts of terrorism;

e. Outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

f. Pillage;

g. The passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as indispensable by civilised peoples; and

h. Threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

112. para. 562: In order for liability to be established under Article 3 of the Statute, the acts of the Accused must have formed part of an armed conflict. The jurisprudence has identified three chapeau (or general) requirements for violations against international humanitarian law.

a. The existence of an armed conflict – Applicable law – War Crimes/ Violations of Common Article 3

113. para. 563: Although Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions is expressed to apply to armed conflicts "not of an international character", the distinction between internal armed conflicts and international conflicts is "no longer of great relevance in relation to the crimes articulated in Article 3 of the Statute as these crimes are prohibited in all conflicts. Crimes during internal armed conflicts form part of the broader category of crimes during international armed conflict".[1309] The Appeals Chamber of the ICTY has ruled that "an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a State".[1310] The armed conflict "need not have been causal to the commission of the crime, but the existence of an armed conflict must, at a minimum, have played a substantial part in the perpetrator's ability to commit it, his decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed or the purpose for which it was committed".[1311]

114. para. 564: The criteria for establishing the existence of an armed conflict are the intensity of the conflict and the degree of organisation of the warring factions.[1312] These criteria are used "solely for the purpose, as a minimum, of distinguishing an armed conflict from banditry, unorganised and short-lived insurrections, or terrorist activities, which are not subject to international humanitarian law".[1313]

115. para. 565: International humanitarian law applies from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extends beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached; or, in the case of internal conflicts, until a peaceful settlement is achieved. Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply to the entire territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the entire territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there.[1314]

b. Nexus – Applicable law – War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3

116. para. 566: For an offence to fall within the scope of Article 3 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber must establish that a sufficient link between the alleged breach of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II and the underlying armed conflict existed.[1315] The rationale of the said requirement is to protect the victims of internal armed conflicts, but not from crimes unrelated to the conflict. The nexus is satisfied where the perpetrator acted in furtherance of or under the guise of the armed conflict.[1316]

117. para. 567: The following factors have been considered in the jurisprudence to determine if an act was sufficiently related to the armed conflict: whether the perpetrator was a combatant; whether the victim was a member of the opposing party; whether the act can be said to have served the ultimate goal of a military campaign; and whether the crime was committed as part of or in the context of the perpetrator's official duties.[1317] The Appeals Chamber has stated that "in respect of Article 3, therefore, the Court need only be satisfied that an armed conflict existed and that the alleged violations were related to the armed conflict".[1318]

c. Protected persons – Applicable law – War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3

118. para. 568: Both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II protect only those persons who take no active or direct part in the hostilities, and those who have ceased to take part therein and are therefore placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause.[1319] The Prosecution must therefore establish the relevant facts of each victim with a view to ascertain whether that person was directly involved in the hostilities at the relevant time.[1320]

(ii) War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

a. The existence of an armed conflict – War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3 - Findings

119. para. 571: The Trial Chamber took judicial notice of the fact that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone, lasting from March 1991 until January 2002.[1324] The parties agree that "[d]espite temporary lulls in the fighting occasioned by a 30 November 1996 peace agreement and a 7 July 1999 peace agreement, active hostilities continued in the Republic of Sierra Leone until about 18 January 2002".[1325] Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that it is established beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment period.

120. para. 572: The Trial Chamber took judicial notice of the fact that > Armed groups who participated in the armed conflict in Sierra Leone included: a) The Revolutionary United Front (RUF); b) The Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC); c) The Civil Defence Forces (CDF)".[1326]

b. Conclusions on the Chapeau Requirements – War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3 - Findings

121. para. 573: The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution proved beyond reasonable doubts that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.

122. para. 574: The questions of whether (i) nexus existed between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, (ii) that the victim was not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation and (iii) that the perpetrator knew or had reason to know that the victim was not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged act or omission are considered on a case by case basis in the findings on the crimes section.[1327]

(iii) Pleading

123. para. 402: Count 1 charges the Accused with acts of terrorism, a violation of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3(d) of the Statute.[994] The Prosecution alleges that the Accused committed the crimes set forth in paragraph 6 to 31 of the Indictment, and charged in

Counts 2 to 11, "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone".[995]

124. para. 1965: The Prosecution submits that "the ultimate objective of the Indictment Crimes was to forcibly control the territory and population and to pillage the resources of Sierra Leone, in particular diamonds. However, the primary purpose of the criminal means by which these ultimate objectives were to be achieved was terror. Terror was deliberate, organised and spread via a campaign involving the commission of a multiplicity of crimes including burning and the crimes charged in Counts 2 through 11 in the Indictment".[4381]

(iv) Applicable Law - Acts of Terrorism

125. para. 403: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the following elements of the crime of acts of terrorism must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

i. Acts or threats of violence directed against persons or their property;

ii. The perpetrator wilfully made persons or their property the object of those acts and threats of violence; and

iii. The acts or threats of violence were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among protected persons.996

126. para. 404: Actual terrorization is not a required element of the crime of terror, although evidence of such terrorization may be used to establish other elements of the crime.[997]

127. para. 405: The Prosecution must prove that the spreading of terror was specifically intended.[998] However, while spreading terror must be the primary purpose of the acts or threats of violence, it need not be the only purpose.[999] Such intent can be inferred from, inter alia, the "nature, manner, time and duration"[1000] of the acts or threats of violence, and may also be inferred from the actual infliction of terror and the indiscriminate nature of the attacks.[1001]

128. para. 406: The Defence submits that the ICTY has held in the Milosevic Trial Judgement that an act or threat can be considered as "terrorism" only where it results in "death or serious injury to body or health within the civilian population or to individual civilians".[1002] It notes, however, that Trial Chamber I of the Special Court explicitly rejected this requirement in the RUF Trial Judgement.[1003] The Defence submits that this represents a divergence between the two courts which has not been resolved on appeal, and urges the Trial Chamber to resolve it in the manner most favourable to the Accused.[1004] The Prosecution does not address this issue in its submissions.

129. para. 407: However, contrary to the Defence submissions, there is appellate authority resolving this issue, as in the Milosević case, the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY found that the Trial Chamber had "misinterpreted the Galić jurisprudence by stating that 'actual infliction of death or serious harm to body or health is a required element of the crime of terror', and had thus committed an error of law".[1005] The Appeals Chamber of the ICTY further found that actual infliction of death or serious bodily harm was not a required element of the crime of terror, but that it must be shown that the victims suffered grave consequences resulting from the acts or threats of violence, which may include death or serious injury to body or health.[1006] The Trial Chamber concurs with this approach.

130. para. 408: The Defence submits that, in addition to these requirements, the Appeals Chamber of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon ("STL") has recently held that a customary rule of international law regarding the crime of terrorism has emerged which requires the following three key elements: "(i) the perpetration of a criminal act (such as murder, kidnapping, hostage-taking, arson, and so on), or threatening such an act; (ii) the intent to spread fear among the population (which would generally entail the creation of a public danger) or directly or indirectly coerce a national or international authority to take some action, or refrain from taking it; (iii) when the act involves a transnational element".[1007] The Defence submits that the second and third requirements, which differ from the definition of "acts of terrorism" as defined above, should be included in the definition of the crime of "acts of terrorism".[1008] The Prosecution does not address this issue in its submissions.

131. para. 409: The Trial Chamber notes that the Appeals Chamber of the STL found that these three key elements were applicable to "a customary rule of international law regarding the international crime of terrorism" at least in times of peace.[1009] It distinguished this from the war crime of "acts of terrorism".[1010] The Appeals Chamber of the ICTY and the Trial Chamber of this court have held that the war crime of "acts of terrorism" (which does not contain these additional elements) is firmly established in customary international law.[1011]

132. para. 410: The Trial Chamber is therefore of the view that the additional elements referred to in the above paragraphs do not form part of the war crime of "acts of terrorism".

(v) Evidentiary Basis

a. Enlistment, conscription and use of children under the age of 15 years to actively participate in hostilities

133. para. 1969: Such evidence, in the Trial Chamber's opinion, establishes that the purpose of the conscription and use of child soldiers by the RUF and AFRC during the conflict in Sierra Leone was primarily military in nature. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that such acts were not done in furtherance of a primary purpose to terrorise the civilian population.

b. Enslavement

134. para. 1971: The Trial Chamber finds that the primary purpose behind the commission of abductions and forced labour was not to spread terror among the civilian population, but rather was primarily utilitarian or military in nature. The Trial Chamber does not discount that the abduction of persons from their homes, their continued detention, and their subjection to forced labour, including forced mining and living in RUF camps, under conditions of violence may have spread terror among the civilian population. However, the Trial Chamber finds that the "side-effect" of terror is not sufficient to establish the specific intent element in relation to these crimes.

135. para. 1972: As with evidence of the abduction and use of child soldiers, therefore, even where abductions and forced labour occurred simultaneously with other acts of violence otherwise examined by this Chamber with regards to the crime of acts of terrorism, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that such acts cannot be considered to have been committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

c. Pillage

136. para. 1977: The Trial Chamber does not discount that the widespread lootings of homes and businesses during Operation Pay Yourself in Bombali and Port Loko Districts, in Kono District, and during the attack on Freetown in which pillage was committed in the context of several other crimes, may have had the side-effect of spreading terror among the civilian population. However, the Trial Chamber finds that the "side-effect" of terror is not sufficient to establish the specific intent element in relation to these crimes.

137. para. 1978: Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the pillage of civilian property that occurred in these districts was not perpetrated with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

(vi) Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

138. para. 1979: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the murders committed in Kenema District that the elements of the crime of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4407]

(vii) Kono District

a. Koidu – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

139. para. 2005: While there is some evidence that the buildings burnt in late February/March and late April/May 1998 in Koidu were suspected of being the houses of Kamajors, Tamboros or, in the case of burnings in May 1998, that the buildings were used by the RUF, the evidence of the number of properties burnt and the articulated strategy behind the burnings establishes beyond reasonable doubt that, overall, the acts of burning were intentionally directed against civilians or their properties.

140. para. 2006: There is also some evidence that the purpose of burning was to gain military advantage by depriving enemy forces of the use of the buildings. However, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of the large-scale nature of the burnings of buildings, some of which were occupied by persons at the time, and of the stated objective of making the area "fearful", proves beyond reasonable doubt that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

b. Tombodu – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

141. para. 2017: Based upon the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that civilian houses were burnt by members of the AFRC/RUF forces in Tombodu in February/March 1998. The Trial Chamber further finds that the evidence of TF1-375 and Alimamy Bobson Sesay proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made civilian persons and their property the object of the attacks and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror, in that the objective of the attacks was to make the area "fearful" so as to cause civilians to leave the area.

c. Sewafe – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

142. para. 2021: Based on the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that houses were burnt in Sewafe by AFRC, RUF and STF fighters on the orders of Johnny Paul Koroma, that the fighters wilfully made civilian homes the object of their attack, and that the primary purpose of the burning was to terrorise the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of collaborating with the enemies of the RUF and AFRC.

d. Wendedu (a.k.a. Wondedu) – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

143. para. 2026: Unlike other places in Kono District in which the burning of civilian property by the AFRC/RUF forces occurred, in the case of Wendedu there was no evidence in which the purpose of the burning was explicitly stated. However, the nature, manner and timing of the wanton burning of the houses in Wendedu followed a pattern of similar burnings by AFRC/RUF forces in other towns in Kono District which had the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population. In the Trial Chambers view, all of the circumstances lead to the inescapable inference that the burnings in Wendedu were part of the same campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that primary purpose of the burning of the houses in Wendedu was to spread terror among the civilian population.

e. Bumpe – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

144. para. 2031: Based on the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that civilian houses in Bumpe were burnt by members of the RUF/AFRC, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons and their property the object of the burnings, and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

f. Unlawful Killings – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

145. para. 2032: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to a number of murders which were perpetrated in various pleaded locations in Kono District that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4530]

g. Sexual Violence – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

146. para. 2037: The Trial Chamber finds that committing crimes of sexual violence in public was a deliberate tactic on the part of the perpetrators to spread terror. Such crimes were part of a campaign of rape and sexual slavery committed by members of the AFRC/RUF against the women of Kono District not merely as a means of sexual gratification, but in order to spread terror among the civilian population.

147. para. 2038: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces wilfully made the girls and women of Kono District the object of acts of sexual violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

h. Physical Violence - Tombodu – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

148. para. 2041: Moreover, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, whose evidence the Trial Chamber has accepted in relation to these incidents, testified that the civilians whose hands were amputated by Savage, Guitar Boy and Staff Alhaji were targeted because they were thought by Savage to be ECOMOG supporters, and that after their hands had been amputated, they were urged to seek relief from ECOMOG troops.[4543] These amputations occurred in the context of the commission of widespread burnings and other crimes. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of these amputations and/or mutilations was to spread terror among the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with ECOMOG.

149. para. 2042: The Trial Chamber further finds that the amputations of Fofana's and Mansaray's hands and the unsuccessful amputation of Komba's hand were also perpetrated with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

i. Physical Violence - Kayima – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

150. para. 2044: The carvings practiced by the RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting or escaping from the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the AFRC fighters who carved the words "AFRC" or

"RUF" into the bodies of 18 captured persons were acting with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

j. Physical Violence - Wondedu – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

151. para. 2046: Such disfigurements practised by the RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. In addition, Tamba Teh, whose evidence the Trial Chamber has accepted in relation to this incident, testified that the rebels "said that people shouldn't escape and go to ECOMOG. In fact they shouldn't escape and go, so with that carving if you go to the side of ECOMOG they will kill you, so you never had anywhere else to go".[4546] The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of these disfigurements was to terrorise the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of escaping from the AFRC or RUF, or of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with ECOMOG.

152. para. 2047: However, with respect to the injuries caused to Alex Tamba Teh, the Trial Chamber finds that this act was not perpetrated with the primary purpose of terrorizing the civilian population, but was rather a spontaneous punishment inflicted upon him by AFRC Commander Banya.

k. Conclusion – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

153. para. 2048: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces in Kono District wilfully made civilian persons or their property the object of acts of violence in the forms of burning of civilian property (in Koidu, Tombodu, Sewafe, Wondedu and Bumpe), unlawful killings, sexual violence and physical violence (in Tombodu, Kayima and Wondedu), committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

154. para. 2049: The Trial Chamber has already found that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving, among others, members of the RUF and AFRC.[4547] Further, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that crimes discussed in the above findings were directly linked to that armed conflict and that the victims were civilians not directly taking part in hostilities. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism (Count 1) as a serious violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 1) have been proved reasonable doubt.

(viii) Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Unlawful Killings – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

155. para. 2050: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the unlawful killings perpetrated in Kailahum District that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4548]

b. Sexual Violence – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

156. para. 2053: On the basis of the evidence relating to sexual slavery in Kailahun District, the Trial Chamber finds that the widespread and systematic use of women as sex slaves instilled fear and a sense of insecurity among the civilian population, and is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF wilfully made the women of Kailahun District the object of acts of sexual violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

c. Physical Violence – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

157. para. 2054: The Trial Chamber has found that the evidence of physical violence perpetrated in Kailahun District is relevant to proof of the chapeau requirements only.[4553]

d. Conclusion – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

158. para. 2055: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution had proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces wilfully made civilian persons the object of acts of violence in the form of unlawful killings and sexual violence in Kailahun District, committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

159. para. 2056: The Trial Chamber has already found that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving, among others, members of the RUF and AFRC.[4554] Further, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that crimes discussed in the above findings were directly linked to that armed conflict and that the victims were civilians not directly taking part in hostilities. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism (Count 1) as a serious violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 1) have been proved reasonable doubt.

(ix) Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

a. Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

160. para. 2068: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of all of these witnesses as proof beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta burned civilian property in Freetown and the Western Area, wilfully made civilians or their property the object of such acts, and that the primary purpose of such acts was to spread terror among the civilian population.

b. Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

161. para. 2082: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt by the foregoing evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4620] burned civilian property in Waterloo and wilfully made civilians or their property the object of such acts. Moreover, the similar circumstances of the two separate instances of the burning of civilian property in Waterloo on around 22 December 1998 and in January 1999 respectively lead to the inescapable inference that they were part of the same campaign to terrorise the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of the burning of civilian property in Waterloo in December 1998 and January 1999 was to spread terror among the civilian population.

c. Tumbo – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

162. para. 2088: Based on the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4633] burned civilian property in Tumbo and wilfully made civilians or their property the object of those acts. Moreover, the nature, manner and timing of the burning of houses in Tumbo followed a pattern of similar burnings by AFRC/RUF forces in other parts of Freetown and the Western Area which had the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of the burnings in Tumbo was to spread terror among the civilian population.

d. Kissy and Fourah Bay in Eastern Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

163. para. 2122: The evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned civilian properties in Kissy and Fourah Bay, that they wilfully made persons or their property the object of such acts, and that such acts were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

e. State House and Pademba Road – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

164. para. 2132: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned civilian property in Freetown, including State House and Pademba Road, and that they wilfully made persons and their property the object of the burnings, the primary purpose of which was to spread terror amongst the civilian population.

f. Kingtom – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

165. para. 2139: Although there is some evidence to suggest that the purpose of the attack on Kingtom was to repel ECOMOG forces, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of the burning of homes, some of which had people locked inside, and the evidence that one of the stated objectives was to punish civilians for supporting ECOMOG, establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

g. Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

166. para. 2142: The paucity of the available evidence does not permit the Trial Chamber to draw the inference submitted by the Prosecution. Such evidence is not capable of proving beyond reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Upgun was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

167. para. 2143: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Upgun have been established.

h. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

168. para. 2151: The evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4783] burned civilian property in Wellington, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

i. Calaba Town – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

169. para. 2162: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned down civilian houses in Calaba Town, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

j. Hastings, Grafton and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

170. para. 2166: The paucity of the available evidence does not permit the Trial Chamber to draw the inference submitted by the Prosecution. Such evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Grafton, Hastings and Benguema was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

171. para. 2167: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema have been established.

k. Goderich and Kent – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

172. para. 2170: The paucity of the available evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Goderich and Kent was perpetrated by

AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

173. para. 2171: Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Goderich and Kent have been established.

l. Unlawful Killings – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

174. para. 2172: The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the unlawful killings perpetrated in Freetown and the Western Area that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.[4807]

m. Sexual Violence – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

175. para. 2177: Given the geographical and temporal proximity of these crimes to each other, and to the burnings, killings and amputations that occurred in Freetown and the Western Area during the advance towards Freetown, the attack and the retreat, the Trial Chamber finds that the rebels regularly used rape and sexual slavery to spread terror among the civilian population of Freetown and the Western Area.

176. para. 2178: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces wilfully made the girls and women of Freetown and the Western Area the object of acts of sexual violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

n. Physical Violence - Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

177. para. 2180: The amputations and carvings practiced by the AFRC and RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. The gruesome nature of these particular amputations and mutilations included the amputation of tongues, and a woman whose eyes were pulled out so that they protruded from their sockets.[4817] TF1-158 testified that he had treated patients who had been attacked and amputated or mutilated by the rebels, and that when they were being attacked, "their immediate families were positioned such that … they will be in full view of what they were doing, especially for those who suffered amputations and rape".[4818] The Trial Chamber is satisfied on this evidence that these amputations and mutilations were perpetrated with the primary intention of spreading terror.

178. para. 2181: The Trial Chamber has also found that Abu Bakarr Mansaray was beaten and physically harmed in a permanent manner by rebels outside State House on 8 January 1999.[4819] However, the evidence is not sufficient to establish the intent of the perpetrators, and the Trial Chamber is thus not able to conclude that they acted with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

o. Physical Violence - Kissy, including Kissy Mental Hospital – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

179. para. 2185: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the amputations that occurred in Kissy from 6 January to 22 January 1999 were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

p. Physical Violence - Fourah Bay – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

180. para. 2188: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the amputations that occurred in Kissy from 6 January to 22 January 1999 were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

q. Physical Violence - Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

181. para. 2189: The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that three captured civilians had their hands amputated by Five-Five in Upgun in January 1999. One civilian was given a "short-sleeve" amputation and the others "long-sleeve" amputations.[4838] For the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, and given that this amputation was performed by Five-Five as a "demonstration", the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

r. Physical Violence - Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

182. para. 2191: The rebels who amputated Koroma's arm told her to go tell Kabbah that the rebels wanted peace.[4840] The rebels also amputated the arm of a 3 to 4 year old child. Based on this evidence, given the widespread burning, rape and killing that occurred during both the rebels' advance into Freetown in early January and their retreat in late January, and for the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

s. Physical Violence - Conclusion – Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

183. para 2192: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces in Freetown and the Western Area wilfully made civilian persons or their property the object of acts of violence in the forms of burning of civilian property (in Freetown and the Western Area, Waterloo, Tumbo, Kissy, Fourah Bay, State House, Pademba Road, Kingtom, Wellington and Calaba Town), unlawful killings, sexual violence and physical violence (in Freetown, Kissy, Fourah Bay, Upgun and Wellington), committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population. The Trial Chamber has already found that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving, among others, members of the RUF and AFRC.[4841] Further, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that crimes discussed in the above findings were directly linked to that armed conflict and that the victims were civilians not directly taking part in hostilities. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism (Count 1) as a serious violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 1) have been proved reasonable doubt.

3. Appellate Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

189. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

190. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

191. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) –Taylor – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

192. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

193. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) – Taylor – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State – paras. 303 – 343 [6457].

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

a. Locations - Pleading

194. para. 40: Contrary to the Prosecution submission,[88] the Appeals Chamber's holding in Sesay et al. is consistent with its holding in Brima et al.[89] The non-specific and inclusive pleading of locations – through the use of words such as "throughout" a district or "in various locations, including"[90] – maybe adequate in light of the "sheer scale" of the alleged crimes.[91] Equally, such pleading of locations may be defective.[92] It is for the Trial Chamber to determine in each case whether non-specific and inclusive pleading of locations is sufficient to provide sufficient notice to the accused to enable him to prepare a defence, both generally and within the narrow "sheer scale"exception.[93] In making this determination, it must take into account the fair trial rights of the accused,[94] the Prosecution's obligation to plead clearly the material facts it intends to prove,[95] the particulars of the case[96] and the interests of justice.[97] The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that in this case the Trial Chamber properly considered whether locations were pleaded with the requisite specificity.[98]

195. para. 41: The Prosecution further fails to establish that the Trial Chamber improperly concluded that the locations at issue were defectively pleaded. Even where it is impracticable or impossible to specifically plead all material facts, the Prosecution must still put forward its best understanding of the case in the indictment, based on the information in its possession.[99] It must know its case before it proceeds to trial; it cannot omit material aspects of its allegations that are known to it; and it cannot develop its case as the evidence unfolds.[100] It is not part of the Prosecution's case in this appeal that it could not have provided further specificity in the Indictment, particularly as Taylor was re-arraigned on 3 July 2007, after the Trial Judgment in Brima et al. was published on 20 June 2007 and long after the Prosecution closed its case in Sesay et al. on 2 August 2006.[101] The Prosecution was, presumably, aware what evidence its witnesses would give, as a number of Prosecution witnesses in the instant case also testified in the Brima et al. trial and the Sesay et al. trial in respect of the same events.

196. para. 42: For the reasons given, the Appeals Chamber comes to the conclusion that the Trial Chamber did not err in law in finding that the non-specific and inclusive pleading of locations in the Indictment was defective.

197. para. 43: The Prosecution, however, contends in the alternative that, even if the Indictment was defective, the Trial Chamber erred in law by failing to consider whether the defect was cured by other forms of timely, clear and consistent notice to Taylor of the unspecified locations.[102]

198. para. 44: It needs to be emphasised that the indictment is the primary accusatory instrument.[103] It is, therefore, incumbent on the Prosecution to plead in the indictment with such specificity[104] as would satisfy the accused's right to be informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him and afford him adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence.[105] The Appeals Chamber opines that even though a Trial Chamber may, in the interest of justice and consistent with the rights of the accused, consider whether a defective pleading was cured by the provision of timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges,[106] the Prosecution may not rely on a defective pleading in the expectation that it will be subsequently rectified by the Trial Chamber. Besides, the Trial Chamber is not obliged to find a cure for a defective indictment.[107] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds this argument misdirected and rejects it.

(ii) Evaluation of Evidence

199. See below: Annex B encompasses the discussion of the evaluation of evidence relating to all the crimes [Annex B].

200. Regarding Taylor's Criminal Liability, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) – Taylor – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Taylor's Criminal Liability – paras. 497-595 [6630].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

201. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[6]

202. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[7]

203. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were used in combat training and active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands and feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies.[8]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing Civilian Population and Collective Punishments

204. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[9]

205. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> And
> Count 2: Collective Punishments a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.b of the Statute[10]

(iii) Count 14: Looting and Burning

206. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread unlawful taking and destruction by burning civilian property. This looting and burning included the following:[11]

> i. Bo District: Between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces looted and burned and unknown number of civilian houses in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko;[12]
> ii. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian homes in various locations in the District, including Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu and Fadugu;[13]

iii. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned;[14]

iv. Bombali District: Between about 1 March 1998 and 31 November 1998, AFRC/RUF forces burnt an unknown number of civilian buildings in locations in Bombali District, such as Karina and Mateboi;[15]

v. Freetown and the Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning throughout Freetown and the Western Area. The majority of houses that were destroyed were in the areas of Kissy, Wellington and Calaba town; other locations included the Fourah Bay, Upgun, State House and Pademba Road areas of the city;[16]

207. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 14: Pillage, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.f of the Statute.[17]

(i) Kono District – Crimes

a. Background to Kono District – Kono District – Crimes

208. para. 1136: Kono District is in the east of Sierra Leone and its major town is Koidu.[2176] Koidu Town was a strategic location for the RUF as it is situated on a main route to the RUF stronghold of Kailahun District.[2177] Control over Kono District was strategically and economically critical to all fighting factions during the armed conflict, as Kono District shares a border with Guinea and is the location of most of Sierra Leone's diamond mines.

209. para. 1137: The RUF leadership Seely emphasised the importance of Kono to the RUF rank and file. RUF members were ordered to retain control of Kono for strategic reasons, including its utility as a defensive stronghold and the potential for mineral exploitation.[2178] Johnny Paul Koroma also ordered AFRC troops to retain Kono as a Junta stronghold.[2179]

210. para. 1138: After ECOMOG forces attacked Freetown in February 1998, the AFRC/RUF forces retreated through Makeni towards Kono. AFRC/RUF fighters looted property from civilians as they went, a practice sanctioned by their Commanders as "Operation Pay Yourself."[2180] The Junta forces subsequently attacked Koidu Town and managed to largely secure it by early March 1998.[2181] However, their occupation was short-lived, as they were pushed out by ECOMOG forces in early April 1998.[2182] AFRC and RUF troops remained based around Koidu, effectively making Koidu an ECOMOG enclave in rebel held territory.

211. para. 1139: In August 1998, Superman led the RUF in the Fiti Fata Mission to recapture Koidu. The mission failed and the RUF sustained significant casualties.[2183] In December 1998, Sesay commanded and led a successful attack on Kono District and recaptured Koidu.[2184] Kono District remained largely under RUF control throughout the remainder of the Indictment period.[2185]

b. Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

i. Looting and Burning upon arrival in Koidu – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

212. para. 1140: Upon their arrival in Koidu, the AFRC/RUF forces occupied the entire township and started searching for money, ammunition and vehicles.[2186] They looted property and burned down houses.[2187] TF1-366, who participated in the operation in Kono, observed that whatever the rebels saw, they would take. TFI-366 looted property including food, a video player, and a vehicle that he used to transport a gun.[2188] The RUF officially approved looting, as they used the looted "government properties"[2189] to finance the war, including the purchase of ammunition.[2190]

213. para. 1141: The day after the capture of Koidu, Johnny Paul Koroma, Superman, TF1-366, Sesay, Kallon and other AFRC/RUF Commanders assembled a meeting at Kimberlite.[2191] Johnny Paul Koroma addressed the Commanders and ordered that all houses in Koidu Town should be burned to the ground so that no civilian would be able settle there as the civilians were not supporters of the Junta. Sesay reiterated this message, stating that the civilians had proved to be traitors and that they should not be tolerated.[2192]

214. para. 1142: Immediately after the meeting, AFRC/RUF members started carrying out this order, driving out civilians and burning down houses, stating that they did not want to see any civilians.[2193] The rebels burned the whole of Koidu and looted civilian property, including property from TF1-217's house.[2194] TF1-217 fled with his family and many other civilians to Wendedu, about two miles from Koidu.[2195]

215. para. 1143: TF1-141 was captured in Koidu Town during the February/March attack on Koidu and held captive at the Opera roundabout. TF1-141 was 12 years old at the time. While at Opera roundabout, he saw houses being burned in Koidu.[2196] When TF1-141 and other captured civilians were moved by the rebels to the Guinea Highway, he observed that all the houses at Pimbi Lane and other main streets in Koidu had been set on fire.[2197]

216. para. 1144: Commanders present in Koidu during the burning included Bazzy, Papa Hassan Bangura, Superman, Eldred Collins and Kallon. The Commanders did not prevent the burning or warn any of the civilians; rather, they participated in it.[2198] Civilians complained to Kallon and Superman, who were Commanders on the ground, about the burning, harassment and looting of their property by the Junta forces. However, the Commanders did not take any action in response to the complaints.[2199]

ii. Looting of Tankoro bank – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

217. para. 1145: A group of AFRC and RUF fighters in Koidu broke into a bank in Tankoro in March 1998 and carried away millions of leones in empty rice bags. Dennis Koker, an MP, saw over 18 rice bags containing money being taken away from the bank during the robbery.[2200] When Superman became aware of this, he ordered that those involved be brought to him. Superman took some of the stolen funds and gave the rest to TF1-371 to take to Bockarie.[2201]

iii. Killings during attack on Koidu – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

218. para. 1146: During the February/March attack on Koidu by AFRC/RUF forces, TF1-141 saw corpses of both Kamajors and civilians on the street near the Opera roundabout, where he was being held captive.[2202] An unknown number of civilians were killed by Junta forces at other locations in Koidu during this attack.[2203]

iv. Killing of civilians by Rocky and his men – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

219. para. 1147: In April 1998, during the AFRC/RUF retreat from Koidu, RUF Commander Major Rocky and a group of rebels arrived at the Sunna Mosque in Koidu and captured a large group of civilians. The rebels were dressed in ECOMOG uniforms in order to deceive the civilians as to their affiliation. The civilians, believing the rebels were ECOMOG soldiers, greeted them with thanks and praise.[2204] The rebels took the civilians to a valley at Hill Station in Koidu and separated them into three groups: men, women and children.[2205] Rocky said to the assembled group:

> Those of you who were clapping today, let me tell you now […] We are Junta rebels […] As you see in Kono now, we are now in control. We own this place now […] We are coming to send you to Tejan Kabbah for you to tell him that we own here.[2206]

220. para. 1148: TF1-015 was one of the captives and the rebels called him forward and ordered him to pray. He did so and then Rocky took a machine gun and opened fire into the crowd, killing around 30 to 40 civilians.[2207] The heads of the civilians killed by Rocky were severed by "small, small" rebels, whom TF1-015 estimated to be younger than 16.[2208]

221. para. 1149: Soldiers then brought forward a 15 year old boy and place his right hand on a stick. He pleaded with them to leave him alone, but they amputated his right hand at the wrist, and then also his left hand at the wrist. The rebels then placed his left leg on the stick and amputated it at the ankle. They then amputated the right leg at the ankle and threw the boy into a latrine pit. He was still alive when the rebels and TF1-015 departed, as his cries were audible.[2209]

222. para. 1150: TF1-015 was ordered to accompany the rebels to the Sunna Mosque. Upon arrival at the Mosque, he met 30 Commanders, including Kallon and Colonel Rambo.[2210] Colonel Rambo was not happy that TF1-015 was still alive and proposed that the other Commanders vote on whether or not he should be killed. The voting was evenly divided, with 15 votes on each side. Kallon was amongst those who voted for his death. As a result of the stalemate, the Commanders asked Sylvester Kieh, a young fighter, to cast the deciding vote. He voted in favour of TF1-015, saving his life.[2211]

223. para. 1151: When DIS-188 was in Pendembu in 1998, he received information about CO Rocky killing civilians. DIS-188 reported the matter to Bockarie who summoned Superman, Kallon and Rocky to Buedu.[2212]

v. Rapes in Koidu – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

224. para. 1152: TF1-217 was in Koidu during the attack by the AFRC/RUF forces in February/March 1998. The rebels forcibly entered civilian houses during the night on a regular basis and stabbed people, took property and raped women. On those mornings when news spread of such events from the previous evenings, TF1-217 would go to the local hospital. He stated that:

> [On arrival at the hospital] we met young women that were raped and young people – men that were damaged. And it happened many times.[2213]

225. para. 1153: AFRC/RUF fighters also regularly raped women who were being used to carry loads in the Guinea Highway area of Koidu in March 1998.[2214]

vi. Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages' – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

226. para. 1154: In February and March 1998, as the Junta troops travelled to Kono, many civilian women and girls from villages along the road were forcibly abducted by the fighters. Some women were forced into marriage, used as domestics to do cooking or housework, and others were raped.[2215]

227. para. 1155: Following the capture of Koidu in February/March 1998, TF1-071 saw women being forcibly taken from their husbands, parents and home villages, particularly from Sewafe to Koidu. Some were raped and others, especially the beautiful ones, became the wives of the Commanders. These women were under the control of the Commanders and were responsible for cooking for them and "serving them as their wives," meaning that the rebels used the women for sexual purposes.[2216]

vii. Burning during retreat from Kono – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

228. para. 1156: About one month after the rebels occupied Koidu, ECOMOG forces regrouped in order to recapture Koidu and made advances from Sewafe heading to Koidu. Superman reported the ECOMOG advance to Bockarie and informed him that his men did not want to fight. Upon hearing this, Bockarie ordered Superman to burn down the houses of all fighters who refused to fight.[2217]

229. para. 1157: When the ECOMOG forces entered Koidu sometime in mid-April 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF, including the Special Task Force, were torching houses in Koidu.[2218] TF1-041 reported the burning to Kallon, who was at Hill Station on the Guinea Highway. Kallon's only response was that ECOMOG were advancing and he did not take any action.[2219] The burning continued until the troops pulled out of Koidu, by which point it was completely destroyed.[2220] TF1-071 testified that Koidu looked like a 'ghost town'.[2221]

230. para. 1158: As the rebels retreated from Koidu, they destroyed the Sewafe Bridge so that ECOMOG forces would be unable to defend the town.[2222]

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Burning of civilian homes – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

231. para. 1159: After ECOMOG forces had driven the rebels from Freetown in February 1998, Bockarie ordered that houses in Tombodu should be set on fire. He stated that instead of supporting the Junta forces, the civilians were running away into the bush, and they would not need their houses there.[2223] Staff Alhaji read this order to TF1-012, who was being held in captivity by the RUF. TF1-012 saw 36 houses burned that evening.[2224] The burning in Tombodu was an operation organised jointly between the AFRC and the RUF. [2225]

232. para. 1160: After the announcement that ECOMOG forces had arrived in Kono in mid-April 1998, TF1-197 saw houses on fire in Tombodu.[2226] When TF1-071 arrived in Tombodu in July 1998, all of the houses had already been burned down by Col. Savage.[2227] Tombodu, like Koidu, looked like a "ghost town" with very few houses left standing.[2228]

ii. Beating and Looting of civilian petty traders – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

233. para. 1161: During the period from February to March 1998, civilians inhabiting the surrounding area of Tombodu set up small booths in the bush in order to sell items. AFRC/RUF rebels regularly harassed the civilians, beat them and threatened to kill them if they did not surrender diamonds, palm oil, rice and money. [2229]

234. para. 1162: On one occasion, the rebels blindfolded a number of the civilians, beat them mercilessly with sticks and gun butts, and held them down in nests of black ants. The witness explained:

> At that time, after beating us mercilessly, they said if we don't produce the money they are going to kill us […] I was so beaten that I was bleeding from my nose, through my eyes. Then they began firing between our legs.[2230]

235. para. 1163: In order to prevent the rebels from further mistreating the other civilians, TF1-197 told the rebels that he operated one of the businesses. The rebels then left the other civilians and beat TF1-197 with their sticks and stabbed him in the head, only stopping when he produced money and goods. TF1-197 retains a scar on his head from the stabbing.[2231]

236. para. 1164: Rebels forcibly seized from TF1-197 a bicycle, about Le 500.000 and other items that he had for sale, primarily cigarettes. TF1-197 was told that the leader of these rebels, named Musa, reported to Staff Alhaji. One of the rebels, however, referred to his boss as Commando. Some of the rebels, including Musa, were dressed in full military fatigues, while others wore mixed civilian and military clothing. [2232]

iii. Killings by Savage and Staff Alhaji – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

237. para. 1165: Between February and March 1998, about 200 civilians were executed in Tombodu on the orders of AFRC Commander Savage. The civilians were killed for cheering for ECOMOG troops. The bodies were then dumped in a pit, which was known as "Savage Pit". During this period, TF1-167 saw many dead bodies in the pit and others in front of the court building in Tombodu.[2233] In another incident, Savage and his men beheaded about 47 civilians and dumped their bodies into a diamond pit.[2234]

238. para. 1166: Some time in March 1998, TF1-197 and eight other captured civilians were kept in a cell over night in Tombodu on the orders of Staff Alhaji's boss. TF1-197 heard people crying outside "They're killing us."[2235] The next day, rebels took TF1-197 and the other civilians from the cell to a park where they encountered three corpses covered in blood. The rebels ordered the civilians to dispose of the corpses in a nearby pit filled with water. TF1-197 was later informed that this pit was called "Savage Pit".[2236]

239. para. 1167: During the same period, Savage killed a group of male and female civilians by locking them inside a house and setting it on fire.[2237]

240. para. 1168: When TF1-304 saw "Savage Pit", it contained a large number of human heads and many skeletons.[2238] When TF1-263 went with Superman's group from Kono District to Kenema District they stopped at Tombodu, where TF-263 saw "Savage Pit" and was told it was where Savage and his men killed people. He saw four corpses in "Savage Pit".[2239]

241. para. 1169: DIS-281 received reports about killings by Savage.[2240] In September 1998, Sesay heard about the killings by Savage in Tombodu.[2241] At a muster parade at the Tankoro Police Station, at which Kallon was present, the killings and amputations of civilians by Savage in Tombodu were discussed, but no punative action was taken.[2242]

iv. Killing of Chief Sogbeh – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

242. para. 1170: In February/March 1998, a Town Chief known as S. E. Sogbeh was shot and killed at the Tombodu Bridge mining site, on the orders of Officer Med. He was killed because he refused an order to mine on the basis that he was unable to work after being flogged by the rebels. Chief Sogbeh's body was thrown in the water. Officer Med ordered that anyone who refused to work should be shot. After killing Chief Sogbeh, the rebels said to the civilians at the mine: "Anybody who refused [sic] to do this work, this will be your end." [2243]

v. Rape of a woman by Staff Alhaji – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

243. para. 1171: In Tombodu, in mid-April 1998, TF1-197 watched Staff Alhaji point a gun at the head of a woman carrying a child and command her to put the child down and undress. The woman did so and Staff Alhaji "began pointing and touching the private of the woman. Then he told the woman to lie down […] and he, Alhaji, came and used the woman […] he had sex with the woman." [2244]

vi. Amputations by Staff Alhaji's men – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

244. para. 1172: In April 1998 at Number 11 Camp in Tombodu, Staff Alhaji and the rebels amputated the hands of three civilians: Mohamed S. Kamara, Muktar Jalloh and Mr. Bah.[2245]

vii. Floggings by Staff Alhaji and his men – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

245. para. 1173: After news of the ECOMOG force's arrival in Kono, TF1-197 and his younger brother were captured by rebels under the command of Staff Alhaji around Tombodu. They were tied to a mango tree and flogged repeatedly with a bundle of wires. Rebels would flog them, rest, and then flog them again, while Staff Alhaji watched from the veranda of a nearby house. At one point a Limba man was also brought to Staff Alhaji and beaten. [2246]

d. Wendedu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killing of female Nigerian civilian – Wendedu – Kono District – Crimes

246. para. 1174: In May 1998, Waiyoh, a Nigerian female civilian who had lived in Kono District for 20 years, was a resident in the camp for civilians at Wendedu. The camp was situated only two or three kilometres from an ECOMOG controlled area. The majority of ECOMOG soldiers in Kono were Nigerian, and Kallon was concerned that if Waiyoh escaped she would disclose information on RUF positions to ECOMOG. On one occasion when Kallon visited the Wendedu camp, he questioned CO Rocky about Waiyoh, stating that he considered her a threat. He raised the issue on a subsequent visit, asking Rocky if he was still keeping "enemies" of the RUF in the camp.

247. para. 1175: Following a visit by Kallon's bodyguards to the camp to enquire again about Waiyoh, Rocky ordered one of his bodyguards, Sergeant Kanneh, to execute her. At the time, Kallon was senior to Rocky, although he was not Rocky's Commander. Rocky reported to Superman, who was the RUF Battle Group Commander.[2247]

ii. Killing of Sata Sesay's family – Wendedu – Kono District – Crimes

248. para. 1176: Upon arriving in Wendedu in June 1998, an 11 year old girl named Sata Sesay informed TF1-071 that eight of her family members had been killed by KS Banya. TF1-071 asked KS Banya why he killed these civilians. KS Banya responded that the deceased civilians were ECOMOG spies and that Superman had instructed him "long ago" that any civilians found in the bush were to be treated as enemies. At that time KS Banya was the ground Commander at Wendedu. Although he was a former SLA soldier, he was taking orders from Superman.[2248]

iii. Beating of TF1-015 – Wendedu – Kono District – Crimes

249. para. 1777: TF1-015 was a civilian captured by rebels near Koidu in March 1998 and taken to the Wendedu camp by Major Rocky, an RUF Commander.[2249] On one occasion during the period from February to June 1998, Captain Banya shoved a board into TF1-015's mouth and knocked out some of his teeth. He also hammered on the board with the butt of his gun while the board was in TF1-015's mouth. As a result, TF1-015 still feels pain and is unable to chew food.2250

iv. Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages' – Wendedu – Kono District – Crimes

250. para. 1778: After ECOMOG and the Kamajors forces retook control of Koidu in April 1998, TF1-217 fled to Wendedu along with many other civilians. The AFRC/RUF were also in Wendedu and one day he saw five young girls, aged between about 13 and 16 years of age, sitting inside vehicles with AFRC/RUF rebels. One of the girls was weeping. One of the Junta boys then captured TF1-217's 16 year old sister and declared "This is Captain Bai Bureh's wife". Captain Bai Bureh said "Yes, this is a beautiful lady."[2251] Among the other Commanders present, TF1-217 also recognised Lieutenant Jalloh. TF1-217 begged for the release of his sister, but the rebels said "Your life, your sister, which of the two do you want?" TF1-217 left his sister and did not see her again until after disarmament.[2252]

251. para. 1179: While TF1-015, an abducted civilian, was in Wendedu camp,[2253] he heard women in the camp screaming at night "[l]eave me, leave me, leave me alone. You did not bring me for this. I'm not your wife."[2254] He spoke to some women who said that they were forced to have sex with the rebels at night.[2255] The Commanders claimed that captured women were their wives, stating that "there is no wedlock from the family. Just because of gun, you've taken her to be your wife, using her as your wife."[2256]

e. Sawao – Kono District – Crimes

i. Rapes, beatings and amputations – Sawao – Kono District – Crimes

252. para. 1180: Some weeks after the Intervention in February 1998, TF1-195 was captured in the bush between Kainako and Gandorhun by two rebels - one of whom was wearing a soldier's uniform and armed with a gun, while the other was dressed in civilian clothes and carrying a stick to which a red piece of cloth was attached.2257 The rebel with the gun pointed it at TF1-195 and said "You, come out here." He ordered her to undress, and she stripped to her underwear. The rebel with the gun ordered her to remove her underwear and to lie down and she did so.[2258]

253. para. 1181: The rebel with the gun lowered his trousers and told TF1-195 to open her legs so he could have sex with her. While the rebel was having sex with her, another man arrived, also with a stick. The two men watched the rebel have sex with TF1-195.[2259] They then took turns having sex with the witness, while the rebel with the gun remained standing over her. After each man had finished, the rebel with the gun ordered TF1-195 to follow them into the hills, until they reached a large group of captured civilians comprising men, women and children. There were rebels with the civilians, but the civilians outnumbered them.[2260]

254. para. 1182: The rebels ordered the civilians to carry loads on their head to Sawao.[2261] When the captured civilians were presented to rebel leader Lieutenant T upon their arrival in Sawao, Lieutenant T became furious and berated the rebels, stating "I have told you that you should not bring civilians before me. My instructions are if you capture them, kill them and leave them there''.[2262] Lieutenant T informed the rebels that ECOMOG forces had captured Kailahun and Kono. He then declared "This is the time we are going to show them we own this country.''[2263] He ordered the rebels to "Do away with these ones''.[2264]

255. para. 1183: Subsequent to this order from Lieutenant T, the rebels asked a civilian where the Kamajors were. The civilian responded that she knew nothing about Kamajors. This angered the rebels, who said "Oh, so you are getting interested in the Kamajors more than us and you are Kabbah's people. This is the time we are going to deal with you people to prove to you that we own this land now."[2265]

256. para. 1184: The rebels beat the civilians with sticks and gun butts, wounding one of the women on the head. They then instructed a small boy to bring a cutlass and cut off the right hand of each of the five men. The small boy did so, and the rebels ordered the women to clap and to laugh. One of the men whose hand was severed was the brother of TF1-195.[2266] The rebels then stretched TF1-195's hand to amputate it, but one of them intervened and stopped it. However, her right arm was severed by the same small boy.[2267]

257. para. 1185: The rebels divided the female civilians into two groups. The youngest girls, believed to be virgins, were in one group and TF1-195 and five older women were in the second group. The young girls were taken away in one direction, whilst the witness's group was subsequently taken towards Benguema Fiama by a group of rebels armed with guns and sticks. The women were told to undress and lie down. TF1-195 was raped by two different rebels and the second rebel inserted a stick into her vagina.[2268] The witness did not consent to these acts, and since this maltreatment has experienced physical pain for five years.[2269]

f. Yardu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings and amputations – Yardu – Kono District – Crimes

258. para. 1186: TF1-197 was captured in April 1998 with six other civilians and taken to a rebel base in Yardu. After arriving at the base, the six civilians were killed and TF1-197 was the sole survivor.[2270]

259. para. 1187: The rebels amputated TF1-197's arm with a cutlass.[2271] They told him to go to President Kabbah, because Kabbah had extra hands and could fix his amputation. The rebels gave him a letter to give to Kabbah.[2272]

g. PC Ground – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings – PC Ground – Kono District – Crimes

260. para. 1188: TF1-263 was captured by three rebels in a village near Koidu some time in April or May 1998.[2273] The rebels told him that the name of their "boss man" was Wallace. The rebels took TF1-263 to a camp with other civilians at Kissi Town.[2274]

261. para. 1189: On one occasion, less than a month after TF1-263 was captured, he was forced to accompany Wallace and his rebels from Kissi Town to PC Ground to collect rice. While approaching PC Ground, TF1-263's group encountered a rebel at a junction holding a pistol. There were five people with him, who were tied up and dressed only in underwear. TF1-263's group continued towards PC Ground and shortly thereafter, TF1-263 heard multiple gunshots from the direction of the junction. When TF1-263's group passed the junction on the return to Kissi Town, he saw five corpses lying by the side of the road. He recognised them as the people that had been with the rebel.[2275]

h. Kayima – Kono District – Crimes

i. Carving 'AFRC/RUF' on civilians – Kayima – Kono District – Crimes

262. para. 1190: After the Intervention, TF1-074 and his younger brother were captured and taken to Kayima by RUF and AFRC rebels. At Kayima, they were taken to a group of 16 other captured civilians. The rebels, led by one Bangalie, ordered the civilians to take off their clothes and one of them brought a surgical blade. The rebels carved RUF and/or AFRC on the bodies of all the captured civilians. [2276]

i. Penduma – Kono District – Crimes

i. Rapes, Killings and Amputations – Penduma – Kono District – Crimes

263. para. 1191: In April 1998 a large number of rebels wearing jeans and military fatigues and led by Staff Alhaji surrounded Penduma. TF1-217, who was present, knew Staff Alhaji personally from their childhood in Koidu. He also knew many of the other rebels, including Junior from Tombodu, who was not an SLA soldier but a 'vigilante'; Tamba Joe, who was an AFRC fighter; and Lieutenant Jalloh.[2277]

264. para. 1192: Rebels shot at civilians who tried to escape Penduma. TF1-217 and his family were captured, along with many other civilians. The leader of the group separated the civilians into three groups. The first group comprised children, pregnant women and nursing mothers, while the remaining women made up the second group. The men formed a third group and were ordered into three separate lines.[2278]

265. para. 1193: Staff Alhaji sat on a tree stump and signalled to each of his men to select a woman. The men came forward and took women. Some women were taken inside houses and some men raped their selected woman outside in view of the civilians.[2279] TF1-217's wife was raped by eight fighters, including Junior and Tamba Joe:

> Some of them, they bow her down, some of them laid her down and take the feet up. This is how they raped my wife.[2280]

266. para. 1194: Men holding guns ordered him to watch and to count the men raping his wife. His children, sitting in the other group, were also watching.[2281] As the men raped his wife, they told TF1-217:

> They only told me that I don't know how to do it, they knew how to do it, they were laughing, they shouted.[2282]

267. para. 1195: After raping his wife, Tamba Joe stabbed and killed her. Other women were also killed after being raped. TF1-217 saw the corpses of about six women, including the one of his wife.[2283]

268. para. 1196: Staff Alhaji ordered his men to tie up the men in the first line, comprising about 14 to 15 people, and lock them in a house. TF1-217 heard shouting and firing from the house, and the house was then set ablaze.[2284] Staff Alhaji then ordered a boy to empty a bag, which was full of knives. His men took the knives and moved the second line, of more than eight men, behind the Penduma Primary School. TF1-217 later passed behind the school and observed that the men had been stabbed:

> Some were beheaded […] I saw them. Some were just fighting to die; some had died already.[2285]

269. para. 1197: The rebels then turned to the third line, in which TF1-217 remained with seven other men. The rebels amputated the hands of the first two men in the line, arriving next at TF1-217. Staff Alhaji ordered them to tie him up and tie his feet to a tree. Staff Alhaji said "I'm coming to amputate both feet of yours […] You will never play football here any more."[2286]

270. para. 1198: TF1-217 pleaded but to no avail, until Staff Alhaji saw the witness's Seiko-Five wristwatch. He ordered his boys to untie the witness and he cut off the watch, cutting TF1-217's wrist in the process and leaving a permanent scar.[2287] He then ordered TF1-217 to put his hand on the floor. Staff Alhaji said "until the end of the world […] you'll never put a wrist watch on this particular hand."[2288] As Staff Alhaji raised the cutlass, TF1-217 withdrew his right hand from the ground. Staff Alhaji hit him with the cutlass on his head, so that it started bleeding. TF1-217 then put his left hand on the ground and Staff Alhaji amputated it. TF1-217 was amputated in the presence of his children:

> My children were sitting in front of me. Where they were put, they were sitting and they were looking -- seeing me, because they didn't hide them. They were in the open and they were seeing what was happening […][2289]

271. para. 1199: When TF1-217 attempted to retrieve his amputated hand, Staff Alhafi stabbed him in the back and said:

> It is this hand that we want […] go to Tejan Kabbah for him to give you a hand because he has brought ten containers load [sic] of arms. Now that you say you don't want our military rule, then go to your civilian rule."[2290]

272. para. 1200: After the amputation, he was permitted to leave with his children. After a short distance, he fell several times due to weakness from the great loss of blood, and the bones in his arm being exposed. However, his children continuously urged him to get up as the rebels were still behind them. They walked until they approached Kwakuma and encountered ECOMOG soldiers, who took him to a hospital.[2291]

j. Koidu Buma – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killing of 15 civilians – Koidu Buma – Kono District – Crimes

273. para. 1204: In May 1998, while at Koidu Buma and on the way to Koidu Geya, Operation Commander RUF Rambo and a group of rebels crossed paths with 15 civilians. Rambo proceeded to 'brutally' kill all 15 civilians, felling them with a cutlass.[2293]

k. Bumpeh – Kono District – Crimes

i. Rapes and sexual violence – Bumpeh – Kono District – Crimes

274. para. 1205: In March 1998, rebels captured a group of civilians in Bumpeh, stripped them naked and forced them into a line. The rebels commanded them to laugh and told them that their lives had ended. A rebel ordered a couple to have sexual intercourse in front of the other captured civilians, stating that he would kill them if they did not comply.[2294] The rebels then forced the man's daughter to wash her father's penis.

275. para. 1206: They rebels questioned TF1-218 about the whereabouts of her husband. When TF1-218 answered that he had been killed, the rebel responded that "since your husband is not here, I am going to have sexual intercourse with you."[2295] He pushed her to the ground, putting his gun on one side and his knife on the other, lifted her feet, opened her legs and started forcing her to have sex with him under threat of death. TF1-218 was then raped by another rebel.[2296] She described her condition after the two rapes: "I was trembling, so I got up. I stood there for some time trembling."[2297] TF1-218 managed to escape but not before the rebels had shot her hand. She said "I was naked. Everywhere blood was oozing out of me […] from my vagina, and also from my hand."[2298]

i. Rape and sexual violence – Bomboafuidu – Kono District – Crimes

276. para. 1207: TF1-192 and 20 other civilians were captured in Bomboafuidu at the beginning of the 1998 rainy season, by about 50 armed men mostly in combat uniform.[2299] The civilians were ordered to undress. Male and female captives were paired up and ordered to have sex with each other.[2300]

277. para. 1208: The sexual violence was combined with sexual mutilations, with the rebels slitting the private parts of several male and female civilians with a knife.[2301] The men also inserted a pistol into the vagina of one of the female captives where it remained overnight.[2302]

m. Tomandu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Carving 'RUF' on civilian men – Tomandu – Kono District – Crimes

278. para. 1209: TF1-016 fled from Koidu to Guinea at the time of the Intervention in February 1998. Upon her return to Sierra Leone approximately three months later, rebels captured her and twelve other civilians, including her 11-year old daughter, in Tomandu, Kono District. The rebels, some of whom were armed with guns, identified themselves as members of the RUF.[2303]

279. para. 1210: The RUF divided the civilians into groups of men and women. The men were told to remove their shirts and a rebel named Soh used a razor blade to carve 'RUF' into their backs and arms. The rebel told the civilians that he was marking them so that if any of them went to Guinea, they would be killed. The men were not given any medical treatment after being carved but were released.[2304]

n. Kissi Town – Kono District – Crimes

i. 'Forced Marriages' of TF1-016 and her daughter – Kissi Town – Kono District – Crimes

280. para. 1211: Following the carving incident described in the previous paragraph, TF1-016, her daughter and the other civilian women were forced to accompany the RUF on foot to Kissi Town, carrying rice on their heads. When they arrived, the rebels gave the rice to their leader, Alpha.[2305] The RUF then distributed the female captives among themselves, with each rebel saying "this is my own wife". Both TF1-016 and her daughter were given to rebels as wives in this fashion. TF1-016 was given to Kotor, a member of the RUF.[2306] TF1-016 explained that she did not consent to this arrangement:

> [It was] not my wish, because somebody is not your husband and you are just taken and given to the person. I was not really happy about it.[2307]

281. para. 1212: TF1-016 was required to live with Kotor in his house. Alpha also lived in the house and was always armed with a gun.[2308] Kotor was a palm tree tapper and made palm wine for the RUF and he did not carry a gun. In cross-examination, TF1-016 agreed with the proposition that this made him a civilian, but she clearly emphasised that Kotor worked for the RUF.[2309] TF1-016 performed domestic chores for Kotor: she cooked for him, washed his clothes, cleaned his house and pounded rice for him: "I did everything… I used to do all this work up to an extent all my hands were all blistered."[2310] Kotor also made TF1-016 have sex with him on a daily basis, whenever he wished, despite her attempts to tell him that she did not consent. She also made it clear that she complained about it. TF1-016 explained that she was too afraid to attempt an escape, because armed rebels were throughout Kissi Town and "if we attempt to go somewhere, they will do something bad with us."[2311] There were many other captured civilians, men and women, in Kissi Town.[2312] On three occasions while TF1-016 was in Kissi Town, the RUF went out and returned with large numbers of captured civilians.[2313]

282. para. 1213: After spending a month in Kissi Town, her "husband" Kotor took TF1-016 to Njagbema, where she continued working for him and he continued to force her to have intercourse with him.[2314] TF1-016's daughter was also brought to Njagbema with her rebel "husband". Her daughter told her that on one occasion, Alpha forced her to have sex with him, even though she was crying and other men had to hold her down. TF1-016 told her daughter to be patient because "this is the war" and there was nothing that the women could do about it.[2315] TF1-016 was held captive with Kotor for a period of one year and three months. She did not make any attempt to talk to other civilians outside of her house, because it was not permitted and the rebels punished such behaviour by death.[2316] On one occasion, a number of captives attempted to escape from Kissi Town and TF1-016 was summoned and accused of inciting them to do so. The rebels threatened to kill her for this.[2317]

283. para. 1214: Eventually, TF1-016, her daughter and her other children were released in Kono when the head of the rebels announced that a ceasefire had been concluded and all civilians were be permitted to leave.[2318]

o. Forced labour of civilians (Feb to Apr 1998) – Kono District – Crimes

284. para. 1215: After the Intervention, Junta forces captured and abducted civilians while in Kono. Men were forced to carry heavy loads.[2319] After Johnny Paul Koroma declared Kono a "no go area" for civilians, Papa Hassan Bangura, other fighters and the RUF abducted civilians from Tombodu, Yomadu and other villages surrounding Koidu. Children aged eight, ten and 12 were also captured. Strong men were used to carry the food for the troops.[2320]

285. para. 1216: During March 1998 at Guinea Highway in Koidu, AFRC/RUF fighters attended a muster parade every morning at which Kallon would give instructions and assign tasks for foodfinding missions, appointing a Commander for each mission. During these missions, civilians were captured and used to carry the food that was found, and some of the fighters used to rape women. Civilians carrying food were sometimes executed rather then released if they could not manage their loads. This was also done in order to prevent them from reporting the abductions and location of the rebels.[2321] TF1-263 was abducted in a village near Koidu during the mango season of 1998 and forced to carry looted property, including rice, clothes and zinc to Kissi Town.[2322]

286. para. 1217: Between February and March 1998, the rebels captured civilians in the area surrounding Tombodu and forced them to carry loads. While at Tombodu, rebels ordered civilians to search for food and to carry loads, such as batteries for radios, to Kailahun District.[2323]

p. Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

i. Background – Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District - Crimes

287. para. 1218: Civilian camps were established in Kono District by the RUF after the Intervention in 1998. Civilians were rounded up and forced to reside in camps. These civilians were used for forced labour, such as food-finding missions and farming; to transport goods such as food, arms, ammunition and medicines for the rebels, including to and from Kailahun District and at the request of the RUF Headquarters. They were not free to move alone outside the camps, and civilians caught attempting to escape would be punished with beatings or given extra work. The civilians were not paid but they received food for their work.[2324] In addition to the specific camps in respect of which findings are made below, civilian camps existed at locations including PC Ground and Banya Ground near Kissi Town.[2325]

288. para. 1219: The RUF shifted camps from location to location as the front lines changed, in order to remain sufficiently removed from areas of combat operations.[2326] The Chamber notes that witnesses who worked in positions of responsibility in the camps testified that civilians were detained in camps for their own protection from Kamajors and ECOMOG forces.[2327] However, when asked to clarify what was meant by protection, one witness stated:

> I mean, we used to keep these civilians so they cannot go and contact to enemies, so that they cannot reveal our secret or information. Then the other one is in their own interests, when they have been captured by enemies likely they may be executed by enemies.[2328]

289. para. 1220: Between April 1998 and December 1998, while the RUF was fighting ECOMOG for control of Koidu, the use of civilians for forced labour was frequent, particularly along the RUF supply route between Kono and Kailahun, and there was no freedom of movement outside of the camps. Food and medicine shortages were common.[2329] TF1-078 explained that in the camps, civilians were 'used at random by any armed man' for any type of work the rebel wished.[2330]

290. para. 1221: Between February 1998 and December 1998, the bush paths between Kono and Kailahun were the main supply route for the RUF and all essential military and humanitarian materials were transported to Kono District from RUF Headquarters in Buedu.[2331] Captured civilians in Kono District were frequently used to transport food, medicines and ammunition from Koidu and other parts of Kono District to Kailahun Town.[2332] The RUF in Kailahun received goods including arms and ammunition from Liberia and forced civilians to carry it to Kono.[2333] On occasion, civilians who got tired and could not carry loads were executed.[2334]

291. para. 1222: The G5s and their assistants acted as "social welfare officers" who liaised with the civilians in the camps and recorded and reported their concerns.[2335] The G5 officers assembled the civilians on a daily basis and addressed them. The civilians were informed of the rules of the camp, the first of which was that escape was prohibited. Other rules including prohibitions on rape and theft.[2336]

292. para. 1223: Civilian camps remained in existence until disarmament in 2001, although conditions improved following the recapture of Koidu Town by the RUF in 1998 and the signing of the Lomé Peace Accord in July 1999.[2337] Nonetheless, civilian movement remained restricted and civilians were still forced to conduct food-finding missions and perform other types of forced labour.[2338]

ii. Superman Ground – Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

293. para. 1224: After the AFRC/RUF forces had been pushed out of Koidu by ECOMOG forces, about 700 to 800 rebels, SLAs, women and captured civilians were living at Superman Ground. The civilians were mainly those captured during the retreat of the AFRC/RUF forces. They were used to help the Commanders and the fighters in cooking.[2339]

iii. Kaidu – Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

294. para. 1225: Following the AFRC/RUF attack in February/March 1998, TF1-078 fled Koidu Town with his wife and children. Approximately three weeks later, while he was living in the bush with his family, they encountered three armed rebels. The rebels told the civilians to produce all their belongings or they would be executed. The civilians surrendered everything in their possession, including clothes, radios, watches and all of their food.[2340]

295. para. 1226: The rebels asked TF1-078 to hand over his money and diamonds. When TF1-078 informed them that he had none, the rebels ordered TF1-078 and the other four adults to lie on their stomachs. The rebels then beat the civilians with the back of a cutlass for about half an hour, leaving them in serious pain. Before leaving, the rebels told the civilians to flee to Guinea because they had orders to execute civilians in the area.[2341]

296. para. 1227: That night, two other groups of armed rebels arrived and stated that no civilian was permitted to remain in the bush due to the risk of being killed by Kamajors. The rebels told the civilians to report to Rocky in the nearby town of Kaidu, and that any civilian who remained in the bush would be deemed an "enemy."[2342]

297. para. 1228: TF1-078 and those of his family who were not seriously injured from the beating reported to Kaidu, where he found many other civilians. The G5 officer wrote down their names. TF1-078 then requested a travel pass to return to the bush to accompany the injured members of his family to the camp. He was told that Kallon was the only person with the authority to issue a pass. Rocky's security guards took TF1-078 to Kallon on Guinea Highway where Kallon ordered his secretary to write the pass. TF1-078 then brought the rest of his family to Kaidu.[2343]

298. para. 1229: TF1-078 estimated that there were 200 to 300 civilians in Kaidu who had been evacuated from the surrounding jungles where they had been hiding.[2344] The civilians were kept in Kaidu so that they would not be mistaken for Kamajors in the bush and executed. There were over 100 armed guards who prevented civilians from leaving Kaidu. The town was surrounded in all directions by checkpoints manned by armed rebels. The RUF usually refused to grant movement passes on account of the war.[2345]

299. para. 1230: The civilians in Kaidu were forced to harvest palm fruits and process palm oil for AFRC/RUF fighters. They were also forced to catch fish under armed escort. TF1-078 testified that whenever the rebels required work done, they instructed the G5 to arrange for civilians to do it.[2346]

300. para. 1231: On one occasion Kallon visited Kaidu and advised Captain Rocky that the rebels should not be "hostile" with the civilians. The day after he left, Captain Rocky assembled the civilians and explained to them the rules and regulations of the camp. These rules included that civilians were not permitted to escape or communicate with the enemies; that they should obey orders issued by the fighters; and that there should be no raping or stealing. The punishment for breaking the rules was execution.[2347]

iv. Wendedu – Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

301. para. 1232: After approximately one month at Kaidu, Rocky told the civilians that he had received an order from Kallon at headquarters in Koidu Town to move the camp to Wendedu, approximately one mile from Kaidu. Rocky stated that the move was for the protection of the civilians as Kaidu was too close to the front line. He was also worried that civilians may escape to the enemy.[2348]

302. para. 1233: The conditions at Wendedu were the same as at Kaidu: civilians were not permitted freedom of movement, the camp was surrounded by checkpoints and they were required to forage for food for the rebels. TF1-078 stated that the civilians, of whom there were 300 to 400, lived amicably with the rebels.[2349] However, one day Rocky ordered the execution of a female Nigerian civilian for no apparent reason, which surprised and terrified the civilians. Although the woman had lived in Kono District for 20 years, Rocky told the civilians that if she escaped she would disclose their position to ECOMOG and the camp would be bombarded by ECOMOG jets.[2350]

303. para. 1234: TF1-015 testified that in 1998 he was captured by rebels commanded by Rocky who took him to a camp at Wendedu, where he was kept in captivity with other civilians and guarded by armed fighters. TF1-015 could not urinate without being escorted.[2351] There were about 500 rebels at Wendedu, including Rocky, CO Pepe, Rebel Father, Captain KS Banya, and around 150 civilians, including women and children.

304. para. 1235: The civilians at Wendedu were forced to loot food for the rebels.[2352] Civilians could not leave as the roads were guarded by armed men day and night, and they could not refuse to go on food-finding missions as they risked being killed by rebels.[2353] The food civilians found was called "government property" and was given to the rebels.[2354] On one such occasion, the civilians returned to Wendedu after being for one week on a food-finding mission with sore and blistered feet from the long walk.[2355]

v. Kunduma – Treatment of civilians in RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

305. para. 1236: From Wendedu, the civilians were moved to Mogbedu, Masundu and then Madina, remaining a short time in each location before moving to Kunduma. Approximately 1000 civilians resided in Kunduma camp between October 1998 and December 1998, with civilians brought there daily by the fighters. Kunduma was a labour camp which the rebels codenamed "Target Q".[2356]

306. para. 1237: Conditions were the same as in other camps: civilians were guarded by armed rebels and sent on food-finding missions with fighters. Whenever the 2nd Battalion Headquarters in Meiyor (Superman Ground) needed labour, the G5 at the camp would collect civilians and escort them there for work. Civilians were often required to convey produce such as coffee and cocoa to RUF Headquarters in Buedu, Kailahun District.[2357] The civilians returned carrying salt, Maggi and cigarettes for the 2nd Battalion Headquarters.[2358]

307. para. 1238: In December 1998, up to 150 civilians were forced to travel from Kono to Kailahun to carry ammunition back to Superman Ground to be used by the RUF in the ensuing attack on Koidu Town commanded by Sesay.[2359] When Sesay arrived in Kono in December 1998, he was introduced to those responsible for the labour camp at Kunduma. Sesay had arranged the transportation of items for the civilians at Kunduma from Kailahun.[2360]

308. para. 1239: Following the recapture of Koidu Town in December 1998, the RUF advised all civilians to return to Koidu "for protection."[2361] Checkpoints were established around the town and civilians were not permitted to leave without permission from the G5. Civilians were forced to work for the RUF on demand.[2362]

q. Forced mining in Kono (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

i. Overview of the mining process – Forced mining in Kono (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

309. para. 1240: The Chamber heard a substantial amount of evidence relating to diamond mining in Kono District and throughout Sierra Leone. As early as August 1997, the AFRC/RUF Junta forced civilians to conduct alluvial diamond mining throughout Kono District. Later, the AFRC/RUF Junta also relied on Kono diamonds to finance their administration and war efforts.2363 Throughout the armed conflict, the RUF also used diamonds to buy ammunition, arms, medicine and food.[2364]

310. para. 1241: Superman gave a written order to Commanders on 30 March 1998 to hand over all civilians for mining.[2365] After ECOMOG forces had pushed the AFRC/RUF out of Koidu in April 1998 and the AFRC departed Kono District, the RUF conducted mining operations in parts of Kono District including Papany Ground[2366] and Superman Ground, where a mining "zoo bush" or "zo bush" was established.[2367]

311. para. 1242: The practice continued throughout 1998, but it intensified significantly after the recapture of Kono by the RUF in December 1998.[2368] In December 1998, MS Kennedy was appointed Overall Mining Commander.[2369] MS Kennedy held this position until 2000 when he was replaced by Peleto, who was given the title of Minister for Mines with the rank of Colonel.[2370] Forced mining for the RUF continued until disarmament in 2002.[2371] Peleto retained his responsibilities until that time.[2372] Between December 1998 and 2002, the RUF also had main mining offices in Tongo in Kenema District and in Kamakwie in Bombali District.[2373]

312. para. 1243: Within each RUF mine, there were groups of nine persons called gangs, each with a leader. Every diamond found had to be handed over by the worker to the gang leader who then gave it to the Operation Commander.[2374] Each mining site had an Operation Commander and a Deputy Commander, who provided security to the mines, collected and weighed diamonds before reporting and passing them to the Overall Mining Commander and his team of diamond evaluators and clerks.[2375]

313. para. 1244: The Overall Mining Commander was in charge of deploying civilians to the mining areas and provided all logistics to be used for the mining, including shovels, diggers, boots and petrol.[2376] Civilians who mined without permission from the RUF were arrested by the Overall Mining Commander, who was also in charge of detailed bookkeeping and registering diamonds according to the mining area of providence.[2377] These Diamond Production Records reveal that between 30 October 1998 and 31 July 1999 about 8000 pieces of diamonds were extracted and claimed as RUF property from both Kono District and Tongo Field in Kailahun District; similar records show that 2134 pieces of diamonds were extracted from mines in Kono District between 2 February 1999 and 11 January 2000.[2378]

314. para. 1245: The Overall Mining Commander, and later the Minister for Mines who inherited all the duties and responsibilities of the former post, collected the diamonds, weighed and packaged them in sealed parcels and delivered them to Sesay, in his capacity as Battlefield Commander, either at his house or at the RUF mining office in Koakoyima, Kono District.[2379] Sesay, in turn, reported to Bockarie, the Chief of Defence Staff, in Buedu, Kailahun District.[2380] The diamonds would be used by the RUF for bartering and buying ammunitions, arms, medicine and food.[2381]

ii. "Government" mining sites in Kono District – Forced mining in Kono (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

315. para. 1246: As previously noted, RUF mining sites were relatively few until Koidu was recaptured by the AFRC/RUF in December 1998. From this point forth, mining operations expanded to numerous areas throughout Kono District. Mining took place at Tombodu, Sukudu and Peyima in Kamara Chiefdom; Number 11, Yaradu Gbense, Boroma-38, Konokortah and Gbukuma in Gbense Chiefdom; Kwakoyima, Sokogbeh, Kongo Creek, Benz Garage area and the Opera Cinema area in Tankoro Chiefdom; Simbakoro, Yengema Guiyor and Bumpe in Nimikoro Chiefdom; Sewafe, Gold Town, Ndorgboi and Sandiya in Nimiyama Chiefdom; and Yomadu, Yorkodu, Baffin River, and Bagbema in Sandor Chiefdom.[2382] Other locations included Mortema, Bandafaye, Gbeko, Gieya, Kaisambo, Kimberlite, 27 and Yellow Mosque.[2383] Approximately 200 civilians worked in each major pit.[2384]

316. para. 1247: When mining operations recommenced under MS Kennedy in December 1998, he brought 60 or 70 civilians from the bush to wash the gravel that ECOMOG forces had left behind at the Koindu sites.[2385] The RUF then started digging its own pits, using up to 300 civilians at those sites.[2386] Civilians who were not willing volunteers were captured and brought forcefully to mining sites, where they were handed over to Kennedy and forced to work at gunpoint.[2387] TF1-367 testified that "civilians were captured just like you would capture a chicken." [2388] At Kaisambo, for instance, 200 to 300 civilians were captured, forced to work and released at the end of each day.[2389]

317. para. 1248: Mining operations were conducted from Monday to Thursday.[2390] Civilians would go to the surrounding villages on the weekends to find food and would then return to work. Civilians who refused to mine were beaten or sent to Yengema to undergo military training.[2391] The conditions for the hundreds of civilians forced to mine were poor; they were neither paid nor given adequate housing, food or medical treatment.[2392] As they were constantly supervised by armed men there was no possibility of escape.[2393] At some sites, such as Koakoyima, the civilians had to live in camps by the mines, where they erected their own shacks and stayed with their families.[2394] At Papany Ground civilians were forced to assist in mining as a condition for staying in the camps and receiving security.[2395] Some civilians were forced to live at the camps, and therefore mine for the RUF, as their houses had been burned down.[2396]

318. para. 1249: From 1999 to 2000, civilians were captured and sent to Kono in order to mine diamonds for the RUF.[2397] On one occasion during this period, Sesay sent a message to Kallon in Makeni requiring civilians to be gathered and sent to Kono for mining.[2398] Approximately 400 civilians were gathered by Kallon from Makeni and its surrounding villages; they were jailed and then taken daily to Kono in trucks sent by Sesay.[2399]

319. para. 1250: From 1998 to 2000, all mining was done by hand using basic instruments such as shovels, pickaxes sieves and pans. All diamonds found were handed over to the RUF Commanders in what was known as the "one-pile system", meaning that the RUF confiscated the entirety of the diamonds extracted.[2400] After 2000, the system changed to mostly mechanical mining and to a "two-pile system" in which the gravel was divided into two shares, one for the RUF government and one for the miner.[2401] After the two pile system was in place, personal mining re-emerged, and civilians were allowed to keep the diamonds for resale. However, on Sesay's order, checkpoints were put up by the RUF around the Koidu mines.[2402] At these checkpoints, the RUF would take diamonds found on civilians or force the sale of the diamonds to the RUF at prices fixed by the RUF agents.[2403]

iii. Mining in Tombodu and Bendutu – Forced mining in Kono (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

320. para. 1251: On 16 December 1998, TF1-199 was amongst a group of 50 civilians abducted from Koidu by the RUF and forced to carry looted goods to Tombodu. While in Tombodu, Major Tactical told them that Sesay wanted all the abductees to be sent to Tombodu Bridge to mine.[2404] The civilians were taken to the bridge and they began mining by digging with shovels. The miners worked in shifts, guarded by about twenty small boys with guns. TF1-199 was working from sunrise until evening.[2405] The miners were dressed only in their underpants as their clothes were taken to discourage escape attempts. They were often bitten by mosquitoes and ants but they were not given any medication. As a result, some of them died and their bodies were thrown in the water. They were not paid for their labour and their food ration was one plantain a day.[2406]

321. para. 1252: The mine where TF1-199 worked was very large. At times new civilians were brought in ropes or chains from Sandu Chiefdom.[2407] It was impossible to escape, as the miners did not have clothes, there was nowhere to run to, and there were checkpoints.[2408] If a diamond was found, it had to be given to Officer Med.[2409] Officer Med, the senior Mining Commander, reported to Sesay, who would at times visit the mining site.[2410]

322. para. 1253: If diamonds were not found, the rebels held the civilians in Tombodu responsible, accusing them of being witches and wizards and punishing them.[2411] The older civilians bore the brunt of this punishment. On the orders of Officer Med, older civilians were undressed, put in cells and then taken to the riverside where they were flogged and stabbed in the head.[2412] The civilians were then returned to the cells for the night and released for work the next day.

323. para. 1254: When Sesay came to collect diamonds, the older civilians complained to him about their treatment. Sesay told them that they had to accept the punishment and be patient with the rebels.[2413] Sesay came frequently to Bendutu to collect diamonds.[2414]

324. para. 1255: In Tombodu in April 1999, mining activity consisted primarily of civilians digging gravel manually from the ground, although sometimes Caterpillar machines were used. The gravel was washed with a machine within sight of the rebels who guarded the civilians with guns. The washing machine would shake the gravel and wash it with water, so that the heavier stones were removed and the diamonds emerged. When a diamond was found, the rebels took it without letting the civilians touch it. The diamonds were given to Sesay.[2415]

325. para. 1256: The mining work would begin in the morning and continue throughout the day and at night. The first shift was from morning to midday, and another would start after this. The rebels gave the miners garri to eat.[2416] At the end of the working day, the miners were permitted to rest in sheds near the pit. They were not allowed to leave the sheds. There were initially about 150 miners brought from the other villages. However, when the mining activities became extensive there were more than 500 miners who were forced to work.[2417]

326. para. 1257: Throughout 1999, there were over 200 workers in the mines at Tombodu where Officer Med was the mining Commander. In April 1999, Officer Med assembled civilians in Bendutu, Tombodu. He informed them that he had been sent by Sesay to start mining in Tombodu and ordered them to show him where he could find diamonds. The civilians informed him that they didn't know where diamonds were located. He then responded 'well since you said you don't know where the diamonds are, we ourselves will look for the diamonds and we will ask you to start working'.[2418] When the civilians refused to work, Officer Med gave instructions to his bodyguards to force them to work. Shovels were distributed to the civilians and they started mining.[2419] As the mining was difficult, some of the younger civilians began to hide.

327. para. 1258: Officer Med ordered the rebels to go into other villages to collect more young men. These civilians were tied with ropes and taken to Bendutu, where they were undressed and placed in a house. The civilians were then forced to mine for the rebels. The rebels guarded the mining pit with guns in order to prevent any of the civilians from escaping. The civilians were not paid for their work.[2420] Officer Med was in charge of distributing tools, equipment and food to the civilians working in Tombodu.[2421]

iv. Private mining for RUF Commanders – Forced mining in Kono (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

328. para. 1259: Mining in Kono was not limited to "government" mining organised by the RUF. Most of the bodyguards worked as mining bosses for their Commanders and civilians were forced to mine for them and were poorly treated. The Mining Commanders would process requests from Brigade Commanders to provide civilian manpower for mining requested by Sesay, Kallon, Superman, Alpha Fofana and other senior Commanders. Throughout 1999 and 2000, Sesay sent his own men, such as Bukero, Colonel Lion, Small Kamara, Officer Med, Captain Bayo, and Colonel Gibbo, to mine in Kono.[2422] Civilians mined for them at Kaisambo, Tombodu and Number 11.[2423] Kallon had a house in Kono where his bodyguards lived and supervised forced mining. Diamonds found by the civilians were not handed over to the RUF officials that supervised "government" mining, but rather were confiscated by RUF fighters working directly for the relevant Commander.[2424]

r. Forced military training at Yengema (Dec 1998 to Jan 2000) – Kono District – Crimes

329. para. 1260: While most civilians were used to find food and perform domestic chores for the RUF, the stronger ones were combat trained to increase the military manpower of the RUF.[2425]

330. para. 1261: After Kono had been recaptured in December 1998, Bockarie ordered Sesay to move the RUF training base from Bunumbu to Yengema. Sesay met with TF1-362 and instructed the witness to set up the base there.[2426] TF1-362 reported directly to Sesay between 1998 and 2000.[2427]

331. para. 1262: The Yengema base operated from 1998 until disarmament. Civilians who had been captured in Kono were trained at the base.[2428] On arrival the rebels would register the names of the recruits and place them in platoons.[2429] The recruits underwent training in guerrilla tactics such as how to mounting ambushes. They were trained in infantry behaviour such as marching, parading and instructed on the importance of discipline. They also received armoury training on the use of the various types of rifles and artillery weapons available to them. They were further required to undergo physical and endurance training, through daily exercises such as jogging.[2430]

332. para. 1263: Only those who were sick were excused from training. These civilians were taken to the medical unit, but if it became apparent that they were feigning illness, they were disciplined. Those who attempted to escape were sent to the advisor and then to the command.[2431]

333. para. 1264: TF1-362 recalled that while at Yengema, six recruits (five men and one SBU) attempted to escape. TF1-362 reported this to Sesay, who responded that the six people should be killed. Shortly thereafter, Sesay's bodyguards came to the base and asked where the bodies of those killed were located. When TF1-362 explained that the attempted escapees had not yet been killed, the bodyguards executed three of them and two others were killed by rebel instructors at the base. The SBU's life was spared by the advisor.[2432]

334. para. 1265: After the recruits had "graduated" from the training, TF1-362 would send them to the various front line areas, such as at Yengema and Guinea Highway in Kono District according to instructions received from the second-in-command at the camp.[2433] The "wives" group would be sent back to their "husbands" who were RUF fighters and Commanders.[2434]

(ii) Kenema District – Crimes

a. Background to Kenema District – Kenema District – Crimes

335. para. 1042: Kenema District is located in the south-eastern part of Sierra Leone. Its capital is Kenema, which is often referred to as Kenema Town. Tongo Field, the second biggest town, is renowned for its diamond mines. As a result of its location and resources, Kenema was strategically important to the AFRC/RUF Junta as they relied on the proceeds from the sale of diamonds for their operations.[2015]

336. para. 1043: Within one week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of the town.[2016] Large numbers of RUF fighters from different areas began arriving in Kenema District, many of whom went to Kenema Town and other towns to operate mining sites in Tongo Field.[2017] Although both the RUF and AFRC operated alluvial mining sites in Kenema District during the Junta period, mining within the Tongo Field area was carried out predominantly by the RUF.[2018]

337. para. 1044: The AFRC/RUF abandoned Kenema Town and Tongo Field after the Intervention in February 1998, as ECOMOG and the Kamajors were approaching their positions.[2019] At this time, the AFRC/RUF declared "Operation Pay Yourself," which sanctioned and encouraged the looting of civilian property. AFRC/RUF rebels looted goods including rice and food for about three days prior to their departure from Kenema Town, capturing civilians and forcing them to carry the goods.[2020] Other items looted from Kenema Town during "Operation Pay Yourself" included trucks, medicines, a Honda motorcycle, bicycles and money.[2021]

b. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Introduction

338. para. 1045: The Chamber has heard evidence of numerous incidents of beatings and killings in Kenema Town during the Junta period. Whilst we have not always been able to determine the specific dates of each incident, we are satisfied that the acts described in the paragraphs that follow occurred within the Indictment period.

ii. The "Flag Trick" and the beating of TF-122 – Kenema Town – Kenema District - Crimes

339. para. 1046: It was common practice in Kenema Town for those in the vicinity of the Junta Secretariat building in Hangha Road to stand still during the daily raising and lowering of the Sierra Leonean flag.202 While the AFRC/RUF controlled Kenema, the fighters raised and lowered the flag at the Secretariat building at irregular times. Individuals who did not stand still were harassed by the AFRC/RUF troops, who would appropriate from these individuals whatever money and property they had in their possession. TF1-122, a police officer, witnessed this practice regularly en route from his home to his office.[2023]

340. para. 1047: On one occasion, TF1-122 saw RUF and AFRC rebels stop a woman who had not realised that the flag was being raised. They started to remove her property, including money.[2024] TF1-122 intervened and requested the troops to desist. The RUF and AFRC rebels accused him of being a 'saboteur,' arrested him and beat him thoroughly with a belt. He was locked up for two hours in a cell at the Secretariat building until his superiors from the police station requested his release.[2025]

iii. TF1-129 arrested by Issa Sesay – Kenema Town – Kenema District - Crimes

341. para. 1048: On 27 October 1997, following a successful AFRC/RUF attack on the ECOMOG base in Kenema Town, Issa Sesay along with his bodyguard Captain Lion forcibly entered TF1-129's office, where he was in discussion with another person.[2026] Sesay ordered "Molest them!" and TF1-129 and his associate were thrown to the floor. Sesay ordered TF1-129 to stand, and as TF1-129 did so, Sesay put an AK-47 gun between TF1-129's legs and fired.[2027] Sesay told TF1-129 that he had come to kill him.[2028] A struggle ensued and Sesay aimed the gun at TF1-129's forehead and chest, which TF1-129 pushed away. Sesay was drunk and fired twice in the air.[2029] Sesay aimed his weapon at TF1-129 again, but the ammunition in the gun was spent and it did not discharge and he accused TF1-129 of being a Kamajor.[2030]

342. para. 1049: A rebel named Francis nicknamed Rambo heard the gunshots and came to ask what had happened.[2031] Sesay accused Francis of being a collaborator and ordered "On him!" About six rebels jumped on Francis and beat him until he was unconscious.[2032]

343. para. 1050: Sesay ordered that TF1-129, Francis, TF1-129's associate and another woman be placed in the back of a van which was parked outside the building.[2033] While TF1-129 was in the boot, Captain Lion smashed a bottle against his head, which left a scar when healed. Captain Lion then took about Le 300.000 from TF1-129, as well as his wrist watch.[2034]

344. para. 1051: The van was driven to the Secretariat building, where all of those that had been placed in the boot were released, with the exception of TF1-129.[2035] Someone announced that they had the "chief Kamajor" in custody and numerous rebels came to kick, spit at and urinate on TF1-129 while he lay in the boot.[2036] Sesay armed a small boy of approximately seven years of age with an AK-47, and instructed him to watch over TF1-129 and to kill him if he moved. The boy told TF1-129, "We'll put out your engine tonight." The boy was so small that "he could hardly even handle the rifle," and had to lean the weapon against his leg, while pointing it at TF1-129's head.[2037]

345. para. 1052: TF1-129 was subsequently brought upstairs at the Secretariat building to see Bockarie and Sesay, and was beaten by rebels who were standing alongside the staircase as he ascended.[2038] The rebels were celebrating of their victory over ECOMOG.[2039] Bockarie asked TF1-129 who had beaten him, and when TF1-129 replied that it was Sesay and his bodyguards, Sesay spoke to Bockarie and repudiated this accusation.[2040] Bockarie and Sesay then spoke in private, after which one of them ordered that TF1-129 be kept in the "dungeon" and he was led to a small storeroom in the Secretariat building. The storeroom was crowded with arrested civilians. Since` he was considered to be a "big man," the rebels took TF1-129 to another storeroom upstairs. He was beaten on his way to the first storeroom and again on his way to the second storeroom, where he was detained overnight.[2041]

346. para. 1053: The next morning, a representative of the ICRC as well as several prominent community members and relatives of TF1-129 came to the Secretariat building to enquire about his arrest.[2042] It was discovered that TF1-129 was arrested on suspicion that he had assisted Kamajors to plan an attack on Kenema Town. The AFRC/RUF conducted an investigation for three days but did not find any evidence to substantiate the allegation, so TF1-129 was eventually released. Bockarie then told him to leave Kenema.[2043]

iv. 'Flogging' of Police Commissioner Konneh and Chief Police Officer Issa – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

347. para. 1054: One morning during the Junta period, Sesay came into the police station with traffic police officer Abdul Karim Koroma (AKK). AKK had quarrelled with a colleague who was related to the Police Commissioner. AKK announced that he was a brother of Sesay. They went into the offices of the Police Commissioner Konneh and the Chief Police Officer (CPO), Francis Issa.[2044]

348. para. 1055: Sesay ordered the Commissioner and the CPO to get into his vehicle and they were "shoved in [the car] actually in a rough manner" by Sesay's men.[2045] Approximately six hours later, the two men returned in Sesay's vehicle. TF1-122 observed that both men were "very sad in their faces."[2046] When he enquired, he was told by other police officers that the Commissioner and the CPO had been "humiliated" by Sesay and his men. TF1-122 explained that the Commissioner and the CPO had been taken against their will and held by Sesay for an entire day, and this constituted humiliation.[2047]

349. para. 1056: TF1-125 also observed that when the Commissioner and the CPO returned, "they had kind of an unhappy mood."[2048] Upon inquiring, he was told that the two men had been "flogged."[2049]

v. Three corpses at Mambu Street – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

350. para. 1057: During the Junta period, the AFRC and RUF, including Bockarie and Akim, attacked a house on Mambu Street on the premise that Kamajors were inside. The house was looted and burned.[2050] The police discovered behind the house the corpses of three people killed during the attack. The bodies were in civilian clothing.[2051]

vi. Killing of a suspected Kamajor at the NIC building – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

351. para. 1058: On one occasion between May 1997 and February 1998, TF1-122 watched from his office as a group of RUF rebels marched a man through Khobe Street in Kenema. The man was dressed in the working clothes of a farmer, covered in mud and carrying a cutlass in his hand. The rebels were singing that they had caught a Kamajor and were taking him to Bockarie.[2052]

352. para. 1059: TF1-122, a police officer, pursued the rebels but before he reached them he heard two gunshots, apparently from a pistol. When he arrived on the scene, near the NIC building, TF1-122 saw the farmer dying, with gunshot wounds to his head and stomach. Bockarie was present, "brandishing his pistol in the air, boasting that he must do away with all the Kamajors."[2053] Bockarie ordered his men to dispose of the body in a pit behind the NIC building.[2054]

vii. Killing of Mr. Dowi – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

353. para. 1060: One morning during the Junta period, Mrs. Dowi went to the police station and reported that the AFRC and RUF had attacked her family at their home in Kenema Town. Mrs. Dowi stated that when her husband had intervened in order to stop the AFRC and RUF rebels from looting their freezer, the rebels shot him in the head and the stomach and he died. TF1-122 visited Mrs. Dowi's house and saw the body of Mr. Dowi with two gunshot wounds.[2055]

viii. Killing of Bonnie Wailer and two others – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

354. para. 1061: In the early months of the Junta regime, TF1-122 encountered one Bonnie Wailer in the cell at the police station, wearing military trousers and a plain T-shirt.[2056] Wailer was bloody and had wounds all over his body.[2057] Wailer informed TF1-122 that he and others had broken into a house and he had been caught, beaten and kept in the police station overnight.[2058] The thieves had been wearing military uniforms and the AFRC did not want people to think that the AFRC fighters were committing burglary.[2059]

355. para. 1062: Bockarie arrived at the police station and directed Wailer to take him to identify the others who had been involved in the burglary. Bockarie and Wailer returned two hours later with two other men,[2060] Sydney Cole and Mr. Bangura.[2061] These two men had been shot in the legs when they were arrested.[2062]

356. para. 1063: On Bockarie's orders, AFRC and RUF fighters shot and killed Wailer and the two other men outside the police station.[2063] Eddie Kanneh and other AFRC Commanders were also present.[2064] The RUF returned later in a vehicle and took the bodies of the dead men away.[2065]

ix. Killing of two alleged thieves – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

357. para. 1064: On one occasion during the Junta period, the Kenema Town police investigated the theft of drugs from the ICRC or Médecins Sans Frontières. Bockarie informed them that he was going to assist in the investigation.[2066] Later that day, TF1-122 heard that Bockarie had captured and executed a man named Santos, who was the operator of the Kenema cinema, and another man unknown to TF1-122.[2067] That evening, TF1-122 found the bodies of the two men lying in front of his house. The bodies remained there for three days before Bockarie's boys removed them.[2068]

x. Killing of an alleged Kamajor boss – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

358. para. 1065: During the Junta period, the RUF rebels and the AFRC launched "Operation No Living Thing" as a pre-emptive measure due to rumours of an impending Kamajor attack. That afternoon, the AFRC and the RUF commenced widespread looting and burning of houses of suspected Kamajors.[2069] The next morning, TF1-122 returned to Kenema Town and saw a large man dressed in "plain cloth" lying motionless in the street in front of his house.[2070] The AFRC and RUF rebels were dancing around the body and singing that they had captured and killed the Kamajor boss. One of the fighters removed his bayonet, stabbed the corpse and removed the intestines, pulling them across the street to function as a makeshift checkpoint. The body remained there for three days.[2071]

xi. Arrest of suspected Kamajors in Kenema Town – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

359. para. 1066: In late January 1998, Bockarie arrested B.S. Massaquoi, the Chairman of Kenema Town Council; Andrew Quee, a civil servant; Brima Kpaka, a prominent businessman; and four others. The detainees were suspected of being Kamajor collaborators.[2072]

360. para. 1067: Shortly thereafter, TF1-129 was re-arrested on Bockarie's orders and again taken to the Secretariat building. Bockarie incarcerated TF1-129, beat him with his gun and punched him in the face, leaving a scar above his right eye. Bockarie threatened to kill TF1-129 for refusing to leave Kenema after his first arrest.[2073] Bockarie forced him to undress and stand in a corner overnight.[2074]

361. para. 1068: Paramount Chief Moinama Karmoh was arrested the same day.[2075] Bockarie beat Karmoh over the head with a plastic walking stick until it broke.[2076]

362. para. 1069: TF1-129 watched six rebels strip B.S. Massaquoi to his underwear and beat him mercilessly for approximately an hour with a whip fashioned from pieces of tied rubber. During the beating B.S. Massaquoi was shouting for help. Brima Kpaka was then beaten in the same fashion. Andrew Quee and Moinama Karboh were also present. TF1-129 observed more people held downstairs and was told that there were 28 detainees in total.[2077]

363. para. 1070: The next morning, TF1-122 observed a large crowd of people gathered outside the Secretariat building. Bockarie, holding his pistol in the air, informed the crowd that B.S. Massaquoi and the other detainees were supporting the Kamajors and that he was going to teach them a good lesson.[2078] Upon entering the building, TF1-122 saw B.S. Massaquoi, Brima Kpaka, Andrew Quee and four other people. The men were wounded and in tears. Their hands were tied at their back and the rope was cutting into their flesh. Brima Kpaka had a severe cut near his eyes, B.S. Massaquoi's face was swollen and the others had various injuries on their bodies.[2079]

364. para. 1071: The detainees were detained for 12 days during which time they were constantly threatened.[2080] Johnny Paul Koroma requested that they be transferred to Freetown, but Bockarie refused.[2081] When TF1-129 was eventually released from detention, he fled from Kenema.[2082]

xii. Beating and killing of B.S Massaquoi and others – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

365. para. 1072: On 28 January 1998, B.S. Massaquoi and the other detainees excluding TF1-129, who had been released, were brought to the police station for further investigation.[2083] B.S. Massaquoi and Brima Kpaka had wounds to their elbows from being constantly tied with rope. The wounds had become septic as the men had not received medical treatment.[2084]

366. para. 1073: Bockarie alleged that the men were collaborating with Kamajors.[2085] The police found no evidence of these allegations and recommended that all men be released. The police obtained the permission of the Secretary of State to release only B.S. Massaquoi and Brima Kpaka on 30 January 1998 on account of their wounds.[2086]

367. para. 1074: Subsequently, Bockarie returned to Kenema and asked to see B.S. Massaquoi and the other detainees. He was furious when the police informed him that the men had been released. Bockarie pulled his gun on the Police Commissioner and threatened to kill him and destroy the police station if the men were not re-arrested.[2087] On 2 February 1998, B.S. Massaquoi was re-arrested. Brima Kpaka was not re-arrested, as he was in the hospital.[2088]

368. para. 1075: On 6 February 1998, AFRC military police surrounded the Kenema Town Police Station. AFRC Lieutenant A.B. Turay announced that he had been assigned by the Secretary of State East to collect B.S. Massaquoi and the other detainees.[2089] They beat B.S. Massaquoi and five other detainees in front of the police and took them away.[2090]

369. para. 1076: The detainees were taken before Bockarie. When B.S. Massaquoi denied the allegations that he supported the Kamajors, Bockarie grew angry and began to beat him about the head with his gun. B.S Massaquoi was flogged for over an hour before being sent back to prison.[2091] As the "investigation" continued, Bockarie repeatedly flogged B.S. Massaquoi with a whip fashioned from pieces of tied rubber and with a pistol.[2092] Bockarie threatened to kill B.S. Massaquoi if he did not admit the allegations. When B.S. Massaquoi continued to deny the allegations, Bockarie beat him until he lost consciousness.[2093]

370. para. 1077: In the morning of 8 February 1998, Kamajors came into Kenema Town to rescue B.S. Massaquoi and the other detainees. The Kamajors were not able to find them at the police station, but were able to take Brima Kpaka from the hospital before being driven out by the rebels.[2094]

371. para. 1078: On 8 February 2008, the corpses of B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and four of the other detainees were discovered. It was rumoured that they had been killed by Bockarie and his men.[2095] TF1-125 was told that B.S. Massaquoi was beheaded and his severed head had been tied to a pole and displayed in Kenema.[2096]

372. para. 1079: Kallon heard that Bockarie and Eddie Kanneh had killed B.S. Massaquoi and certain other civilians for supporting Kamajors.[2097]

c. Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Killing at Lamin Street – Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

373. para. 1080: On one occasion at Lamin Street in Tongo Field, a number of civilians attempted to challenge AFRC/RUF fighters who had been capturing civilian women at night and raping them. The fighters shot a civilian man and killed him. This incident was reported to the Secretariat.[2098]

ii. Killing of Limba man for his palm wine – Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

374. para. 1081: During the Junta period in 1997, an AFRC/RUF fighter killed a Limba man for refusing to give him palm wine. Captain Yamao Kati ordered that as the fighter had used his hand to fire a gun at a civilian, the fighter should also be shot in the hand.[2099]

iii. Killings at Cyborg Pit - Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

375. para. 1082: On several occasions in early August 1997 at Cyborg Pit, diamonds that had been found by civilians were handed over to Bockarie without payment or compensation. On one such occasion, the civilians began to complain and resolved to mine for themselves. A large group of these civilians entered a pit to fetch gravel. Bockarie ordered them to climb out of the pit. While they were slowly doing so, Bockarie ordered Colonel Manawa to fire at the people so that they would move faster. Colonel Manawa fired his RPG in the air. The SBUs, however, opened fire into the pit, killing more than 20 civilians in the presence of Bockarie.[2100]

376. para. 1083: After the killings described in paragraph 1082, a group of civilians decided to strike and they returned to Tongo Field. On the third day of the strike, eleven civilians were captured, beaten and detained at the AFRC/RUF headquarters. The civilians were accused of having "instigated the boys not to mine" for the AFRC/RUF and remained imprisoned for three days.[2101]

377. para. 1084: Two days after their release, a group of civilians were taken at gunpoint to mine for the rebels at Cyborg Pit. After several hours of mining, work stopped when a diamond was found and given to Bockarie. Bockarie then left and the other Commanders, led by a Junior

Commander named Mustapha, instructed the civilians to mine for them. An SBU arrived and a dispute arose when Mustapha informed the SBU that he had authorised the civilians to mine for him. The SBU threatened to report to Kallon, who was Mustapha's boss, that people were mining without authorisation. A group of Commanders, including Kallon, then arrived at the edge of the pit and ordered the miners to climb out. The SBUs, standing with the Commanders, fired into the pit and killed 25 civilians, including TF1-035's nephew. Other civilians in the vicinity ran away from the pit. When they returned, they were ordered to remove the corpses from the pit.[2102]

378. para. 1085: Sometime in August 1997, while senior Commanders were engaged in festivities, some Junior Commanders took a group of civilians to mine at Cyborg Pit. This resulted in a quarrel with the SBUs guarding the pit, one of whom reported the matter to Kallon. Kallon then went to Cyborg Pit and RUF rebels shot at the civilians who were mining, killing 15 of them.[2103]

379. para. 1086: The next morning, Colonel Gibbo visited civilians, including TF1-035, at their residence and informed them that 15 civilians had been shot at Cyborg Pit.[2104] The corpses of the civilians killed in this incident, and the 20 civilians killed in early August 1997, were buried in a pit behind the old NDMC plant.[2105]

380. para. 1087: On another occasion at Cyborg Pit, AFRC fighters took civilians to mine outside of the scheduled mining hours. While they were mining at the pit, three civilians and two fighters were shot and killed by the fighters assigned to guard the pit.[2106]

iv. Forced mining at Tongo Field and Cyborg Pit - Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

381. para. 1088: During the Junta period, alluvial mining in Kono was the major source of income of the AFRC/RUF regime.[2107] The Junta was experiencing difficulties generating revenue from taxes as the private sector was non-operational, there was widespread civil disobedience and the international embargo in place against Sierra Leone reduced trade.[2108] The Junta's Supreme Council therefore decided to appoint senior members to supervise alluvial diamond mining in Kono and Kenema and to use the revenue to pay for the salaries of members of the Council, the government, and logistics for military and the fighters, including the procurement of arms and ammunition.[2109] During the AFRC/RUF Junta, SAJ Musa was the Minister of Mines and his representative at the mines was Gullit.[2110]

382. para. 1089: After the AFRC/RUF assumed control of Tongo Field in August 1997, mining was conducted pursuant to a centralised system. This system was announced by Bockarie at a meeting at the NDMC football field attended by approximately 1000 civilians.[2111] Bockarie informed the civilians that the AFRC/RUF had taken over Tongo and the rest of the country. He stated that everyone in Tongo was under his command and the civilians would now mine for the "government," meaning the AFRC/RUF. Bockarie promised that the civilians would be permitted two hours of private mining for every five hours that they mined for the "government." He then ordered everyone present to go to the mining site at Cyborg Pit.[2112] The civilians, comprising men, women and children, were marched to the pit where they started mining.[2113]

383. para. 1090: The AFRC/RUF Secretariat in Tongo Field, headed by Gullit and Sergeant Junior and composed mainly of RUF rebels, created a Committee to oversee the mining and reported directly to Bockarie.[2114] The Committee was made up of predominantly elderly civilians who had been captured in Tongo, and its mandate was to assist the fighters in obtaining civilian labour, to identify potential mining sites and to help assess the diamonds found.[2115] The Committee also gathered the proceeds from the diamonds and delivered them over to Bockarie.[2116] Other Commanders in Tongo included Peleto and Major Goyeh, OG, BCH, Boyce – the last two being bodyguards to Sesay.[2117]

384. para. 1091: Many civilians digged for diamonds in Tongo Field, and the diamonds found would be taken to the Secretariat to be valued.[2118] Diamonds were then either given to RUF Commanders including Bockarie, Sesay and Mike Lamin, or taken by AFRC Commanders to senior AFRC official Eddie Kanneh in Kenema.[2119] Eddie Kanneh was known to arrange for diamonds to be sold abroad to finance the acquisition of arms and ammunition.[2120]

385. para. 1092: In addition to the "government" mining, some AFRC/RUF Commanders operated mining sites for their personal profit during the Junta period. Diamonds from these mines went directly to the Commanders: Sesay, Bockarie, Kallon, Colonel Banya and Eddie Kanneh all had bodyguards mining diamonds for them in Tongo Field.[2121] The Commanders were also given civilian manpower to mine for them.[2122]

386. para. 1093: The AFRC/RUF "government" system was markedly different to the civilian mining that had occurred prior to the Junta period. Previously, mining sites were operated by civilians as private enterprises.[2123] The civilian bosses who owned the mining site were responsible for negotiating remuneration with the workers and providing them with food and medical assistance. Workers generally handed diamonds to their bosses in return for a share of the profits from the sale of the diamonds. After the AFRC/RUF Junta began in 1997, this form of civilian mining came to an end.[2124] In the "government" mining that was instituted by the AFRC/RUF, there was no negotiation between the civilians and the government. Civilians were captured and forced to mine without any payment.[2125]

387. para. 1094: During the period from August to December 1997, up to 500 civilians in Tongo Field worked in the mining sites under the supervision of a mixture of armed AFRC and RUF fighters.[2126] Civilians were forcefully captured from the surrounding villages and taken to the mining sites. Those who were caught hiding in the bush were tied with ropes and taken to the sites.[2127] Civilians who attempted to escape were detained, stripped and left naked so that they would not be able to hide.[2128] The civilians were treated badly and almost all of them were haggard and shabbily dressed.[2129] The majority were not given food.[2130] Moreover, the civilians were not allowed to move freely in the mining sites and had to obtain passes for any movement.[2131]

388. para. 1095: Rules were established to control the times when civilians were to mine at the various pits.[2132] The Junta forces did not respect the two hours allotted to civilian personal mining that Bockarie had promised.[2133] Anyone who violated the rules was severely punished, and some civilians were killed.[2134] Miners were not allowed to work at night, and if they attempted to do so, they were punished.[2135]

(iii) Bo District – Crimes

a. Background to Bo District – Bo District – Crimes

389. para. 991: Bo District is located in the south of Sierra Leone. Its capital is Bo, which is often called Bo Town in order to distinguish the two. Other towns in Bo District include Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun.[1926]

390. para. 992: At the time of the AFRC coup on 25 May 1997, SLA soldiers were deployed in Bo Town, allowing the AFRC to immediately form a strong base there.[1927] RUF fighters had been based in Tikonko since 1994 and following the coup they joined the AFRC in Bo Town.[1928] After the coup the Kamajors retreated from Bo District to CDF strongholds in Pujehun and Bonthe District.[1929] Although hostilities between CDF and AFRC/RUF forces in Bo District continued, the clashes were of a low intensity due to the limited Kamajor fighting strength there.[1930]

b. Tikonko – Bo Ditsrict – Crimes

i. First attack on Tikonko – Tikonko – Bo District - Crimes

391. para. 993: At the end of May 1997, rumours abounded that the AFRC/RUF Junta suspected that Kamajors were hiding in Tikonko and that the AFRC/RUF were planning to attack the town and its civilians.[1931]

392. para. 994: The first attack on Tikonko by the AFRC/RUF forces occurred in the first few days of June 1997. The inhabitants of Tikonko fled and went into hiding in the surrounding bush. From there, they could see that buildings were being burned in the town.[1932] TF1-004, who was among those hiding in the bush, returned to the town following the withdrawal of the AFRC/RUF. He found that one of his houses had been completely destroyed by fire, some of his belongings were missing and those that remained were scattered in the street.[1933] During this first attack, the AFRC/RUF forces did not discover any Kamajors hiding in Tikonko.[1934]

ii. Second attack on Tikonko – Tikonko – Bo District – Crimes

393. para. 995: TF1-004 was at the Tikonko junction on 15 June 1997 when the second attack on Tikonko began.[1935] There were many civilians at the junction, as well as two persons whom TF1-004 identified from their attire as Kamajors, as one was clothed in a "ronko"[1936] and carried a horn, and the other carried a gun. A man named Amadu Koroma came running from the direction of Bo and said that fighters were on their way to Tikonko.[1937] Another unidentified man arrived with his wife and children from Bumpe and said that fighters were killing people and civilians were fleeing the town.[1938]

394. para. 996: At that point, a group of heavily armed fighters wearing military uniforms arrived at the junction from the direction of Bo.[1939] The fighters passed through the junction and headed towards Tikonko.[1940] A second group of fighters arrived immediately after the first, followed by a vehicle mounted with an anti-aircraft gun. These fighters were discharging their weapons as they arrived at the junction.[1941] They wore red bandanas around their foreheads and some were clothed in short trousers.[1942]

395. para. 997: Fighters killed one of the Kamajors with a shot to the forehead fired from the antiaircraft gun.[1943] The second Kamajor was killed by the fighters when shot in the hand and in the chest.[1944] The man from Bumpe and his wife and children were also shot and, in the words of TF1-004, they "fell like leaves."[1945] The fighters also killed some of the other people at the junction.[1946]

396. para. 998: TF1-004 hid in the bush beside the roadside of the junction.[1947] He determined from the fighters' shouts and the smoke coming from the direction of Tikonko that the fighters had left the junction and entered that town.[1948] TF1-004 had been hiding in the bush for roughly two hours when he heard a military vehicle replete with fighters who were singing "those people would know us today" pass the junction in the direction of Bo.[1949]

397. para. 999: After the departure of the fighters, TF1-004 emerged from the bush and returned to the junction.[1950] He saw items of property scattered around and two full bags of grain or rice on the road.[1951] He also saw more than ten corpses with gunshot wounds, mostly civilians, lying on the ground at the junction and on the route to Bo Town. There were also victims with gunshot wounds still alive but who appeared to be near death.[1952] Many other corpses lay along the road from the junction into Tikonko.[1953]

398. para. 1000: When TF1-004 entered Tikonko, he heard shouting coming from a house adjacent to his own. Upon entering the house, he saw a woman lying on the ground shouting for water. She had been eviscerated, and had been placed next to a line of ten corpses each of which evidenced gunshot wounds to their backs or heads. In another room in the same house, TF1- 004 observed two more corpses, one of which was that of a man who had been shot in the back of the head and the other was that of a child who had been shot in the chest. In a third room, there were two more bodies that had also been shot in the head and chest.[1954]

399. para. 1001: When he left the house, TF1-004 saw the corpses of two men in the street. One man had been shot in his side. The second man, who was known to TF1-004, had been shot in his chest and his head had been severed and his legs broken.[1955]

400. para. 1002: TF1-004 proceeded to his two other houses, one of which had already suffered damage from fire during the first attack and was again on fire and burning with such intensity that it was impossible to enter into the property. His third house, which had been under construction and from which the doors had been removed and the zinc roofing material perforated, was completely destroyed. At the rear of this property, he discovered his upturned suitcase emptied of his clothing which had been set alight.[1956]

401. para. 1003: While searching for his family in Tikonko, TF1-004 noticed many corpses. In one house, he found a female corpse with an open stomach wound lying on top of another dead body.[1957] He also noticed a number of corpses strewn over the ground at the DEC Primary School.[1958]

402. para. 1004: For approximately five days following the attack, most of the residents of Tikonko remained in hiding in the bush, eventually emerging to bury the dead that were laying in the streets and in the houses of the town.[1959] TF1-004 estimated that together, he and the other townspeople buried over 200 bodies after the attack:

> Those on which we placed earth […] there could be over 200, because we didn't bury them on the same day […] that was some kind of a job for us, just so that we would bury those people. Had we not buried those people at the junction, no vehicle would have been able to ply that road, because they were strewn all over the place. So we were burying them every day.[1960]

403. para. 1005: Nearly all of the houses in Tikonko, of which TF1-004 estimated there were up to 500, were burned during the attack. The fires in some of the houses burned for two or three days after the attack.[1961]

c. Sembehun – Bo District – Crimes

404. para. 1006: In June 1997, a group of solders travelling by van entered Sembehun from the direction of Bo.[1962] Their leader introduced himself as Bockarie and identified himself as a member of the RUF. The men were wearing combat trousers and civilian shirts and were armed with small firearms and machine guns.[1963]

405. para. 1007: Bockarie and his subordinates first entered the house of Ibrahim Kamara, the section chief.[1964] Bockarie's men forced Kamara to lay prone on the ground. Bockarie then stole about Le 800.000 from Kamara, and addressed him as a "fucking civilian."[1965] The group then proceeded to the house of Tommy Bockarie. Tommy Bockarie owned a cassette player which the men told him to hand over. When he refused to do so, they shot him dead.[1966]

406. para. 1008: Another person, named Sheriff, was found by TF1-008 laying in a pool of blood in the bush outside of the town. Sheriff told TF1-008 that he had been shot in the stomach and the foot by Bockarie's men. TF1-008 attempted to push Sheriff's intestines back into his stomach and bind him with cloth. As Sheriff was unable to stand, TF1-008 carried him to the side of the road. Later, he helped Sheriff to get to the town so that he could receive treatment for his wounds.[1967]

407. para. 1009: During the attack on Sembehun, the troops discharged their weapons indiscriminately and set houses on fire, of which approximately thirty were burned to the ground.[1968]

d. Gerihun – Bo District – Crimes

408. para. 1010: On the afternoon of 26 June 1997, fighters coming from the direction of Bo attacked the Kamajor base at Nyandehun. The fighters were well-armed and Hassan Deko Salu, the Kamajor Battalion Commander, recognised them as AFRC fighters. Among them he recognised Boysie Palmer, Akim, Lieutenant Kuyateh and Corporal McCarthy.[1969] After overpowering the Kamajors, the fighters proceeded to Gerihun.[1970]

409. para. 1011: TF1-054 was in Gerihun at about 4:00pm on 26 June 1997 when he heard gunshots. He observed other people in the town running and searching for places to hide. TF1-054 went to Paramount Chief Demby's residence and informed him that Gerihun was under attack. The Paramount Chief, who was in his bedroom, advised him to hide. Another civilian who was present, Pa Sumaila, hid in the toilet, while TF1-054 concealed himself in the attic next to a window overlooking the entrance to the Paramount Chief's house.[1971]

410. para. 1012: From this vantage point, TF1-054 watched as a group of people including men in military uniforms entered the house. Among the fighters were Boysie Palmer, AF Kamara and ABK. TF1-054 moved to a window at the rear of the house, from where he saw the men enter the Paramount Chief's bedroom. He heard a man, whose voice he recognised as AF Kamara, ordering that the Paramount Chief be shot.[1972] TF1-054 heard a shot, and then Boysie Palmer stated "he has not given up the ghost yet […] stab him."[1973] TF1-054 heard Paramount Chief Demby cry out.[1974]

411. para. 1013: TF1-054 ran from the house and was pursued by fighters into the bush, where he hid until the fighters abandoned their search and retreated back to the house.[1975]

412. para. 1014: The fighters killed numerous civilians in Gerihun and looted the town.1976 The morning after the attack, TF1-054 returned to the house of Paramount Chief Demby. On the way, he observed five corpses in civilian clothing near the market.[1977] He found the Paramount Chief dead in his bed and the corpse of Pa Sumaila in the toilet.[1978] Several other witnesses, including Kallon, confirmed that Paramount Chief Demby was killed by AFRC fighters.[1979]

(iv) Kailahun District – Crimes

a. Background to Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

413. para. 1380: Kailahun District is located in the eastern province of Sierra Leone bordering Liberia to the east, Guinea to the north, Kono District to the north and Kenema District to the west. Its capital and largest city is Kailahun Town. Other towns in the District relevant to our findings include Buedu, Pendembu, Daru, Giema, Talia, Giehun, Baiwala, Manowa and Koindu.

414. para. 1381: Due to its location and resources, Kailahun District was of central importance to the RUF throughout the conflict. Kailahun was the first District attacked by the RUF in March 1991 and became, along with Pujehun District, a corridor of logistics and resources between Liberia and Sierra Leone.[2541] Kailahun was also a major farming area, considered the "bread basket" of Sierra Leone, making it an important source of food for the RUF troops during the conflict.[2542]

415. para. 1382: As of 1991 and throughout the conflict, the RUF operated military bases in Kailahun District. The Chamber heard evidence that prior to the Abidjan Peace Accord of 30 November 1996, RUF fighters staged attacks in Kailahun District in which civilians were killed, raped and abducted and houses burned.[2543] Captured civilians endured forced labour and forced military training, which included ideology training and training in the use of weapons and in mounting ambushes.[2544] After the signing of the Abidjan Peace Accord, the RUF briefly lost control over Kailahun Town to Government forces. The RUF thereafter regained control and maintained it until final disarmament in January 2002.[2545]

416. para. 1383: From 1997 to 2000 the RUF was headquartered in Kailahun District, first at Giema and then at Buedu.[2546] An airfield and an armoury were constructed in Buedu, making it a key site for the reception and redistribution of materials and logistics, in particular arms and ammunition for the war.[2547] Important communications and decisions were made from Buedu, including appointments, promotions and assignments for missions.[2548]

417. para. 1384: The RUF attempted to establish good relationships with the civilian population in order to maintain Kailahun as a defensive stronghold, ensure a steady flow of food supply to its troops and preserve control over and the loyalty of the civilian population. The RUF opened schools in Kailahun and provided books and chalk. Parents agreed to gather food as their contribution for the free education.[2549] The RUF "government" in Kailahun provided free medical services to civilians and their children at a hospital in Giema.[2550] There was no apparent discrimination in the distribution of medical care and education to both civilians and fighters.[2551]

418. para. 1385: Despite the fact that the RUF and some parts of the civilian population in Kailahun generally co-habited and may have been relatively integrated,[2552] the Chamber finds that the RUF continued to commit crimes against civilians in Kailahun District throughout the indictment period.

b. Killings – Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Introduction

419. para. 1386: The Chamber heard evidence of numerous acts of beatings or killings in Kailahun District. While the Chamber has not always been able to determine the specific dates of each incident, we are satisfied, from the totality of the evidence, that the following acts took place between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998.[2553]

ii. Killing of suspected Kamajors in Kailahun Town – Killings – Kailahun District – Crimes

420. para. 1387: Following the ECOMOG Intervention on about 14 February 1998, there was widespread anxiety within the RUF leadership about possible Kamajor infiltrators among the civilian population.[2554] Bockarie, who was in Buedu, ordered that suspected Kamajors were to be arrested for investigation in Kailahun Town by Gbao, the RUF Overall Security Commander.[2555]

421. para. 1388: As ordered by Bockarie, a group of MPs led by Kailahun District MP Commander John Aruna Duawo arrested 110 individuals suspected of being Kamajors.[2556] These suspected Kamajors were in fact displaced civilians retreating to Kailahun.[2557] The detainees, all men between the ages of approximately 18 and 60 years, were taken to the RUF MP office near the roundabout in Kailahun Town.[2558]

422. para. 1389: The detainees were divided into two groups.[2559] The first group, comprising 45 men, had been arrested in the vicinity of Pendembu, while the second group, numbering 65 men, had been arrested in the vicinity of Kailahun Town.[2560] Amongst the second group was Charles Kayioko, an AFRC fighter who had come from Daru and was arrested by MP officials at Giema for not carrying an RUF travel pass.[2561]

423. para. 1390: TF1-366 went to Kailahun Town after he was told that civilians suspected of being Kamajors had been detained there.[2562] Upon his arrival at the RUF MP office, TF1-366 met RUF officers including Gbao; Tom Sandy, the MP Commanding Officer; and Morie Fekai, the Overall G5 Commander.[2563]

424. para. 1391: Tom Sandy investigated the first group, whom he declared not to be Kamajors. These men were then released by a JSBI panel chaired by Gbao.[2564] Bockarie was not informed about the release of this first group.[2565] The JSBI panel then commenced its investigation of the second group. In the course of the investigation, the men in the second group were released on parole.[2566] During the day, they were permitted some freedom of movement around Kailahun Town under the supervision of the MPs.[2567] At night, they were required to report back to the MP office, where they were confined.[2568]

425. para. 1392: On 19 February 1998 Bockarie came to Kailahun from Buedu along with other senior officers including Alens Blamo, a.k.a. Lion.[2569] Bockarie, convinced that Kamajors were infiltrating Kailahun, was irate upon discovering that the first group of prisoners had been released.[2570] When he learned that the second group of prisoners had been released on parole, he ordered that they be re-arrested and killed.[2571] The Commanders who had taken the prisoners to work accordingly ordered that they be found and returned to the MP office.[2572]

426. para. 1393: In the presence of senior officers including Gbao, John Aruna Duawo, Joe Fatoma, and Allieu Mendeglah, Bockarie ordered that ten of the alleged Kamajor prisoners be brought to him.[2573] A large crowd of over 100 AFRC/RUF fighters gathered at the roundabout near the clock tower in Kailahun Town.[2574] Bockarie then shot and killed three suspected Kamajors. The remaining seven suspected Kamajors were shot and killed by Bockarie's bodyguards.[2575] TF1-045, who was one of those bodyguards, testified to his participation in these shootings.[2576] Gbao did not shoot anyone.[2577] DIS-157, a senior RUF Commander, witnessed the killing of the first ten people, which included his grandfather, but testified that he was not able to stop Bockarie from killing them as he would have been killed for interfering.[2578] From the MP office, the other prisoners could hear sporadic gun shots and everyone in the cells began to panic.[2579]

427. para. 1394: After the killing of the first ten suspected Kamajors, Bockarie ordered John Aruna Duawo and Sam Kolleh to kill the remaining suspected Kamajors.[2580] John Aruna Duawo passed these orders to Joe Fatoma and Allieu Mendeglah.[2581] After issuing his order, Bockarie returned to Buedu.[2582]

428. para. 1395: Later that same day, between 3pm and 5pm, the killings ordered by Bockarie were carried out by four MP Officers.[2583] The MPs led the suspects out in groups of four or five and shot them.[2584] Gbao was present when Bockarie gave the order and while it was carried out, but he did not directly participate in the killing.[2585]

429. para. 1396: The only person from the second group of detainees that escaped the mass execution was the uncle of Commander Alpha Fatoma.[2586] Charles Kaiyoko, the AFRC fighter, was shot.[2587] TF1-113 testified that the remaining 63 detainees were civilians, including four of the witness' relatives.[2588] The bodies were abandoned where they had been killed, behind the MP office.[2589] The following day, civilians were ordered to dispose of the bodies.[2590]

430. para. 1397: The alleged Kamajors were killed shortly before Johnny Paul Koroma and Sesay arrived in Kailahun in a convoy of 60 armed men.[2591] At the time of the killings, Sesay was situated between Makeni and Kono on his way to Kailahun.[2592] Kallon was not present in Kailahun.[2593]

iii. Killing of Fonti Kanu in Pendembu – Killings – Kailahun District – Crimes

431. para. 1398: Sometime in April 1998, Fonti Kanu, a senior AFRC fighter, was arrested by the RUF border security in Nyandehun Mambabu on allegations that he had been trying to escape to Liberia.[2594] He was taken to Tom Sandy, the MP Commander in Kailahun. Tom Sandy informed Bockarie of the arrest and Bockarie ordered that Fonti Kanu be detained. Fonti Kanu was subsequently released but ordered to remain in Kailahun Town.[2595]

432. para. 1399: In June 1998, Fonti Kanu attempted to escape and was again caught by border guards in Bomaru and taken to the MP Commander in Baiwala.[2596] The MP Commander reported the matter to Bockarie in Buedu.[2597] DIS-157, TF1-371 and Galema went to collect Fonti Kanu from the Liberian border.[2598] Upon the orders of Bockarie, Fonti Kanu was killed in Pendembu because he was considered a security threat to the RUF.[2599] According to Sesay, execution was the standard punishment for those RUF who connived with the enemy.[2600]

iv. Killing of Foday Kallon in Buedu – Killings – Kailahun District – Crimes

433. para. 1400: In 1998, following the Intervention, the AFRC fighters based in Daru were pushed out by ECOMOG forces and fled to Monrovia, Liberia. Foday Kallon was the leader of these AFRC fighters and he was ordered by Sesay, Bockarie and Charles Taylor to mobilise the fighters and return with them to Sierra Leone.[2601] About 300 fighters returned to Sierra Leone and were deployed to various areas while Foday Kallon remained at the RUF Headquarters at Buedu.[2602]

434. para. 1401: Under the orders of Bockarie and Sesay, Foday Kallon travelled on two other occasions to Liberia to assemble the remaining fighters.[2603] On the third trip, Foday Kallon delayed his return and a dispute arose over the money he had been provided and his sharing of RUF information in Liberia. Upon his return to RUF Headquarters in Buedu, Foday Kallon was summarily executed.[2604] The Chamber notes that no credible evidence was tendered regarding the date of the execution of Foday Kallon.

435. para.1402: Subsequently, a radio message was sent to the front lines informing them of Foday Kallon's death and warning fighters against committing acts of betrayal or sabotage.[2605]

v. Killing of Dr. Kamara – Killings – Kailahun District – Crimes

436. para. 1403: The person responsible for medical treatment and the distribution of medication in Buedu was a Dr. Kamara.[2606] He was accused of having sold medication that was intended for civilian use to a petty trader, a woman named Zainab, who in turn re-sold the medication.[2607] Such sale of medication was prohibited by the RUF.[2608]

437. para. 1404: As a consequence of his actions, Dr. Kamara was killed in May 1999 at the MP station in Buedu by a named RUF Commander on the instructions of Bockarie.[2609]

c. Sexual violence in Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

438. para. 1405: The Chamber heard evidence of numerous incidents of sexual violence in Kailahun District and notes that sexual violence was widespread both prior to and throughout the Indictment period. Although evidence of rapes and other forms of sexual violence committed by RUF fighters was adduced,[2610] the Chamber recalls that the Prosecution did not plead these crimes in respect of Kailahun District. Accordingly, the Chamber's findings on such acts are limited to their occurrence within the context of 'forced marriages' and sexual slavery.

i. ‘Forced Marriage’ of TF1-314 – Sexual violence in Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

439. para. 1406: In 1994, TF1-314 was abducted and twice raped by RUF fighters. The RUF fighter who raped her the second time took her as his “wife”. From 1994 to 1998, TF1-314 was in Buedu as part of the Small Girl Unit (“SGU”). She cooked and did laundry for her rebel “husband” and lived in his house. She was also forced to have sexual intercourse with him at night.[2611]

440. para. 1407: Other girls between 10 and 15 years of age were also taken as “wives” by rebels in Buedu. The girls cooked, did laundry and other domestic chores and at night had sex with their rebel “husbands”. TF1-314 testified that she remained in Buedu because civilians who attempted to escape were liable to be killed or fall into the hands of Kamajors, who would kill anyone who came from a rebel zone.[2612]

ii. ‘Forced Marriage’ of TF1-093 – Sexual violence in Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

441. para. 1408: In the rainy season of 1996, at the age of 15, TF1-093 was raped in Njala, Moyamba District, by two of Superman’s bodyguards.[2613] While the rebels were fighting over her, one stabbed her foot and her ‘private’. After the rape, Superman treated her wounds and ‘offered’ to marry her. TF1-093 accepted as she did not want to die.[2614] TF1-093 then moved with the RUF to Kailahun District.[2615] While travelling with the RUF, she observed the abductions of many other women who were forced to become the “wives” of Commanders.[2616] As Superman’s wife, TF1-093 was forced to have sexual intercourse with him. She also cooked and did laundry for him.[2617] Superman habitually gave her drugs, including cannabis sativa, tablets and also gunpowder to eat.[2618]

iii. ‘Forced Marriages’ of an unknown number of women – Sexual violence in Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

442. para. 1409: The Chamber heard evidence from insider witnesses and witnesses who had been “bush wives” who testified to the widespread rebel practice of abducting women and forcing them to act as “wives” in Kailahun District. Many of the women interviewed by expert witness TF1-369, who authored Exhibit 138, the Expert Report on Forced Marriages, were school children and petty traders who were abducted from Koinadugu, Tonkolili, Pujehun, Kono, Bonthe, Bo, Freetown and Kenema and taken to Kailahun.[2619]

443. para. 1410: The RUF routinely captured women during combat operations on villages in Kailahun District. Upon entering a village, the fighters moved from house to house, forcibly entering and removing the civilians. If the rebels were repelled by a counter-attack, the captured civilians were forced to retreat with them. Many of the abducted women were then assigned as "wives" to RUF Commanders.[2620] A senior RUF Commander explained the practice as follows:

> A Commander who hasn't a wife, somebody to take care of him domestically, take care of his domestic needs, go [sic] to a particular town on combat mission, and he is the head of that mission. He happens to conquer that particular territory, and abduct young girls that found it extremely difficult to escape with the opposing troop, and that Commander sees a young lady that he is interested in […] The combatants, the other combatant are subjected to him. It is up to him, I mean at his discretion, to tell lady A, Fatmata, you are supposed to be with the CO, I mean, the commanding officer. The young lady has no -- I mean, has no option, in terms of negotiating whether in fact he [sic] want or not. So that lady automatically become the wife of that Commander.[2621]

444. para. 1411: Many Commanders including Bockarie had a captured 'wife'.[2622] Dennis Koker, the MP Adjutant in Kailahun District between 1998 and 1999, testified that it was regular practice for women to be forcibly taken as "wives" and some Commanders had five or six "wives."[2623]

445. para. 1412: A woman's status as a married woman was no bar to abduction as married women were forced to leave their legitimate husbands and become 'bush wives' to the RUF rebels.[2624] The thousands of young women thus captured had no option but to submit to a 'husband' as they were in no position to negotiate their freedom.[2625] The abducted women could not escape for fear of being killed.[2626]

446. para. 1413: A rebel "wife" was expected to carry out certain functions for her "husband" in return for his protection. These functions included carrying the rebel's possessions when he was deployed, engaging in sexual intercourse on demand, performing domestic chores and showing undying loyalty to the rebel in return for his 'protection'.[2627] If the women refused sexual intercourse with their "husbands," they were sent to the front line.[2628] Many "wives" bore children to their rebel "husbands."[2629]

d. Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Overview – Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

447. para. 1414: The Chamber observes that the RUF used civilians as forced labour prior to 30 November 1996 and that this practice continued thereafter.[2630] RUF fighters captured civilians "for their own safety" at the war front and sent them to Giema and other locations.[2631] Captured civilians were placed in the custody of the G5 for screening.[2632] The purpose of the screening was to identify possible Kamajors, assess the health of the captives and then allocate them to different units, for combat training, forced farming or other forms of forced labour.[2633] Those who were not selected were handed over to chiefs[2634] by the G5 Commander.

448. para. 1415: Following the May 1997 coup, civilians were captured at Nimikoro, Sewafe, Guinea, Kombayende and sent to Kailahun District to mine diamonds and cultivate farms. Bockarie gave orders for civilians to be abducted and taken to Kailahun District to work.[2636] Many of the civilians were forced to live in "zoo bushes", which were mining or farming communities guarded by RUF fighters for "protection."[2637]

449. para. 1416: Consistent with the system of passes to control movement that applied in all RUF held areas, civilians were not free to move around Kailahun District but were required to obtain passes from the local MPs or G5 in order to search for food or to visit other towns.[2638] The pass system was a means of distinguishing civilians and fighters of opposing forces, but also a means of exercising control.[2639] Those who moved outside their town without a pass would be arrested, beaten or killed.[2640]

ii. RUF "government" farms – Forced farming - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

450. para. 1417: The RUF established "government" farms which were organised to support the fighters and civilians.[2641] The Army Agricultural Unit, which operated under the auspices of the G5, was responsible for organising civilians to farm for the RUF and managing their contributions.[2642] The G5 gave orders relating to civilians farming for the RUF administered farms and for the individual farms run by RUF Commanders.[2643] Approximately, 100 to 500 people from all over Kailahun District were forced to work in various RUF-controlled farms.[2644]

451. para. 1418: The working conditions at the "government" farms for the civilians were difficult. Many of the civilians walked many miles from their homes to work on the farm, and walked back home in the evening. Their work consisted of brushing roads, weeding, cutting trees, cultivating crops and carrying the crops to trading posts or to the G5 Commanders for re-distribution.[2645] Although civilians had carried out these tasks prior to the conflict, under the RUF they were forced to take part in organised work expeditions in which they were ordered when, where and how to brush a particular road or town.[2646] During times of war, civilians were not allowed to have personal crops and civilian work was used exclusively for the war effort, and they worked without receiving any pay or food supply.[2647] Their exploitation led in some cases to injuries, starvation and death.[2648]

452. para. 1419: TF1-330 explained that refusing to farm was not an option for the civilians:

> [N]ow, I am free. Whatever I want to do for myself, I will do. But at that time, we wouldn't do anything by ourselves, apart from working for them. Except that one day they would just say "Work for us" […] You wouldn't do it, they would beat you. They would continue beating you; if you are going to die, you die. No, you wouldn't deny doing it.[2649]

453. para. 1420: Unlike the fighters, the workers were neither given a salary nor given anything to eat, often feeding themselves with bush yams, bananas or other wild crops they could scavenge.[2650] When not working at the RUF-controlled farms, civilians would be able to seek their own food, but would still require a pass allowing them to do so.[2651] If the civilians refused to farm, they would be beaten.[2652] From 1997 to 1999 some civilians in Talia were able to grow crops for their own sustenance, though this was limited and what was grown was often not enough. Such personal farming was allowed, however, at times of relative peace or once the subscription quota was met.[2653] Otherwise, the produce from the farms was given to the G5 who in turn handed it over to Gbao, who Gbao passed it on to Sesay.[2654]

454. para. 1421: According to TF1-113 and TF1-367, in return for their work and produce, civilians received free medical treatment at RUF hospitals.[2655] TF1-330 and TF1-108 both contend that no such service was provided.[2656] The Chamber is of the view that, while it may have been the case that free medical services were provided to some part of the population of Kailahun District at various times during the armed conflict, the provision of such services cannot be exculpatory or excusatory for the forced labour and coercive conditions that the civilian population endured.

455. para. 1422: From 1996 to 2001, farming occurred at RUF farms located in Giema, Talia, Sembehun, Bandajuma and Sandialu.[2657] In 1996 and 1998, there were two big "government" farms in Giema which were organised and managed by the RUF. Approximately 300 civilians were forced to work on these farms.[2658] The civilians could not refuse to farm because armed men were observing and supervising them while they were working.[2659]

456. para. 1423: There was an RUF "government" farm located between Benduma and Buedu that operated after the end of the Junta period in February 1998.[2660] Civilians, including older men and women, were captured and forced to work on this farm.[2661] The civilians stayed in Benduma and between 5am and 6am they walked to the farm where they weeded, "brushed" and engaged in any other farm-related work that needed to be done.[2662] The civilians were guarded by armed fighters who ordered them to work.[2663] The fighters checked the rice on the farm and if any was missing the civilians were beaten.[2664] Rebels stayed at the farms for security reasons and to ensure that the work was done properly.[2665]

457. para. 1424: Another such farm existed at Pendembu from December 1999 to 2001 and operated under the supervision of the Pendembu G5.[2666] Civilians were captured and brought from various areas in Kailahun District in order to work on the farm.[2667] Civilians who had been abducted from surrounding towns worked on this farm near Giehun.[2668] In the mornings, civilians were rounded up by the G5 Commander and they ordinarily were allowed to return home at the end of the day. However, in some cases the civilians spent whole days in the farm, at times up to a week, without being provided with food and accommodation.[2669] The food from these farms was designated exclusively for RUF Commanders.[2670]

iii. Farms of RUF Commanders – Forced farming - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

458. para. 1425: In addition to farming for the RUF "government" farms, civilians were required to work on farms owned by RUF Commanders, including Sesay, Gbao and Bockarie, in each year from 1995 until 2000.[2671] These private farms were operated similarly to the RUF "government" farms, except that their produce was for the exclusive enjoyment of the particular proprietor of the farm. The civilians working on these farms were treated badly, forced to work at gun point and sometimes beaten.[2672]

459. para. 1426: From 1996 to 2001, civilians cultivated a farm for Sesay in Giema, still known today as "Issa's Swamp" or "Issa Sesay Farm".[2673] The civilians built a barn on the farm, where they stored rice after they had harvested it.[2674] Civilians were also forced to work in Gbao's farm in Giema.[2675] Gbao had a bodyguard on his farm called Korpomeh who "guarded" the civilians who worked there.[2676]

iv. Forced subscription of produce – Forced farming - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

460. para. 1427: In the years 1996, 1997 and 2001, a subscription system functioned in Kailahun District.[2677] The system required civilians to obtain food for fighters, as well as deliver rice, cocoa, palm oil, coffee and meat to the G5.[2678] Civilians would 'subscribe' an amount of product indicated by the G5, meaning the civilians would obtain and surrender the produce to the G5 who would arrange for its redistribution or for trade.[2679] Each town that the RUF occupied was expected to 'contribute' a certain amount of farm produce to the RUF.[2680] Gbao instructed G5 Commander Morie Fekai on the farming products to demand from the civilians and these instructions were conveyed to civilians.[2681] The money from the trade of produce such as coffee, cocoa and palm oil would be used to buy ammunition.[2682]

461. para. 1428: Villagers in all ten districts of Luawa Chiefdom, in Kailahun District, were forced to provide goods to the RUF.[2683] From 1997 to 1999 in Talia and various villages, up to 150 civilians would 'subscribe' to harvest and then deliver a total of about 300 bags of cocoa per year to the G5.[2684] The civilians would carry the cocoa to locations as ordered by the RUF, including to trading posts where the cocoa would be traded for rice, salt, Maggi or other items the rebels needed.[2685] Also in Talia, rebels gathered about 130 to 150 civilians to harvest palm oil and the civilians were required to deliver three or four drums of palm oil every year between 1997 and 1999 and in 2001.[2686] The women of Talia were forced to fish, and those who did not fish properly or catch any fish would be beaten.[2687] The fish caught by the women were handed to the RUF and taken to Gbao and other Commanders such as Martin George and Sam Koroma in Kailahun.[2688]

462. para. 1429: From 1997 to 2000, civilians subscribed coffee to the RUF in Sandaru.[2689] The civilians handed their produce, harvest or subscription of cocoa, coffee and other goods to the G5 or S4 to be transmitted to Gbao.[2690] Between 100 and 200 civilians were forced to carry the subscribed goods on their heads from Giema to Gbao in Kailahun Town.[2691]

v. Forced Labour for trading of produce – Forced farming - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

463. para. 1430: From 1996 to 2000,[2692] the Guinea border was open for trading and civilians were forced to trade farm products such as cocoa, coffee and palm oil.[2693] Civilians were escorted to the trading sites by Commanders and fighters.[2694]

464. para. 1431: From 1996 to 2001, civilians exchanged goods at waterside trading locations on the Guinean border.[2695] DAG-110 was in charge of five such trading sites in Telu,[2696] and other sites included Mende Buima, Baoma, Belu, Kamalu, and Koindu.[2697] Along the Moa River various trading sites from Manowa to Koindu were also established to trade with the Guineans.[2698] More trading sites opened after government troops withdrew from Kailahun District.[2699] The civilians carried the palm oil, cocoa and coffee to locations specified by the RUF or took it to trading places like the waterside to exchange it for items such as rice, salt, Maggi and sometimes clothes.[2700] The civilians were used as manpower to take products to the riverside, and the money they made from selling the goods had to be given to the RUF.[2701] During this period, Commanders escorted the civilians once a week to the trading sites.[2702] Approximately 500 civilians along with some fighters participated in trade.[2703] Civilians I Kailahun were also forced to carry logistical materials including ammunition across the Mo River to the front line areas in Kono District.[2704]

vi. Forced mining - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

465. para. 1432: The RUF engaged in diamond mining in Kailahun District as early as 1996 and until 2000.[2705] The mining activities were an important and vital source of income for the RUF, and later the AFRC/RUF Junta. The work in the mines was carried out by civilians who were forced to work under the supervision of AFRC/RUF fighters.[2706] Mining in Giema in 1998 was overseen by Mr. Patrick, a civilian.[2707]

466. para. 1433: In Giema, from 1998 to 1999, civilians were captured and forced to mine diamonds for Bockarie.[2708] Bockarie came from Buedu to Giema and took civilians along to mine.[2709] When TF1-330 went to Giema, he saw civilians mining diamonds on the route to Boabu.[2710] Forced mining for the RUF was also carried out in Yandawahun, in Mafindo (Mafindor), on the Guinea border, Nyandehun and in Jojoima in Malema Chiefdom.[2711] Other mining locations included, Yenga, Jabama and Golahun.[2712] Gbao and Patrick Bangura oversaw the civilians mining at Giema as well as "the soldiers who had guns".[2713] The civilians worked without food.[2714]

vii. Forced military training - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

467. para. 1434: The Chamber finds that it was the common practice of the RUF to capture and forcefully enlist civilians to increase their military capability. In Kailahun District many civilians, including children, were forced to undergo military training at the Bayama Training base and at the Bunumbu Training Base (Camp Lion).

viii. Bayama Training Base (1996-1997) – Forced military training - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

468. para. 1435: The RUF had a training base at Bayama, 23 miles from Kailahun from 1997 to 1998.[2715] There was an RUF "law" that stated that whoever went towards Bayama would be captured and taken to that base to be trained. Some recruits were as young as eight or nine years old, while others were older adults who were still fit to fight. The Commander was CO Jah Glory, and his deputy was Morris Kakwa.[2716] Eventually the training base was moved from Baiama to Bunumbu, which was closer to Giema.[2717]

ix. Bunumbu Training Base (Camp Lion) (1998) - Forced military training - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

469. para. 1436: In 1998, at the instructions of Bockarie, Camp Lion was established at Bunumbu four miles from Kailahun Town.[2718] There was an overall training Commander at Bunumbu.[2719]

470. para. 1437: People who were captured on the highway to Freetown from 1997 onwards,[2720] as well as people from Daru and the SLA, were trained at Bunumbu training base.[2721] These civilians and people from the SLA were brought to TF1-362 at Bunumbu training base at the command of General Issa Sesay.[2722] In addition, captured women who were not taken as wives of Commanders were often sent to the training base at Bunumbu to train as fighters.[2723]

471. para. 1438: In February 1998, civilians were taken to the G5 office for screening in Kailahun District. Also, people were captured from Talia by other RUF trainees and their masters, and taken to the base at Bunumbu as recruits. Boys as young as eight years[2724] and girls as young as six years[2725] old were trained to fight at Bunumbu.[2726] At Bunumbu there was a Small Boys' Unit and a Women's Auxiliary Corps ("WAC") for girls where children were trained to become the bodyguards of senior Commanders.[2727] Dennis Koker saw Morris Kallon bring people to be trained by the RUF.[2728] In all, about 500 people were sent to train at Bunumbu during the three years the witness was there and the witness estimated that "45 percent" of those taken there were under the age of 15.[2729]

472. para. 1439: TF1-263 attended training at Camp Lion, where he received training for two months from the training Commander.[2730] The trainees were split into four platoons of 15 people each.[2731] TF1-263 and ten other 14-year-olds were in one platoon.[2732] They learned how to run in formation, attack towns, burn houses, fight, fire AK-47s, rocket propelled grenades and double-barrelled guns.[2733]

473. para. 1440: TF1-141 was taken to the Camp Lion training base with other small boys, some bigger boys and some girls and young women. There were some AFRC/RUF rebels with them so that no one could escape. People were forced to come to the camp from places like Koidu and Kono.[2734] The rebels said "You have to go to the training base because you have to be soldiers yourselves."[2735] Michael Loleh was TF1-141's practical training instructor.[2736] A lot of recruits that TF1-141 trained with died during training – either from beatings, being shot or from falling off of a "monkey bridge" and onto barbed wire.[2737] During training, TF1-141 was in the Ranger Squad with all other SBUs.[2738]

474. para. 1441: CO Vandi, CO Denis, and Sesay all visited Camp Lion.[2739] On one visit by Sesay, he told the recruits that he had security at the camp, and that he had sent "his boys" to the training base as well, and that if a recruit left the base, made any mistake or failed to do as they were told, he would execute the offender.[2740]

475. para. 1442: TF1-362 testified that Sesay was based in Buedu with Bockarie while TF1-362 was in Bunumbu.[2741] During 1998, in Bunumbu, Sesay punished the training Commander by having that Commander flogged and detained on allegations of mistreatment of a woman, which proved to be false. Sesay imposed this punishment because the procedure for serious cases had not been complied with. Another order from High Command should have been sought before imposing punishment.

x. Other forms of forced labour - Forced labour – Kailahun District – Crimes

476. para. 1443: Civilians in Kailahun were extensively engaged to perform RUF "government" jobs that the fighters could not do because they were engaged in combat activities, such as the construction of bridges and an air strip in Buedu.[2742] In 1996, from Ivory Coast, Sankoh gave instructions for the construction of an airfield in Buedu.[2743] Bockarie discussed it with RUF Commanders and with chiefdom Commanders and then brought machinery for the construction and both civilians and fighters worked on its construction.[2744] During the construction of the airstrip, MPs and armed RUF fighters were present, providing security for the workers because the airfield was very close to the Liberian border.[2745] Sesay was present at the proposed airstrip field in a small green Suzuki jeep and he told Denis Koker that "we should make people work here."[2746]

(v) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

a. Background to the AFRC Attack on Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

477. para. 1510: The Western Area is the smallest of Sierra Leone's administrative regions. Its headquarters, Freetown, is the capital of the country and the seat of its government. The Western Area borders Moyamba and Port Loko Districts to the east and is otherwise bordered by the Atlantic Ocean. Throughout the Indictment period, the capture of Freetown in order to ensure political and de facto control over Sierra Leone was a stated goal for both the AFRC and the RUF. Following the route taken by the AFRC rebels for the invasion of Freetown, the principal towns in the Freetown Peninsula relevant to the Indictment are Benguema, Waterloo, Hastings, Allen Town, Calaba Town, Wellington, Kissy and Freetown.

i. Perpetrators of the Attack on Freetown - Background to the AFRC Attack on Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

478. para. 1511: The Chamber has found that in December 1998 AFRC forces advanced from Bombali and Port Loko Districts towards Freetown. The forces attacked Freetown on 6 January 1999 under the command of Gullit. Gullit was in radio communication with Bockarie prior to and throughout the attack and the RUF eventually deployed reinforcements to Waterloo to assist the AFRC. These reinforcements, however, remained ensconced in battle with ECOMOG troops stationed at Jui and Kossoh Town and were unable to advance further into the Freetown Peninsula. The AFRC forces captured State House in Freetown on the first day of their invasion, but their success was short-lived and they were soon forced to retreat. Following the loss of State House, the rebels retreated through Wellington to Calaba Town and then Allen Town, leaving a trail of violence and destruction in their wake, before eventually regrouping in Benguema. The retreating AFRC forces met with the RUF at Waterloo approximately three weeks after the attack began. From Waterloo, the two groups, AFRC and RUF, cooperated in a second attack on Freetown but were forced back by ECOMOG.[2818]

479. para. 1512: The Chamber has found that countless crimes were committed during the attack on Freetown, further described hereafter. The Chamber observes that many civilian witnesses identified the rebel forces that committed crimes during the Freetown attack as members of the RUF. The RUF was the most widely known rebel group, both within Sierra Leone and internationally at the time and the Chamber finds that it was a common misperception that all rebel attacks were attributable to the RUF.[2819] The Chamber considers that Bockarie's conduct in making announcements over international radio networks in relation to the AFRC attack may also have contributed largely to the incorrect assumption that the troops in Freetown were under his control.[2820]

480. para. 1513: The Chamber notes that it was difficult for civilians to distinguish the different rebel groups fighting in the armed conflict.[2821] The Chamber moreover notes that civilians typically identified the AFRC troops by their attire in military fatigues, while the RUF fighters generally wore civilian clothing or mixed combat and civilian clothing.[2822] However, the Chamber considers that by the time of the Freetown attack, this rudimentary distinction no longer adequately reflected the reality of AFRC and RUF operations. The AFRC troops had been fighting a guerilla war for nearly one year by the time they attacked Freetown and they lacked proper equipment and uniforms.[2823] In addition, many among their ranks were civilians who were forcibly recruited and trained.[2824] The Chamber further recalls that on occasion rebels from both factions were dressed in military fatigues captured from attacks on ECOMOG soldiers.[2825]

481. para. 1514: For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber has treated identifications by civilian witnesses of RUF rebels as the perpetrators of attacks in Freetown as inherently unreliable. In light of our findings on the locations which the AFRC forces passed on their retreat from Freetown and the fact that RUF fighters under the control of Bockarie did not advance past Waterloo, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators of the crimes which we have found were committed in Freetown and the Western Area were fighters under the command of Gullit. In this respect, the Chamber recalls that a small contingent of low-ranking RUF fighters participated in the AFRC attack on Freetown, we find these men were subordinate to Gullit's command.[2826]

482. para. 1515: The Prosecution has not adduced evidence to establish that the RUF forces under the command of Bockarie in the Hastings-Waterloo area committed crimes against humanity or war crimes during the period in which the AFRC forces were attacking and retreating from Freetown, or that crimes were committed during the second, unsuccessful joint attack carried out shortly thereafter.

ii. Targeting of the civilian population in Freetown - Background to the AFRC Attack on Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

483. para. 1516: The Chamber has heard overwhelming evidence of a general nature which establishes that the AFRC forces in Freetown intended to direct a campaign of violence against the civilian population.

484. para. 1517: Upon their arrival in Freetown on the morning of 6 January 1999, Gullit, Five-Five and Bazzy ordered their fighters to embark on a campaign which they called "gori-gori", meaning that civilians would be killed or mutilated and government property would be destroyed.[2827] We find that the intention behind this stratagem was to intimidate the civilian population in order to achieve victory and a lull in the fighting.[2828]

485. para. 1518: The rebels carried out abductions, rapes, lootings and killings in and around Freetown.[2829] Witnesses testified to the widespread burning of civilian homes and key government buildings, and an estimated 85% of the buildings in the eastern part of Freetown were destroyed by fire.[2830]

486. para. 1519: The fact of the retreat appeared to instil a sense of paranoia among the AFRC troops and the retreat was characterised by vicious attacks on civilians.[2831] Numerous civilians, including children, were abducted during the initial attack and the retreat.[2832] Gullit ordered those troops under his command during the retreat to shoot civilians, and to abduct "young girls, young children" in the hope that the commission of such atrocities would draw the attention of the international media to the conflict.[2833]

487. para. 1520: Many abducted women and girls were subjected to sexual violence. Expert Witness TF1-081 testified that of 1,168 patients examined between March and December 1999, 99% had been abducted following the 6 January 1999 invasion, the "vast majority" of whom originated from Freetown.[2834] Out of these patients, 274 (23.4%) had been beaten for refusing to engage in sexual relations or carry heavy looted goods; 648 (58.5%) of the abductees had been subjected to rape, some by more than two and up to 30 men; 281 (24.1%) complained of vaginal discharge and 327 (27.9%) had pelvic inflammatory disease, both of which are transmitted through sexual intercourse; and 200 (17.1%) were pregnant, over 80% of whom were girls between the ages of 14 and 18.[2835]

488. para. 1521: Amputations were a hallmark of the retreating forces and many civilians were subjected to this crime at locations including Calaba Town, Upgun and Kissy.[2836] According to witness George Johnson, AFRC Commander Five-Five issued an order to commit 200 civilian amputations and to send the amputees to the Government.[2837] Several witnesses testified that rebels asked civilians whether they wanted "short sleeves" or "long sleeves" and their arms were amputated either at the elbow or at the wrist accordingly.[2838] Rebels were also known to amputate four fingers, leaving only the thumb, which they referred to as "one love" and which they encouraged the victims to show to Tejan Kabbah.[2839]

489. para. 1522: The Chamber has also examined documentary evidence which establishes that the scale of violence was such that there can be no doubt that the infliction of violence on civilians was a primary objective of the attacking forces.[2840]

b. State House – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

490. para. 1523: Approximately 30 persons were killed by the rebels at the State House, including soldiers, police, and civilians.[2841] On 6 January 1999, the rebels took women to State House where they were raped.[2842] Each of the senior Commanders, and many of the troops, had captured women at their disposal.[2843] Many of these women remained with the fighters during and after the withdrawal from Freetown.[2844]

c. Kingtom – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

491. para. 1524: On 7 January 1999 the rebels managed to regain control of Kingtom, which had been captured in an ECOMOG offensive. The rebels, deeming the civilians of Kingtom to be traitors due to the fact that ECOMOG had controlled their residential area, shot civilians and burned their houses.[2845]

d. Guard Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

492. para. 1525: During the retreat from Freetown, TF1-334 witnessed Captain Blood execute three civilians with a gun and four others with machetes. Captain Blood also burned TF1-334's house.[2846] When TF1-334 protested, he told TF1-334 that he was following orders.[2847]

e. Upgun and Fourah Bay - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

493. para. 1526: At Savage Square, following the death of one of the rebels, Gullit ordered the shooting of all civilians of Fourah Bay and the burning of the area in retribution. Gullit, Bazzy and

Bomb Blast advanced to Fourah Bay where, together with the troops, they joined in the slaughter of civilians and the commission of arson.[2848]

494. para. 1527: Gullit had further been informed that civilians were harbouring ECOMOG troops in a mosque in Kissy. He therefore concluded that all those sheltering in mosques were to be considered enemies and gave orders that they should be shot to death.[2849] During the rebel withdrawal from Freetown, witness George Johnson saw at least seven bodies outside a mosque in Calaba Town, and more dead bodies inside the building.[2850]

495. para. 1528: TF1-093, a former RUF fighter, had been living with her brother and her child in Freetown since 1998.[2851] On 6 January 1999, TF1-093's brother was shot and killed during the attack on Freetown.[2852] While in Cline Town, TF1-093 met up with a named Commander in charge of several groups, who recognised her from her time with the RUF rebels. He proceeded to divide the rebels into groups and gave TF1-093 command of a group of over 50 men, women and children, all of whom were armed with knives and had been instructed to kill civilians.[2853]

496. para. 1529: TF1-093 and the fighters under her command burned houses and killed and raped civilians in the Upgun and Fourah Bay Road areas and around the Eastern Police Station.[2854] They killed more than 20 people, not including those that were caught inside burning houses.[2855] TF1-093 stated that she had to obey the orders to commit those crimes as otherwise she would have been punished, possibly with death.[2856]

497. para. 1530: TF1-334 testified to an episode in Upgun where Five-Five announced that amputations would begin and demonstrated the methodology to be followed in this respect on two civilians.[2857] He told those two victims to go to Tejan Kabbah and retrieve their hands. The amputation of ten other civilians followed and over the coming days other rebels committed numerous amputations in accordance with his example.[2858] TF1-093 also stated that those under her command amputated hands and fingers and that, on 6 January 1999, she had personally witnessed over 100 civilian amputations being carried out.[2859]

f. Wellington Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. Killing and Looting of TF1-235 and his family - Wellington– Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

498. para. 1531: In the early hours of the morning on 6 January 1999, while it remained dark, TF1-235 was in Wellington and heard small arms fire coming from Calaba Town. The witness, fearing that Freetown was being invaded in the east by armed rebels, decided to move his family of ten by car towards the west of Freetown. Hundreds of other civilians were also moving towards the west of Freetown from Calaba Town, Allen Town and Wellington.[2860]

499. para. 1532: At Grassfield, traffic congestion forced the vehicles to stop and TF1-235 and his family alighted from their car. In the light of a flare fired by an unknown person, TF1-235 observed men and boys armed with rifles and RPG tubes. Some of the fighters were clothed in camouflage rain gear and others in civilian apparel.[2861] As a group of fighters passed him, he heard one state: "SLA on the move. They thought we will never be back, but now we are back."[2862]

500. para. 1533: By this time TF1-235's family were surrounded by armed men, one of whom pushed his rifle into TF1-235's back and demanded money. TF1-235 gave him Le 200.000 which money he had reserved to pay his children's education fees and which he had carried with him to prevent its loss.[2863] More armed men arrived at the scene and someone was heard to say: "If these are civilians just leave them alone, just leave them alone."[2864] The family attempted to regain the safety of their vehicle but this move was detected by an "eight to ten year old" boy shouldering an RPG. A rebel ordered the family out of the car, demanded money and escorted them to a side street where he forced them to sit in a line.[2865] TF1-235's wife gave the man Le 9.000.[2866]

501. para. 1534: At that point another three or four men armed with rifles and dressed in military camouflage arrived, one of whom accused TF1-235 and his family of being supporters of ECOMOG and of Tejan Kabbah, saying that, as a consequence, they should be taught a lesson and killed.[2867] The man then rapidly fired his gun at the family from a distance of three or four metres, which was close enough to cause TF1-235 to receive cordite burns to his knees.[2868] TF1-235 was shot in the arm; his wife received an injury to the back of her head from a deflecting bullet; and their eldest daughter received a superficial wound to the midriff. Although three survived, TF1-235's other seven children either died instantly or within the next few days.[2869]

502. para. 1535: TF1-235, while pretending to be dead, heard one of the armed men state to the perpetrator that he "should never have shot them in the first place." Nonetheless, the perpetrator proceeded to remove TF1-235's wrist watch.[2870] On the following day, 7 January 1999, TF1-235 and his surviving family members arrived at a medical clinic for treatment.[2871]

ii. Killings and Amputations at Loko Town – Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

503. para. 1536: On 6 January 1999, TF1-331 was living in Wellington with her husband when the rebels attacked.[2872] Together with other civilians, they fled to the bush where they remained in hiding for one week.[2873] They returned to Wellington when they were told that the rebels had said that it was safe to come out of hiding. TF1-331 observed that all the houses in her neighbourhood had been torched and "everything was on fire."[2874] In a field at Loko Town, rebels grouped TF1-331, her husband and a number of civilians into a line and then shot and killed TF1-331's husband.[2875] The rebels were so many that TF1-331 was unable to estimate their number. A rebel named Yama, who was from Port Loko, cleaved a child in two with a machete. The child looked to be around six years old.[2876] Yama claimed to have made this killing as "a sacrifice for the peace" and told the civilians to "go to Tejan Kabbah and tell him we want peace."[2877]

504. para. 1537: Following this, TF1-331 was forced to place her arm on a log and after three strikes with a blunt cutlass her arm was eventually severed. TF1-331 walked in the direction of a hospital, but was stopped by a different group of rebels who thrashed her with a bottle, threatened to kill her and accused her of being the "Mother of Kabbah".[2878] An unknown person pleaded with the rebels to spare TF1-331's life, but the rebels stole Le 50.000 from her and kicked her into a ditch.[2879] TF1-331 took refuge in the bush for three days. On the fourth day, with her suppurating injury, she managed to reach the Eastern Police Station, where she lapsed into unconsciousness and was transferred to Connaught Hospital.[2880] The hospital was crowded with injured civilians and there was no medication.[2881] The witness saw many other injured civilians from various locations, most of whom had severed limbs.[2882] Among the injured she found her uncle whose foot had been severed by the rebels.[2883] TF1-331 was told by people from her neighbourhood that her sister, who had been seven months pregnant, was killed by the rebels.[2884]

iii. Killing, Looting and Abduction at a clinic – Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

505. para. 1538: TF1-235 was at a clinic in Wellington during the attack on Freetown. The clinic was full of civilians with gunshot wounds who had been attacked in their homes or while trying to flee from the east of Freetown.[2885] He observed other patients with gunshot wounds and saw a young man die.[2886] One early morning at 4am, a group of rebels entered the clinic and threatened to douse the building with petrol and set it alight and the patients, including TF1-235 and his surviving family, fled. The rebels threatened to rape the doctor's wife if he did not hand over money. The doctor was forced to give them Le 300.000 and a 50kg bag of rice.[2887] The armed men also took the belongings left behind by the fleeing patients, including what was left of TF1-235's money and jewellery, and also stole bandages, medicines and food from the clinic.[2888] The rebels abducted a boy who worked at the clinic, forcing him to accompany them with the bag of rice.[2889]

iv. Looting and Burning of TF1-235's home – Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

506. para. 1539: Following his escape from the clinic in Wellington, TF1-235 and his family found shelter in the home of a friend for several days.[2890] One night, two rebels in civilian clothing armed with a hand grenade entered the house. One of the rebels, noting the injury to TF1-235's arm, suspected him of being a Kamajor. The man told the occupants of the house that this was their "last day of grace" and threatened that he and his companion would return the next day with machetes to sever their arms to "short sleeves and long sleeves" and send the severed limbs in plastic bags to Tejan Kabbah.[2891] The second rebel meanwhile searched the house and looted the occupants' personal property.[2892]

507. para. 1540: The following day, 22 January 1999, TF1-235 and his family decided to return to their home. Upon arrival they encountered 31 of their neighbours who had sought sanctuary behind the high walls of their compound. Two days later, seven rebels, including one boy, arrived at the compound and managed to break inside with a sledgehammer. Some of the men wore combat gear while the others wore plain clothes. The occupants of the house were unarmed and wearing civilian clothing. The civilians compiled their money and surrendered it to their assailants. Some were armed with rifles, and at least one man had a pistol.[2893] The rebels torched TF1-235's house but the occupants managed to escape via the rear wall.[2894] When TF1-235 later returned to his house, it had been burned to the ground.[2895]

g. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. Killings at Kissy Police Station - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

508. para. 1541: On the morning of 6 January 1999, TF1-104 observed the bodies of a police officer and a civilian at the Kissy Police Station in Freetown.[2896]

ii. Killings and Beatings at a clinic - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

509. para. 1542: At a medical clinic in Kissy, TF1-104 treated many people who claimed to have been injured by the rebels, including one who had lost seven family members in a shooting incident at Wellington. TF1-104 witnessed the death of two patients on that day.[2897] TF1-104 also witnessed two fighters attempt to rape a nurse whom they had followed into a room and closed the door. Her screams prompted Captain Shepard, an AFRC officer, to order the two men to desist, which order they obeyed.[2898]

510. para. 1543: On 15 January 1999, TF1-104 was working at the clinic when he witnessed uniformed rebels push a man out of a car and shoot him.[2899] The witness went to the man's aid but he was dead.[2900]

511. para. 1544: Subsequently, at about 5:00pm on 18 January 1999, a group of fighters entered the clinic and accused staff of treating Kamajors and ECOMOG soldiers.[2901] They then forced approximately 200 patients, staff and visitors outside the clinic and forced them to sit with their legs spread open.[2902] The rebels hit the civilians on the legs and head with a wooden stick and shot a Nigerian man.[2903] They then removed the civilians to a nearby house and shot at them until Captain Blood told them to stop. TF1-104 was injured in this attack and 15 civilians were killed.[2904] The survivors were taken back to the clinic but later that day the rebels returned, threatening that they would return at night to kill them and burn the building.[2905]

512. para. 1545: TF1-104 escaped with his family and hid in the hills for two days.[2906] After he returned home, three rebels arrived at his home and accused him of being a soldier on account of his injury.[2907] The rebels took money from the witness and then locked him and his family in the house and set it alight.[2908] TF1-104 managed to escape.[2909]

iii. Killings and Amputations of TF1-101 and others - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

513. para. 1546: Following the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown, TF1-101 hid with his family in their home in Kissy for five to six days.[2910] When they emerged to search for food, TF1-101 and other civilians were held up at a checkpoint manned by rebels.[2911] The civilians were ordered to sit down, after which two of them were selected to be killed as a "sacrifice".[2912] The first man killed was repeatedly stabbed and his blood was collected by the rebels.[2913] The second man was shot and killed.[2914] The remaining civilians were ultimately released to return to their homes.

514. para. 1547: A few days following this incident, TF1-101 witnessed two armed AFRC fighters in the vicinity of his residence who were later joined by a female Commander and more fighters.[2915] TF1-101 heard the female Commander state that they must carry out Operation "No Living Thing". The rebels then shot and killed an elderly male passer-by.[2916] TF1-101 then heard gunshots and witnessed the deaths of two civilians.[2917] TF1-101's house, as well as other houses in the area, were torched and burned to the ground.[2918]

515. para. 1548: The following morning, on 19 January 1999, seven rebels armed with guns, a cutlass and an axe arrived where TF1-101 and other neighbours were hiding.[2919] Their leader was called "Commando".[2920] The rebels forced TF1-101 and 23 other civilian men from their hiding place to a junction where a large wooden log had been placed. One by one, Commando ordered the civilians to place an arm on the log to be amputated. A civilian who refused to comply and begged for mercy was killed by Commando by a shot to the head.[2921] Another civilian who refused to put his arm on the log was also killed.[2922] Commando then executed a further six civilians.[2923] The rebels paused for some time and took drugs as the captured civilians waited. Commando then ordered that the heads of civilians be split open and five people were killed in this way.[2924]

516. para. 1549: The rebels then forced TF1-101 to place his left hand on the wooden log and Commando ordered a junior rebel to cut it off.[2925] The junior rebel struck but the blow did not entirely amputate the hand. Taking the axe, Commando completed the amputation in two blows.[2926] He then proceeded to sever TF1-101's right hand which was completed with one swing of the axe.[2927] A rebel called Rambo arrived at the scene accompanied by other rebels attired in ECOMOG uniforms. Rambo objected to the mass violence and stated that he would punish the perpetrators. He provided TF1-101 with Le 100.000 and told him to go to the hospital and seek help.[2928]

iv. Killings at Rogbalan Mosque - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

517. para. 1550: In January 1999, a large number of men, women and children including TF1-021 gathered to pray and seek shelter at the Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy. At approximately 12:30pm some 15 to 20 fighters entered the mosque. The men were armed with guns and machetes and some had covered their heads with plastic bags while others had painted their faces.[2929] The armed men approached TF1-021 and threatened to kill him. The witness begged for his life and gave them Le 80.000, being the total sum previously collected by the congregation in anticipation of an attack.[2930]

518. para. 1551: The armed men took the money and began to fire at random, spraying bullets in all directions within the mosque.[2931] One of the gunmen stood on TF1-021, who was still alive, and said "We're not going to leave any soul around here to vote for this government for Tejan Kabbah."[2932] The gunman claimed that Kabbah was refusing to make peace with the rebels, who identified themselves by saying: "we are Junta, we are people's army."[2933]

519. para. 1552: TF1-021 survived the attack but 36 of those who had sought refuge in the mosque were killed within its walls.[2934] Some time later, TF1-021 discovered more corpses at the gates of the mosque and seven more bodies at the Islamic School nearby. In total, TF1-021 counted 71 persons killed.[2935] Later that day, TF1-021 returned to his home and that it had been burned and that his child had died in the fire.[2936]

v. Killings, Amputations and Looting of TF1-022 and others - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

520. para. 1553: On 22 January 1999 in Kissy, TF1-022 heard gunshots and saw many houses in the vicinity on fire.[2937] A rebel ran to TF1-022's gate and shouted for money. At the same time, TF1-022 heard gunshots as a woman was shot by rebels.[2938] TF1-022's brother-in-law ran outside and was himself shot and injured.[2939] While TF1-022 and five youths were carrying his injured brother-in-law to Connaught Hospital, they were captured by seven rebels, who took them to a group of other captured civilians, including a 10-year old girl who was taken as a 'wife' by one of the rebels.[2940] The rebels ordered the civilians to strip and Le 5.000 was taken from TF1-022.[2941] The civilians were then led past Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy where TF1-022 noticed a pile of bodies.[2942]

521. para. 1554: The civilians were taken to a Commander who ordered three young rebels to sever their hands.[2943] The rebels selected a person from the group of civilians and one of the three boys amputated his hand. TF1-022 was then selected by the Commander and one of his hands was severed and placed in a plastic bag. The rebels severed two fingers of the next civilian singled out and then shot and killed him.[2944] After the amputation, TF1-022 was sent away by the rebels. As he struggled home, he saw the rebels departing, taking with them many "little children" and captured women.[2945] TF1-022 later went to Connaught Hospital where he saw many other people with amputated limbs and learned of his brother-in-laws' death.[2946]

vi. Amputations and Looting of TF1-097 and others - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

522. para. 1555: TF1-097 was forced to flee to Kissy after his house in Tumbo was burned by Captain Blood in December 1998.[2947] On 6 January 1999 TF1-097 went into hiding for one week and then decided to return to Kissy to search for his sister. However, TF1-097 was captured at PWD Junction by rebels in civilian clothing.[2948] When he refused their demand for money, TF1-097 had his hands flogged twelve times by the rebels.[2949] When released, TF1-097 saw many more rebels walking with machetes, axes and wooden sticks, and also observed them torching houses.[2950]

523. para. 1556: On 21 January 1999, TF1-097, a family member and two neighbours were at the witness's house in Kissy when Captain Blood and another rebel entered the compound and threatened to set the house on fire.[2951] The two neighbours managed to escape. Captain Blood threatened that if the civilians did not pay him Le 400.000, he would cut off their hands.[2952] The rebel accompanying Captain Blood recognised TF1-097 from the burning of his house in Tumbo. As TF1-097 had no money, Captain Blood slashed his back and amputated his hand with a machete.[2953] The rebels told him to go and see Tejan Kabbah and that "he will give you your hands".[2954] Captain Blood then proceeded to amputate both hands of one of TF1-097's relatives and burned down the house.[2955] Later that night, from his hiding place, TF1-097 observed a rebel rape a number of women. He met other civilians who had been subjected to amputation, one of whom told him of his sister's rape. When TF1-097 went to a hospital the next day, he saw civilians whose limbs had been amputated.[2956]

vii. Abduction of nuns at Kissy Mental Home - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

524. para. 1557: At Kissy Mental Home, the rebels seized approximately five nuns and threatened them with execution in retribution for the escape of Archbishop Ganda and others who had been held by rebels and whom the rebels suspected would divulge information about their activities.[2957]

h. Allan Town, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. 'Forced Marriage' of TF1-023 - Allan Town, Calaba Town and Benguema– Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

525. para. 1558: On 22 January 1999, an afternoon attack on Wellington forced TF1-023 to flee to Calaba Town where she was captured with another six unarmed civilians by a group of approximately 200 armed rebels.[2958] TF1-023 and the others were taken to Allen Town where they were told that the rebels intended to use them as human shields, but that no harm would come to them.[2959] At Allen Town, the witness saw 300 to 400 rebels armed with guns, daggers and machetes as well as approximately 100 other captured civilians.[2960] The captured civilians were guarded by four SBUs.[2961]

526. para. 1559: TF1-023 remained in Allen Town for three days. On one occasion, TF1-023 was forced to watch as the rebels captured a boy named Samuel, whom they suspected of being a Kamajor, and severed both his hands and cut out his tongue.[2962] The rebels then placed a bag over his shoulders with a written message for the ECOMOG that the rebels "were around and would be back".[2963] TF1-023 testified to being terrified by this incident.[2964]

527. para. 1560: After Allen Town, TF1-023 was taken together with her cousin to Calaba Town for three days by a named AFRC fighter.[2965] Her cousin stayed with that fighter and TF1-023 was handed over to an AFRC Commander as a 'wife'.[2966] TF1-023 did not consent, but accepted the role because "they had the say."[2967] That night she was forced to strip and to have sexual intercourse with her 'husband'.[2968] As his 'wife' she continued to be forced to have sexual intercourse with the AFRC Commander, although it was against her will.[2969]

528. para. 1561: At some point in February 1999, the AFRC troops moved to Newton/Four Mile and TF1-023 had to follow her 'husband'. At Four Mile she was expected to cook, as well as to continue sexual relations with her 'husband'.[2970] TF1-023 was unable to escape from Four Mile as, on the orders of her 'husband,' she was continuously shadowed by armed guard.[2971] Approximately 400 fighters were stationed at Four Mile and any civilians who attempted to escape were punished with beatings.[2972] TF1-023 knew of ten other women who were forced into 'marriages' with the troops at Four Mile Base to officers and soldiers."[2973] TF1-023 was only able to escape from the troops in August 1999.[2974]

ii. 'Forced Marriage' of TF1-029 - Allan Town, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

529. para. 1562: On 22 January 1999, TF1-029, aged 16 at the time, was abducted in Wellington with 50 other civilians by a group of rebels who identified themselves as SLA (AFRC) and RUF fighters.[2975] The mixed group of rebels included both young children and older fighters. TF1-029 estimated the younger fighters to be between 13 and 16 years of age.[2976] The abducted civilians were forced to march from Wellington to Calaba Town and the AFRC and RUF killed people and torched houses en route.[2977] At Calaba Town, Major Arif took TF1-029 as his wife and she was forced to have sex with him.[2978] TF1-029 testified that "thousands" of women were taken and raped by the AFRC and RUF rebels. She was told that "soldiers who captured civilians had a right to rape them and make them their wives."[2979]

530. para. 1563: TF1-029 also saw ten nuns who had been abducted and forced to accompany the rebels. One of the nuns was killed in Calaba town by Col. Tito, who also shot two other nuns in their hands.[2980]

531. para. 1564: After remaining in Calaba Town for about two weeks, the group moved to Benguema where a further 100 civilians were captured.[2981] On the march from Calaba Town to Benguema, the AFRC and RUF killed babies as they did not want their cries to disclose their position.[2982] TF1-029 remained at Benguema until 10 March 1999, during which time she was raped ten times by Major Arif. She learned that other girls were also subjected to rape by the rebels and at least one civilian was killed.[2983]

532. para. 1565: Throughout February 1999, roughly 300 civilians captured from Freetown were held by AFRC rebels at Benguema, Four Mile and Newton.[2984] Most of the young girls were forced to be the 'wives' of various AFRC Commanders and were expected to care for their needs by cooking their food and having sexual relations with them, while abducted young boys were trained to be SBUs.[2985] Male captives were expected to carry out household chores, while those women who had not been taken as 'wives' also cooked.[2986]

(vi) Koinadugu District – Crimes

533. para. 1496: The Prosecution alleges that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF forces committed crimes as charged in Counts 1 to 14 in multiple locations in Koinadugu District. The time frame for Count 12 is "at all times relevant to the Indictment"[2783] which we consider to mean from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000.[2784]

534. para. 1497: The Chamber has already found in its Rule 98 Decision that no evidence was led on Counts 3 to 5 in relation to Heremakono, Kabala, Kumalu, Kurubonla, Katombo and Kamadugu;[2785] no evidence was led on Counts 6 to 9 in relation to Kabala, Heremakono and Fadugu;[2786] no evidence was led on Counts 10 to 11 in relation to Konkoba (Kontoba);[2787] no evidence was led on Count 13 in relation Heremakono, Kumala (Kamalu) and Kamadugu;[2788] and no evidence was led on Count 14 in relation to Heremakono and Kamadugu.[2789]

535. para. 1498: The Chamber heard evidence of the commission of unlawful killings, rape, sexual slavery, force marriages, mutilations, enslavement, looting and the training and use of children in active participation in hostilities in locations in Koinadugu District, including Kabala,[2790] Seraduya,[2791] Fadugu,[2792] Koinadugu town,[2793] Lengekoro,[2794] Kondembaia, Yifin, Kromanta,[2795] Alikalia,[2796] Badela,[2797] and Dankawalie.[2798]

536. para. 1499: The Chamber finds that the fighters who committed these crimes were under the command of the AFRC and Superman.[2799] The Chamber has found that at that time no joint criminal enterprise existed between the leaders of the RUF and those AFRC/RUF Commanders in Koinadugu District.[2800] Furthermore, the Chamber finds that the RUF High Command had no effective control over those fighters in Koinadugu and Bombali Districts.

537. para. 1500: The Chamber finds that these acts were primarily committed by AFRC troops under the command of SAJ Musa[2801] or Gullit.[2802] While a small number of RUF accompanied the AFRC forces in these districts,[2803] these fighters were subordinate to AFRC leaders and did not have effective control over AFRC fighters.[2804] The Chamber further finds that the AFRC forces in these districts did not take orders from RUF Commanders based in other locations.[2805] Even though Superman briefly joined the AFRC forces under the command of SAJ Musa,[2806] the Chamber is not satisfied that there existed then a common plan between the two groups as originally contemplated and as charged in the Indictment.[2807] The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the crimes in Koinadugu District cannot be attributed to the Accused for the following reasons.

538. para. 1501: First, at that time Koinadugu District was controlled primarily by AFRC troops under the command of SAJ Musa and General Bropleh from the STF.[2808] Both Commanders defected from the main body of RUF and AFRC troops following the February 1998 ECOMOG intervention.[2809] The Chamber has not heard any evidence that would suggest that RUF fighters under RUF command were present in Koinadugu District before Superman's arrival in about August 1998. However, even after Superman arrived in Koinadugu District, he had no effective control over SAJ Musa, who refused to take orders from Bockarie or Superman.[2810]

539. para. 1502: Second, the Chamber heard evidence of crimes that were committed by Superman's troops following his redeployment from Kono District to Koinadugu District after the failed Fiti-Fata mission in August 1998.[2811] The Chamber is satisfied that Superman at that point in time was no longer under the effective control of Sam Bockarie or Sesay as the RUF leadership. The Chamber finds that, two weeks after Superman's departure, Bockarie ordered all stations to cease communication with Superman,[2812] because he did not obey any orders and instructions from Bockarie or Sesay.[2813]

540. para. 1503: Third, the Chamber finds that following the departure of the AFRC forces from Kono District under the command of Gullit, the JCEthat had existed between the RUF and the AFRC as of the coup of May 1997 ceased to exist.[2814] As the Prosecution has limited itself on a pleading of a common purpose between members of the AFRC and RUF, the Chamber cannot make a finding on any JCE that may have existed between individual members of the RUF after the cessation of the common purpose between the RUF and AFRC, as pleaded in the Indictment.

541. para. 1504: In addition, the Chamber finds that the evidence does not clearly delineate the specific factions that committed the crimes in Koinadugu District. As the Chamber has found that thetroops of SAJ Musa, Superman or Gullit's were neither under the effective control of Bockarie nor any Commander of the main RUF movement and that no JCE between members of the AFRC and RUF existed, the Chamber cannot attribute any responsibility for those crimes to the Accused.

542. para. 1505: For all the above reasons the Chamber has chosen, for reasons of judicial economy, not to address and determine factual and Legal Findings for the Koinadugu crime bases. The Chamber has generally considered the evidence for other necessary findings in this case, although the Chamber reiterates that responsibility for crimes committed in Koinadugu cannot be attributed to the Accused.

(vii) Bombali District – Crimes

543. para. 1506: The Prosecution alleges that between about 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, members of AFRC/RUF committed crimes as charged in Counts 1 to 14 in multiple locations in Bombali District. The time frame for Count 12 as charged in the indictment is "at all times relevant to the Indictment"[2815], and therefore broader and not limited to between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998. The Chamber has already held that at all times relevant to the Indictment means 30 November 1996 to 15 September 2000.

544. para. 1507: The Chamber finds that the evidence adduced in relation to the crimes charged in Bombali District during the time frame specified in the Indictment are all attributable to AFRC forces under the control of Gullit.[2816] While there was a small number of RUF fighters amongst these troops, the most senior RUF Commander amongst them was Major Alfred Brown, a radio operator who was not in a position of command over fighters.[2817]

545. para. 1508: The Chamber reiterates its findings that the AFRC troops broke away from the RUF and that from May 1998 onwards no JCE existed between the leadership of those two groups. In addition the Chamber finds that the troops under the control of Gullit, O-Five and the STF were not under the effective control of Bockarie or the High Commander of the RUF. Furthermore, the Chamber finds that the AFRC forces did not receive any substantial assistance from the RUF during their operations.

546. para. 1509: For all the above reasons the Chamber has chosen, for reasons of judicial economy, not to address and determine factual and Legal Findings for the Bombali crime bases in more detail. The Chamber has, however, generally considered the evidence for other necessary findings in this case, although the Chamber reiterates that responsibility for crimes committed in Koinadugu cannot be attributed to the Accused.

547. para. 1609: The Prosecution alleges that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in numerous crimes at multiple locations in Port Loko Districts during the Indictment period. The Chamber heard evidence that AFRC forces committed crimes against civilians, including unlawful killings, sexual violence, physical violence, enslavement and looting in multiple locations in Port Loko including Nonkoba, Makambisa, Manaarma, Port Loko, and Chendekum.

548. para. 1610: Following the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown, the AFRC faction in Port Loko, known as the West Side Boys, refused to cooperate with the RUF and opposed the disarmament programme.[3074] The Chamber finds that Gullit and other members of the West Side Boys later assisted Superman in attacking Sesay in Makeni in March 1999; following this attack, Superman was based in Makeni.[3075] This attack resulted in Bockarie declaring Superman an enemy of the RUF and ceasing communication with him.[3076]

549. para. 1611: The Chamber finds that the attacks against the civilian population in Port Loko District during the Indictment period were carried out by the West Side Boys, who were led by Bazzy after the attack on Sesay in Makeni.[3077] The West Side Boys were based in the Okra Hills area.[3078] The Chamber finds that Bazzy did not take orders from anyone else at this time.[3079] We are satisfied that the participation of Gullit and other AFRC troops in the attack on Sesay, in conjunction with Bazzy's refusal to cooperate with other RUF or AFRC factions, is sufficient to establish that the AFRC in Port Loko District did not share any common plan or purpose with the RUF, and that the two groups were not participating in a joint criminal enterprise at this time.

550. para. 1612: The Chamber finds that at the time the attacks in Port Loko took place, none of the three Accused were present in Port Loko District. During this time, the Accused were based at Makeni or Magburaka.[3080] The Chamber is satisfied that the Accused did not order the attacks in Port Loko District and were not able to exercise command and control over the West Side Boys or their leaders.

551. para. 1613: The Chamber therefore finds that the Accused do not bear criminal responsibility for the actions of the AFRC in Port Loko District under any of the modes of criminal responsibility alleged by the Prosecution.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

552. para. 91: Article 3 of the Statute provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977. These violations shall include:
> a. Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment;

b. Collective punishments;

c. Taking of hostages;

d. Acts of terrorism;

e. Outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

f. Pillage;

g. The passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples;

h. Threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

553. para. 92: The Appeals Chamber noted that "Article 3, sub-paragraphs (a) to (f), and (h) of the Special Court Statute are taken directly from Article 4(2) of Protocol II, while Article 3(g) mirrors Article 3(1)(d) of Common Article 3"195 and are almost verbatim with Article 4 of the ICTR Statute.196 This Chamber observes that all of the violations in sub-paragraphs (a), (c), and (e) are found under both Additional Protocol II and Common Article 3, while the violations under sub-paragraphs (b), (d), (f) and (h) are only found under Additional Protocol II.

554. para.93: The Chamber acknowledges that the general requirements which must be proved to show the commission of war crimes pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute are as follows:

(i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged violation of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II;

(ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict;

(iii) The victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation; and

(iv) The Accused knew or had reason to know that the person was not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the act or omission.

a. The existence of an armed conflict – Applicable law – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

555. para. 94: The Chamber concludes that the application of Article 3 of the Statute requires that the alleged acts of the Accused be committed in the course of an armed conflict, and "it is immaterial whether the conflict is internal or international in nature."[197]

556. para. 95: Relying on the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Tadic case, the Chamber rules that under Common Article 3, "an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a State."[198] Therefore, the criteria for establishing the existence of an armed conflict are the intensity of the conflict and the organisation of the parties.[199] These criteria are used "solely for the purpose, as a minimum, of distinguishing an armed conflict from banditry, unorganised and short-lived insurrections, or terrorist activities, which are not subject to international humanitarian law".[200]

557. para. 96: Guided by our reasoning in the CDF Trial Judgement, the Chamber observes that Additional Protocol II contains a stricter threshold for the establishment of an armed conflict than Common Article 3.[201] Article 1 of the Protocol provides in relevant parts:

> 1. This Protocol, which develops and supplements Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 without modifying its existing conditions of application, shall apply to all armed conflicts… which take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organised armed groups which, under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to implement this Protocol.
> 2. This Protocol shall not apply to situations of internal disturbances and tensions, such as riots, isolated and sporadic acts of violence and other acts of a similar nature, as not being armed conflicts.

558. para. 97: This Chamber is therefore satisfied that where the Prosecution has alleged an offence that exists only under Additional Protocol II, then the following conditions must be met in order to establish the element of armed conflict:

> The dissident armed forces or other organised groups:
>
> (ii) Were under responsible command;
>
> (iv) Were able to implement Additional Protocol II.[202]

559. para. 98: The applicable test for determining the existence of an armed conflict has already been discussed in paragraph 95 in the context of Common Article 3. The Chamber notes, therefore, that any armed conflict satisfying the higher threshold of the Additional Protocol II test would automatically satisfy the threshold under Common Article 3. The term "armed forces" is to be defined broadly.[203] The armed forces or groups must be under responsible command which implies a degree of organisation to enable them "to plan and carry out concerted military operations, and to impose discipline in the name of a de facto authority."[204] They must also be able to control a part of the territory of the country enabling them "to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to apply Additional Protocol II."[205]

560. para. 99: The Chamber is of the opinion that international humanitarian law applies from the beginning of such armed conflicts and extends beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached, or, in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement is achieved.[206] "Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply in the whole territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there."[207]

b. Nexus – Applicable law – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

561. para. 100: The Chamber reiterates its position that "what distinguishes a war crime from a purely domestic crime is that a war crime is shaped by or dependant upon the environment – the armed conflict – in which it is committed".[208] As to the precise nature of the nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, the Chamber, consistent with the decisions of the Appeals Chambers of the ICTY and of the ICTR, rules that the nexus requirement is fulfilled if the alleged violation was closely related to the armed conflict.[209] Where the violation alleged has not occurred at a time and place in which fighting was actually taking place, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that "it would be sufficient […] that the alleged crimes were closely related to hostilities occurring in other parts of the territories controlled by the parties to the conflict."[210] The crime "need not have been planned or supported by some form of policy" and the armed conflict "need not have been causal to the commission of the crime, but the existence of an armed conflict must, at a minimum, have played a substantial part in the perpetrator's ability to commit it, his decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed or the purpose for which it was committed."[211] The nexus requirement is satisfied where the Accused acted in furtherance of or under the guise of the armed conflict.[212] "The expression 'under the guise of the armed conflict' does not mean simply 'at the same time as an armed conflict' and/or 'in any circumstances created in part by the armed conflict.'"[213]

562. para. 101: The Chamber subscribes to the jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals that the factors to be considered in determining whether or not the act in question was sufficiently related to the armed conflict include, inter alia: "the fact that the [Accused] is a combatant; the fact that the victim is a non-combatant; the fact that the victim is a member of the opposing party; the fact that the act may be said to serve the ultimate goal of a military campaign; and the fact that the crime is committed as part of or in the context of the [Accused's] official duties".[214] It is also the law that "the determination of a close relationship between particular offences and an armed conflict will usually require consideration of several factors, not just one."[215]

563. para. 102: The Chamber acknowledges that Common Article 3 applies to "[p]ersons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause" while Additional Protocol II applies to "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities". We hold that these phrases are so similar that they should, therefore, be treated as synonymous and be categorised as "all persons not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation".[216] Similarly, collaborators or police officers are protected persons for so long as they do not directly participate in hostilities.[217]

564. para. 103: The Chamber further recalls that the test applied by the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Tadic case was whether, at the time of the alleged offence, the alleged victim of the offence was directly taking part in "those hostilities in the context of which the alleged offences are said to have been committed."[218] Adopting the position taken by the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Tadic Trial Judgement, this Chamber holds that it does not serve any useful purpose to embark upon an exhaustive definition of the categories of persons who may be said not to be taking a direct part in hostilities.

565. para. 104: The Chamber observes that Article 13(3) of Additional Protocol II provides that civilians are immune from attack for as long as they do not take a direct part in hostilities.[219] The question of whether civilians have participated directly in hostilities has to be decided on the specific facts of each case and there must be a sufficient causal relationship between the act of participation and its immediate consequences.[220] The Chamber takes the view that the direct participation should be understood to mean "acts which by their nature or purpose, are intended to cause actual harm to the enemy personnel and material."[221]

566. para. 105: The Chamber recognises that the status of the victim as a person not taking direct part in the hostilities is an element of the war crime.[222] This implies that the Prosecution must show that the mens rea of the Accused encompassed the fact that the victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities.[223]

(ii) War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

567. para. 964: The Accused are charged with eight counts of war crimes, comprising acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2), unlawful killings (Counts 5 and 17), outrages upon personal dignity (Count 9), mutilations (Count 10), pillage (Count 14) and the taking of hostages (Count 18). The Prosecution alleges that a state of armed conflict existed in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment and a nexus existed between this conflict and the war crimes charged.[1886]

568. para. 965: We recall that the general requirements for the proof of war crimes are as follows:

(i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged violation of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II;

(ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict;

(iii) The victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation; and

569. para. 966: However, the Prosecution has charged three counts found solely in Additional Protocol II: collective punishment, acts of terrorism and pillage.[1888] The Chamber thus considers that the Prosecution must also prove the elements of Article 1 of Additional Protocol II, namely that the dissident armed forces or other organized groups participating in the conflict:

(i) Were under responsible command;

(ii) Were able to exercise such control over a part of their territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations; and

(iii) Were able to implement Additional Protocol II.[1889]

570. para. 967: Since Additional Protocol II applies only in situations of non-international armed conflict, the Chamber also finds it necessary to determine the nature of the conflict in Sierra Leone.

571. para. 968: The Chamber has set out below its findings pertaining to the existence and nature of the armed conflict. Unless otherwise stated in our Factual Findings, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, that the victim was not taking direct part in hostilities at the time and that the perpetrator knew or had to reason to know this.

a. State of Armed Conflict in Sierra Leone - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

572. para. 969: The Chamber has taken judicial notice of the fact that the "conflict in Sierra Leone occurred from March 1991 until January 2002."[1890] This period covers all crimes charged in the Indictment. The Chamber therefore rejects the submission of the Kallon Defence that no armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged attacks on UNAMSIL personnel (Counts 15 to 18) from about 15 May 2000 until about 15 September 2000.[1891]

573. para. 970: The Chamber further took judicial notice of the fact that the RUF began "organized armed operations" in March 1991 and that the RUF, AFRC and CDF were involved in the armed conflict in Sierra Leone.[1892]

b. Nature of the Sierra Leone Conflict - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

574. para. 971: Pursuant to Common Article 2 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, an international armed conflict exists whenever there is resort to armed force between two or more High Contracting Parties, which in this context refers exclusively to States.[1893]

575. para. 972: As the AFRC and RUF were internal insurgent groups, the conflict in Sierra Leone does not prima facie satisfy the test in Common Article 2. However, consistent with the jurisprudence of our sister tribunal the ICTY, we hold that a non-international conflict may become international if "another State intervenes in that conflict through its troops, or alternatively if […] some of the participants in the internal armed conflict act on behalf of that other State."[1894]

576. para. 973: The Sesay and Kallon Defence submit that the involvement of ECOMOG, a military force comprising soldiers from various West African States fighting under a mandate from ECOWAS, transformed the armed conflict into an international one.[1895] We do not agree. As ECOMOG fought against the AFRC/RUF at the behest of the internationally recognized Kabbah Government, its intervention cannot be classed as recourse to armed force between two States.[1896]

577. para. 974: Relying on the second requirement for internationalisation, the Kallon and Sesay Defence submit that the support extended to the RUF by Charles Taylor was such that the RUF were in fact acting on behalf of, or belonging to, the Republic of Liberia.[1897] The Chamber observes that the Defence did not at any stage adduce evidence to establish this theory.

578. para. 975: The Chamber endorses the principle that an organised armed group may be said to be acting on behalf of another State when that State exercises overall control over the group.[1898] In order to satisfy this test, it must be shown that the Republic of Liberia:

> (i) Provided financial and training assistance, military equipment and operational support, and
> (ii) Participated in the organisation, co-ordination or planning of military operations.[1899]

579. para. 976: Prior to July 1997, Taylor's National Patriotic Front for Liberia (NPFL) was itself a rebel organisation and did not represent the Republic of Liberia. Although evidence was adduced demonstrating long-standing links between Liberians including Charles Taylor and the RUF,[1900] this evidence was not sufficiently comprehensive nor compelling for the Chamber to determine the precise nature and extent of the relationship after July 1997. In our opinion, the evidence does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that Taylors interactions with the RUF leadership were such that he was in a position to exercise overall control over the RUF as an organisation.

580. para. 977: The Chamber therefore finds that the armed conflict in Sierra Leone was of a non-international character.[1901]

c. General Requirements of AP II - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

581. para. 978: On the basis of our Factual Findings pertaining to the command structure of the RUF, the Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF were under responsible command and that the RUF had the capacity to implement the provisions of Additional Protocol II on the territory that they seized and controlled.

582. para. 979: We further find that the control exercised by the RUF over Kailahun District for the duration of the armed conflict was critical to its capacity to wage war. The RUF was headquartered in Kailahun District first at Giema and then at Buedu[1902] and from there the RUF High Command communicated with troops situated in other areas of Sierra Leone.[1903] An armoury and airfield were were established in Kailahun for the production and distribution of materials including arms and ammunitions.[1904] The RUF relied on its extensive network of "government" farms in Kailahun District to provide food for its troops.[1905]

583. para. 980: The RUF's control over Kailahun District enabled it to carry out sustained and concerted military operations, at times jointly with AFRC forces. Major operations include the joint AFRC/RUF attack on Koidu Town in February 1998;[1906] the Fiti Fata Operation in August 1998;[1907] and the attacks on Makeni and Koidu in December 1998.[1908]

584. para. 981: The Chamber therefore finds that the requirements of Additional Protocol II have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. We recall that an armed conflict satisfying this higher threshold would necessarily constitute an armed conflict under Common Article 3.[1909]

d. Law of Occupation - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on General Requirements

585. para. 982: The Sesay Defence submitted that the level of control exercised by the RUF over Kailahun District effectively made the RUF an occupying power under International Humanitarian Law.[1910] The Chamber considers this submission to be misconceived. The rights and duties of occupying powers, as codified in the 1907 Hague Convention and the Fourth Geneva Convention, apply only in international armed conflicts.[1911] This is also the case at Customary International Law, which defines an occupying power as a military force present on the territory of another State as a result of an intervention.[1912]

586. para. 983: The Sesay Defence contended that limiting the applicability of the law of occupation to international armed conflicts deprives civilian populations under the control of internal insurgent groups the protections they would be afforded if they were under the occupation of a foreign power.[1913] However, as is evident from its general requirements, Additional Protocol II was designed to regulate situations where insurgent groups exercise control over part of the territory of a State.[1914] Common Article 3, which applies in all circumstances in all armed conflicts and is accepted as safeguarding the elementary considerations of humanity,[1915] continues to apply in times of occupation.[1916]

587. para. 984: The core of the Sesay Defence's arguments pertaining to the law of occupation concern the permissibility of forced civilian labour and the right to requisition private and public property in occupied territories.[1917]

588. para. 985: Even assuming, arguendo, that the law of occupation applied, we recall that enslavement is a crime against humanity. The rights of an occupying power under international humanitarian law are therefore no answer to the charges in Count 13. Nonetheless, we consider it important to draw attention to the basic conditions regulating the right of an occupying power to compel protected persons to work. Firstly, an occupying power may only force civilians to labour in order to secure the basic needs and living conditions of the civilian population or the needs of the occupying army. Further conditions include that the workers must be over 18 years of age, the workers must be paid a fair wage and the work must be proportionate to their physical and intellectual capacities.[1918]

589. para. 986: In our opinion, the use of forced labour by the RUF in Kailahun District violated each of these conditions. We have found that the RUF forced civilians of all ages to work without compensation and that if workers were unable to perform their assigned tasks they were liable to be beaten or shot.[1919] In addition, while the RUF did provide the civilian population with certain basic facilities and services, it also relied on forced labour to facilitate its war effort at the expense of providing for the needs of the civilian population.[1920] The Chamber thus considers the use of forced labour by the RUF to be entirely inconsistent with the rights of an occupying power.

590. para. 987: The Sesay Defence also advanced the argument that the RUF enjoyed the rights of an occupying power to seize or requisition private and public property for the needs of the occupying army.[1921] While reiterating our finding that the law of occupation did not apply to the RUF's reign in Kailahun District, we observe that these rights are strictly limited. In particular, requisitions in kind must be in proportion to the resources of the country and must be paid for insofar as possible in cash, or alternatively a receipt must be given and the amount owed paid as soon as possible.[1922] It is our opinion that the overwhelming evidence in this case demonstrates that looting was for the personal benefit of individual RUF fighters or their Commanders. Civilians were shot for refusing to surrender palm wine and cassette players.[1923] The scale of items appropriated was such that civilians were abducted to assist the rebels and compelled to transport the stolen goods.[1924] Accordingly, the Chamber finds the argument of the Sesay Defence entirely untenable.

591. para. 988: The Chamber concludes that the rights and duties of occupying powers under International Humanitarian Law did not regulate the conduct of the RUF in Kailahun District or any other district during the non-international armed conflict that existed in Sierra Leone.

(iii) Applicable Law - Acts of Terrorism

592. para. 110: The Indictment charges the Accused under Count 1 with acts of terrorism as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the crimes set forth in paragraphs 45 through 82 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone."[226]

593. para. 111: The prohibition against acts of terrorism in Article 3(d) of the Statute is taken from Article 4(2)(d) of Additional Protocol II which prohibits acts of terrorism as a violation of the "fundamental guarantees" of humane treatment under the Additional Protocol.[227] Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II is a narrower derivative of Article 4(2)(d).[228] Relying on the reasoning in the CDF Appeal Judgement, this Chamber considers that the intention of the parties was to interpret Count 1 as being a charge under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II.[229]

594. para. 112: The Chamber adopts with the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Galic which ruled that the prohibition of terror against the civilian population was a part of customary international law from at least the time it was included in those treaties[230] and that the offence gave rise to individual criminal responsibility pursuant to customary international law.[231]

595. para. 113: In the Chamber's view, the specific elements of crime of acts of terrorism can be described as follows:

(i) Acts or threats of violence;

(ii) The Accused wilfully made the civilian population or individual civilians not taking direct part in hostilities the objects of those acts or threats of violence; and

(iii) The acts or threats of violence were carried out with the specific intent of spreading terror among the civilian population.[232]

596. para. 114: The first element describes the actus reus of the offence. The offence includes not only acts or threats of violence committed against protected persons, but also "acts directed against installations which would cause victims terror as a side-effect."[233] The Chamber is of the opinion that the rationale is clearly that of protecting persons from being subjected to acts of terrorism by whatever means.

597. para. 115: Acts of terrorism may be "established by acts or threats of violence independent of whether such acts or threats of violence satisfy the elements of any other criminal offence."[234] The Appeals Chamber clarified that acts of burning are capable of spreading terror even though they do not satisfy the elements of pillage.[235] Conduct that is adequately pleaded in the Indictment will be considered under this offence, even if such conduct does not satisfy the elements of any other crimes charged in the Indictment.[236]

> The acts or threats of violence constitutive of the crime of terror shall not however be limited to direct attacks against civilians or threats thereof but may include indiscriminate or disproportionate attacks or threats thereof. The nature of the acts or threats of violence directed against the civilian population can vary; the primary concern […] is that those acts or threats of violence be committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population.[237]

599. para. 117: The Appeals Chamber has stated that while "actual terrorisation of the civilian population is not an element of the crime, the acts or threats of violence must be such that they are at the very least capable of spreading terror" which is to "be judged on a case-by-case basis within the particular context involved."[238] Terror is to be understood as the causing of extreme fear.[239] The Chamber is of the view that the Prosecution is not required to prove that the act or threat caused death or serious injury to body or health within the civilian population.[240]

600. para. 118: The Chamber notes that the second element requires that the Accused "wilfully" made the civilians the object of an act or threat of violence. The Appeals Chamber has held that this "requires the Prosecution to prove that an accused acted consciously and with intent or recklessness in making the civilian population or individual civilians the object of an act or threat of violence. Negligence, on the other hand, is not enough."[241]

601. para. 119: The third element of the offence of acts of terrorism is the specific intent to spread terror amongst the civilian population. The Chamber emphasises that the Prosecution must prove not only that the perpetrators of the acts or threats of violence "accepted the likelihood that terror would result from their illegal acts or threats", but also that this was the result specifically intended.[242]

602. para. 120: The Chamber acknowledges that civilian populations are usually frightened by war and that legitimate military actions may have a consequence of terrorising civilian populations. This offence is not concerned with these types of terror: it is meant to criminalise acts or threats that are specifically undertaken for the purpose of spreading terror in the protected population.[243]

603. para. 121: The specific intent to spread terror need not be the only purpose behind the act or threat. The ICTY Appeals Chamber clarified in Galic that:

> [T]he purpose of the unlawful acts or threats to commit such unlawful acts need not be the only purpose of the acts or threats of violence. The fact that other purposes may have coexisted simultaneously with the purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population would not disprove this charge, provided that the intent to spread terror among the civilian population was principal among the aims. Such intent can be inferred from the circumstances of the acts or threats, that is from their nature, manner, timing and duration.[244]

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal Acts and Events - Pleading

604. para. 411: Given that the Sesay and Kallon Defence have objected to the particularity with which material facts were pleaded in the Indictment, and in light of the evidence presented by the Prosecution, the Chamber deems it appropriate to consider whether the criminal acts listed in the Indictment form the only basis upon which the criminal liability of the Accused may be proven.[792] The Chamber observes that some paragraphs of the Indictment allege responsibility for only certain, specific criminal acts.[793] The Prosecution, nevertheless, has led evidence of a variety of potentially criminal acts which were not pleaded in the relevant paragraphs of the Indictment.[794]

605. para. 412: The criminal acts which form the basis for a conviction are material facts which must be pleaded in the Indictment.[795] The Chamber, therefore, finds that the Indictment is defective where it failed to specify the criminal acts which the Prosecution alleged amounted to the crimes charged in the relevant Counts of the Indictment.[796]

606. para. 413: In determining whether the Prosecution may cure such defects, the Chamber considers that the procedural history of this case is relevant.[797] In the Chamber's pre-trial Decision on the Form of the Sesay Indictment, the Chamber held that the phrase "but not limited to those events" – located in the paragraph immediately preceding the numbered Counts in each section of the Indictment – was "impermissibly broad and also objectionable in not specifying the precise allegations against the Accused. […] In the Chamber's considered view, the use of such a formulation is tantamount to pleading by ambush."[798] The Chamber required the Prosecution to delete the impermissibly broad phrase in the Indictment, or to provide a Bill of Particulars listing specific additional events alleged against the Accused in each Count.[799] The Prosecution filed a Bill of Particulars on 3 November 2003[800] and deleted the said phrase from the Consolidated Indictment, which it filed on 5 February 2004.[801]

607. para. 414: In the Bill of Particulars, the Prosecution specified the additional criminal acts on which it intended to rely to prove the guilt of the Accused in relation to various Counts in the Indictment. The Prosecution further particularised acts of sexual violence in Koinadugu, Bombali and Port Loko Districts as well as Freetown and the Western Area by adding the unacceptably vague phrase "other forms of sexual violence".[802]

609. para. 416: In respect to the enslavement charge,[805] the Prosecution specified only additional locations, but not additional forms of forced labour in the Bill of Particulars.[806] The Prosecution also added an allegation that Sesay was responsible for the burning of civilian buildings in Bombali District in support of the pillage charge.[807]

610. para. 417: The Chamber finds it significant that in its February 2004 Request to Amend the Indictment, the Prosecution requested permission to add allegations that the Accused were responsible for the 'forced marriage' of large numbers of women,[808] to extend the timeframe pleaded in relation to allegations of forced labour in Kono District,[809] and to make several other minor corrections.[810] However, the Prosecution did not seek to amend the Indictment to include allegations that the Accused were responsible for any further criminal acts in relation to other Counts. In addition, the Prosecution removed the phrase "other forms of sexual violence" in paragraph 55, which specifies the acts of sexual violence underlying what are now Counts 6 to 9 of the Indictment in Kono District.[811]

611. para. 418: As noted above, the Prosecution can cure a vague indictment by clear, consistent and timely disclosure.[812] However, the Prosecution was ordered by the Chamber to specify exhaustively the particular criminal acts for which it alleges the Accused bear responsibility. Where the Prosecution proceeds to do so, the Chamber considers that the Accused are entitled to prepare their defence on the basis that the list of alleged criminal acts pleaded in the Indictment are, in fact, exhaustive.[813] This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the Prosecution sought to amend the Indictment, but only to add one additional type of criminal act. Entering a conviction based on evidence of criminal acts entirely different than those particularised in the Indictment would allow the Prosecution to amend its original allegations without seeking leave to amend the Indictment.[814] The amendment procedure was designed to give Defence Counsel the opportunity to make submissions, and to give the Chamber a chance to evaluate the potential impact of the proposed changes to the ability of the Defence to prepare their cases. In these circumstances, there is no question of curing a vague, general allegation through subsequent disclosure.

612. para. 419: The Chamber will enter a conviction only in relation to criminal acts which were pleaded in the Indictment and for which the Prosecution has proven the liability of the Accused beyond reasonable doubt.[815] Where the Prosecution has pleaded the criminal acts alleged to underpin the liability of the Accused using the unacceptably vague phrases "other forms of sexual violence" however, the Chamber will consider whether the defect has been cured in our findings on the liability of the Accused, below.

b. Locations - Pleading

613. para. 420: The Sesay and Kallon Defence both argued in their Final Trial Briefs that theIndictment lacks minutiae particulars, is vague and therefore defective, because the Prosecution pleaded a non-exhaustive list of locations where crimes occurred in each District in Sierra Leone specified in the Indictment.[816] In addition, both Defence teams argued that Count 12 is defective as it is impermissibly vague for alleging that criminal acts were committed "throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone".[817]

614. para. 421: The Prosecution argued that the degree of specificity with which an indictment must plead the locations of crimes will depend on the nature of the case. There may be cases where the specific locations of criminal activities cannot be listed.[818] The Prosecution contended that the Indictment specified that the crimes alleged occurred within the territory of Sierra Leone and that particular criminal acts were alleged to have occurred in named Districts, which are "discreet, narrow locations".[819] Further, as the Indictment pleads locations "including" certain named places, the Defence was on notice from the beginning of the trial that the list of named locations where criminal events took place was not exhaustive.[820] The Prosecution also argued that it was entitled to rely on the Chamber's pre-trial Decision on the Sesay Indictment.[821] In the Prosecution's submission, the Defence received notice of the specific locations in which crimes were alleged to have occurred through various disclosures of evidence such as witness summaries and statements, which cured any defects that the Chamber may find in the Indictment.[822] The Prosecution requested that the Chamber consider evidence in unpleaded locations to support the conviction of the Accused, but in the alternative, submitted that the Chamber could rely on this evidence to establish a consistent pattern of conduct and the existence of widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population.[823]

615. para. 422: The Chamber explicitly upheld the form of the pleading of the locations of criminal acts in the Indictment in its pre-trial decisions, including in the Sesay Form of the Indictment Decision.[824] The Chamber will therefore not revisit the matter. In addition, we note that the AFRC Appeals Judgement explicitly held that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to limit evidence that falls outside locations not specifically mentioned in the Indictment.[825] Therefore, we endorse the Sesay Decision on Form of Indictment as the degree of particularity with which locations must be pleaded will vary depending on the circumstances of the specific case.[826] We do not find that the Defence has demonstrated the existence of a clear error of reasoning in the Sesay Form of Indictment Decision and we therefore decline to reconsider that decision.

c. Timeframes – Pleading

616. para. 423: The Chamber notes that the Sesay and the Kallon Defence have both argued that the timeframes provided in the Indictment do not provide sufficiently precise notice of the timing of the crimes alleged against them.[827] Both Defence Counsels argued that the Chamber should not enter a conviction where there is uncertainty as to whether a crime or an event falls within the timeframe pleaded in the Indictment.[828]

617. para. 424: The Prosecution, on the other hand, argued that the timeframes in the Indictment are sufficient to provide notice to the Defence, and emphasised that the timeframes pleaded are approximate. The Prosecution argued that time is not a material element of a crime and the guilt of an accused does not depend on time being proven.[829] Therefore, the Prosecution argues that where witnesses are contradictory or uncertain as to the time of events, it is not necessary for it to prove beyond reasonable doubt that an offence was committed within the timeframe specified in the Indictment in order to obtain a conviction. In the Prosecution's submission, where the evidence indicates that the evidence occurred outside the Indictment timeframe, the Chamber must consider whether the Defence was prejudiced by being misled as to the allegation it must answer or by being required to answer a less specific allegation.[830] Only if the evidence refers to an event so clearly outside the Indictment timeframe that it could not be considered to refer to the same event as that pleaded in the Indictment, would the Defence suffer the requisite prejudice to bar a conviction.[831]

618. para. 425: The Chamber considers that these submissions raise two interconnected issues: first, whether the Indictment pleaded the dates of the alleged crimes with sufficient specificity; and, second, whether and under what circumstances a conviction may be established for crimes which are not proven beyond reasonable doubt to have occurred within the relevant timeframe pleaded in the Indictment. The Chamber will address these two objections in turn.

619. para. 426: In our pre-trial Sesay Decision on Form of Indictment, the Chamber rejected the Sesay Defence argument that the formulation "at all times relevant to this Indictment" was insufficiently specific.[832] The precision with which the dates of crimes must be pleaded varies from case to case.[833] Where the scale of the crimes and the fallibility of witness recollection prevent the Prosecution from pleading timeframes with a greater degree of specificity, less information may be acceptable.[834] Thus, a broad date range does not, in and of itself, invalidate a pleading.[835] The timeframe pleaded in the Indictment, however, needs to provide the Accused with sufficient information for them to understand the nature of the charges and to prepare their defence.[836] We find it sufficient, given the factual context of this conflict and the inability of many Witnesses to provide precise times for events, that the structure of the Indictment and the timeframes pleaded therein correspond to specific events, attacks or phases of the conflict.

620. para. 427: With respect to the pleading of the continuous crimes pleaded in Counts 6 to 9 in Kailahun District, 12 and 13, the evidence led by the Prosecution alleges criminal responsibility for a widespread practice that continued over a long period of time. The evidence of individual victims is illustrative of the offences, but the gravamen of the charges does not hinge on the victimisation of any individual person at any particular time.

621. para. 428: The Chamber considers, therefore, that this manner of pleading did not adversely affect the ability of the Accused to prepare their defence.

622. para. 429: In the present case, the relevant time periods in the Indictment are related to specific, identifiable events and the Indictment does not, itself, contain any references to the dates of individual criminal acts. The nature of the evidence and the factual circumstances of this conflict made it impracticable for the Prosecution to have pleaded the timeframes with greater specificity.[837] However, this mode of pleading affects the degree to which the Chamber is prepared to rely upon evidence not proven beyond reasonable doubt to have occurred within the pleaded timeframes. The Chamber considers that the timeframes pleaded in the Indictment assist the Accused in distinguishing between the conduct for which they are alleged to be criminally responsible for and other, similar conduct for which no responsibility is alleged.

623. para. 430: Where there is a conflict in the evidence, with some credible evidence putting a crime within the timeframe pleaded in the Indictment in respect of that crime and some credible evidence putting the crime outside the relevant timeframe, the Chamber will enter a conviction in relation to the alleged crime in question only if the Accused was not prejudiced or misled by the discrepancy.[838]

624. para. 431: Where all of the credible evidence places a particular crime outside the Indictment timeframe, this evidence may still form the basis for a conviction where the crime is proven to have occurred within a reasonable approximation of the timeframe, provided that the discrepancy did not prejudice the Accused.[839] The Chamber considers that such crimes must, at the very least, have occurred as part of an attack or specific series of events to which the Indictment timeframe relates. In particular, we consider that crimes which are proven to have occurred, or may have occurred, at the time of the August 1998 Fiti Fata mission in Kono District, the December 1998 attack on Koidu Town in Kono District, the December 1998 attack on Makeni in Bombali District and its aftermath, will not be considered as forming the basis for a criminal conviction. The Chamber is of the view that the Accused were not on notice that they were charged with crimes committed during these attacks, and, therefore, their ability to defend themselves against these charges was prejudiced.[840]

625. para. 432: The Chamber was entirely unable to determine a timeframe for many of the events recounted by Witnesses during trial. The Chamber is strongly of the view that it would be unfair to the Accused to convict the Accused of crimes where the evidence is entirely indeterminate as to the date of their occurrence.

d. Conduct Charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – Pleading

626. para. 436: The Kallon Defence submitted that (i) the Indictment charges conduct as a violation of both Common Article 3 and Protocol II, where the proscribed conduct is only expressly prohibited by Additional Protocol II (Counts 1, 2, 14)[846] and (ii) it charges conduct which is a violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II without specifying which of the two distinct bodies of law it is relying upon (Counts 5, 9, 10, 17, 18).[847] It submitted that as the requirements for an "armed conflict" differ under Additional Protocol II and Common Article 3, the Indictment is defective in failing to specify which body of law the Prosecution is relying on with respect to each offence.[848]

627. para. 437: The Kallon Defence also submitted that the Indictment does not plead the nature of the armed conflict that existed within Sierra Leone, which it argued is a material fact that must be pleaded.[849] It further argued that the Pre-Trial Brief makes several allegations that are consistent with an international armed conflict and that the Prosecution has therefore pleaded that the conflict is of an international nature. It submitted that the Prosecution has thus pleaded a case that precludes liability for crimes which fall solely under Additional Protocol II,[850] and that Kallon should be acquitted therefore on Counts 1, 2, 5, 9, 10 and 14.[851]

628. para. 438: With respect to the first argument, the Chamber notes that the Accused are charged with offences under the Statute of the Special Court, not crimes under Additional Protocol II or Common Article 3. The Counts of the Indictment charge the Accused with the relevant subsection of Article 3 of the Statute, and in so doing simply quote the title and preamble of this Article of the Statute which states that crimes under this Article are "[v]iolation[s] of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II". The Chamber is of the view that as the Prosecution has clearly identified in each Count the relevant subsection of Article 3 with which the Accused are charged, there is no further requirement that it set out whether the offence charged is prohibited under Additional Protocol II or Common Article 3.

629. para. 439: The Chamber observes that in the CDF Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber noted that the Indictment did not specify which provision of Additional Protocol II or Common Article 3, and thus which definition of the crime applied with respect to the crime of terrorism. However, it held that this was acceptable as long as it was clear that it was the intention and understanding of all of the parties from the outset of the trial which definition of terrorism applied.[852]

630. para. 440: The Chamber is of the view that while notice must be provided in the Indictment, or by subsequent disclosure, of which definition of a particular offence applies, there is no general requirement that the Indictment must specify whether a crime falls under Additional Protocol II or Common Article 3 with respect to which threshold of armed conflict applies.

631. para. 441: The Chamber emphasises that we will consider the characterisation of each crime in the Applicable Law section and in our Legal Findings. Article 3 of the Statute enumerates a list of crimes, without differentiating which are prohibited under Common Article 3 and which are prohibited under Additional Protocol II. In the Applicable Law section which follows, the Chamber clearly delineates which crimes listed in Article 3 are prohibited under Additional Protocol II, which crimes are prohibited under Common Article 3 and which are prohibited under both. The Chamber also distinguishes the criteria for establishing an armed conflict under Common Article 3 and under Additional Protocol II.

632. para. 442: In determining whether the chapeau requirement of an "armed conflict" under Article 3 of the Statute is met, the Chamber will consider for each crime prohibited under Common Article 3, whether the criteria for the establishment ("the applicability test") of an "armed conflict" under Common Article 3 have been met, and for each crime prohibited under Additional Protocol II, whether the higher threshold for the establishment of an "armed conflict" under Additional Protocol II has been met.

633. para. 443: With respect to the second argument, the Chamber notes that the Appeals Chamber has previously held that "Article 3 of the Statute is explicitly taken from Common Article 3 to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II".[853] The Appeals Chamber has further held that:

> The distinction [between the rules applicable in internal armed conflict and the rules applicable in international conflict] is no longer of great relevance in relation to the crimes articulated in Article 3 of the Statute as these crimes are prohibited in all conflicts. Crimes during internal armed conflict form part of the broader category of crimes during international armed conflict. In respect of Article 3, therefore, the Court need only be satisfied that an armed conflict existed and that the alleged violations related to the armed conflict.[854]

634. para. 444: The Chamber made a similar finding in its Rule 98 decision, where it held that "it is immaterial whether the conflict is internal or international in nature".[855]

635. para. 445: Given thee statements by the Appeals Chamber we find that the nature of the armed conflict is not a material fact in the context of war crimes chargeable under our Statute.

636. para. 446: The Chamber further notes that the Trial Chamber in the Dragomir Milosevic case has held that where the Prosecution makes no claim that there is an international armed conflict, and the alleged armed conflict is internal in nature, the nature of the conflict is not a material fact that must be pleaded.[856]

637. para. 447: For the reasons discussed below in the Legal Findings section, the Chamber does not find that the allegations in the Pre-Trial brief are consistent with an international armed conflict.[857] It therefore does not find that the Prosecution has pleaded that the conflict is of an international nature. The Chamber therefore rejects the argument of the Kallon Defence that the Indictment is defective in this respect.

e. Acts of Terrorism – Pleading

638. para. 450: The Sesay Defence submitted that the pleading of Counts 1 and 2 in the Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief is limited to the crimes enumerated in Counts 3 to 14.[862] It therefore submitted that the Chamber cannot consider conduct that does not amount to a crime under these Counts in order to establish liability for acts of terrorism or collective punishments.[863] In particular, the Sesay Defence alleged that the Chamber should not consider "burning" in relation to the Count of terrorism, as it does not constitute one of the crimes enumerated in Counts 3 to 14 of the Indictment.[864]

639. para. 451: The Indictment states at paragraph 44 that the Accused "committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 45 through 82 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population [and] also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population".

640. para. 452: The CDF Indictment contains a similarly worded paragraph, stating that the CDF "committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 22 to 26 and charged in Counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian populations of those areas [and] also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population."[865]

641. para. 453: The Appeals Chamber in the CDF Appeal Judgement found that this paragraph was "clear in establishing that the material facts supporting criminal responsibility for the Count of terrorism were the material facts pleaded in relation to the Counts pleaded in the Indictment".[866] It therefore held that conduct that was adequately pleaded in the Indictment should have been considered under this offence, even if such conduct did not satisfy the elements of the crimes enumerated in paragraph 28.[867]

642. para. 454: The Sesay Defence submitted, however, that the CDF Indictment differs from the RUF Indictment, in that it specifically pleads other acts which go beyond the enumerated crimes, namely "threats to kill, destroy and loot", which were not pleaded in the RUF Indictment.[868] Paragraph 28 of the CDF Indictment states clearly, however, that the crimes enumerated in the Counts included "threats to kill, destroy and loot". The Chamber therefore opines that the "threats to kill, destroy and loot" did not constitute additional acts going beyond the crimes listed in the CDF Indictment, but were rather a specification of some of the enumerated crimes. The Chamber therefore finds that the difference in the wording of the CDF and RUF Indictments is immaterial.

643. para. 455: Guided by the Appeals Chamber's finding in CDF, the Chamber therefore finds that paragraph 44 of the Indictment clearly establishes that the material facts supporting criminal responsibility for the Counts of terrorism and collective punishment are the material facts pleaded in relation to the Counts pleaded in the Indictment. Conduct that is adequately pleaded in the Indictment will therefore be considered under the offences of terrorism and collective punishment, even if such conduct does not satisfy the elements of any other crimes charged in the Indictment. In particular, as elaborated more fully in the Applicable Law section, we find that acts of burning are capable of spreading terror even though they do not satisfy the elements of pillage.[869]

(v) Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

644. para. 1266: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and physical violence (Counts 10 and 11) between about 14 February 1998 and about 30 June 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 14 February 1998 and about January 2000, in various locations throughout Kono District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

645. para. 1267: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2435] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

646. para. 1340: The Prosecution alleges that members of the AFRC/RUF committed the above described acts of unlawful killings, sexual violence, physical violence, enslavement and pillage "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population of Sierra Leone."[2495] In relation to Kono District, the alleged acts of terrorism took place between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998.

a. Unlawful Killings as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

647. para. 1341: The Chamber recalls its findings on unlawful killings in Kono District, and in particular:

(i) AFRC/RUF fighters killed an unknown number of civilians during the February/March 1998 attack on Koidu Town;[2496]

(ii) The killing in Koidu Town of 30 to 40 civilians by Rocky and his men in April 1998;[2497]

(iii) The killing in Koidu Town by rebels of a 15 year old boy by amputating and throwing him into a latrine pit in April 1998;[2498]

(iv) The killing in Tombodu of an unknown number of civilians by Savage and Staff Alhaji;[2499]

(v) The killing in Tombodu Bridge of Chief Sogbeh by Officer Med;[2500]

(vi) The killing in Wendedu of Sata Sesay's eight family members in May and June1998;[2501]

(vii) The killing of at least 29 civilians in Penduma by orders of Staff Alhaji in April 1998;[2502] and

(viii) The killing of six captured civilians in Yardu in April 1998.[2503]

648. para. 1342: The Chamber is satisfied that there is an overwhelming amount of evidence that point to the execution of policies that promoted violence, targeted civilians, civilian objects in order to spread terror among the civilian population.

649. para. 1343: The unlawful killings noted above were all committed widely and openly, without any rationale objective, except to terrorise the civilian population into submission. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators of these unlawful killings acted with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population. Consequently, we find that these acts constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

650. para. 1344: In relation to the unlawful killing of Waiyoh, the Nigerian woman who was killed in Wendedu, we find that this killing was done on the specific suspicion of her possible collaboration with ECOMOG given her nationality and the AFRC/RUF paranoia regarding their enemies.[2504] Consequently, we find that this killing was not done with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population.

651. para. 1345: Similarly, for the unlawful killing in Koidu Buma[2505] and near PC Ground[2506], we find that the Prosecution has not established that these crimes were committed with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population and decline to make the corresponding finding on Count 1 for these crimes.

b. Sexual Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

i. General Considerations – Sexual Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

652. para. 1346: In making its Legal Findings on sexual violence as an act of terrorism committed against the civilian population, the Chamber has considered the body of evidence adduced in relation to the various Districts of Sierra Leone as charged in the Indictment.

653. para. 1347: The Chamber observes that sexual violence was rampantly committed against the civilian population in an atmosphere in which violence, oppression and lawlessness prevailed. The Chamber finds that the nature and manner in which the female population was a target of the sexual violence portrays a calculated and concerted pattern on the part of the perpetrators to use sexual violence as a weapon of terror. These fighters employed perverse methods of sexual violence against women and men of all ages ranging from brutal gang rapes,[2507] the insertion of various objects into victims' genitalia,[2508] the raping of pregnant women[2509] and forced sexual intercourse between male and female civilian abductees.[2510] In one instance, the wife of TF1-217 was raped by eight rebels as he and his children were forced to watch. TF1-217 was ordered to count each rebel as they consecutively raped his wife, "he had no power not to" as the rapists laughed and mocked him.[2511] After the ordeal, her rapists took a knife and stabbed her in front of the entire family.[2512]

654. para. 1348: The Chamber is satisfied that the manner in which the rebels ravaged through villages targeting the female population effectively disempowered the civilian population and had a direct effect of instilling fear on entire communities. The Chamber moreover finds that these acts were not intended merely for personal satisfaction or a means of sexual gratification for the fighter. We opine that the savage nature of such conduct against the most vulnerable members of the society demonstrates that these acts were committed with the specific intent of spreading fear amongst the civilian population as a whole, in order to break the will of the population and ensure their submission to AFRC/RUF control.

655. para. 1349: We note that the physical and psychological pain and fear inflicted on the women not only abused, debased and isolated the individual victim, but deliberately destroyed the existing family nucleus, thus undermining the cultural values and relationships which held the societies together.[2513] Victims of sexual violence were ostracised, husbands left their wives, and daughters and young girls were unable to marry within their community.[2514] The Chamber finds that sexual violence was intentionally employed by the perpetrators to alienate victims and render apart communities, thus inflicting physical and psychological injury on the civilian population as a whole.[2515] The Chamber finds that these effects of sexual violence were so common that it is apparent they were calculated consequences of the perpetrators' acts.

656. para. 1350: The Chamber recalls the testimony of TF1-029 describing the general perception among the rebels that "soldiers who captured civilians had a right to rape them and make them their wives."[2516] The Chamber considers this statement indicative of the atmosphere of terror and helplessness that the rebel forces created by systematically engaging in sexual violence in order to demonstrate that the communities were unable to protect their own wives, daughters, mothers, and sisters.[2517] Rebels invaded homes at random and raped women.[2518] In this way the AFRC and RUF extended their power and dominance over the civilian population by perpetuating a constant threat of insecurity that pervaded daily life and afflicted both women and men.[2519]

657. para. 1351: The Chamber has further found that countless women of all ages were routinely captured and abducted from their families, homes and communities and forced into prolonged exclusive conjugal relationships with rebel as 'wives.'[2520] The practice of 'forced marriages' and sexual slavery stigmatised the women, who lived in shame and fear of returning to their communities after the conflict.[2521] The Chamber finds that the pattern of sexual enslavement employed by the RUF was a deliberate system intended to spread terror by the mass abductions of women, regardless of their age or existing marital status, from legitimate husbands and families.

658. para. 1352: In light of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that rape, sexual slavery, 'forced marriages' and outrages on personal dignity, when committed against a civilian population with the specific intent to terrorise, amount to an act of terror. The Chamber considers that the evidence on the record establishes that members of the AFRC/RUF regularly committed such acts of sexual violence as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population of Sierra Leone.

ii. Koidu Town – Sexual Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

659. para. 1353: The Chamber recalls that an unknown number of civilians were raped in Koidu sometime in February and March 1998.[2522] These rapes were committed on a regular basis by rebels who forcibly entered random civilian homes at night. The Chamber is satisfied on this basis that the perpetrators of these acts of violence against civilians used rape as a deliberate tactic to terrorise the civilian population of Koidu. The Chamber accordingly finds that AFRC/RUF rebels committed an unknown number of acts of terrorism in Koidu in February and March 1998 as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

iii. Rapes in Other Locations – Sexual Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

660. para. 1354: We find that the rape by Staff Alhaji in Tombodu, the rapes in Sawao, Penduma, Bumpeh and Bomboafuidu and the outrages on personal dignity committed in Bumpeh and Bomboafuidu reflect a consistent pattern of conduct openly exhibited by the rebel forces in their encounters with civilians.[2523] The Chamber notes that in each case the rapes were committed in front of other civilians. In Penduma, women were lined up and rebels selected their victim one by one. A husband was forced at gun point to witness the rape of his wife. In Bumpe, victims were forced to laugh and told their lives were over prior to being compelled to have intercourse with each other. In Sawao, as in Penduma, the rapes of multiple women were committed at the same time as men were killed or had their limbs amputated. In Bomboafuidu, a husband and wife and their daughter were openly selected from a group of civilians as the rebels' victims.

661. para. 1355: The Chamber is satisfied from this evidence that the public nature of the crimes was a deliberate tactic on the part of the perpetrators to instil fear into the civilians. Given the geographic and temporal proximity of these crimes to each other, and to the killings and amputations in Kono District, the Chamber finds that the rebels regularly used rape and other forms of sexual violence to spread terror among the civilian population of Kono District. We accordingly find that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

iv. Sexual Slavery, 'Forced Marriage' as Acts of Terrorism – Sexual Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

662. para. 1356: The Chamber recalls its general considerations on sexual violence as acts of terrorism.[2524] As found above, the Chamber is satisfied that because of the consistent pattern of conduct demonstrated in the exercise of the sexual violence the above findings of sexual slavery and 'forced marriage' were committed with the requisite and specific intent to terrorise the civilian population. Accordingly, we find that the Prosecution has proven Count 1 beyond reasonable doubt in relation to these acts.

(c) Physical Violence as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

663. para. 1357: The Chamber is satisfied that the amputations in Tombodu, Yardu and Penduma, the amputations and beatings in Sawao and the carvings in Kayima and Tomandu were acts of violence directed against civilians with the specific intent of terrorising the civilian population.[2525] The amputations and carvings practised by the AFRC/RUF were notorious. These crimes served as a permanent, visible and terrifying reminder to all civilians of the power and propensity to violence of the AFRC and RUF. The Chamber finds that the perpetrators of these crimes specifically intended by their conduct to terrorise the civilian population. The Chamber thus finds that the amputations in Tombodu, Sawao, Penduma and Yardu and the carvings in Kayima are acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

664. para. 1358: With regard to the beating of TF1-097 in March 1998 and the flogging of TF1-097 and his brother in April 1998,[2526] the Prosecution has not adduced evidence to establish that the specific intent of the perpetrators was to terrorise the civilian population. Similarly, it was not shown in the evidence that the mutilation of TF1-015 was specifically intended to terrorise the civilian population, but rather as a capricious punishment instilled on him by Captain Banya.[2527] For these reasons, we decline to make the corresponding finding on Count 1 for these crimes.

(d) Enslavement as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

665. para. 1359: The Chamber recalls its findings regarding the widespread enslavement of civilians in Kono District.[2528] The Chamber does not discount that the abduction and detention of persons from their homes and their subjection to forced labour, including forced mining and living in RUF camps, under conditions of violence spread terror among the civilian population. However, the Chamber finds this "side-effect" of terror is not sufficient to establish the specific intent element of the crime with regards to these acts.

666. para. 1360: The Chamber finds that the primary purpose behind commission of abductions and forced labour was not to spread terror among the civilian population, but rather was primarily utilitarian or military in nature. Even where abductions and forced labour occurred simultaneously with other acts of violence otherwise examined by this Chamber with regards to the crime of terror, the Chamber finds that such acts cannot be considered to have been committed with the primary intent to terrorise civilians.

(e) Looting and Burning as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

(i) Attack on Koidu Town and Tombodu – Looting and Burning as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

667. para. 1361: The burning of an unknown number of civilian homes during the attack on Koidu in February/March 1998 and in Tombodu in the period from February to April 1998 was intended to punish civilians for failing to support the AFRC/RUF and to prevent civilians from remaining in these towns.[2529] The Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators directed these acts of violence against civilian property with the intent of spreading terror among the civilian population as charged in Count 1.

(ii) Retreat from Koidu Town – Looting and Burning as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

668. para. 1362: In contrast to the attack on Koidu and the burnings in Tombodu, the evidence pertaining to the retreat from Koidu in mid-April 1998 does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that the burnings were acts of violence wilfully directed at civilian property which the perpetrators specifically intended to cause extreme fear amongst the civilian population. The Chamber observes that, according to the evidence, houses of fighters were burned to punish them for refusing to fight and infrastructure was burned to prevent its use by ECOMOG forces who were advancing on Koidu. The evidence is insufficient to establish whether the burning of civilian homes was intended to terrorise the remaining civilians or to prevent ECOMOG from using the town as a base. We therefore find that the specific intent element of Count 1 has not been proved in respect of these acts of burning and decline to make a finding for this act.

(iii) Koidu Town - Looting and Burning as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

669. para. 1363: The Prosecution has not established beyond reasonable doubt that the pillage of civilian property during the attack on Koidu constitute acts of terrorism. The declaration of Operation Pay Yourself suggests that AFRC/RUF rebels appropriated civilian property for their personal gain. In addition, there is some evidence that property such as vehicles may have been appropriated for logistical and military purposes. Although the pillaging occurred in the context of an attack on the civilian population of Koidu in which numerous crimes were committed, the Chamber is not satisfied that the specific intent of the perpetrators was to spread terror.

670. para. 1364: Similarly, it can be inferred that the rebels who appropriated funds from the Tankoro Bank in Koidu were motivated by profit. In the Chamber's view, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the conduct of the perpetrators was neither capable of spreading terror among the civilian population, nor designed to do so. Accordingly, we find that the Prosecution has not proved Count 1 beyond reasonable doubt in relation to these acts.

(iv) Tombodu - Looting and Burning as Acts of Terrorism – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

671. para. 1365: The Chamber recalls that AFRC/RUF rebels unlawfully appropriated property from TF1-197, who engaged in petty trading near Tombodu.[2530] Although the rebels repeatedly harassed TF1-197 and other civilians with whom he traded, the Chamber does not find that the specific intent of the rebels was to terrorise the civilian population. Rather, we find that the rebels were primarily motivated by the opportunity to appropriate money and goods. Accordingly, we find that the Prosecution has not proved Count 1 beyond reasonable doubt in relation to these acts.

(v) Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

672. para. 1096: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and physical violence (Counts 10 to 11) between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, in various locations throughout Kenema District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).[2136]

673. para. 1097: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraphs were committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Kenema District at the relevant time.[2137] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

674. para. 1122: The Prosecution alleges that members of the AFRC/RUF committed unlawful killings, acts of physical violence and enslavement in Kenema District as part of a successful campaign to terrorise the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2158]

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

675. para. 1123: The Chamber has found that a number of violent crimes were committed in Kenema Town against victims suspected of being Kamajors or collaborating with the Kamajors, specifically:

(i) the corpses behind a house on Mambu Street;[2159]

(ii) the person killed at the NIC building;[2160]

(iii) the alleged Kamajor boss killed during "Operation No Living Thing,"[2161]

(iv) the killing of B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and four other civilians;[2162]

(v) the beatings and ill-treatment inflicted on TF1-129 by Sesay, Captain Lion and other AFRC/RUF rebels during his first arrest;[2163] and

(vi) the beatings of suspected collaborators in January and February 1998.[2164]

676. para. 1124: We find that it is evident from the victims' occupations, the fact that the ICRC came to enquire about TF1-129's arrest and the fact that the Kamajors attempted to rescue the detainees from the Kenema Police Station, that a number of the victims were prominent members of civil society and were targeted on this account. Moreover, AFRC/RUF fighters publicised these crimes, notably by impaling B.S. Massaquoi's severed head on a pole in Kenema Town, using a civilian's intestines as a checkpoint, and singing as they took a captured civilian to be killed.

677. para. 1125: The Chamber is satisfied that these crimes were intended to illustrate the gruesome repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with enemies of the RUF and so to terrorise and subdue the population. The Chamber thus finds that the crimes were committed with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population. Accordingly, the Prosecution has established the elements of Count 1 in respect of these crimes in Kenema Town and we find that they constitute acts of terrorism.

678. para. 1126: The Chamber observes that individual acts of violence, even when committed in the context of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population, may be committed without the primary purpose of furthering this campaign. Although the unlawful killing of Mr Dowi and the beating of TF1-122 are acts of violence directed against civilians, these acts were committed in response to conduct that aggravated the perpetrators: in both cases the victims intervened to prevent looting. Accordingly, the Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators of the unlawful killing of Mr. Dowi and the beating of TF1-122 intended by their acts to spread terror among the civilian population in general. The Chamber finds that the elements of Count 1 have not been established and concludes that these acts do not constitute acts of terrorism.

b. Tongo Field – Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

679. para. 1127: The killing at Lamin Street was a wilful act of violence directed against a civilian.2165 The Chamber finds that the shooting of one civilian in a crowd at a public demonstration displays in such circumstances the specific intent to spread terror among the civilians present and the civilian population of Tongo Field in general. This is especially so in this context where civilians were protesting against the AFRC/RUF forces. The Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators intended to impart a clear public message that such protests would be met with violence. The Chamber thus finds this killing to constitute an act of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

680. para. 1128: In relation to the killing of the Limba man, the Chamber considers that the perpetrators demonstrated a wanton disregard for human life typical of the AFRC/RUF forces.2166 However, the Prosecution has not adduced sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the perpetrators of this apparently isolated crime specifically intended to spread terror among the civilian population of Tongo Field. The Chamber accordingly does not find this killing to constitute an act of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

681. para. 1129: In the context of the widespread enslavement at Tongo Field, we find that the perpetrators of the killings of civilians at Cyborg Pit specifically intended by their conduct to spread terror among the civilian population in order to create an environment conducive to absolute obedience.2167 The Chamber thus finds that the multiple incidents of violence at Cyborg Pit involving the killings of over twenty civilians; twenty-five civilians; fifteen civilians and three civilians constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

682. para. 1130: Moreover, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the enslavement of hundreds of civilians by AFRC/RUF fighters at Cyborg Pit was an act of violence committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population.2168 The Chamber finds that the massive scale of the enslavement, the indiscriminate manner in which civilians were enslaved and the brutal treatment of the victims were circumstances capable of instilling, and intending to evoke, extreme fear in the civilian population of Tongo Field. The Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has established the necessary elements of Count 1 in relation to the enslavement of civilians by AFRC/RUF forces at Cyborg Pit and that this crime constitutes an act of terrorism, as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

(vi) Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

683. para. 1031: The Prosecution alleges that members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with the Accused committed unlawful killings, looting and burning in Bo District between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997 with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population.

a. Tikonko

684. para. 1032: In the Chamber's view, the burning of numerous houses in the first attack on Tikonko[2003] and the burning of more than 500 houses during the second attack on Tikonko[2004] were not directed at any military or other legitimate objective. Rather, the Chamber finds that the burnings were acts of violence directed against civilian property which were intended to cause terror among the civilians of Tikonko and constitutes acts of terrorism as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

685. para. 1033: The Chamber is of the opinion that the manner in which civilians were killed in Tikonko demonstrates the perpetrators' intent to spread terror amongst the population as a whole. Over 200 persons were killed and civilians were targeted in their homes and in a school.[2005] We further note that the mutilation of the corpse of a civilian who had been shot in the chest, with his head severed and his legs broken, was an act intended to instil terror in those who witnessed the result.[2006] Finally, the fighters while leaving Tikonko were singing "those people would know us today."[2007] The Chamber is satisfied on the basis of this evidence that the killings in Tikonko also constitute acts of terror, as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

b. Sembehun

686. para. 1034: The Chamber is not satisfied that the looting of money from Ibrahim Kamara[2008] was committed with the intent to spread terror among the civilian population in general. The Chamber therefore finds that this act of pillage does not constitute an act of terrorism under Count 1 of the Indictment.

687. para. 1035: The Chamber finds that the burning of over 30 houses in Sembehun and the killing of Tommy Bockarie[2009] were acts of violence willfully directed against the civilian population. As we observed above, these acts served no discernible purpose apart from terrorising the civilian population. The Chamber notes the close proximity of this attack to the attacks on Tikonko and Gerihun; the public insult of the section chief Ibrahim Kamara as a "fucking civilian"; and the actions of the troops in firing indiscriminately around the town.[2010] On the basis of these facts, the Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators specifically intended to spread terror among the civilian population of Sembehun. The Chamber finds that the burning of homes and killing of Tommy Bockarie constitute acts of terrorism as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

c. Gerihun

688. para. 1036: The Chamber finds that the killings of Paramount Chief Demby, Pa Sumaila and an unknown number of civilians, which took place in the vicinity of public places such as the market in Gerihun,[2011] are acts of violence willfully directed at the civilian population. The Chamber finds that the targeting of the Paramount Chief, the most prominent member of the community, was an act capable of spreading terror among the civilian population. The Chamber further recalls the evidence of TF1-004 that when the attack commenced, civilians were running and searching for places to hide.[2012] The Chamber concludes that this evidence, coupled with the proximity of the attack to the attacks on Sembehun and Tikonko, establishes that the specific intent of the perpetrators was to spread terror among the civilian population of Gerihun, We find that the killings in Gerihun constitute acts of terrorism as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

689. para. 1037: For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber is satisfied that the burnings in Tikonko and Sembehun and the unlawful killings in Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

(vii) Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

690. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

691. para. 1445: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2748] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

692. para. 1490: The Prosecution alleges that members of the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes described above, specifically unlawful killings, sexual violence, abductions, forced labour, "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population" and "to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF."[2780] In relation to Kailahun District, the alleged acts of terrorism and collective punishment took place "at all times relevant to [the] Indictment, which we deem to mean from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000.[2781]

a. Killings of 63 Civilians Accused of Being Kamajors – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

693. para. 1491: The Chamber finds that the killing of the 63 civilians near the roundabout in Kailahun Town by members of the RUF on the orders of Bockarie and in the presence of other senior RUF members including Gbao, was an act violence committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilians population. The Chamber concludes that this mass killing constitutes an act of terrorism, as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

694. para. 1492: The Chamber also concludes that the killing of the 63 civilians was committed with the aim of indiscriminately punishing civilians perceived to be Kamajors or collaborators.

The Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that this act constitutes collective punishment, as charged in Count 2 of the Indictment.

b. Sexual Violence and Enslavement in Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

695. para. 1493: The Chamber recalls its general observations on sexual violence as acts of terrorism.[2782] The Chamber is satisfied that the consistent pattern of conduct as demonstrated in our findings on sexual slavery and 'forced marriage' were committed with the requisite specific intent to terrorise the civilian population in Kailahun District. Accordingly, we find that these acts constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1.

696. para. 1494: The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators of the crimes of enslavement in Kailahun District, in relation to forced farming, acted with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population. We therefore find that the elements of Count 1 have not been established in respect of these acts.

697. para. 1495: The Prosecution has not adduced evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC/RUF rebels who committed the crimes of rape, sexual slavery, 'forced marriage,' outrages upon personal dignity and enslavement in Kailahun District did so with the specific intent of collectively punishing the victims for acts for which some or none of them may have been responsible. The Chamber therefore finds that these crimes did not constitute acts of collective punishment as charged in Count 2.

(viii) Freetown and the Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

698. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

699. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

700. para. 1596: The Prosecution alleges that between 6 January and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes described above, specifically unlawful killings, sexual violence, amputations, abductions, burning and looting "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population."[3050]

701. para. 1597: The Chamber has found that the infliction of violence on civilians was a primary objective of the attacking fighters in Freetown and the Western Area.[3051] The Chamber further finds that it has been established beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC Commanders including Gullit, Bazzy, and Five-Five ordered the targeting of civilians and destruction of property for the purpose of intimidating the population, seeking international publicity and spreading terror. Such policies instilled in the rebel fighters a sense of revenge against the civilian population, ECOMOG forces and the Kabbah Government that led directly to widespread violence, chaos and terror during the attack on Freetown. In particular, we take note of the policy of gori-gori, which involved the killing of civilians, the amputation of limbs and the destruction of government property.[3052]

702. para. 1598: The Chamber is satisfied that the AFRC fighters executed this policy that promoted violence, targeted civilians and spread terror among the civilian population. In this respect, we recall in particular the following evidence:

(i) an AFRC Commander admitted that he was following orders after he burned down the house of a witness;[3053]

(ii) rebels threatened to douse with petrol and burn the clinic in Wellington in which the civilians were hiding and receiving treatment, before proceeding to loot the clinic;[3054]

(iii) rebels who found civilians in hiding said that this was their "last day of grace" as they would come back the next day to chop off their arms and send their arms to Tejan Kabbah, before they proceeded to loot the house the civilianswere in;[3055]

(iv) rebels cleaved a child in two with a machete as "a sacrifice for peace" and then told the civilians present to "go to Tejan Kabbah and tell him that [the rebels] want peace;"[3056]

(v) rebels threatened to kill a civilian woman after beating her and amputating her hand, accusing her of being the "Mother of Kabbah;"[3057]

(vi) two men were murdered in Kissy, under the guise of a "sacrifice" in public in front of civilians who were then left to go home;[3058]

(vii) civilians were used as 'human shields' by rebels in Wellington;[3059]

(viii) rebels severed both arms and the tongue of a young boy named Samuel and placed a bag on the boy with a message to ECOMOG that they "were around and would be back;"[3060] and

(ix) rebels amputated the hands of civilians and told them to go and see Tejan Kabbah so that he would give them back their hands.[3061]

703. para. 1599: The Chamber also notes that many witnesses attempted to hide from the rebels in the bushes, or in cellars, or in neighbour's houses. We find that these are the actions of a civilian population in terror, a consequence of the practice of the AFRC rebels to spread fear within the civilian population.

704. para. 1600: The Chamber takes cognizance of the indiscriminate nature and terrifying effect of the amputations during this particular episode in the Sierra Leone conflict. The Chamber finds from the evidence adduced, in particular the testimony of TF1-093 and TF1-334, that amputations were carried out on a massive scale and following orders from AFRC Commanders including Five-Five to target civilians.[3062]

705. para. 1601: Similarly, the Chamber recalls the repeated claims by witnesses of burnt properties and houses, including those where TF1-235, TF1-104 and TF1-097 were hiding.[3063] We recall the expert evidence that 85% of the buildings in eastern Freetown were burned.[3064] We find, notwithstanding that damage may be expected in armed conflict, that such widespread, systematic and indiscriminate burning of civilian property was committed with the specific intent of spreading terror among the civilian population. We find that such acts of burning of property constitute acts of terrorism as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

706. para. 1602: The Chamber also considers the testimony of TF1-029 regarding the claim of rebels that "soldiers who captured civilians had a right to rape them and make them their wives."[3065] Coupled with our findings in relation to Count 6 above, the Chamber finds that the widespread and systematic rape of women instilled fear and a sense of insecurity among the civilian population. The deliberate and concerted campaign to rape women constitutes an extension of the battlefield to the women's bodies, a degrading treatment that inflicts physical, mental and sexual suffering to the victims and to their community. We find that widespread and systematic sexual violence, including rape, constitutes an act of terrorism as charged under Count 1 of the Indictment.

707. para. 1603: The Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators of the crimes committed in Freetown acted with the intent to spread terror among the civilian population.

708. para. 1604: For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber finds that the unlawful killings, sexual violence, physical violence, abductions, forced labour, threats, looting and burning described above constitute acts of terrorism as charged in Count 1 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District

712. para. 428: As an introductory remark, the Appeals Chamber notes that the crimes in Kono District were found to have been committed after the ECOMOG intervention on 14 February 1998 ousted the AFRC/RUF Junta from Freetown. The Trial Chamber found that AFRC/RUF troops launched a failed attack on Kono District in the second half of February, but that around 1 March 1998 they get to capture Koidu Town.[1066] After this successful attack, the AFRC and RUF were found to have organised an integrated command structure in Koidu Town, which included the JCE members Johnny Paul Koroma, Sesay, Superman and Bazzy.[1067] The Trial Chamber found that in early April 1998 ECOMOG troops forced the AFRC/RUF to retreat from Koidu Town.[1068]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

713. para. 83: The Trial Chamber stated as a matter of law that conduct that was adequately pleaded in the Indictment would be considered under the offences of acts of terrorism and collective punishments, even if such conduct does not satisfy the elements of any other crimes charged in the Indictment.[168] In these grounds, Sesay does not contest the holding that, as a matter of law, acts not amounting to one of the offences listed in Counts 3-14 could be the basis of a conviction for acts of terrorism or collective punishments; rather, he contests the holding that the Indictment provided him with adequate notice that the acts of terrorism and collective punishments, as pleaded in Count 1 and Count 2, included such acts, and in particular acts of burning.

714. para. 84: The Trial Chamber's finding that Counts 1 and 2 included acts of burning was based in part on the Appeals Chamber's decision in regard to the legal character of acts of terrorism and on the pleading of that crime in the Fofana and Kondewa Indictment.[169] The Appeals Chamber held that: (i) acts of terrorism need not involve acts that are otherwise criminal under international criminal law, (ii) whether the Trial Chamber should have considered acts of burning as acts of terrorism turned on the pleading in the Indictment, (iii) the material facts which supported Count 6 (acts of terrorism) of the indictment in that case were the material facts pleaded in relation to Counts 1 to 5 of the indictment, including "threats to kill, destroy and loot," and (iv) the Trial Chamber should have considered all conduct that was adequately pleaded in the Indictment, including acts of burning, irrespective of whether it satisfied the elements of any other crime.[170]

715. para. 85: The material facts pleaded in relation to Counts 1 to 5 of the Fofana and Kondewa Indictment include "threats to kill, destroy and loot," and as a consequence of that pleading the Appeals Chamber found that the Trial Chamber erred in only considering crimes charged and found to have been committed as acts of terrorism.[171] It found that this error resulted from the Fofana and Kondewa Trial Chamber's exclusion of the phrase "threats to kill, destroy and loot" from its interpretation of the pleading of the count charging acts of terrorism. Since the holding in Fofana and Kondewa rested in part on the notice provided by the phrase "threats to kill, destroy and loot," and the Indictment in this case omits that phrase, it cannot be said that the Indictment has provided notice to the Accused in the same manner.

716. para. 86: It is undisputed that the Indictment in this case charged acts of burning as a crime under Count 14.[172] Whether the Indictment also provided notice that acts of burning were charged as acts of terrorism and collective punishments turns on a reading of the Indictment as a whole, and in particular the provisions relevant to the pleading of the material fact of acts of burning.[173]

717. para. 87: Paragraph 44 of the Indictment states that the Accused "committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population." In the text after paragraph 44, the Indictment refers to the conduct charged as "these events" and this phrasing is used in relation to each of the counts in the Indictment which each allege that the accused incurred individual criminal responsibility for their acts or omissions in relation to "these events ... for the crimes alleged below."[174] Use of the expression "these events" in this manner indicates that it does not refer to the "crimes" themselves, since this would result in an illogical construction. Rather, the phrase "these events" as used in paragraph 45 and elsewhere in the Indictment refers to the conduct alleged under the relevant Count.

718. para. 88: The Indictment provides further notice to the accused that destruction and burning are charged as acts of terrorism and collective punishments. In paragraph 42, under the heading "Charges," the Indictment alleges that:

> attacks were carried out primarily to terrorise the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for [their conduct.] ... The attacks included ... looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes – dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.

719. para. 89: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Indictment provided adequate notice to Sesay that acts of burning were charged as acts of terrorism and collective punishments.

720. para. 132: Kallon challenges the pleading of his liability as a superior for crimes in Kono District. The Appeals Chamber notes that he was convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute of the following crimes in Kono District:

> (ii) Sexual slavery (Count 7) in Kissi Town, Kono District;

(iii) Other inhumane acts (forced marriage) (Count 8) in Kissi Town, Kono District;

(iv) Outrages upon personal dignity (Count 9) in Kissi Town, Kono District;

(v) Enslavement (Count 13) in relation to events in unspecified locations in Kono District;

721. para. 133: Kallon makes general submissions that he lacked notice that he was alleged to have superior responsibility for crimes committed in Kono District, but he fails to provide substantiating arguments.[257] His submissions are at odds with a plain reading of the Indictment. It charges that Kallon "was a senior officer and Commander in the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces,"[258] and that when he was a "Battle Field Inspector, … he was subordinate only to the RUF Battle Group Commander, the Battlefield Commander, the leader of the RUF … and the leader of the AFRC."[259] Kallon was BFI at the times relevant to his convictions for crimes in Kono.[260] The Indictment further charges that in his position, Kallon "exercised authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces"[261] and that he "is responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates in that he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and … failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof."[262] The Indictment expressly lists locations in Kono District as those at which the crimes charged under Counts 6-9 and 13 were committed[263] and states that by his "acts or omissions in relation to these events, … MORRIS KALLON …, pursuant to … Article 6.3. of the Statute, [is] individually criminally responsible for" the crimes charged under Counts 6-9 and 13.[264]

722. para. 134: In relation to sexual violence, forced marriages and acts of terrorism at Kissi Town in Kono District, Kallon additionally argues that his subordinates at Kissi Town "were never sufficiently or at all particularized."[265] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that in addition to the pleading of Kallon's superior position, discussed above, the Indictment states that the crimes were committed by "members of AFRC/RUF" at "Kissi-town (or Kissi Town)… and AFRC/RUF camps such as … Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp."[266] The Indictment, therefore, puts Kallon on notice of the charge that ARFC/RUF members who were his subordinates at Kissi Town committed the crimes charged in Counts 6-9. Kallon fails to argue how this pleading did not sufficiently identify his subordinates.

723. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

724. para. 877: The Trial Chamber found that acts of terrorism were committed in Bo,[2278] Kenema,[2279] Kailahun,[2280] and Kono Districts.[2281] In Bo,[2282] Kenema,[2283] Kailahun,[2284] Kono Districts,[2285] Kallon incurred Article 6(1) JCE liability for crimes committed under Count 1.

725. para. 883: Kallon submits that the Trial Chamber "erred in law by relying on the burning of civilian homes in Rembodu [sic][2293] and Koidu Town not pleaded in the indictment. This occasioned prejudice to the Accused preparation for defence as he had no notice of these occasions and crimes."[2294] As a preliminary matter, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber makes no reference to the location "Rembodu" in its judgment. The Appeals Chamber therefore understands Kallon to contend that he lacked notice of the crimes because Koidu Town was not a named location in the Indictment under Count 14, which pertained to acts of burning.

726. para. 884: The Indictment particularises the charge under Counts 14 in relation to Kono District as follows:

> Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned.[2295]

727. para. 885: The relevant question on appeal is whether the pleading of locations of acts of burning in Kono District as "in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando" without naming Koidu Town, is sufficiently specific to allow Kallon to prepare his defence for alleged JCE liability for acts of burning as terrorism in Koidu Town.

728. para. 886: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the specificity required for the pleading of locations will depend on factors including those previously discussed.[2296] Kallon was convicted for acts of burning as acts of terrorism pursuant to his participation in the JCE. His liability for these acts derives significantly from his conduct in relation to other events and crimes, including those committed in locations in Kono that were pleaded with sufficient specificity.[2297] Much of his culpable conduct did not occur in Koidu Town, and therefore the pleading of the location does not require a high degree of specificity for Kallon's ability to prepare his defence with respect to his culpable conduct.

729. para. 887: In regard to his notice of the alleged criminal acts in Koidu Town, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that nonexhaustive pleading of locations may be adequate in light of the "sheer scale" of the alleged crimes.[2298] Therefore, in this case, Kallon had adequate notice notwithstanding the nonexhaustive pleading of locations.[2299] The Appeals Chamber has not found error in the Trial Chamber's general approach to applying the exception,[2300] and Kallon has not offered any argument as to why this exception to the requirements for pleading specificity should not apply to the pleading of acts of burning in Koidu Town, in view of the fact that his liability is pursuant to his participation in the JCE. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Justices Winter and Fisher dissenting, reject Kallon's submission.

(ii) Pleading – Dissents

a. Justice Fisher:

730. para. 65 (p.529): In Ground 16, Kallon contends he lacked notice of acts of burning as acts of terrorism in Koidu Town. Sesay similarly objects in his Ground 8. Acts of burning were charged under Counts 1, 2 and 14,[92] but none of these counts names Koidu Town as a location.[93] The Appeals Chamber denied these grounds and reasoned that because much of Kallon's conduct that gave rise to his JCE liability for the crimes did not occur in Koidu Town, the location did not need to be pleaded with greater specificity for Appellants to prepare their defence.

731. para. 66 (p.529-530): In my view, this reasoning is correct only to the extent that an accused's ability to provide certain defences, such as alibi, depend on his ability to challenge evidence of his presence at the location where his culpable conduct was alleged to have taken place.[94] The accused, however, is entitled to prepare a defence against both the allegation that the crime occurred and the allegation that he is liable for the crime (i.e., "the nature and cause of the charges"[95]). To defend against the former, he must have adequate notice of the location of the offence, which would not vary as a result of the mode of liability charged. Thus, the Majority's inquiry should not have ended with its examination of the form of the accused's participation in the crime. It should have also examined whether the other factors it identified led to the conclusion that the accused had sufficient notice of the location of the crimes.

732. para. 67 (p.530): In applying those factors, I consider that the failure to plead Koidu Town as the location of burning as acts of terrorism and collective punishment rendered the Indictment defective as to this criminal incident. In contrast to the systemic looting described above, the burnings of civilian houses did not happen simultaneously in many locations within a larger area which was sufficiently pleaded. Instead, as found by the Trial Chamber, it was restricted to Koidu Town[96] in order to punish civilians for failing to support the AFRC/RUF.[97] The only other location in Kono District in which the Trial Chamber found burnings was Tombodu, a village which was much smaller than Koidu Town and removed by some considerable distance. Tombodu was specifically pleaded in the Indictment.[98] Koidu Town, the seat of Kono District and the site of significant destruction by burning, was not. There was nothing in the Indictment to place Sesay or Kallon on notice that they were being charged with the crimes of acts of terrorism and collective punishments for the large scale burning of Koidu Town, crimes for which they were ultimately convicted.

733. para. 70 (p.531): The Majority concludes, I believe wrongly, that the Trial Chamber was correct when it declined to review on appeal the adequacy of the pleading of locations and relied instead on its pre-trial decisions on the form of the Indictment. That Trial Court decision, which the Majority upholds, relied on the mode of liability and in addition the "sheer scale" exception without inquiring further as to the necessity for, or the practicability of, alleging particular locations. It concluded that pleading entire districts or using phrases "such as" and "including but not limited to" was "acceptable if the reference is … to locations but not otherwise."[104] The Trial Chamber fails to reason this conclusion or explain why location is as a general matter less material to notice necessary to understand the charges and prepare a defence than other facts for which it did not allow such vague pleading.

734. para. 71 (p.531-532): In my view, the Majority wrongly upholds the Trial Chamber in its application of the "sheer scale" exception to the pleading of locations because the exception does not apply when it is practicable for the Prosecution to adduce witness evidence of the material fact.[105] Contrary to the approach adopted by the Trial Chamber in its pre-trial decision on the form of the Indictment, it is not enough simply to find the cataclysmic dimensions of the alleged criminality.[106] Rather, the "sheer scale" exception is grounded in the impracticability of pleading in greater detail as a consequence of the scale of the alleged crimes,[107] and the Trial Chamber therefore must assess not only the general dimensions of the criminality, but, given the crimes as pleaded in the Indictment, whether the scale of the crimes charged made it "impracticable" for the Prosecution to plead locations with greater specificity.[108] As held by the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, the Prosecution is expected to know its case before proceeding to trial and may not rely on the weaknesses of its own investigation in order to mould the case against the accused in the course of the trial depending on how the evidence unfolds.[109]

735. para. 72 (p.532): The Prosecution did know before proceeding to trial about the acts of mutilation and physical violence against the four persons in Penduma and Yardu. The Prosecution's Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief shows that it would adduce evidence of the exact crimes under Counts 10 and 11 that were found to have occurred at those villages. In relation to Penduma, the Prosecution knew it had a witness who would, and did, testify with specificity about the specific events of the crime.[110] In relation to Yardu, the Prosecution knew that the witness it would later rely upon at trial expressly named Yardu during the investigation as the location of the exact crimes which were found by the Trial Chamber.[111]

736. para. 73 (p.532-533): Likewise, it was practicable for the Prosecution to include in the Indictment that the burnings that were charged as Acts of Terrorism and Collective Punishment in Kono occurred in Koidu Town. The Prosecution Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief shows that a witness relied upon by the Trial Chamber would give evidence in relation to Koidu Town, that the "rebels burnt the town."[112]

737. para. 74 (p.533): This information might have been considered (with additional disclosures) to cure the defective Indictment, but, as the Appeals Chamber noted, "the Prosecution bears the burden of showing on appeal that the defect in the Indictment did not prejudice Kallon's ability to prepare his defence. The Prosecution has not offered any submissions that Kallon had notice of the charge as a result of timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual underpinnings of the charge."[113]

738. para. 75 (p.533): Since the Prosecution knew from the outset the evidence with which it intended to establish these discrete and site-specific crimes, the "sheer scale" exception did not apply. The Trial Chamber's application of the "sheer scale" exception to relieve the Prosecution of its duty to name these locations in the Indictment is, in my opinion, an error, resulting from the Trial Chamber's failure to first inquire as to whether it was practicable for the Prosecution to provide more details in the Indictment.

739. para. 76 (p.533): The error is compounded by the Trial Chamber's attenuated analysis of whether the pleading of locations was defective. Rather than properly assessing the degree of specificity required for the pleading of locations, the Trial Chamber wrongly considered the Appeals Chamber to have "explicitly held that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to limit evidence that falls outside locations not specifically mentioned in the Indictment."[114] Relying in part on this incorrect reading of the Appeals Chamber's holding in Brima et al., the Trial Chamber failed to consider whether the Appellants lacked sufficient notice of crimes charged at locations that were not named in the Indictment.[115]

740. para. 77 (p.533-534): Contrary to the interpretation ascribed by the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber actually held that the Brima et al. Trial Chamber properly exercised its discretion to (i) reverse a previous decision that the pleading of locations was sufficient, (ii) hold that the pleading of locations was defective, and (iii) refuse to enter convictions for crimes at unnamed locations. The Appeals Chamber stated that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to reconsider such a decision if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to prevent an injustice.[116] The Appeals Chamber further held that:

> [T]he Trial Chamber's limited treatment of the evidence of crimes committed in such locations was a proper exercise of its discretion in the interest of justice, taking into account that it is the Prosecution's obligation to plead clearly material facts it intends to prove, so as to afford the Appellants a fair trial.[117]

741. para. 78 (p.534): By so holding, the Appeals Chamber agreed with the Brima et al. Trial Chamber that the pleading of locations non-exhaustively through the use of phrases such as "in locations including," "in various locations in [a specified] District, including," "in several locations including" is insufficiently specific and can render an indictment defective in regard to crimes charged at unnamed locations.

742. para. 79 (p.534): I recognise that in cases of crimes committed on a massive scale there are inherent difficulties in pleading the material facts, such as the identity of the victims, the time and place of the events, and the means by which the offence was committed. Nonetheless, since the Brima et al. Appeal Judgment, the Appeals Chamber has held that Trial Chambers must apply the "sheer scale" exception in a manner that safeguards the fair trial rights of the accused. To do so, I would submit, the Trial Chamber must determine the degree of specificity for pleading locations particular to the charges in the Indictment and whether it is practicable for the Prosecution to plead location with sufficient specificity to give notice of the crimes alleged. The factors provided by the Appeals Chamber, and discussed above, guide an assessment of the required degree of specificity for pleading locations. It is my view that such inquiry must focus on the relevance of location both to the accused's ability to defend against the crime itself and against his liability for the crime.

743. para. 80 (p.534-535): As held by the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, where the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution was capable of pleading a material fact, but it did not, then the "sheer scale" exception does not apply.[118] If the Trial Chamber concludes that the Indictment is defective, such defects will render the trial unfair with respect to the affected charge if the Prosecution has not cured the resulting prejudice by providing timely, clear and consistent notice of the material facts of the charge.[119]

744. para. 81 (p.535): For the reasons above, I find the locations of the crimes in Penduma and Yardu, and the burnings in Koidu Town should have been pleaded in the Indictment by reference to the village and town names. The sheer scale exception does not excuse the Prosecution's failure to plead the names of the locations when it knew from the outset the evidence with which it intended to establish that these discrete crimes occurred at specified locations. The resulting prejudice from these defects may have been cured by subsequent Prosecution disclosures, but, if so, the Prosecution made no attempt to demonstrate this.

745. para. 82 (p.535): I therefore find the Indictment defective with respect to the pleading of Koidu Town under Counts 1, 2 and 14 and Penduma and Yardu under Counts 10 and 11. I further find that although the pleading of Penduma and Yardu under Counts 10 and 11 was only challenged on appeal by Kallon, the lack of notice with respect to these named locations affected the fair trial rights of Sesay as well since he was also convicted for these crimes.[120] I would, therefore, allow Sesay's Ground 8, in part, and Kallon's Grounds 19 and 22 and reverse the convictions for Sesay and Kallon under Counts 1 and 2 for acts of burning in Koidu Town and Counts 10 and 11 for the crimes at Penduma and Yardu in Kono District. As I would not have found JCE liability for Gbao, I need not address his liability for crimes at these locations.

746. para. 20 (p.517): The primary justification suggested by the Majority for its radical departure from customary international law is that its conflation of JCE 1 and JCE 3 mens rea standards "is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment."[33] That an Indictment may plead in the alternative does not establish that there is no distinction between the forms of liability so pled. Also, whether the Indictment permissibly pleaded JCE is irrelevant as an evidentiary matter.

747. para. 22 (p.518): Finally, in a perplexingly contradictory and unexplained pronouncement, the Majority expresses its agreement with the Prosecution's position at the Appeal Hearing that Gbao "shared the intent for the crimes to be committed in Kailahun District, so he was a participant in the joint criminal enterprise."[37] As an initial matter, this position is contrary to the Majority's own reasoning, as it envisages a common criminal purpose different from that found by the Trial Chamber and confirmed unanimously on appeal. That different "subsidiary" common criminal purpose is limited solely to Kailahun District and excludes acts of pillage (Count 14), as no such crimes were committed there.

748. para. 23 (p.518): If in fact the Majority accepts the position of the Prosecution that the shared intent for commission of the crimes committed in Kailahun describes the common criminal purpose of the JCE, then Gbao would presumably have been liable under JCE 1 for the crimes in Kailahun District, and liable under JCE 3 for the crimes in other Districts. However, such a limited, "subsidiary" JCE was neither sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment nor found by the Trial Chamber. Nor did the Trial Chamber make any findings that the crimes in Bo, Kenema and Kono were reasonably foreseeable by Gbao as a consequence of the implementation of that "subsidiary" JCE, (as opposed to the country-wide JCE found by the Trial Chamber.) This theory therefore finds no support in the pleadings or the evidence.

749. para. 24 (p.518-519): The only JCE pleaded, established and upheld in this case had as its Common Criminal Purpose to control the territory of Sierra Leone through the commission of the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14.[38] Gbao either shared the intent of this criminal purpose – both in terms of the type of crimes and the geographical scope it encompassed – or he did not.

b. Justice Winter:

750. para. 5 (p.482-483): In addition to this clarification, I also wish to express my complete agreement with the reasoning and conclusions expressed by Hon. Justice Fisher in her Partially Dissenting and Concurring Opinion insofar as it pertains to Gbao's Sub-Grounds 8(j) and 8(k), Gbao's Sub-Ground 8(i), Sesay's Grounds 33 and 46, and her opinion regarding the failure to plead locations with sufficient specificity. In particular, I join her dissent from the Majority's decision to confirm Gbao's conviction under JCE liability, given the Trial Chamber's findings that he did not share the Common Criminal Purpose with the other participants in the case before us.

(iii) Crimes Charged as Criminal Means of Furthering Common Criminal Purpose – Acts of Terrorism

751. para. 333: The Trial Chamber held that the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 constituted the criminal means of furthering the Common Criminal Purpose.[771] The crimes to maintain power over the territory of Sierra Leone commenced "soon after the coup in May 1997."[772]

752. para. 348: Sesay submits that some of these crimes could not be part of the Common Criminal Purpose because they were not found to have been committed with intent to (i) take control over Sierra Leone;[815] or (ii) to spread terror or collectively punish.[816] His first argument fails, because the Trial Chamber found that the JCE participants, in particular Sesay,[817] contemplated all the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 as the means to achieve the objective of gaining and exercising political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas.[818] It was not required that the persons who perpetrated the crimes shared the same intent.[819] Sesay's second argument is wrong insofar as it states that the means to achieve the objective were limited to acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).[820] As explained, the means also included the crimes charged under Counts 3 to 14. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not explicitly find that those acts of unlawful killing (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and physical violence (Counts 10 and 11) which did not amount to terrorism were also means to achieve the objective of controlling the territory of Sierra Leone. However, it is evident that these acts were also found to be means to that end, given the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 were within the [JCE] and intended to further the common purpose."[821]

753. para. 356: Indeed, Sesay himself recognises the finding that the Supreme Council was involved in the planning and organisation of the enslavement at Tongo Fields in Kenema from August 1997. However, he argues, the only crimes committed before that point in time were the terror attacks in Bo in June 1997, and so there were no crimes on the basis of which the Trial Chamber could infer the existence of a JCE.[852] However, although the enslavement at Tongo Fields commenced in August 1997,[853] it is evident from the Trial Chamber's findings that the "planned and … systematic policy of the Junta" which devised the large scale enslavement and implemented it "pursuant to a centralised system" must have started much earlier.[854] Indeed, "[w]ithin a week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of" Kenema Town.[855] Moreover, whether or not it amounted to acts of terrorism,[856] sexual violence in Kailahun was a means to achieve the AFRC/RUF objective throughout the Junta period.[857] The fact that the victims of the forced marriages were initially captured before the Indictment period does not detract from the finding that these crimes were "for the benefit . of the Junta" throughout their continuous commission. 858

754. para. 377: Sesay argues that "Bockarie's actions in Kenema Town" were erroneously found to be in pursuance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[917] Sesay's submission primarily concerns the period of time after early September 1997, when Bockarie left Freetown for Kenema.[918]

755. para. 378: The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Sesay's assertion,[919] the finding that Bockarie's relocation from Freetown to Kenema did not impact on the Common Criminal Purpose and that the cooperation between the leadership continued, was supported by evidence.[920] While Sesay argues that the Trial Chamber "downplayed" the evidence concerning Bockarie's departure, in support he merely restates evidence already assessed by the Trial Chamber without explaining why such assessment was unreasonable.[921] Sesay invokes[922] evidence suggesting that Bockarie became an "outlaw," refused to take orders from Koroma[923] and, due to his dissatisfaction with the AFRC, felt that the RUF should withdraw from Freetown.[924] However, he fails to acknowledge that the same evidence also shows that the AFRC and RUF "fought together on all the battlefronts until [they] pulled out of Freetown"925 and that the RUF remained in Freetown until February 1998.926

(iv) Crimes Charged and JCE mens rea (short review) – Acts of Terrorism

756. para. 467: The Trial Chamber found that "the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 were within the [JCE] and intended by the participants to further the common purpose."[1199] As previously noted, the Common Criminal Purpose found by the Trial Chamber consisted of the non-criminal objective to gain and exercise political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and the crimes as charged under Counts 1 to 14 as means of achieving that objective.[1200] It further held that mid- and low-level RUF and AFRC Commanders and rank-and-file fighters were used by JCE members to commit crimes that "were either intended by the members to further the common purpose, or were a natural and foreseeable consequence of the implementation of the common purpose."[1201] The Trial Chamber held that it would not consider teh Appellant's liability pursuant to JCE 2.[1202]

757. para. 468: The Trial Chamber concluded that Kallon "shared with the other participants in the [JCE] the requiste intent to commit" the crimes in Bo, Kenema, Kono and Kailahun Districts.[1203] In terms of Gbao's mens rea, the Trial Chamber found he did not intend the crimes committed in Bo, Kenema and Kono Districts as a means of achieving the Common Criminal Purpose.[1204] Instead, the Trial Chamber found that Gbao knew that the crimes in these Districts were being committed by RUF fighters, continued to pursue the Common Criminal Purpose of the joint criminal enterprise,[1205] and "willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved … might be committed by other members of the joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control."[1206] The Trial Chamber found that Gbao shared with the other JCE members the intent to commit the crimes in Kailahun District.[1207]

758. para. 482: In support of Ground 8(j) Gbao states in paragraph 144 of his Appeal Brief: "The Majority of the Trial Chamber erred in fact by finding Gbao individually criminally responsible as a member of the joint criminal enterprise by using the extended JCE mens rea against him in Bo, Kenema and Kono Districts when all crimes found to be part of the JCE were found to have been committed pursuant to the first form of JCE." He cites paragraph 1985 of the Trial Judgement in support. A perusal of the whole paragraph shows that the Trial Chamber made no such finding. Paragraph 1985 states:

> The Chamber finds that during the Junta regime, high ranking AFRC and RUF members shared a common plan which was to take any action necessary to gain and excercise political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particluar the diamond mining areas. The Chamber finds that the crimes were contemplated by the participants of the joint criminal enterprise to be within the common purpose. The Chamber further finds that the AFRC/RUF forces targeted civilians in a widespread and systematic attack designed to terrorise the population into submission through collective punishment, unlawful killings, sexual violence and physical violance. In addition, tje joint AFRC/RUF forces continued to rely on forced labour of civilians to generate revenue, used children under the age of 15 years as fighters and generally accepted pillage as a means to gratify the fighters.

Nowhere in that paragraph did the Majority of the Trial Chamber make the finding alleged by Gbao. It is not proper for Gbao to put words into the mouth of the Trial Chamber for the apparent purpose of manufacturing a case that bears no semblance to reality. The ground is without merit and the Appeals Chamber, Justices Winter and Fisher dissenting, dismisses it in this short shrift.

759. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Counts 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

760. para. 493: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution's submission during the Appeal Hearing that Gbao "shared the intent for the crimes to be committed in Kailahun District, so he was a participant in the joint criminal enterprise."[1258] Gbao it must be recalled was at all material times the senior RUF Commander stationed in Kailahun. It follows that, since Gbao was a member of the JCE, so long as it was reasonably foreseeable that some of the members of the JCE or persons under their control would commit crimes, Gbao would be criminally liable for the commission of those crimes.[1259] As the Trial Chamber found that the crimes in Bo, Kenema and Kono Districts, which were within the Common Criminal Purpose, were reasonably foreseeable, it follows that the Trial Chamber did not err. Gbao's Ground 8 is accordingly dismissed. (Note: Justices Fisher and Winter dissenting)

(v) Acts of Terrorism – Definition

761. para. 879: Second, [Kallon] argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in convicting him of acts of terrorism. he argues that there is no consensus on the definition of terrorism in international criminal law currently and there was even less consensus when the acts were allegedly committed. Accordingly, Kallon contends, the crime lacks sufficient precision, thereby violating the principle of nullum crimen sine lege.[2287]

762. para. 888: The principle of nullum crimen sine lege provides that "a criminal conviction can only be based on a norm which existed at the time the acts or omission with which the accused is charged were committed."[2301] The principle further requires that the criminality of the conduct as charged by the Prosecution was sufficiently foreseeable and accessible at the relevant time period for it to warrant a criminal conviction and sentence.[2302] The Appeals Chamber notes that the principle of nullum crimen sine lege does not impede the development of the law through the interpretation and clarification of the elements of a particular crime,[2303] but it does preclude the creation of a new criminal offence by defining a crime that was previously undefined or "interpreting existing law beyond the reasonable limits of acceptable clarification."[2304]

763. para. 889: The starting point for analysis is the crime under the criminal heading chosen by the Prosecution for which the Appellant was convicted and sentenced.[2305] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that Count 1, as charged by the Prosecution, was a charge defined under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II.[2306] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the specific elements of acts of terrorism as defined under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II are (i) acts or threats of violence; (ii) the Accused wilfully made the civilian population or individual civilians not taking direct part in hostilities the objects of those acts or threats of violence; and (iii) the acts or threats of violence were carried out with the specific intent of spreading terror among the civilian population.[2307] The Appeals Chamber adopts the opinion of the ICTY Appeals Chamber that the prohibition of terror against a civilian population as enshrined under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II has been declared an offence that gives rise to individual criminal responsibility under customary international law by 1992.[2308] The Appeals Chamber, therefore, considers that acts of terrorism as defined under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II incurred individual criminal responsibility at the time of the offences for which Kallon was convicted. Kallon asserts, however, that the crime prohibiting acts of terror against a civilian population was insufficiently precise or accessible to determine criminal conduct during the relevant time period.[2309]

764. para. 890: The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by this assertion. Kallon points to various formulations of the crime of terrorism to support his claim that the definition of the crime was unsettled at the time of the offences here.[2310] However, the authority he relies on concerns prohibitions against terrorism or terrorism-related offences found in other international law than that controlling the crime now in question and are therefore inapposite to his claim that the prohibition found in Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II was not customary international law at the time of the offences.[2311] Kallon's bare argument that the prohibition in Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II has been variously described as "infliction of terror,"[2312] "terror against the civilian population"[2313] or "acts of terrorism"[2314] does not demonstrate that the elements of the offence, whatever its title, were not "defined with sufficient clarity under customary international law for its general nature, its criminal character and its approximate gravity to have been sufficiently foreseeable and accessible"[2315] at the time period relevant to commission of the offences.

765. para. 891: The Appeals Chamber notes that a determination of "foreseeability" and "accessibility" with respect to the principle of nullum crimen sine lege must take into account the "specificity of international law."[2316] The prohibition against acts of terror as set out in Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II is by its grounding in the laws of war considered customary international law.[2317] Customary law is not always laid out in written form and therefore determination of its accessibility may not be straightforward.[2318] However, in this instance, by virtue of its customary international law nature and codification in the Additional Protocols, the prohibition against acts of terror as enshrined in Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II is sufficiently foreseeable and accessible to put the Appellant on reasonable notice that infringement of this norm could entail criminal responsibility.[2319] Kallon's conviction under Count 1 therefore does not violate the principle of nullum crimen sine lege. Kallon's submission in this regard is dismissed.

(vi) Specific Intent for Acts of Terrorism

766. para. 646: The Trial Chamber found that six acts of unlawful killings and physical violence committed in Kenema Town constituted acts of terrorism.[1622] The Trial Chamber found that "a number of the victims were prominent members of civil society and were targeted on this account."[1623] It further found that AFRC/RUF fighters publicised these crimes.[1624] The Trial Chamber concluded that these crimes "were intended to illustrate the gruesome repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with enemies of the RUF and so to terrorise and subdue the population",[1625] and thus were committed with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population.[1626]

767. para. 650: As Sesay was convicted for the acts of terrorism in question under JCE 1 liability,[1641] and as the Trial Chamber found that one or more members of the JCE used the non-members who carried out the actus reus to commit the crime of acts of terrorism,[1642] his arguments turn on the initial proposition that the Trial Chamber was required to find that the non-members of the JCE who carried out the actus reus had the specific intent for those crimes.

768. para. 651: The Appeals Chamber notes as an initial matter that the mens rea of those who carry out the actus reus of the crime is not among the elements of JCE 1 liability as set out in Tadić.1643 While "participants in a basic or systemic form of joint criminal enterprise must be shown to share the required intent of the principal perpetrators,"[1644] this holding only reinforces that the members of the JCE must share the intent to commit the crime for which they are held to be responsible under JCE 1 and JCE 2, and does not imply that non-members used by a JCE member to carry out the actus reus of the crime must share the intent with the members of the JCE.

769. para. 652: Further, the Appeals Chamber agrees "that what matters in a first category JCE is not whether the person who carried out the actus reus of a particular crime is a member of the JCE, but whether the crime in question forms part of the common purpose."[1645] As persuasively explained by the ICTY Appeals Chamber, the persons who carry out the actus reus of the crime need not share the common purpose of the JCE in order for liability for their acts to attach to members of the JCE.[1646] To the contrary, the primary question for the purposes of JCE liability is whether the acts of non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes can be imputed to the members of the JCE.[1647] So long as it is established that a member of the JCE used the non-member to commit a crime within the common purpose of the JCE, there is no need to show that the non-member intended to further the common purpose of the JCE or indeed even knew of that common purpose.[1648]

770. para. 653: For the purposes of determining the liability of JCE members for the acts of non-members who carry out the actus reus of the crime, the critical inquiry is not the mens rea of the non-member, but rather the acts and mental state of the JCE member, who uses the non-member to commit a crime within and in furtherance of the common purpose.[1649] As the mens rea element of JCE 1 liability relates solely to the shared intent of the members of the JCE, and as the persons who carry out the actus reus of the crime need not be members of the JCE, the mens rea

of non-members who carry out the actus reus of the crime is not a legal element of JCE 1 liability.[1650]

771. para. 654: The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the finding of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Limaj et al., cited by Sesay, is relevant to the present issue, as the Appeals Chamber there was concerned with the scope of the common purpose as pleaded in the indictment, a distinct issue from the present question.[1651]

772. para. 655: Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that under JCE 1 liability, the Trial Chamber was not required to find, as an element of the liability of JCE members, that non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crime had the requisite mens rea for the crime of acts of terrorism. Rather, in addition to finding that the members of the JCE shared the intent to commit the crime and finding that the acts of the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes could be imputed to a member of the JCE, the Trial Chamber was only required to find that the acts of the non-members satisfied the actus reus of the offence.

773. para. 656: While the Trial Chamber did find that those who carried out the actus reus of the crime acted with the specific intent to spread terror,[1652] such a finding is only relevant as a matter of evidence to the other findings that the Trial Chamber was required to make. The Appeals Chamber finds that Trial Chamber's alleged errors with respect to the mens rea of the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes,[1653] even if accepted arguendo, would not render those findings unreasonable. Sesay challenges related to the mens rea of non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes are dismissed.

774. para. 657: Sesay further challenges the Trial Chamber's findings that Bockarie, as the perpetrator and member of the JCE, acted with the requisite mens rea for acts of terrorism. Sesay fails to show an error[1654] in the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the killing of the man at the NIC Building.[1655] Sesay neither explains how the Trial Chamber's finding that Bockarie acted with the requisite intent would be erroneous even if it were accepted that the victim was a Kamajor who was hors de combat, nor explains how Bockarie's desire to "do away with all the Kamajors"[1656] is inconsistent with or renders unreasonable the Trial Chamber's finding. This claim is therefore dismissed.

775. para. 658: Sesay fails to establish that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the beating of TF1-129 was committed with the specific intent to spread terror.[1657] Contrary to Sesay's claim, the Trial Chamber did not need to find a "single, all-encompassing intention" among all those who participated in the beating of TF1-129,[1658] as the Trial Chamber's findings show that it found that

Sesay and Bockarie used those who carried out the beatings to commit the crime.[1659] In particular, the Appeals Chamber notes the following findings: (i) Sesay ordered his bodyguard to molest TF1-129 during his arrest;[1660] (ii) Sesay's bodyguard further injured TF1-129 when he was to be taken to the Secretariat building;[1661] (iii) Sesay instructed a small boy to guard TF1-129 and kill him if he moved;[1662] (iv) TF1-129 was beaten while being taken to Bockarie and Sesay;[1663] (v) Bockarie and Sesay ordered TF1-129 to be taken to the "dungeon", and TF1-129 was beaten on the way to and from the "dungeon".[1664]

776. para. 659: In addition, Sesay argues that there was no evidence that he sought to publicise the beating,[1665] and that the Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that he and Bockarie used the non- members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes to commit an act of terrorism.[1666] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls the Trial Chamber's findings that acts of terrorism were within the Common Criminal Purpose of the JCE,[1667] and therefore that the intent to commit acts of terrorism was shared by the members of the JCE, including Sesay and Bockarie. The Trial Chamber further found that the six acts of violence in Kenema Town,[1668] including the beating of TF1-129, targeted prominent members of civil society and were publicised.[1669] The Trial Chamber accordingly reasoned that the six acts of violence were "intended to illustrate the gruesome repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with enemies of the RUF and so to terrorise and subdue the population," and therefore were committed with the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population.[1670] The Appeals Chamber also recalls the Trial Chamber's finding "that during the conflict in Sierra Leone, the AFRC/RUF regularly killed civilians accused of being Kamajors as a deliberate strategy to terrorise the civilian population and prevent any support for their opponents."[1671] Finally, the Trial Chamber found that Bockarie targeted alleged Kamajors on a number of occasions[1672] and publicly expressed his intent to target alleged Kamajors.[1673]

777. para. 660: In light of the above findings, whether or not the Trial Chamber found that Sesay or others sought to publicise the beating directly, the Trial Chamber did find that TF1-129 was targeted because he was considered to be prominent[1674] and a "chief Kamajor."[1675] Sesay fails to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded on that basis that he and Bockarie used the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes to commit acts of terrorism. Sesay further argues that as TF1-129 was a suspected Kamajor ally, "an aggravated Bockarie" ordered his arrest, and therefore, any crimes committed during TF1-129's arrest were not committed with the primary intent of spreading terror.[1676] Although the Trial Chamber found that certain acts of violence did not constitute acts of terror because the acts were committed in response to conduct that aggravated the perpetrators,[1677] Sesay misinterprets that finding and ignores the evidence as a whole as relied on by the Trial Chamber, in particular the findings noted above. Accordingly, Sesay fails to establish that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he and Bockarie acted with the specific intent to spread terror.

778. para. 880: Third, Kallon submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in inferring that the acts were committed with the specific intent to cause terror, whereas other inferences were available from the evidence.[2288]

779. para. 892: In arguing that multiple reasonable inferences could be drawn relating to the specific intent for acts of terrorism,[2320] Kallon offers alternative inferences that are either unsupported by the Trial Chamber's findings or the evidence or have been duly considered by the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber explicitly considered alternative inferences such as the directing of attacks at legitimate military targets[2321] and found that attacks such as the one on Tikonko "were not directed at any military or other legitimate objective."[2322] With regard to acts that Kallon asserts were perpetrated in the context of theft,[2323] the Trial Chamber found that the looting of money from Ibrahim Kamara was not an act of terror,[2324] but rather amounted to an act of pillage.[2325] The Trial Chamber found, however, that the killing of Tommy Bockarie when he refused to turn over a cassette player in the context of an attack on Sembehun was an act of violence that "served no discernible purpose apart from terrorising the civilian population."[2326] In this way, the Trial Chamber considered and distinguished acts that were solely perpetrated in the context of thefts from those acts that evinced the specific intent to spread terror. In light of the Trial Chamber's findings, Kallon fails to explain why no reasonable trier of fact could have excluded his proposed inferences based on the evidence adduced at trial.

780. para. 893: Moreover, where the Trial Chamber's findings point to the possibility of an additional purpose for the acts found to constitute acts of terrorism, the Appeals Chamber recalls that "[t]he specific intent to spread terror need not be the only purpose of the unlawful acts or threats of violence," and the fact of coexisting purposes does not disprove the specific intent to spread terror provided the intent to spread terror was "principal among the aims."[2327] Kallon in putting forth multiple alternative inferences does not challenge the primacy of the specific intent to spread terror.[2328] Therefore, the mere existence of additional purposes such as the enslavement of civilians to mine for diamonds in Cyborg Pit[2329] in order to realise a profit does not alone disprove the requisite intent to spread terror. With regard to sexual violence in Kailahun, Kallon puts forth the alternate inference that sexual violence was committed "for the individual perpetrators' own sexual gratification."[2330] However, the Trial Chamber explicitly found that sexual violence committed in Kailahun was "not intended merely for personal satisfaction or a means of sexual gratification for the fighter," but rather the "savage nature of such conduct against the most vulnerable members of the society demonstrates that these acts were committed with the specific intent of spreading fear amongst civilian population as a whole."[2331] In other instances, the Trial Chamber found that the alternative inference posited by Kallon such as preventing opposition and addressing the Kamajor military threat[2332] were closely intertwined with the intent to spread terror such that crimes committed were "intended to illustrate the gruesome repercussions of collaborating or being perceived to collaborate with enemies of the RUF and so to terrorise and subdue the population."[2333] Kallon accordingly fails to demonstrate the error in the Trial Chamber's findings that the criminal acts perpetrated in Bo, Kenema, and Kailahun were committed with the specific intent to spread terror.

(vii) Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

781. para. 452: Sesay submits that the Trial Chamber erred in imputing to members of the JCE the burning of civilian houses in Tombodu between February and April 1998 ordered by Staff Alhaji. In support, Sesay challenges Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-012's testimony, yet without explaining why the impugned findings are unreasonable in light of all the evidence on which the Trial Chamber relied which was not limited to TF1-012's testimony.[1154] Sesay also challenges the finding that the burning in question amounted to acts of terrorism. He refers to the Trial Chamber's finding that the burning:

> [W]as intended to punish civilians for failing to support the AFRC/RUF and to prevent civilians from remaining in these towns. The Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators directed these acts of violence against civilian property with the intent of spreading terror among the civilian population as charged in Count 1.[1155]

While Sesay is correct that acts of terrorism and acts of collective punishment require proof of different intentions, it does not follow, as he appears to suggest, that the two cannot be established on the same evidentiary basis.[1156] Beyond that erroneous assertion, Sesay does not challenge the finding that the burning amounted to acts of terrorism. The fact that the Trial Chamber provided sufficient reasons for imputing Staff Alhaji's crimes to the JCE members has already been established.[1157] Sesay's submissions are therefore disallowed.

782. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kono District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras.624 [7658], 627-634 [7659].

783. Regarding Kallon's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kono District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras.806 [7667], 810-815 [7668].

784. para. 877: The Trial Chamber found that acts of terrorism were committed in Bo,[2278] Kenema,[2279] Kailahun,[2280] and Kono Districts.[2281] In Bo,[2282] Kenema,[2283] Kailahun,[2284] Kono Districts,[2285] Kallon incurred Article 6(1) JCE liability for crimes committed under Count 1.

785. para. 883: Kallon submits that the Trial Chamber "erred in law by relying on the burning of civilian homes in Rembodu [sic][2293] and Koidu Town not pleaded in the indictment. This occasioned prejudice to the Accused preparation for defence as he had no notice of these occasions and crimes."[2294] As a preliminary matter, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber makes no reference to the location "Rembodu" in its judgment. The Appeals Chamber therefore understands Kallon to contend that he lacked notice of the crimes because Koidu Town was not a named location in the Indictment under Count 14, which pertained to acts of burning.

786. para. 884: The Indictment particularises the charge under Counts 14 in relation to Kono District as follows:

> Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned.[2295]

787. para. 885: The relevant question on appeal is whether the pleading of locations of acts of burning in Kono District as "in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando" without naming Koidu Town, is sufficiently specific to allow Kallon to prepare his defence for alleged JCE liability for acts of burning as terrorism in Koidu Town.

788. para. 886: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the specificity required for the pleading of locations will depend on factors including those previously discussed.[2296] Kallon was convicted for acts of burning as acts of terrorism pursuant to his participation in the JCE. His liability for these acts derives significantly from his conduct in relation to other events and crimes, including those committed in locations in Kono that were pleaded with sufficient specificity.[2297] Much of his culpable conduct did not occur in Koidu Town, and therefore the pleading of the location does not

789. para. 887: In regard to his notice of the alleged criminal acts in Koidu Town, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that nonexhaustive pleading of locations may be adequate in light of the "sheer scale" of the alleged crimes.[2298] Therefore, in this case, Kallon had adequate notice notwithstanding the nonexhaustive pleading of locations.[2299] The Appeals Chamber has not found error in the Trial Chamber's general approach to applying the exception,[2300] and Kallon has not offered any argument as to why this exception to the requirements for pleading specificity should not apply to the pleading of acts of burning in Koidu Town, in view of the fact that his liability is pursuant to his participation in the JCE. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Justices Winter and Fisher dissenting, reject Kallon's submission.

790. Justice Fisher-Dissent, para. 65 (p.529): In Ground 16, Kallon contends he lacked notice of acts of burning as acts of terrorism in Koidu Town. Sesay similarly objects in his Ground 8. Acts of burning were charged under Counts 1, 2 and 14,[92] but none of these counts names Koidu Town as a location.[93] The Appeals Chamber denied these grounds and reasoned that because much of Kallon's conduct that gave rise to his JCE liability for the crimes did not occur in Koidu Town, the location did not need to be pleaded with greater specificity for Appellants to prepare their defence.

791. Justice Fisher-Dissent, para. 66 (p.529-530): In my view, this reasoning is correct only to the extent that an accused's ability to provide certain defences, such as alibi, depend on his ability to challenge evidence of his presence at the location where his culpable conduct was alleged to have taken place.[94] The accused, however, is entitled to prepare a defence against both the allegation that the crime occurred and the allegation that he is liable for the crime (i.e., "the nature and cause of the charges"[95]). To defend against the former, he must have adequate notice of the location of the offence, which would not vary as a result of the mode of liability charged. Thus, the Majority's inquiry should not have ended with its examination of the form of the accused's participation in the crime. It should have also examined whether the other factors it identified led to the conclusion that the accused had sufficient notice of the location of the crimes.

792. Justice Fisher-Dissent, para. 67 (p.530): In applying those factors, I consider that the failure to plead Koidu Town as the location of burning as acts of terrorism and collective punishment rendered the Indictment defective as to this criminal incident. In contrast to the systemic looting described above, the burnings of civilian houses did not happen simultaneously in many locations within a larger area which was sufficiently pleaded. Instead, as found by the Trial Chamber, it was restricted to Koidu Town[96] in order to punish civilians for failing to support the AFRC/RUF.[97] The only other location in Kono District in which the Trial Chamber found burnings was Tombodu, a village which was much smaller than Koidu Town and removed by some considerable distance. Tombodu was specifically pleaded in the Indictment.[98] Koidu Town, the seat of Kono District and the site of significant destruction by burning, was not. There was nothing in the Indictment to place Sesay or Kallon on notice that they were being charged with the crimes of acts of terrorism and collective punishments for the large scale burning of Koidu Town, crimes for which they were ultimately convicted.

793. Justice Winter-Dissent, para. 5 (p.482-483): In addition to this clarification, I also wish to express my complete agreement with the reasoning and conclusions expressed by Hon. Justice Fisher in her Partially Dissenting and Concurring Opinion insofar as it pertains to Gbao's Sub-Grounds 8(j) and 8(k), Gbao's Sub-Ground 8(i), Sesay's Grounds 33 and 46, and her opinion regarding the failure to plead locations with sufficient specificity. In particular, I join her dissent from the Majority's decision to confirm Gbao's conviction under JCE liability, given the Trial Chamber's findings that he did not share the Common Criminal Purpose with the other participants in the case before us.

794. para. 881: Fourth, Kallon argues that the Trial Chamber failed to provide adequate reasoning in support of its findings relating to unlawful killings as acts of terrorism in Kono District, thus depriving him of a meaningful review on appeal. Kallon argues that the Trial Chamber found that there was "an overwhelming amount of evidence that point[s] to the execution of policies that promote violence, targeted civilians, civilian object[s] in order to spread terror among the civilian population" and did not consider any alternative reasons for the conduct or explain its rationale.[2289]

795. para. 894: The Appeals Chamber recalls that, while the Trial Chamber is obliged to provide a reasoned opinion,[2334] it is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning in relation to each finding it makes or to set out in detail why it accepted or rejected a particular piece of evidence.[2335] It need only make findings of material facts that are essential to the determination of guilt in relation to a particular Count.[2336]

796. para. 895: The Trial Chamber explained that the killing of an unknown number of civilians during an attack on Koidu Town,[2337] the killing of 30 to 40 civilians by Rocky,[2338] the killing of a 15 year old boy,[2339] the killing of an unknown number of civilians by Savage and Staff Alhaji,[2340] the killing of Chief Sogbeh,[2341] and the killing of Sata Sesay's eight family members[2342] amounted to acts of terrorism in Kono,[2343] by stating that these unlawful killings "were all committed widely and openly, without any rationale objective, except to terrorise the civilian population into submission."[2344] The Trial Chamber also explained that its findings were based on "an overwhelming amount of evidence that point[s] to the execution of policies that promoted violence, targeted civilians, [and] civilian objects in order to spread terror among the civilian population."[2345] In addition, Kallon's contention that the Trial Chamber did not consider any alternative reasons for the unlawful killings is belied by the fact the Trial Chamber found that the unlawful killings amounting to acts of terrorism were carried out "without any rationale [sic] objective."[2346] The Trial Chamber in this way sufficiently reasoned that certain unlawful killings in Kono amounted to acts of terrorism while the killing of Waiyoh and the unlawful killings in Koidu Buma and near PC Ground did not.[2347]

797. para. 896: For these reasons, Kallon fails to establish that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for acts of terrorism in Bo, Kenema, Kailahun and Kono Districts.

(viii) Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

798. para. 370: The Trial Chamber found that acts of unlawful killings, physical violence and enslavement were committed in Kenema District, some of which amounted to terror and collective punishment.[901] It found that these crimes fell within time period of the Junta and that the common plan and plurality of person remained the same.[902]

799. para. 382: Furthermore, that Bockarie ensured continued cooperation from Kenema is buttressed by the finding that the forced mining activities, which included acts of terrorism,[940] were jointly conducted and controlled by the AFRC and RUF.[941] The Appeals Chamber now turns to Sesay's challenges to this finding.

800. para. 423: The alleged Kamajor boss was killed by AFRC/RUF fighters during "Operation No Living Thing," which had been launched by the RUF and AFRC as a pre-emptive measure due to rumours of an impending Kamajor attack.[1050] "Operation No Living Thing" did not refer to a particular military campaign, but it "described a set of brutal and merciless tactics which AFRC/RUF fighters were encouraged to adopt in combat."[1051] The killing also formed part of the AFRC/RUF's "deliberate strategy to terrorise the civilian population and prevent any support for their opponents."[1052] Seen against the background that the AFRC/RUF Junta, headed by most JCE members, controlled Kenema Town,[1053] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that these findings suffice to explain the Trial Chamber's reasons why the killing was imputed to the JCE members. Sesay's and Gbao's claims to the contrary fail.

801. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Specific intent for acts of terrorism – paras. 646 [766], 650-660 [767].

802. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kenema District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kenema District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras. 617 [7580], 619-623 [7581].

803. para. 662: The Trial Chamber found that the following acts at Tongo Field constituted unlawful killings: (i) the killing of a civilian at Lamin Street,[1678] (ii) the killing of a Limba man,[1679] and (iii) the killing of 63 civilians at Cyborg Pit.[1680] In regard to the killing of 63 civilians at Cyborg Pit, the Trial Chamber found that "on three separate occasions, SBUs under the command of AFRC/RUF fighters killed over 20 civilians; 25 civilians; and 15 civilians at Cyborg Pit."[1681] On a fourth occasion at Cyborg Pit, "three civilians and two fighters were killed by the AFRC/RUF."[1682] It further found that the killing at Lamin Street and the killings at Cyborg Pit constituted acts of terrorism.[1683]

804. para. 666: The Appeals Chamber recalls its conclusion that the Trial Chamber was not required to find that those who carried out the actus reus of the crimes had the requisite mens rea for acts of terrorism.[1695] Sesay's claims will be addressed in light of that conclusion. In that respect, the Appeals Chamber notes the Trial Chamber's findings that acts of terrorism were within the Common Criminal Purpose of the JCE,[1696] and that, with respect to Kenema District, Sesay intended the commission of acts of terrorism and "shared, with the other participants, in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes."[1697] The Trial Chamber further found that one or more members of the JCE used the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes to commit the crime of acts of terrorism.[1698]

805. para. 667: In arguing that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the deaths at Cyborg Pit constituted unlawful killings,[1699] Sesay merely reargues his position at trial without addressing the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber. In particular, by only referencing the absence of corroborating testimony from other witnesses, Sesay fails to establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have preferred the affirmative testimonies of witnesses TF1-035 and TF1-045. This claim is therefore dismissed.

806. para. 668: Contrary to Sesay's claim,[1700] the fact that the acts of violence were intended to serve a further goal, such as the enslavement of the civilian population, does not show that the intent to spread terror was not the principal purpose of those acts.[1701] Simply, it need not be shown that the intent was to spread terror only for its own sake.[1702] Rather, the requirement that the principal purpose be to spread terror serves to distinguish "terror that is merely an incidental effect of acts of warfare which have another primary object and are in all other respects lawful."[1703] Accordingly, whether the goal of the acts of terrorism was to further the enslavement of the civilian population, or further the Common Criminal Purpose of taking control of the territory of Sierra Leone by criminal means, the fact that the acts of terrorism were committed to further another objective would not show that the intent to spread terror was not the principal purpose of the acts of violence.

807. para. 669: The Appeals Chamber considers that the facts highlighted by Sesay do not establish that the killings did not spread terror in fact.[1704] Moreover, even if the Trial Chamber had been satisfied that the killings did not have that effect, the actual terrorisation of the civilian populations is not an element of the crime,[1705] but is only an evidentiary consideration to be assessed in light of the circumstances as a whole. Sesay fails to address the other considerations the Trial Chamber relied on, and fails to establish that the Trial Chamber's conclusion was unreasonable.

808. para. 671: The Trial Chamber found that AFRC/RUF rebels forced an unknown number of civilians to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field, Kenema District between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, and found that this constituted enslavement and an act of terrorism.[1707] It held that Sesay incurred JCE liability for these crimes.[1708]

809. para. 678: Sesay first argues that the Trial Chamber was not entitled to rely on the fact that the killings at Cyborg Pit amounted to acts of terrorism to conclude that the enslavement also constituted an act of terrorism because the perpetrators of the two crimes were different.[1732] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber considered "the massive scale, of the enslavement, the indiscriminate manner in which civilians were enslaved and the brutal treatment of the victims" in concluding that the enslavement at Cyborg Pit amounted to an act of terrorism.[1733] To the extent that the Trial Chamber had in mind the killings at Cyborg Pit when referring to "the brutal treatment of the victims," it did not err. It was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider that the intent of the perpetrators of these killings to spread terror, among other mistreatment,[1734] was part of the "brutal treatment" of the victims of the enslavement, which treatment was one of the factors leading the Trial Chamber to infer that the enslavement also constituted an act of terror.

810. para. 679: Sesay's second argument is that the Trial Chamber should have found that the enslavement at Cyborg Pit was not specifically intended to spread terror among the civilian population, but, instead, that terror was a mere "side-effect" of the enslavement, as it found in respect of the enslavement in Kono District.[1735] Contrary to Sesay's position, however, the circumstances of the enslavement in Kono District were distinguishable from those prevailing at Cyborg Pit.[1736] For example, while the Trial Chamber found that the enslavement in Kono District was "widespread," the enslavement at Cyborg Pit was of "a massive scale."[1737] Similarly, while the civilians forced to mine in Kono District were mistreated,[1738] the civilians at Cyborg Pit were enslaved in an "indiscriminate manner" and subjected to "brutal mistreatment."[1739] Therefore, although the mistreatment at both locations was grave, it was reasonably open to the Trial Chamber to infer that the enslavement at Cyborg Pit was committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population, whereas terror was a "side-effect" of the enslavement in Kono District.[1740] Sesay's argument is dismissed.[1741] Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kenema District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras. 798 [7598], 801-804 [7599].

813. para. 388: The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Sesay's submission. The Trial Chamber made extensive findings on RUF members and Commanders, including Superman,[954] committing acts of sexual slavery and forced marriage[955] as well as enslavement[956] in Kailahun District. Whereas only the former two crimes also amounted to acts of terrorism,[957] the Appeals Chamber recalls that it was not required that the crimes constituted either such acts or collective punishment in order to fall within the Common Criminal Purpose.[958]

814. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – para. 635 [7758].

815. Regarding Kallon's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras. 817 [7759], 820-824 [7760].

816. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Kono District – Acts of terrorism – paras. 881 [794], 894-896 [795].

817. Regarding Gbao's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Gbao – paras. 982 [7791], 983 [7792], 986 [7793], 987 [7794], 988 [7795], 989 [7796], 990 [7797], 991 [7798], 992 [7799], 993 [7800], 994 [7801].

818. para. 1100: The Trial Chamber found that the acts of sexual slavery and forced marriage in Kailahun District were committed with the specific intent to spread terror and therefore constituted acts of terrorism.[3019]

819. para. 1103: The Appeals Chamber recalls its conclusion that the Trial Chamber was not required to find that those who carried out the actus reus of the crimes had the requisite mens rea for acts of terrorism.[3024] The Appeals Chamber notes the Trial Chamber's findings that acts of terrorism were within the Common Criminal Purpose of the JCE,[3025] and that, with respect to Kailahun District, Gbao intended the commission of acts of terrorism and shared that Common Criminal Purpose.[3026] The Trial Chamber further found that one or more members of the JCE used the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes to commit the crime of acts of terrorism.[3027]

820. para. 1104: By merely referring to the Trial Chamber's factual findings on acts of sexual slavery and forced marriage in Kailahun District,[3028] Gbao fails to establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the persons who committed those acts acted with the specific intent to spread terror. Gbao only offers an alternative interpretation of the evidence without explaining how the Trial Chamber's conclusion was unreasonable. Gbao further fails to address the Trial Chamber's finding that the members of the JCE intended the commission of acts of terrorism.

(x) Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

821. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Bo District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Bo District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras. 612 [7905], 614 [7906].

Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Bo District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras.791 [7908], 794-796 [7909].

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

824. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[18]

825. These attacks [para. 38: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[19]

[19] AFRC Indictment, para. 39.

826. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies.[20]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Acts of Terrorism and Collective Punishments

827. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population.The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[21]

828. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

>
> And:
>

(iii) Count 14: Looting and Burning

829. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian property. This looting and burning included the following: [22]

> i. Bo District - Between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces looted and burned an unknown number of civilian houses in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko; [23]
> ii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian homes in various locations in the District, including Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu and Fadugu; [24]
> iii. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned; [25]
> iv. Bombali District - Between about 1 March 1998 and 31 November 1998, AFRC/RUF forces burnt an unknown number of civilian buildings in locations in Bombali District, such as Karina and Mateboi; [26]
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning throughout Freetown and the Western Area. The majority of houses that were destroyed were in the areas of Kissy, Wellington and Calaba town; other locations included the Fourah Bay, Upgun, State House and Pademba Road areas of the city; [27]

830. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> Count 14: Pillage, a Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Evidence and Deliberations

a. Primary Purpose of Certain acts of Violence

831. para. 1445: As a preliminary observation, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the purpose behind an individual act of violence may not necessarily correspond with that of the campaign in which it simultaneously occurs. It follows that certain acts of violence, even when committed in the context of other acts of violence the primary purpose of which may be to terrorise the civilian population, may not have been committed in furtherance of such a campaign. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that this is the case with regards to certain acts of violence underlying Counts 3 through 14 of the Indictment, as outlined below.

832. para. 1446: Conversely, the Trial Chamber is also of the opinion that certain acts of violence are of such a nature that the primary purpose can only be reasonably inferred to be to spread terror among the civilian population regardless of the context in which they were committed.

i. Child Soldiers

833. para. 1447: The Trial Chamber has found that children abducted by the AFRC/RUF were forced to undergo military training[2646] and were organised into "Small Boy Units" (SBUs)[2647] and battalions.[2648] Child soldiers were forced to fight along side the AFRC/RUF[2649] and to guard strategic points of interest such as Cyborg Pit, a diamond mine in Kenema District, diamonds being the main source of conflict in the region. Child soldiers were forced into labour which supported and maintained the troops. Such labour included carrying loads of food and other "luggage", fetching water and pounding rice. Child soldiers were forced to flog captured civilians[2650], act as bodyguards[2651] , amputate civilians[2652] and were used as human shields.[2653]

834. See below: Chapter 9 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities – paras. 1254 [5099], 1271 [5116], 1255 [5100], 1262 [5107], 1268 [5113], 1270 [5115], 1275 [5120].

835. para. 1448: Generally speaking, the Trial Chamber has concluded that Junta forces abducted children for military purposes in Kenema District during the Junta period, that AFRC forces abducted children for military purposes in Kono, Koinadugu and Bombali Districts in 1998 and in Freetown and the Western Area in 1999. The Trial Chamber has also concluded that children were used for military purposes in Kenema District in 1997-1998, Kono District in 1998, and Freetown and Western Area in 1999.[2654] On the basis of the evidence of expert witnesses, the Trial Chamber has also concluded that persons under the age of 15 were used for military purposes by all factions, including the AFRC, during the conflict including the period 25 May 1997-mid 1999.

836. See below: Chapter 9 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Legal Conclusions - Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities - para 1278 [5138].

837. para. 1449: The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of Witness TF1-334 who stated that during the 1999 invasion of Freetown, the Accused Brima ordered the capture of civilians saying it would attract the attention of the international community[2655] and the finding of the Chamber that children were among those captured. While this evidence suggests that a non-military purpose also drove the AFRC to abduct children in this context, the Trial Chamber finds this purpose was subordinate given the overwhelming evidence of the conscription and use of child soldiers for military purposes. This is supported by the further evidence of Witness TF1-334 who testified that the children abducted from Freetown were later trained to be SBUs.[2656]

838. para. 1450: The Trial Chamber finds that the primary purpose of the conscription and use of child soldiers by the AFRC during the conflict in Sierra Leone, was not to spread terror among the civilian population, but rather was primarily military in nature. Therefore, even where such acts may have occurred simultaneously with other acts of violence considered by this Chamber with regards to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that such acts cannot be considered to have been committed as part of any such campaign. That is, in this particular factual context, the conscription and use of child soldiers cannot be considered as acts in furtherance of a primary purpose to terrorise protected persons.

ii. Abductions and Forced Labour

839. para. 1451: The Trial Chamber has found that civilians abducted by the AFRC/RUF were forced to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field, Kenema District.[2657] Witness TF1-334 testified that the Accused Brima ordered his troops to capture any civilian who looked strong in order to make them part of the troops prior to attacks in Koinadugu and Bombali Districts.[2658] The Trial Chamber has found that abducted civilians were trained to use arms[2659] and were given military training in Rosos, Bombali District.[2660] They were also pressed into forced labour[2661] including being forced to carry equipment and other goods for the troops.[2662]

840. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Freetown and Western Area – Kissy Town paras. 1289-1293 [3876], 1297 [3881], 1301-1302 [3882], 1304 [3884], 1309 [3885].

841. para. 1452: The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of Witness TF1-334 who testified that Brima ordered the abduction of civilians from Freetown during the attack in order to attract the attention of the international community.[2663] Similar to child soldiers, while this evidence suggests that a non-military purpose may have also driven the AFRC to abduct civilians in this context, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that this purpose was subordinate given the overwhelming evidence of the abduction of civilians for use as slave labour and/or to strengthen the number of the troops. The Trial Chamber notes its further findings that the Accused Brima told his fighters to force captured civilians to join their forces in order to compensate for those fighters killed by ECOMOG.[2664] The Trial Chamber has also found that civilians captured in Freetown were forced to join the rebel forces, that they accompanied the troops out of Freetown and were forced to carry loads. The Trial Chamber has also found that rebels told the civilians captured in Freetown that they had captured them to use them as human shields.[2665]

842. para. 1453: The Trial Chamber does not discount that the abduction and detention of persons from their homes and their subjection to forced labour under conditions of violence spread terror among the civilian population. However, the Trial Chamber finds this "side-effect" of terror is not sufficient to establish the specific intent element of the crime with regards to these acts.

843. para. 1454: The Trial Chamber finds, therefore, that the primary purpose behind commission of abductions and forced labour was not to spread terror among the civilian population, but rather was primarily utilitarian or military in nature. As with evidence of the abduction and use of child soldiers, therefore, even where abductions and forced labour occurred simultaneously with other acts of violence otherwise examined by this Chamber with regards to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that such acts cannot be considered to have been committed with the primary purpose to terrorise protected persons.

iii. Sexual Slavery

844. para. 1455: The Trial Chamber has found that many women abducted by the AFRC troops were detained for many months, repeatedly raped and forced to do domestic work such as cooking, washing clothes and to carry loads. Many women were told by the perpetrators that they were now their "wives".[2666]

845. para. 1456: Witness TF1-334 testified that at Rosos, civilians were captured by "rebels" from the surrounding villages. Those who tried to escape were executed.[2667] Women - particularly the young and beautiful ones - were placed under the full control of "commanders"; they became their "wives". As their "wives" the women cooked for the rebels and the other soldiers in Kono. They were also "used sexually."[2668] This was an open practice. The Witness testified that he and other soldiers all "had sexual intercourse" with captured women.[2669]

846. para. 1457: Witness TF1-133 testified that all the women who were captured at the same time as her were given to men as their wives which meant that the women had to have sex with the men.[2670] She testified further that in Krubola, the captured women cooked and "had sex" with the rebels and were forced to be their "wives". The Witness stated that when a women was "betrothed" to a man, she became his "wife" which according to the Witness, meant that "whoever you were with would have sex with you." The Witness testified that when the rebels captured women, they would have sex with them before bringing them to where the rebels were based. When the captured women were taken to the base, they would be handed over to a person who would have sex with that woman all the time. The "bosses and stronger guys" all had wives who were captured but the subordinates were not allowed to have wives. The subordinates would be sent to the front and they would always bring back captured civilians, including women.

847. para.1458: The practice of sexual slavery was regulated by the AFRC troops through a system of ownership and punishment for transgressing the rules.[2671] Witness TF1-094 testified that she believed that if she refused to have sex with her captor, she would have been killed.[2672] Some women were transferred as "wives" between two or more different soldiers.[2673]

848. para. 1459: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that in the particular factual circumstances before it, the primary purpose behind commission of sexual slavery was not to spread terror among the civilian population, but rather was committed by the AFRC troops to take advantage of the spoils of war, by treating women as property and using them to satisfy their sexual desires and to fulfil other conjugal needs. As with evidence of the other enslavement crimes, namely the abduction and use of child soldiers and forced labour therefore, even where sexual slavery occurred simultaneously with other acts of violence examined by this Chamber with regards to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that such acts cannot be considered to have been committed with the primary purpose to terrorise the civilian population.

iv. Physical Violence: Amputations

849. para. 1460: The Trial Chamber has found that amputations of civilians were carried out by members of the AFRC in Kono and Koinadugu Districts as well as in the City of Freetown. In Tombodu, Kono District, the Trial Chamber has found amputations were carried out by members of the AFRC in retaliation for alleged civilian killings of AFRC soldiers, as a warning to other civilians, and because civilians did not support the AFRC but supported the government. Civilians whose hands were amputated by members of the AFRC were told to ask President Kabbah for new hands.[2674]

850. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - paras . 1192-1242 [4065]

851. para. 1461: The Trial Chamber has found that civilians throughout Freetown, during the January 1999 invasion also had their hands amputated by members of the AFRC and were told to go to President Kabbah and ask him for new hands. During a raid of the PWD areas an AFRC operation was carried out called ‘Operation Cut Hand’ in which civilians were given the cruel choice of having either “short sleeves” or “long sleeves” meaning amputations of the arm at the bicep or of the hand at the wrist. In the Upgun, Ross Road and Fourah Bay area, civilians were “taught a lesson” and had their hands amputated and were hacked to death. Civilians there were told that as they had voted for “Pa Kabbah” they should go to him as he had hands to give them. They were also told to go to “Pa Kabbah” or ECOMOG to complain. Civilians near Shell Company at Old Road had their hands amputated and were told to go to “Pa Kabbah” because they had voted for him and he would give back their hands. At Kissy mental home, civilians had their hands amputated because they were thought to have divulged the location of AFRC troops to ECOMOG. Civilians were amputated at Kissy Mental Home, Fataraman Street, Parsonage Street and told to go to Kabbah. At Parsonage Street, the amputated civilians were told expressly, to tell

Kabbah ‘‘this is what we have done. Go tell him no more politics, no more voting.” This pattern continued until late January or early February when the AFRC were forced to flee Freetown.[2675]

852. para. 1462: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the express statements of the perpetrators made at the time many of the amputations were carried out that such amputations were used by the AFRC with the primary purpose to spread terror among the civilian population. The Trial Chamber also notes that such amputations were carried out primarily against unarmed civilians, in or near their homes, villages, and farms, and the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the attacks could not have been primarily for military advantage.

853. para. 1463: The mutilation of individuals in such a manner also carried with it an inherent public message regardless of the explicit statements of the perpetrators. The brutal amputation of civilian limbs served as a visible lifelong sign to all other civilians not to resist the AFRC and not to back President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah or his supporters. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied on this basis that the primary purpose of amputations carried out by members of the AFRC during the conflict in Sierra Leone could only reasonably be inferred to have been to terrorise the civilian population.

854. para. 1464: The Trial Chamber is therefore convinced that amputations carried out by members of the AFRC Trial Chamber throughout the conflict, regardless of the context in which they were committed, were acts of violence committed against protected persons with the primary purpose to terrorise protected persons.

(ii) Kenema District – Crimes

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District - Crimes

855. para. 1470: The Trial Chamber has previously found in its Factual Findings that civilians in Kenema Town were accused of being Kamajors or of supporting the Kamajors and were unlawfully killed or subject to physical violence by members of the AFRC/RUF.

856. para. 1471: In particular, the Trial Chamber relies on its findings that after the Coup in 1997, both “RUF” rebels” and “AFRC Juntas” took over control of Kenema Town and remained in Kenema until February, 1998.[2679]

857. para. 1472: The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TFl-122, not previously examined by the Chamber, that later, in December 1997, the AFRC/RUF launched ‘Operation No Living Thing’ in Kenema and that as part of this operation members of the

AFRC/RUF would parade the streets of Kenema Town during the day accusing people of being Kamajors, entering people's homes, harassing them, and looting their property alleging that they had Kamajors in their houses. The Witness testified that members of the AFRC/RUF would "search you in the street, take whatever you have in your pocket and they will allege that you have Kamajor in your pocket" and that the RUF/AFRC "were shooting all over the air."[2680]

858. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Kenema District – Kenema Town – para. 829 [1815].

859. para. 1473: The Trial Chamber has found that during this time, "RUF rebels" and "AFRC juntas" were seen dancing around the body of a civilian singing that they would kill all Kamajors. The rebels and juntas then split his abdomen and stretched his intestines across Hangh Road where the body stayed for three days.[2681]

860. para. 1474: The Trial Chamber has previously found that in early February 1998 Sam Bockarie arrested a number of persons on the grounds that they were 'Kamajor supporters'. They were brought to the AFRC Secretariat, physically abused and detained for about three days. They were brought to the police and later rearrested by members of the AFRCIRUF, beaten and killed.[2682]

861. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Kenema District – Kenema Town – para. 832 [1818].

(iii) Bo District – Crimes

862. para. 1477: In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution alleged that after the coup in May 1997, there was significant fighting between CDF/Kamajors and the AFRC/RUF forces in Bo District and civilians were often targeted as being sympathetic or collaborating with either the CDF or the AFRC/RUF. The Prosecution alleged that there were several instances of the AFRC/RUF forces executing civilians perceived to be working or sympathizing with the CDF during the Junta period.[2684]

863. para. 1478: Also in its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution alleged that in the weeks following the coup, there was an offensive launched by the AFRC/RUF from Bo Town against the surrounding villages for their perceived sympathy or assistance to Kamajors in the region. It is alleged by the Prosecution that in approximately June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces attacked five villages in the region, including Tikonko and Gerihun in the region; namely, Sembehun, Tikonko, Mamboma, Gerihun, and Telu. In these attacks, the Prosecution alleged that the AFRC/RUF intentionally killed many civilians that were remaining in the villages and in most of the attacks, looted and burned houses.[2685]

864. para. 1479: In its Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that the crimes committed during attacks on various villages in Bo District where it was perceived that the civilians were supporting and/or harbouring the CDF/Kamajors as well as the burning of civilian property performed as part of many of the attacks is evidence of collective punishment.[2686]

865. para. 1480: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution submitted that it was a policy of the AFRC Government to eliminate all opposition to it and that the AFRC Government ordered, as a matter of policy, attacks on villages like Tikonko which supported the former SLPP Government. The Prosecution submitted that AFRC attacks including the burning of the SLPP building in Bo Town, the attack in Gerihun in which an AFRC delegation said they wanted to join forces with the Kamajors but instead shot civilians, attacked the Vice President's house with an RPG and killed Chief Demby, sent a clear message that was "you are either for us or against us," with elimination being the consequence of resistance.[2687]

866. para. 1481: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were carried out against protected persons in Tikonko (Unlawful Killings) and Gerihun (Unlawful Killings).

867. para. 1482: In relation to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber will consider evidence of burning of civilian property as an act of violence. The Indictment alleges that AFRC/RUF forces burned an unknown number of civilian homes in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko. The Trial Chamber has found that the Prosecution conceded that it had not led evidence in respect of Telu, Sembehun and Mamboma.[2688] The Trial Chamber finds there is evidence of burning in Tikonko. This evidence will be evaluated, below.

a. Tikonko – Bo District – Crimes

868. para. 1483: The Trial Chamber has previously found on the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-004, that on or around 25 June 1997, AFRC and/or RUF rebels attacked the villages of Tikonko and killed civilians.[2689] In particular the Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings that two groups of attackers came to the village that day. The Trial Chamber has found that the first group came with the intent to kill Kamajors but the second group shot indiscriminately at civilians and Kamajors alike killing five civilians and three Kamajors at Tikonko Junction. During the attack on the village, the Trial Chamber has found a minimum of 18 more civilians were killed but that no evidence was adduced that any other Kamajors were killed. The Trial Chamber also relies in particular on its findings that the soldiers entering the village were heard to say "the people of Tikonko will know them today"; that three civilian women had their bellies split open, two of whom died from their injuries; that civilians, including a child, were killed in their houses; and that a corpse of a man was mutilated, the skin removed from the forehead.[2690]

869. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings – Bo District – Tikonko – paras. 810-818 [1797].

870. para. 1484: The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-004, not previously evaluated by the Chamber, that there was burning in Tikonko. The Witness testified that as he was walking towards his home he noticed that there was a lot of smoke in the town and that houses were burnt. When he reached his own house, he saw that it had been burnt, that items, including rice, had been looted from the house or pulled out in front of the house and burned.[2691] The Witness testified that he did not know of anyone in the village who had petrol available to burn the houses.[2692]

871. para. 1485: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-004 to be credible and consistent. The evidence of the Witness on burning was not challenged by the Defence. The Trial Chamber is convinced by the circumstantial evidence adduced, namely the burnt remains of houses and other items, and lingering smoke in the village following the attack, that the property of protected persons was burnt by members of the AFRC/RUF who attacked Tikonko that day.

b. Gerihun – Bo District – Crimes

872. para. 1486: The Trial Chamber has found previously in its Factual Findings that civilians were unlawfully killed in Gerihun.[2693] The Trial Chamber relies in particular on its previous findings that during an AFRC/RUF attack on Gerihun on 26 June 1997, Paramount Chief Demby and his caretaker were murdered by soldiers while the Paramount Chief was lying sick in his home.[2694]

873. para. 1487: Relying on the evidence of Witness TF1-054 and TF1-053 set out below and not previously examined in this Judgement, the Trial Chamber finds that the unlawful killing of Paramount Chief Demby was one act of violence committed as part of a series of attacks carried out by members of the AFRC/RUF against civilian and SLPP Government targets in the area.

874. para. 1488: Witness TF1-053 testified that he was in Bo Town on 25 May 1997 where he observed soldiers in uniform shooting in the street, causing people to run away, and hurling insults against persons affiliated with the SLPP. The Witness testified that at this time the SLPP Party Office on Kpondahun Road was burnt down. The Trial Chamber finds it reasonable to infer that the SLPP Party was burnt down by AFRC/RUF soldiers.[2695]

875. para. 1489: Roughly a month later, shortly before the killing of Paramount Chief Demby, Witness TFl-054 testified that he too was present in Bo Town, at the Demby Hotel when armed "soldiers" wearing combat arrived at roughly 1:00 a.m. The soldiers stated that they were looking for Kamajors but the Witness testified that they did not find any at the hotel. The soldiers asked the Witness the whereabouts of Paramount Chief Demby and he told them that he was in his Chiefdom in Gerihun Town. Witness TF1-054 testified that the soldiers harassed and beat civilians staying at the hotel, including wife of Paramount Chief Demby. The soldiers also stole property belonging to the patrons of the hotel.[2696]

876. para. 1490: Witness TF1-053 also testified that he observed "soldiers" launch an RPG into the house of the former vice-president, Mr. Albert Joe Demby (Paramount Chief Demby's brother) during the attack on Gerihun in which Paramount Chief Demby was killed.[2697]

877. para. 1491: However, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution assertion that the attack on Gerihun was preceded by an AFRC delegation which said they wanted to join forces with the Kamajors but instead shot civilians, an incident not previously evaluated by the Trial Chamber in its Factual Findings, mischaracterises the evidence brought before the Court. The Trial Chamber has carefully reviewed the evidence of Witness TF1-054 on this point. The Witness testified that the afternoon prior to the attack on Gerihun at about 3:00 pm, he, together with a group of students and Kamajors, attended a meeting at a school in Gerihun with four persons whom the witness stated had come from Freetown.[2698] The Witness described the persons as a certain Mike Lamin, a certain Mr. Gbao and two others. According to the Witness, the four came to Gerihun to speak with the people there and to request that the Kamajors in Gerihun unite together with the AFRC soldiers. The Witness testified that during the meeting he heard gun fire near the entrance to the town of Gerihun at which point the persons in attendance at the meeting disbursed.[2699] In the absence of any further facts establishing the identities of the persons at the meeting and linking them to the subsequent attack on Gerihun, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence is insufficient to support the conclusions drawn by the Prosecution.

878. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings – Bo District – Gerihun – paras. 821-825 [1808].

(iv) Kailahun District – Crimes

879. para. 1498: In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that civilians in Kailahun District were killed by AFRC/RUF forces as part of their campaign of terror and punishment.[2701] The Prosecution submitted that many civilians were deliberately killed on orders from senior AFRC/RUF commanders for their alleged membership or support for civil militia forces, the CDF/Kamajors, including a mass execution that was undertaken in Kailahun Town.[2702] The Prosecution submitted that attacks against civilians also included the abduction of women from other parts of Sierra Leone and their subjection to sexual violence in Kailahun; the capture of men, women and children and their use as forced labour in various locations in Kailahun; and the training of forcibly conscripted men, women and children.[2703]

880. para. 1499: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution argued that "[t]he crimes of physical violence and looting and burning although not specifically charged in the Indictment for Kailahun are relied upon as evidence for the crimes of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishment (Count 2).[2704]

881. para. 1500: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were carried out against protected persons in Kailahun Town (Unlawful Killings). The Trial Chamber has also found that civilians were enslaved in Kailahun District. As discussed above, the Trial Chamber does not consider that acts of enslavement were acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population. Evidence on this will not be considered further in this regard.

882. para. 1501: The Indictment does not allege burning in Kailahun District.

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Crimes

883. para. 1502: The Trial Chamber has previously found that persons in Kailahun Town were abducted, accused of being Kamajors and unlawfully killed. In particular, the Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings that on the orders of Sam Bockarie, 67 persons accused of being Kamajors, were arrested in several villages in Kailahun District and detained at the G5 office in Kailahun Town. Ten of these persons were killed by Sam Bockarie personally, and the rest were shot on his orders. The Trial Chamber has found the persons killed were hors de combat.[2705]

884. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings –Unlawful Killings – Kailahun District – Kailahun Town – paras. 860-863 [1841].

(v) Kono District – Crimes

885. para. 1505: In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that widespread and systematic attacks were carried out by AFRC/RUF forces as part of a campaign of terror against the civilian population in order to gain control over Kono District, in particular the diamond mining areas. It was submitted that after the ECOMOG intervention in February 1998, AFRC/RUF forces retreating from Freetown and Makeni regrouped and travelled through Bombali and Koinadugu Districts to Kono District, specifically Koidu Town.[2706]

886. para. 1506: In its Pre-Trial Brief and Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that throughout Kono District, AFRC/RUF forces carried out organised amputations of limbs, including the chopping of hands of those accused of voting for President Kabbah. It is submitted that civilians who were present at the scene were forced to laugh or clap during amputations, while victims were told to return to President Kabbah and request their limbs back.[2707]

887. para. 1507: It is submitted by the Prosecution in its Pre-Trial Brief that upon arrival in Koidu Town, AFRC/RUF forces commenced widespread attacks throughout the District demonstrating a pattern of widespread killings, physical and sexual violence, abductions, forced labour and conscription of civilians and widespread looting and destruction of civilian and public properties undertaken by AFRC/RUF forces in Kono throughout 1998. It is submitted that the AFRC/RUF terrorization of the civilian population enabled geographic control of the Kono area, particularly the diamond mining areas, where forced mining by civilians was being undertaken under the supervision of senior AFRC/RUF command.[2708]

888. para. 1508: In its Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submits that the burning of civilian property performed as part of the attacks on many villages throughout the District is evidence of collective punishment.[2709]

889. para. 1509: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were carried out against protected persons or their property in Koidu (Unlawful Killings; Enslavement); in Tombodu (Unlawful Killings; Physical Violence; Enslavement; Pillage); in Mortema (Unlawful Killings); in Wondedu (Rape; Enslavement); in Kaima/Kayima (Physical Violence) and in Yardu Sando (Pillage). The Trial Chamber has also found that civilians were pressed into sexual slavery and that child soldiers were abducted and used for military purposes in Kono District. As discussed above, the Trial Chamber does not consider that acts of enslavement, the conscription and use of child soldiers, nor sexual slavery were acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population. Evidence on these counts will not be considered further in this regard.

890. para. 1510: In relation to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber will consider evidence of burning of civilian property as an act of violence. The Indictment alleges that the AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread burning in Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was burned.[2710] The Trial Chamber has found that the Prosecution conceded that it had not led evidence on burning in relation to Foindu. Where evidence has been led on burning in the remaining locations which may go the proof of Count 1, the Trial Chamber will examine it below.

a. Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

891. para. 1511: The Trial Chamber has previously found that civilians in Koidu Town were targeted by AFRC/RUF soldiers and were killed.[2711]

892. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings – Kono District – Koidu Town – paras. 845-847 [1828].

893. para. 1512: The Trial Chamber accepts the further evidence of witness TFl-334 that Johnny Paul Koroma addressed the commanders in Kono and told them that Kono must be retained as it was a defensive ground for the AFRC/RUF forces. Witness TFl-334 testified that Koroma stated that the civilians in Kono had betrayed them by calling in the Kamajors and therefore, they must not be tolerated any longer in Koidu Town. He stated that in order to secure the area, civilian houses should be completely burnt down so that no civilians would be able to settle there.[2712]

894. para. 1513: Koroma declared Kono a "civilian no-go area" and ordered that civilians who refused to join "the movement" should be executed so that they would not provide information regarding the location of the troops. Issa Sesay, in the presence of a number of other commanders, then reiterated what Johnny Paul Koroma had said, and added that the civilians had proven to be traitors and that this must not be tolerated at all. The witness testified that the orders of Johnny Paul Koroma and Issa Hassan Sesay were immediately carried out. Civilians were driven out of Koidu Town and their houses were burnt down.[2713]

895. para. 1514: The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of witness TFl-217, not previously examined by this Chamber in this Judgement, who similarly testified that rebels and juntas burnt buildings in Koidu Town in February or March, 1998 to make Koidu into a "farm". This meant that they did not want any civilians there. The troops were led by Akim Sesay and Lieutenant T.[2714]

896. para. 1515: The Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings that after Johnny Paul Koroma declared Koidu a "no go" area for civilians an unknown number of civilians were killed, although it has been unable to determine beyond reasonable doubt whether these killing are attributable to AFRC and/or RUF forces.

b. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

897. para. 1516: The Trial Chamber has found that following an order of Johnny Paul Koroma in March 1998, children were abducted and trained to perform amputations on civilians in areas within Kono District including Tombodu.[2715]

898. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Kono District – Tombodu – para. 1201[4073].

899. para. 1517: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution witness TFl-334, that in March 1998, 'Savage', the commander in Tombudu, sent a message to 'Bazzy' in Koidu saying that civilians in Tombudu were celebrating because they believed ECOMOG had taken over the area. ECOMOG had not, in fact, taken over the area. Witness TF1-334 testified that, in fact, the civilians had been led to believe this because 'Savage' was wearing a Nigerian ECOMOG uniform. As a result, the Witness, together with a certain 'Colonel Momoh Dorty', went to Tombodu to see the civilians that 'Savage' had said were "jubilating".[2716]

900. para. 1518: The Trial Chamber has found on the basis of the evidence of Witness TF1-072 that in about March 1998, the Witness and thirteen other civilians were captured by "soldiers" and brought before 'Savage' in Tombodu. 'Savage' used a cutlass to slap the witness on his back, accusing him of killing soldiers. He then cut the Witness severely with the cutlass on his upper right calf and on his left calf. Witness TF1-072 was also stabbed by one of Savage's subordinates, 'Small Mosquito', in the left rib area following an order by 'Savage'. The Trial Chamber was able to observe the scars from these incidents.[2717]

901. para. 1519: 'Savage' then announced that he would cut off the hands of the fourteen captives, including witness TF1-072.[2718] The men were forced to lie on ground and were tied together. 'Small Mosquito' urinated on them. He then covered them with a mattress that he set on fire with the men still lying underneath. Witness TF1-072 was burnt on his shoulder before he managed to free himself. On account of his attempted escape 'Savage' flogged the witness on his face so severely that his vision is permanently impaired.[2719] 'Savage' then ordered the witness to place his hand on a nearby tree stump and attempted to amputate his right hand. The witness was so terrified that he defecated. His right hand was not entirely amputated, but permanently disfigured. The Trial Chamber was able to observe that the witness' fingers are mangled. He stated that he is unable to read or write as result of the assault.[2720]

902. para. 1520: The Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings that when witness TF1-334 arrived in Tombodu, he personally observed 'Savage' amputate the hands of about fifteen people.[2721] Witness TF1-334 testified that 'Savage' told the victims that they should tell ECOMOG that 'Savage' was in Tombodu and that this was a warning to the other citizens.[2722] The Trial Chamber has found that 'Savage' locked 15 civilians into a house which he then set ablaze and that none of the civilians escaped, and that 'Savage' and a certain 'Guitar Boy' beheaded 47 and threw their bodies into a diamond pit.[2723]

903. See below: Chapter 6 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Kono District – Tombodu – paras. 1206 [4078]; Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Kono District – Tombodu – paras. 855 [1837].

904. para. 1521: The Trial Chamber relies on its findings, on the basis of the evidence of witness TF1-033, that the AFRC carried out an unknown number of amputations in March 1998.[2724]

905. para. 1522: The Trial Chamber has found on the basis of the evidence of witness TF1-216 that in April 1998, he and other civilians were taken by members of the AFRC to Tombodu. 'Staff Alhaji' ordered the hands of the witness and five others to be cut off. Their hands were cut off with a cutlass and they were told to go see President Kabbah as he had a container of hands.[2725] The Trial Chamber also relies in particular on its findings with regards to witness TF1-216 that in or about April 1998 on the orders of 'Staff Alhaji Bayo' 53 civilians were burnt alive by "juntas" in a house.[2726]

906. para. 1523: The Trial Chamber accepts the testimony of Prosecution witness TFl-334, not previously examined by the Chamber, that prior to the pull out of the AFRC from Koidu Town in mid-May 1998, Johnny Paul Koroma ordered that houses should be burnt in Kono District and that following this Tombodu was completely burnt down.[2727] The witness testified that he knew this as he was an Operation Commander and monitored orders given to other commanders.[2728] At the time that 'Savage' had informed 'Bazzy' that civilians in Tombodu were celebrating because they believed ECOMOG had overtaken the town, described above, the witness went to Tombodu and personally observed that Tombodu was completely burnt down by a joint SLA and RUF force. The witness testified that Johnny Paul Koroma had given the order to burn the villages so the civilians would not occupy them and that the witness, other operations commanders, soldiers and 'Bazzy' ensured that these orders were carried out.[2729]

c. Yardu Sando – Kono District – Crimes

907. para. 1524: The Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings on the basis of the testimony of Witness TF1-019 that "AFRC soldiers" and "rebels" attacked Yardu Sando on 16 April 1998 and that during the attack soldiers looted valuable property from civilian houses.[2730] The Trial Chamber also accepts the testimony of Witness TF1-019, not previously examined, that during this attack the village was largely burnt down by the AFRC/RUF. The Witness stated that prior to the attack there were approximately 100 houses in the village and that following the burning, only 3 or 4 remained standing.[2731]

908. See below: Chapter 11 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Pillage - Kono District – Yardu Sando – paras. 1414 [6134].

(vi) Koinadugu District – Crimes

909. para. 1528: In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that from approximately 4 February 1998, after the AFRC/RUF were driven out of Freetown by the ECOMOG intervention force, successive attacks in Koinadugu District involved widespread killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, looting and destruction of property and the abduction and forced labour and/or conscription of men, women and children. The Prosecution submitted that these crimes were committed in furtherance of a campaign of terror and collective punishment during AFRC/RUF troop movements and attacks on towns and villages throughout the entire District, including Fadugu, Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu, Katambo, Koinadugu Town, Kumalu, Kuronbola, Kurubonla, Moriya, Seraduya, Serekolia, Sokorola, and Yiffen [sic].[2733]

910. para. 1529: The Prosecution further submits in its Pre-Trial Brief that some acts of physical violence were undertaken by the AFRC/RUF forces in Koinadugu District as collective punishment against the civilian population. It is submitted that AFRC/RUF forces organized amputations of limbs of men, women and children, who were given letters and/or told to go to President Kabbah to ask for their limbs back.[2734]

911. para. 1530: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution asserted, "The attacks on Yiffin and other villages, all in close proximity to each other, were carefully designed and organised by the three Accused, who intended that the crimes charged would occur, or were aware of the substantial likelihood of the occurrence of all of these crimes. Moreover, these acts or threats of violence were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst civilians and punishing them collectively for their failure to support the AFRC/RUF."[2735]

912. para. 1531: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were committed against protected persons or their property in Kabala (Unlawful Killings, Rape, Physical Violence, Enslavement, Pillage); in Kurubonla (Unlawful Killings); in Koinadugu Town (Unlawful Killings, Rape, Enslavement); in Fadugu (Unlawful Killings, Rape, Enslavement, Pillage); and in Kumala (Enslavement). The Trial Chamber has also found that women were subjected to sexual slavery and that children were abducted for use as child soldiers in Koinadugu District. The Trial Chamber has also found that enslavement, the abduction and use of child soldiers and sexual slavery are acts of violence the primary purpose of which, in the factual circumstances of the conflict in Sierra Leone, was not to spread terror among the civilian population. Evidence on these counts will not be considered further in this regard.

913. para. 1532: In relation to the crime of terror, the Trial Chamber will consider evidence of burning of civilian property as an act of violence. The Indictment alleges that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian homes in Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu and Fadugu.[2736] The Trial Chamber has found that the Prosecution conceded that it had not led evidence of burning in Heremakono and Kamadugu.[2737] Where evidence has been led on burning in the remaining locations which may go the proof of Count 1, the Trial Chamber will examine it below.

a. Kabala, Fadugu, Koinadugu Town and Kurubonla – Koinadugu District - Crimes

914. para. 1533: The Trial Chamber has found that a number of acts of violence were committed in Kabala, Fadugu, Koinadugu Town and Kurubonla during the indicted period.

915. para. 1534: The Trial Chamber has found that Kabala Town was attacked by AFRC/RUF forces in mid May 1998 and that the hands of an unknown number of civilians were amputated after the forces had successfully captured the town.[2738] On 27 July 1998 AFRC troops under the command of 'Savage' accompanied by "rebels" attacked Kabala Town for four to five days. Seven loyal SLA soldiers were captured and executed[2739] and the fighters looted civilian property.[2740] The Trial Chamber has found that Kabala was attacked again by 'Savage' and fighters under his command on 17 September 1998 and that fighters looted civilian property from houses.[2741]

916. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Koinadugu District – Kabala – paras. 1217 [4088].

919. para. 1535: In Fadugu, the Trial Chamber has found that at a checkpoint on 22 May 1998 eight soldiers belonging to an unidentified faction, captured a civilian they believed to be a member of the CDF. The soldiers beat the man to death, cut open his stomach and removed his intestines. The intestines were displayed openly at the checkpoint. In close vicinity to the checkpoint, a teacher and his younger brother were killed.[2742] The Trial Chamber has also found that during a later attack, on 11 September 1998, there was a second attack on Fadugu by "rebels" in a campaign known as "Operation Die." An unknown number of civilians were killed in the course of this attack, including the local paramount chief of Mabolo who was burnt to death in his house.[2743] Four members of the AFRC or RUF under the command of 'Savage' raped a girl and forced another civilian who happened upon them to watch as it happened. The girl subsequently died from her injuries.[2744]

920. para. 1536: The Trial Chamber has found that Koinadugu Town was attacked by "SLA" and "RUF fighters" under the command of SAJ Musa and Superman respectively in late July 1998 and that at least ten civilians were killed on the orders of 'Superman'. The Trial Chamber has also found that at least one civilian was repeatedly raped.

921. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Koinadugu District – Fadugu – paras. 877-878 [1858]; Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Pillage - Koinadugu District – Fadugu – paras. 1021 -1025 [2944].

922. para. 1537: The Trial Chamber notes, but does accept, the testimony of Witness TFl-199 with regards to possible evidence of burning in Kabala and Fadugu in 1998.[2745] While the Witness did not give a specific date with regards to his arrival in Kabala, the Witness testified that he was abducted by the AFRC/RUF in Bombali District at Christmas time in 1998 and travelled with the AFRC/RUF to several places before arriving in Kabala.[2746] As such, he could not have been in Kabala prior to 30 September 1998, the end of the indicted period for acts of burning.

(vii) Bombali District - Crimes

923. para. 1542: In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that a large contingent of AFRC/RUF returned to Bombali District in April or May 1998 and established a base at Rosos. The Prosecution submitted that they engaged in the forced labour and military training of abducted civilians, including children, and attacked several villages in the area including Karin, Gbendembu, Bonyoyo (or Bornoya), Mayombo, Mafabu, Malama and Mandaha. It submitted that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in wide spread atrocities against civilians during these and other attacks throughout the district including, intentional killing of civilians in Bonyoyo (or Bornoya), Karina, Mafabu, Mataboi, Pendembu, Malama and Gbendembu, acts of sexual violence including rape, sexual slavery and other forms of sexual violence in locations throughout the district including Mandaha and Rosos, mutilations and amputations in several locations throughout the district including Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka, and Rosos, and the burning of houses and looting of property in many locations throughout the district including Karina and Mateboi.[2747]

924. para. 1543: In its Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submits that the amputation of limbs by members of the AFRC/RUF in Bombali District where civilians were told to "go to Kabbah" for new hands and that the burning of civilian property performed as part of the attacks on many villages throughout the District is evidence of collective punishment.[2748]

925. para. 1544: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution submitted that "[...] the three Accused themselves gave orders for, and actively encouraged, killings physical and sexual violence and the burning of villages amounting to a campaign of terrorism" in Bombali District.[2749]

926. para. 1545: In its Closing Arguments, the Prosecution argued that the evidence has shown that all the Accused travelled as commanders with their troops through Bombali attacking villages on the way. The Prosecution argued that their intent was to spread terror and to punish the civilian population for not supporting them and that their ultimate objective was to retain power.[2750]

927. para. 1546: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were committed against protected persons in Bornoya (Unlawful Killings); Karina (Unlawful Killings); Mateboi (Unlawful Killings); Gbendembu (Unlawful Killings); and Rosos (Rape, Physical Violence). The Trial Chamber has also found that incidents of Sexual Slavery and Enslavement occurred in the District. However, as the Trial Chamber has also found that enslavement and sexual slavery are acts of violence the primary purpose of which, in the factual circumstances of the conflict in Sierra Leone, was not to spread terror among the civilian population, evidence on these counts will not be considered further in this regard.

928. para. 1547: The Trial Chamber will consider any evidence of burning in the locations in Bombali District particularised in the Indictment, namely, Karina and Mateboi. The Trial Chamber did not find that any locations were conceded by the Prosecution with regards to Count 14 at the Rule 98 stage.[2751] The evidence of burning in Karina and Mateboi which was adduced by the Prosecution will be examined below.

a. Mansofinia (Koinadugu District) to Camp Rosos (Bombali District) - Crimes

929. para. 1548: The evidence adduced with regards to Bombali District has demonstrated that AFRC troops moved from Mansofinia (Koinadugu District) to Camp Rosos (Bombali District). Specifically, the Trial Chamber has found that the Accused Brima returned to Mansofinia and led his troops to Rosos via the following path: from Mansofinia they first headed south into Kono district and passed Kondea (Kono), Worodu (Kono) and Yarya (Kono). From Yarya, the 'hometown' of the Accused Brima, the troops headed north east, back into Koinadugu district to Yiffin (Koinadugu) and from there eastwards passing Kumala (Koinadugu), Bendugu (Koinadugu) toward the area near Bumbuna (Tonkolili district). From there the troops headed further towards the north east into Bombali district and passed Kamagbengbeh[2752], Bonoya (Bombali), Karina (Bombali), Pendembu[2753] (Bombali), Mateboi (Bombali) and finally Rosos (Bombali).[2754] The Trial Chamber has established beyond a reasonable doubt that the civilian population was routinely targeted and attacked by soldiers and fighters on that route. The troops settled in Rosos and later a village named Major Eddie Town until the arrival of SAJ Musa in October/ November 1998.

930. para. 1549: Although no findings have been made on acts of violence per Counts 3 - 14 in a number of these locations, the evidence demonstrates a consistent pattern of attacks against the civilian population during this time which is indicative of the primary purpose of the attacks.

b. Mansofinia (Koinadugu District) – Crimes

931. para. 1550: In Mansofinia in May 1998, the First Accused Brima, gave orders to attack civilians. Witness TFl-334 testified that during a meeting convened in Mansofinia to plan the trip North to Bombali District, Brima ordered that any civilian who tried to run away should be shot on sight and that if troops were attacked in any village that village should be burnt down. The Witness testified that Brima warned the soldiers "Minus you, plus you" which TF1-334 explained meant that if a soldier should fail to go by those orders the operation would continue without him.[2755]

932. para. 1551: Witness George Johnson gave evidence that he arrived in Mansofinia in April 1998, after the withdrawal of the troops from Kono. On his arrival, Alex Tamba Brima, Santigie Kanu and some other commanders went to meet SAJ Musa at Krubola. Upon their return, Brima and Kanu told Bazzy that the troops should be restructured and that a camp, later Camp Rosos, should be made at the Bombali axis.[2756] A muster parade was called and the fighters were divided into battalions by FAT Sesay and promotions were given by Brima. The Witness was promoted to the rank of Provost-Marshal and given the role of ensuring disciplinary actions were taken against "the fighters" and to ensure that on all operations during the march to Camp Rosos the fighters adhered who broke the laws of ''jungle justice" would be arrested and judged.[2757] These laws included a prohibition against stealing government property, namely arms, ammunition and medical supplies and a prohibition against rape. Fighters who broke these laws would be punished by death or flogging.[2758]

c. Yaya (Kono District) – Crimes

933. para. 1552: The Trial Chamber recalls the evidence of witness TF1-033 that Brima addressed his troops publicly in Yaya[2759] and advocated attacks on civilians.[2760] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness was in fact referring to the speech made by the Accused Brima at Mansofinia and therefore makes no further findings on this evidence.[2761]

d. Kamagbengbeh (Bombali District) – Crimes

934. para. 1553: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TFl-334, not previously evaluated by the Chamber, that at Kamagbengbeh in June of 1998, 'Gullit' tried to divide the troops and sent one group to attack Kambai and another to attack Karina. The troops argued against this division and 'Gullit' agreed instead to focus the attack on Karina. TFl-334 testified that 'Gullit' called Karina a strategic point and said that it was the home town of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah. 'Gullit' told the junta forces that they should demonstrate their power in Karina. He ordered the troops to burn down Karina, to capture strong male civilians, and to amputate civilians. 'Gullit' stated that he wanted the attack on Karina to shock the whole country and the international community. Kamara and Kanu were present during this speech and during the subsequent attack on Karina. There were no ECOMOG or Kamajor troops in Karina at the time.[2762]

e. Bornoya and Mateboi – Crimes

935. para. 1554: In its Opening Statement, the Prosecution submitted that "It is crucial for the Trial Chamber to appreciate that Bornoya, Karina, Mandaha and Mateboi were villages all in extremely close proximity too each other so one attack on one village was followed almost immediately by an attack on one of the other villages."[2763] The Prosecution submitted that the neighbouring villages of Bornoya, Daraya and Mayombo were attacked first, followed by an attack against Karina on the same day.[2764] In its Closing Arguments the Prosecution argued that the attacks on the villages in Bombali are strikingly similar and create a consistent pattern of how the Accused operated against civilians throughout the campaign, namely, attack their village, kill them, amputate them, burn their houses and abduct the strong men and children.[2765]

936. para. 1555: The Trial Chamber has found that Bornoya was attacked in May of 1998 by AFRC troops including 'Gullit', and 'Five-Five' 'and that civilians were targeted and brutally assaulted during the attack. In particular, the Trial Chamber relies on its findings that during the attack, troops split open the stomach of a pregnant woman named 'Isatta' and removed the foetus. The woman died as a result. Two children were burnt to death when they were placed under a mattress which was set on fire. An unspecified number of other civilians were killed during the course of the attack.[2766]

937. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Bombali District – Bornoya – paras. 884 [1863].

938. para. 1556: The Trial Chamber relies on its previous findings that at an unspecified time in 1998, the Accused Brima sent an AFRC "advance team" under the command of 'Captain Arthur' to Mateboi, a village close to Camp ROSOS.[2767] Upon return to Camp Rosos, 'Captain Arthur' brought the decapitated head of the chief of Mateboi and handed it over the commanders at headquarters, which included the Accused Brima and Kamara.[2768]

f. Karina - Crimes

939. para. 1557: In its Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that the crimes committed during attacks on Mayombo, Bonoyo (or Bonyoyo), Daraya and Karina were carried out in a single day because it was believed that the inhabitants belonged to the Mandingo ethnic group, the same ethnic group as President Kabbah.[2769]

940. para. 1558: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution argued that, "[...] burning down Karina on the basis that it was President Kabbah's home town clearly amounts to punishing people for acts for which they are not responsible."[2770]

941. para. 1559: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TFl-157 that after the attack on Karina, he heard rebels say that the town had been attacked because it was the home town of President Kabbah.[2771] The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of Witness TF1-033 that he heard 'Gullit' say that Karina was the birthplace of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah who had caused a lot of suffering against the AFRC and its supporters and that the AFRC should now return the same fate against the people of Karina and Bornoya.[2772] Witness TF1-033 testified that he also heard 'Gullit' give an order that civilian women should be stripped naked and raped during the attack on Karina, and the neighbouring town of Bornoya.[2773] Witness George Johnson also testified that he heard 'Gullit', in the presence of Kamara and Kanu, order that Karina should be burnt down and the civilian inhabitants killed because it was the home town of Tejan Kabbah.[2774]

942. para. 1560: The Trial Chamber has found that following these orders, on or about 8 May 1998, Karina was attacked by AFRC/Junta forces and that a number of such acts of violence were in fact carried out.

943. para. 1561: The Trial Chamber has found that, the Accused Kamara and two other "juntas" locked five young girls into a house and subsequently set it ablaze. The five girls were burnt alive. "Juntas" threw an unspecified number of little children into the flames of burning houses. The children were burnt alive. Soldiers stabbed a pregnant woman to death. A certain Saccoh Kankoh

Fanta was injured during the attack and subsequently died. An unspecified number of children were killed during the attack.[2775]

944. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Bombali District – Karina – paras. 886 [1865].

945. para. 1562: 'Cyborg', a security to the Accused Kamara, threw at least four children aged between five and ten years from a two-storey building in Karina; however, it was not established beyond reasonable doubt that these children died as a result.[2776] A certain Eddie Williams, a.k.a. 'Maf', wrapped into an unknown number of people in a carpet inside a house and thereafter set the house on fire. The people were burnt alive.[2777]

947. para. 1563: The Trial Chamber has found that the mosque in Karina was attacked and a number of civilians, including a man leading prayers was killed. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Witness TF1-334 that the Accused Brima was at the mosque and accused the man leading the prayers of supporting President Kabbah. Brima said to him: "You, you are the one that pray for people. You are one of Pa Kabbah's family ... [s]o you are the worst people here." The Trial Chamber has found that civilians were killed on a massive scale in Karina.[2778]

g. Gbendembu - Crimes

949. para. 1564: The Trial Chamber has found that in or around August 1998, 'Gullit' ordered two AFRC commanders to attack Gbendembu because there were purportedly ECOMOG and loyal SLA troops there. Witness TF1-033 heard that 25 civilians were killed in the attack and that 'Gullit' commended his men on a 'job well done'.

h. Rosos - Crimes

950. para. 1565: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-334 that AFRC troops set up a base at Rosos in June of 1998 and remained there for approximately three months. The Accused Brima ordered that the troops should occupy the surrounding villages and that there should be no civilians within 15 miles of Rosos. He ordered captured civilians be executed rather than brought back to the camp and that he would take disciplinary action against any soldier who brought a civilian to the camp. He ordered "Operation Clear the Area" according to which the villages surrounding Rosos were burnt down and looted.[2779]

951. para. 1566: The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of witness TF1-033 that in June 1998, he heard Brima order soldiers to kill any civilians they came in contact with in Rosos.[2780] The Trial Chamber notes that witness TF1-267 similarly testified that rebels told her that civilians who did not leave Rothung near Rosos would be killed.[2781]

952. para. 1567: The Trial Chamber has found that while the troops were at Camp Rosos, at least three civilians were raped in or near Rosos[2782] and that one was gang-raped and was badly beaten and stabbed during the attack.[2783]

953. See below: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Pillage - Bombali District – Rosos – paras. 1034 [2955].

(viii) Freetown and Western Area – Crimes

954. para. 1574: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution argued that > [i]n accounting for the crimes in Freetown the Prosecution stresses the great degree of hatred that already existed amongst the SLA faction towards Nigerian ECOMOG, the police, and the civilian population in general as it attacked Freetown.

> That hatred, the Prosecution submits, was a motivating factor behind many of the crimes that were committed in Freetown against the civilian population. Such hatred stemmed from ECOMOG and civilians both killing and targeting soldiers and their families during the Intervention, the continuation of this practice whilst the SLAs were in the jungle, the numerous occasions when the civilians had betrayed the SLAs to the Kamajors and ECOMOG whilst they were in the jungle, and the execution of 24 senior AFRC officials in October 1998 by the Kabbah government whose Chief of Defence Staff at that time was Nigerian General Maxwell Khobe, and whose execution was carried out by Nigerian soldiers.
> There is also evidence that SAJ Musa himself gave orders that once in Freetown, all police stations should be burnt down and all policemen, Nigerians [sic] soldiers, and SLPP collaborators should be targeted and killed during the attack on Freetown. An order which was endorsed by the First Accused when he assumed command after the death of SAJ Musa.[2785]

955. para. 1575: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution asserted that the Accused" [... J gave orders for, and actively encouraged, killings, mutilations and sexual violence and widespread burning of houses amounting to a campaign ofterrorism."[2786]

956. para. 1576: The Prosecution has argued that the attacks against civilians continued as the AFRC retreated from Freetown. In its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution submitted that the bulk of the AFRC/RUF forces finally were pushed out of the city of Freetown by early February at which time the AFRC/RUF regrouped in Waterloo and coordinated later attacks on Tumbu and Hastings before being completely pushed out of the Western Area.[2787] In its Opening Statement, the Prosecution submitted that as the rebels were forced to withdraw by ECOMOG, they intensified the pace of their killings, amputations, looting and burning particularly in the Kissy area.[2788]

957. para. 1577: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were carried out against protected persons or their property in Freetown (Unlawful Killings, Rape, Physical Violence, Pillage, Enslavement) and that civilians were subjected to sexual slavery in Freetown and Western Area. The Trial Chamber has also found that children were abducted and used for military purposes in Freetown and the Western Area. As discussed above, the Trial Chamber does not consider that acts of enslavement, the abduction and use of child soldiers nor sexual slavery were acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population. Evidence on these counts will not be considered further in this regard.

958. para. 1578 (corrigendum): The Prosecution has adduced evidence on acts of burning in Freetown. The Trial Chamber will consider this evidence below.

a. State House – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

959. para. 1579: The Trial Chamber has found that on 6 January 1999, AFRC forces under the command of the Accused Brima, and including the Accused Kamara and Kanu, invaded the city of Freetown. They gained control of Freetown and large parts of the Western Area.[2789]

960. para. 1580: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TFl-334 who testified that he was present when 'Gullit' announced that it was time to attack Freetown and that the Sierra Leone People's Party government was responsible for denying the success of the rebel troops. The Witness testified that 'Gullit' ordered that Freetown should be looted and burnt down, that anyone who opposed the troops should be a considered a collaborator and should be killed.[2790] This testimony is corroborated by Witness TF1-033 who heard Gullit order the burning of houses and the murder of civilians during the attack on Freetown.[2791] Witness TF1-157 testified that when the ARFC entered Freetown, they ordered the civilians to sing while they were burning their houses.[2792]

961. para. 1581: The Trial Chamber relies also on its previous findings that during the subsequent attack on Freetown in January 1999, civilians were mutilated and killed by ARFC forces because the AFRC believed the people of Freetown supported President Tejan Kabbah or failed to support the AFRC/RUF.

962. para. 1582: In particular, the Trial Chamber relies upon its findings that a certain "Junior Sheriff' brought a boy to the State House who was from Guinea-Bissau and shot him[2793] and that at least four persons suspected to be Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers were executed, hors de combat by AFRC troops in the State House area. An AFRC commander named Lieutenant Colonel Kido shot and killed approximately six civilians because they had "overlooked" him, meaning that they did not pay sufficient respect to him.[2794]

963. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – State House – paras. 904 [1881], 913 [1890].

964. para. 1583: The Trial Chamber has found that 'Gullit' told his fighters to force captured civilians to join the AFRC troops on their retreat, in order to replace those fighters killed by ECOMOG. Civilians who refused to join were shot in the presence of the Accused Brima and their dead bodies were thrown out the back of State House. The Trial Chamber has found that at least thirty civilians were killed. The Trial Chamber has found at least six other civilians were killed by AFRC troops at or near State House.[2795]

b. Kingtom – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

966. para. 1584: The Trial Chamber relies in particular on its findings that an unknown number of civilians in the area of Kingtom were killed by AFRC troops for allegedly collaborating with ECOMOG. The Trial Chamber has found that in the second week of the invasion, during an operation to reclaim Kingtom from ECOMOG soldiers broke civilian houses and killed the civilians inside because they perceived them as 'traitors' who were collaborating with ECOMOG. Witness TF1-334 testified that soldiers would knock on the door of the house and if the door was not opened, they would force it open and "[t]he first person who came out was a dead person."[2796]

c. Fourah Bay – Freetown and Western Area- Crimes

968. para. 1585: The Trial Chamber has found that during the attack on Freetown, in early January, AFRC troops retaliated against civilians in the Fourah Bay area and punished them for allegedly killing an AFRC soldier.

969. para. 1586: Specifically, the Trial Chamber relies on its findings that after the troops lost State House and Eastern Police, the Accused Brima received information that the people of Fourah Bay had killed one of his soldiers and announced that he would lead the AFRC troops to Fourah Bay to burn houses and kill people in retaliation. The troops attacked Fourah Bay and a large number of civilians were killed including men, women and children burned inside houses. Soldiers shot people who attempted to escape from burning houses. The attack was not limited to Fourah Bay Road but encompassed the entire Fourah Bay area.[2797]

970. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – Fourah Bay – paras. 919-921 [1896].

971. para. 1587: The Trial Chamber has found that prior to the attack the Accused Brima ordered a soldier named "Mines" to go to the SLRA to collect cutlasses. "Mines" subsequently returned with cutlasses, which he distributed to the troops with the assistance of one of the battalion commanders 'Changabulanga'.[2798]

972. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – Fourah Bay – para. 921 [1898].

973. para. 1588: The Accused Kanu gave a demonstration on amputation of civilians to AFRC troops in the Kissy Old Road area. Kanu demonstrated an amputation on a civilian, explaining to them that a 'long hand' is the amputation of the hand, while a 'short hand' is the amputation of an arm around the bicep area (above the elbow and below the shoulder).[2799]

974. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – Fourah Bay – para. 922 [1899].

975. para. 1589: Brima then ordered the soldiers to move to the Upgun roundabout via Kissy Road. Upon arrival at Upgun, the troops were summoned in a muster parade. The Accused Kanu and the Accused Brima held a discussion and then Kanu told the troops that Brima had said that the civilians should be taught a lesson. Kanu then ordered that any civilian the troops saw from

Ross Road until Fourah Bay Road should be amputated and killed and the entire area should be burned down.[2800]

976. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – Fourah Bay – para. 919 – 926 [1896].

977. para. 1590: The troops were divided for the attack on Fourah Bay with the Accused Kanu as the commander of one group. After carrying out the orders, the troops were called back to where 'Gullit' was near Kissy Road.[2801] On cross-examination, witness TF1-184 gave more detail about the alleged involvement of the Accused Kamara in burning in Kissy Road, Ross Road and Fourah Bay Road after a muster parade at Upgun, but the evidence was not linked explicitly to the attack involving the retaliatory killing of civilians.

978. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings – Unlawful Killings - Freetown and Western Area – Fourah Bay – paras. 919 – 926 [1896].

979. para. 1591: Following the attack on Fourah Bay, the Accused Kanu gave a further demonstration at Upgun. Kanu announced that it was time for the amputations to begin. He stated that he would carry out the first amputations in order to set an example for the others. Kanu called for two civilians nearby to be brought to him and he amputated both hands of both civilians with a machete at their wrists, explaining the difference between what he referred to as 'short sleeve' and 'long sleeve' amputations. Kanu then told the civilians that since they voted for 'Pa Kabbah' they should go to him and ask him for hands. Ten more civilians were then rounded up, amputated at the elbow and told them to go to 'Pa Kabbah' or ECOMOG to complain.[2802]

980. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Upgun – para. 1229 [4097].

981. para. 1592: The Trial Chamber has found on the basis of the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-153 that while the AFRC headquarters was at PWD, a soldier came from Fourah Bay "with his head bust" reporting that the civilians there had been fighting the soldiers. The witness subsequently heard that 'Bazzy' had raided a WFP warehouse in the nearby area and collected a number of machetes he found there. Later that evening, the witness saw 'Bazzy' and overheard a conversation between him and SAJ Musa's wife. Tina Musa asked 'Bazzy' why his men were holding machetes. According to the witness, 'Bazzy' replied "We are just [returning] from Operation Cut Hand". The witness testified that from this conversation he understood that the machetes from the warehouse had been used to amputate people.[2803]

d. Kissy - Good Shepherd Hospital – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

983. para. 1593: The Trial Chamber has found that on 18 January 1999, a group of "juntas" went to the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy and accused personnel there of treating ECOMOG and Kamajors. They forced everybody out of the hospital - patients, nurses, staff, and visitors - and beat them with a large stick called a 'coboko', which has a rope tied to it.[2804] .

984. para. 1594: Civilians were taken from the Hospital, to a certain 'Pa Zubay's' house a short distance away. The civilians were made to stand against a wall and the juntas opened fire and began shooting randomly from different directions. Fifteen civilians were killed as a result of the shooting.[2805]

e. Kissy - Rogbalan Mosque – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

986. para. 1595: The Trial Chamber has found that AFRC fighters attacked a mosque in Kissy killing a number of civilians who were accused of being "enemies." Witnesses testified that the civilians were targeted because the AFRC fighters believed they were supporting President Kabbah and/or ECOMOG. Witness TFl-334 testified that the Accused Brima told commanders prior to the attack that he had received information that civilians were harbouring ECOMOG forces in mosques. Brima further stated that AFRC troops should shoot and kill people they encounter in mosques, as these people were enemies. The witness stated that while the area had many mosques, Brima referred in particular to a mosque "down towards Shell Old Road, towards the junction" that was housing "collaborators".

987. para. 1596: Witness TF1-021 testified that over fifteen men armed with guns and machetes, stormed into the compound of the mosque. The men asked the civilians if they were praying, to which the civilians responded affirmatively. The witness stated that the men told the civilians "As you are here now, you are people who voted for Tejan Kabbah. We are going to kill all of you." The civilians collected money and offered it to their assailants so that they would leave. The men took the money and then began firing indiscriminately, killing people throughout the mosque. According to the witness, the men stated that the killings were not their fault, as they came in peace, but that of President Kabbah, since he did not recognise the People's Army.

988. para. 1597: The Trial Chamber has found that at least 70 persons were killed during the attack.[2806]

989. See below: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Rogbalan Mosque– paras. 934-936 [1911].

f. Kissy - Old Shell Road – Freetown and Western Area – Crimes

990. para. 1598: The Trial Chamber has found that at Old Shell road, immediately prior to the troops' arrival at Kissy Mental Home, Osman Sesay a.k.a. 'Changamulanga' amputated six young civilian men at the elbow. 'Changamulanga' told the men to go to 'Pa Kabbah' and he would give them back their hands because they had voted for him.[2807]

991. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Old Shell Road– para. 1236 [4104].

g. Kissy - Kissy Mental Home - Freetown and Western Area – Crimes

992. para. 1599: Trial Chamber relies on its findings that one evening in January 1999, on the day that the AFRC troops arrived at Kissy Mental Home during the retreat from Freetown, the Accused Brima, in the presence of commanders including the Accused Kamara and Kanu, ordered troops to go out from the mental home and "clear up" the area. Brima stated that civilians were to be killed and amputated and houses burned as punishment for their support of ECOMOG. Specifically, he ordered the witness, 'Pikin', 'Shrimp', 'Hassim' and others to go as far as they could towards "PWD" killing people.[2808]

993. para. 1600: The witness stated that his group accordingly moved from the Kissy Mental Home, along the Old Road, towards Kissy market, where they heard civilians celebrating. The soldiers began firing machine guns at the civilians, killing an unspecified number of them. The troops went as far as Fisher Lane and then retreated to Kissy Mental Home, where they reported to 'Gullit' that the mission had been accomplished.[2809]

994. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Kissy Mental Home– paras. 1237-1241 [4105].

995. para. 1601: The Trial Chamber further found on the evidence of witness George Johnson that on the same day the Accused Kanu ordered the soldiers, in the presence of the Accused: Brima, the Accused Kamara and other commanders, to go to the eastern part of Freetown and amputate up to 200 civilians and send them to Ferry Junction. After the order was given, the witness observed fighters, including Kabila, 'Born Naked', 'Cyborg', and 'SBU Killer', moving towards the eastern part of Freetown. On their return, their machetes were covered with blood and they brought with them many amputated arms.[2810]

996. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Kissy Mental Home– para. 1237 [4105].

997. para. 1602: The Trial Chamber relies on its findings on the basis of the evidence of Witness TFl-184 that 'Mines' amputated an unknown number of civilians pursuant to an order issued by the Accused Brima. While the troops were at Kissy Mental Home, AFRC soldier Kabila told 'Gullit' that "the civilians are pointing their hands at our own crowd here," implying that the civilians were divulging the troops' position to ECOMOG. In the presence of the witness, 'Gullit' said "that the hand that they are pointing at us, the fingers that are pointing at us, we shall ensure that all their hands are amputated." When asked if anything occurred as a result of the Accused Brima's words, the witness testified that about one and a half hours later, AFRC soldier 'Mines' returned to Kissy Mental Home with a bag full of hands which he showed to 'Gullit' and others, including the witness. Witness TF1-184 also testified that during the period that the troops were at Kissy Mental Home, he observed 'Gullit' amputating a civilian's hand at Shell Company by Old Road.[2811]

h. Kissy - Rowe Street – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

998. para. 1603: The Trial Chamber has found that at unspecified time in January 1999, at Rowe Street in the Kissy area of Freetown, AFRC fighters or persons associated with them captured eight civilians, lined them up and shot seven of them dead. The rebels put the remaining civilian's hand on the ground, stood on his chest, stretched out his arms, and intentionally chopped off his hand with an axe.[2812]

999. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Rowe Street– para. 1232 [4100].

i. Kissy - Fatamaran Street – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

1000. para. 1604: The Trial Chamber has found that on approximately 18 January 1999 rebels amputated the hands of the seven captured persons. At least one person died as a result of the amputation.[2813]

j. Kissy - Old Road (Locust and Samuels area) – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

1001. para. 1605: The Trial Chamber has found that on 22 January 1999, on Old Road in the Locust and Samuels area, witness TF1-083 and his family were captured by a group of rebels. The rebel commander told witness TF1-083 and others to lie flat on their backs to be killed or amputated. The rebels took two people to a comer and then returned with bloody knives. The commander ordered the rebels to cut off the hands of the remaining people. He said anyone whose hand is cut should go to Kabbah and ask him for a hand. One rebel stabbed witness TF1-083 with a knife in the left upper arm. The rebels chopped witness TF1-083' s hand off with two blows of an axe. The hand of a man named Pa Sorie was also cut. The rebels cut off the fingers of a man named Mussa. The commander ordered the rebels to cut off the entire hand and when Mussa begged for mercy, the rebels killed him.[2814]

1002. See below: Chapter 7 – AFRC – Trial Judgment - Factual Findings - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment - Freetown and Western Area – Old Road (Locust and Samuels area)– para. 1234 [4102].

k. Kissy - Parsonage Street – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

1003. para. 1606: The Trial Chamber has found that on 22 January 1999, witness TFl-278 was fleeing from the rebels with his family and some of his tenants with their families when they were stopped by four persons wearing SLA uniforms and one person wearing civilian clothes near Parsonage Street in Freetown. A soldier named 'Captain Two Hand' ordered the soldiers to cut off the tenant's hands. A rebel in civilian clothes used an axe to cut off both of his hands. The soldiers told the tenant to "go and tell Tejan Kabbah this is what we have done. Go and tell no more politics, no more voting." Soldiers then amputated witness TF1-278's left hand. The witness testified that his child shouted "Hey, soldier, don't cut my father's hand, please. He is working for us." One of the soldiers ordered that the child's hand be amputated. The witness asked the soldier to amputate his right hand in exchange for sparing his child. The rebels amputated his right hand, before releasing the witness and the other civilians, telling them "You are the messenger of Tejan Kabbah. Go and tell Tejan Kabbah that we cut off your hand. Since you did not allow for peace we are saying goodbye to you."

1004. para. 1607: The Trial Chamber has also found that roughly three weeks after the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown, Brima, Kamara and Kanu went to PWD Junction to call for reinforcements from the RUF. After a failed attempt to recapture the State House, Brima returned to PWD which became a temporary headquarters. Around that time, Brima ordered the "troops" to abduct civilians in order to attract the attention of the international community. Kamara and Kanu were present also. Civilians, including a number of young girls were then abducted by the rebels and the commanders from Freetown and brought to the headquarters at PWD.

1005. para. 1608: The Trial Chamber finds additionally that civilian property was wilfully burned by members of the AFRC during the retreat from Freetown. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness Gibril Massaquoi, not previously evaluated by the Chamber, that during the retreat from Freetown the Accused Kanu ordered "the war candle to be put on" meaning that houses in Freetown should be burnt.[2815] The Trial Chamber also accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-169 that the Kanu ordered the burning of houses at Goba Water.[2816] Witness TF1-184 testified that Kanu distributed petrol for the burning of Freetown.[2817] Witness TF1-344 testified that the Accused Brima ordered Calaba Town burnt down[2818] and that the Accused Kanu participated in the burnings.[2819]

1006. para. 1613: In its Final Brief, the Prosecution asserts that Kamara "[...] gave orders for, and actively encouraged, killings, physical and sexual violence and the burning of villages amounting to a campaign of terrorism"[2821] in Port Loko District. It also asserted that, "[i]n a similar manner to attacks against civilians carried out by the Junta in other parts of Sierra Leone, those conducted by the Westside Boys in Port Loko District were done as part of the modus operandi to terrorise and punish civilians."[2822]

1007. para. 1614: The Trial Chamber has found that acts of violence were carried out by members of the AFRC against protected persons or their property in Manaarma (Unlawful Killings) and in Nonkoba (Unlawful Killings). The Trial Chamber has also found that civilians were forced into sexual slavery in Port Loko District, however, as sexual slavery, in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, has not been found to be acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population, the Trial Chamber makes no further findings in this regard. Burning was not particularised in Port Loko District and thus the Trial Chamber makes no findings on the basis of any evidence of such adduced by the Prosecution.

a. Attacks on the Way to and from Gberi Bana – Port Loko District - Crimes

1008. para. 1615: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of Prosecution Witness TFl-334, not previously evaluated by the Chamber, that the troops leaving Freetown went through Benguema (Western Area), Waterloo (Western Area), Newton (Western Area), Mammah (Port Loko District), Mile 38 (Port Loko District), Magbeni (Port Loko District) and ultimately made a camp at a village called Gberi Bana (Port Loko District).2823 This route is largely corroborated by the testimony of Witness George Johnson; however, Witness George Johnson stated that the troops went through Four Mile close to Newton Junction, not through Newton itself. He also did not mention having gone through Magbeni and testified that the troops set up base at "Geribana", also called "West Side" which the Trial Chamber is satisfied is the same location as "Geri Bana"[2824]

1009. para. 1616: During this time, the AFRC troops, under the overall command of the Second Accused Kamara, conducted a series of attacks on the proximate villages.

1010. para. 1617: The Trial Chamber relies in particular on the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-334 that after the troops left Newton, in approximately March 1999, they passed through a small village referred to by the Witness as "RDF". There the Accused Kamara, ordered a certain 'Kankada', his personal security officer, to take some men to "decorate" "Mammah" Town. The Witness testified that the Accused Kamara explained that by "decorate" he meant that soldiers should execute any civilians they captured and display them at Mammah Junction. The Witness went to Mammah Town and observed the bodies of 15 persons who had been executed and mutilated. Two of the victims were women, and three were children. The Witness testified that the Accused Kamara congratulated his men on a job well done.[2825] Witness TF1-334 also testified that 'Bazzy' said that Mammah should be set on fire and himself participated in the burning.[2826] Similarly, Witness TF1- 334 testified that 'Bazzy' ordered that Mile 38 should be set on fire and himself participated in the burning.

1011. para. 1618: This evidence is generally corroborated by that of Witness George Johnson who testified that he was with the Accused Kamara in "Mamamah" and that Kamara ordered soldiers to "make the terrain more fearful to slow the movement of the ECOMOG troops." Witness George Johnson testified that by this Kamara meant that people should be killed and put on display. The Witness testified that five men, civilians of Mammah, were killed by 'Cyborg' with a machete and their remains were put on display on the main highway. The Witness also testified that before the troops pulled out of Mammah, Kamara ordered a house burnt down. The Witness testified that were a number of civilians in the house, including some children aged 10 to 15. The Witness was present outside the house when one of the children trapped inside tried to escape. Kamara forced him at gunpoint back into the house and the child was burnt to death.[2827]

1012. para. 1619: This evidence is also generally corroborated by that of Witness TF1-023 that in approximately March of 1999, in Mile 38, he witnessed 'Bazzy' ordered the rebels to attack civilians in Mamama Village in order to spread fear. The Witness stated that 'Bazzy' said that the rebels should kill people and instil fear as ECOMOG was already pushing them out.[2828] The Witness also testified that following the attack, he saw the rebels kill about 20 people. Their heads were cut off and placed on sticks at roadblocks.[2829]

1013. para. 1620: Defence Witness DBK-129 testified that he was at "Mammah" during an SLA battle with ECOMOG during this period. He testified that 'Junior Lion' gave the order to 'Kankada' to make the area "fearful". The Witness testified that civilians were killed and their heads displayed at checkpoints in order to scare the ECOMOG troops.[2830]

1014. para. 1621: Witness TF1-334 testified that after passing through Mile 38, 'Bazzy' and the troops arrived at Magbeni.[2831] There, 'Bazzy' ordered some of his men to cross the river and go to a village called Gberi Bana and make it a "civilian free area". The Witness testified that 'Bazzy' explained that civilians should be executed. The Witness subsequently went to Gberi Bana and saw approximately 15 "chopped" bodies. 'Bazzy' was present and commended his men on a job well done.[2832]

1015. para 1622: Witness TF1-334 testified that from the base in Gberi Bana, 'Bazzy' gave a number of orders to attack villages in the surrounding area. 'Bazzy' said that ECOMOG has taken over Masiaka and gave an order that those areas where ECOMOG was based should be attacked, burnt down and that any civilian captured should be executed.[2833]

1016. para. 1623: Witness TF1-334 testified that 'Bazzy' called for Port Loko (Town) to be attacked. He also ordered that any village the troops reached on the way should be burnt down and civilians killed. The Witness testified that 'Bazzy' stated that he did not want to see any civilians there other than those who were captured with the troops.[2834]

1017. para. 1624: Witness George Johnson also testified that Kamara, in a meeting at Geri Bana, ordered an attack on Port Loko which was carried out sometime before 27 April 1999 (Independence Day in Sierra Leone)[2835]. However, George Johnson testified that the purpose of the operation was to get arms and ammunition from Malian troops stationed there. George Johnson went on the operation which he described as successful. In unknown villages on the way to Port Loko, witness George Johnson observed civilians who had been killed and amputated. The Witness testified that these acts were committed in part by SLA advance "blocking" troops, who went before him. Witness George Johnson believed 'Cyborg' was responsible for these acts and complained about this to Kamara upon his return to Geri Bana. The Witness testified that he complained because the operation was meant to be purely to attack the Malians not to kill civilians.[2836]

1018. para. 1625: Witness George Johnson testified that during the attack on Port Loko he came across a young woman who had her hands amputated. The Witness instructed a certain 'Sammy', an Intelligence Officer' to write a letter addressed to the Malians and place it around her neck, which he did.[2837]

1019. para. 1626: Witness TFl-334 testified that from the base in Gberi Bana, 'Bazzy' ordered an operation to take place at Makolo. According to the Witness, 'Bazzy' stated that ECOMOG forces have a base there and that the troops should destroy the entire village, burn it down and that if they encountered any civilians they should be executed. The Witness went on this operation and observed that three ECOMOG soldiers were executed and that three young women were chopped to death with an axe.[2838]

1020. para. 1627: Witness George Johnson testified that from the base in Geri Bana, Kamara ordered operations on Newton junction and Mile 38. The witness was the operation commander for both these attacks. Unlike the attacks described by witness TF1-334, witness George Johnson testified that the purpose of these attacks was to find arms and ammunition.[2839]

b. Manaarma – Port Loko District - Crimes

1021. para. 1628: The Trial Chamber has found a group of rebels under the command of 'Junior Lion' attacked Manaarma en route to Port Loko, where they engaged the Malian ECOMOG soldiers in combat at Shelenker/Shelenka secondary school. The Trial Chamber has also found that on an unspecified date, soldiers took an unknown number of women to a house where they were all killed. Witness TF1-253 testified that in April 1999, he saw a pregnant woman whose head had been severed and her stomach opened by the "rebels".

c. Nonkoba – Port Loko District - Crimes

1022. para. 1629: On the morning of28 April 1999, "rebels" attacked the village of Nonkoba. Witness DBK- 111 and other inhabitants of Nonkoba fled to the bush. The witness later learned that 36 villagers were killed in this attack, including his mother-in-law. He observed several dead bodies with severed heads.[2840]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law - War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

1023. para. 241: Article 3 of the Statute is entitled 'Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II' and provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977.
> These violations shall include:
>
> a. Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder as well as cruel treatment such as torture, mutilation or any form of corporal punishment;
> b. Collective punishments;
> c. Taking of hostages;
>
> d. Acts of terrorism;
> e. Outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

f. Pillage;

g. The passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as indispensable by civilised peoples; and

h. Threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

1024. para. 242: The Trial Chamber endorses the following chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Convention and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, as articulated in its Rule 98 Decision.[468]

a. There must have been an armed conflict whether non-international or international in character at the time the offences were allegedly committed

1025. para. 243: Although Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions is expressed to apply to armed conflicts "not of an international character", the distinction between internal armed conflicts and international conflicts is "no longer of great relevance in relation to the crimes articulated in Article 3 of the Statute as these crimes are prohibited in all conflicts. Crimes during internal armed conflicts form part of the broader category of crimes during international armed conflict."[469] The Appeals Chamber of the ICTY has ruled that "an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a State."[470] The armed conflict "need not have been causal to the commission of the crime, but the existence of an armed conflict must, at a minimum, have played a substantial part in the perpetrator's ability to commit it, his decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed or the purpose for which it was committed".[471]

1026. para. 244: The criteria for establishing the existence of an armed conflict are the intensity of the conflict and the degree of organisation of the warring factions.[472] These criteria are used "solely for the purpose, as a minimum, of distinguishing an armed conflict from banditry, unorganised and short-lived insurrections, or terrorist activities, which are not subject to international humanitarian law".[473]

1027. para. 245: International humanitarian law applies from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extends beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached; or, in the case of internal conflicts, until a peaceful settlement is achieved. Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply on the whole territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there.[474]

b. There must be a nexus between the armed conflict and the alleged offence

1028. para. 246: For an offence to fall within the scope of Article 3 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber must establish that a sufficient link between the alleged breach of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II and the underlying armed conflict existed.[475] The rationale of the said requirement is to protect the victims of internal armed conflicts, but not from crimes unrelated to the conflict. The nexus is satisfied where the perpetrator acted in furtherance of or under the guise of the armed conflict.[476]

1029. para. 247: The following factors have been considered in the jurisprudence to determine if an act was sufficiently related to the armed conflict: whether the perpetrator was a combatant; whether the victim was a member of the opposing party; whether the act can be said to have served the ultimate goal of a military campaign; and whether the crime was committed as part of or in the context of the perpetrator's official duties.[477]

c. The victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation

1030. para. 248: Both Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II protect only those persons who take no active or direct part in the hostilities, and those who have ceased to take part therein and are therefore placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause.[478] To fulfil this requirement, the Prosecution must prove the relevant facts of each victim with a view to ascertain whether that person was actively involved in the hostilities at the relevant time.[479]

(ii) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

1031. para. 249: The Trial Chamber finds that at all times relevant to the Indictment, there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone. The Trial Chamber took judicial notice of the fact that the conflict in Sierra Leone lasted from March 1991 until January 2002 and involved the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[480] The Defence for each of the three Accused admitted the fact that at all times relevant to the Indictment, a state of armed conflict existed throughout the territory of Sierra Leone.[481]

1032. para. 250: In relation to the character of the armed conflict, the Prosecution submitted in their Final Brief that Articles 3 and 4 of the Statute apply to both international and non-international armed conflicts.[482] While the distinction between non-international and international amed conflicts remains of consequence in international humanitarian law, the characterisation of the armed conflict in Sierra Leone was not canvassed at trial and no submissions were made on it by the parties. For this reason, the Trial Chamber confines itself to the following brief observations.

1033. para. 251: The Trial Chamber finds that the armed conflict in Sierra Leone was non-international. This conclusion is derived from the application of the two-pronged test for the internationalisation of non-international armed conflicts developed in the jurisprudence of the ICTY.[483] There is no evidence before the Trial Chamber that proves beyond reasonable doubt that a third State intervened in the conflict, either through its own troops or alternatively by exercising the requisite degree of overall control over some of the conflict's participants to find that they acted on its behalf. Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber reiterates that this finding is immaterial to its jurisdiction as Articles 3 and 4 of the Special Court's Statute apply where an armed conflict was in existence when the crimes were committed, regardless of whether such conflict was non-international or international in character.

1034. para. 252: The Trial Chamber considers it important to acknowledge that the armed conflict throughout Sierra Leone pre-dated the involvement of the AFRC and the May 1997 coup constituted a turning point in this regard. Prior to May 1997, there existed a state of armed conflict between the Kabbah Government and the RUF, which the 1996 Abidjan Peace Accord failed to resolve.[484] After the coup, the armed conflict continued but was now conducted by RUF and former SLA troops, on behalf of the AFRC/RUF government, fighting against ECOMOG and the CDF/Kamajors, on behalf of the Kabbah Government. Documentary evidence establishes that regular armed clashes between the two sides occurred throughout the remainder of 1997.[485]

1035. para. 253: The armed conflict continued along the same lines after the ECOMOG intervention which saw the Kabbah government reinstated.[486] The May 1999 Ceasefire Agreement and the July 1999 Lome Peace Treaty both provided for the cessation of the armed conflict,[487] which did not eventuate.[488] Although these agreements referred only to the RUF, it is apparent from documentary evidence that the AFRC/RUF staged joint attacks periodically throughout 1999.[489] In addition, AFRC and RUF leaders made a joint public statement in October 1999 which referred Seely to the prior state of 'war' and proclaimed their unified commitment to implementing the Lome Treaty.[490] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the AFRC remained actively engaged in hostilities until the end of the Indictment period in January 2000.[491]

1036. para. 254: The Trial Chamber finds that the crimes were closely related to this conflict.[492] Unless indicated otherwise in Chapter X of this Judgement, the Facts and Findings, the Trial Chamber is also satisfied that all victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time the crimes occurred.

(iii) Pleading

1037. para. 660: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 42 to 79 of the Indictment, and charged in Counts 3 to 14, "as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and [which] did terrorise that population." Count 1 thus charges the Accused with acts of terrorism, a violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3(d) of the Statute.[1299]

1038. para. 661: Article 3(d) of the Statute, which is the verbatim reproduction of Article 4(2)(d) of Additional Protocol II, prohibits acts of terrorism. The latter provision is tied to Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II, which provides that "[a]cts or threats of violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population are prohibited."

1039. para. 662: The prohibition and criminalisation of the intentional use of 'terror violence' III armed conflict against a civilian population for strategic purposes is well settled in customary international law.[1300] Such prohibition was first explicitly evoked after the First World War, when a deliberate use of a "system of general terrorisation" of the population to secure control of a region was found to be contrary to the rules of civilised warfare.[l301] Later, the prohibition of terror as a means of warfare was gradually introduced in a number of international conventions as well as in domestic military manuals.[1302]

1040. para. 663: Terror against a civilian population was first referred to as a war crime in a report published in 1919 by the Commission of Responsibilities[1303] While 'terrorism' was not explicitly criminalised by the Nuremberg Charter, evidence of terror violence was considered in the context of murder and mistreatment of the civilian population under Article 6 of the Nuremberg Charter.[1304] Further, post World War II domestic tribunals incorporated the crimes of 'systematic terrorism,[1305] and 'systematic terror,[1306] in their statutes. Finally, provisions criminalising terror against the civilian population as a method of warfare were incorporated into numerous domestic legislations.[1307]

1041. para. 664: In the wake of the Second World War, Article 33 of Geneva Convention IV was adopted. It provides that "all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited." As Article 33 is applicable only to persons in the hands of a party to the conflict, it was subsequently complemented by Article 51 (2) of Additional Protocol I and Articles 4(2)(d) and 13(2) of Additional Protocol II, to include acts of terrorism committed against the civilian population in international and internal armed conflict, respectively.

1042. para. 665: A provision prohibiting acts of terrorism can be found in Article 4(2) of the ICTR Statute.[1308] Although not expressly included in the ICTY Statute, the infliction of terror upon the civilian population has been adjudicated in a number of cases before that Tribunal.[1309]

1043. para. 666: In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that customary international law imposed individual criminal liability for violations of the prohibition of terror against the civilian population at the time relevant to the Indictment.

(iv) Applicable law – Acts of Terrorism

> 1. Acts or threats of violence directed against persons or their property;
> 2. The perpetrator wilfully made persons or their property the object of those acts and threats of violence; and
> 3. The acts or threats of violence were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among those persons.[1310]

1045. para. 668: The ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Galic case provided further clarification as to these elements of the crime. With regard to the actus reus, it held that > the crime of acts or threats of violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population can comprise attacks or threats of attacks against the civilian population. The acts or threats of violence constitutive of the crime of terror shall not however be limited to direct attacks against civilians or threats thereof but may include indiscriminate or disproportionate attacks or threats thereof. [...] Further, the crime of acts or threats of violence the primary purpose of which it to spread terror among the civilian population is [...] rather a case of "extensive trauma and psychological damage" being caused by "attacks which were designed to keep the inhabitants in a constant state of terror." Such extensive trauma and psychological damage form part of the acts or threats of violence.[1311]

1046. para. 669: Actual terrorisation of the civilian population is not an element of the crime. The requisite mens rea is composed of the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population. In the words of the ICTY Appeals Chamber, [t]he fact that other purposes may have coexisted simultaneously with the purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population would not disprove this charge, provided that the intent to spread terror among the civilian population was principal among the aims. Such intent can be inferred from the circumstances of the acts or threats, that is from their nature, manner, timing and duration.[1312]

1047. para. 670: The Kanu Defence argues that the crime of acts of terrorism does not encompass acts or threats of violence targeted at protected property but only protected persons.[1313] While the Trial Chamber agrees that it is not the property as such which forms the object of protection from acts of terrorism, the destruction of people's homes or means of livelihood and, in turn, their means of survival, will operate to instil fear and terror. The attacks on, or destruction of, property thus plays an important role in defining the contours of this crime. What places acts of terrorism apart from other crimes directed against property is the specific intent to spread terror among the population. The acts or threats of violence committed in furtherance of such a purpose are innumerable and may well encompass attacks on property through which the perpetrators intend to terrorise the population.[1314]

1048. para. 671: Therefore, this Trial Chamber endorses the finding of Trial Chamber I that the ambit of acts of terrorism "extends beyond acts or threats of violence committed against protected persons to acts directed against installations [...]" where such acts were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.[l315]

(v) Evidentiary basis

1049. para. 1435: In its Supplemental Pre-Trial and Final Briefs, the Prosecution asserted that the evidentiary basis for the crimes charged in Counts 3 to 14 of the Indictment, taken as a whole, provides the evidentiary basis for the acts of terrorism charged as Count 1 and the collective punishments charged as Count 2.[2638]

1050. para. 1436: The Trial Chamber notes that the actus reus of the crime of terror involves "acts or threats of violence directed against protected persons or their property". A plain reading suggests that the factual basis of this element could, in theory, encompass a broader range of facts than those necessary to prove the actus reus elements of the crimes charged in Counts 3 to 14 of the Indictment. As set out by this Chamber in the Applicable Law, supra, the Galic: Appeals Chamber has confirmed that "the nature of the acts or threats of violence directed at the civilian population can vary; the primary concern [...] is that those acts or threats of violence can be committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population. "[2639] This Chamber has held that acts of terrorism are not restricted to violence, or threats of violence, targeted at protected persons but may include threats of attacks on, or destruction of, people's property or means of survival.

1051. para. 1437: The Trial Chamber notes also that some evidence has been adduced by the Prosecution in this case which does not go to the proof of the crimes indicted in Counts 3 - 14. While such evidence might theoretically go to proof of the actus reus of the crime of Terror in an abstract consideration, the Trial Chamber does not rely upon it in this case as to do so would place an unfair burden upon the Defence who cannot be said to have been put on notice of such in the Prosecution's case against the Accused. This is similarly the case with any evidence of threats of violence which may have been adduced by the Prosecution, but which have not been expressly pleaded by the Prosecution. The Trial Chamber, therefore, has limited its examination of the evidence adduced in relation to the crime of terror in this case to acts of violence which have been pleaded by the Prosecution as going to crimes laid out in the Indictment.

1052. para. 1438: The Trial Chamber, does however, make an exception to this limitation with regards to evidence which relates to acts of burning civilian property. The Trial Chamber has found that burning, as alleged by the Prosecution, is not inclusive of the crime of pillage.[2640] However, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that burning, unlike other evidence adduced by the Prosecution which does not go to proof of the crimes alleged, has been sufficiently particularized by the Prosecution in the Indictment under Count 14, and that therefore, the Defence has been put on adequate notice. The Trial Chamber will therefore take into consideration evidence of burning in relation to the actus reus of the crime of the crime of terror as an act of violence directed against protected persons or their property.

1053. para. 1439: With regards to the element of the crime of terror that the acts or threats of violence directed against protected persons or their property were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population, the Trial Chamber may rely on evidence which demonstrates a pattern of similar attacks, the context of the act, or is otherwise indicative of the purpose relative to any acts of violence committed, regardless of the nature of that evidence. The Trial Chamber will therefore examine the whole of the evidentiary record in this regard.

1054. para. 1440: The Trial Chamber therefore adopts a two-step approach to the examination of the crime of terror as follows:

> Were acts of violence particularised in the Indictment wilfully directed against protected persons or their property by members of the AFRC?[2640]
> If so, is there evidence which proves beyond a reasonable doubt that these acts were committed with the primary intent of spreading terror among the civilian population2

(vi) Primary purpose

1055. para. 1441: In its Final Brief, the Kanu Defence argues that the intent required for a finding of terror is a special intent, namely, that the Accused must not only be aware of the possibility that terror would result, but that terror was the result that was specifically intended.[2641] The Kanu Defence argues that from the time the AFRC was ousted from Freetown by ECOMOG in February 1998, SAJ Musa was the overall commander of the AFRC and that the overall goal of the AFRC was to reinstate the army in Freetown. As such, the Kanu Defence argues that all crimes allegedly committed during this time were in furtherance of this goal and that the Prosecution did not lead any evidence that Kanu's primary goal was to spread terror.[2642]

1056. 1442. The Appeals Chamber in the Galic case held:

1057. para. 1443: The Trial Chamber therefore finds as a preliminary observation, that the possibility that another purpose to acts of violence may have existed does not in and of itself disprove that the primary purpose was to spread terror among the civilian population. Whether such a purpose was the primary purpose is a question to be determined in relation to the events outlined below.

1058. para. 1444: The Trial Chamber refers to paragraphs 38 and 39 of the Indictment in which the Prosecution sets out the particulars of Count 1, Terror. It is stated in paragraph 38 that "members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF) [...] conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone [...]."[2644] Paragraph 39 continues, "These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but were also used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the Kabbah government or pro-government forces."[2645] The alleged attacks to which the Indictment refers occurred in the context of an internal armed conflict in which various parties, each maintaining their own overall goals, engaged with each other and with the civilian population in a number of encounters. Any given encounter or attack within the context of the overall conflict may have been undertaken for any number of strategic, necessary or other reasons. It is a question of whether any particular attack or series of attacks was waged with the primary purpose to spread terror among the civilian population that the Indictment bids the Trial Chamber to determine. The Trial Chamber finds therefore, that the Kanu Defence submission that all the crimes allegedly committed during this time were in furtherance of the overall goal of SAJ Musa to reinstate the army in Freetown does not address the question before it with regards to Count 1.

(vii) Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

1059. para. 1475: On the basis of the circumstances of the attacks, namely that civilians were deliberately targeted on the premise that they supported Kamajors; the sustained duration of attacks of a similar nature, spanning May 1997 through December 1998; and the particularly brutal nature of some of the attacks including the burning of civilians in a house and the grotesque public display of a mutilated body, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that the primary purpose of the acts of violence described in Kenema Town was to spread terror among the civilian population.

1060. para. 1476: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the unlawful killings and subjection to physical violence also served as a punishment against protected persons. No evidence has been adduced to indicate whether the protected persons targeted in these attacks did or did not in fact support the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned1with that government, in this instance Kamajors, nor whether the protected persons in fact failed to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber has held that the material element in the actus reus of the crime of collective punishment is not whether the acts were actually committed or not by the victims, but whether the perpetrator indiscriminately and collectively punished these individuals for acts that they might or might not have committed.[2683] The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the evidence specified above, that protected persons were collectively punished for allegedly being or supporting Kamajors by members of the AFRC/RUF.

(viii) Bo District– Acts of Terrorism

a. Tikonko and Gerihun – Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

1061. para. 1492: The Trial Chamber notes the targeted nature of the attacks against civilians in Tikonko by the second group of soldiers described by Witness TF1-004. Specifically the Trial Chamber notes that the soldiers were not making any selection in their killings which, taken together with the evidence of civilian deaths, the Trial Chamber is satisfied is indicative of the intent of the soldiers to target civilians and Kamajors alike. This inference is supported by the express statement, relayed by Witness TF1-004 that the soldiers were singing that the people of Tikonko will know them today.

1063. para. 1494: The Trial Chamber also notes the close timing between the attacks on Tikonko and the attack in Gerihun, both of which targeted civilians for their supposed support for opposition groups to the AFRC.

1064. para. 1495: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of this evidence that the acts of violence described in Tikonko and Gerihun were carried out with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

1065. para. 1496: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the unlawful killings and burning also served as a punishment against protected persons. No evidence has been adduced to indicate whether the protected persons targeted in these attacks did or did not in fact support the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, in this instance Kamajors or the SLPP party, nor whether in fact the protected persons failed to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber has held that the material element in the actus reus of the crime of collective punishment is not whether the acts were actually committed or not by the victims, but whether the perpetrator indiscriminately and collectively punished these individuals for acts that they might or might not have committed.[2700]

1066. para. 1497: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the evidence specified above, that protected persons were collectively punished for allegedly being or supporting Kamajors or members of the SLPP Government by members of the AFRC/RUF.

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Acts of Terrorism

1067. para. 1503: The Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the persons in Kailahun Town were abducted and killed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

1068. para. 1504: The Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that persons in Kailahun Town were collectively punished for supporting Kamajors.

1069. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bo, Kemena and Kailahun Districts, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Bo, Kenema and Kailahun Districts – paras. 1641-1650 [7991], 1842-1844 [8001], 1847 [8006], 1982-1984 [6843], 1987-1991 [6848].

1070. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Bo, Kenema and Kailahun Districts, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Bo, Kenema and Kailahun Districts – paras. 1641-1643 [8837], 1651-1664 [8839], 1842-1844 [8853], 1848-1855 [8854], 1982-1984 [8862], 1992-1996 [8863].

(x) Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Koidu Town, Tombodu and Yardu Sando – Kono District – Acts of Terrorism

1071. para. 1525: The Trial Chamber infers from the circumstances of the attacks against civilians in Koidu Town and Tombodu, namely that civilians were repeatedly targeted and that a great number were deliberately killed; the sustained duration of the attacks; the particularly brutal nature of some of the attacks including civilians who were burnt alive when they were locked in houses which were set on fire; the great number of repeated mutilations of civilians whose missing hands were left as a grotesque and lingering public reminder of the attacks; the widespread destruction of civilian property in Tombodu; as well as the repeated and express statements of members of the AFRC/RUF that such attacks were committed to intimidate civilians; proves that the primary purpose of the attacks was to spread terror among the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that acts of terror were committed in Koidu Town and Tombodu.

1072. para. 1526: However, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that is has been proven that the acts of looting and burning which took place in Yardu Sando were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

1073. para. 1527: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the crimes committed in Koidu Town and Tombodu also served as a punishment against protected persons. No evidence has been adduced to indicate whether the protected persons targeted in these attacks did or did not in fact kill any AFRC/RUF soldiers and therefore whether they in fact did or did not fail to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber has held that the material element in the actus reus of the crime of collective punishment is not whether the acts were actually committed or not by the victims, but whether the perpetrator indiscriminately and collectively punished these individuals for acts that they might or might not have committed.[2732] The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the evidence specified above, that protected persons were collectively punished for allegedly having killed an AFRC/RUF soldier by members of the AFRC/RUF.

1075. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kono District – paras. 1665 [8868], 1669-1673 [8869], 1856 [8874], 1862-1893 [8875], 1997 [8907], 2001-2005 [8908].

(xi) Koinadugu District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Kabala, Fadugu, Koinadugu Town and Kurubonla – Koinadugu District – Acts of Terrorism

1076. para. 1538: As described above, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that acts of physical violence, specifically amputations such as those carried out in Kabala Town in mid-May 1998, in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, are acts of violence the primary purpose of which was to terrorise the civilian population. However, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence does not prove that the other acts of violence committed during the attacks on Kabala Town were acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population.

1077. para. 1539: Similarly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the grotesque mutilation and public display of the body of a civilian suspected to be a member of the CDF is an act the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population. However, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that it can be determined beyond reasonable doubt that the other acts of violence committed during the attacks on Fadugu were acts the primary purpose of which was to spread terror among the civilian population.

1078. para. 1540: The Trial Chamber finds that no evidence has been adduced that would demonstrate that the acts of violence committed in Koinadugu Town were committed with the primary purpose to spread terror among the civilian population.[1541]. The Trial Chamber is neither satisfied that the elements in relation to Count 2 (Collective Punishment) are established in relation to Koinadugu District.

(xii) Bombali District - Mansofinia (Koinadugu District) to Camp Rosos (Bombali District), Mansofinia (Koinadugu District), Yaya (Kono District), Kamagbengbeh (Bombali District), Bornoya and Mateboi, Karina, Gbendembu and Rosos – Acts of Terrorism

1079. para. 1568: The acts of violence carried out by members of the AFRC against protected persons or their property in Bornoya, Mateboi, Karina, Gbendembu and Rosos were carried out in the context of a series of attacks in which civilians were deliberately targeted for allegedly failing to sufficiently support the AFRC. There is evidence to suggest that these attacks were explicitly ordered by the First Accused in Mansofinia in May 1998 and in Yaya in April 1998. In Kamagbengeh in June of 1998, the First Accused ordered the AFRC troops to attack Karina and to deliberately target civilians in order to "shock the whole country and the international community". In Rosos, in June of 1998, the First Accused ordered that civilians should be cleared from the area within 15 miles from Rosos, that they should be executed rather than brought back to the Camp and that the surrounding villages should be burned and looted.

1080. para. 1569: The Trial Chamber has not been presented with any indication that the civilians in the villages attacked by the AFRC described above were armed. No evidence been adduced to suggest that these villages were military targets in the sense that no discernable strategic advantage was gained from the attacks leading up to Camp Rosos nor was any territory held by the troops following the attacks. Rather, the troops moved on to the next village, ultimately settling in Camp Rosos. Once the troops arrived in Camp Rosos the attacks continued against civilians in the area.

1081. para. 1570: The Trial Chamber notes the particularly brutal nature of a number of the acts of violence committed against civilians during the attacks including the splitting open of the stomach of a pregnant woman and removal of the foetus and the burning of civilians alive. Similarly the Trial Chamber notes that a number of the acts of violence were carried out against particularly vulnerable persons - children and pregnant women.[1571]. On this basis, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the acts of violence committed by members of the AFRC against protected persons or the property in Bornoya, Mateboi, Mandaya, Karina, Gebendembu and Rosos can only reasonably be inferred to have been carried out with the primary purpose to spread terror among the civilian population.

1082. para. 1572: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the crimes committed also served as a punishment against protected persons. No evidence has been adduced to indicate whether the protected persons targeted in these attacks did or did not in fact support the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah or factions aligned with that government. The Trial Chamber has held that the material element in the actus reus of the crime of collective punishment is not whether the acts were actually committed or not by the victims, but whether the perpetrator indiscriminately and collectively punished these individuals for acts that they might or might not have committed.[2784]

1083. para. 1573: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the evidence specified above, that protected persons were collectively punished for allegedly supporting the President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah by members of the AFRC/RUF.

1084. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bombali District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1) – AFRC – Trial Judgment –Findings and Conclusions – Bombali District - paras. 1700-1720 [8064], 1911-1920 [8085], 2025-2031 [8095].

1085. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Bombali District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Bombali District – paras. 1700 [8949], 1721-1744 [8950], 1911 [8974], 1921-1928 [8975], 2025 [8983], 2032-2044 [8984] .

(xiii) Freetown and Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

a. State House, Kingtom, Fourah Bay, Kissy- Good Shepherd Hospital, Kissy-Rogbalan Mosque, Kissy- Old Shell Road, Kissy- Kissy Mental Home, Kissy- Rowe Street, Kissy- Fatamaran Street, Kissy- Old Road (Locust and Samuels area) and Kissy- Parsonage Street – Freetown and Western Area – Acts of Terrorism

1086. para. 1609: The acts of violence carried out by members of the AFRC against protected persons or their property during the AFRC invasion of Freetown in January 1999, were part of a planned and deliberate attack, ordered or carried out by all three Accused, in which protected persons were specifically targeted. These attacks continued during the AFRC retreat. The Trial Chamber notes the particularly brutal nature of some of the acts of violence. Members of the AFRC repeatedly amputated the hands a great number of protected persons. These mutilations can only be reasonably understood to have served as a grotesque public warning to civilians not to interfere with the AFRC troops. The Trial Chamber notes that a great number of protected persons were deliberately killed by members of the AFRC in targeted attacks or through indiscriminate shooting. The Trial Chamber also notes the repeated and express statements of members of the AFRC that such acts of violence were being committed because the civilian population had allegedly supported opponents of the AFRC, namely President Tejan Kabbah and the ECOMOG forces.

1087. para. 1610: On this basis, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the acts of violence committed by members of the AFRC against protected persons or property during the AFRC invasion and retreat from Freetown in early 1999 were carried out with the primary purpose to spread terror among the civilian population.

1088. para. 1611: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that these crimes also served as a punishment against protected persons. No evidence has been adduced to indicate whether the protected persons targeted during the invasion and retreat from Freetown did or did not in fact support the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, in this instance ECOMOG, the Police and Nigerians, nor whether in fact the protected persons failed to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber has held that the material element in the actus reus of the crime of collective punishment is not whether the acts were actually committed or not by the victims, but whether the perpetrator indiscriminately and collectively punished these individuals for acts that they might or might not have committed.[2820]

1089. para. 1612: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the evidence specified above, that protected persons were collectively punished by members of the AFRC/RUF for allegedly supporting President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah, ECOMOG or other factions aligned with the government or for allegedly failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.

1090. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Freetown and Western Area - paras. 1745-1786 [8102], 1929-1941 [8144], 2045-2064 [8157].

1091. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3) – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Freetown and Western Area – paras. 1745 [8997], 1787-1810 [8998], 1929 [9022], 1942-1950 [9023], 2045 [9032], 2065-2080 [9033].

(xiv) Port Loko District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Attacks on the way to and from Gberi Bana, Manaarma and Nonkoba – Port Loko District – Acts of Terrorism

1092. para. 1630: The Trial Chamber finds there is evidence to suggest that a pattern of attacks against protected persons or their property was conducted with the purpose of terrorising the civilian population. However, given the evidence of witness George Johnson, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that spreading terror was not the only purpose and in fact, may not have been the primary purpose of the attacks ordered by the Accused Brima or others. Regardless, the Trial Chamber finds that there is insufficient evidence linking the acts of violence found by the Chamber to have occurred in Manaarma, Nonkoba and Tendekum - the only acts of violence which have been established beyond a reasonable doubt by this Chamber and the only acts particularised in the Indictment in which the Defence was put on notice - with the attacks ordered by the Accused Brima.

1093. para. 1631: The Trial Chamber is therefore not satisfied that these acts of violence were committed against protected persons or their property in Manaarma or Nonkoba with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

1094. para. 1632: The Trial Chamber is neither satisfied that the crimes committed in Manaarma and Nonkoba served as punishment against protected persons.

(xv) Finding on Count 1

1095. para. 1633: By virtue of the foregoing and of the Trial Chamber's findings with regards to the Chapeau elements of war crimes, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the elements in relation to Count 1 (Terror) are established.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Findings

1096. para. 167: The Third Ground of the Prosecution's Appeal alleges both a legal and a factual error on the part of the Trial Chamber in finding that the Prosecution did not adduce any evidence and consequently did not prove that Kamara was individually responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for any of the crimes committed in Port Loko District. Most of the arguments presented by the Prosecution concern the Trial Chamber's factual findings in respect of the following crimes that were committed in Port Loko District (hereinafter the "Port Loko District crimes"):

(i) Unlawful killings in Manaarma for which Kamara was found individually responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute;

(ii) Sexual slavery: and

(iii) Acts of terror and collective punishment in respect of (i) and (ii) above

1097. para. 169: However, as the Appellants have been convicted and sentenced to terms of imprisonment of fifty (50) years and forty-five (45) years for crimes committed under Article 6(1) or Article 6(3) of the Statute in Bombali District and in the Western Area, the Appeals Chamber is of the opinion, taking all the circumstances into consideration, particularly having regard to the length of the sentences imposed, that it becomes an academic exercise and also pointless to adjudicate further on minute details raised in Grounds One and Three of the Prose caution 's Appeal.

(b) Legal Conclusions

1098. para. 171: In its Fifth Ground of Appeal the Prosecution complains in substance that in the particular factual context of the case the Trial Chamber erred in law in holding that the three enslavement crimes were not acts of terrorism and also were not collective punishments.

1099. para. 172: The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that the Prosecution's attempt to search for further acts of terrorism by adding the three enslavement crimes to this list is an unnecessary exercise since the Appellants have already been convicted of acts of terrorism and an adequate sentence has been imposed.

1100. para. 173: The Appeals Chamber further finds the Prosecution's submissions regarding the crime of collective punishments to be imprecise and without merit The Prosecution failed to demonstrate adequately how the Trial Chamber either erred in law, in validating a decision or erred in fact, occasioning a miscarriage of justice.

1101. para. 174: The Appeals Chamber exercises its discretion not to entertain the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal and therefore it is dismissed in its entirety.

D. CDF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Samuel Hinga Norman, Moinina Fofana, and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-03-14-I, Indictment, 4 February 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

1102. Paragraph 4 through 21 is incorporated by reference.[28]

1103. These actions [para. 23: The CDF, largely Kamajors, engaged the combined RUF/AFRC forces in armed conflict in various parts of Sierra Leone - to include the towns of Tongo Field, Kenema, Bo, Koribondo and surrounding areas and the Districts of Moyamba and Bonthe.] by the CDF, largely Kamajors, which also included looting, destruction of private property, personal injury and the extorting of money from civilians, were intended to threaten and terrorize the civilian population. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. Typical CDF actions and the resulting crimes included: [Paragraphs 24.a to 24.f incorporated by reference].[29]

(ii) Count 6-7: Terrorizing the civilian population and Collective Punishment

1104. At all times relevant to this Indictment, the CDF, largely Kamajors, committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 22 through 27 and charged in counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian populations of those areas and did terrorize those populations. The CDF, largely Kamajors, also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for their support to, or failure to actively resist, the combined RUF/AFRC forces.[30]

1105. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article: 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> Count 6: Acts of Terrorism, a Violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.d. of the Statute
> And:
>
> Count 7: Collective Punishments, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute.

(iii) Count 5: Looting and Burning

1106. Looting and burning included, between about 1 November 1997 and about 1 April 1998, at various locations including in Kenema District, the towns of Kenema, Tongo Field and surrounding areas, in Bo District, the towns of Bo, Koribondo, and the surrounding areas, in Moyamba district, the towns of Sembehun, Gbangbatoke and surrounding areas, and in Bonthe District, the towns of Talia (Base Zero), Bonthe Town, Mobayeh, and surrounding areas, the unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian owned property.[31]

[29] CDF Indictment, para. 24.
[31] CDF Indictment, para. 27.

1107. By their acts or ommissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3.ofthe Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crime alleged below:

> Count 5: Pillage, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.f of the Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-T, Judgement, 2 August 2007

(a) Factual Findings

1108. See below: Chapter 2 - CDF – Trial Judgment - Murder – Factual Findings; Chapter 7 – CDF – Trial Judgment - Violence to Life, Health and Physical or Mental Well-Being of Persons, in particular, Cruel Treatment; Chapter 11– CDF – Trial Judgment - Pillage.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

1109. para. 49: The Trial Chamber has also adopted a limited interpretation of Counts 6-7. It will consider, under those Counts, only those crimes which are charged and are found to have been committed under Counts 1-5 in the Indictment. If, for example, the Chamber has made a finding about a specific crime (i.e., a murder in Tongo) under another Count in the Indictment (i.e., as a War Crime under Count 2), it will consider this act in relation to Counts 6-7, but it will not consider other killings which may have occurred elsewhere in relation to these Counts.

(ii) Pleading – Dissent

1110. Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Justice Thompson, para. 12: Paragraph 28 appears under Counts 6-7 which specifically charge the Accused with the offences of terrorizing the population and collective punishments respectively. As a matter of law, I opine that the legal effect of charging the Accused with the separate and distinct offences of terrorizing the population and collective punishments in separate and distinct counts is to notify the Accused with specificity and precision of the charges against them. This is the basic rule governing specificity as to the form of an indictment.[7]

1111. Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Justice Thompson, para. 13: Consistent with the foregoing consideration, it is clearly impermissible to charge an accused person in a general, vague and uncertain manner. The authorities make it clear that where within the count system of charging, allegations are framed in such a way as to create multiplicity, vagueness and uncertainty, the particular count or counts are accordingly defective.[8] A close examination of paragraph 28 discloses a multiplicity of allegations in the particulars of the alleged offences of terrorizing the civilian population and collective punishments. The paragraph charges, by a process of incorporation, the Accused in both Counts 6 and 7 with five additional offences, to wit: (i) Murder, a Crime Against Humanity; (ii) violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, as a War Crime; (iii) inhumane acts as a Crime Against Humanity; (iv) Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment, as a War Crime; and (v) Pillage, as a War Crime.

1112. Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Justice Thompson, para. 14: Evidently, each of the said additional offences is given two new proscriptive aggravating dimensions, to wit, that each of the said crimes was allegedly committed "as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian populations of those areas and did terrorize those populations", and "to punish the civilian population for their support to, or failure to actively resist, the combined RUF/AFRC forces", thus making them brand new species of criminality. The difficulty here is that of incorporating in a Particulars of Offence paragraph, references to Counts 1-5 which are separate and distinct offences separately charged.

1113. Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Justice Thompson, para. 15: Based on the above analysis, the foregoing five additional crimes are, each, separate and distinct offences from the two specific and distinct offences embodied in the Statement of Offences Section of Counts 6 and 7. This is the reason for charging them separately in Counts 1 - 5. In effect, the Indictment in either of Counts 6 and 7 has charged each Accused with six different offences. It clearly proliferates the issues for trial. This is a textbook example of an infringement of the rule governing the form of an indictment technically known as the rule against duplicity, multiplicity:. or uncertainty. The problem is compounded by charging these additional crimes not in separate additional counts, each in its own separate Statement of Offence Section of the Indictment, but in the Particulars of Offence Section to the existing Counts 6 and 7. I opine that this is an unorthodox and convoluted way of laying charges in an indictment. It creates nothing short of a penumbra of uncertainty as to what specific charge or charges the Accused are called upon to answer and defend in respect of Counts 6 and 7. Even where cumulative charging is permissible, it must still not offend the rule against duplicity, multiplicity and uncertainty. In a landmark decision of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal[9], applying leading English case-law authorities on duplicity, multiplicity and uncertainty as defects in the form of an indictment, it was authoritatively stated that:

> "The general rule is that for each separate count there should be only one act set out which constitutes the offence. If two or three offences are set out in the same count, separated by the disjunctive 'or' and the conviction should be quashed."[10]

1114. Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Justice Thompson, para. 16: Based on the foregoing analysis and applying the authorities cited, I come irresistibly to the conclusion that Counts 6 - 7 of the Indictment by incorporating the offences charged separately in Counts 1 - 5 in the said Counts 6 - 7 offend the rule against duplicity, multiplicity and uncertainty, and I so hold. As stated earlier, it should suffice for the purposes of my dissent that these observations are strictly obiter. Hence, I do not propose to take the analysis beyond this limited judicial focus.

(iii) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

1115. para. 122: The general requirenents which must be proved to show the commission of War Crimes pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute are as follows:

> (i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged violation of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II;
> (ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict;[148]
>
> (iii) The victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation;[149] and
> The Accused knew or had reason to know that the person was not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the act or omission.

1116. para. 123: The Chamber concludes that the application of Article 3 of the Statute requires that the alleged acts of the Accused be committed in the course of an armed conflict, and "it is immaterial whether the conflict is internal or international in nature."[150]

1117. para. 124: Relying on the ICT'T Appeals Chamber in the Tadic case, and as it held in the CDF Rule 98 Decision, the Chamber rules that under Common Article 3, "an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed foxe between states or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a state".[151]

Therefore, the criteria for establishing the existence of an armed conflict are the intensity of the conflict and the organisation of the parties.[152] These criteria are used "solely for the purpose, as a minimum, of distinguishing an armed cc nflict from banditry, unorganised and short-lived insurrections, or terrorist activities, which are not subject to international humanitarian law".[153]

1118. para. 125: The Chamber notes that Additional Protocol II contains a stricter threshold for the establishment of an armed cmflict than Common Article 3. Article 1 of the Protocol provides in relevant parts:

> 1. This Protocol, which develops and supplements Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 without modifying its existing conditions of application, shall apply to all armed conflicts ... which take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups which, under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable therr. to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to implemtent this Protocol.
> 2. This Protocol shall not apply to situations of internal disturbances and tensions, such as riots, isolated and sporadic acts of violence and other acts of a similar nature, as not being armed conflicts.

1119. para. 126: This Chamber is therefore satisfied that where the Prosecution has alleged an offence under Additional Protocol II, then the following conditions must be met in order to establish the element of armed conflict:

> The dissident armed forces or other organized groups:
>
> (ii) Were under responsible command;
>
> (iv) Were able to inplement Additional Protocol 11.[154]

1120. para. 127: The first requirement that there be an armed conflict, has already been discussed in the context of the Common Article 3 test of armed conflict. The Chamber notes, therefore, that any armed conflict satisfying the higher threshold of the Additional Protocol II test would automatically constitute an armed conflict under Common Article 3. The term "armed forces" is to be defined broadly.[155] The armed forces or groups must be under responsible command which implies a degree of organiziation to enable them "to plan and carry out concerted military operations, and to impose discipline in the name of a de facto authority."[156] They must also be able to control a part of the territory of the country enabling them "to carry out sustained and concerted military operatiom" and to implement Additional Protocol II.

1121. para. 128: The Chamber also finds that international humanitarian law applies from the beginning of such armed conflicts and extmds beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached, or, in the ,:ase of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement is achieved.[157] Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply in the whole territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there.[158]

b. Nexus – Applicable law – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

1122. para. 129: What distinguishes a war crime from a purely domestic crime "is that a war crime is shaped by or dependant upon the erlvironment - the armed conflict - in which it is committed".[159] As to the precise nature of the nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, the Chamber, consistent with thl: decisions of the Appeals Chambers of the ICTY and of the ICTR on this issue, rules that the nexus requirement is fulfilled if the alleged violation was closely related to the armed conflict.[160] When the violation alleged has not occurred at a time and place in which fighting was actually taking place, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that "it would be sufficient […] that the alleged crimes were closely related to hostilities occurring in other parts of the territories controlled by the parties to the conflict".[161] The crime 'need not have been planned or supported by some form of policy' and the armed conflict 'need not have been causal to the commission of the crime, but the existence of an armed conflict must, at a minimum, have played a substantial part in the perpdrator's ability to commit it, his decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed or the purpose for which it was committed'.[162] The nexus requirement is satisfied where the Accused acted in furtherance of or under the guise of the armed conflict.[163] The expression "under the guise of the armed conflict" does not mean simply "at the same time as an armed conflict and /o r "in any. circumstances created in part by the armed conflict."[164]

1123. para. 130: The Chamber subscribes to the jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribtmals which outlined the following factors in determining whether or not the act in question was sufficiently related to the armed conflict, inter alia: "the fact that the [Accused] is a combatant; the fact that the victim is a non-combatant; the fact that the victim is a member of the opposing party; the fact that the act may be said to serve the ultimate goal of a military campaign; and the fact that the crime is committed as part of or in the context of the [Accused's] official duties".[165] It has also been stated that the determination of a close relationship between particular offences and an armed conflict will usually require consideration of several factors, not just one.[166]

1124. para. 131: Finally, Common Article 3 applies to "[p]ersons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause" and Additional Protocol II applies to "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities". The Chamber holds that these phrases are so similar that, therefore, they may be treated as synonymous and be categorised as "all persons not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation".[167]

1125. para. 132: The Chamber notes that the test applied by the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Tadic case was whether, at the time of the alleged offence, the alleged victim of the said offence was directly taking part in the hostilities, "being those hostilities in the context of which the alleged offences are said to have been committed" .[168] If the answer to that question is negative, the victim will be a person protected by Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol 11.[169] Thus, for the purpose of establishing the commission of an offence under Article 3, the Prosecution must also prove that the victim was a person not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time the offence was committed.[170]

1127. para. 134: Article 13(3) of Additional Protocol II provides that civilians are immune from attack for as long as they do not take a direct part in hostilities.[171] The question of whether civilians have participated directly in hostilities has to be decided on the specific facts of each case and there must be a sufficient causal relationship between the act of participation and its immediate consequences.[172] The Chamber takes the view that the direct participation should be understood to mean "acts which by their nature and purpose, are intended to cause actual harm to the enemy personnel and material."[173]

1129. para. 136: The armed law enforcement agencies of a State are generally mandated only to protect and maintain the internal order of the State. Thus, as a general presumption and in the execution of their typical law enforcement duties, such forces are considered to be civilians for the purposes of international humanitarian law.[177] This same presumption will not exist for military police or gendarmerie who operate under the control of the military.[178] The Chamber notes that, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of 1991[179] and the The Police Act[180] of 1964, the Sierra Leone Police operates under the control of the Minister of Internal Affairs, a civilian authority.

1130. para. 137: The Chamber is of the opinion that the status of police officers in· a time of armed conflict must be determined in light of an analysis of the particular facts of a case. A civilian police force, for example, may be incorporated into the armed forces, which will cause the police to be classified as combatants instead of civilians. This incorporation may occur de lege, by way of a formal Act, or de facto.

(iv) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 - Findings on general requirements

1131. para. 695: As stated in the section on Applicable Law, the general requirements that must be established to prove a War Crime are as follows:

> 1. An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged violation of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II;
> 2. There existed a nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict;
> 3. The victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation; and

1133. para. 697: With respect to the other general requirements for war crimes, where findings have been made of murder (Count 2), cruel treatment (Count 4), pillage (Count 5), acts of terrorism (Count 6) or collective punishments (Count 7) as war crimes, the Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators were aware of the protected status of the victims who were either civilians (a category which includes "collaborators"[1531] and police officers) or captured enemy combatants. Similarly, where such findings have been made the Chamber is satisfied that the alleged crimes were closely related to the armed conflict.

(v) Applicable Law – Acts of Terrorism

1134. para. 167: The Indictment charges the Accused under Count 6 with acts of terrorism as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the crimes charged in Counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorise the civilian populations in those areas.

1135. para. 168: The prohibition against acts of terrorism in Article 3(d) of the Statute is taken from Article 4(2)(d) of Additional Protocol II which prohibits acts of terrorism as a violation of the "fundamental guarantees" of humane treatment under the Additional Protocol. This prohibition was, in turn, based on Article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention which prohibited "all measures of intimidation or of terrorism" of or against protected persons.

1136. para. 169: Article 51(2) of Additional Protocol I and Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II further prohibit "acts or threats or violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population". The Chamber concurs with the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Galic, where it found that the prohibition of terror against the civilian population was a part of customary international law from at least the time it was included in those treaties[213] and that the offence gave rise to individual crimi nal responsibility pursuant to customary international law.[214]

1137. para. 170: In addition to these: general elements, the specific elements of crime of acts of terrorism can be described as follows:

(i) Acts or threat, of violence directed against persons or property;
(ii) The Accusec intended to make persons or property the object of those acts and threats of violence or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this would likely occur; and

1138. para. 171: The first element relates to the actus reus of the offence. In Galic, the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY addressed the elements of the crime of acts or threats of violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population. The Chamber held:

> The acts or threats of violence constitutive of the crime of terror shall not however be limited to direct attacks against civilians or threats thereof but may include indiscriminate or disproportionate attacks or threats thereof. The nature of the acts or threats of violence directed against the civilian population can vary; the primary concern [...] is that those acts or threats of violence be committed with the specific intent to spread terror among the civilian population.[215]

1139. para. 172: The offence of acts of terrorism under Article 4(2)(d) of Additional Protocol II is very broad. The Chamber is satisfied that this prohibition includes both acts and threats of violence.[216]

1140. para. 173: Indeed, as the Chamber held in the Rule 98 Decision in this case, the offence "extend[s] beyond acts or threats of violence committed against protected persons to 'acts directed against installations which would cause victims terror as a side-effect'".[217] Thus, if attacks on property are carried out with the specific intent of spreading terror among the protected population, this will fall within the proscriptive ambit of the offence of acts of terrorism. The Chamber emphasises that all types of civilian property, including that which belongs to individual civilians, are protected. The focus of the offence is clearly on protecting persons from being subjected to acts of terrorism and the means used to spn ad this terror may include acts or threats of violence against persons or property.

1141. para. 174: The mens rea requirement of the offence of the acts of terrorism is found in the next two elements. To satisfy these elements, the Prosecution need only establish that the Accused intended to spread terror and does not need to demonstrate that the protected population actually was terrorised. The argument that actual terrorisation of the civilian population is a required element of the offence was rejected by both the Trial Chamber and the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY in Galić based on the rejection of attempts in the travaux preparatoires to Additional Protocol I to replace the intent to terrorise with actual terror.[218] The Chamber is persuaded by this reasoning and finds that the actual infliction of terror is not a required element of the offence.

1142. para. 175: As the Chamber has already observed, the defining element of the offence of acts of terrorism is the specific intent to spread terror among the protected population. It is clear that civilian populations are frightened by war and that legitimate military actions may have a consequence of terrorising civilian populations. This offence is not concerned with these types of terror: it is meant to criminalise acts or threats that are undertaken for the primary purpose of spreading terror in the protected population. Thus, the specific intent to spread terror must be proven as an element of the offence. This is not to say, however, that the intent to spread terror must be established by direct evidence or that it needed to have been the only purpose behind the act or threat.[219]

(vi) Towns of Tongo Field – Acts of Terrorism

a. Fofana – Towns of Tongo Field – Acts of Terrorism

1143. para. 731: With respect to Count 6, the Chamber recalls that for specific intent crimes, the aider and abettor must have knowledge of the specific intent of the perpetrator to commit such crimes. The Chamber finds that while spreading terror may have been Norman's primary purpose in issuing the order to kill captured enemy combatants and "collaborators", to inflict physical suffering or injury upon them and to destroy their houses, this is not the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the evidence. As such the Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana had the requisite knowledge, an essential element of the crime of acts of terrorism.

b. Kondewa – Towns of Tongo Field – Acts of Terrorism

1144. para. 743: With respect to Count 6, the Chamber recalls that for specific intent crimes, the aider and abettor must have knowledge of the specific intent of the perpetrator to commit such crimes. The Chamber finds that while spreading terror may have been Norman's primary purpose in issuing the order to kill captured enemy combatants and "collaborators", to inflict physical suffering or injury upon them and to destroy their houses, this is not the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the evidence. As such the Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa had the requisite knowledge, an essential element of the crime of acts of terrorism.

(vii) Koribondo – Acts Terrorism

a. Fofana - Koribondo – Acts of Terrorism

i. Article 6.1 – Fofana – Koribondo – Acts of Terrorism

1145. para. 771: On the basis of the foregoing the Chamber now finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for planning, instigating, ordering, committing (including through a joint criminal enterprise) or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Koribondo during the time frame charged in the Indictment.

ii. Article 6.3 – Fofana – Koribondo – Acts of Terrorism

1146. para. 779: With respect to Count 6, the Chamber finds that it is not the only reasonable inference that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that his subordinates would commit criminal acts in Koribondo with the primary purpose of spreading terror, as the commission of such acts was not explicitly included in Norman's order.

1147. para. 780: Similarly, whille some of the criminal acts which were committed subsequently by the Kamajors in Koribondo might have been committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror, the Chamber finds the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that such acts had been committed by his subordinates subsequently.

1148. para. 781: The Chamber recognises that other criminal acts alleged in the Indictment, such as looting, were in fact committed in Koribondo.[1553] However, the Chamber finds that such acts were not included in Norman's order. Therefore, the Chamber finds that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that these other criminal acts would also be committed by the Kamajors in Koribondo.

(viii) Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Fofana – Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

i. Article 6.3 – Fofana – Bo District – Acts of Terrorism

1149. para. 823: With respect to Count 6, the Chamber finds that it is not the only reasonable inference that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that his subordinates would commit criminal acts in Bo with the primary purpose of spreading terror, as the commission of such acts was not explicitly included in Norman's order.

1150. para. 824: Similarly, while some of the criminal acts which were committed subsequently by the Kamajors in Bo might have been committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror, thenChamber finds the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that such acts had been committed by his subordinates subsequently.

1151. para. 825: The Chamber recognises that other criminal acts alleged in the Indictment, such as infliction of mental harm or suffering, were in fact committed in Bo. However, the Chamber finds that such acts were not included in Norman's order. Therefore, the Chamber finds that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that these other criminal acts would also be committed by the Kamajors in Bo.

(ix) Bonthe District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Kondewa – Article 6.3 – Bonthe District – Acts of Terrorism

1152. para. 879: With respect to Count 6, the Chamber finds, however, that while some of the criminal acts which were committed by the Kamajors in Bonthe Town might have been committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population, the Chamber finds on the totality of the evidence adduced that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa knew or had reasons to know that such acts had been committed by his subordinates for the primary purpose of spreading terror.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-A, Judgment, 28 May 2008

(a) Factual Findings

1153. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Acts of Terrorism

a. Article 6.1 and Article 6.3 Liability – Acts of Terrorism

1154. Regardings Fofana's and Kondewa's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Acts of Terrorism, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1) – CDF – Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions – Acts of Terrorism - paras. 331-337 [8580].

1155. Regardings Fofana's and Kondewa's superior responsibility in relation to Acts of Terrorism, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3) – CDF – Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions – Acts of Terrorism - paras. 338-341 [9366].

b. Applicable Law: Acts of Terrorism

1156. para. 344: Article 3.d. of the Statute, grants the Special Court jurisdiction to prosecute "acts of terrorism" in violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. Additional Protocol II contains two separate articles prohibiting acts of terrorism: Article 4(2)(d) and Article 13(2). Article 4(2)(d) contains a general prohibition of "acts of terrorism" and provides:

> "Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, the following acts against . . . [persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted] are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever: . . . (d) acts of terrorism."

1157. para. 345: Article 3.d. of the Statute which borrows its language from Article 4(2)(d) of Additional Protocol II, therefore, prohibits acts of terrorism in its broad sense.

1158. para. 346: Additional Protocol II also contains a narrower offence prohibiting acts of terrorism. Article 13(2) provides:

> "Acts or threats of violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population are prohibited."

1159. para. 347: As the ICRC Commentary to Additional Protocol II makes clear, Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II constitutes a "special type of terrorism:"

> "It should be mentioned that acts or threats of violence which are aimed at terrorizing the civilian population, constitute a special type of terrorism and are the object of a specific prohibition in Article 13."[709]

1160. para. 348: Article 13(2) is a narrower derivative of Article 4(2)(d). An offence under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II may be charged under Article 3.d. of the Statute. This is because acts of terrorism under Article 4(2)(d) inherently encompass the narrower elements of acts of terrorism prohibited under Article 13(2).

1161. para. 349: The Appeals Chamber notes that Count 6 of the Indictment does not specify which of the above provisions Fofana and Kondewa were charged under. The Appeals Chamber is of the view, however, that after considering the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief, the Trial Judgment, and reliance placed upon the ICTY case of Prosecutor v. Galić by all parties to establish the elements of the crime, it is clear that the intention and understanding of all parties from the outset of the trial, was to interpret Count 6 as being a charge under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II.

1162. para. 350: The Appeals Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism under Article 13(2) of Additional Protocol II are:

> (i) Acts or threats of violence;
> (iii) The acts or threats of violence were carried out with the specific intent of spreading terror among the civilian population.[710]

i. Acts or Threats of Violence

1163. para. 351: The actus reus of the crime, acts of terrorism, may be proved by acts or threats of violence. Acts or threats of violence may comprise not only of attacks but also threats of attacks against the civilian population. Consistent with the ICRC Commentary to Additional Protocol II, this "covers not only acts directed against people, but also acts directed against installations which would cause victims as a side-effect."[711] Acts or threats of violence are also not limited to direct attacks against civilians or threats thereof but include indiscriminate or disproportionate attacks or threats.[712]

1164. para. 352: Acts of terrorism may, therefore, be established by acts or threats of violence independent of whether such acts or threats of violence satisfy the elements of any other criminal offence. Not every act or threat of violence, however, will be sufficient to satisfy the first element of the crime of "acts of terrorism." The Appeals Chamber is of the view that whilst actual terrorisation of the civilian population is not an element of the crime,[713] the acts or threats of violence alleged must, nonetheless, be such that are at the very least capable of spreading terror. Whether any given act or threat of violence is capable of spreading terror is to be judged on a case-by-case basis within the particular context involved. For this purpose, the Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber in Galić that "terror" should be understood as the causing of extreme fear.[714]

ii. That the Offender Wilfully Made the Civilian Population or Individual Civilians not Taking Direct Part in Hostilities the Object of Those Acts or Threats of Violence

1165. para. 353: The second element of the crime "acts of terrorism" is that the offender "wilfully" made the civilian population or individual civilians the object of an act or threat of violence.

1166. para. 354: The Appeals Chamber notes that Article 85 of Additional Protocol I and its corresponding commentary[715] define the term "wilfully," in relation to the distinct prohibition of making the civilian population or individual civilians the object of attack. The Appeals Chamber finds, however, that there is no reason why the definition of the term "wilfully"[716] as discussed in relation to Article 85 of Additional Protocol I should not apply to the crime "acts of terrorism."

1167. para. 355: It follows, that for the crime "acts of terrorism" the second element ("wilfully made the civilian population or individual civilians, the object of an act or threat of violence") requires the Prosecution to prove that an accused acted consciously and with intent or recklessness in making the civilian population or individual civilians the object of an act or threat of violence. Negligence, on the other hand, is not enough.[717]

iii. Specific Intent to Spread Terror

1168. para. 356: The third element of the crime of "acts of terrorism" is the specific intent to spread terror amongst the civilian population. The Prosecution is required to prove not only that the perpetrators of acts of threats of violence accepted the likelihood that terror would result from their illegal acts or threats, but must prove that that was the result which was specifically intended.[718] The spreading of extreme fear must, therefore, be specifically intended.

1169. para. 357: The specific intent to spread terror need not be the only purpose of the unlawful acts or threats of violence. It is well established that "the fact that other purposes may have coexisted simultaneously with the purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population would not disprove this charge."[719] The existence of a coexisting purpose does not, however, detract from the requirement that what must be proved irrespective of any other coexisting purpose, is the specific intent to spread terror. Whether the specific intent to spread terror is satisfied is determined on a case-by-case basis and may be inferred from the circumstances, the nature of the acts or threats and the manner, timing or duration of acts or threats of violence.[720]

c. The Trial Chamber's Limited Interpretation of Count 6

1171. para. 359: In light of the elements of the offence set out above, the crime "acts of terrorism" may be proved by any act or threat of violence capable of spreading extreme fear amongst the civilian population. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, agrees with the Prosecution that acts of terrorism need not involve acts that are otherwise criminal under international criminal law. The Appeals Chamber further agrees that acts of burning are acts or threats that are potentially capable of spreading terror, notwithstanding the finding that acts of burning do not satisfy the elements of pillage.

1172. para. 360: Whether the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider conduct not amounting to a crime (acts of burning in this instance), however, raises a separate question that relates to the pleading of the Indictment.

1173. para. 361: Paragraph 28 of the Indictment, charging acts of terrorism under Count 6, states:

> "At all times relevant to the Indictment, the CDF, largely Kamajors, committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 22 through 27 and charged in counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian populations of those areas and did terrorize those populations. The CDF, largely Kamajors, also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for their support to, or failure to actively resist, the combined RUF/AFRC forces."

1174. para. 362: The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's statement that it adopted a limited interpretation of Count 6 amounts to a finding that Count 6 of the Indictment was defective to the extent that the Trial Chamber excluded 'threats to kill, destroy and loot' proved under Counts 1-5 in its evaluation of Count 6.

1175. para. 363: In considering whether the Trial Chamber's limited interpretation of Count 6 amounts to an error of law, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the principal function of an Indictment is to provide for a fair trial and to maintain the integrity of proceedings by notifying an accused of the nature and cause of the charge against him.[721] This imposes an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in an indictment, but does not extend to pleading the evidence by which such material facts are to be proved.[722] An Indictment which fails to notify an accused of the nature and cause of the charge against him may, however, in certain circumstances be cured by timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.[723]

1176. para. 364: The Appeals Chamber finds that paragraph 28 of the Indictment is clear in establishing that the material facts supporting criminal responsibility under Count 6 are the material facts pleaded in relation to Counts 1 to 5 of the Indictment. These include "threats to kill, destroy and loot." The Trial Chamber, therefore, erred in stating it would only consider crimes "charged and found to have been committed under Counts 1-5 in the Indictment."[724] The Trial Chamber should have considered all conduct that was adequately pleaded in the Indictment irrespective of whether such conduct satisfied the elements of any other crimes under Counts 1-5.

1177. para. 365: Whether the Trial Chamber's error invalidates the decision is discussed below as it is dependent on whether the Trial Chamber erred in its determination of the mens rea requirement for acts of terrorism. In particular, Fofana's and Kondewa's liability for acts of terrorism under Article 6(1) and Article 6(3) of the Statute depends on whether they had the requisite mens rea for liability as aiders and abetters or superiors. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber will examine whether a reasonable tribunal of fact could have found, as the Trial Chamber did, that neither Fofana nor Kondewa had the requisite mens rea.

(ii) Tongo Town – Acts of Terrorism

a. Fofana and Kondewa's Responsibility for Aiding and Abetting Acts of Terrorism in Tongo

1178. para. 366: The Appeals Chamber has previously endorsed the following statement of the mens rea for aiding and abetting:

> The mens rea required for aiding and abetting is that the accused knew that his acts would assist the commission of the crime by the perpetrator or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of a crime by the perpetrator. However, it is not necessary that the aider and abettor had knowledge of the precise crime that was intended and which was actually committed, as long as he was aware that one of a number of crimes would probably be committed, including the one actually committed.[725]

1179. para. 367: The person aiding and abetting a specific intent crime need not possess the principal's intent to commit the crime, but must at least have knowledge of the principal's specific intent.[726]

1180. para. 368: In regard to the acts of terrorism committed in Tongo, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by the Prosecution's submission that no reasonable tribunal of fact could have found that Fofana and Kondewa may not have been aware of the specific intent to commit acts of terrorism in Tongo. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber's error resulted from its "exclusive reliance on the instruction given by Norman at the December 1997 Passing Out Parade to determine whether the perpetrators of the proven acts of violence had the specific intent to terrorise the civilian population."[727] Contrary to the Prosecution's assertion, the Trial Chamber used evidence of Norman's statements at the December 1997 Passing Out Parade to determine whether Fofana and Kondewa were aware of his specific intent to spread terror. While the instructions given by Norman are inherently illegal, they are ambiguous with respect to his intent to spread terror, and therefore a reasonable tribunal of fact could have determined that Fofana and Kondewa were not aware of the specific intent with respect to any acts of terrorism in Tongo.

1181. para. 369: The Prosecution further argued that Fofana must have known of the specific intent to commit acts of terrorism because he was aware "that the Kamajors who operated in the towns of Tongo Field had previously engaged in criminal conduct."[728] A similar argument was advanced in relation to Kondewa.[729] However, the Prosecution makes no submission as to how knowledge of past general intent crimes would provide Fofana or Kondewa with knowledge of the principal's specific intent to spread terror.

1182. para. 370: The Prosecution's argument with respect to Fofana's and Kondewa's liability for aiding and abetting acts of terrorism in Tongo must be rejected.

(iii) Koribondo, Bo District, and Kenema District – Acts of Terrorism

a. Fofana Superior Responsibility Under Article 6(3) of the Statute for Acts of Terrorism in Koribondo

1183. para. 373: Although acts of terrorism may have been committed in Koribondo, the Prosecution does not demonstrate that Fofana knew or had reason to know that acts of terrorism would be or were committed there. The Prosecution only points to one finding of fact to suggest that Fofana may have learned, after the fact, that acts of terrorism were committed in Koribondo, however even this finding is far from conclusive. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber found that "Fofana received reports on any military operation, in particular when Nallo was involved."[734] In fact, in the relevant paragraphs, the Trial Chamber found that Fofana "received frontline reports, both written and verbal, from the commanders in the field and passed them on to Norman" and that the strategies for war operations planned by Nallo and Fofana "did not include the killing of innocent civilians, looting of property or raping of women."[735] Neither of these findings points ineluctably to the conclusion that Fofana knew or had reason to know that acts of terrorism were committed in Koribondo.

1184. para. 374: The real strength of the Prosecution's argument that Fofana must have known or had reason to know that acts of terrorism would be committed in Koribondo lies in his knowledge of Norman's orders, but even there the argument must fail. Although Norman's statement at the December 1997 Passing Out Parade contained illegal orders, it did not unambiguously indicate a specific intent to spread terror. In light of this ambiguity, a reasonable tribunal of fact could find that Fofana neither knew nor could have known of the specific intent.

1185. para. 375: The Prosecution's argument with respect to Fofana's superior responsibility for acts of terrorism in Koribondo must be rejected.

b. Kondewa – not considered w/respect to Koribondo

(iv) Bonthe – Acts of Terrorism

a. Kondewa's Superior Responsibility Under Article 6(3) of the Statute for Acts of Terrorism in Bonthe District

1186. para. 376: The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by the Prosecution's submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in not finding that Kondewa knew or had reasons to know that acts of terrorism were about to be or had been committed in Bonthe District. A reasonable tribunal of fact could conclude, as did the Trial Chamber, that instructions given by Norman during the Passing Out Parades in December 1997 and in early January 1998 did not convey the specific intent to spread terror.

1187. para. 377: The additional submissions by the Prosecution also do not render the Trial Chamber's conclusion on Kondewa's lack of mens rea unreasonable. As discussed above, and contrary to the Prosecution's submission, the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that Kondewa was not aware that civilians had been terrorized in Tongo, although it found that he was aware that the Kamajors who operated in the towns of Tongo Field had committed crimes.[736] Further, Kondewa's admission that "he was aware of the atrocities committed by the Kamajors during the attack" on Bonthe[737] does not necessarily demonstrate that he was aware that his subordinates committed acts of terrorism. A reasonable tribunal of fact could have concluded that he had the requisite knowledge that some crimes had been committed in Bonthe, but lacked knowledge of the crime "acts of terrorism."

1188. para. 378: The Prosecution's argument with respect to Kondewa's superior responsibility for acts of terrorism in Bonthe must be rejected.

(v) Summary Finding – Acts of Terrorism

1189. para. 379: The Appeals Chamber, therefore, finds no reason to disturb the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to the criminal responsibility of Fofana and Kondewa for acts of terrorism under Article 6(1) and/or Article 6(3) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's Sixth Ground of Appeal in its entirety.

CHAPTER 2 – MURDER

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

1190. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[32]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

1191. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[33]

(iii) Counts 2-3: Unlawful killings

> Count 2: Murder, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.a. of the Statute
>
> In addition, or in the alternative:
> COUNT 3: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute.

1192. Between about 30 November 1996 and 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, throughout Sierra Leone, unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians, including the following:[34]

> i. Kenema District: Between about 25 May 1997 and about 31 March 1998, in various locations, including Kenema Town and the Tongo Fields area;[35]
> ii. Kono District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 January 2000, in various locations, including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Koidu_Geiya or Koidu Gieya, Koidu Buma, Yengema, Paema or Peyima, Bomboa_fuidu, Bumpe, Nimikoro or Njaimu Nimikoro, and Mortema;[36]
> iii. Kailahun District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 June 1998, in various locations, including Kailahun town;[37]
> iv. Freetown and Western Area: Between 21 December 1998 and 28 February 1999, in locations throughout Freetown, including the State House, Kissy, Fourah Bay, Upgun, Calaba Town, Allen Town and Tower Hill areas of the city, and Hastings, Wellington, Tumbo, Waterloo, and Benguema in the Western Area.[38]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) General – Factual Findings

1193. para. 582: The Trial Chamber has, in the Chapter on Preliminary Issues, ruled on evidence falling outside the temporal and/or geographical scope of the Indictment;[1336] locations and criminal acts not specifically pleaded in the Indictment;[1337] as well as timeframes imprecisely pleaded in the Indictment.[1338] The submissions relating to specific Counts in the Indictment are appropriately handled under each Count. The Trial Chamber will now examine the evidence relating to the various Counts in the Indictment. For ease of reference Count I (Acts of terrorism) is examined after the other Counts as it encompasses evidence relating to all the other Counts. In examining the crime-base evidence, the Trial Chamber does not at this stage examine the role if any, played by the Accused or his alleged criminal responsibility for the said crimes, as these are matters more appropriately examined under the Chapter on the Role of the Accused and his alleged criminal responsibility.[1339] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber's findings in this Chapter are limited to the primary perpetrators.

(ii) Kenema District– Crimes

1194. para.585: The Trial Chamber heard evidence establishing beyond reasonable doubt that after the 25 May 1997 overthrow of the Tejan Kabbah Government by the Junta forces, a large contingent of AFRC/RUF forces were based in Kenema Town[1350] until the ECOMOG Intervention in mid-February 1998 when they were forced to flee the area.[1351] The RUF forces led by Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) were based at the NIC Compound on Dama Road in Kenema Town, while the AFRC forces led by Eddie Kanneh, the Secretary of State East, were based at 14 Hangha Road.[1352] Notwithstanding that the AFRC and RUF forces had separate command structures, the two groups worked in collaboration with each other in Kenema Town during this period.[1353] Other commanders in Kenema Town at this time included Manawa, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Akim[1354] and Massaquoi.[1355] Shortly after the establishment of the Junta Government in Freetown, the AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema Town attempted to have a reconciliation meeting with one Kamoh Brima Bangura, who was the leader of the Civil Defence Force (a.k.a. Kamajors).[1356] When the Kamajor leader refused to cooperate, Col. Eddie Kanneh and Col. Sam Bockarie ordered his arrest, sparking off hostilities between the AFRC/RUF forces on the one hand, and the Kamajors and ECOMOG forces on the other.[1357] After 5 June 1997, the AFRC/RUF forces drove out the Kamajor and ECOMOG forces from Kenema Town.[1358] The said hostilities continued until the Junta forces were driven out of Kenema District in mid-February 1998. During the period May 1997 to February 1998 many civilians in Kenema District suspected of supporting or cooperating with the Civil Defence Force were murdered, and/or had their property looted or destroyed, by the AFRC/RUF forces.[1359]

1195. para. 586: On 11 August 1997, under the command of Issa Sesay, Akim, and Sam Bockarie, the AFRC/RUF forces travelled with heavy armaments from Kenema Town to Tongo Fields[1360] where they took control of the area from the Kamajors and subsequently looted civilian property for three days.[1361] Persons who fled the area reported that the RUF/ AFRC forces captured able-bodied men to forcibly mine diamonds for them and in the process, killed many civilians who refused to cooperate.[1362] During the AFRC/RUF occupation of Tongo Fields, Sam Bockarie was in command and control of the Junta forces.[1363] Other AFRC commanders in Tongo Fields at this time included the PLO-2,[1364] Captain Yamao Kati, Captain lalloh, Sergeant Junior,

Seth Marrah, and Victor;[1365] while other RUF commanders included Captain Eagle (a.k.a. Karmoh Kanneh), Amuyepeh, and Banya.[1366]

1196. para.587: In relation to unlawful killings alleged to have taken place in Kenema District the Trial Chamber has considered the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses Alex Sheku Bao, Adesanya Sanya Hyde, Kannoh Kanneh, Augustine Mallah, Abdul Otonjo Conteh, Isaac Mongor, Samuel Kargbo, protected Prosecution Witnesses TF1-062, TFl-375, TFl-567, TF1-590, Defence Witnesses Issa Sesay, Sam Kolleh, protected Defence Witnesses DCT-068, DCT-146 and Exhibits P-078,[1367] P-173,[1368] P-174,[1369] P-175,[1370] P-178A,[1371] P-278,[1372] P-366,[1373] and D-063.[1374]

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Killing of Mr. Dowei – Kenema Town – Kenema District –Crimes

1197. para. 588: Witness Alex Bao[1375] testified that for the period of nine months from about the end of May 1997 to February 1998 when the AFRC/RUF forces were based in Kenema Town, he was working as a station sergeant based at Kenema Town Police Station.[1376] He stated that "right after the takeover"[1377] in Kenema Town a civilian housewife called Mrs. Dowei filed a comprehensive report with Kenema Police Station to the effect that AFRC/RUF forces had attacked her home, looted all her property and shot her husband in the head and stomach when he intervened to prevent them from taking a deep freezer from his house. Mr Dowei consequently died from the gunshot wounds.[1378] In his prior testimony, Bao stated that although he was not present when Mrs Dowei made her statement to the Kenema Police, he subsequently went to Mrs Dowei's house to investigate the incident and saw the corpse of Mr Dowei with two bullet wounds. However, he could not conduct a proper investigation as "the area was tense and there was shooting all over the place".[1379]

ii. Killing of three civilians near Mambu Street – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1198. para. 590: In his prior testimony, Alex Bao further stated that during the entire Junta period,[1380] both the RUF rebels and AFRC juntas looted excessively in Kenema Town. On one occasion they went to Mambu Street to loot, and for the rest of the day were shooting in the area.[1381] Later, Bao saw the RUF/AFRC fighters. including Commanders Akim and Bockarie, with looted property, singing that "they had driven the Kamajors out of the area".[1382] That evening

Bao went to a house on Mambu Street that belonged to one Pa Mansaray. When he arrived, the house was on tire.[1383] Bao testified that the house had supposedly been occupied by Kamajors, but by the time he went there, there were no Kamajors at the house.[1384] On cross-examination in this trial, Bao clarified that the AFRC and RUF fighters burned down Pa Mansaray's house because the Kamajors were using it as a base.[1385] Bao testified that he went down to the swamp behind Pa Mansaray's house where he saw three dead bodies lying in the street.[1386] He described the bodies as two elderly men and one young man, all wearing "civilian plain cloth".[1387] Bao testified that the attack on Mambu Street was planned by AFRC and RUF fighters including Sam Bockarie and Akim, and that he had seen Akim riding around Kenema Town that day on the bonnet of a Mercedes with an AK-47 rifle in his hand.[1388]

iii. Killing of Bonnie Wailer and other suspected burglars – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1199. para. 592: Alex Bao further testified that one morning in late June 1997,[1389] upon his arrival at the Police station, he found a man whom he knew well called Bonnie Wailer who had been taken into custody for alleged "house-breaking and larceny".[1390] Bao described Wailer as wearing "combat trousers and plain cloth" at the time of his detention.[1391] When Bao asked Wailer why he was dressed in combat trousers, Wailer explained that he and his colleagues "went to run a mission" but he ran out of luck and was caught, beaten and then taken to the Police Station.[1392] Bao further testified that later on that day, RUF Commander Sam Bockarie accompanied by an AFRC Lieutenant and several RUF and AFRC men came to the Police Station and took away Bonnie Wailer, supposedly for him to show them where they could find Wailer's "colleagues". The group returned two hours later with Wailer and two other men.[1393] Bao knew one of the two men to be a "notorious criminal" but did not know the other one.[1394] Bonnie Wailer and the two men were lined up in front of the police officers and many civilians who had gathered and Bao heard Sam Bockarie order his men to kill the three suspects.[1395] The AFRC juntas publicly executed the three suspects and left their bodies on display for the rest of the day.[l396] Later on at night, the three corpses were loaded onto a military pickup vehicle and taken away.[l397]

1200. para. 593: Adesanya Hyde,[1398] a colleague of Alex Bao's who was a police officer and the second-in-command at the Kenema District Criminal Investigation Department in 1997 and 1998 1399, also gave evidence regarding these killings. He stated in his prior testimony[l400] that in the first week of the coup in May 1997,[1401] Bonnie Wailer, Sydney Cole, Mr Bangura, and an unknown man were brought to the police station by civilians on suspicion of "burglary and larceny" charges.[1402] Hyde stated that he was one of the police officers who escorted Wailer to look for the other suspects. According to Hyde, the four men had impersonated the AFRC/RUF rebels by dressing up in military uniform and robbing civilians at gun point. Hyde testified that the AFRC/RUF fighters who arrested the suspects shot each suspect "more than ten times" in the legs before taking them to the police station.[1403]

1201. para. 594: According to Hyde, the AFRC/RUF rebels were upset because "the suspects were impersonating the juntas by wearing military fatigues and robbing civilians. As the revolution was in its early stages, the rebels did not want this incident to tarnish the Junta's image".[1404] After arresting the four suspects, the AFRC/RUF fighters sent word to the citizens of Kenema Town that they should come to the Police compound to witness the public executions.[1405] The AFRC hierarchy including Eddie Kanneh and Massaquoi were also present to witness the executions.[1406] Hyde stated that the four suspects were made to lie down on the floor of the Police station and an RUF man shot each of the men at close range on the orders of an AFRC officer.[1407] Hyde stated that he left the scene after the first shooting as he was too traumatised to watch and instead observed the scene from the safety of his office window.[1408]

iv. Killing of a farmer at the NIC building – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1202. para. 598: In his prior testimony, Alex Bao testified that at the end of the rainy season in 1997, which is in September,[1409] a group of RUF rebels caught a civilian man whQ was "brushing aswamp" which is a colloquial way to describe preparing a field for farming.[1410] Bao first saw the man when the RUF rebels were marching him up Maxwell Khobe Street in Kenema Town.[1411] The man was wearing a "working cloth", had mud all over his body and was carrying a cutlass in his hand.[1412] Based on the man's appearance, Bao concluded that he was a farmer who had been apprehended by his captors while he was working on his fields in the swamp.[1413] The rebels were dancing and singing that they had "captured a Kamajor, and that they would take him to Sam Bockarie".[1414] Bao followed them out of curiosity[1415] but before he could catch up with them, he heard two gunshots from a pistol as he was approaching the NIC building. On arrival at the scene he saw Sam Bockarie brandishing a pistol in the air, standing over the farmer's body which had bullet wounds in the head and stomach.[1416] The other onlookers confirmed to Bao that Bockarie had shot the farmer.[1417] Bao heard Bockarie say that he "must finish all of them", meaning Kamajors, and ordering his "boys" to dump the farmer's body into a hole behind the NIC building.[1418]

v. Killing of Santos and an alleged thief – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1203. para. 601: In his prior testimony, Alex Bao testified that during the rainy season in November 1997,[1419] an NGO[1420] filed a report with Kenema Police Station that thieves had broken into the NGO's warehouse and stolen a large quantity of expensive drugs.[1421] No sooner had the police started investigating the complaint than Sam Bockarie came to the police station asking how far the investigation had gone. Bockarie told the police officers, including Bao, that he had information about the suspects and that he was going to "help the Police by looking for the suspects". Bao stated that shortly thereafter there was a widespread rumour that Bockarie had arrested and killed the alleged thief and a boy named Santos in front of Capital Cinema, where Santos worked.[1422] Bao stated that he knew Santos very well. Bao stated that the corpses of the two people were left in front of his house, opposite the Cinema tor three days before Sam Bockarie and "his boys" loaded the bodies onto their vehicle and took them away.[1423]

vi. Killing of an alleged "Kamajor Boss" on Hangha Road – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1204. para. 604: In his prior testimony, Alex Bao testified that in late December 1997, AFRC/RUF fighters launched an attack against the residents of Kenema Town which they named "Operation No Living Thing".[1424] One morning during that operation, Bao saw the body of "a fat man dressed in plain clothes and not Kamajor uniform" lying motionless along Hangha Road by the Sierra Leone Telecommunications building in Kenema Town.[1425] Bao saw the RUF/AFRC juntas dancing and singing aloud that "they had captured and killed the Kamajor boss".[1426] Bao saw one of the rebels split open the dead man's belly with a bayonet, remove the intestines and stretch them across the street, using it as a checkpoint.[1427] The disembowelled body of the man remained at the "checkpoint" which was manned by the AFRC/RUF fighters, for three days after which the AFRC/RUF fighters took the corpse away.[1428] During cross-examination in this trial, Bao testified that "[t]he man is no Kamajor. When they want to kill innocent people, they brand you as a Kamajor. That man was just a peaceful citizen".[1429]

vii. Killing of Mohamed Fityia – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1205. para. 607: Witness Karmoh Kanneh (a.k.a. Captain Eagle) a former civilian captured and enlisted as a fighter by the RUF in 1991[1430] stated that his RUF contingent led by Sam Bockarie was based at the NIC compound in Kenema Town for three to four months before the ECOMOG Intervention took place in Freetown,[1431] from where the RUF routinely conducted operations, including the capture of Tongo Fields.[1432] When Kanneh was in Kenema Town, members of the RUF and AFRC were looting civilian property. This led to Sam Bockarie issuing an order to put the looting under control.[1433] During the looting outbreak Kanneh investigated an allegation by a Mandingo man that Mohamed Fityia, a businessman, had driven soldiers in his car to loot the Mandingo man's house.[1434] Kanneh found out that Fityia had only offered to drive his car hoping that the soldiers would not steal it.[1435] Kanneh told this to Bockarie, but the latter did not believe the story and became very angry with Kanneh. Bockarie then shot and killed Fityia in front of Kanneh.[1436]

1206. para. 608: Another witness, Alex Sheku Bao, testified in this trial regarding what he had heard about the death of one businessman called Fityia in Kenema Town. Although Bao had said nothing about Fityia's death in his prior testimony in the AFRC and RUF trials, Bao testified in cross-examination in this trial, that sometime between 25 May 1997 and January 1998 he heard from people in Kenema that a businessman called Fityia hired two AFRC and two RUF fighters to rob a large amount of money from one Shekuna, a Lebanese diamond dealer in Kenema Town.[1437] Bao later heard rumours that Bockarie had killed Fityia because he was suspected of this crime.[1438] He went to the scene to investigate and found Fityia's dead body lying on Sombo Street.[1439] When asked by the Defence why his version of events differed from that given by Karmoh Kanneh. Bao admitted that his version of events based on hearsay was not as accurate as Kanneh's direct evidence, but that he had seen Fityia's body lying in Sombo Street.

viii. Killing of Brima S. Massaquoi and others – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1207. para. 611: In his prior testimony, Witness Alex Bao provides the most detailed account on the circumstances surrounding the killing of Brima S. Massaquoi, the Chairman of Kenema Town Council and other prominent residents in January 1998. Bao testified that in late January 1998, six prominent individuals, namely, Brima S. Massaquoi, the Chairman of Kenema Town Council,[1440] Brima Kpaka a prominent businessman in Kenema,[1441] Andrew Quee, a civil servant,[1442] Issa Ansumana, Abdulai Bockarie and John Swanay were arrested by the AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema Town and detained at the AFRC Secretariat located at 14 Hangha Road, on suspicion of being "Kamajor supporters".[1443] Bao visited the AFRC Secretariat and saw the prisoners lying on a wet floor with their hands tied tightly behind their backs and with bruises on their bodies. The ropes had "eaten" into their flesh.[1444] Bao saw the RUF commander Sam Bockarie (a.k.a.

Mosquito) brandishing his pistol in the air and heard him say that the detainees were "supporters of Kamajors and he was going to kill all of them". The AFRC Lieutenant in charge of the Secretariat was also present.[1445] After being detained at the AFRC Secretariat for three or four days, the prisoners were on 28 January 1998[1446] transferred to the Kenema Police Station where Bao was deployed to be investigated on charges that they were supporting the Kamajors against the AFRC/RUF.[1447]

1208. para. 612: Bao stated that the Police found no evidence supporting the allegations that any of the six men were Kamajor collaborators and released them on bail.[1448] Three or four days later, when Bockarie learned that the six suspects had been released, he openly threatened the Police Commissioner with death if the men were not returned within two hours.[1449] As a result five of the suspects were re-arrested and detained at the Kenema Police Station[1450] on the orders of the Police Commissioner, with the exception of Brima Kpaka who had been admitted to the Kenema hospital for treatment.[1451] On 6 February 1998[1452] a lot of armed AFRC/RUF forces led by AFRC Lieutenant A.B. Turay came to Kenema Police Station in two military vehicles and took away five of the prisoners, namely, B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee, lssa Ansumana, Abdulai Bockarie and John Swanay.[1453] Bao heard Lt. Turay tell the police that he was taking the prisoners to the AFRC Brigade headquarters on orders of the Secretary of State East.[1454]

1209. para. 613: Bao further stated that two days after the AFRC/RUF had taken the five prisoners into custody,[1455] there were widespread rumours in Kenema Town that the AFRC/RUF forces had killed the five prisoners and dumped their bodies in a river.[1456] Bao searched in vain for the five prisoners at the AFRC Brigade headquarters and Guinea Base.[1457] He found the dead bodies of the five prisoners lying in a stream at Dorwala, on the outskirts of Kenema Town.[1458] Bao described the bodies as having gunshot wounds all over. Also there was large cement block lying on Massaquoi's head.[1459]

1210. para. 614: Bao's testimony is to a large extent, corroborated by that of Adesanya Sanya Hyde who was a police officer, and the second in command at the Kenema District Criminal investigation Department in 1997 and 1998. Hyde testified that close to the time of the Intervention, the "AFRC hierarchy", including Eddie Kanneh and Sam Bockarie, ordered the arrest of seven suspected Kamajor collaborators including B.S. Massaquoi, the Chairman of the Kenema Town Council, Brima Kpaka, a prominent businessman, and Andrew Quee.[1460] Hyde stated that the prisoners were detained at the AFRC Secretariat for six days, and then transferred to the Kenema Town Police station for further investigation.[1461]

1212. para. 616: The next morning there was a rum our that the Kamajors and ECOMOG were five miles away from Kenema.[1465] At 6.30am the same day the AFRC forces, led by Lieutenant A.B. Turay, removed the suspects from the Police Station and took them to the AFRC Brigade Headquarters.[1466] Hyde later heard from other residents of Kenema that Sam Bockarie and his men had killed the suspects and that BS Massaquoi had been beheaded and that his head had been tied to a wooden pole and paraded around Kenema.[1467] Hyde testified however, that he never saw the dead bodies of any of the deceased.[1468]

1213. para. 617: Another witness, Karmoh Kanneh, (a.k.a. Captain Eagle)[1469] testified that Sam Bockarie arrested B.S. Massaquoi, the City Council Chairman, Ibrahim Gbacka, a motorspares dealer, and Dr Momoh, a medical doctor, and detained them at the Secretariat, accusing them of collaborating with the Kamajors.[1470] Kanneh and his colleague Manowai visited the suspects in detention and observed that they were badly beaten and bruised. Gbacka, who hailed from the same region as Kanneh, confirmed to the latter that they had been severely tortured.[1471] Kanneh persuaded Bockarie to allow him to transfer Gbacka and Dr Momoh to the hospital for treatment and while there, he assisted the two men to escape and hide because he was concerned for their safety. Kanneh stated that as ECOMOG advanced towards Kenema, Kanneh heard Bockarie say that "if the situations went out of control the prisoners would not be spared".[1472] Upon learning that two of the prisoners had escaped while in the hospital, Bockarie ordered that B.S. Massaquoi be put under "tight custody".[1473]

1214. para. 618: Kanneh testified that on the day that ECOMOG forces entered Kenema Town and as the AFRC retreated,[1474] he saw Bockarie put B.S. Massaquoi into a car and heard Bockarie say he was going to execute Massaquoi.[1475] Karmoh Kanneh and others including Eddi Kanneh, followed Bockarie as he took Massaquoi to the Government reservation. While there Kanneh saw Bockarie's securities take Massaquoi out of the car and shoot him.[1476] Kanneh stated that after Massaquoi died, all of the men followed Bockarie back to the brigade but were not happy with him for having carried out the killings.[1477]

1215. para. 619: A number of other Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified of hearing of the death of B.S. Massaquoi as he was a key figure in Kenema Town. Prosecution Witness TF1-590 heard that Sam Bockarie and his men arrested and killed B.S. Massaquoi.[1478] However, TF1-590 did not see the corpse of B.S. Massaquoi, but only referred to the "widespread rumour" that Massaquoi's body was lying in Hangha Road.[1479] Defence witness Issa Sesay testified that he heard from Major Gua and others that Sam Bockarie had, prior to the RUF retreat from Kenema Town, arrested and killed B.S. Massaquoi and others on suspicion of sending ammunition and food to the Kamajors.[1480] Defence Witness Sam Kolleh (DCT-102), a commanding officer in the RUF who was stationed in Kenema in February 1998,[1481] also heard that Sam Bockarie had arrested B.S. Massaquoi and killed him on the day after the ECOMOG Intervention.[1482]

1216. para. 620: In addition to witness testimony, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence two independent reports on the unlawful killings that took place in Sierra Leone in the year 1998. An Amnesty International report states:

> [O]n 13 and 14 January 1998 several prominent members of the community in Kenema were arrested by members of the RUF under the supervision of Sam Bockarie. They included B.S. Massaquoi, the chairman of the Town Council, Dr P.B. Momoh, a medical doctor, Paramount Chief Moinama Karmor, a traditional leader and Ibrahim Kpaka. A businessman. They were arrested at a time of fierce tighting between the Kamajors and the AFRC and RUF forces around Kenema and were accused of supporting the Kamajors. They were held at the AFRC Secretariat building in Kenema. which had been the local SLPP headquarters. and some were later moved to the police station and army brigade headquarters. They were stripped and repeatedly beaten with sticks, electric cables and strips of tyres and were threatened with death. Their arms were tied tightly behind them. One of those detained sustained a serious head wound and injury to his eye after being beaten on his head with a gun. At least one of those detained died as a result of beatings. Some of those arrested were released on 26 January 1998 and escaped to safety. B.S. Massaquoi, however, was among those who remained held at army brigade headquarters. He was killed by members of the RUF on 8 February 1998 as news arrived of ECOMOG's offensive on Freetown and as Kamajors entered Kenema. Dozens of other people were also reported to have been killed. The mutilated body of B.S. Massaquoi and 35 other people were reported to have been found In mass grave near Kenema on 23 March 1998.[1483]

1217. para. 621: A 1998 Human Rights report on Sierra Leone states:

> [T]hroughout the year, AFRC and RUF rebels committed numerous egregious abuses, including brutal killings, severe mutilations and deliberate dismemberments, in a widespread campaign of terror against the civilian population known as "Operation No Living Thing" .... Many of the hundreds, if not thousands, of civilians killed by AFRC and RUF insurgent forces in the contlict were executed deliberately for political motives. In March RUF leader Sam Bockarie summarily executed 10 prominent residents of Kenema, including former cabinet minister Bockarie S. Massaquoi and Paramount Chief Momoh Tarawalie, for opposing the rebels.[1484]

b. Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Killing of three persons in residential house – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Crimes

1218. para. 625: In his prior testimony from the AFRC trial admitted m this trial as Prosecution Exhibit P-278, TF1-062 testified that he was a trader and a diamond miner living in a town called Tongo Fields in Lower Bambara Chiefdom about 27 miles from Kenema Town when anned AFRC/RUF rebels[l486] led by Sam Bockarie[1487] took control of the area on 11 August 1997.[1488] Upon their arrival in Tongo Fields, the AFRC/RUF rebels carried out widespread looting and indiscriminate attacks against the civilian population for three days.[1489]

1219. para. 626: TF1-062 testified that one morning during this three day period, he was sitting in his house in Tongo Fields when armed soldiers came to a residential house opposite his.[1490] The soldiers ordered the occupants of the house to open the door. When the occupants declined to do so, the soldiers broke down the door and started shooting randomly into the room, killing the three occupants.[1491] The witness heard the soldiers refer to the deceased as Kamajors. The witness however, did not believe this as he knew that there were no Kamajors in Tongo Fields at that time.[1492] After the soldiers left the scene TF1-062 helped some civilians to take corpses away.[1493]

ii. Killing of 15 civilians at Bumpe near Tongo Fields around September 1997 – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Crimes

1220. para. 628: Abdul Otonjo Conteh (TF 1-060), who was a Secondary School teacher, part-time miner and resident of Lalehun[1494] in Tongo Fields testified that the AFRC/RUF Junta forces under Eddie Kanneh and Sam Bockarie arrived in Kenema Town three days after the 25 May 1997 coup[1495] and entered Tongo Fields on 11 August 1997 amid heavy shooting and rampant looting of civilian property.[1496] Abdul Conteh testified that in the days following the arrival of the AFRC/RUF forces in Tongo, the paramount Chief of Lower Bambara Chiefdom appointed a 13 man Committee known as the Lower Bambara Advisory Committee, to oversee the welfare of the citizens of the Chiefdom. The mandate of this committee was to receive reports from the citizens regarding any problems encountered and in tum to relay these complaints to the Paramount Chief and the AFRC/RUF administration.[1497] Conteh was appointed Secretary of that Committee and was resident in Tongo Fields from II August to 10 November 1997.[1498]

1221. para. 629: Conteh testified that in his capacity as committee member, he received a report from some citizens of Bumpe on 16 September 1997,[1499] that fifteen people had been killed at Bumpe, located about one mile on the outskirts of Tongo.[1500] He went to Bumpe to investigate and saw fifteen corpses of both men and women in civilian clothes, including two girls aged 14 and 18 years, respectively, lying in the open. All the bodies bore bullet wounds.1501 Bumpe was deserted as everyone had run away. Conteh testified that some of the survivors of Bumpe told him that RUF fighters went to fight the Kamajors in Dodo Chiefdom on 16 September 1997 and lost. Out of frustration the returning RUF fighters killed whoever crossed their path during their retreat.[1502] Those reportedly killed by the RUF included the fifteen civilians at Bumpe; Chief Vandi Sei and a retired Policeman called John Dakowah at Panguma.[1503] Conteh further testified that the civilians who returned to their home from the bush were harassed, beaten or raped by the AFRC/RUF fighters who accused them of being "relatives of the Kamajors".[1504]

1222. para. 630: In addition, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence several reports authored by Abdul Conteh as "Secretary General of the Lower Bambara Care-Taking Committee".[1505] According to one of the reports, Col. Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) on 8 September 1997 led a group of about 300 RUF/AFRC combatants to Dodo Chiefdom to confront Kamajors. The group suffered heavy casualties and the survivors, on their return to Tongo Fields, killed a retired Policeman called John Dakowa claiming that he was a Kamajor.[1506] According to another report, on 16 September 1997 the O/C Secretariat Tongo[1507] led a group of about 800 RUF/AFRC combatants to Dodo Chiefdom to confront Kamajors. The RUF/AFRC combatants suffered heavy casualties and only 100 returned to Tongo. On their way back, the RUF/AFRC combatants killed 15 civilians at Bumpe including one Saffa Balie, aprominent youth leader, and Pa Vandi Sei, the Town Chief of Panguma. The Lower Bambara Care-Taking Committee reported these deaths to the O/C Secretariat Tongo who dismissed the report remarking that "all those killed were either Kamajors or collaborators of Kamajors" and threatening to kill anyone found in Bumpe trying to bury the dead.[1508]

1223. para. 633: Witness Abdul Conteh testified that during the Junta period, the RUF/AFRC fighters forbade civilians to carry out any private or personal mining of diamonds in Tongo Fields and that any civilian caught mining for himself was severely punished. He also stated that the RUF/AFRC fighters would abduct civilians and force them to mine diamonds for the Junta Government.[1510] Conteh further testified that while serving on the Lower Bambara Care-Taking Committee, he received a report[1511] that Sam Bockarie sent RUF child combatants[1512] to Pandembu, a village in the Tongo Fields area,[1513] with orders to kill civilians who were carrying out personal mining instead of mining for the AFRC/RUF Government.[1514] The child soldiers shot and killed three civilians who were mining by a church in Pandembu.[1515] Conteh and the other Caretaker Committee members went to investigate, and saw the three bullet-riddled corpses of the civilians as well as other people who had sustained bullet wounds.[1516]

1224. para. 634: Abdul Conteh testified that he received another report that RUF child soldiers killed two civilians who were doing private mining at Sandeyeima and wounded several others.[1517] He further testified that he received yet another report that RUF child soldiers killed three civilians who were doing private mining at Wuima and wounded several others. The Caretaker Committee reported these three incidents to Lieutenant Sekou Kunnateh, the O/C of the AFRC Secretariat in Tongo, who responded that "he was not going to take any action as he had confinned that the child combatants were acting in accordance with Sam Bockarie's orders", and that "no civilian was allowed to mine privately in Lower Bambara Chiefdom except for the AFRC Govemment".[1518]

iv. Killing of civilian miners at Cyborg Pit – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Crimes

1225. para. 637: In his prior testimony admitted as an exhibit in this trial,[1520] protected Prosecution Witness TF1-062 testified that he was living in Tongo Fields, Lower Bambara chiefdom during the AFRC/RUF Junta's occupation of Tongo Fields. He and his family had been carrying on private mining of diamonds in Tongo Fields for 20 years before the AFRC/RUF forces arrived.[1521] After the AFRC/RUF forces took over control of Tongo Fields, the witness and other civilians were forced to mine for the AFRC/RUF forces using his equipment and employees. Although he himself would not physically mine, he always made sure that he personally supervised his workers on a daily basis and that any diamonds found were surrendered to the

AFRC/RUF commanders.[1522] The AFRC/RUF forces referred to this forced mining as "Government work" but civilians were never compensated for work done or diamonds produced.[1523] TF1-062 testified that Sam Bockarie assigned an ex-SLA soldier called Set Marah to oversee the mining activities of the AFRC/RUF forces in Tongo Fields and that civilians were not allowed to mine without the permission of this commander.[1524] TF1-062 also testified that any diamonds retrieved by the civilians were supposed to be handed to the AFRC/RUF commanders who in tum would hand them over to Sam Bockarie. Civilians who disobeyed this practice were severely punished or even killed. TF1-062 witnessed a number of civilian miners killed for this reason by the AFRC/RUF soldiers at Cyborg Pit, a mining area operated by the AFRC/RUF forces.[1525]

1226. para. 638: TF1-062 testified that on one occasion he was standing by watching his workers mining at Cyborg Pit when he saw an AFRC/RUF soldier try to take a bag of gravel, by force, from a child miner. The child was preparing to "wash" the gravel in order to sort out any diamonds therein. However, when the child refused to tum over his bag of gravel to the soldier, the latter became angry and shot and killed the child.[1526] On another occasion at Cyborg Pit, an AFRC/RUF soldier who was guarding the civilian miners temporarily left his bag of gravel by the river side where the civilians used to "wash" their own gravel. When the soldier returned he found the bag missing and was very angry vowing that he would set an example by killing a civilian.[1527] The soldier then randomly fired into the crowd where TF1-062 was, killing one civilian in the process.[1528]

1227. para. 639: TF1-062 further testified that on many occasions when he went to supervise his workers as they were mining, he would see two to three corpses of dead miners who were brought out of the pit to the surface where he was standing. TF1-062 observed that the corpses were always "oozing blood".[1529] TF1-062 concluded that the victims must have been shot and killed by the AFRC/RUF fighters guarding the miners Cyborg Pit, as they were the only people who were armed.[1530]

(iii) Kono District – Crimes

1228. para. 645: The Trial Chamber heard the following evidence, namely, that after the ECOMG Intervention in Freetown in February 1998, the AFRC/RUF forces that were driven out of Freetown fled northwards, trekking through a number of locations including Tombo, Fogbo and Newton,[1536] Masiaka, Lunsar, Makeni, Magbonkineh, Binkolo, Kabala, Matotoka, Makali, and Sewafe and were finally based in Kono District. Senior AFRC commanders in this group included Johnny Paul Koroma, Chairman of the AFRC, SAJ Musa, SFY Koroma, Col. Foday, Ibrahim

Bazzy Kamara (a.k.a. Bazzy), Capt. Akim Turay, Moses Kabia (a.k.a. CSO Rambo),[1537] Santigie Borbor Kanu (a.k.a. Five-Five), Col. Avivo Kamara and Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb_blast).[1538] Senior RUF commanders in this group included Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), Morris Kallon, Mike Lamin and S.O. Williams.[1539] Other AFRC commanders that were involved in military operations in Kono District during this period included Colonels Foday Kallay, Franklyn Conteh a.k.a. "Woyoh", Idrissa Kamara (a.k:a. Leatherboot), Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat), Ibrahim Bioh Sesay, Abdul Sesay, Momoh Bangura (a.k.a. Dorty) and Adams, and Lieutenants Tito, Amara Kallay, Mohamed Savage (a.k.a. Changa-Bulanga), Mosquito,[1540] Junior, Staff Alhaji,[1541] and Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit).[1542] Other RUF commanders involved in military operations within Kono District during this period included Emmanuel Williams (a.k.a. Rocky), Isaac Mongor, Komba Gbundema.[1543] Gogomeh, RUF Rambo a.k.a. "Premo,"[1544] and Gibril Massaquoi.[1545]

1229. para. 646: The Trial Chamber heard further evidence that as the AFRC/RUF forces trekked towards Kono District they were under the overall command of Johnny Paul Koroma.[1546] Along the way, SAJ Musa addressed the AFRC/RUF forces at Kabala and ordered them to recapture Kono District and to establish a new base there. He said '"Kono would serve as a strong base, since it was a diamondiferous area, and we will serve as a force to reckon with by the Government of Sierra Leone and the international community".[1547] This order was endorsed and reinforced by Johnny Paul Koroma at Magbonkineh[1548] and at Makeni[1549] where he told the AFRC/RUF forces to '"capture the able bodied civilians in Kono and to execute the rest". Issa Sesay of the RUF also endorsed the order, remarking that "civilians were very dangerous to the Junta forces and the only way to ensure that they don't base in Kono is to bum down their houses and execute them".[1550] Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) of the RUF also endorsed this order amongst his forces and sent messages to all RUF bases to "make Kono District Fearful so that ECOMOG would not base there".[1551] Making an area fearful one witness explained, entailed "destruction of life and property, where there will be killings, amputations. burning of houses, destruction of bridges, setting up road blocks. All those things would happen and that will have made the area fearful".[1552] After this order the AFRC troops led by Hassan Papa Bangura and the RUF forces led by Superman, reorganised themselves into a single fighting force to attack Kono.[1553] On arrival in Kono District around early March 1998, the AFRC/RUF forces captured a village called Sewafe and burnt down all civilian houses on the orders of Johnny Paul Koroma who called Sewafe "a Kamajor stronghold".[1554] Thereafter, AFRC/RUF forces led by Superman captured Koidu Town, the provincial capital of Kono District and executed the orders of their commanders.[1555]

1230. para. 647: While in Koidu, Johnny Paul Koroma reiterated his earlier order to the forces to establish a strong Junta base there and declared Kono a "civilian no go area". He also reiterated his orders to bum down any civilian homes so as to discourage civilians returning to live there, and to kill any civilians that attempted to return to the area, accusing them of being Kamajor supporters.[1556] After Johnny Paul Koroma and his wife left Kono District and went to Kailahun, the junta forces that remained in Koidu Town reorganised themselves.[1557] Ibrahim Bazzy Kamara (a.k.a. Bazzy) was the commander of the AFRC/RUF forces that went towards Bumpe, Yengema, Tombudu and Sewafe along the Masingbi Road axis while Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb-Blast) was the Deputy Commander and Operations Commander.[1558]

1231. para. 648: In relation to unlawful killings alleged to have taken place in Kono District between 1 February 1998 and 31 January 2000, the Trial Chamber has considered the testimony of Prosecution witnesses Finda Gbamanja, Isaac Mongor, Alhaji Tejan Cole, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Tamba Yomba Nbekia, Mustapha Mansaray, Emmanuel Bull; protected Prosecution Witnesses TF1-189, TF1-375, TF1-371; and Exhibit P-366,[1559] Exhibit P-077 and Exhibit P-078.[1560]

a. Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killing of civilians at Yardo Road, Hill Station and Superman Ground in February/March 1998 – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

1232. para. 649: Alimamy Bobson Sesay[1561] testified that after the 25 May 1997 coup, he joined the AFRC and was assigned as Military Transport Officer and security to Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb-Blast), a member of the AFRC Supreme Council.[1562] Bobson Sesay stated that after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998, he along with Hassan Papa Bangura and the AFRC/RUF forces fled Freetown and trekked towards Kono District where they were to establish a new Junta base.[1563] As the AFRC/RUF forces approached Kono District around March 1998, a number of Junta commanders including Johnny Paul Koroma the AFRC Chairman, SAJ Musa and Issa Sesay, ordered the forces to recapture Kono as it was "a diamondiferous area", to abduct able-bodied civilians who would assist the forces and serve as recruits, to bum down all civilian houses in order to discourage civilians moving back into the area, to establish a strong Junta base in Kono against any Kamajor or ECOMOG attacks and to execute any civilians that attempted to return to the area.[1564]

1233. para. 650: Bobson Sesay testified that after receiving the orders, he and the AFRC forces under Hassan Papa Bangura together with RUF forces under Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), captured Koidu Town.[1565] Bobson Sesay told the court that in execution of the said orders, he together with Hassan Papa Bangura and the RUF forces went to Yardo Road where they met a group of civilians coming towards them. The AFRC/RUF forces opened fire on the civilians and killed all of them. Sesay testified that in order to comply with the orders given by their commanders to make the area "fearful", the AFRC/RUF forces displayed the corpses of the civilians at the various junctions around Yardo Road in order to frighten off any other civilians that might have wanted to come to or remain in Koidu Town.[1566] Sesay did not recall how many civilians were killed at Yardo Road.[1567]

1234. para. 651: Another Prosecution witness, Isaac Mongor, testified about the operations of the AFRC/RUF forces in Koidu Town after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998.[1568] Mongor stated that he was part of the retreating RUF forces that advanced from Sewafe to Koidu Town, and that as they approached Koidu Town, they found many houses already burnt down.[1569] Mongor stated that he spoke to Morris Kallon who explained that Sam Bockarie had ordered the RUF forces "to burn down Koidu Town so that ECOMOG would not be able to enter there and occupy the town".[1570] Mongor explained that the RUF in Kono District adopted a policy of "making the area fearful" which meant that "they would kill, burn down houses so that they make sure that the people who were living in the areas when there was those things going on they would be afraid and that even the enemies against whom they were fighting would also be afraid".[1571] Morris Kallon and other RUF forces that carned out this order were promoted by Sam Bockarie as a reward.[1572] Mongor further testified that he went around Koidu Town and saw many houses that were burnt, and on looking inside the houses he saw property and an unspecified number of corpses of people that were burnt inside those houses.[1573]

1235. para. 652: Mongor testified that soon after the AFRC/RUF forces captured Koidu Town, an RUF commander called Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) arrested a group of 13 civilians. Mongor stated that this group was composed of men, women and children and came from the direction of the Guinea border, the same direction that the Kamajors had fled to prior to the AFRC/RUF capturing Koidu Town.[1574] The children amongst the group carried loads on their heads.[1575] Mongor stated that on seeing the civilians coming from the same direction that the Kamajors had retreated, the AFRC/RUF forces suspected the civilians of being enemy spies, and Superman shot all 13 civilians to death. Mongor was present when the executions took place at a location called Hill Station.[1576]

1236. para. 653: Prosecution Witness TF1-189 testified that after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998, she and her whole family along with hundreds of other civilians, fled from Yengema[1577] and sought refuge at a location in Kono District.[1578] In March 1998 while at this location, TF1-189 heard gunshots and suddenly saw the community centre on fire.[1579] AFRC/RUF rebel forces gathered all the civilians in one location at which the civilians were held prisoner for a number of days. TF1-189 testified that rebels would routinely rape the women and young girls at this location. On one occasion in early March 1998, the witness saw the rebels light a candle and put it under an old man's scrotum. The old man screamed with pain and died later that day.[1580]

1237. para. 654: TF1-189 further testified that on 12 March 1998 the AFRC/RUF rebel forces who had captured her brought her to a location they called "Superman's compound" in Koidu Town.[1581] The rebels first offered her as a "wife" to CO Superman but the latter remarked that "he did not want a wite". TF1-189 testified that she was taken into a big house or hall filled with other captured civilians.[1582] The witness heard one of the rebels saying that "since Superman doesn't want any wife, they are going to kill all of us".[1583] One of the rebels took a woman from amongst the group, put her against the wall and shot her to death in the presence of the witness and the other people.[1584] TF1-189 stated that she managed to escape from captivity but that all the other civilians at Superman's compound were killed by the AFRC/RUF rebels.[1585]

1238. para. 655: Prosecution Witness TF1-375, who was a security to RUF commander Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), and who took part in the attack on Koidu Town by the AFRC/RUF forces during this period, also described the attack.[1586] According to this witness, the first junta forces to attack Koidu Town led by Isaac Mongor and RUF Rambo were repelled by the Kamajors.[1587] The AFRC/RUF forces then planned a second attack led by Superman, which succeeded. AFRC Commanders involved in this joint attack included Gullit, Bazzy, Adams and Savage.[1588] After taking control of Koidu Town the AFRC/RUF forces burnt houses, looted private property and captured and raped women and girls.[1589] TF1-375 explained that the forces burnt houses where they suspected that Kamajors were hiding and stated that "when we set the houses on fire, we would hear people shouting inside, screaming, "Oh we are inside. We are inside" and sometimes the houses would bum down and we would see their skulls and their bones".[1590]

1239. para. 656: The Trial Chamber also considered the following documentary evidence. A Human Rights Report (Exhibit P-366) states:

> [I]n March 1998. RUF forces executed 32 youths in Koidu for supporting Kamajor CDF forces that previously had taken the town".[1591]

1240. para. 657: A report by Amnesty International (Exhibit P-078) states:

> [Ijn the days immediately after their removal from power by ECOMOG. AFRC and RUF forces indiscriminately killed unarmed civilians. looted and burned houses both in Freetown and other towns. As the rebel forces were pursued eastwards by ECOMOG forces through towns such as 80 in Southern Province. Kenema and Koidu in Eastern Province. and Makeni in Northern Province during February. March and April 1998. they were responsible for widespread killings. torture and ill treatment, including rape and other forms of sexual assault and abduction. Villages and towns were burnt to the ground, destroying thousands of homes. Koidu, a major town in the diamond-rich Kono District. was almost totally destroyed by AFRC and RUF forces and villages between Njaiama-Sewafe and Koidu repeatedly attacked.[1592]

ii. Killing of civilians in and around Koidu Town between April and May 1998 – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

1241. para. 664: Witness Alex Tamba Teh, a church minister resident in Koidu Town, testified that in April 1998 fighting broke out between the Civil Defence Forces (a.k.a. Kamajors) and AFRC/RUF rebels,[1593] forcing the witness, his family and large numbers of civilians to flee to Tongoro bush.[1594] While in hiding, Teh, along with 250 civilians including men, women and children, were captured by a group of 5 armed AFRCIRUF rebels[1595] and taken to Sunna Mosque in Koidu Town.[1596] At Sunna Mosque three other rebels singled out one Aiah Abu amongst the civilian abductees and immediately shot him to death, remarking that the deceased had "escaped from them before".[1597]

1242. para. 665: Teh further testified that at Sunna Mosque, AFRC/RUF rebels,[1598] pretending to be ECOMOG soldiers tricked the captives into "cheering and welcoming ECOMOG for saving the civilians from the rebels".[1599] The rebels then led the civilians to a sec! uded place called "the Igbaleh" on Kamachende Street.[1600] On the way, Teh counted "up to 50" corpses.[1601] At the Igbaleh, Emmanuel Williams (a.k.a. Rocky) ordered the rebels to separate the captured men from the women and children.[1602] Teh heard Rocky saying to the civilians, "Today those of you who were saying thanks to us and you were saying thanks to the ECOMOG, now I want to tell you that we are not ECOMOG. We are the junta rebels, we are here .... " After this, Rocky singled Teh out of the crowd because he was a pastor, and told him to pray for everybody.[1603] Rocky then asked one of the rebels to bring out his big gun called "Bargege" and shot all the civilian men to death.[1604] Afterwards, the deceased were all decapitated by the SBUs on orders of commander Rocky.[1605] Later, Teh was taken back to Sunna Mosque, where he heard Rocky tell Rambo that he had killed 101 men.[1606]

1243. para. 666: Teh further testified that while at the Igbaleh. he saw a young boy who was killed by the SBUs after they amputated his arms and legs and then threw him in a pit latrine. The young boy was screaming and pleading with the SBUs asking them why they were doing this to him.[1607]

1244. para. 667: Another Prosecution witness, Isaac Mongor testified that in April 1998 after ECOMOG pushed the AFRC/RUF forces out of Koidu Town, the latter occupied a place code-named "Superman Ground" from where they carried out their operations. One such operation was the attack on Kissy Town, behind Koidu Town on the road leading towards the Guinea border.[1608] Mongor told the court that the rebel group to which he belonged went to attack the Kamajors in Kissy Town and in the process also killed all the civilians that they found there because they suspected everybody to be a Kamajor. Amongst those killed were men, women and children.[1609]

1245. para. 668: Confidential Exhibit P-077, a report documenting rebel actions from May 1998 to January 1999 states:

> [A] teenage boy described an attack close to Koidu. in early May by "'junta". He had gone there with his family because they thought that ECOMG had arrived. They were wrong and instead encountered rebels. The boy reported that he was the only survivor in a group of 50. He had a deep laceration to the foot which doctors said was a clear case of a failed amputation. The boy was taken to Makeni by ECOMOG.[1610]

1246. para. 669: Exhibit P-078, a report by Amnesty International states:

> [A]n even more grotesque pattern of killing, rape and mutilation became evident in April 1998 and the numbers of victims increased dramatically. Rebel forces called their campaign of terror against civilians "Operation no living thing". As fighting continued between ECOMOG and rebel forces around Koidu, attacks on civilians in villages in the area persisted and then spread west and north .... Unanned civilians who were taking no active part in the conflict were killed, their homes burned and their villages destroyed .... More than 650 bodies. many of them women and children, were reported to have been buried following fighting in the area around Koidu in mid-June 1998.[1611]
> An Amnesty international delegation which visited Sierra Leone in May 1998 met some of the victims of these atrocities at Connaught Hospital.... Another victim, a 15-year-old schoolboy from Koidu who had arrived at Connaught Hospital on 10 May 1998, had suffered severe lacerations to his right ankle in an attempted amputation. He and his family- his parents and six brothers and sisters- had been hiding in the bush for more than twomonths after being driven from Koidu after it was attacked by rebel forces. They had no food throughout that time other than bananas. On I May 1998 the family had heard reports that ECOMOG had arrived in Koidu and they went to enter the eastern part of the town. They and those with them were attacked by rebel forces who accused them of supporting President

Kabbah. Almost 50 people were kiIled. The young boy stayed for four days in a house without food or treatment of his severely injured leg".[1612]

iii. Other killings around Koidu Town between December 1999 and the disarmament – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

1247. para. 673: In his prior testimony,[1615] Prosecution Witness TF1-077 testified that in early 1998 in a month he does not recall, the whole of Kono District was attacked and he and his family moved from Tombodu to the Guinea border for refuge. He described the attack on Kono District at that time as "Operation No Living Thing".[1616] The witness said he and his family stayed at the Guinea border "for a little while" and then they heard that ECOMOG had arrived in Kono District.[1617] The witness testified that following the ECOMOG Intervention and on hearing that ECOMOG had "cleared Koidu Town", he left the Guinea border "in the dry season,[1618] in 1998 and returned to Koidu Town.[1619] The witness further testified that on 16 December 1999 after he had returned to Koidu Town,[1620] as he was sleeping he heard heavy gunfire. The gunfire went on for a long time. He went outside and heard shouting and wailing. He ran and hid behind his house until daybreak. At dawn, he saw many corpses of people that had been killed, including three children one of whom was his own child.[1621] The witness further told the court that an armed RUF man dressed in military uniform[1622] captured the witness and other civilians totalling 50 people in number and marched them to Tombodu with loads of looted property on their heads.[1623] On the way to Tombudu, the armed captors dressed in combat uniforms told the witness "We are the RUF. You are now in our control. You are no longer in ECOMOG control".[1624] In Tombudu Town the captives met other RUF commanders including Officer Med, Colonel Gibbo and Major Tactical who told the captives that Issa Sesay had ordered that the abductees be taken to Tombudu Bridge to mine.[1625] The witness testified that subsequently, he and many other civilians were forced to mine diamonds for the RUF at Tombudu Bridge "until the disarmament".[1626] The witness testified that throughout this period, civilians forced to mine were heavily guarded by RUF child soldiers known as SBUs, mistreated and often died from disease for lack of medical treatment or were killed for refusing to mine for the RUF.[1627] The witness saw one S.E. Sogbeh who was summarily executed by an SBU for refusing to work and whose body was thrown into the river with a warning from the RUF that "anybody who refused to do this work, this will be your end".[1628]

b. Bumpe – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings in Bumpe between March and June 1998 – Bumpe – Kono District – Crimes

1248. para. 676: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testitied that the AFRC/RUF continued their campaign of terror against the citizens of Kono District from March right through to June 1998 when he and Commander Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast) withdrew from Kono. He stated that the junta forces continued routinely attacking civilian homes and burning houses in Bumpe even when there was no enemy in sight, with the aim of discouraging civilians and ECOMOG from staying in or returning to Bumpe.[1629] Apart from the area where the battalion occupied, the whole of Bumpe was burnt down.[1630] Sesay further told the court that during the attack on Bumpe in March or April 1998, the SLA battalion commander at Bumpe,[1631] Lt. Amara Kallay and the AFRC/RUF troops that were present, decapitated several captured civilians, put their heads on sticks and fixed the sticks on guard posts.[1632] The witness stated that this was done to create fear amongst the civilians and ECOMOG.[1633] Bobson Sesay also told the court that this display of human heads on sticks at checkpoints was routinely done by the AFRC/RUF forces in other locations within Kono District including Tombodu,[1634] Njaiama Sewafe,[1635] and Yengema.[1636]

1249. para. 677: Bobson Sesay further testified that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in burning houses in Bumpe would lock and set houses on fire with civilians inside. Despite the cries, the Junta forces would guard the burning buildings at gun point to prevent anyone escaping. After the building was completely destroyed, the Junta forces "would not bother. .. to go and watch whether anything was in there because we knew the houses were completely burnt down".[1637]

1250. para. 678: Alimamy Bobson Sesay's account is corroborated by the hearsay evidence of Alice Pyne, a former radio operator for the RUF forces, who testified that she heard from Foday Lansana on the radio that the AFRC/RUF forces that attacked Bumpe killed many civilians in the process.[1638]

1251. para. 679: In addition Prosecution Witness TF1-375 who took part in the AFRC/RUF attack on Bumpe testified that the junta forces asked the civilians to leave Bumpe so that the junta forces would be based there and that those civilians who resisted were shot dead. The witness himself admitted that he participated in the killing of these civilians and in decapitating their heads and displaying them on sticks at various check points. He explained that this was done in accordance with the orders of their commanders to "make the area fearful"' in order to scare off

ECOMOG and other civilians.[1639] The witness also explained that the RUF slogan that "civilians have no blood" meant that the lives of civilians did not matter to the junta forces.[1640]

1252. para. 680: Another witness who was a victim of the rebel attacks in Bumpe after the ECOMOG Intervention is TF1-218.[1641] TF1-218 narrated how after the ECOMOG Intervention of February 1998,[1642] four rebels[1643] dressed in combat uniforms and black boots and armed with guns and knives[1644] attacked her home in Bumpe at night. She stated that the rebels captured her and locked her in a house at Cookery junction with other captured civilians.[1645] The witness described how two rebels stripped her naked and raped her.[1646] She testified that she managed to escape from the house after a rebel had threatened to kill all the civilians with an axe and shot the witness's left hand.[1647] She later returned to the house to look for her son the next morning and found her son alive but covered in blood.[1648] TF1-218 testified that her son, who was present during the attack, told her that all of the civilians she left in the house were killed in the room from which TF 1-218 had escaped the night before.[1649] Her son explained to the witness that he escaped death only because "as the rebels were shooting these people, he was lying flat on the ground and most of the people who were shot fell on top of him".[1650]

1253. para. 681: Perry Kamara, a radio operator who was based at Superman ground after the ECOMOG Intervention in 1998, told the court that sometime before June 1998,[1651] the RUF forces under the command of Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon and CO Rocky attacked Bumpe and its surrounding areas. Upon their return to Superman Ground after the operation, the RUF forces reported that they had killed civilians, amputated others and burnt most of the town in accordance with Bockarie's orders to "make the area fearful".[1652]

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Massacre of more than 20 civilians in Tombodu around March or April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

1254. para. 685: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he participated in an attack on Tombodu around March or April 1998[1653] along with other RUF forces and commanders Bomb Blast and Savage.[1654] The witness explained that when the AFRC/RUF forces first arrived in Tombodu, they were dressed in military uniforms and arrived in vehicles. Pretending to be government forces that had come to rescue the citizens, the AFRC/RUF forces gestured to the fleeing civilians to stop running and to approach the fighters, saying "we are government troops. We have come to reinforce and protect you".[1655] The civilians stopped running and as soon as the civilians approached within firing range, the AFRC/RUF forces opened fire on the civilians, killing over 20 of them.[1656]

ii. Second Massacre at Tombudu involving 77-78 civilians around April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

1255. para. 688: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that Tombodu was attacked again one month after Savage was based there as battalion commander.[1657] After capturing about 77-78 civilians, Savage sent a message to Masingbi headquarters inviting commanders Bomb-Blast, Bazzy and Alimamy Bobson Sesay to come and meet the "civilian visitors".[1658] Savage explained to the commanders and the witness that he had tricked the civilians into believing that ECOMOG had come to save them. The civilians had rejoiced at the news only to be captured by Savage.[1659] The witness described how Savage assembled and paraded the 78 civilians before the commanders and the witness.[1660] Fifteen of these civilians were locked up in a building by Savage and burned alive.[1661] The witness heard them scream and saw their charred skeletons afterwards. Another 15 civilians were amputated by Savage and his subordinates including Guitar Boy and Staff Alhaji and some SBUS.[1662] The witness heard Savage telling the amputees to "go and tell ECOMOG that Savage was now the battalion commander in Tombodu",[1663] The rest of the civilians were decapitated by Savage and their bodies thrown into a pit known as the "Savage pit".[1664] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that after this incident, Commander Savage was nick-named "Changa Bulanga" because he was "very good at using machete. He was very good at amputating people".[1665] Bobson Sesay further testified that Superman came to Tombodu just after this incident had taken place and that Savage showed Superman the decapitated bodies in the pit as well as the charred bodies of the civilians that he had burnt. Superman was reportedly shocked and warned Savage that what he had done amounted to crimes against humanity. However. Superman did not punish Savage and instead joined everybody in drinking palm wine to celebrate the incident.[1666]

1257. para. 690: Perry Kamara, a radio operator with the RUF at Superman's headquarters known as Superman Ground, confirmed in his testimony that he received reports in 1998 that Savage had killed more than 30 civilians in Tombodu.[1671]

iii. Third Massacre of over 53 civilians in Tombudu in April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

1258. para. 693: Mustapha Mansaray and Ibrahim Fofana, two civilians that were captured by the AFRC/RUF forces and taken together to Tombudu around April 1998, testified before the Trial Chamber. Mustapha Mansaray was captured by "rebels and soldiers",[1672] from Wordu Sandor,[1673] while Ibrahim Fofana was captured by soldiers wearing military uniforms in Paema.[1674] Both men walked for three days carrying looted goods belonging to the captors and were taken to Tombodu where they met 53 other civilians that were also captured by the Junta forces.[1675] Mansaray, Fofana and the other captured persons were taken to Staff Alhaji's headquarters[1676] where they were stripped naked and forced to sit on the ground.[1677] Staff Alhaji, who the witness was told was the rebel commander, asked for a mortar to be brought and amputated the hands of six men including Mansaray and Fofana.[1678] Staff Alhaji told the amputees that "now they would never be able to vote for President Kabbah again and that they should keep their hands out of politics".[1679] Mansaray told the court that four of the amputees later died from their wounds and that only he and Fofana survived.[1680]

1259. para. 694: Mansaray testified that Staff Alhaji ordered the rebels to lock the 53 civilians in a building and to burn them alive. After locking the 53 civilians in a building, the rebels sprinkled petrol on the building and set it alight burning everyone inside to death.[1681] Mansaray heard the people inside, including women and children, crying.[1682] Mansaray explained that the people inside the building could not escape because the doors and windows were locked with nails and soldiers stood guard with guns.[1683] Mansaray andF of ana left before the house finished burning.[1684]

1260. para. 695: Witness Ibrahim Fofana was captured by soldiers wearing military uniforms in Paema.[1685] He testified that he was with five persons who carried loads for the captors to Tombodu at gunpoint.[1686] All five persons reached Tombodu on 5 April 1998[1687] and were taken to a person called Staff Alhaji. Fofana stated that while he and the others were tied to an orange tree in the compound, the rebel soldiers brought 53 other captives from a village called Masundu and locked them in a big house.[1688] Fofana heard a soldier report to Staff Alhaji that the 53 civilians had been captured and Staff Alhaji gave an order that they be locked up in a house and the house be set on fire.[1689] The rebels locked the 53 civilians in the house, sprinkled petrol on it and set it on fire.[1690] Fofana testified that he heard people screaming until the house burned down completely.[1691]

1261. para. 696: Fofima said that after the house had been completely burnt, that he and the others in the group of five had their hands amputated by Rambo who was dressed in a military uniform.[1692] Fofana testified that only he and Mustapha Mansaray survived the amputations,[1693] as the other three were elderly and were bleeding profusely.[1694] The three fell down somewhere on the way to Lebanon and died.[1695]

iv. Killings of civilians in and around Tombodu between March and May 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

1263. para. 700: Another Prosecution witness Sahr Bindi testified that AFRC/RUF forces first came to Tombodu sometime "between the rainy and dry seasons".[1708] After addressing the citizens and telling them that the AFRC and RUF were in Koidu and that the civilians should not be afraid, the juntas returned to Koidu.[1709] Less than a month later, the rebels returned to Tombodu amidst heavy gunfire.[1710] Bindi said that some of the men had red cloth tied around their heads.[1711] The witness fled and hid in the bush.[1712] The shooting did not subside until almost evening.[1713] When

Bindi returned from the bush, he saw two corpses of men who had been shot.[1714] One man was wearing civilian clothing.[1715] The other man was known to the witness to be a civilian.[1716]

1264. para. 701: After this incident Sahr Bindi fled to Guinea with his family and only returned to Tombodu a month later when they heard on the radio that ECOMOG had come to Kono District.[1717] On his way back from Guinea, Bindi was captured by RUF/AFRC fighters[1718] and taken to their commander called Staff Alhaji in Tombodu.[1719] Staff Alhaji ordered his men to lock up the witness and his brother saying that the group would be killed the next day.[1720] Towards the evening, Bindi heard people being beaten and pleading on the veranda not to be killed[1721] but at some point the screaming and pleading subsided.[1722] When the witness came out of the cell, he saw three corpses lying on the ground with ropes tied around their waists and rocks attached to the ropes.[1723] The corpses were dressed in civilian clothing and appeared to have been beaten.[1724] Bindi and the others taken out of the cell were told to carry the bodies and dump them in an old mining pit that had a large quantity of water in it.[1725] Bindi later learnt that the pit was called "Savage pit".[1726] The witness managed to escape from captivity in the night.[1727]

d. Koidu Geiya or Koidu Gieya – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings of civilians at Koidu Geiya around May to June 1998 – Koidu Geiya or Koidu Gieya – Kono District – Crimes

1265. para. 705: The Trial Chamber heard the evidence of several witnesses regarding the killing of civilians in Koidu Geiya around the period of May to June 1998. These witnesses include Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Alice Pyne and Prosecution Witness TF1-375.

1266. para. 706: Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that the AFRC/RUF forces based in Gandorhun attacked Koidu Geiya around Mayor June 1998 and successfully captured it from Kamajors.[1729] Sesay testified that these forces comprising RUF and SLA members were commanded by an RUF commander called Rambo.[1730] In Koidu Geiya, the AFRC/RUF forces captured two Kamajors. Sesay testified that one of the AFRC/RUF forces called Ahchebe slit open one of the Kamajor's stomach, removed the heart and ate it raw.[1731] Because of this, the other AFRC/RUF forces nicknamed Ahchebe "Charma-Raw", a Krio word meaning "one who eats raw meat". Sesay told the court that this was done in the presence of Commanders Hassan Papa Bangura, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and two other senior commanders, none of whom reprimanded Ahchebe for the killing of the Kamajor. Mingo merely reprimanded Charma-raw for cannibalism but not for killing the Kamajor.[1732]

1267. para. 707: TF 1-375 confirmed that during the period May/June 1998, the AFRC/RUF forces fought against the Kamajors in Koidu Geiya and overpowered them.[1733] According to TF1-375, the AFRC/RUF forces needed to take control of Koidu Geiya from the Kamajors in order to enable Johnny Paul Koroma to cross through this area on his way to Kailahun.[1734] After defeating the Kamajors and taking control of the area, Superman designated an RUF commander called Rambo to be based in Koidu Geiya. TF1-375 told the court that Rambo ordered his troops to burn down civilian homes, kill civilians and amputate others in order to "make the area fearful".[1735] TF1-375 was not present when the civilians were allegedly killed, but he learnt of Rambo's orders being carried out from some of Rambo's bodyguards including CO Bakarr and one of the AFRC commanders, who came from "Rambo's ground".[1736] Soon afterwards, Superman sent the witness to Koidu Geiya to take ammunition to Rambo and that is when TF1-375 saw corpses of civilians, burnt houses and cars and a lot of destruction in Koidu Geiya.[1737]

1268. para. 708: Alice Pyne, a radio operator working for the RUF throughout the conflict testified that the RUF used to carry out attacks on civilians, especially in areas where ECOMOG troops were based and where the civilians thought they were safe. When the RUF attacked, the civilians were unable to escape as quickly as ECOMOG.[1738] Pyne told the court that Koidu Geiya was a location where the RUF would run such an operation in 1998 "while the witness was at PC ground and before the death of Sani Abacha".[1739] Pyne further told the court that the RUF sent a message to her to the effect that they attacked Koidu Geiya, but the message made no mention of any civilian deaths.[1740] Pyne told the court that the attack was led by RUF commanders Rambo and Banya because they were the commanders in Gandorhun from where the radio message came.[1741] Pyne stated that later she heard from Claris, another radio operator based in Gandorhun where the attacking RUF forces had come from, that the forces had indiscriminately killed a lot of civilians in Koidu Geiya, including children.[1742]

e. Koidu Buma – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings of civilians at Koidu Buma around May to June 1998 – Koidu Buma – Kono District – Crimes

1269. para. 711: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in Mayor June 1998[1743] the AFRC/RUF forces in Kono District heard on the radio that ECOMOG forces were in Makeni and were coming to recapture Kono.[1744] Immediately after this the AFRC forces under the command of Hassan Papa Bangura and Bazzy travelled from Masingbi and joined Superman's RUF forces at Dabundeh Street. The combined AFRC/RUF forces took the Gandorhun route to go to Koidu Geiya to attack the town.[1745] On the way to Koidu Gieya. the group met RUF Rambo, the Deputy Commander of Operations in Koidu Buma.[1746] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he saw the corpses of 15 civilians who had been "hacked to death" by RUF Rambo, but he did not witness the actual killings.[1747] The witness explained that RUF Rambo had gone ahead of the other fighters and was waiting for them at Koidu Buma.[1748] RUF Rambo explained to the witness and the other commanders including Hassan Papa Bangura and Superman, that he killed the civilians and displayed their bodies in the street in order "to create fear so that no civilians would come to that area".[1749]

f. Yengema – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings of civilians at Yengema around March/April 1998 – Yengema – Kono District – Crimes

1270. para. 714: Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in March or April 1998[1750] AFRC/RUF forces led by a commander called Tito attacked Yengema and completely burned the town down, killed every civilian they found there, and displayed the corpses and human heads on sticks at various checkpoints.[1751] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he learned of the attack and killings while on patrol in Yengema with Commander Bomb Blast.[1752] Commander Tito explained to the Witness and Bomb Blast that some civilians escaped and had their houses set on fire, while others were captured and those amongst the captives who were "not strong enough" were killed.[1753] The witness also told the court that whenever he would go on patrol with this commander throughout Kono District, the AFRC/RUF forces would tell them that the burning of houses and killing of civilians was "a daily affair" and "an organised command".[1754]

ii. Killing of civilians at the Yengema Training base between December 1998 and January 2000 – Yengema – Kono District – Crimes

during the rigorous physical training known as "halaka",[1758] or "crawling" and other recruits who attempted to escape from the training base were captured and either killed or had the letters "RUF" carved on their foreheads or chests using a knife or broken bottle.[1759] TF1-362 explained that Issa Sesay gave the order that any civilian recruit attempting to escape should be killed in order to deter the others from escaping.[1760] She further explained that recruits were "marked" with the letters "RUF" so that wherever they went, they would be easily identified, and also to scare off others from attempting to escape.[1761]

1273. para. 719: TFI-362 also testified that the RUF forces at Yengema Training base would go on "food-finding missions" in surrounding villages whereby they would attack civilians and rob them of their food. Civilians who would resist were shot or beaten to death and their food taken.[1763]

1274. para. 720: Mustapha Mansaray, a member of the Internal Defence Unit of the RUF from 1994 to 1999, testified that while serving at Ngaiya in Kono District,[1764] he heard from miners who used to go to Yengema that Issa Sesay killed recruits at the Yengema training base.[1765] Mansaray stated that his colleague, Pa Kosia, a general security officer for the RUF,[1766] investigated the allegations and asked Issa Sesay about the deaths of recruits at Yengema. Pa Kosia told Mansaray that Issa Sesay told him that if he pursued the questioning then he too would be punished.[1767] Mansaray also testified that Pa Kosia told Mansaray that the training commander at Yengema training base confirmed to Pa Kosia that Issa Sesay came to the base and killed several recruits and that his bodyguards also shot some of the recruits.[1768]

g. Paema or Peyima – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings of civilians in Paema around March/April 1998 – Paema or Peyima - Kono District – Crimes

1275. para. 723: Witness Ibrahim Fofana lived with his family in Paema Town, Kono District in February 1998.[1769] Fofana testified that a "squad of soldiers"[1770] arrived in Paema Town in February 1998 and forcibly took people's property, in what the soldiers called "Operation Pay Yourself".[1771] Fofana stated that the "soldiers" left Paema for Sefadu for an unspecified period of time and later returned.[1772] When the soldiers[1773] returned, Fofana heard them say "Today there will not be any living thing". He heard the soldiers refer to "Operation No Living Thing".[1774] The witness stated that the soldiers killed three civilians whom he knew well, namely, Ali Bangali, Sori and Pa Janneh.[1775] Fofana testified that Ali Bangali was a farmer and that he was shot dead while making bricks for his house because he refused to give the soldier money or diamonds.[1776]

1277. para. 725: Fofana further told the court that after the death of the three civilians, he fled with his family towards the Guinea border where they took refuge for about a month and a half.[1781] He returned with his family to Paema on hearing over the BBC that ECOMOG forces had overcome the fighters and were calling all citizens of Paema to return and to take care of their property.[1782] Fofana stated that when they returned to Paema, they were ambushed by soldiers wearing military unifonns.[1783] Fofana and four other men were captured by soldiers and taken to Tombodu.[1784] Fofana's children,[1785] his Aunt Isatu Bangura, and his mother called Mammy Isatu were also captured and burnt alive by the soldiers.[1786]

1278. para. 726: In cross-examination, the Defence tendered into evidence a video tilmed at Connaught Hospital in Freetown in 1998 wherein Ibrahim Fofana was interviewed about his experience during the war.[1787] In the interview, when asked by the interviewer what happened to his wife and children, Fofana answered that he "left them in the bush when those guys went and attacked us".[1788] He did not mention his children or his aunt having been burnt alive.[1789] Explaining this apparent inconsistency in cross-examination, Fofana stated that he forgot to mention the fate of his family because "he was not in a good state of mind when he was being interviewed for the video".[1790]

1279. para. 727: Ibrahim Fofana was also featured in Exhibit P-014, an excerpt from the documentary "Blood Diamonds". In this second interview, Fofana did say that his wife and children were burnt alive, but indicated that he had learned this later.[1791]

1280. para. 728: The Trial Chamber has also taken into consideration the Amnesty International Report Exhibit P-078 which describes "Operation No Living Thing".[1792]

h. Bomboa Fuidu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killings of civilians in Bomboa Fuidu around March/April 1998 – Bomboa Fuidu – Kono District – Crimes

1281. para. 731: Prosecution witness Musa Koroma was living in Bomboafuidu, Kono District at the start of the rainy season of 1998.[1793] He testified that during the remainder of the rainy season he and other civilians from Bomboafuidu hid in the bush after being warned that rebels were approaching the village.[1794] The warning was delivered by one Gbessey Sesay who had just had one of his hands amputated by the rebels.[1795] After spending two months in hiding,[1796] Koroma and about 20 other civilians went back to Bomboafuidu to "clear the road for ECOMOG". While sleeping at night, the witness and his friend Sheku Mansaray were awakened by two armed men, one of whom wore a combat uniform and the other, native Kamajor dress. The two men described themselves as "saviours who had come to save the civilians of Bomboafuidu".[1797] The rebels, numbering about 50, gathered a number of civilians including the witness on the veranda of a house belonging to one Alhaji Tejan Cole and told the civilians that they were "going to perform a sacrifice for the civilians".[1798]

1282. para. 732: Koroma testified that he and the other civilians were forced to watch as three rebels laid a Limba woman on the floor, held her down and slit her throat until she died.[1799] Koroma testified that the Limba woman was "aged" and that he had known her for a long time because they had lived together in the same village.[1800] He further testified that before the rebels left, they ordered the civilians to strip naked and forced the men to have sexual intercourse with the women as the rebels watched. The rebels then flogged the women and amputated or mutilated approximately 20 civilians, including the witness. The rebels told the amputees to "go and tell

President Tejan Kabbah to give them new hands and feet".[1801] The rebels also told the civilians to leave the village and that "if they come back next time and meet us in the village. they will kill all of US".[1802] Koroma told the court that as he and the other amputees walked on foot for several days to Njiama Sewafe to seek medical help from ECOMOG, two of the amputees died along the way from their injuries.[1803]

1283. para. 733: The Trial Chamber also admitted in evidence the transcript of the testimony of Alhaji Tejan Cole from the AFRC trial.[1804] In his prior testimony Cole. who was a resident of Bomboafuidu in April 1998, confirmed that he was present during the events described by Musa Koroma. His prior testimony corroborates that of Koroma in all material respects. At the veranda of his father's house the rebels gathered the civilians on the night of Saturday, 12 April 1998.[1805] He testified that the rebels, numbered over 200,[1806] were armed with guns and RPGs and had boxes of ammunition carried by civilians for them.[1807] Some rebels wore full combat uniform, while others wore a mixture of combat trousers and a civilian polo".[1808] The rebels spoke in a variety of languages including Krio, Mende and "Liberian accents".[1809] They also had several child soldiers amongst their ranks.[1810]

1284. para. 734: Alhaji Tejan Cole confirmed how the rebels killed an old Limba woman calling it "a sacrifice",[1811] how the rebels forced seven civilian men to have sex with seven civilian women,[1812] and how the rebels amputated several civilians including the witness, Musa, Mohammed, Sheku, Musa Marrah, Adama, Alfa Kabia, Ibrahim, Mohamed Kanu, Abdul Kargbo, Pa Osman, Abdul Rahan, Sahr Aruna, Sahr Lebbie and Idrissa Gborie.[1813] He also confirmed that the rebels told the amputees to "go and tell President Tejan Kabbah to give them new hands",[1814] Cole testified that when the events occurred Cole stated that during the amputations, a civilian named Pa Saiyo resisted and was immediately killed by the rebels.[1815]

i. Njaima Nimikoro or Nimikoro – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killing of civilians in Nimikoro between February and June 1998 – Njaima Nimikoro or Nimikoro – Kono District – Crimes

Kallon addressed the RUF forces and gave them a message from Sam Bockarie that "they should try and make Kono District fearful to ECOMOG so that they could not base there".[1818] Morris Kallon also appointed CO Rocky as commander over the attack. Kamara explained that "making the area fearful" entailed "destruction of life and property, where there will be killings, amputations, burning of houses, destruction of bridges, setting up road blocks. All those things would happen and that will have made the area fearful".[1819] He further explained that the amputated civilians were to be sent to ECOMOG with a message to "keep their hands off the war".[1820] Kamara testified that the RUF forces that attacked Nimikoro and its surrounding areas reported that they had killed civilians, amputated others and burnt most of the town in accordance with Bockarie's orders.[1821] Kamara also testified that the RUF forces were based in Nimikoro "for some time".[1822]

1286. para. 738: In April 1998,[1823] Emmanuel Bull was abducted with other members of his family, including his father, by members of the AFRC/RUF and taken to Njaima Nimikoro where he stayed for approximately one week.[1824] In Njaima Nimikoro, the AFRC/RUF set up a kind of headquarters at the home of Emmanuel Bull's grandfather[1825] and reported to a commander called Bai Bureh.[1826] One morning, the AFRC/RUF declared that they "did not want any grandpa or old person at their headquarters and that everybody around must be active".[1827] The AFRC/RUF assembled the old men and women amongst the captured civilians, stating that they were going to take them to Bumpe.[1828] Bull learned from an AFRC/RUF member named Esther Koroma, who he had befriended, that this was a false plan and that, in reality, the AFRC/RUF forces were going to kill the older civilians including the witness's father.[1829] Esther helped Bull's father escape from the group.[1830] About five AFRC/RUF members, including Cobra and Bobby, took about six or seven of the older men, including Pa Mansaray, a friend of Bull's father, away in the direction opposite to Bumpe.[1831] After approximately three to five minutes, Bull heard two gun shots and approximately five minutes later, Bobby and Cobra returned.[1832] The older men were never seen again.[1833] Later the witness heard Cobra and Bobby bragging that they had lined the old men in two straight lines and used a single bullet to shoot through each line.[1834]

j. Mortema – Kono District – Crimes

i. Killing of civilians in Mortema (or Motema) between February and June 1998 – Mortema – Kono District – Crimes

1287. para. 741: The Trial Chamber has considered the following evidence relating to killings in Mortema. Prosecution Witness TF1-375 estimates that it was about three months after the

ECOMOG Intervention in Freetown that the AFRC/RUF forces attacked Mortema.[1835] The witness told the court that the attack on Mortema was led by a commander called "Short Bai Bureh" and that before the attack he was given orders by senior officers in Kono at that time, including Superman, Gullit, rsaac Mongor and others[l836] to "go and make the area fearful".[l837] The witness explained that to the RUF, making an area "fearful" meant "to kill civilians, burn houses and to instil fear into ECOMOG, or any other opposing troop that would want to get into that area easily".[1838] The witness testified that when the AFRC/RUF attacked Mortema, there were only civilians there and no opposing force.[1839]

1288. para. 742: Although he himself did not participate in the Mortema attack, TF1-375 testified that after the AFRC/RUF forces returned from Mortema, Short Bai Bureh directly called Supennan over the RUF radio and gave him a report of the destruction that they had carried out on Mortema. The witness was present in the radio room with Supennan and heard the report.[1840] The witness further told the court that when the RUF forces returned from Mortema, some of his friends amongst them told the witness what had happened there and even brought some girls with them as their "wives".[1841] rn his testimony, TF1-375 did not specifically attest to civilian killings in Mortema.

1289. para. 743: Another Prosecution witness, Samuel Bull, was in Mortema on 21 April 1998 when the AFRC/RUF or "People's Army" attacked.[1842] The witness and his family hid in Fakoyia bush for almost two months.[1843] On 5 May 1998 the witness and his family returned to Mortema after hearing on the BBC Radio that ECOMOG had taken control of the area including Njaiama Nimikoro, Sewafe and Mortema. The witness found a lot of houses burnt in Mortema except one big building on the main Masingbi Highway where the witness and his family settled along with approximately 50 civilians.[1844] On the night of 12 June 1998, "rebels" attacked Mortema again.[1845] Samuel Bull observed fighting between ECOMOG troops and the rebels from the window of the house, and saw that the ECOMOG forces had begun to retreat.[1846] An RUF fighter entered the house where Bull was and shot dead an old woman called Ma Gbojo.[1847] The witness escaped through the window and hid in a banana plantation approximately 45 feet from the house.[1848] From the banana plantation, Samuel Bull saw the rebels gather all the other civilians who had remained in the house, line them outside and shoot them.[1849] The witness testified that in the morning he saw the bodies of 21 civilians killed in his neighbourhood including 17 who were killed at his house.[1850] Amongst the dead were six of his family members.[1851] The witness participated in burying the 21 civilians in a mass grave after ECOMOG arrived and drove away the rebels.[1852] The witness later learned that the rebel commander who led the attack in which the 21 civilians were killed was called Lt. Col. Fixo Bio.[1853]

1290. para. 744: The testimony of Samuel Bull is corroborated by that of Tamba Mondeh, one of many civilians who took refuge at Samuel Bull's house. Tamba Mondeh initially fled his home village of Mortema and hid in the bush with his family[1854] on hearing reports from various villages in Kono District that "rebels were killing and mutilating people".[1855] While in hiding he heard that "ECOMOG had gone to Freetown and they've come again to Nimikoro up to Motema and from Motema they went to Yengema and from there they also captured Koidu and were in Njaiama Nimikoro".[1856] Encouraged by these reports, the witness and his family returned to Mortema.[1857] On arrival, the witness stayed in a storeyed building that was incomplete and that belonged to one Samuel Bull.[1858] He explained that many other civilians including Samuel Bull (the owner's son) were staying in that house.[1859]

1291. para. 745: One night while everyone was asleep, rebels wearing uniforms and carrying guns surrounded the storeyed house and told the occupants to gather outside, saying "You people do not want us. You said that you want ECOMOG. You will know what will happen to you. When our boss passes the command, we will kill all of you".[1860] The witness told the court that when he went outside he met the rebel "boss" face to face and recognised him to be Fixo Bio, a person he knew before.[1861] One rebel entered the house and fired several shots in order to force out the civilians. The shots killed a man called Aiah with his daughter and injured the witness's chin.[1862] The rebels asked the civilians to queue in front of the house and shot at them, killing several and wounding others. The witness hid in a nearby bush until ECOMOG rescued him. Mondeh later learnt from Samuel Bull that the rebels killed 25 people during this incident and that the dead were buried in mass graves.[1863]

k. Alleged unlawful killings in Other Locations in Kono District not pleaded in the Indictment

1292. para. 748: The Trial Chamber received credible evidence of the murder of civilians in a number of locations within Kono District not specifically pleaded in the Indictment including, Baima,[1864] Goldtown,[1865] Yekeyor,[1366] Kondeya,[1867] Mambona,[1868] and others.[1869] As previously held, this evidence is only taken into account in relation to the chapeau requirements of the alleged crimes and not for proofofguilt.[1870]

(iv) Kailahun District – Crimes

1293. para. 751: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Prosecution witnesses Vannuyan Sherif, Mohamed Kabbah, Augustine Mallah and TF1-168; Defence witnesses Fayia Musa, Issa Sesay, DCT-292 and DCT-068 as well as Exhibits P-277 and P-601B.

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Massacre of around 60-65 civilians in Kailahun Town in February 1998 – Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Crimes

1294. para. 752: Augustine Mallah a member of the RUF I874 testified that in February 1998, after ECOMOG had dislodged the AFRC/RUF Juntas from Freetown, Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) the RUF leader, assembled most of the RUF commanders in Daru and told them, "This is Kailahun District, we are not going to let it be occupied by anybody else, be you ECOMOG or Kamajors. You might resort to killing all of us, but we will not leave Kailahun for anybody. We had been in Kailahun here when the soldiers plotted a coup against Kabbah. They invited us, we went and joined them. Being that we have now returned to Kailahun, we should defend the place".[1875] Mallah stated that after this speech he travelled from Daru to Kailahun Town with Mosquito and over 100 ARFC and RUF soldiers whom Bockarie had instructed to "go and defend Kailahun District".[1876]

1295. para. 753: On their arrival in Kailahun Town, Mosquito went to Augustine Gbao[1877] to check on the fate of 65 civilians who Mosquito had arrested and sent to Gbao for "investigation" because he suspected them of betraying the RUF by surrendering to the Government.[1878] On arrival in Kailahun Town, Mosquito asked Gbao how the investigations went. Mallah heard Gbao report to Mosquito that "Those people are all in the cell. They were about 65 in number. With all the investigations we have conducted we have realised that these people are Kamajors. They are not fit to live amongst us here as long as we are not satisfied with them and with the present circumstances".[1879] On hearing Gbao's report, Mosquito ordered Joe Fatoma[1880] to bring out the 65 civilians. Mosquito personally shot three of the civilians, remarking that "We need to kill these people". Mallah told the court that up to 100 AFRC and RUF including Mallah himself, participated in the summary execution of those civilians and that he counted 45 bodies.[1881] Mallah also told the court that after the killing had started, he saw "a Liberian commander" talking to Mosquito. Mallah explained that he met this commander and his three bodyguards in Kailahun

and that the commander did not participate in the killing of the Kamajors.[1882] The Liberian commander left for Buedu in a convoy with Sam Bockarie.[1883]

1296. para. 754: Augustine Mallah further told the court that after the massacre of the 65 civilians, he travelled with Sam Bockarie from Buedu to Daru, and they passed through Kailahun Town again because "Mosquito wanted to ensure whether the order that he had given was complied with"[1884] Describing the atmosphere as they drove through Kailahun Town. Mallah told the court that it was obvious that people had been killed in the town because there were several human heads and skulls displayed on sticks on both sides of the road to Pendembu.[1885] Mallah told the court that on this occasion, Augustine Gbao and Joe Fatoma told Bockarie that they had accomplished the mission by killing all the civilians as Bockarie had ordered.[1886]

1297. para. 755: Witness Varmuyan Sherif testified that he arrived in Kailahun Town in February 1998 bearing a message for Mosquito "'then leader of the RUF",[1887] from President Charles Taylor.[1888] On arrival in Kailahun Town, Sherif spoke to Bockarie's bodyguards who pointed out Sam Bockarie and asked Sherif to wait until Bockarie had finished "talking to some Kamajors".[1889] Sherif testified that he saw Sam Bockarie taking people out of a building and heard him saying "these people are Kamajors and we are going to finish them". Sherif testiied that he saw Bockarie personally shoot five of the men with a gun.[1890] Sherif further told the court that after executing the five people, Sam Bockarie said "I am moving now. Before I come back, the remaining people, I want all of them dead",[1891] whereupon Bockarie drove away to Buedu in a convoy of three cars. Sherif followed the convoy to Kai lahun and did not see what happened to the remaining people.[1892]

1299. para. 757: Witness Mohamed Kabbah[1898] was the RUF regional commander in charge of communications in Kailahun from the AFRC coup in May 1997 to the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998.[1899] Part of his duties entailed receiving and dispatching radio messages between the front lines and other assignment areas and Sam Bockarie, the overall commander.[1900] Kabbah testitied that he was present in Kailahun Town on the day of the killings.[1901] He testified that ECOMOG had pushed RUF fighters out of Daru and that they had regrouped in Kailahun Town.[1902] Sam Bockarie arrived in Kailahun Town with his bodyguards including a tall Liberian called Senegalese.[1903] On the evening of their arrival, an ECOMOG jet flew over Kailahun Town and caused damage.[1904] Kabbah testified that at this time, 60 male "civilians who were Kamajors but who were not carrying arms" were held in custody by the RUF at the MP prison in Kailahun Town.[1905]

1300. para. 758: Kabbah testified that after the jet passed, Sam Bockarie ordered five of the Kamajor prisoners to be brought to the roundabout so that "he may set an example of them".[1906] A visibly distressed Kabbah told the court that when the prisoners were brought to the roundabout in the centre of Kailahun Town, Bockarie shot two of the prisoners in the forehead and ordered Issa to execute the remaining three, and that Issa shot the remaining three prisoners with his pistol.[1907] Kabbah was approximately 7 to 8 metres away when he saw the prisoners killed.[1908] Kabbah stated that after the first five prisoners were killed, Issa, his bodyguards and Bockarie's bodyguards went behind the police station and executed the remaining 55 prisoners.[1909] Kabbah did not see these persons killed, but heard about it from "some boys."[1910]

1301. para. 759: Explaining how the 60 civilians had come to be detained by the RUF, Kabbah told the court that before the Intervention, Kamajors used to attack some of the RUF positions and this created panic within the RUF controlled areas. During that period, the RUF interrogated a civilian from Jojoima whom they said was sent to spy on RUF positions. Based on that information. Bockarie had sent a radio message to all military police within the Kailahun District to escort all those civilians that entered the RUF-controlled territory to Kailahun Town and to assemble them in Kailahun Town "so that they could be screened in order for the RUF to know who was a Kamajor or who was a genuine civilian".[1911] This is how these 60 civilians came to be detained and later executed by the RUF in Kailahun Town. Kabbah told the court however, that the Kamajor suspects fell into two categories, namely, those who confessed to having been Kamajors in the past but had disarmed; and those that bore Kamajor markings on their bodies. Kabbah stated however. that none of the 60 suspects were armed or actively fighting when they were arrested.[1912]

1302. para. 760: Prosecution Witness TF1-168, a prominent member of the RUF gave a vivid account of the Kailahun massacre. TF1-168 testified that he and six other colleagues were held in detention by senior RUF commanders[l913] for 30 months[1914] on suspicion of "betraying Foday Sankoh to the Nigerians", and that while in detention they were tortured and moved around several prisons within Kailahun District.[1915] TF1-168 testified that he and his fellow-detainees were moved to a detention facility in the centre of Kailahun Town around the end of December 1997, and that on 19 February 1998 they were transferred to the town police station in Kailahun Town.[1916] At the police station the detainees were guarded by RUF MP John Duawo and his deputy Joe Fatoma. Augustine Gbao was the overall commander in charge of Kailahun Town.[1917] TF 1-168 told the court that there were 65 other civilian detainees in detention at the police station who told him that they were citizens of Luawa Chiefdom in Kailahun District who were being held by the RUF leadership.[1918] The detainees had fled Kailahun District before the 25 May 1997 coup d'etat but after the coup had been persuaded by Sam Bockarie to return to their homes. Upon their return to Kailahun District, these civilians had been arrested and detained by the RUF on suspicion of being Kamajors.[1919]

1303. para. 761: TF 1-168 told the court that on the afternoon of 19 February 1998 John Duawo told all the detainees to go back inside their cells because Sam Bockarie had arrived and did not want to see anyone outside their cells. The witness returned to his cell from where he observed through a window what was going on outside. The witness told the court that he saw Duawo remove 10 of the Kamajor prisoners from their cells and take them outside towards the roundabout.[1920] TF 1-168 testified that the prisoners were brought outside towards the roundabout and that not too long after, he heard gunfire.[1921] The witness stated that from his vantage point, he could see them fa11.[1922] TF 1-168 later learned from the military police that it was General Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) who had fired the first shot.[1923]

1304. para. 762: TF1-168 said that MP guards took the remaining Kamajor suspects from their cells in groups of four and five and took them towards the valley where they shot them to death.[1924] TF1-168 stated that as he was awaiting his own fate in his cell, he heard the guards saying "bring out the remaining five prisoners", and thought that they were referring to him. TF1-168 learnt from the MPs the following day that 64 of the prisoners, all males, were killed during this incident and that one person was saved.[1925]

1305. para. 763: TF1-168 stated that he had the opportunity to speak with some of the Kamajor suspects before they were killed and that they explained that although some of them belonged to the Kamajor society and bore Kamajor markings on their bodies, they never participated in the fighting against the AFRC/RUF.[1926] Others explained to the witness that they were civilians that had simply volunteered to carry loads for the Kamajor fighters but they did not participate in the fighting.[1927] TF1-168 told the court that he and his colleagues were transferred to Kangama on 21 February 1998 because the Kailahun Police station was filled with the stench of the decomposing bodies.[1928]

1306. para. 764: The Trial Chamber has also examined confidential Prosecution Exhibit P-277, which in the Trial Chamber's view, corroborates the testimony of TF1-168.

1307. para. 765: Issa Sesay, a fonner RUF commander and Defence witness in this case, testified that he was in Gandorhun when he heard from one Major Gua that 60 suspected Kamajors had been arrested and executed in Kailahun Town on the orders of Sam Bockarie.[1929] Sesay stated that upon travelling to Kailahun Town shortly thereafter, he saw 10 corpses which had been moved from the roundabout to the roadside, but did not see corpses behind the MP office because he did not go there.[1930] Sesay estimated that from the way the bodies were starting to decompose, he must have arrived about five to six days after the killings had taken place.[1931] In cross-examination, Sesay ruled out the possibility of his own involvement in the Kailahun massacre, stating that "these people were killed before he arrived in Kailahun".[1932] He also told the court that Sam Bockarie gave orders that the corpses of the people who were killed should not be buried and that is why there was such a stench in the air.[1933]

1308. para. 766: Witness Fayia Musa another prominent member of the RUF, confirmed to the court that he and six other colleagues were held in detention by senior RUF commanders[1934] for 30 months[1935] on suspicion of '"betraying Foday Sankoh to President Kabbah and the Nigerians" and that while in detention they were tortured and moved around several prisons within Kailahun District.[1936] Fayia told the court that he and his fellow prisoners were transferred from Kangama to Kailahun Town "after the ECOMOG intervention" and remained in detention there until 29 March 1998. Fayia testified that in the same Kailahun Police station, the RUF had detained 69 civilians from Daru and some SLA soldiers who were arrested and brought to the prison in Kailahun Town.[1937] On 28 March 1998 Sam Bockarie came to Kailahun to check on the prisoners.[1938] The witness who was in another cell, stated that an SLA soldier called Kaioko and nine of the 69 prisoners were taken out of the cell on the order of Sam Bockarie and around five to ten minutes later he heard gunshots.[1939] Bockarie also ordered that the remaining prisoners be brought out in groups of five, with younger people being killed first.[1940] Fayia and his colleagues were terrified as they thought they too were going to die, but they were spared. Fayia told the court that he was told 68 of the other prisoners were shot or hacked to death, that their bodies were "scattered all over the place", and that only one escaped.[1941] On 29 March 1998, the witness and his colleagues were transferred to Buedu where they remained until their release in August 1999.[1942]

1309. para. 767: The Trial Chamber also considered the evidence of Protected Defence Witnesses DCT-068, DCT-292 and DCT-102, all of whom gave hearsay accounts of the Kailahun Town massacre.[1943] These hearsay accounts accord with the direct evidence of the witnesses cited above and confirm the fact that the AFRC/RUF forces acting under the orders of Sam Bockarie massacred over 60 un-armed civilians in Kailahun Town.

(v) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1310. para. 772: The Trial Chamber received the following credible documentary evidence[1947] regarding the situation in Freetown and the Western Area during the period December 1998 to February 1999. One report records:

> [I]n the early hours of January 6. 1999. rebels of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) launched an offensive against the Sierra Leonean capital. Freetown. capturing it from government troops and the soldiers of the Nigerian-led peace keeping force known as ECOMOG .... The battle for Freetown and the ensuing three week rebel occupation of the capital was characterised by the systematic and widespread perpetration of all classes of atrocities against the civilian population of over one million inhabitants. and marked the most intensive and concentrated period of human rights violations in Sierra Leone's eightyear civil war. As the rebels took control of street after street. they turned their weapons on the civilian population. By the end of January. both government and independent sources estimated that several thousands of civilians had been killed ....
> In December 1998. following the capture of Kono District and Makeni, thousands of RUF fighters started moving towards Freetown and that by early January 1999 they had reached the peninsular on which Freetown is located and gathered less than 20 miles west of the capital. On 6 January 1999 the rebels broke through the highly stretched and poorly manned ECOMOG defences, and proceeded to march through the eastern suburbs and straight into the city centre .... While the rebels were only able to occupy the city center for less than one week. it took ECOMOG forces over three weeks to flush them from the three densely populated eastern suburbs of Kissy. Wellington and Calaba Town. It was in these three suburbs, particularly towards the end of the occupation that the vast majority of atrocities occurred.
> The rebels made little distinction between civilian and military targets. They repeatedly stated that they believed civilians should be punished for what they perceived to be their support for the existing government.. .. The largest number of killings took place within the context of attacks on civilians gathered in houses. compounds and places of refuge such as churches or mosques .... Human Rights Watch took testimonies from scores of witnesses to such atrocities including a January 6 attack on a family in which all but one of their seven children were killed: a January 19 attack on the church of the Brotherhood of the Cross and Star in Wellington. in which twelve people were gunned down: a January 21 attack on a compound in Kissy in which seventeen people were murdered and later burned; and a January 22 attack on the Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy. in which sixty-six people were massacred .... There were also frequent accounts of people being burned alive in their houses. often having been wounded. Children and the elderely were particularly vulnerable. Witnesses described rebels throwing civilians, sometimes children. into burning houses and shooting at those trying to escape. Family members trying to rescue their children or other relatives from a burning house were threatened with death and forced to abandon them to the lire .... While most victims were seemingly chosen at random. the rebels directly targeted a few groups, namely Nigerian nationals. unarmed Policemen and journalists. At least sixty-three Nigerians, most of whom were traders or businessmen, were hunted down and murdered in particularly brutal ways. The rebels also killed at least 85 unarmed Police officers, and several local and one international journalist.... The Catholic archbishop. Four Xavierian fathers, and six Sisters of Charity were abducted and held for over ten days. The rebels later killed four of the sisters and wounded one Xavierian father.[1948]

1311. para. 773: Another report records:

> [R]ebel fighters belonging to the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and Revolutionary United Front (RUF) attacked Freetown on 6 January 1999. The rebels attacked the city from the east and penetrated as far as the centre. which they held tor four days before being torced to withdraw by a counterattack. The fighting resulted in the deaths of between 3000 and 5000 persons, including rebel fighters, soldiers of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG). members of the Civil Defence Force (CDF) militia who were defending the capital and large numbers of civilian inhabitants ....
> In late January and early February. UNOMSIL human rights officers visited Freetown to conduct an assessment of the situation there. The assessment team travelled extensively within the city and interviewed numerous people, including victims of mutilations and other human rights violations .... The team found that the ultimate responsibility tor the fighting, for most of the civilian casualties and for the related humanitarian emergency in Freetown rested with the rebel forces. Though it was impossible to state with precision the actual number of civilian casualties, most estimates put the total casualty figure at between 3000 and 5000, including rebel fighters. ECOMOG and CDF combatants. It is feared that at least 2000 of those casualties were civilian inhabitants of Freetown. Many civilians were killed while being used by rebels as human shields in combat, or because they reportedly refused to come out on the streets to demonstrate in favour of the rebels. Many were killed while trying to protect family members from death or rape, or while trying to protect their property from looting and destruction.
> Much of the killing seems to have been arbitrary and to have been carried out by child fighters or rebel fighters under the influence of drugs or alcohol. However, there is also evidence that some of the murders were targeted, including, reportedly, the murder of 200 Police personnel. The Solicitor general was killed during the fighting, as were the resident Minister for the North, an adviser to President Kabbah and at least two journalists. Other victims who appear to have been deliberately targeted include senior officials of the Sierra Leone National > Commission tor Democracy and Human Rights. the Council of Churches and the National Commission tor Rehabilitation. Reconstruction and Reintegration, as well as Nigerian Nationals.[1949]

1312. para. 774: An Expert Report that was admitted into evidence as Confidential Prosecution Exhibit P-077 stated the following concerning the killing of civilians in Freetown and the Western area during the period January-February 1999:

> [R]ebel forces advancing into and through the city on 6 and 7 January. frequently forced civilians into the streets for use as human shields. People who refused to comply were killing of persons who refused to obey instructions to dance and make music on the streets. A number of interviewees describe the execution of the entire populations of residential compounds for such misdemeanours. There are reports of compounds housing up to 50 people being targeted in this manner. Similar reports indicate that then and later. People were executed because of their efforts to deter looting and to protect family members from assault or rape. Persons caught attempting to escape from rebel custody. were frequently killed. One witness saw 6 children killed at Wellington in mid-January in one such incident.
> Much of the killing also appears to have been entirely arbitrary. Witnesses report such killings of men. women and children by rebel fighters. including an instance in which the perpetrator is stated to have been about 10 years old, and another implicating an eight-year old boy. It is frequently stated that the perpetrators of such acts were under the influence of cocaine and other drugs, including alcohol. Killing occasionally occurred in the context of games in which people were lined up and the executioners teasingly chose who to kill and who to spare. In one such incident at Fourah Bay Road, around 21 January, three children were executed and their three sisters had limbs amputated or mutilated. One man has described how he was ordered to choose between the execution of his entire family and the surrender of his daughter to a rebel fighter.
> Some of those who were burned to death in their homes had been locked in or first been disabled by gunshots. A number of elderly people and intimts also died in this manner. Others died while attempting to escape. One five-year-old girl survived being thrown into a fire, at Blackhall Road, on 28 January. A six-year-old girl was executed together with her mother on 23 January at Wellington.
> Rebel forces targeted many individuals and categories of persons for execution. It is reported that over 200 Police officers were killed. either at home or at their barracks in such locations as cm Headquarters. Kingtom and Kissy. The means of execution included knives. machete and gunshot. One incident on January 6 at the city center Cotton Tree. involved the killing by stabbing of II Policemen. A number of prison officials appear to have been killed during and after the assault on Pademba Road Prison on 6 January. An escapee from Pademba Road Prison is reported to have allegedly led an attack on the Solicitor General who was killed and decapitated. Two senior Government officials, the Resident Minister for the North and an Advisor to the President, were captured and killed. At least 2 journalists were sought out and killed (while other journalists, including foreign nationals, though not specifically targeted, were killed, injured or abducted.)

> A senior member of the human rights monitoring committee of the National Commission for Democracy and Human Rights (NCDHR) was killed together with her husband ... Executed senior officers of the Council of Churches and the NCRRR may have been targeted on the basis of their positions .... Nigerian nationals also appear to have been targeted. One witness. on 8 January, observed 2 Nigerian traders whose throats were cut apparently on the basis of their nationality...".[1950]

1314. para. 776: Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a combatant who took part in the Freetown invasion of January 1999, testified that a group of about 1000 troops made up of members of the AFRC, RUF,[1951] 30 Special Task Force (STF) members[1952] and 20 other "Liberian fighters",[1953] captured Benguema from ECOMOG around Christmas of 1998 and while based there. reorganised themselves into seven "battalions"[1954] in preparation for a final assault on Freetown.[1955] Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) was the overall commander of the brigade after SAJ Musa died at Benguema. Other AFRC commanders included Ibrahim Bazzy Kamaral[1956] (a.k.a. Bazzy), Santigie Borbor Kanul[1957] (a.k.a. Five-Five), Franklin Conteh Woyoh,[1958] Hassan Papa Bangura[1959] (a.k.a. Bomb Blast), Col. "O-Five",[1960] Lt. Col. "Papa- 17",[1961] FAT Sesay,[1962] Junior Sherrif,[1963] Major Tito,[1964] Foday Bah Marah[1965] (a.k.a. Bulldoze), Major Arthur,[1966] Junior George Johnson[1967] (a.k.a. Junior Lion), Lt. Col. Saidu Kambolai (a.k.a. Basky),[1968] Col. Lamin Sidique (a.k.a. Terminator or NPFL),[1969] Med Bajehjeh,[1970] Col. Foyoh,[1971] Lt. Col. Konjor,[1972] "Roadblock",[1973] Adamu (a.k.a. Chicken Soup), Adama "Cut Hand",[1974] Tarrawali (a.k.a. Gold Teeth),[1975] Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat),[1976] and Amidu Kamara Keforkeh. Bobson Sesay explained that he was in the 5th Battalion and served as Intelligence Officer.[1977] Amongst the RUF that came to reinforce the Freetown invasion were Captain Stagger, Washington, King Perry, Alfred Brown, and Dukulay.[1978] The evidence relating to the composition of these forces is corroborated by that of Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator that travelled with the group to Freetown.[1979]

1315. para. 777: Bobson Sesay further testified that prior to the invasion of Freetown, while at Benguema, Gullit communicated on radio with Sam Bockarie informing him that the troops were ready to advance on Freetown but that they needed manpower reinforcement from Bockarie.[1980] Bockarie responded saying that reinforcement was on its way from Kono, Kailahun and Daru but that the reinforcing troops under Issa Sesay and Superman needed to weaken the ECOMOG forces in Kono and Segbwema before they could arrive to reinforce the invading troops. Bobson Sesay further told the court that the invasion of Freetown was planned jointly between the AFRC and RUF, with three flanks planning to attack jointly. One flank led by Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, RUF Rambo, Akim Turay and Isaac Mongor would come from Kailahun and attack from the eastern part around Kono area, and after capturing Kono and Makeni from ECOMOG they would proceed to reinforce the forces invading Freetown.[1981] The second flank led by Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five would attack from the north. The third flank led by Denis Mingo a.k.a. Superman and Brigadier Mani would attack from the Kailahun-Daru axis and assist in capturing Makeni from ECOMOG, after which they too would proceed to reinforce the forces invading Freetown.[1982] Bobson Sesay learnt of this plan by monitoring conversations between the AFRC and RUF High Command in the areas that the SLA and RUF occupied.[1983]

1316. para. 778: Bobson Sesay further told the court that as the rebel troops were waiting on the outskirts of Freetown[1984] for reinforcement, they came under heavy bombardment by the ECOMOG jets and this caused Gullit to order the rebel troops to start the Freetown invasion without waiting for reinforcement.[1985] In the witness's presence, Gullit instructed the invading rebel troops to "ensure that they burn down all Police Stations; open the central prisons and free the prisoners including Foday Sankoh; kill all collaborators of the Government and ECOMOG and opponents of the AFRC/RUF forces; loot any valuables from the civilian population and kill any civilians that resist the looting; and capture a good number of civilians to use as human shields if the troops encountered any resistance".[1986] Sesay further testified that the over 1000 rebel troops who entered Freetown were "wellarmed with support propelled grenades (SPGs), 60 millimetre commando mortars; 81 millimetre motars; rocket propelled grenades (RPGs); light automatic rifles (LARs); submachine guns (SMGs); AK-47 and machetes".[1987]

1317. para. 779: Bobson Sesay further testified that on 6 January 1999, the whole Brigade comprised of AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters moved from Allen Town and commenced their attack on Freetown.[1988] The invading rebel troops spent three and a half weeks in Freetown before they were repelled by ECOMOG forces.[1989]

1318. para. 780: The Trial Chamber heard the following evidence of civilian killings in Freetown and the Western Area.

a. Killing of civilians and ECOMOG soldiers around State House in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1319. para. 781: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that the rebel forces led by Gullit captured "Statehouse" or the Office of the President at 6.00 a.m. on 6 January 1999.[1990] Sesay told the court that on that morning Major Tito captured 20 Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers and brought them to Gullit for instruction as to what to do with them.[1991] Gullit ordered Tito to have them summarily executed. The witness was present when Tito took the soldiers who were hors de combat to the washing bay behind State House and shot them all to death.[1992] Bobson Sesay explained that the invading rebel troops had a policy that required the civilians to show respect for the rebels and that any civilian perceived to "overlook" (i.e. disrespect) the rebels would be summarily shot".[1993] Bobson Sesay testified that he saw "so many corpses of civilians littered around the State House axis" and counted over 20 dead bodies of civilians on 6 January 1999, all of whom had been shot dead by the invading rebel troops for simply "overlooking the rebels".[1994]

1320. para. 782: Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator[1995] with the rebel troops that invaded Freetown, testified that when the troops entered Freetown they would either kill ECOMOG soldiers on the front line or capture them and present them to Gullit who was the commander in charge at State House.[1996] Kamara testified that Gullit consulted Sam Bockarie by radio as to what to do with these prisoners of war and that Bockarie responded that "he had no prison for ECOMOG".[1997] Kamara testified that as a result of that response, the rebel forces never spared any ECOMOG soldiers and that a total of 10-15 captured ECOMOG soldiers were shot and killed under the Cotton Tree,[1998] which was 100 metres from State House.[1999] In his evidence, Kamara also refers to "massive killings around Cotton Tree" next to State House on 6 January 1999.

1321. para. 783: The Trial Chamber admitted into evidence the prior testimony of Abu Bakarr Mansaray.[2000] Mansaray, a mechanical engineer testified that while living on Waterloo Street in Freetown,[2001] he was abducted by three "rebel boys" dressed in ECOMOG uniforms on 8 January 1999[2002] and forcibly taken to State House where Gullit was in command.[2003] Mansaray explained that by the term "rebel" he meant a mixed group of RUF rebels and AFRC soldiers. The three rebels were anned with AK-47 rifles and spoke Krio with "a Liberian accent".[2004]

1322. para. 784: At State House, on the orders of Gullit, the rebels tried in vain to force Mansaray and 50 other civilian captives to join them in fighting against ECOMOG.[2005] Mansaray and the 50 civilians refused to join the rebels as requested and were locked up in the kitchen of State House for four days. From the kitchen window Mansaray observed the rebels at State House gunning down about 35 civilians for refusing to join the rebels. He testified that the rebels shot and killed three women and two men in his presence, and thereafter shot and killed 30 of the 50 civilians that were with Mansaray.[2006] The rebels threw the bodies of the civilians over the State House wall and also into the Paramount Hotel's compound.[2007]

b. Unlawful killing of civilians in Kissy area around January 1999 – Freetown and the Western area – Crimes

1323. para. 789: Mohamed Sesay, a petty trader living on Falcon Street in the Kissy Shell Company area testified that on 6 January 1999 he heard a lot of shooting in the night and in the morning and when he woke up he saw rebels everywhere.[2008] He and his family stayed indoors for five or six days after the rebels had taken over Freetown[2009] and then went with other civilians to buy food at the Marbela market in the eastern part of Freetown.[2010] On the way back they came to a checkpoint manned by the "rebels and SLAs" at PWD, which is near Ferry Junction.[2011] There were many people gathered at the checkpoint, including the former President Momoh who was being carried in a hammock.[2012] The rebels ordered the civilians to sit down and then took two men from the civilians saying they were going to offer them as "a sacrifice".[2013] In the witness's presence, the rebels shot and killed one of the men and stabbed the other one to death after which they collected the latter man's blood into a bowl.[2014] Sesay and the other civilians at the checkpoint were then allowed to pass through and he returned home.[2015]

1324. para. 790: Mohamed Sesay further testified that two or three days later he was sitting under a mango tree behind his house on Falcon Street with other civilians when five armed "rebels and SLAs" joined them including an RUF rebel called Issa Conteh that the witness previously knew.[2016] As they sat under the tree, two other "rebels" approached the witness.[2017] One of the rebels was a woman dressed in trousers, a T-shirt and boots but did not carry a gun. She also spoke "Liberian language". The other rebel was a man who wore "full unifonn" but no boots.[2018] The woman fighter told the fighters sitting under the tree that "because they refused to fight, Pa Kabbah had sent ECOMOG to fight against them, so now she was ordering them to begin Operation No Living Thing".[2019] Sesay testified that he saw Issa Conteh shoot and kill an old woman that was passing by.[2020] Sesay also saw an old man who was passing fall down and die, but he did not see the person who shot him.[2021]

1325. para. 791: Mohamed Sesay further testified that two days later "rebels" carrying fuel in a container came and set fire to his home. The witness was in the house when it caught fire but escaped to hide first in the house of one Pa Bobodin, and later sought refuge in the house of one Mr Abass.[2022] There were more than 50 civilians, including old men and women, who had also sought refuge at Mr Abass' house, which house had also been burnt.[2023] Sesay testified that on 19 January 1999[2024] he was on the veranda at Mr Abass' house when he saw seven "rebels" arrive, including a "commando" who was giving the other rebels orders.[2025] The witness testified that the commando carried a pistol, one rebel carried a machete, another rebel carried an axe and four others carried guns.[2026] The commando ordered the fighters to select the young men out of the house. The rebels selected 24 young men from the house, including the witness, and took them to the junction where they asked them to queue up in preparation for having their arms amputated on a log which had been placed in front of them.[2027] The commando ordered the first man in the line to put his arm down to be amputated, and when he pleaded with him not to, the commando shot the man in the face. killing him.[2028] When the second man in line pleaded with the commando not to amputate him, the commando shot him in the chest, killing him as well.[2029] When the third man pleaded with the commando not to amputate him, the commando used rapid fire to shoot and and kill six of the men in the queue.[2030]

1326. para. 792: Mohamed Sesay further testified that after the commando had shot the first eight men, he ordered the fighters to split open the heads of the remaining young men in the queue with axes and machetes instead, saying "he was not going to waste his bullets anymore".[2031] Sesay told the court that after the rebels had smoked marijuana, they used an axe and machete to split open the heads of five of the men and killed them.[2032] Although the witness wanted to look away because he was frightened, the rebels forced him and the other civilians to watch the gruesome executions[2033] Mohamed Sesay further testified that after the rebels killed the civilians, they proceeded to amputate both his hands, and that the rebel that actually did this was barely 13 years o1d.[2034]

1327. para. 793: The Trial Chamber admitted in evidence the transcript of testimony Prosecution Witness TFI-098 from the AFRC trial.[2035] TFI-098 testified that on 18 January 1999, "rebels", whom the witness identified as members of the SLA,[2036] came to the house on Manfred Lane near Kissy road where he was hiding with his younger brother, cousins and other civilians and led them by gunpoint to a primary school on Fataraman Street.[2037] While there a Krio-speaking rebel named Tommy, who was from the Freetown area and who wore a combat uniform, amputated the witness's left hand and the hands of 6 other civilians with an axe and told them ·'to go and tell Pa Kabbah that they were in control, and not ECOMOG".[2038] One of the seven amputees who was related to the witness, died from the amputation.[2039] In cross-examination, TF 1-098 explained that Tommy belonged to the same group as "Captain Blood".[2040]

1328. para. 794: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in the third week of January 1999,[2041] as the rebel troops were retreating from the ECOMOG forces in Freetown, they hid in the hills overlooking the east of Freetown from where they observed "civilians singing and dancing as they welcomed the ECOMOG forces".[2042] The witness heard Gullit remarking, "Now the people in Freetown have changed their song, the song which they were singing: that they were our brothers, we want peace. Now the people are singing it otherwise: That our brothers have come, they have come to steal. So now we should move to Ferry Junction. So wherever we meet people singing that song... those people were betraying us, we should kill them".[2043] After this remark, Gullit reorganised the rebel troops and sent them to Ferry Junction, Low Cost area and Kissy, instructing them to "burn all the remaining houses and kill all the civilians".[2044]

1329. para. 795: Bobson Sesay testified that upon receiving Gullit's orders, his group which included Rambo Red Goat and Bajehjeh went to Kissy Market where they saw civilians singing "They are our brothers". Immediately the rebels, including the witness, went and shot all the civilians. They even shot civilians who were in their homes.[2045] The witness said that while he used his gun to shoot the civilians, some of his colleagues used machetes to kill the civilians while others burnt civilians alive in their homes.[2046] The witness could not estimate the actual number of casualties but stated that they were many. The witness further testified that the rebel group that attacked Low Cost area came back afterwards and reported that they too had carried out burnings and amputated and killed civilians there. The witness explained that this second group was led by commander "Changa Bulanga".[2047]

1330. para. 796: Bobson Sesay further testified that the day after the operations in Kissy Market and Low-Cost areas, Gullit informed the fighters that he had heard that civilians were hiding ECOMOG forces in the mosque on Old Shell Road by having them take off their uniforms and pose as civilians.[2048] Gullit then ordered "Five-Five" to lead a group of fighters to the mosque and to kill everyone there.[2049] The witness was in this group of fighters which was made up of over 100 AFRC, RUF, STF, and Liberian fighters, including "Rambo Red Goat" and Med "Bajehjeh".[2050] Bobson Sesay testified that upon reaching the mosque, they saw that the mosque was full of people, they did not search and they just started shooting randomly into the crowd. The rebels killed everyone who was not able to escape, including people he believed to be ECOMOG officers, men, children, nursing mothers, and old women.[2051] Bobson Sesay estimated that his group killed more than 20 people in this attack.[2052] Bobson Sesay further testified that after the Lome Peace Accord his uncle informed him that two of his female cousins were among the victims of the attack.[2053] Bobson Sesay testified that as they withdrew from the mosque they met

Commander Gullit at Crazy Yard, and "Five-Five" reported to Gullit that they had destabilized the mosque and killed the people.[2054]

1331. para. 797: Bobson Sesay further testified that after the killings at Rogbalan Mosque, Gullit ordered Foday Bah Marrah (a.k.a. Bulldoze) to execute four white nuns they had captured when they were withdrawing from Eastern Police and that Bobson Sesay saw Bulldoze shoot and kill the four nuns at a location called "Crazy Yard".[2055] The nuns had been captured along with a Bishop Ganda and a Father Mario, both of whom had managed to escape.[2056] Gullit gave the order to execute the four nuns saying "he did not want them to escape like Bishop Ganda and Father Mario as that would not be good for the rebel troops The murder of four white nuns is corroborated by documentary evidence in Exhibit P-328 which describes the nuns as "Sisters of Charity".

1332. para. 798: The Trial Chamber admitted in evidence pursuant to Rule 92*quater* the transcripts and confidential witness statement of TF1-021 from the AFRC and RUF trials.[2057] He was not cross-examined in the present trial regarding his prior testimony as he is now deceased. In his prior testimony, TF1-021 testified that he was leading prayers at the Rogbalan Mosque at about 12:30pm on a Friday in January 1999 when he saw more than 15 men armed with guns and machetes jumping over the fence and into the compound.[2058] They had disguised themselves in different ways, some wearing plastic bags on their heads, and some with their faces and/or bodies painted with blue, charcoal or white substances[2059] Some of the men were wearing black polo shirts and long trousers or shorts.[2060] The mosque was overflowing with men, women and children, as people were there not only to pray but also to seek refuge.[2061]

1333. para. 799: Some of the armed men approached TF1-021 and told him that they were going to kill everyone in the mosque.[2062] TF1-021 tried to stop them by giving them 80,000 Leones collected from people at the mosque, but after taking the money the armed men said that they would still kill all the civilians in the mosque.[2063] TF1-021 then accepted his fate. telling the armed men that "it would happen if it was God's will".[2064] The armed men taunted the civilians for believing in God and then began shooting randomly at the crowd inside the mosque.[2065] As the armed men were shooting, they said it was not their fault, but the fault of Tejan Kabbah, who refused to have peace talks with them.[2066] When the shooting ceased, TF1-021 counted 71 dead people inside and around the outside of the mosque.[2067]

1334. para. 800: The Trial Chamber also admitted in evidence pursuant to Rule 92quater the transcript of the testimony of TF1-083 from the AFRC trial.[2068] He too was not cross-examined in the present trial regarding his prior testimony as he is now deceased. In his prior testimony, the witness stated that in January 1999 he was living in Kissy. Freetown.[2069] On 22 January 1999,[2070] he went to the Rogbalan Mosque to seek shelter after his hand was amputated.[2071] When he arrived at the mosque he saw what he estimated to be 70 corpses wearing civilian clothes outside of the fence surrounding the compound, inside the compound gates, and inside the mosque.[2072] Among the dead were children, old persons, men, and women.[2073] Inside the mosque he also saw tripods, spoons, and clothes spread about.[2074] He testified that he stayed in the mosque from after his hand was cut-off at about 12:00 pm until about 6:00 pm that evening.[2075]

1335. para. 801: Witness Corinne Dutka,[2076] a senior researcher for the African Division of Human Rights Watch,[2077] testified that she reported on a massacre of 60 individuals at the Rogbalan Mosque on 22 January 1999.[2078] Dutka interviewed 10 witnesses to the massacre who told her that the rebels gave the people in the mosque two days advance warning that they would come to kill them, but the people inside the mosque stayed because they had nowhere else to go.[2079] Witnesses to the attack told Dutka that when the rebels came, one group went inside and randomly shot at the civilians in the women's and men's sections, while the other stayed outside and shot at people as they ran outside to escape.[2080]

1336. para. 802: Prosecution Witness Ibrahim Wai testified that rebels attacked his home village of Tombudu around 23 December 1998 and he fled to Kissy and took refuge at the home of his brother-in-law called Brima, in Kissy[2081] While there in January 1999 a rebel commander that the witness previously knew very well, called Mohammed (a.k.a. Captain Blood)[2082] came to the house with his bodyguards and attacked the witness and his brother-in-law's family. Wai immediately recognised this same Captain Blood as the rebel that had attacked Ibrahim Wai's home in Tombudu on 23 December 1998. Captain Blood asked the witness for money and electronics and when the latter said he had nothing to give, Captain Blood amputated Wai's hand with a machete and told him to "go to Pa Kabbah who had brought many hands for the civilians".[2083] As Wai ran to hide inside a toilet, the rebels also amputated the hands of his brother-in-law's younger brother.[2084] Wai further testified that later on that night, the rebels set his brother-in-law's house on fire and his brother-in-law called Brima, who was trapped inside the house, was burnt to death.[2085]

1337. para. 803: Exhibit P-328 documents the 22 January 1999 attack of Rogbalan Mosque in which 66 people were killed, as one of the events in a section describing mass killings and massacres.[2086]

witness told the Court that he was working as a nurse at the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy in January 1999.[2088] On 15 January 1999, while at the hospital, he saw a group of RUF/AFRC Juntas shoot a civilian man in the nearby cemetery. The civilian was from Fourah Bay and sustained serious gunshot wounds to the stomach from which he later died in the hospital.[2089] On 18 January 1999 a group of "RUF and juntas" went to search the Good Shepherd hospital accusing the staff there of "treating ECOMOG and Kamajors". The Juntas forced every body out of the hospital, including staff, patients and visitors, and started beating them with a stick called a "coboko".[2090] The juntas took TF1-104 along with 200 other civilians[2091] to one Pa Zubay's house located a short distance from the hospital. On the way to this house, the AFRC/RUF fighters shot to death a Nigerian businessman called Ike who had been admitted for treatment of his gunshot wounds in the Good Shepherd hospital.[2092] A number of Junta commanders had gathered at Pa Zubay's house including one "Captain Shepherd" whom the witness had previously met and one "Captain Blood". The civilians were made to stand against a wall and the Juntas opened fire, shooting randomly at the civilians. The witness testified that 15 civilians were shot to death as a result, and that he was lucky to escape with bullet wounds on his elbow, knee and hip.[2093]

c. Unlawful killings of civilians in Fourah Bay in late January 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1339. para. 809: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in the second week of January, ECOMOG forces dislodged the rebel forces from State House and the latter retreated to Eastern Police where they stopped to wait for reinforcement that had arrived and was waiting at Allen Town.[2094] While there, the rebel troops ambushed and captured a Government delegation consisting of one Doctor Daboe and two Ministers. The rebels sent the captives to Ferry Junction where Gullit was situated. Gullit ordered the summary execution of the three Government officials saying "they were collaborators and they were the people who fought against us that led us to go into the bush". Bobson Sesay testified that the three Government officials were executed at Ferry Junction and their bodies displayed there.[2095]

1340. para. 810: Bobson Sesay further testified that sometime after the third week of January 1999, when the rebel troops had been reinforced by a group of 50 SLAs and RUF members led by Rambo Red Goat and had recaptured State House,[2096] they heard on BBC radio that Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) had rejected a ceasefire and peace talks with the Government. Thereafter, Mosquito called Gullit on the radio set, and after warning the latter that the Government was "just trying to reorganise themselves to flush us out of Freetown", Mosquito instructed Gullit "to kill civilians and burn down strategic areas so that there would be no government and there would be no one for the government to rule".[2097] After this message, Gullit ordered his senior commanders to distribute fuel to the forces in Freetown, who started burning buildings as they withdrew from State House where ECOMOG had attacked them.[2098]

1341. para. 811: Bobson Sesay was with the advance team of the rebels during the withdrawal that moved from State House to Eastern Police and then Mountain Cut.[2099] GuIlit, Five-Five, and Bazzy met them near Savage Square[2100] and told them that civilians had challenged them by killing an AFRC fighter in Fourah Bay.[2101] In response, Gullit ordered Sesay and some other men, including the witness, Bazzy and Five-Five, to burn down Fourah Bay and kill the people there[2102] Bobson Sesay, who participated in this operation, stated that on arrival at Fourah Bay the rebels burnt a lot of houses and killed a lot of civilians by either burning them alive inside of their homes, or by forcing them outside of their homes and killing them.[2103] Explaining how the rebels attempted to burn all of the houses down and kill all of the civilians in Fourah Bay, the witness stated, "Whenever we went on such a mission we would always make sure that nobody escapes and even there we did not allow anybody to escape .... we would not just set fire to a house and move. We will stand there until we see that everything was burnt to the ground".[2104] The witness testified that the whole team including Gull it, Bazzy and Five-Five participated in the Fourah Bay operation, in vengeance for the death of one of the rebels.[2105]

1342. para. 812: The Trial Chamber also considered Exhibit P-077. In the context of describing arbitrary attacks by the retreating rebels against civilians in Freetown in January 1999, Exhibit P-077 referred to an incident around 21 January 1999 at Fourah Bay Road where three children were executed and the limbs of their three sisters were amputated or mutilated.[2106]

d. Unlawful killing of civilians in Calaba Town in the third week of January 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1343. para. 815: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that after the rebel troops had withdrawn from Rogbalan Mosque and killed the nuns, Gullit told them that he had received information that the Guinean ECOMOG forces were moving from Kambia to Waterloo in pursuit of the rebels. Consequently, Gullit ordered the rebel troops to withdraw from PWD to Allen Town in order to escape the advancing ECOMOG forces and "to burn as many buildings and capture as many civilians as possible along the way in order to force the Government to recognise them".[2107] Bobson Sesay explained that en route, the rebel forces[2108] went through\ Kissy Mess Mess, the Porty Market area, Brewery, Calaba Town and Allen Town, engaging ECOMOG forces, burning buildings, amputating and/or capturing many civilians as they went.[2109]

1344. para. 816: On this initial retreat from Kissy, Bobson Sesay testified that they passed through Calaba Town without stopping because there was an attack around the area, and then stopped in the hills of Allen Town.[2110] Although there were civilians in the hills of Calaba Town when the fighters went through, Gullit ordered the rebel troops to advance at once to Allen Town.[2111]

1345. para. 817: Describing the rebel withdrawal at this time, Bobson Sesay told the Court, '"When we were moving we were like wounded lions, because the way we withdrew we were so desperate that we were burning along the way whilst we were coming. Taking civilians from out of their houses, those that we saw were not fit enough we would execute them and we advanced because it was a mass withdrawal"[2112] Bobson Sesay testified that they captured many civilians as they withdrew from Freetown, including men, women and children and guarded them well so they could not escape, while executing those that were not fit enough to move with the rebel troops.[2113] When asked whether the houses they burnt had people in them, he testified that "Some were empty, some had people in them, but we were moving. Because the brigade was very long, so while the fighting force was ahead we would attack and burn and the other fighting forces on the back would do the same. Some would capture civilians and other would be executing them whilst we would be advancing and withdrawing from the area".[2114] Bobson Sesay further testified that when they set fire to a house with people inside, that the "people were screaming and they died".[2115]

1346. para. 818: Bobson Sesay told the Court that the retreating rebel forces met resistance from ECOMOG at Calaba Town and quickly proceeded to Allen Town. However, once they arrived at Allen Town, Gullit ordered Hassan Papa Bangura to organise fighters to go back to Cabala Town to attack the ECOMOG forces and to ensure that "anywhere civilians were and houses were they should burn down the area so that Freetown becomes ungovernable".[2116]

1347. para. 819: Bobson Sesay testified that a team of more than 200 fighters, including members of the RUF, AFRC, STF and former NPFL fighters led by Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast), Rambo Red Goat, Med Bejehjeh and the witness, attacked Calaba Town but did not see any ECOMOG forces there.[2117] Instead the rebel fighters set about burning buildings and killing civilians as ordered by Gullit. They shot and killed most of the civilians, but some of them were hacked to death in order to preserve bullets, and some burned to death inside their homes, which had been set on fire.[2118] Bobson Sesay testified that the rebel troops killed an unknown number of civilians and that "We all killed, let me tell you that. I myself, I killed. Other men killed".[2119] After this mission ended they again withdrew to Allen Town.[2120]

1348. para. 820: The Trial Chamber admitted in evidence the transcript of testimony of Prosecution Witness TF1-029 given in the RUF trial.[2121] In her prior testimony, TF1-029 testified that after she and 50 other civilians were captured in Wellington by RUF and AFRC fighters including the SLA soldier Major Arif on 22 January 1999, they all travelled en masse together to Calaba Town, where they stayed for two weeks.[2122] On the way from Wellington to Calaba Town TF1-029 saw the rebels burning houses and killing civilians.[2123] During the two weeks that TF1-029 stayed in Calaba Town she also testified that the rebels cut off the head of an ECOMOG fighter, and that an AFRC fighter named Colonel Tito shot and killed one nun and shot two other nuns in their hands.[2124] The body of the dead nun was buried near the kola tree.[2125]

1349. para. 821: While TF1-029 testified consistently concerning this event in both the RUF trial and this trial, the Defence did question TF1-029 regarding Prosecution interview notes from 24 November 2003 wherein she purportedly stated that all three nuns were killed by Colonel Tito. TF1-029 testified that the interviewer recorded her words incorrectly and that only one nun had died and the other two were injured.[2126]

1350. para. 822: Osman Jalloh testified that he was in Calaba Town in January 1999.[2127] Jalloh further told the Court that in the second or third week of January 1999, rebels travelled through Calaba Town into the hills with loads on their heads, but warned the residents of Calaba Town that they would be back to "disturb" them.[2128] Jalloh had heard that ECOMOG had driven these rebels from Freetown, Wellington and Kissy.[2129] Jalloh testified that two to three hours after the rebels had gone into the hills he heard gunshots and went to the compound of his neighbour, Mr Jalloh, to hide.[2130] The witness and ten others, including elderly people and suckling children, hid in a little tin shack for six days, until an armed man wearing civilian clothes and a goat hom on his head knocked on the door asking for money.[213l]

1351. para. 823: The man searched the witness's pockets and took 2,000 Leones that he found there.[2132] When the armed man did not find any money on the other civilians he put them back into the tin shack, set the straw mattress inside on fire, and left them there for about five minutes before allowing them to come out.[2133] The anned man then said that even though the other civilians did not have money, they should give him something else if they did not want to be burnt alive.[2134] Otick, the owner of the compound, told the anned man that he would give him 86 bags of rice.2I35 The armed man opened the compound door and about 100 rebels dressed in civilian clothes came into the compound, taking the bags of rice.[2136] The rebels left and the civilians remained in the compound.[2137]

1352. para. 824: The following day a tall rebel came to the house and took the civilians to Sayinoh Junction, which was between Calaba Town and Wellington.[2138] The rebel said that it was "for their safety because if another group of rebels came the civilians would have nothing to give them, and would be killed".[2139] Jalloh testified that as they walked from Calaba Town to Sayinoh Junction he saw "a lot of corpses lying by the road".[2140] Jalloh further testified that he could not identify the corpses lying in the street, but that he assumed that they were civilians because they were wearing civilian clothing and not military uniforms[2141] There were old people, women and children among the corpses[2142] Jalloh estimated that there were approximately 100 corpses over a 200 yard stretch of road, and testified that there were so many that they had to walk in a "zigzag" to avoid stepping on them[2143] The only place he stopped seeing corpses was "the culvert" between Calaba Town and Wellington.[2144]

1354. para. 826: When the Alpha Jet had left, the rebels started amputating the hands of civilians. Otick refused to place his hand on the mortar two times, and the rebel then chopped him two times in the head with a cutlass.[2150] Jalloh testified that blood spilled out all over and that Otick fell to the ground. Jalloh testified that the rebels told him to place his hands on the mortar block and they chopped them both off, one at a time.[2151] The rebels then told Jalloh "to tell Pa Kabbah and the ECOMOG that if they came to meet the fighters that they would be chopped in the same way".[2152] Jalloh left the house and walked until he came upon ECOMOG soldiers who took him to Connaught Hospital.[2153] Jalloh saw Otick again at the Connaught Hospital, and testified that Otick died there three days later.[2154]

1355. para. 827: At Connaught Hospital Jalloh was also told that Ya Sampa, who was his neighbor and who had been with him at the house when his hands were amputated. had been "chopped up" and subsequently died.[2155] However he did not see her corpse, nor did the others that made their way to the hospital from the scene of the criminal event.[2156] Jalloh testified that he believed that his hand was amputated on 28 January 1999 because this was the date he was told it was when he was admitted to Connaught Hospital.[2157]

1356. para. 828: Paul Conteh[2158] testified that on 19 January 1999 he was in Calaba Town.[2159] At this time the fighting between ECOMOG and the "rebels" was "so immense" that he decided to flee to Jui by way of Allen Town.[2160] On the main road to Allen Town he was forced to turn back two days later because the ECOMOG were "shedding bombs" and there were civilians moving toward Allen Town.[2161] On his way back to Calaba Town, as he was passing through Thomas Place, he saw approximately 40 civilian corpses dressed in "plain cloth".[2162] He testified however, that he did not know how they had died.[2163]

1357. para. 829: In his prior testimony, Prosecution Witness TFI-098[2164] testified that on 6 January 1999 he was near the East End Police and Mountain Cut area of Freetown when the rebels attacked.[2165] During this time he observed civilians, Kamajors, and ECOMOG soldiers coming from Calaba Town to the East End Police area.[2166] Two days later, TF1-098 left to attempt to find his mother in Calaba Town.[2167] From Ferry Junction he used the Old Road to travel to Calaba Town, and testified that he saw many corpses of men, women and children along the way.[2168] After locating her there, he returned back to the East End Police area using the New Road, and testified that he again saw many corpses of civilians.[2169]

e. Unlawful killing of civilians in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower Hill areas – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1358. para. 832: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that around the second week of January 1999, while the rebel forces still occupied State House, Gullit received information that ECOMOG forces were poised in Kingtom, a suburb of Freetown, and were preparing to attack the rebel forces at State House. Gullit remarked that "it was the civilians who went and called on the ECOMOG to go and base in Kingtom".[2170] Consequently, Gullit declared the area from Siaka Stevens Street, Kingtom Road, the Cotton Tree Area through to Pademba Road area, up to Tower Hill, a "killing zone wherein anybody who came around that area was considered an enemy and that person should die".[2171] Gullit ordered his commanders including Basky to go to Kingtom "to repel the ECOMOG forces and put the situation under control". Bobson Sesay testified that he was part of the group of 150 rebels comprising members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters that attacked Kingtom on Gullit's orders.[2172] Sesay further testified that in Kingtom, the rebels attacked ECOMOG but also killed many civilians and burnt buildings before withdrawing back to State House.[2173] Sesay told the Court that the civilians in Kingtom were killed "because they had gone and called ECOMOG to base in there", and that they were either pulled out of their houses and shot to death or burnt alive in their homes.[2174]

1359. para. 833: Bobson Sesay testified that other Commanders who killed civilians in this ""killing zone" during the second week of January 1999 included Junior Lion, who told the witness that "he went on patrol in the Tower Hill area and had captured and executed some civilians"[2175] and "Captain Blood"[2176] who captured and beheaded seven young men in Guard Street for "'collaborating with the Nigerians".[2177] Bobson Sesay also testified that while the rebel troops were temporarily based for two days at Allen Town awaiting further orders from Gullit, they would go out into the surrounding areas looking for food, and that any civilians they found on the way were killed because the rebels "did not want any civilian in that area for them to go and tell ECOMOG that we were based around that area. So when we met them we killed them".[2178]

1360. para. 834: Akiatu Tholley testified that she was at home with her family in Wellington on 5 January 1999 when she heard that rebels had attacked Wellington.[2179] She and her family were hiding inside their house when a group of armed rebels dressed in black T-shirts[2180] and black jeans with bandanas or mufflers on their heads[2181] forced their way into the witness's house. Three of these men dragged Tholley out of the house while kicking and whipping her with belts. The rebels also amputated the hand of a three-year-old child they found hiding in the witness's house and threatened to amputate the witness's mother.[2182] The witness stated that when the rebels dragged her outside, she "saw rebels killing and burning down houses".[2183] However, she did not specity who she saw killed in Wellington.

1362. para. 836: The witness further testified that when they reached Allen Town, she and a group of the civilians decided to drop the boxes of ammunition because they were tired of carrying them.[2190] Rebels (referred to by the witness as "James's boys") stripped the witness and her companions naked and pushed them to the ground, threatening to hack them to death for refusing to carry the loads of ammunition.[2191] At that moment, fighter jets came and flew over them, and everybody ran to hide.[2192] Tholley hid in the house of a woman named Fatmata who was one of James's wives. Fatmata gave the witness clothes to wear.[2193] James found Tholley in Fatmata's house, and took her to Mammy Dumbuya's church.[2194] In the church Tholley saw the beating and raping of many "small girls" who were "not even adult"' and the killing of some of them.[2195] Tholley testified that the fighters were killing the girls who refused to be raped by stabbing them with their bayonets.[2196]

1363. para. 837: Tholley further testified that while she was in the church, James raped her and she became unconscious.[2197] Tholley told the Court that she herself was a virgin and "had not yet begun her menses" at the time of capture.[2198] She regained consciousness in a small hut in "a place after Allen Town" where an old woman was tending to Tholley's wounds with medicine in order to stop her bleeding.[2199] The old woman told Tholley that some people had brought the witness to her for treatment.[2200] Later, the rebel called James came to the hut and killed the old woman by shooting her in the forehead as Tholley was pleading to him stop,[2201] and then forcefully took Tholley with him on the way to Waterloo.[2202]

1364. para. 838: In cross-examination the Defence questioned Tholley as to inconsistencies between her pre-trial statements and her testimony concerning how many times she had been forced by the fighters to eat human hearts. In particular, in 2003 she had told the Prosecution that James had forced her to eat the heart of the old woman in the hut after he had killed her.[2203] Tholley insisted on cross-examination that she had not been forced to eat the heart of the old woman, but she did not explain the discrepancy. The witness was also confronted with her prior statement where she told the OTP investigators that in her presence, rebels killed her uncle and aunt and raped her cousin to death in the jungle.[2204] The witness made no mention of these alleged murders in her evidence in-chief. While admitting that she gave the said statement to the OTP investigators, the witness testified that the deaths of her uncle, aunt and cousin did not in fact take place "in her presence" and that instead it was her mother who had told her about the alleged deaths.[2205]

f. Unlawful killing of civilians in Tumbo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1365. para. 842: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Prosecution Witness Ibrahim Wai in relation to the unlawful killings alleged to have taken place during this time period in Turnbo. Ibrahim Wai was a fisherman living in Turnbo in December 1998.[2206] He testified that on 23 December 1998, at 3:00 a.m. in the morning, AFRC and RUF soldiers attacked Turnbo by burning houses and killing people.[2207] The attack was led by a man dressed in full combat uniform called Captain Mohamed, also known as "Captain Blood",[2208] who had been a friend of the witness.[2209] During the attack Wai hid in the hills, and then returned toTurnbo the next morning.[2210] As he walked toward Krio Town he saw the three dead bodies of Pa Pratt's children lying next to a burnt down house.[2211] One of the dead children was named Eku and the other two were twins.[2212] He also testified that the rebels killed Bai Usu's IO-year-old son, whose head had been "shattered, probably by a bullet";[2213] a man named Joseph who had been shot,[2214] and one other man that he did not identify,[2215] and that he saw their corpses. Wai testified that Captain Blood subsequently met him again in Kissy and amputated Wai's hand, telling him to "go to Pa Kabbah who had brought many hands for the civilians".[2116]

g. Unlawful killing of civilians in Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1366. para. 845: The Trial Chamber has considered the oral evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TF 1-028 and TF 1-026, Witness Patrick Sheriff, as well as documentary evidence contained in Prosecution Exhibits P-308, P-341 A, and P-341 B admitted pursuant to Rule 92*bis*, in relation to the unlawful killings alleged to have taken place at Waterloo by rebels during their advance towards, and withdrawal from, Freetown between late December 1998 and early January 1999.

1367. para. 846: Exhibit P-308 is a UN Security Council. Special Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) S/1999/20, dated 7 January 1999. It reported that on 22 December 1998, rebels in the Western area attacked Waterloo, resulting in heavy casualties among the civilian population,[2217] and the looting and burning of property, and the displacement of around 12,000 persons that fled from Waterloo to Freetown.[2218]

1368. para. 847: Exhibits 341A and 341B are an audio clip and its accompanying transcript, respectively, of a BBC "Focus on Africa" interview that took place on 22 December 1998 between Kwabena Mensah, a BBC reporter and Abubakar Sesay, a forest guard for the Waterloo district.[2219] In the interview Mensah reported that an ECOMOG commander had confirmed that the RUF had attacked Waterloo in the early hours of the morning.[2220] Abubakar Sesay explained to Mensah that "collaborators of the AFRC and RUF juntas in an extension of Waterloo called Lumpa had secretly brought approximately 50 fighters into their homes two nights previously".[2221] At 3:00 a.m. the rebels began their attack, which lasted for two hours until ECOMOG, who had initially retreated, returned with ammo tanks and drove them out.[2222] Sesay stated that during the two-hour attack there was a lot of shooting and that the rebels burnt some houses and killed some civilians, including Mr Whenzle, the Secretary-General of the YWCA.[2223] Sesay reported that the rebels were fighting because they wanted their leader released and stated that "they are just bandits, going around villages, stealing people's goods, and ... killing innocent people .... Their target is ... civilian targets - that's what they do".[2224] Sesay did not witness the attack, as he was in a different section ofWaterloo.[2225]

1369. para. 848: Prosecution Witness TF 1-028 testified that she was captured in Karina, Bombali District by AFRC and RUF fighters around the time of the ECOMOG Intervention in Freetown.[2226] She lived in captivity in Rosos for six months and then was moved to a location called Tufayim or Eddie Town.[2227] The witness testified that Commanders at Eddie Town included Gullit, Five-Five, Woyoh, Col. Eddie, FAT and Leather Boot. and that Commanders Tito, Alabama, and RUF Mohammed all brought troops to reinforce the ones in Eddie Town. The witness stated that RUF Superman also sent troops and ammunition from Kurubonla to reinforce the rebel troops at Eddie Town, as they prepared to invade Freetown.[2228] The witness told the Trial Chamber that the RUF group that came from Kurubonla were led by Mohammed Bajehjeh, and comprised about 100 men, some of whom were Liberians and were called the "Red Lion" group.[2229] A week after the arrival of the reinforcements, the rebel troops left Eddie Town and trekked to Freetown, taking the witness and other captured civilians with them.[2230]

1370. para. 849: On the way to Freetown they passed through Port Loko Road, Freetown Highway, Four Mile and stopped at Waterloo, where she saw the rebel fighters burning houses and killing people.[2231] She saw the corpses of women and children in civilian clothes lying in the streets.[2232] From Waterloo, the rebel troops moved through Benguema, Tumbo, Grafton, Calaba Town and then into Freetown.[2233]

1371. para. 850: Prosecution Witness TF 1-026 was also captured by RUF rebels led by a commander called CO Rocky[2234] on 6 January 1999, from her home in Wellington at the age of 14 years. She and 50 other civilian captives from her village travelled for several days with the rebels from Wellington through Calaba Town, Waterloo and then to Makeni.[2235] The witness testified that when the rebel troops and captured civilians arrived in Waterloo, the residents of Waterloo were frightened of the rebels and started running away. The witness saw the rebels shooting and killing the civilians as the latter tried to tlee.[2236] The witness told the Trial Chamber that the rebels stayed in Waterloo for about one week under the command of one RUF commander called CO Rambo[2237] before moving to Makeni.[2238]

1372. para. 851: Patrick Sheriff testified that in December 1998 he was living in Lumpa[2239] in the Waterloo Rural District.[2240] He testified that on 17 December 1998 rebels attacked Lumpa with guns at about 4.00 a.m.[2241] Sheriff hid in the bush for five days before being captured and whipped by the rebels. During the five days, the rebels burnt hundreds of civilian homes in Lumpa and Waterloo Town, in what appeared to the witness to be a coordinated campaign. The witness described the rebel operations stating "When they came they distributed themselves into various groups, Lumpa, Waterloo and all other villages around, and they set a time. And at any time they were doing something at a particular place, the other groups in the other areas were doing similar things in the other places. It was like simultaneous exercise".[2242] After he was captured by rebels dressed in "black polo shirts with the inscription 'Tupac, All Eyes on Me" and "short trousers", Sheriff witnessed the rebels shoot and kill three civilian captives who had been told to lie on the ground.[2243] Sheriff himself narrowly escaped death but the rebel commander ordered that he be given 150 whip lashes, which the rebels carried out.

1373. para. 852: Sheriff further testified that on 10 January 1999 he was living in Malambay, about half an hours walk from Lumpa,[2244] when he learnt that rebels had burnt down Lumpa village and Waterloo Town for the second time. The rebels also announced that they would kill any civilian found hiding in the bush around Lumpa.[2245] Sheriff moved back to Lumpa and was staying at the Mannor Connor section of the village of Lumpa which was under the control of a rebel commander named Peleto, who was also known as "Friday" because he was known to go on killing sprees of civilians every Friday of the week around Lumpa.[2246] One early Friday morning in February 1999[2247] Sheriff saw Peleto shoot and kill a man named Mr Kai who had been reading his Bible and a Limba man who had been eating rice in a pot.[2248] Both victims were close neighbours of Sheriff.[2249] Sheriff saw Peleto coming toward his house and before running into the bush to hide he told an old woman who was staying there to flee.[2250] She could not run and went to hide in her room instead.[2251] Shortly after leaving the house, Sheriff heard a gunshot, and that evening when he returned to town he found the dead body of the woman in the house lying in a pool of blood.[2252] Sheriff had heard of Peleto before these killings, but was able to identity him at the time because after he killed Kai and before he killed the Limba man the people in the area were very afraid of this commander and were yelling '"Peleto is coming".[2253]

h. Unlawful killing of civilians in Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1374. para. 855: Prosecution Witness TF1-026, referred to above,[2254] told the Trial Chamber that nine armed RUF rebels attacked her house in Wellington on 6 January 1999.[2255] The rebels ordered the whole family to go outside on the veranda but the witness's sister kept crying out of fear. The rebels shot TF1-026's sister to death because they said "she was causing noise".[2256] TF1-026 further testified that as she was held in captivity by RUF rebels in Wellington, she saw the rebels amputating a lot of civilians and burning a lot of houses.[2257] The witness heard the rebels tell one man whose hands they amputated to "go and tell the people that the rebels were coming". The amputated civilian fell down and died from his wounds.[2258] TF1-026 also saw the rebels set a house on tire in which Mr Wilson, a crippled teacher, was burnt to death.[2259] The witness also testified that she saw the rebels shoot and kill' another civilian man on the way to Calaba Town.[2260]

1375. para. 856: The Trial Chamber admitted in evidence the transcript of the testimony of Prosecution Witness TFI-023 given in another trial.[2261] In her prior testimony, TF1-023 testified that she was a captive of the AFRC from 22 January 1999 until August 1999.[2262] She testified that at one point during this time, on the way to being taken to Waterloo, she heard, but did not see, that the rebels killed some nuns.[2263] However, the Defence confronted TF1-023 with a previous written statement that she gave to Prosecution investigators wherein she stated that "she had seen the nuns, and then had not seen them again", and that she "had not seen the rebels commit abuses during the walk to Waterloo but many civilians and rebels were killed by the Alpha Jets".[2264] The witness confirmed that she had made these statements and that they were truthful.[2265]

1376. para. 857: Witness Sarah Koroma was living in Loko Town, Wellington with her husband and six children on 6 January 1999.[2266] The witness and her family ran and hid in the bush for a week, on hearing that rebels anned with guns and knives had attacked Wellington.[2267] The witness stated that when the rebels arrived, they were dressed in combat unifonns and found no civilians in Wellington as everybody had run away. The rebels then sent a message telling all the civilians to return to their homes and that anyone found in the bush thereafter would be considered an enemy.[2268] The witness and her family left the bush to return home but on the way, the rebels captured them and hacked her husband to death.[2269]

1377. para. 858: The rebels abducted the witness along with many other civilians. While in captivity, she saw them hack to death a six-year-old child whose mother had attempted to escape. In addition, the rebels amputated the witness's left hand and sent her to "go and tell President Kabbah that they want peace". They also tried to amputate her right hand but it was not severed[2270] On her way to the hospital, the witness ran into a group of drunken rebels who made fun of her injuries and accused her of being "Tejan Kabbah's mother".[2271] The witness fell in a gutter where the rebels repeatedly kicked her, pelted her with empty beer bottles and stole her money. She finally made it to Conaught Hospital alive.

i. Unlawful killing of civilians in Hastings – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1378. para. 861: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he was part of the rebel troops led by commanders Basky, Junior Lion and others that attacked Hastings on 3 January 1999, on the orders of Gullit,[2272] in order to fight the ECOMOG troops that were based there. Bobson Sesay told the Court that during the attack, the rebels captured three Nigerian soldiers and shot them to death.[2273]

j. Unlawful killing of civilians in Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Factual Findings

1379. para. 863: Prosecution Witness TF1-143 was 12 years old[2274] when he and 50 other boys and girls were captured by RUF rebels in September 1998 in Konkoba. The rebels turned him into a child soldier after carving the letters "RUF" on his chest.[2275] TF1-143 testified that when he was with the fighters in Colonel Eddie Town[2276] that his direct superior, Kabila, told him that SAJ Musa had ordered them to go to Freetown to overthrow the Government.[2277] Kabila said that SAl Musa had further ordered that when they arrived in Freetown they should not kill any civilian or bum any houses.[2278] The witness heard Commander Kabila state that SAI Musa's order would not work, and that instead the rebel troops would carry out an earlier order from O-Five called "Operation Spare No Soul", which meant that "even humans, ants, goats, all should be killed".[2279]

1380. para. 864: TF1-143 further testified that when his group of rebel fighters reached Benguema on their way to Freetown, SAJ Musa was injured when a bomb exploded in the weapons stock room and died.[2280] Kabila told TF1-143 that after SAl Musa had died, "a priest prayed on the corpse and O-Five and Gullit gave an order for a sacrifice for us to perform so we would go to Freetown and succeed, the mission would be successful, that we should bury the corpse together with a fair complexion lady and the lady should be buried alongside Sal Musa alive"[2281] According to Kabila, they tied a woman's legs up and buried her alive with SAJ Musa's body.[2282]

1381. para. 865: TF1-029[2283] referred to above[2284] testified that after she and 50 other civilians were captured in Wellington by RUF and AFRC fighters led by Major Arif on 22 January 1999, they all travelled together to Calaba Town and then to Benguema.[2285] TF1-029 further testified that as they travelled from Calaba Town to Benguema, the rebels were attacked by ECOMOG and Kamajors in a battle that involved a lot of civilian deaths.[2286] The rebels killed babies that were travelling with them because "they did not want them to make noise".[2287] TFI-029 testified that when the group reached Benguema, a rebel called Colonel "Coal Boot" killed a civilian woman prior to them leaving Benguema on l0 March 1999.[2288]

1382. para. 866: Paul Conteh,[2289] who was captured on 23 January 1999 by AFRC soldiers, including Colonel Bastard, testified that one night while he was a captive under the control of a rebel called Lt. Gunboot at Benguema, Conteh heard a 16 year-old girl crying next door. Conteh knew this girl as she used to pass by his residence to fetch water. Conteh said that although he could not see what happened, the apartment that he was staying in was close enough to Gunboot's apartment that he could hear the young woman crying and asking him "to leave her alone".[2290] One of Gunboot's "boys" confirmed to Conteh that Gunboot had killed the young woman with an axe.[2291] Conteh did not see the young woman again after this incident.[2292]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - Crimes Against Humanity ("CAH")

1383. para. 504: Article 2 of the Statute is entitled 'Crimes against humanity' and provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have power to prosecute persons who committed the following
> crimes as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population:
>
> a. Murder;
>
> b. Extermination;
>
> c. Enslavement
>
> d. Deportation;
>
> e. Imprisonment;
> f. Torture

g. Rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution; forced pregnancy and any other form of sexual violence;

h. Persecution on political, racial, ethnic or religious grounds:

i. Other inhumane acts.

1384. para. 505: In order for liability to be established under Article 2 of the Statute, the acts of the accused must have formed part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population. Five chapeau (or general) requirements for crimes against humanity must be proved beyond reasonable doubt.

a. Attack – Applicable law – CAH

1385. para. 506: An 'attack' may be defined as a campaign, operation or course of conduct.[1186] It is not limited to the use of armed force but may encompass any mistreatment of any civilian population.[1187] 'Attack' is a concept different from that of "armed conflict" and need not be part of it.[1188]

b. Directed against any civilian population – Applicable law – CAH

1386. para. 507: Therefore, it must be established that a civilian population was the primary object of the attack.[1189] A population is considered a "civilian population" if it is predominantly civilian in nature.[1190] There is no requirement that the victims of the underlying crimes be "civilians," as long as the attack is directed against the civilian population.[1191] It is not required that the entire population be subjected to the attack. The Trial Chamber must, however, be satisfied that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian "population", rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.[1192]

1387. para. 508: It is an agreed fact between the Defence and the Prosecution that the terms "civilian" and "civilian population" throughout the Indictment refer to "persons who took no active part in the hostilities, or who were no longer taking an active part in the hostilities, including combatants rendered hors de combat by virtue of injury or wounds, capture or surrender".[1193]

1388. para. 509: With regards to alleged crimes against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber finds that this definition of "civilian" agreed to by the parties is overly broad and inconsistent with customary international law.[1194] Referring to principles of international humanitarian law, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has distinguished between a person hors de combat and a civilian:

> Persons hors de combat are certainly protected in armed conflicts through Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. This reflects a principle of customary international law. Even hors de combat, however, they would still be members of the armed forces of a party to the contlict and therefore fall under the category of persons referred to in Article 4(A)(I) of the Third Geneva Convention; as such, they are not civilians in the context of Article 50, paragraph 1 of Additional Protocol I. Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention supports this conclusion in referring to "[p]ersons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause".[1195]

1389. para. 510: The Trial Chamber therefore holds that the term "civilian" must be more narrowly defined in order to ensure a distinction in an armed conflict between civilians and combatants no longer participating in hostilities. The fact that the persons are hors de combat during the commission of a crime, does not render them "civilian" or part of the "civilian population" for the purposes of Article 2 of the Statute. This distinction is particularly important in a case where the Prosecution alleges that crimes against humanity were committed in a situation of armed conflict.[1196]

c. Widespread or systematic – Applicable law – CAH

1390. para. 511: This requirement that an attack must be either widespread or systematic is disjunctive, so that once either condition is met, it is not necessary to consider whether the alternative is also satisfied.[1197] The tenn 'widespread' refers to the large-scale nature of the attack and the number of targeted persons, while the term 'systematic' refers to the organised nature of the acts of violence and the improbability of their random occurrence.[1198] The existence of a plan need not be proved.[1199]

d. The acts of the perpetrator must form part of the attack – Applicable law – CAH

similarities between the perpetrator's acts and the acts occurring within the attack; the nature of the events and circumstances surrounding the perpetrator's acts; the temporal and geographic proximity of the perpetrator's acts with the attack; and the nature and extent of the perpetrator's knowledge of the attack when he commits the acts.[1201]

1392. para. 513: It does not suffice that an accused knowingly took the risk of participating in the implementation of a policy, plan or ideology.[1202] Nevertheless, the accused need not know the details of the attack or approve of the context in which his or her acts occur;[1203] the accused merely needs to understand the overall context in which his or her acts took place.[1204] The motives for the accused's participation in the attack are irrelevant; the accused need only know that his or her acts are parts thereof.[1205]

1393. para. 514: Findings related to this requirement are addressed in the Findings on the Crimes section of this Judgement.

e. Mens rea – Applicable law – CAH

1394. para. 515: The mens rea or mental requisite for crimes against humanity is that the perpetrator of the offence must be aware that a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population is taking place and that his action is part of this attack.[1206] Evidence of knowledge depends on the facts of a particular case; thus the manner in which this legal element may be proved may vary from case to case.[1207] However, the perpetrator need not have been aware of the details of the pre-conceived plan or policy when he committed the offence and need not have intended to support the regime carrying out the attack on the civil ian population.[1208] Findings related to this requirement are addressed in the Findings on the Crimes section of this Judgement.

(ii) CAH – Findings

a. Attack directed against any civilian population – CAH – Findings

1395. para. 547: The evidence shows that starting in the pre-indictment period, the RUF committed crimes against civilians in Sierra Leone and that this pattern of crimes continued into the indictment period. From November 1996 until May 1997, the mistreatment of civilians was concentrated in Kailahun District, where the RUF subjected civilians to forced labour, sexual slavery and forced marriage.

1396. para. 548: During the junta period, civilian leaders were targeted by the AFRC/RUF fighters, as were civilians generally, particularly women and children. Civilians were the victims of killings, physical violence, rape, sexual slavery, torture and arbitrary detention perpetrated by RUF and AFRC fighters. During this time, the evidence demonstrated that there were large numbers of civilian victims and that attacks were widespread and occurred in the areas that were under control of the AFRC/RUF junta forces.[1307] This mistreatment of civilians during junta rule demonstrates that the RUF and AFRC specifically targeted the civilian population in order to minimise any resistance or opposition to the regime. The pattern of crimes by the RUF and AFRC which were directed against civilians persisted and intensified during this period.

1398. para. 550: From January 1999 until December 1999, the evidence shows that the RUF and AFRC continued to commit crimes against civilians. While these crimes took place in the context of an armed conflict, attacks were particularly directed against civilians. Women and children were amongst the victims of the attacks and attacks continued to be directed against civilian settlements. The brutality and the vengeful nature of the attacks further indicate a specific focus on the civilian population.

1399. para. 551: The mistreatment of civilians continued into the later stages of the conflict. The RUF in Kono District continued to forcibly use civilian labour for mining. While active hostilities occurred in some areas of Sierra Leone, such as in Kambia and Makeni Districts, civilians were forcibly abducted to participate in the RUF's war effort. Civilians continued to be intentionally targeted as sources of labour and fighters.

1400. para. 552: Based on the above, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the indictment an attack was directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone by the RUF and/or RUF/AFRC.

b. Widespread or systematic attack – CAH – Findings

1401. para. 553: The RUF's use of forced civilian labour and physical violence in Kailahun District from 1996 until 2000 was continuous, organized and structured. From 1994 to 1998, rebels repeatedly abducted civilians from the war front and used them for labour or trained them to fight. They used abducted women as "wives". The pattern of mistreatment shows that crimes were not isolated or random, but rather formed part of a continuous campaign directed against civilians in communities that the RUF controlled. This pattern of civilian mistreatment remained a feature of the RUF regime throughout the conflict, and resulted in large numbers of civilian being mistreated, through abductions, forced labour and sexual enslavement, in various towns and villages throughout Kailahun District.

1402. para. 554: During the junta phase, the number of civilian subjected to severe mistreatment increased as the conflict spread throughout the territory of Sierra Leone.

1403. para. 555: From February 1998 to December 1998, human rights abuses intensified, leaving thousands of civilians killed or mutilated by RUF and AFRC fighters. Hundreds of civilians were abducted, raped and the burning of houses and looting continued to occur.

1404. para. 556: In 1999, the evidence shows that thousands of civilians were killed during the attack on Freetown and the subsequent retreat through Kissy, Upgun, Calaba Town, Allen Town, Hastings, Wellington, Waterloo and Benguema and that thousands of others were abducted, burnt, beaten, mutilated and/or sexually abused. Further violence was directed towards civilians in Masiaka, Port Loko, and the Occra Hills.

1405. para. 557: Attacks continued to occur against the civilian population at all times relevant to the Indictment, affecting large numbers of civilians throughout the north and east of Sierra Leone, e.g. Kailahun, Kambia and Kono Districts. Civilians continued to be abducted by rebels in Makeni and Kambia Districts and a large number of civilians continued to be captured and brought to mining sites in Kono District.

1406. para. 558: Based on the large number of victims and the geographic scope of the crimes throughout the indictment period, the Trial Chamber finds that at all times relevant to the indictment the Prosecution has proven beyond reasonable doubt that the RUF, AFRC and/or the RUF/AFRC directed a widespread attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone. Moreover, based on the pattern and organisation of the violence the evidence demonstrates beyond reasonable doubt that the attack was also systematic.

c. Conclusion on the Chapeau Requirements – CAH – Findings

1407. para. 559: The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that at all times relevant to the Indictment the Prosecution has proven beyond reasonable doubt that the RUF and/or AFRC directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population; resulting in the following crimes against humanity having been committed: murder (Count 2), rape (Count 4), sexual slavery (Count 5), other inhumane acts (Count 8) and enslavement (Count 10).

(iii) Unlawful killings – Applicable law

1408. para. 411: In Count 2, the Indictment charges the Accused with murder as a crime against humanity, punishable under Article 2(a) of the Statute.[1012] In addition, or in the alternative, Count 3 charges the Accused with violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3(a) of the Statute.[1013]

1409. para. 412: The elements defining murder are identical regardless of the provision under which it is charged.[1014] Thus, in addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute (for Count 2) and the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute (for Count 3), the following elements of the crime of murder must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

> i. The perpetrator by his acts or omission caused the death of a person or persons;
>
> ii. The perpetrator had the intention to kill or to cause serious bodily harm in the > reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death.[1015]

1410. para. 413: For the physical elements of murder to be satisfied, the Prosecution is required to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrator's conduct substantially contributed to the death of the person.[1016] The death of the victim may be demonstrated through circumstantial evidence, provided it is the only inference that may reasonably be drawn from the acts or omissions of the perpetrator.[1017] Therefore it is not necessary to require proof that the dead body of that person has been recovered.[1018]

(iv) General – Legal Conclusions

1411. para. 582: The Trial Chamber has, in the Chapter on Preliminary Issues, ruled on evidence falling outside the temporal and/or geographical scope of the Indictment;[1336] locations and criminal acts not specifically pleaded in the Indictment;[1337] as well as timeframes imprecisely pleaded in the Indictment.[1338] The submissions relating to specific Counts in the Indictment are appropriately handled under each Count. The Trial Chamber will now examine the evidence relating to the various Counts in the Indictment. For ease of reference Count I (Acts of terrorism) is examined after the other Counts as it encompasses evidence relating to all the other Counts. In examining the crime-base evidence, the Trial Chamber does not at this stage examine the role if any, played by the Accused or his alleged criminal responsibility for the said crimes, as these are matters more appropriately examined under the Chapter on the Role of the Accused and his alleged criminal responsibility.[1339] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber's findings in this Chapter are limited to the primary perpetrators.

(v) Kenema District – Unlawful killings

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of Mr. Dowie – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1412. para. 589: The Trial Chamber finds Bao's account of this killing in the three trials, namely, the RUF, AFRC and the current trial, to be consistent and credible. His testimony is based on an official complaint filed by Mrs. Dowei, an eye witness to the killing. Although he could not carry out a thorough investigation due to the shooting going on in the area, Bao visited the Dowei residence and saw the body of the deceased bearing two bullet wounds as described by Mrs. Dowei in her Police Statement. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the AFRC/RUF forces, intentionally shot and killed Mr Dowei, a civilian taking no active part in the hostilities, in order to steal his property. Given that Mr Dowei was killed while trying to protect his property from being looted, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators carried out this killing with the primary purpose of instilling terror in other civilians who would similarly attempt to resist the looting.

ii. Killing of three civilians near Mambu Street – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1413. para. 591: Bao's testimony regarding his discovery of three corpses behind the house of Pa Mansaray is circumstantial and uncorroborated. Bao did not witness the actual killing of the three persons and is therefore unaware of the specific circumstances of their death. He merely assumed that the three victims were killed by the AFRC/RUF forces that were engaged in the looting of civilian property. The Prosecution did not adduce any evidence connecting those deaths in any way to the looting spree that had been taking place earlier that day or to the burning of Pa Mansaray's house. Given Bao's testimony that fighting between the AFRC/RUF fighters and the Kamajors was ongoing around the area and that Pa Mansaray's house was being used as a base for the Kamajors, it is possible that the three people could have been killed in the cross fire by either group. In the circumstances, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the death of the three persons behind Pa Mansaray's house was unlawfully caused by the AFRC/RUF as alleged.

iii. Killing of Bonnie Wailer and other suspected burglars – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1414. para. 595: Although there are differences between the accounts of Bao and Hyde regarding the number of suspects arrested and as to the person that pulled the trigger, their accounts corroborate each other in many important respects. First, both witnesses testified that the event happened soon after the coup of May 1997. Second, both witnesses stated that the suspects were arrested by a combined team of AFRC/RUF fighters on allegations of burglary and theft. Third, they both described at least one of the suspects as being a "notorious criminal". Fourth, both witnesses stated that the execution of the suspects was public and witnessed by the citizens of Kenema Town. Fifth, both witnesses stated that although Bonnie Wailer was dressed in combat uniform he was, in fact, a civilian who was impersonating the rebels. Sixth, according to both witnesses, the suspects had not officially been charged in a court of law when they were executed. Lastly, the suspects were shot dead by one of the AFRC/RUF fighters present on the orders of a superior commander.

1415. para. 596: Given that Hyde was traumatised and left the scene soon after the first shot, the Trial Chamber relies more on the evidence of Bao who stayed and who testified that he heard Sam Bockarie give the order to shoot the suspects. Accordingly, based on the above evidence, the Trial Chamber tinds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in late Mayor June 1997 at Kenema Town Police Station, a group of AFRC/RUF fighters acting under the orders of Sam Bockarie and in the presence of senior AFRC commander Eddie Kanneh, intentionally killed three persons. Bao testified that it was three persons suspected of burglary, including Bonnie Wailer, Sydney Cole and Bangura, all civilians who were not taking an active part in hostilities.

1416. para. 597: In this instance, the evidence establishes that the AFRC/RUF commanders, including Sam Bockarie and Eddie Kanneh, gathered the citizens of Kenema Town whom they specitically wanted to witness the punishment meted out to civilians who would dare to impersonate the rebels or bring their name into disrepute. These executions took place at the police station and in full view of the police personnel and members of the public, and the bodies were left at the scene on display for the rest of the day as an example to the residents of Kenema Town. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with the primary purpose of instilling terror in the civilian population in Kenema.

iv. Killing of a farmer at the NIC building – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings 1417. para. 599: The Trial Chamber finds Bao's account of this killing in the three trials, namely, the RUF trial, AFRC trial and the current trial, to be detailed, consistent and credible. Based on that evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the victim was a civilian farmer taking no active part in the hostilities when he met his death. Although Bao's account of who actually shot the farmer is based partly on circumstantial evidence and partly on hearsay from the bystanders, the Trial Chamber finds that the circumstances relating to the arrest and shooting of the victim, including: 1) the rebels dancing and singing while referring to the victim as "a Kamajor, that they had captured and would take to Sam Bockarie"; 2) the statements Sam Bockarie made at the scene of crime that he must finish all the Kamajors and his brandishing of the smoking gun over the victim's body; and 3) the statements of bystanders implicating Bockarie in the killing, all lead to one reasonable inference that Sam Bockarie intentionally shot and killed a captured farmer in cold blood because he suspected that he was a Kamajor. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around September 1997 in front of the NIC building then housing the RUF rebels, Sam Bockarie intentionally shot and killed a farmer that was not taking an active part in hostilities.

1418. para. 600: In this instance, the AFRC/RUF fighters accused the farmer of being a Kamajor (i.e. a perceived enemy of the Junta forces) prior to handing him over to Bockarie. After killing the farmer in full view of the public, Bockarie announced that he would do the same to all Kamajors, thereby sending a clear and unequivocal message to the civilian population not to associate with the Junta's enemies. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Sam Bockarie wilfully made the victim the object of such violence with the primary purpose of instilling terror in the civilian population of Kenema Town.

v. Killing of Santos and an alleged thief – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1419. para. 602: The Trial Chamber finds Bao's account of these killings in the three trials, namely, the RUF, AFRC and the current trial, to be consistent and credible. Although Bao's evidence as to who killed the two people is partly circumstantial and partly based on hearsay or "widespread rumour", the Trial Chamber finds that the circumstances surrounding these deaths, including the inquiry by Sam Bockarie about the progress of the police investigation into the alleged theft, his unsolicited offer to help the police by looking for the suspects, and his collection of the bodies from the scene of crime three days later, all lead to one reasonable inference that Sam Bockarie intentionally killed these two people, neither of whom had properly been tried by a court of law. This circumstantial evidence corroborates the hearsay evidence implicating Sam Bockarie in these killings. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in November 1997 in front of Capital Cinema in Kenema Town, Sam Bockarie intentionally shot and killed two civilians, including one Santos, that were not taking an active part in hostilities.

1420. para. 603: Given that perpetrators summarily executed the civilian suspects without trial and left their bodies lying in full public view for three days before taking them away, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Sam Bockarie wilfully made the victim the object of such violence with the primary purpose of the killings to instil terror in the civilian population in Kenema Town.

vi. Killing of an alleged "Kamajor Boss" on Hangha Road – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1421. para. 605: The Trial Chamber finds Bao's account of this killing in the three trials, namely, the RUF, AFRC and the current trial, to be consistent and credible. Based on that evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the man described by the witness as "a peaceful citizen" and as wearing "plain clothes and not a Kamajor uniform" was a civilian not taking an active part in the hostilities when he was killed. Although Bao's evidence as to who killed this man is circumstantial, the Trial Chamber finds that the circumstances surrounding that death, including the bizarre conduct of the AFRC/RUF fighters in dancing and singing aloud that "they had captured and killed the Kamajor boss", and disembowelling his body and using the entrails as a "check point", all reasonably lead to one inference that the AFRC/RUF fighters intentionally killed this civilian suspecting him of being a member of the Civil Defence Force, a perceived enemy of the AFRC/RUF forces. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in December 1997 on Hangha Street near the Sierra Leone Telecommunication house, the AFRC/RUF fighters intentionally killed a civilian that was not taking an active part in hostilities.

1422. para. 606: Given that this killing was part of the operation code-named "Operation No living thing", the AFRC/RUF fighters' bizarre conduct in disembowelling the man's body and using the entrails as a "check point", and in leaving his body on public display for three days before removing it, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victim the object of such violence with the primary purpose of the killing to instil terror in the civilian population in Kenema Town.

vii. Killing of Mohamed Fityia – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1423. para. 609: The Trial Chamber finds Karmoh Kanneh's eyewitness account of the killing of Fityia credible and consistent. Kanneh was based at the RUF base at the NIC compound in Kenema Town and was personally involved in investigating the complaint against Fityia. He was also present when Sam Bockarie shot Fityia. The Trial Chamber accepts Bao's evidence that he saw Fityia's body lying in Sombo Street but finds his evidence as to Fityia's alleged involvement in the robbery of a Lebanese diamond dealer unreliable as it is based on uncorroborated hearsay. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that a few months before the ECOMOG intervention, in Sombo Street, Kenema Town, Sam Bockarie intentionally shot and killed Mohamed Fityia, a civilian not taking active part in the hostilities.

1424. para. 610: Given the summary execution of a civilian suspect without trial, including Bockarie's conduct in publicly exhibiting the corpse on Sombo Street, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Sam Bockarie wilfully made the victim the object of such violence with primary purpose of this killing to instil terror in the civilian population in Kenema Town.

viii. Killing of Brima S. Massaquoi and others – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1425. para. 622: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of the two policemen, Alex Bao and Adesanya Sanya Hyde regarding the circumstances surrounding the death of B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee, Issa Ansumana, Abdulai Bockarie and John Swanay, credible and reliable. Both witnesses were deployed as policemen at Kenema Police Station during the period of May 1997-February 1998 when the arrests, detention and killing of the prisoners took place, Their testimony is corroborated by the Kenema Police Diary documenting the arrest, detention and release of the prisoners by the police into the custody of the AFRC/RUF, which information was not challenged. Although the evidence of these two witnesses as to who killed the prisoners is partly circumstantial and partly based on hearsay or "widespread rumour", the Trial Chamber finds that the circumstances surrounding these deaths, including the initial arrest, detention and torture of the prisoners by the AFRC/RUF fighters in Kenema; the unsubstantiated accusations by Sam Bockarie that the prisoners were "Kamajor supporters" and his threat to execute them; Bockarie's furious conduct upon learning that the police had released the prisoners and his ordering their re-detention and repeated threat to execute them immediately prior to the ECOMOG Intervention; and the dumping of the prisoners' bullet-riddled bodies in a river, all lead to one reasonable inference that the AFRC/RUF juntas led by Sam Bockarie intentionally killed the prisoners on suspicion that they were Kamajor supporters.

1426. para. 623: Furthermore, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Karmoh Kanneh an RUF insider closely associated with Sam Bockarie and based at the RUF headquarters in Kenema Town at the material time, and finds it credible. His evidence relating to the arrest detention and torture of the prisoners on the orders of Sam Bockarie, is consistent with other Prosecution evidence. More importantly, his eye-witness account of the killing of Massaquoi by Bockarie's security men corroborates the earlier circumstantial evidence discussed above. The hearsay evidence of other Prosecution and Defence witnesses referred to above and the content of the two reports quoted above are further corroboration of these killings. Although there are variations in the names of the prisoners as given by the various witnesses, the Trial Chamber is of the view that a number of prominent civilians were executed on this occasion but that most witnesses recall the most prominent of the deceased persons, namely B.S. Massaquoi. Other witnesses including Kanneh recall particular prisoners like Dr Momoh and Ibrahim Gbacka having known them before. The Trial Chamber also finds the timing of the arrest, detention and killing of these civilians relevant. These events took place immediately after the AFRC/RUF forces had been driven out of Freetown by the ECOMOG forces and at a time when the AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema were anticipating a similar attack and defeat by ECOMOG and Kamajor forces in Kenema. The victims, suspected or perceived by the AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema to have been supporters of "the enemy forces" (albeit without proof), were thus killed in revenge or reprisal for perceived support of the Junta's enemies.

1427. para. 624: Based on the above oral and documentary evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early February 1998 in Kenema Town, AFRC/RUF forces led by Sam Bockarie intentionally killed a number of civilians not taking an active part in hostilities, including B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee, Issa Ansumana, Abdulai Bockarie and John Swanay. Given the timing and circumstances of these deaths described above, the Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with the primary purpose of these killings to instil terror in the civilian population.

b. Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of three persons in residential house – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Unlawful killings 1428. para. 627: The Trial Chamber finds the eye-witness account of TF1-062 credible. The evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators carried out these killings in reprisal against persons they perceived or suspected to be enemies of the Junta forces. Based on that evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in August 1997 in Tongo Fields, RUF/AFRC fighters intentionally shot to death three civilians that were not taking an active part in the hostilities. Given that the perpetrators accused the victims of being "Kamajors" at a time when the AFRC/RUF forces were under threat of attack from ECOMOG and the Kamajors, the Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with primary purpose of these killings to instil terror in the civilian population by making an example of would-be enemies of the Junta forces, thereby guaranteeing civilian loyalty.

ii. Killing of 15 civilians at Bumpe near Tongo Fields around September 1997 – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1429. para. 631: The Trial Chamber finds Conteh's testimony credible. As a prominent member of the Lower Bambara Care-Taking Committee that was charged with overseeing the welfare of the citizens of the Chiefdom, he was privy to vital information regarding the treatment of these citizens by the AFRC/RUF administration. Oftentimes he not only documented the complaints received but also personally investigated some of them. The reports cited above corroborate his oral testimony with regard to the 15 deaths in Bumpe and the two deaths in Panguma. Based on that evidence the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around 8 September 1997, at Bumpe on the outskirts of Tongo Fields, AFRC/RUF fighters retreating from battle intentionally shot and killed 15 civilians including one Saffa Balie, who were not taking an active part in the hostilities. In addition, the Trial Chamber tinds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around 16 September 1997 at Panguma, AFRC/RUF fighters retreating from battle intentionally shot and killed Pa Vandi Sei, the Town Chief and John Dakowah, a retired Policeman, both of whom were civilians not taking an active part in the hostilities. However since the Prosecution did not specifically plead Panguma as a crime base in the Indictment, the evidence in relation to the two deaths at Panguma serves only to prove the Chapeau requirements of murder within Kenema District.[1509]

1430. para. 632: The above evidence establishes that the AFRC/RUF forces carried out revenge killings after suffering heavy casualties during a previous military operation against the Kamajors Civil Defence force. In this instance, the perpetrators, including Lt. Sekou Kunnateh, the O/C of the AFRC Secretariat at Tongo, justified the killing of innocent civilians by branding them "Kamajors or Kamajor collaborators" and preventing the other civilians from burying the dead by threatening them with death. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with the primary purpose of these killings to instil terror in the civilian population, thereby guaranteeing their loyalty.

iii. Killing of civilians engaged in mining at Pandembu, Sandeyeima and Wuima in Tongo Fields Area – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1431. para. 635: Conteh's evidence, although partly circumstantial, and partly based on the reports that he received from citizens of Tongo in his capacity as a member of the Care-Taker Committee, is credible. He and other members of the Lower Bambara Care-Taking Committee visited the scene of the shooting at Pandembu and saw the bullet riddled corpses as well as the wounded survivors. Although Conteh did not see the child combatants in action and was merely told about it, the response of Lt. Sekou Kunnateh, the O/C of the AFRC Secretariat in Tongo confinns the report that Conteh received, namely, that Sam Bockarie sent the child combatants to kill those civilians that were mining diamonds for themselves. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that during the Junta's occupation of Tongo Fields,[1519] AFRC/RUF child combatants acting under the orders of Sam Bockarie and with the approval of Lt. Sekou Kunnateh, intentionally shot and killed three civilians at Pandembu, two civilians at Sandeyeima and three civilians at Wuima, all of whom were not taking an active part in hostilities.

1432. para. 636: Given the slave-like conditions under which the AFRC/RUF Junta forced civilians to mine for them and forbade them from mining for personal benefit, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with the primary purpose of the killing of the civilian miners in Tongo Fields to instil terror in the civilian population, thereby guaranteeing their continued servitude and continuing to control the mining activities in the District.

iv. Killing of civilian miners at Cyborg Pit – Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1433. para. 640: The testimony of TF1-062 regarding the various killings at Cyborg Pit is an eyewitness account. His role as supervisor of his miners accorded him a rare opportunity to observe the manner in which the AFRC/RUF commanders and guards were treating the civilian miners on site. His testimony in relation to the death of the child miner and that of the civilian killed by an angry soldier are therefore credible and reliable. As regards the two or three corpses that he observed being brought out of the pit on a regular basis, the witness's account is based on circumstantial evidence. Although he could not say whether the oozing of blood on these corpses was the result of bullet wounds or knife stabbings, nor attest to hearing any gunshots inside the pit, the Trial Chamber is of the view that these miners did not die from natural causes and must have met their death violently inside the pit. Secondly, since the only people armed at Cyborg Pit were the AFRC/RUF guards and since they were at liberty to mete out punishment or even death to disobedient or uncooperative miners, the only reasonable inference is that these civilians were killed by these guards. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between 11 August 1997 and January 1998 at Cyborg Pit in the Tongo Fields area, RUF/AFRC guards intentionally killed an unknown number of civilian miners including a child, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1434. para. 641: Given the slave-like conditions under which the AFRC/RUF Junta forced civilians to mine for them and forbade them from mining for personal benefit, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence with the primary purpose of the killing of the civilian miners at Cyborg Pit to instil terror in the civilian population, thereby guaranteeing their continued servitude and continuing to control the mining activities in the District.

c. Alleged unlawful killings in locations in Kenema District not pleaded in the Indictment

1435. para. 642: The Trial Chamber received credible evidence of murder of civilians in a number of locations within Kenema District not specifically pleaded in the Indictment including, Mendekelema, Neama and Sandaru.[1531] As previously held, this evidence will only be taken into account in relation to the chapeau requirements of the alleged crimes and not for proof of guilt.[1532]

d. Conclusion – Unlawful Killings – Kenema District

1436. para. 643: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between about 25 May 1997 and about 31 March 1998, in various locations in Kenema District including Kenema Town and the Tongo Fields area, members of the AFRC/RUF murdered an unknown number of civilians in Kenema District, as charged in the Indictment[1533] and as shown in the above evidence.

1437. para. 644: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[1534] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the killings proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kenema District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[1535] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned killings in Kenema District there was a nexus between the killings and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned killings in Kenema District constitute murder as both a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute and a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(vi) Kono District – Unlawful killings

a. Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of civilians at Yardo Road, Hill Station and Superman Ground in February/March 1998 – Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1438. para. 658: Alimamy Bobson Sesay was part of the AFRC forces that fled from Freetown after the February 1998 ECOMOG Intervention who were based in Koidu Town. He not only participated in the meetings at which certain operational orders were given by senior commanders but he also participated in the carrying out of those orders. The Trial Chamber finds Bobson Sesay's above evidence reliable and credible. Isaac Mongor was also part of the RUF forces that were based in Koidu Town after the ECOMOG Intervention. Like Bobson Sesay, Mongor too was privy to operational orders that were issued by senior RUF or AFRC commanders. The Trial Chamber finds his above evidence credible and reliable, and that it corroborates the account of Bobson Sesay. TF1-189 was captured by the AFRC/RUF rebels and her testimony is based on her experience in captivity and on what she saw and heard. The Trial Chamber finds her above evidence reliable and credible. The Trial Chamber also finds the evidence of TF1-375 reliable and credible. His eye-witness account is based on his participation in the operations of the AFRC/RUF forces that captured Koidu Town. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber finds that the accounts related by each of the four witnesses relating to the attacks by the AFRC/RUF on civilians in Koidu Town in the months following the ECOMOG Intervention, are consistent and accord with the documentary evidence contained in Exhibits P-366 and P-078.

1439. para. 659: Based on the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early March 1998 at Yardo Road in Koidu Town, AFRC/RUF forces acting on the orders of SAJ Musa, Johnny Paul Koroma and Issa Sesay, intentionally shot and killed an unknown number of civilians, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1440. para. 660: Based on the evidence oflsaac Mongor, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early March 1998 at Hill Station in Koidu Town, an RUF commander called Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) intentionally shot and killed 13 civilians including men, women and children, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1441. para. 661: Based on the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-189, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early March 1998 at a location named "Superman compound" in Koidu Town, AFRC/RUF forces acting under the orders of Superman, intentionally shot and killed a woman; tortured to death an elderly man, and executed an unknown number of abducted civilians, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1442. para. 662: Based on the evidence of TF1-375 and the documentary evidence above, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early March 1998 AFRC/RUF forces acting under the command of Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), deliberately burned to death an unknown number of civilians who were hiding in their houses and who were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1443. para. 663: The above oral and documentary evidence clearly establishes that the perpetrators acting in accordance with orders given by their commanders, deliberately targeted civilians in Koidu Town in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Koidu Town and in order to maintain the diamond-rich Kono District as a strong Junta base from which the AFRC/RUF fighters would finance and mount further attacks upon their enemies including ECOMOG and the CDF or Kamajors. In light of that evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings to instil terror in the civilian population.

ii. Killing of civilians in and around Koidu Town between April and May 1998 – Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1444. para. 670: Teh spent some time with the AFRC/RUF forces while in captivity and witnessed some of their activities first hand. His evidence is based on an eye-witness account of what he saw and heard. The Trial Chamber finds his evidence in relation to the killing of civilians in Koidu Town between March and April 1998, reliable and credible. His evidence of how civilians were sometimes tricked by the AFRC/RUF forces into believing that the latter were ECOMOG, only to be killed by the rebels, is corroborated by the account given in Exhibit P-078 and confidential Exhibit P-077. Based on the above evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between April and May 1998 during an attack on Koidu Town: 1) AFRC/RUF forces intentionally shot and killed one Aiah Abu at Sunna Mosque in Koidu Town; 2) an RUF Commander Emmanuel Williams a.k.a. "Rocky" acting under the orders of an AFRC Brigade commander called "Rambo", intentionally executed 101 captured men and had their bodies decapitated at a place called the Igbaleh in Koidu Town, and 3) child soldiers known as SBUs acting under the orders of Commander Emmanuel Williams a.k.a. "Rocky" intentionally dismembered and killed a young boy and threw his body in a pit latrine at the Igbaleh in Koidu Town. The Trial Chamber further finds that all the victims of the above-mentioned killings were civilians not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1445. para. 671: However, in relation to the 50 corpses that Teh saw on his way to Igbaleh, the Prosecution did not provide evidence as to whether the victims were active combatants or civilians, nor of who had killed them. Given Teh's testimony that heavy fighting was reportedly going on between ECOMOG and the Junta forces in the area at the time,[1613] the Trial Chamber is unable to make a conclusive finding as to who these 50 people were or how they died.

1446. para. 672: The above oral and documentary evidence clearly establishes that the perpetrators, acting in accordance with orders given by their commanders, deliberately targeted civilians in Koidu Town in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Koidu Town. The deliberate tricking of civilians into showing their support for ECOMOG followed by mass execution of those civilians by the AFRC/RUF forces underlines the campaign of reprisal against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings was to instil terror in the civilian population.

iii. Other killings around Koidu Town between December 1999 and the disarmament – Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1447. para. 674: The account by TF1-077 of civilian deaths, including that of one of his children, is based on circumstantial evidence. From his evidence it is clear that there was exchange of fire between ECOMOG and the RUF forces the previous night. He was fortunate enough to survive by hiding behind his house, but the presence of many corpses the next morning is proof that a lot of civilians died during this exchange. His own child was amongst the casualties. Based on this evidence however, the Trial Chamber cannot rule out the possibility that the civilians were accidentally caught in the cross fire, nor can the Trial Chamber rule out the possibility that some were killed by ECOMOG forces. The Trial Chamber however, finds the witness's evidence regarding the death of civilians forced by the RUF to mine at Tombudu Bridge, credible. Based on that evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved that from December 1999 until the disarmament, RUF forces intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians who refused to mine for the AFRC/RUF at Tombudu Bridge or who were denied medical treatment.

1448. para. 675: Given the slave-like conditions under which the AFRC/RUF Junta forced civilians to mine for them and forbade them from mining for personal benefit, the Trial Chamber tinds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the killing of the civilians who refused to carry out forced mining at Tombodu Bridge was to instil terror in the civilian population and thereby to continue controlling the mining activities in Kono District.

b. Bumpe – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings in Bumpe between March and June 1998 – Bumpe – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1449. para. 682: Based on his aforesaid position within the AFRC/RUF and his participation in their operations in Kono District, the Trial Chamber finds Bobson Sesay's above evidence reliable and credible. The Trial Chamber also tlnds that Sesay's evidence is amply corroborated by the evidence of Alice Pyne and TF1-375. Further, the Trial Chamber finds the account given by TF1-218 credible. Although her account of the civilian deaths is based partly on her ordeal while in captivity and partly on the report by her son who witnessed the killings, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence compelling and draws the one reasonable inference that the rebels shot and killed many civilians in this house at Cookery Junction. The Trial Chamber also found the evidence of Perry Kamara credible and reliable, given his position within the RUF at that time. His description of the orders by the various RUF commanders to "make Kono District fearful" is consistent with the evidence of Bobson Sesay.

1450. para. 683: Thus while the actual number of civilian deaths in Bumpe is unknown, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between March and June 1998, during an attack on Bumpe, the AFRC/RUF forces acting under the orders of several commanders including Lt. Amara Kallay, Hassan Papa Bangura, Superman, Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon, CO Rocky and others, intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1451. para. 684: The above evidence clearly establishes that the perpetrators acting in accordance with orders given by their commanders to "make Kono fearful", deliberately targeted civilians in Bumpe in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Bumpe. That campaign of terror entailed not only murders but also the burning down of homes; mass amputations and the bizarre display of human heads on sticks at various checkpoints. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings was to instil terror in the civilian population.

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Massacre of more than 20 civilians in Tombodu around March or April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings 1452. para. 686: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a participant in this attack, credible and reliable. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around March or April 1998 the AFRC/RUF forces that attacked Tombodu intentionally massacred more than 20 civilians in Tombodu, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1453. para. 687: The above evidence clearly establishes that the perpetrators, acting in accordance with orders given by their commanders to "make Kono fearful", deliberately targeted civilians in Tombudu in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Tombodu. The deliberate tricking of civilians into showing their support for what they believed were "Government forces", followed by mass execution of those civilians by the AFRC/RUF forces, demonstrates the Juntas' reprisal against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings was to instil terror in the civilian population.

ii. Second Massacre at Tombudu involving 77-78 civilians around April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1454. para. 691: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay credible as he was an eye-witness to the killings. Furthennore, his evidence is corroborated by that of TF1-375, who saw the large pit containing bodies of civilians and severed limbs, and of Perry Kamara who received reports of the civilian killings. Based on the above evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around April 1998, AFRC/RUF forces led by Savage, and with the approval of commanders Superman and Bomb Blast, intentionally killed about 63 civilians in Tombodu, that were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1455. para. 692: The evidence establishes that the AFRC/RUF Juntas acting in accordance with orders earlier given by their commanders to "make Kono fearful", deliberately targeted the civilian population in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Tombodu. Furthermore, the circumstances surrounding these killings, including the deliberate tricking of civilians into believing that the rebels were ECOMOG forces that had come to their rescue only to then massacre those civilians; the indiscriminate amputations accompanied by sarcastic messages to the ruling Government; as well as the public disposal of numerous dead bodies into an open pit, demonstrate the rebel campaign of reprisal and terror against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings was to instil terror in the civilian population.

iii. Third Massacre of over 53 civilians in Tombudu in April 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings 1456. para. 697: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of both Mustapha Mansaray and Ibrahim Fofana reliable and credible. Although Mansaray's account of the events differs in a number of respects from that of Fofana,[1696] the Trial Chamber finds that their story is consistent and corroborated and is satisfied that the discrepancies in the witnesses' testimonies can be reasonably accounted for by the passage of time and the physical and emotional trauma suffered by both witnesses. Based on the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that in April 1998, AFRC/RUF forces under the orders of Staff Alhaji intentionally caused the deaths of 56 civilians in Tombodu, including 53 who were burned inside a building and 3 who subsequently died from amputations.

iv. Killings of civilians in and around Tombodu between March and May 1998 – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1458. para. 702: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of both witnesses above credible and reliable as they each give an eye-witness account of what they saw and heard. Based on the evidence of TF 1-064, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between April and May 1998 in Foendor near Tombodu. AFRC/RUF fighters pretending to be ECOMOG, beheaded an unknown number of civilians including two of the witnesses' children and that soon thereafter an AFRC/RUF fighter named Capay intentionally killed a Temne man in Tombodu by slitting his throat. The Trial Chamber also finds that all the civilians murdered were not taking an active part in the hostilities. The Trial Chamber notes however, that since Foender is a location not pleaded in the Indictment, the evidence relating to the civilian deaths there can only be used to prove the chapeau requirements of the crime of murder and not for guilt.[1728]

1459. para. 703: Although Bindi's account of the death of three civilians at Staff Alhaji's veranda is based on circumstantial evidence, the Trial Chamber finds, based on the screams and pleading that B indi heard; the threats of death made against him; the state of the corpses and the method of their disposal; that the only reasonable inference is that these civilians were murdered by the AFRC/RUF forces under the command of Staff Alhaji, who as the Trial Chamber has noted above, routinely killed civilians and threw their bodies into a pit named the "Savage pit". Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between April and May 1998 in Tombodu, AFRC/RUF forces under the command of Staff Alhaji, intentionally killed three civilians who were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1460. para. 704: The above evidence further illustrates the campaign of terror waged by the AFRC/RUF forces in carrying out indiscriminate abductions and killings of innocent civilians in Kono District around this time. The bizarre practice of beheading victims and forcing civilians to carry the heads in a bag from one place to another, as well as the cruelty of forcing a mother to "laugh" at her own children's beheading, are acts that demonstrate the brutality of the AFRC/RUF forces. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of these killings was to instil terror in the civilian population.

d. Koidu Geiya or Koidu Gieya – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings of civilians at Koidu Geiya around May to June 1998 – Koidu Geiya or Koidu Gieya – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1461. para. 709: The Trial Chamber finds the testimony of Alimamy Bobson Sesay more reliable with regard to the attack on Koidu Gieya as it is based on first-hand knowledge of the attack. The testimony of TF1-375 although based partly on hearsay and partly on circumstantial evidence, is also credible and reliable given his aforesaid position in the RUF at that time. Moreover, the destruction of Koidu Geiya that he described seeing, including corpses of civilians, accords with evidence that the Trial Chamber has considered above of the campaign of terror that the AFRC/RUF routinely carried out whenever they wanted to scare off the civilian population. The irresistible inference to be drawn is that the RUF forces that had carried out the attack on Koidu Geiya had deliberately killed these civilians. Pyne's evidence although based largely on hearsay, is corroborated by that of Bobson Sesay and TF 1-375. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that during their attack on Koidu Geiya around MaylJune 1998, AFRC/RUF fighters intentionally caused the deaths of an unknown number of civilians including children and one Kamajor, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1462. para. 710: The evidence establishes that consistent with the rebel Commanders' orders to "make the area fearful", the rebel perpetrators targeted civilians by burning their homes, killing many indiscriminately and amputating others in Koidu Geiya. The bizarre act by one of the rebels ("Charma-Raw") of publicly eating a raw human heart demonstrates the campaign of terror that served as a warning to the civilian population not to oppose the Junta forces. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the killings in Koidu Geiya was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

e. Koidu Buma – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings of civilians at Koidu Buma around May to June 1998 – Koidu Buma – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1463. para. 712: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Al imamy Bobson Sesay regarding the deaths of the 15 civilians in Koidu Burna, credible and reliable, as it is based on the corpses of civilians he saw and the explanation given by Rambo. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in May/June 1998, and with the approval of Commanders Hassan Papa Bangura, Bazzy and Superman, RUF Rambo intentionally caused the death of 15 civilians during an attack on Koidu Burna, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1464. para. 713: The evidence establishes that, consistent with the rebel commanders'orders to "make the area fearful", the aim of the rebel commander known as RUF Rambo in targeting these 15 civilians and displaying their corpses in the street was "to create fear so that no civilian would come to that area". The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrator wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the killings in Koidu Burna was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

f. Yengema – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings of civilians at Yengema around March/April 1998 – Yengema – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1465. para. 715: Based on his aforesaid position within the AFRC/RUF forces; what he was told during the patrols and the explanation he was given by Commander Tito, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay credible and reliable. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in March/April 1998 during an attack on Yengema, AFRC/RUF forces under the command of Tito and with the approval of patrol commander Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast), intentionally caused the death of an unknown number of civilians, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1466. para. 716: The evidence establishes that consistent with the orders of their superior commanders to "make the area fearful", the AFRC/RUF forces routinely mounted attacks upon civilians in many towns within Kono District including Yen gem a, which attacks involved burning of houses and killing of civilians, and the macabre practice of displaying dead bodies and human heads on sticks was an integral part of these attacks. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the killings in Yengema was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

ii. Killing of civilians at the Yengema Training base between December 1998 and January 2000 – Yengema – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1467. para. 721: Based on her position in the RUF and particularly at Yengema training base, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence of TF1-362 relating to the mistreatment and killing of civilians at the training base, credible and reliable. That evidence establishes that civilian recruits of all ages were regularly mistreated by the RUF trainers at the Yengema base and that many died in the course of training as a result of this mistreatment. The evidence of Mustapha Mansaray, although based on hearsay, confirms the account of TF1-362, who was present at Yengema training base when five civilian recruits were shot to death for attempting to escape. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between the end of 1998 and the disarmament in 2000 at Yengema training base, Issa Sesay and his body guards intentionally executed five civilians. The Trial Chamber further finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that RUF forces under the command of Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie regularly intentionally killed civilian recruits at Yengema training base as a form of punishment for attempting to escape or during food finding missions. The Trial Chamber also finds that these civilians were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1468. para. 722: Furthermore, the evidence shows that the execution of civilians caught trying to escape from the training base, or those trying to protect their food from being looted by the fighters, served as a warning to those who would dare to disobey the RUF fighters. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the purpose of the killings at the Yengema Training base was to instil terror amongst the civilian population, thereby ensuring the continued loyalty of the abducted trainees.

g. Paema or Peyima – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings of civilians in Paema around March/April 1998 – Paema or Peyima - Kono District – Unlawful killings

1469. para. 729: Ibrahim Fofana is a witness who suffered much physical and emotional trauma during the conflict, arising from the double amputations he sustained and the loss of his mother and children, amongst others. The Trial Chamber finds his evidence credible and compelling, notwithstanding the inconsistencies therein raised by the Defence. Those inconsistencies were well explained by the witness in cross-examination. Fofana's description of "Operation No Living Thing" is corroborated by the account given by Amnesty International in their report cited previously. Based on that testimony, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around March/April 1998, rebel soldiers of the AFRC/RUF who attacked Paema intentionally killed a number of civilians including Ali Bangali, Sori, Pa Janneh, Mammy Isatu, Isatu Bangura, Kadiatu Fofana, Mohammed Fofana and Dauda Fofana, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1470. para. 730: The above evidence establishes that the perpetrators went on a rampage in the villages, indiscriminately looting civilian property and killing innocent civilians, in accordance with superior orders by rebel commanders to leave "no living thing" in the area. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murder of civilians at Paema was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

h. Bomboa Foidu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings of civilians in Bomboa Fuidu around March/April 1998 – Bomboa Fuidu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1471. para. 735: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witnesses Musa Koroma and Alhaji Tejan Cole credible and reliable. The witnesses corroborate each other in all material respects. That evidence shows that the rebels deliberately targeted and killed a number of civilians including an old Limba woman, one Pa Saiyo and two amputees who died on their way to seek help, The Trial Chamber also finds that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities. Based on the evidence of the manner of dress and languages spoken by the rebels, the Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators were a mixed group of AFRC/RUF rebels. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in April 1998 during an attack on Bomboa Fuidu, AFRC/RUF rebels intentionally caused the death of several civilians including an old Limba woman, one Pa Saiyo and two amputees, all of whom were not taking an active part in hostilities.

1472. para. 736: The Trial Chamber further finds that the manner of the rebel attack, often surprising civilians at night when they were asleep in their homes; the indiscriminate killings, including the ritualistic murder of a helpless old woman; and the indiscriminate amputation of innocent civilians accompanied by sarcastic messages to "President Kabbah to give them new arms", are all acts that demonstrate the campaign of terror waged by the rebel forces against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Bomboa Fuidu was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

i. Njaima Nimikoro or Nimikoro – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of civilians in Nimikoro between February and June 1998 – Njaima Nimikoro or Nimikoro – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1473. para. 739: The Trial Chamber is of the view that by virtue of his position as radio operator, Perry Mohammed was in a position to receive regular reports on the activities of the RUF forces that were based in Kono District after the ECOMOG Intervention. Thus although his evidence is based on reports and messages that he received from the fighters rather than on his own participation in the RUF operations in Nimikoro, the Trial Chamber finds that evidence credible and reliable. That evidence shows that the RUF forces in Nimikoro, like their colleagues elsewhere in Kono District, carried out a terror campaign against the civilian population in Nimikoro which involved the killing of civilians. The Trial Chamber also finds the evidence of Emmanuel Bull regarding the murder of seven old persons by the AFRC/RUF forces at Njaima Nimikoro, also credible and reliable. Although essentially circumstantial, his account leads to one reasonable conclusion that the seven senior citizens were murdered. Based on this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF that attacked Njaima Nimikoro around April 1998, acting in accordance with the orders of their commanders including Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon, CO Rocky, Cobra and Bobby, intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians, including seven senior citizens, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1474. para. 740: The Trial Chamber further finds that in wantonly murdering innocent civilians, carrying out amputations and destroying civilian property in Nimikoro, the perpetrators were carrying out the orders of their superior commanders to "make the area fearful". The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murder of civilians at Nimikoro or Njaima Nimikoro was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

j. Mortema – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of civilians in Mortema (or Motema) between February and June 1998 – Mortema – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1475. para. 746: The Trial Chamber finds both Samuel Bull and Tamba Mondeh to be credible witnesses. Their accounts are consistent, although at times diverged in details based on their different vantage points. Although Mondeh was, due to illiteracy, unable to give the date of the attack on Mortema, he made it clear that it was sometime after the ECOMOG Intervention. Samuel Bull however, placed the time of this attack around at 12 June 1998. The evidence also shows that these were reprisal killings against the civilians whom the rebels perceived to support ECOMOG. Based on the evidence of these two witnesses the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around 12 June 1998, AFRC/RUF rebels led by "Fixo Bio" intentionally executed 17-25 civilians at the Bull residence in Mortema, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1476. para. 747: The evidence further shows that the perpetrators. in preying upon sleeping civilians at night and wantonly shooting them. were carrying out the orders of their superior commanders to "make the area fearful". Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murder of civilians in Mortema was to instil terror in the civilian population there.

k. Alleged unlawful killings in Other Locations in Kono District not pleaded in the Indictment

l. Conclusion – Unlawful killings – Kono District

Yengema, Paema or Peyima, Bomboafuidu, Nimikoro or Njaiama Nimikoro and Mortema, members of the AFRC/RUF murdered an unknown number of civilians, as charged in the Indictmentl871 and as shown by the evidence.

1479. para. 750: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[1872] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the killings proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kono District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[1873] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned killings in Kono District there was a nexus between the killings and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned killings in Kono District constitute murder as both a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute and a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(vii) Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

i. Massacre of around 60-65 civilians in Kailahun Town in February 1998 – Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1480. para. 768: The Trial Chamber finds the above evidence consistent. In particular the evidence proves that after the ECOMOG Intervention of February 1998, AFRC/RUF Junta forces fled to Kailahun District where they were temporarily based. While there, Sam Bockarie, the RUF leader issued orders to the senior AFRC/RUF commanders to "defend Kailahun District" against their perceived enemies including ECOMOG and the Kamajors. The evidence further proves Sam Bockarie's distrust of the civilians from the Luawa and Bambara Chiefdoms, many of whom had fled their villages before the 25 May 1997 coup, but who had since returned to their homes having been encouraged by Bockarie to do so. Additionally, the evidence proves that around 60-65 unarmed male civilians from these two chiefdoms were arrested on suspicion of being Kamajors or Kamajor collaborators, on Bockarie's orders and interrogated by Augustine Gbao. The evidence further proves that Gbao's verdict against these civilians was based on mere suspicion and/or speculation that they were Kamajors or Kamajor collaborators and not as a result of due process. Moreover, the evidence proves that the executions in about mid to late February 1998 at the Kailahun Town roundabout and Military Police prison, were clearly reprisal killings by Sam Bockarie and AFRC/RUF forces acting under his orders, against unanned civilians that were perceived to be enemies of the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in about mid to late February 1998, the RUF forces under the command of Sam Bockarie intentionally killed around 60-65 civilians in Kailahun Town, all of whom were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1481. para. 769: The Trial Chamber further finds in view of the above evidence that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the Kailahun massacre, including the bizarre public display of human heads and rotting corpses of the victims, was to instil terror in the civilian population in Kailahun.

b. Conclusion – Unlawful killings – Kailahun District

1482. para. 770: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between about I February 1998 and about 30 June 1998, in various locations in Kailahun District including Kailahun Town, members of the AFRC/RUF murdered an unknown number of civilians, as charged in the Indictment l944 and as shown by the evidence.

1483. para. 771: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[1945] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the killings proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kailahun District fonned part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an anned conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[1946] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned killings in Kailahun District there was a nexus between the killings and the armed connict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned killings in Kailahun District constitute murder as both a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute and a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(viii) Freetown and the Western Area – Unlawful killings

a. Killing of civilians and ECOMOG soldiers around State House in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Unlawful killings

1484. para. 785: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara credible. Each of these witnesses took part in the Freetown invasion of 6 January 1999 and given their unique position among the invading forces, each was privy to the preparations that took place amongst the rebel troops immediately prior to that invasion. In particular each of them was present at State House during the first crucial hours after the take-over of power by the rebels and had a first-hand observation of what went on there. Bobson Sesay's testimony proves that on 6 January 1999 at the State House washing bay in Freetown, a rebel commander called Major Tito acting on the orders of Commander Alex Tamba Brima a.k.a. Gullit, intentionally killed 20 Nigerian soldiers who were hors de combat. The evidence further proves that on the same day at State House, rebel forces made of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters intentionally killed over 20 civilians that were not taking an active part in the hostilities, as punishment for "disrespecting" the rebel forces. The evidence of Perry Kamara, which largely corroborates that of Bobson Sesay, proves beyond reasonable doubt that on 6 January 1999 at the Cotton Tree near State House, rebel forces made of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters acting on the orders of Gullit and Sam Bockarie intentionally killed at least 10-15 Nigerian soldiers who were hors de combat and an unknown number of civilians that were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1486. para. 787: The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between 6 and 8 January 1999 at State House in Freetown, rebel forces including members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters intentionally killed (i) at least 35 Nigerian soldiers who were hors de combat at the time of death; and (ii) at least 55 civilians that were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1487. para. 788: The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators were acting in accordance with the orders of the top Commander Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) to carry out indiscriminate killings, mass abductions and raping of civilians, and burning and destruction of civilian and public property in Freetown during this period as part of the campaign of terror waged against the

b. Unlawful killing of civilians in Kissy area around January 1999 – Freetown and the Western area

1488. para. 805: The Trial Chamber finds, based on the reliable and credible evidence of Mohamed Sesay, that the Prosecution proved that (i) around 12 January 1999 at PWD near Ferry Junction, two civilian men were intentionally killed in a ritualistic murder by the invading rebel forces described by the witness as "rebels and SLAs"; (ii) that around 15 January 1999 at Falcon Street, an RUF rebel called Issa Conteh intentionally killed an old civilian woman as part of "Operation No Living Thing"; (iii) that around 18 January 1999 at the house of one Abbas, a rebel called "Commando" intentionally shot and killed 8 young civilian men who had refused to surrender their hands to him for amputation; (iv) and that on the same occasion rebels acting under the orders of "Commando" intentionally hacked to death 5 other civilian men who had similarly refused to surrender their hands to him for amputation. The Trial Chamber also finds based on the credible evidence of TF1-098 that (v) on 18 January 1999 a rebel called Tommy intentionally amputated and caused the death of one civilian at Fataraman Street in Kissy. Additionally, the Trial Chamber finds based on the credible evidence of Ibrahim Wai that (vi) in January 1999, rebels led by a commander called Captain Blood intentionally killed a civilian named Brima who was set ablaze in his house at Kissy. The Trial Chamber further finds based on the credible evidence of TF1-104 that (vii) in January 1999, at the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy, AFRC/RUF junta forces under the command of Captain Blood intentionally executed 17 civilians including Ike the Nigerian businessman and another civilian shot at a nearby cemetery. The Trial Chamber further finds that none of the civilian victims in the above instances was taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1489. para. 806: The Trial Chamber further finds, based on the reliable and credible evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay (viii) that in the third week of January 1999, rebels comprising members of the AFRC, RUF, STF and other Liberian fighters acting on the orders of Commanders Gullit, Rambo Red Goat and Bajehjeh, intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians at Kissy Market and Low Cost area in Kissy whom they suspected of supporting ECOMOG; and (ix) that on 22 January 1999 after the massacre at Rogbalan mosque, a rebel called Foday Bah Marrah (a.k.a. Bulldoze) acting on the orders of Gullit, intentionally shot and killed four white nuns. The Trial Chamber finds that none of the civilians in the above instances were taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1490. para. 807: The Trial Chamber further finds, based on the reliable and credible evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay as corroborated by Witnesses TF1-021; TF1-083; Corinne Dufka and Exhibit P-328 that (x) on 22 January 1999 at Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy, rebels including members of the AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters under the command of Gullit, Five-Five, Rambo Red Goat and Bajehjeh, intentionally killed over 60 civilians who had taken refuge in the mosque, on suspicion that they were harbouring ECOMOG forces. The Trial Chamber also finds that none of the civilians in this instance was taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1491. para. 808: Further the Trial Chamber takes note of evidence relating to comments by rebel commander Gullit inciting the rebel forces to "burn all the houses and kill all the remaining civilians" in Kissy, all of whom he perceived to have "betrayed the AFRC/RUF". The Trial Chamber particularly takes note of the indiscriminate killing of innocent civilians including Catholic nuns, women and children seeking refuge in places of worship like the Rogbalan Mosque. The Trial Chamber also takes particular note of the public or ritualistic execution of the civilians often by gruesome means as hacking by axe or machete, and the declaration of "Operation No Living Thing" as means by which the rebels terrified the civilian population. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Kissy was to instil terror in the civilian population.

c. Unlawful killings of civilians in Fourah Bay in late January 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area

1492. para. 813: The Trial Chamber further finds, based on the reliable and credible evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay (i) that in the second week of January 1999, three civilian Government officials including Dr Daboe and two Ministers, were intentionally killed at Ferry Junction on the orders of Gullit as punishment for being "collaborators" of the Government; and (ii) that in the third week of January 1999, rebels comprising members of the AFRC, RUF, STF and other Liberian fighters acting on the orders of Commanders Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five intentionally killed an unknown number of civilian in Fourah Bay area by either burning them alive inside of their homes, or by forcing them outside of their homes and killing them, in revenge for an AFRC fighter that had been killed in the area. The Trial Chamber further finds based on the documentary evidence in Exhibit P-077 (iii) that around 21 January 1999 at Fourah Bay Road, retreating rebels intentionally killed three civilian children. The Trial Chamber also finds that none of the civilians in the above instances was taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1493. para. 814: Further the Trial Chamber finds based on the above evidence that the civilian killings in Fourah Bay area were part of the reprisal killings by the rebel forces as they fled Freetown. In this regard, the Trial Chamber takes note of comments by rebel commanders that the captured Government officials were "collaborators" who deserved to die and that the civilians of Fourah Bay also deserved to die for killing an AFRC fighter. The Trial Chamber particularly takes note of the public display of the bodies of the three Government officials at Ferry Junction and the random burnings and amputations that accompanied the civilian killings, as means by which the rebels terrified the civilian population. The Trial Chamber finds, based on the above oral and documentary evidence that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Fourah Bay was to instil terror in the civilian population.

d. Unlawful killing of civilians in Calaba Town in the third week of January 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area

1494. para. 830: The Trial Chamber finds the above first-hand evidence credible and reliable. While Bobson Sesay participated in the Calaba Town attack, the other witnesses were civilian victims of the attack and gave first-hand accounts of their experiences. Based on the above evidence the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence proves that around 18 to 22 January 1999, on the orders of commanders Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five, members of the RUF, AFRC, STF and former NPFL fighters led by Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast), Rambo Red Goat, Med Bejehjeh and the witness, intentionally massacred hundreds of civilians at Calaba Town by shooting, burning or hacking them to death including (i) a civilian nun who was intentionally shot dead by an AFRC commander called Tito, (ii) Otick and Ya Sampa who were civilians who were intentionally hacked to death with machetes and (iii) an ECOMOG soldier who was hors de combat was intentionally beheaded. The Trial Chamber finds that none of the victims in the above instances was taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1495. para. 831: Further the Trial Chamber is satisfied based on the above evidence that the civilian killings in Calaba Town were in reprisal for the defeat that the retreating Junta forces had suffered in Freetown. In this regard, the Trial Chamber takes note of the large numbers of Junta forces that participated in this attack, the mass abduction of civilians by the retreating rebel forces, the orders issued by rebel commanders Gullit "to burn as many buildings and capture as many civilians as possible along the way in order to force the Government to recognise them" and the comments by the rebels as they amputated Osman Jalloh and sent him "to tell Pa Kabbah and the ECOMOG that if they came to meet the fighters that they would be chopped in the same way". The Trial Chamber also takes note of the public display of the hundreds of corpses of men, women and children left strewn along the highway in the area. The Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders committed in Calaba Town was to instil terror in the civilian population.

e. Unlawful killing of civilians in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower Hill areas – Freetown and the Western Area

1496. para. 839: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Akiatu Tholley relating to the deaths she witnessed in Wellington too general and unreliable. Consequently, The Trial Chamber has not relied on her evidence in relation to the killings that took place in Wellington. The Trial Chamber however, finds her testimony credible in relation to (i) the killing of civilians she saw on the way from Wellington to Allen Town; (ii) the young girls she saw killed in a church for resisting rape and (iii) the death of the old woman shot in the forehead by a rebel called James. The Trial Chamber finds on the basis of the above evidence that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF/STF intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians in the vicinity of Wellington and Allen Town in January 1999.

1497. para. 840: The Trial Chamber further finds the first-hand evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay who took part in the rebel attacks, credible. That evidence proves that in the second and third weeks of January 1999, on the orders of Gullit, (i) rebels comprising members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians suspected of collaborating with ECOMOG forces, in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower Hill, an area referred to by the perpetrators as a "killing zone"; (ii) a rebel commander called Junior Lion intentionally executed several civilians in Tower Hill and, (iii) a rebel called "Captain Blood" intentionally beheaded seven young civilian men suspected of collaborating with ECOMOG, in Guard Street. The Trial Chamber finds on the basis of the above evidence that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in the second and third weeks of January 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower hill areas.

1498. para. 841: Further the Trial Chamber is satisfied based on the above evidence that the civilian killings in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower Hill, were in reprisal for the humiliating defeat suffered by the retreating Junta forces at the hands of the ECOMOG troops. In this regard, the Trial Chamber takes note of the large number of rebels that participated in this attack, the orders issued by rebel commander Gullit declaring this particular area a "killing zone wherein anybody who came around that area was considered an enemy and that person should die" because in his view, the civilians "had gone and called ECOMOG to base there". The Trial Chamber also notes that the civilian killings were often coupled with rampant amputations and burning of buildings in these areas as part of a deliberate plan to terrorise the civilians whom the Junta forces perceived to support their enemies including the Government, ECOMOG and the Kamajors. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Kingtom, Allen Town and Tower Hill, was to instil terror in the civilian population.

f. Unlawful killing of civilians in Tumbo – Freetown and the Western Area

1499. para. 843: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Ibrahim Wai credible. Although his evidence relating to the deaths in Turnbo is circumstantial in that he only saw the dead bodies of the six civilians when he came out of hiding and did not see the killers, the fact that AFRC and RUF rebels had attacked Turnbo the previous night looting, shooting and burning a lot of houses, points to one reasonable conclusion that these rebels were the cause of death of the three children of Pa Pratt as well as the death of three other civilians including Bai Usu's son. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC/RUF fighters led by Commander Mohammed (a.k.a. Captain Blood), intentionally killed six civilians including a 10 year-old boy, in Turnbo on 23 December 1998.

1500. para. 844: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the killings in Turnbo or Tombo were part of the campaign of reprisal and terror waged by the retreating Junta forces against the civilians of Freetown and the Western Area. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes that the widespread burnings, amputations and killings that occurred in Turnbo as the rebels advanced towards Freetown, the fact that these atrocities involved innocent civilians including children, and that one child's head was shattered by a bullet. The Trial Chamber also notes the rebel instructions to amputees to "go to Pa Kabbah who had brought many hands for the civilians", as indicative of the reprisals that civilians were subjected to for supposedly supporting President Kabbah's government or ECOMOG. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Turnbo was to instil terror in the civilian population.

g. Unlawful killing of civilians in Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area 1501. para. 853: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Witnesses TF1-028 and TF1-026 credible. They each spent a long time with the rebel forces in captivity during the rebel invasion of Freetown and moved with them during the withdrawal from Freetown. Their first hand evidence of civilians being indiscriminately killed by rebels in Waterloo is corroborated by the documentary evidence in Exhibits P-308, P-341A, and P-341B. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber also finds the evidence of Patrick Sheriff, who was a victim of rebel attacks on his village of Lumpa in Waterloo, credible. His evidence relating to the coordination of rebel attacks in Waterloo is corroborated by the description provided by Abubakar Sesay in Exhibits P-341 A and P-341 B. Based on the above oral and documentary evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between late December 1998 and February 1999 rebels, including members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters, attacked Waterloo and intentionally killed an unknown number of civilian men, women, children including (i) Mr Whenzle, the Secretary-General of the YWCA; (ii) Mr Kai, a Limba man and an old woman, who were summarily executed by Commander Peleto in Lumpa Village in Waterloo. The Trial Chamber finds that none of the victims in the above incidents were taking an active part in the hostilities.

1502. para. 854: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the evidence of such callous indifference to human life by the rebels clearly indicates that the killings in Waterloo were part of the campaign of reprisal and terror waged by the retreating Junta forces against the civilians of Freetown and the Western Area. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes the evidence of Sheriff referring to the fact that the rebels would attack in the early hours of the morning while civilians were sleeping in their homes, and that Commander Peleto, who used to go on regular killing rampages "every Friday", was greatly feared by the civilians. The Trial Chamber also notes the vindictive manner in which the rebels carried out massive burnings and afterwards lured back civilians who had fled the area, pretending to protect those civilians, only to harm or kill them. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators willfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Waterloo was to instil terror in the civilian population.

h. Unlawful killing of civilians in Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area

1503. para. 859: Given the major inconsistency in the evidence of TF1-023 relating to any alleged killings that she might have or have not seen committed in Wellington, the Trial Chamber cannot rely on that evidence. The Trial Chamber however, finds the evidence of TF1-026 reliable and credible. Based on that evidence the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between late December 1998 and February 1999 rebels, including members of the AFRC/RUF/STF and Liberian fighters, attacked Wellington and intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians including (i) the sister of TF1-026 who was shot and killed simply because she was crying; (ii) Mr Wilson, a crippled teacher who was burnt to death in his house; and (iii) another man who was shot to death on the way to Calaba Town. Based on the evidence of Sarah Koroma, the Trial Chamber also finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around mid-January 1999, AFRC/RUF rebels in Loko Town, Wellington, intentionally killed her husband and a six-year old girl, both civilians, by hacking them with machetes. The Trial Chamber finds that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

1504. para. 860: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the killings in Wellington were part of a campaign of reprisal and terror directed against the civilians of Freetown and the Western Area by the retreating Junta forces. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes the widespread burnings and amputations that accompanied the indiscriminate killing of innocent civilians in Wellington and the callous comments by rebels to amputees to "go and tell the people that the rebels were coming", or "tell Kabbah that they want peace" which comments coupled with the amputation were intended to instil fear in the civilian population perceived by the rebels to have voted Kabbah's Government into power. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of sllch violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Wellington was to instil terror in the civilian population.

i. Unlawful killing of civilians in Hastings – Freetown and the Western Area

j. Unlawful killing of civilians in Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area 1506. para. 867: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Witnesses TF1-143, TF1-029 and Paul Conteh credible. Based on that evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between December 1998 and February 1999 at Benguema, rebels including members of the AFRC/RUF intentionally killed an unknown number of civilians, including (i) a woman who was buried alive with the body of SAJ Musa as a sacrifice, (ii) a young woman killed by a rebel called "Coal Boot" or "Gun Boot", and (iii) babies travelling with the fighters were also killed because they were "making noise". The Trial Chamber finds that none of the victims in the above incidences was taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death.

1507. para. 868: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the killings at Benguema were part of a wider campaign of terror waged against the citizens of Freetown and the Western Area by AFRC/RUF forces. The Trial Chamber notes in this regard, the fact that civilians, including the said witnesses were captured and kept by the rebels against their will and often tortured, including TF1-143 who was at a young age branded with the letters "RUF" on his chest and sent out to fight, as well as the female victims of rape. The Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators wilfully made the victims the object of such violence and the primary purpose of the murders in Benguema was to instil terror in the civilian population.

k. Conclusion – Unlawful killings – Freetown and the Western Area

1508. para. 869: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between about 21 December 1998 and 28 February 1999, in various locations in Freetown and the Western Area including State House, Kissy, Fourah Bay, Upgun, Calaba Town, Allen Town, Tower Hill, Hastings, Wellington, Tumbo, Waterloo and Benguema, members of the AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters murdered an unknown number of civilians, as charged in the Indictment[2293] and shown in the evidence above.

1509. para. 870: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2294] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the killings proved by the Prosecution in respect of Freetown and the Western Area formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[2295] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned killings in Freetown and the Western Area there was a nexus between the killings and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of death, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned killings in Freetown and the Western Area constitute murder as both a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute and a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

1515. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

1516. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

1517. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

1518. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

1519. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

1522. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[39]

1523. These attacks [para. 41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[40]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

1524. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or

[39] RUF Indictment, para. 40.
[40] RUF Indictment, para. 42.

allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[41]

(iii) Counts 3-5: Unlawful killings

1525. Victims were routinely shot, hacked to death and burned to death. Unlawful killings included the following:[42]

i. Bo District: Between about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF attacked Tikonko, Telu, Sembehun, Gerihun, Mamboma, unlawfully killing an unknown number of civilians;[43]

ii. Kenema District: Between 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations including Kenema town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown of civilians;[44]

iii. Kono District: About Mid-February 1998, AFRC/RUF fleeing from Freetown arrived in Kono District. Between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya;[45]

iv. Kailahun District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, in locations including Kailahun town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians;[46]

v. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, in several locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumalu (or Kamalu), Kurubonla, Katombo, Koinadugu, Fadugu and Kamadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians;[47]

vi. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, in several locations in Bombali District, including Bonyoyo (or Bornoya), Karina, Mafabu, Mateboi, and Gbendembu (or Gbendembu or Pendembu), members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians;[48]

vii. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF conducted armed attacks throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area. These attacks included large scale unlawful killings of civilian

Port Loko: About the month of February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between about February 1999 and April 1999, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Port Loko District, including Manaarma, Tendakum, and Nonkoba.[50]

1526. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 3: Extermination, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 4: Murder, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under article 2.a. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 5: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute.[51]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Crimes against humanity ("CAH")

a. Introduction

1582. para. 75: Article 2 of the Statute, entitled "Crimes against humanity", provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following crimes as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population:
>
> a. Murder;
>
> b. Extermination;
>
> c. Enslavement;
>
> d. Deportation;
>
> e. Imprisonment;
>
> f. Torture;
>
> g. Rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy and any other form of sexual violence;
>
> h. Persecution on political, racial, ethnic or religious grounds;
> i. Other inhumane acts.

1583. para. 76: Based on established jurisprudence, we have held that the general requirements which must be proved to show the commission of a crime against humanity are as follows:

(i) There must be an attack;

(ii) The attack must be widespread or systematic;

(iii) The attack must be directed against any civilian population;

(iv) The acts of the Accused must be part of the attack; and

(v) The Accused knew or had reason to know that his or her acts constitute part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population.

b. Attack – Applicable law - CAH

1584. para. 77: Consistent with our decision in the CDF Trial Judgement, the Chamber adopts the definition of attack as meaning a "campaign, operation or course of conduct".[151] In the context of a crime against humanity, an attack is not limited to the use of armed force, but also encompasses any mistreatment of the civilian population.[152] An attack can precede, outlast, or continue during an armed conflict and thus it may, but need not be part of an armed conflict.[153] In the Chamber's opinion, the distinction between an attack and an armed conflict reflects the position in customary international law that crimes against humanity may be committed in peace time and independent of an armed conflict.[154]

c. Widespread or systematic – Applicable law - CAH

1585. para. 78: It is now settled law that the requirement that the attack must be either widespread or systematic is disjunctive and not cumulative.[155] The term "widespread" refers to the large-scale nature of the attack and the number of victims, while the term "systematic" refers to the organised nature of the acts of violence and the improbability of their random occurrence.[156] The Chamber adopts the view that "[p]atterns of crimes – that is the non-accidental repetition of similar criminal conduct on a regular basis – are a common expression of such systematic occurrence"[157] and further concurs with the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Kunarac et al. Case that:

> [T]he assessment of what constitutes a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack is essentially a relative exercise in that it depends upon the civilian population which, allegedly, was being attacked. A Trial Chamber must therefore 'first identify the population which is the object of the attack and, in light of the means, methods, resources and result of the attack upon the population, ascertain whether the attack was indeed widespread or systematic'. The consequences of the attack upon the targeted population, the number of victims, the nature of the acts, the possible participation of officials or authorities or any identifiable patterns of crimes, could be taken into account to determine whether the attack satisfies either or both requirements of a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack vis-à-vis this civilian population.[158]

1586. para. 79: The existence of a policy or plan, or that the crimes were supported by a policy or plan to carry them out, may be evidentially relevant to establish the widespread or systematic nature of the attack and that it was directed against a civilian population, but it is not a separate legal requirement of crimes against humanity.[159] Furthermore, the Chamber is of the view that customary international law does not presuppose a discriminatory or persecutory intent for all crimes against humanity.[160]

d. Directed against any civilian population – Applicable law - CAH

1587. para. 80: The attack must be directed against any civilian population. This means that the civilian population must "be the primary rather than an incidental target of the attack."[161] For this proposition, we again rely on the interpretation of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kunarac et al. that:

> [T]he expression 'directed against' is an expression which 'specifies that in the context of a crime against humanity the civilian population is the primary object of the attack'. In order to determine whether the attack may be said to have been so directed, the Trial Chamber will consider, inter alia, the means and method used in the course of the attack, the status of the victims, their number, the discriminatory nature of the attack, the nature of the crimes committed in its course, the resistance to the assailants at the time and the extent to which the attacking force may be said to have complied or attempted to comply with the precautionary requirements of the laws of war. To the extent that the alleged crimes against humanity were committed in the course of an armed conflict, the laws of war provide a benchmark against which the Chamber may assess the nature of the attack and the legality of the acts committed in its midst.[162]

1588. para. 81: The Chamber also adopts the view of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Blaskic case that there is an absolute prohibition against targeting civilians in customary international law.[163]

1589. para. 82: The Chamber is satisfied that customary international law, determined by reference to the laws of armed conflict, has established that the civilian population includes all of those persons who are not members of the armed forces or otherwise recognised as combatants.[164] A person who is hors de combat does not prima facie fall within this definition.[165] However, the Chamber concurs with the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Martic case that where a person hors de combat is the victim of an act which objectively forms part of a broader attack directed against a civilian population, this act may amount to a crime against humanity.[166] Thus, persons hors de combat may form part of the civilian population for the purpose of crimes against humanity, provided that the remaining general requirements of Article 2 are satisfied in respect of the particular incident.

former combatants who have laid down their arms, within a civilian population, does not alter its civilian nature.[169]

1591. para. 84: The Chamber recognises that Article 2 of the Statute extends to "any" civilian population including, if a State takes part in the attack, that State's own population[170] and that there is no requirement that the victims are linked to any particular side.[171] The existence of an attack upon one side's civilian population would not justify or cancel out that side's attack upon the other's civilian population.[172]

1592. para. 85: The Chamber considers that "the use of the word 'population' does not mean that the entire population of the geographical entity in which the attack is taking place must have been subjected to that attack."[173] However, the targeting of a select group of civilians – for instance, the targeted killing of a number of political opponents – cannot satisfy the requirements of Article 2.[174] It would be sufficient to show that enough individuals were targeted in the course of the attack, or that they were targeted in such a way as to satisfy the Chamber that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian "population", rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.[175]

1593. para. 86: The Appeals Chamber has confirmed that perceived "collaborators" are accorded civilian status under international law.[176] The Chamber is of the opinion that persons accused of "collaborating" with the government or armed forces would only become legitimate military targets if they were taking direct part in the hostilities. Indirectly supporting or failing to resist an attacking force is insufficient to constitute such participation. In addition, even if such civilians could be considered to have taken a direct part in hostilities, they would only qualify as legitimate military targets during the period of their direct participation.[177] If there is any doubt as to whether an individual is a civilian he should be presumed to be a civilian and cannot be attacked merely because he appears dubious.[178] When it comes to establishing civilian status for the purposes of a criminal prosecution, however, it is the Prosecution which bears the onus of doing so.[179]

1594. para. 87: The armed law enforcement agencies of a State are generally mandated only to protect and maintain the internal order of the State. Thus, as a general presumption and in the execution of their typical law enforcement duties, such forces are considered to be civilians for the purposes of international humanitarian law.[180] This same presumption will not exist for military police or gendarmerie that operate under the control of the military.[181] The Chamber notes that, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of 1991[182] and The Police Act[183] of 1964, the Sierra Leone Police operates under the control of the Minister of Internal Affairs, a civilian authority.

1595. para. 88: The Chamber is of the opinion that the status of police officers in a time of armed conflict must be determined on a case-by-case basis in light of an analysis of the particular facts.[184] A civilian police force, for instance, may be incorporated into the armed forces, which will cause the police to be classified as combatants instead of civilians. This incorporation may occur de lege, by way of a formal Act, or de facto.

e. The acts of the Accused must be part of the attack – Applicable law - CAH

1596. para. 89: The requirement that the acts of the Accused must be part of the attack is satisfied by the "commission of an act which, by its nature or consequences, is objectively part of the attack."[185] This is established if the alleged crimes were related to the attack on a civilian population, but need not have been committed in the midst of that attack.[186] A crime which is committed before or after the main attack or away from it could still, if sufficiently connected, be part of that attack. However, it must not be an isolated act. "A crime would be regarded as an 'isolated act' when it is so far removed from that attack that, having considered the context and circumstances in which it was committed, it cannot reasonably be said to have been part of the attack."[187] Only the attack, not the individual acts, must be widespread or systematic.[188]

f. Mens rea – Applicable law - CAH

1597. para. 90: The last general requirement for establishing a crime against humanity is the knowledge that there is an attack on the civilian population and that the acts of the Accused are part thereof.[189] The Prosecution must show that the Accused either knew or had reason to know that his acts comprised part of the attack. Evidence of knowledge depends on the facts of a particular case and thus the manner in which this legal element may be proved may therefore vary from case to case.[190] The Accused needs to understand the overall context in which his acts took place,[191] but need not know the details of the attack or share the purpose or goal behind the attack.[192] The motives for the Accused's participation in the attack are irrelevant.[193] It is also irrelevant whether the Accused intended his acts to be directed against the targeted population or merely against his victim, as it is the attack, and not the acts of the Accused, which must be directed against the targeted population.[194]

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

a. Introduction

1598. para. 942: The Accused are charged with eight counts of crimes against humanity, comprising unlawful killings (Counts 3, 4 and 16), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 8), physical violence (Count 11) and enslavement (Count 13). The Prosecution alleges that these crimes against humanity were committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[1847]

b. General requirements for the proof of crimes against humanity

1599. para. 943: We recall that the general requirements for the proof of crimes against humanity are as follows:

(i) There must be an attack;

(ii) The attack must be widespread or systematic;

(iii) The attack must be directed against any civilian population;

(iv) The acts of the Accused must be part of the attack; and

(v) The Accused knew or had reason to know that his acts constitute part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population.[1848]

c. Attack directed against civilian population of Sierra Leone - CAH – Findings on general requirements

1600. para. 944: In determining whether an attack was directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, the Chamber has taken into account the events recounted in our Factual Findings as well as reliable oral and documentary evidence in respect of all locations throughout Sierra Leone between 30 November 1996 and January 2002. The Chamber finds ample evidence that the AFRC/RUF waged an attack encompassing horrific violence and mistreatment against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, which evolved through three distinct stages within the Indictment period.

1601. para. 945: The first stage dates from November 1996 until the formation of the AFRC/RUF Junta "government" in May 1997. The mistreatment of civilians was particularly frequent and endemic in Kailahun District, where the RUF forced them to labour on communal farms, mine diamonds and undergo military training and subjected women and young girls to rapes and 'forced marriages.'[1849]

1602. para. 946: The second stage, which comprised the period from May 1997 until the ECOMOG Intervention of February 1998, was characterised by the joint AFRC/RUF campaign to strengthen their "government" through brutal suppression of perceived opposition by killing and beating civilians, not only in the capital but throughout Districts including Bo, Kenema and Kailahun.[1850] The AFRC/RUF also increased "government" revenues and the personal wealth of individual Commanders through forced mining in Kenema and Kono Districts.[1851]

1603. para. 947: The third stage of the attack on the civilian population, from February 1998 until sometime in the end of January 2000, involved a series of large-scale concerted military actions undertaken by the AFRC/RUF in multiple locations throughout Sierra Leone, with the intensity of the violence shifting as the troops gained and lost control of various towns and Districts. The enslavement and 'forced marriages' of civilians in Kailahun District persisted as before, and these practices spread to Kono District, Bombali District, Koinadugu District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District as troops moved through these areas.

1604. para. 948: The existence and nature of the attack against the civilian population throughout the remainder of the Indictment period is pertinent only to Count 16 which charges the Accused with the unlawful killings of UNAMSIL personnel. The Chamber will accordingly address the general requirements for crimes against humanity separately in its Legal Findings for Counts 15 to 18 of the Indictment.

1605. para. 949: In relation to each of the three stages identified, the Chamber is cognisant that the violence against civilians occurred in the context of military operations. Examples include the attacks on Tikonko in Bo District in June 1997, which were ostensibly to eradicate Kamajors but in which civilians were killed en masse,[1852] and the attempt to regain control of Freetown in January 1999.[1853] In this respect we recall that although an attack on a civilian population is distinct to an armed conflict, an attack on a civilian population may precede, outlast or continue through an armed conflict. The presence of combatants amongst the civilian population does not preclude the characterisation of the attack as directed against the civilian population.[1854]

1606. para. 950: Moreover, the Chamber is satisfied from the manner in which civilians were targeted during AFRC/RUF military operations, as well as the frequent commission of crimes against civilians such as amputations, mutilations and rapes serving no military objective, that the armed conflict in Sierra Leone did not detract from the existence of the attack directed against the civilian population. On the contrary, and in our view, the AFRC/RUF regarded the pursuance of these two causes as mutually reinforcing and the violence directed against civilians was a fundamental feature of their war effort, utilised amongst other purposes to punish those who provided support for the CDF/ECOMOG[1855] and to finance the purchase of arms and ammunition from slave labour.[1856]

1607. para. 951: The Chamber thus finds that attacks were directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone from 30 November 1996 until at least the end of January 2000.

d. Widespread or systematic attack - CAH – Findings on general requirements

1608. para.952: The Chamber will analyse the nature of the attack in each of the three stages identified above.

i. Nov 1996 – May 1997

1609. para. 953: Throughout this period, the RUF inflicted violence on civilians in various locations throughout the country in the conduct of their war against the Government of Sierra Leone.[1857] Kailahun District, however, was an RUF stronghold from 1991 until sometime in 2001. The nature of the RUF's control over this part of Sierra Leone both necessitated and facilitated the establishment of institutions and systems to govern civilian life.

1610. para. 954: One of the principal functions of the RUF "G5 unit" in Kailahun District was the management of farms on which hundreds of civilians were forced to labour.[1858] The farms operated pursuant to a subscription system whereby prescribed quantities of produce were extorted from the civilians, who were forced to walk many miles to deliver the goods to RUF Headquarters.[1859] From 1995 until 2001, civilians were forced to work at gunpoint on farms owned by members of the RUF High Command including Bockarie, Sesay and Gbao.[1860] In addition, an unknown number of women and young girls were forced to "marry" RUF rebels[1861] and civilians were abducted and forced to act as porters, sexual slaves and fighters.[1862]

1611. para. 955: The mistreatment of civilians was accordingly a well organised and permanent feature of RUF operations, sanctioned at the highest levels. Organisation to this degree ensured that hundreds of civilians in locations across the District were victims of the RUF's policies and practices. On this basis the Chamber considers the attacks against the civilian population of Sierra Leone to be both widespread and systematic.

ii. May 1997 – Feb 1998 (the Junta Period)

1612. para. 956: The RUF continued to compel hundreds of civilians to work on "government" farms in various locations in Kailahun District, including at the RUF headquarters in Buedu, throughout the Junta period.[1863] Civilians were also targeted in violent attacks on towns in other Districts. AFRC/RUF rebels burnt houses to the ground, killed civilians including women and children, and looted non-military items such as money and clothes in Gerihun, Sembehun and Tikonko in Bo District.[1864] AFRC/RUF rebels also staged attacks on Panguma and Bumpe in Kenema District.[1865] The temporal and geographic proximity of the various attacks, and their similar modus operandi, with civilians raped and killed, houses razed to the ground and property looted, establishes that these were not isolated incidents but rather a central feature of a concerted campaign against civilians.

1614. para. 958: The repetitive targeting of certain groups is further evidence of the systematic nature of the attack. The Junta "government" brutally suppressed opposition, be it actual or merely suspected. Civilians alleged to be Kamajors were savagely beaten and executed in locations in Kenema, Kono and Kailahun Districts. The violence followed a familiar pattern, characterized by arrests of multiple victims who were often prominent community members, sham "investigations" and then public executions.[1869] Church workers, journalists and students were also frequently targeted suspected members of the opposition.[1870]

iii. The ECOMOG intervention to end January 2000

1615. para. 959: In addition to ongoing forced labour in Kenema and Kailahun Districts, the attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone continued throughout other parts of the country between February 1998 and January 2000. In Kono District alone, civilians were attacked in locations including Tombodu,[1871] Koidu,[1872] Yardu,[1873] Wendedu,[1874] Sawao,[1875] Kayima,[1876] Bumpeh[1877] and Kissi Town.[1878] During September 1998, UNOMSIL received reports of attacks on 20 villages in a single week in four small chiefdoms in the north-west of the country.[1879] Mass executions of civilians suspected to be Kamajors took place in Kailahun.[1880] The widespread commission of brutal rapes during this period is well-documented.[1881]

1616. para. 960: During the January 1999 invasion of Freetown, rebel troops were ordered by their leaders to burn public and private property and to kill and maim civilians.[1882] It is estimated that thousands of civilians were killed; mutilations, rapes and abductions were rife; and entire neighbourhoods were burned to the ground, often with civilians locked inside the burning houses.[1883]

1617. para. 961: Moreover, the Chamber is satisfied that the widespread violence against civilians was organised. The evidence contains multiple examples of operations staged by AFRC/RUF forces pursuant to pre-conceived plans or policies which were given particular names and directed at specific objectives. "Operation Pay Yourself", which commenced in February 1998 in Masiaka and Makeni but quickly spread to locations including Koidu, was instituted by AFRC/RUF Commanders who, unable to pay their troops, encouraged the looting of civilian property.[1884] The Fiti-Fata mission in August 1998, and the RUF attack to recaputre Kono District in December 1998 saw numerous atrocities committed against civilians.[1885]

1618. para. 962: For the foregoing reasons, and on the basis of the totality of reliable evidence before the Chamber, we find that the attacks directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone from November 1996 until at least January 2000 were both widespread and systematic.

1619. para. 963: Unless otherwise stated in our Factual Findings, the Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators of the crimes recounted therein were part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact and acted with the requisite intent.

(iii) Applicable law - Murder

1620. para. 136: The Indictment charges the Accused under Counts 4 and 16 with murder as a crime against humanity. The Indictment also charges the Accused in Counts 5 and 17 with murder as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute. Counts 4 and 5 relate to the Accused's alleged responsibility for unlawful killings as outlined above under Count 3. Counts 16 and 17, in contrast, relate to the Accused's alleged responsibility for unlawful killings of UNAMSIL peacekeepers in Bombali District, Tonkolili District and Port Loko District between about 15 April 2000 and 15 September 2000.[266] While Counts 4 and 5 and Counts 16 and 17, respectively, reference the same underlying facts, the law applicable to murder as a crime against humanity and as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II will be dealt with separately.

1621. para. 137: The Chamber observes that the crime of murder as a crime against humanity is a wellrecognised and defined crime under customary international law that entails individual criminal responsibility.[267]

1622. para. 138: In addition to the general (chapeau) requirements of establishing a crime against humanity, the specific elements of the offence of murder as a crime against humanity are:

(i) The death of one or more persons;

(ii) The death of the person(s) was caused by an act or omission of the Accused; and

1623. para. 139: The Chamber takes the view that to establish the actus reus of murder, the Prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused substantially contributed to the death of a person.[269] Murder may be proven beyond reasonable doubt without requiring proof that the dead body of that person has been recovered. "[T]he fact of a victim's death can be inferred circumstantially from all of the evidence presented to the Trial Chamber."[270] In addition, the Prosecution must prove that the victim or victims died as a result of acts or omissions of the Accused.[271]

1624. para. 140: Consistent with established jurisprudence, the Chamber reiterates that the mens rea of murder can be established by either the intention to kill or the intention to cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death. This mens rea may be satisfied by recklessness, but not by proof of negligence or gross negligence.[272] Proof of premeditation is not required.[273]

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

1625. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Criminal acts and events – paras. 412 [605], 418- 419 [611].

b. Locations – Pleading

1626. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Locations – paras. 420 – 422 [613].

c. Timeframes – Pleading

d. CAH – Pleading

1628. para. 448: The Kallon Defence submitted that the Indictment alleges only in the General Allegations that "all acts and omissions charged herein were committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against the civilian population".[858] The Kallon Defence argued that this is not sufficient, and that the Prosecution was required to plead, with respect to each specific Count charged as a crime against humanity, what type of attack the crime formed part of (that is, whether the crime formed part of a widespread attack or a systematic attack).[859]

1629. para. 449: The Chamber notes that it is now settled law that the requirement of an attack for crimes against humanity is disjunctive, not cumulative.[860] Once the Chamber is convinced that either requirement is met, it is not obliged to consider whether the alternative qualifier is also met.[861] The Chamber is therefore of the view that the widespread or systematic nature of the attack may be pleaded in the alternative, and thus that the Prosecution is not required to specify, for each Count alleging a crime against humanity, whether it formed part of a systematic attack or a widespread attack. Again we find that the arguments of the Kallon Defence here are misconceived.

(v) Kono District - Unlawful killings

1630. para. 1266: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and physical violence (Counts 10 and 11) between about 14 February 1998 and about 30 June 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 14 February 1998 and about January 2000, in various locations throughout Kono District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

1631. para. 1267: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2435] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

1632. para. 1268: The Indictment alleges that "about mid February 1998, AFRC/RUF fleeing from Freetown arrived in Kono District. Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Baiya."[2436] The Chamber has found that no evidence was adduced in respect of Willifeh, Foindu, Mortema and Baiya.[2437]

a. Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings in attack on Koidu Town – Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1633. para. 1269: The Chamber finds that an unknown number of civilians were unlawfully killed during the February/March attack on Koidu in 1998, as charged in Counts 4 and 5.[2438]

1634. para. 1270: Although an unknown number of Kamajors were also killed in this attack, the Prosecution has not established that these Kamajors were hors de combat at the time. The Chamber thus finds that the Prosecution has not proven the essential elements of Count 4 or Count 5 in respect of this particular act.

ii. Killing of civilians by Rocky and his men – Koidu Town – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1635. para. 1271: The Chamber finds that the killings of 30 to 40 civilians by Rocky with a machine gun in April 1998 constitutes murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5.[2439] From the manner in which Rocky fired indiscriminately into the crowd, and boasted about the number of people killed, we conclude that he intended to kill on a massive scale. The Chamber accordingly finds that this killing also constitutes an act of extermination as charged in Count 3.

1636. para. 1272: The Chamber is satisfied that the only reasonable inference to be drawn beyond reasonable doubt from the fact that rebels amputated the hands and feet of a 15 year old boy and threw him in a latrine pit in April 1998 is that as a result the boy died, and therefore finds that such an act constitutes murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

b. Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

i. Killings by Savage and Staff Alhaji – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1637. para. 1273: The Chamber recalls its findings that in Tombodu between February and June 1998, AFRC/RUF members acting on the orders of AFRC Commander Savage and his deputy Staff Alhaji:[2440]

(i) executed about 200 civilians;

(ii) beheaded about 47 civilians;

(iii) killed three people whose corpses were disposed of by TF1-197; and

(iv) killed an unknown number of civilians by locking them in a burning house

1638. para. 1274: In light of the mass killings of civilians in Tombodu at this time, and noting that there were no active hostilities nor was there a significant Kamajor presence in Tombodu, the Chamber is satisfied that the three corpses disposed of by TF1-197 were civilians. The Chamber finds that the elements of murder, as charged in Counts 4 and 5, have been established in respect of each of the above killings.

1639. para. 1275: The Chamber further finds, considering these incidents collectively, that a massive number of civilians were killed in Tombodu during the period from about 14 February 1998 to 30 June 1998. The scale and gruesome nature of the killings guaranteed their notoriety, as reflected by the evidence of several witnesses that the killings were reported to and discussed by Commanders in other locations. In addition, the killings disclosed a repetitive pattern, with the disposal of bodies in Savage Pit and the command role of Savage and Staff Alhaji. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the perpetrators intended to kill on a massive scale. The Chamber thus finds that these killings constitute extermination as charged in Count 3 of the Indictment.

ii. Killing of Chief Sogbeh – Tombodu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1640. para. 1276: The Chamber further recalls that Chief Sogbeh was killed on the orders of Officer Med at the Tombodu Bridge mining site.[2441] The Chamber finds that this act constitutes an unlawful killing, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

c. Wendedu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1641. para. 1277: The Chamber finds that the killings of Waiyoh the Nigerian woman and eight family members of Sata Sesay in May and June 1998 in Wendedu are unlawful killings as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.[2442]

d. Penduma – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1642. para. 1278: The Chamber finds that the killings of at least 29 civilians by rebels on the orders of Staff Alhaji in April 1998 in Penduma are unlawful killings, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.[2443]

e. Yardu – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1643. para. 1279: The Chamber is satisfied that the killing of six captured civilians by rebels in April 1998 in Yardu constitutes murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.[2444]

f. Koidu Buma – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1644. para. 1280: In May 1998 in Koidu, Buma Rambo murdered 15 civilians with a cutlass.[2445] The Chamber finds that these killings amount to murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

g. Killings near PC Ground – Kono District – Unlawful killings

1645. para. 1281: The Chamber recalls the evidence of TF1-263 that five people were killed at a junction near PC Ground sometime in April or May 1998.[2446] The Chamber is satisfied that the persons killed were civilians and accordingly finds that these killings constitute murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1646. para. 1282: The Chamber notes that TF1-263 testified that Sesay was the person at the junction with the five civilians. We have found that Sesay was in Kailahun District sometime in May 1998, and we accordingly find the witness's identification of Sesay to be mistaken.[2447] We find that it is not established beyond reasonable doubt that Sesay was present during this incident.

(vi) Kenema District – Unlawful killings

a. Introduction

1647. para. 1096: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and physical violence (Counts 10 to 11) between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, in various locations throughout Kenema District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).[2136]

1648. para. 1097: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraphs were committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Kenema District at the relevant time.[2137] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

1649. para. 1098: The Prosecution alleges that between about 25 May 1997 and about February 1998, in locations including Kenema Town, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians.[2138]

b. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of B.S Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and four others - Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1650. para. 1099: The Chamber recalls that Bockarie and men under his command killed B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and four other civilians on suspicion that they were Kamajor collaborators.[2139] The Chamber is satisfied that these acts constituted unlawful killings as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

ii. Killing of Mr Dowi - Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1651. para. 1100: The Chamber finds that the killing of Mr. Dowi by AFRC/RUF rebels, after he attempted to prevent them from looting his freezer, constitutes murder as a crime against humanity.[2140] The perpetrators acted with a reckless disregard for civilian life, characteristic of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time. The Chamber is further satisfied that a nexus existed between the killing and the armed conflict, as the control exercised by the AFRC and RUF over Kenema Town during the Junta period created a permissive environment in which the fighters could commit crimes with impunity. The Chamber accordingly finds that this killing also constitutes murder as a war crime, as charged in Count 5 of the Indictment.

iii. Killings of suspected Kamajors - Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1652. para. 1101: The Chamber recalls that a number of individuals suspected of being Kamajors were killed by AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema Town, namely: three corpses were discovered behind a house on Mambu Street; a person was killed by Bockarie at the NIC building; and an alleged Kamajor boss was killed during "Operation No Living Thing."[214]

1653. para. 1102: The Chamber recalls that during the conflict in Sierra Leone, the AFRC/RUF regularly killed civilians accused of being Kamajors as a deliberate strategy to terrorise the civilian population and prevent any support for their opponents. There is no evidence that the victims were armed and there is no evidence that there was any fighting in Kenema Town at the time. The Chamber is satisfied that these individuals were civilians and not Kamajors.

Accordingly, the Chamber finds that these persons were unlawfully killed, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

iv. Killing of civilians accused of larceny - Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1654. para. 1103: The Chamber recalls that during the Junta period Bockarie ordered the killing of Bonnie Wailer and two others, and Bockarie or persons under his command executed two men suspected of stealing drugs from an NGO.[2142]

1655. para. 1104: The Chamber observes that these killings demonstrated the reckless disregard for civilian life characteristic of the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population. Furthermore, we find that these killings were committed in order to preserve the control of the AFRC/RUF forces over Kenema Town and promote their image as the lawe enforcement authorities active at that time. The Chamber is thus satisfied that the killings formed part of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population and that the requisite nexus to the armed conflict existed. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the killings of Bonnie Wailer, his two accomplices and the two individuals accused of theft of drugs constitute murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

c. Tongo Field – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

i. Killing of civilian at Lamin Street and killing of Limba man - Tongo Field – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1656. para. 1105: The Chamber recalls that AFRC/RUF fighters killed one civilian at Lamin Street and one Limba man after he refused to surrender palm wine.[2143] The Chamber finds that these acts constitute unlawful killings, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

ii. Killings of civilians at Cyborg Pit - Tongo Field – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1657. para. 1106: The Chamber finds that on three separate occasions, SBUs under the command of AFRC/RUF fighters killed over 20 civilians; 25 civilians; and 15 civilians at Cyborg Pit.[2144] On another occasion, three civilians and two fighters were killed by AFRC/RUF fighters.[2145] The Chamber is satisfied that the killings of these civilians at Cyborg Pit constitute murder as charged under Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1658. para. 1107: On the basis of this evidence, the Chamber finds that AFRC/RUF members unlawfully killed 63 civilians at Cyborg Pit. The indiscriminate manner in which the perpetrators fired into mining pits containing civilian workers, the close proximity of the incidents and the similarities between the incidents establish that the perpetrators intended to kill on a massive scale. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the killings at Cyborg Pit also constitute extermination as charged in Count 3 of the Indictment.

1659. para. 1108: In relation to the killing of two fighters, the Chamber finds that the essential elements of the general requirements for Counts 4 and 5 are not established, as the fighters were not civilians and as AFRC/RUF fighters, we find that their killing does not constitute a war crime.[2146]

(vii) Bo District – Unlawful killings

1660. para. 1015: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14) between about 1 June 1997 and about 30 June 1997 in various locations throughout Bo District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).

1661. para. 1016: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraph was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Bo District at the time.[1980] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber concludes that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

1662. para. 1017: The Prosecution alleges that between about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF fighters attacked Tikonko, Telu, Sembehun, Gerihun and Mamboma, unlawfully killing an unknown number of civilians,[1981] by shooting, hacking or burning them to death.[1982] We have found in the Rule 98 Decision that no evidence of unlawful killings was adduced with respect to Telu and Mamboma, despite the allegations in the Indictment.[1983]

a. Tikonko – Bo District – Unlawful killings

1663. para. 1018: The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the testimony of TF1-004 that the man from Bumpe and his wife and children "fell like leaves" at Tikonko Junction is that they were indiscriminately shot and killed by the attacking fighters. The Chamber observes that the witness did not specify the number of children accompanying the couple. However, as the witness referred to them in the plural, the Chamber is satisfied that more than two children were killed. The Chamber is further satisfied from the testimony of TF1-004 that the fighters killed many other civilians at the junction and on the roads to Bo and Tikonko.[1984] Accordingly, the Chamber finds that many civilians were unlawfully killed at Tikonko Junction and that those acts constitute murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1664. para. 1019: Although we are satisfied that Junta fighters also killed at least two Kamajors at or near Tikonko Junction, we note that one of the Kamajors was armed.[1985] There is insufficient evidence to conclude beyond reasonable doubt that the Kamajors were hors de combat at the time. Accordingly, we find that these acts do not constitute unlawful killings as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1665. para. 1020: The Chamber finds that the executions of 14 civilians in a house in Tikonko[1986] constitute unlawful killings, as charged in Counts 4 and 5. In respect of the woman found alive inside the house,[1987] the Chamber finds that the evidence is insufficient to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the woman died from her injuries.

1666. para. 1021: The Chamber finds that the many corpses that TF1-004 saw in the street, including those of the two men he observed after leaving the house and the woman with an open stomach wound found lying on her slain companion,[1988] were civilians who had been killed by the fighters. The Chamber finds that these killings are acts constituting murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1667. para. 1022: Based on the evidence of TF1-004 that the civilians of Tikonko buried over 200 corpses in the wake of the attack,[1989] the Chamber finds that a massive number of civilians were indiscriminately killed in Tikonko. Tikonko was not a war front; rather the fighters carried out executions of civilians in homes and at a school. The killings occurred over a short time span in numerous locations throughout the town and on the roads entering the town.[1990] The nature of the attack established beyond reasonable doubt that the Junta fighters intended to kill civilians on a massive scale. The Chamber accordingly finds that the unlawful killings in Tikonko constitute extermination, as charged in Count 3.

b. Sembehun – Bo District – Unlawful killings

1668. para. 1023: The Chamber is not satisfied from the evidence that Sheriff died as a result of his injuries after being shot by the RUF.[1991] However, the Chamber finds that the killing of the civilian Tommy Bockarie by RUF fighters under Bockarie's command[1992] constitutes murder, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

c. Gerihun – Bo District – Unlawful killings

1669. para. 1024: The Chamber is satisfied that AFRC fighters, acting on the orders of Boisy Palmer, killed Paramount Chief Demby and Pa Sumaili.[1993] The Chamber further concludes that AFRC fighters killed many other civilians, including those five whose corpses in civilian clothes were seen by TF1-054 near the market.[1994]

1670. para. 1025: The Chamber therefore finds that many civilians were unlawfully killed by AFRC fighters in Gerihun and that these acts constitute murder as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

(viii) Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1671. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

1672. para. 1445: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2748] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

1673. para. 1446: The Prosecution alleges that "between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, in locations including Kailahun town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians."[2749]

a. Kailahun Town - Killing of 63 suspected Kamajors and one AFRC fighter hors de combat – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1674. para. 1447: The Chamber recalls that 63 civilians accused of being Kamajors and one AFRC fighter hors de combat were killed on 19 February 1998 in Kailahun Town by Bockarie and members of the RUF acting on his orders.[2750]

1675. para. 1448: The Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators had reason to know that the persons targeted were civilians. The Chamber finds that there was no reasonable basis to believe that the victims were in fact Kamajors and recalls in this regard that the first group of detainees had been investigated and released.[2751] We note that throughout the Junta regime, civilians falsely accused of being Kamajors or of supporting Kamajors had been targeted by the AFRC/RUF forces.[2752] The Chamber finds that the killing of these civilians formed part of the widespread or systematic attack directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time and that the perpetrators had reason to know that their acts formed part of the attack. The Chamber therefore finds that these killings constitute murder as a crime against humanity, as charged in Count 4 of the Indictment.

1676. para. 1449: The Chamber further finds that the killing of these 64 persons occurred on a massive scale and that the intention to kill on a massive scale is evident from the systematic manner in which the civilians were escorted from confinement and killed in consecutive groups.[2753] The Chamber is thus satisfied that these killings constitute extermination as charged in Count 3 of the Indictment.

b. Killing of Fonti Kanu – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1677. para. 1455: The Chamber recalls that Fonti Kanu was killed sometime in June 1998 by RUF fighters acting on the orders of Bockarie.[2755] The Chamber is satisfied that Kanu was hors de combat at the time of his death. However, we reiterate that the killing of a member of an armed group by another member of the same group does not constitute a war crime. We are further of the opinion that the killing did not form part of the widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population of Sierra Leone. The Chamber finds that this killing does not constitute murder as charged in Counts 4 or 5 of the Indictment.

c. The Killing of Foday Kallon – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1678. para. 1456: The Chamber has found that Foday Kallon, an AFRC fighter, was killed in Buedu.[2756] The Chamber is not satisfied that the date when the killing took place has been established to be within the timeframe for unlawful killings charged in Kailahun District. As such, the Chamber finds that no liability can be attributed to the Accused for this incident.

1679. para. 1457: Furthermore, we observe that as Foday Kallon was not a member of the opposing armed forces opposing the RUF, his killing does not constitute a war crime.[2757] We also find that this killing was isolated from the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone and so the general requirements of Count 4 have not been established in respect of this incident.

d. The Killing of Dr. Kamara – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1680. para. 1458: The Chamber recalls that in May 1999 Doctor Kamara was killed in Buedu by a named RUF Commander following Bockarie's instructions.[2758] As this killing was committed outside of the Indictment period for unlawful killings in Kailahun District, the Chamber finds that no liability can be attributed to the Accused for this incident.

(ix) Freetown and the Western Area – Unlawful killings

1681. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

1682. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

1683. para. 1568: The Prosecution alleges that between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF committed "large-scale unlawful killings of men, women, and children at locations throughout [Freetown] and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington, and Calaba Town."[2988]

1684. para. 1569: The Chamber has found that during the attack on Freetown:

(i) rebels that identified themselves as SLA killed seven relatives of TF1-235 in the early hours of 6 January 1999 at Wellington;[2989]

(ii) rebels that identified themselves as "Junta…people's army" killed 71 people in and around the Rogbalan Mosque at Kissy on 6 January 1999;[2990]

(iii) TF1-021's child was killed when rebels set his house on fire;[2991]

(iv) TF1-093's brother was shot and killed by rebels;[2992]

(v) more than 20 civilians were killed by rebels under the command of TF1-093;[2993]

(vi) seven civilians were executed by an AFRC Commander in the presence of TF1-334;[2994]

(vii) two civilians died at a clinic in Kissy from gunshot wounds inflicted by rebels;[2995]

(viii) a civilian died at a clinic in Wellington from wounds inflicted by rebels;[2996]

(ix) rebel fighters captured and killed the husband of TF1-331 and a six year-old child at Loko Town;[2997]

(x) rebels killed the pregnant sister of TF1-331;[2998]

(xi) rebels stabbed one man and shot another at a checkpoint near Kissy;[2999]

(xii) TF1-101 witnessed the shooting of three people in Kissy;[3000]

(xiii) seven armed rebels killed 13 civilians with guns and an axe on 19 January 1999;[3001]

(xiv) a man was shot and killed by uniformed rebels at a clinic in Kissy on 15 January 1999;[3002]

(xv) on 18 January 1999 a Nigerian man and another 15 civilians that were receiving treatment in a clinic in Kissy were shot and killed by a group of soldiers;[3003]

(xvi) TF1-022's brother-in-law and one other civilian were shot and killed by rebels on 22 January 1999 in Kissy;[3004]

(xvii) an unknown number of civilians,[3005] including babies,[3006] were killed by rebelsretreating from Wellington to Calaba Town to Benguema; and

(xviii) at least one nun was killed in Calaba Town during the retreat from Freetown by Colonel CO Tito.[3007]

1685. para. 1570: The Chamber is satisfied that these victims were civilians and accordingly finds that these acts constitutes unlawful killings as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1686. para. 1571: The Chamber recalls the testimony of TF1-104 that he witnessed the bodies of a police officer and a civilian outside the Kissy Police Station on 6 January 1999.[3008] The Chamber recalls its position that police officers are protected persons for so long as they do not directly participate in hostilities.[3009] The Chamber is satisfied from the evidence that rebel forces deliberately targeted police stations and police officers as perceived collaborators and that the police officer was not participating in hostilities at the time.[3010] The Chamber accordingly finds that these acts constitute unlawful killings as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

1687. para. 1572: The Chamber further finds that civilians were killed by rebels on a massive scale in Freetown and the Western Area between 6 January and 28 February 1999. These killings were committed as a direct consequence of orders, such as the policy of gori-gori announced at State House, which called for the deliberate targeting of civilians.[3011]

1688. para. 1573: The Chamber is satisfied, from the systematic manner in which civilians were captured and killed in groups; the targeting of civilians in homes, mosques and hospitals; and the short time frame in which countless civilians were executed in numerous proximate locations establishes that the perpetrators intended to kill on a massive scale. We therefore find that these events constitute extermination as charged in Count 3 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District

1692. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Factual Findings – Kono District – para. 428 [712].

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

1693. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

1694. para. 826: The Trial Chamber found that Waiyoh, a Nigerian female who resided in the civilian camp at Wendedu and had lived in Kono District for twenty years was killed on the orders of Rocky, an RUF Commander in May 1998.[2169] It found that this crime constituted an unlawful killing as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.[2170] It further found that Kallon was liable under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for its instigation.[2171] The Trial Chamber found that although Wendedu was not named as a location of murder in the Indictment, the pleading of locations in Counts 4 and 5 was nonexhaustive and sufficiently specific in light of the cataclysmic nature of the alleged crimes.[2172]

1695. para. 828: The Indictment particularises the charge of murder under Counts 4 and 5 in relation to Kono District as follows:

> About mid February 1998, AFRC/RUF fleeing from Freetown arrived in Kono District. Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya.[2175]

1696. para. 829: The relevant question on appeal is whether the pleading of locations of murder in Kono District as "various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya" without naming Wendedu, is sufficiently specific to allow Kallon to prepare his defence to the charge of instigating murder in Wendedu.

1697. para. 830: As a general matter, the location of the crimes alleged to have been committed should be specified in an indictment.[2176] However, the degree of specificity required will depend on the nature of the Prosecution's case.[2177] The specificity required for the pleading of the location of an alleged crime will depend on factors such as: the form of accused's participation in the crime;[2178] the proximity of the accused person to the events at the location for which he is alleged to be criminally responsible;[2179] the nature of the crime itself, such as whether the crime is characterized by the movement of the victim; whether the victim's identity provides specificity; and whether the crime was committed at numerous locations within a defined geographic area that was pleaded.

1698. para. 831: As the form of the accused's participation in the crime is relevant to the specificity required, the material facts to be pleaded will vary according to the particular form of Article 6(1) liability averred. For example, the Appeals Chamber has indicated that the material facts for pleading personal commission are distinct from those pleaded for JCE liability.[2180] As stated by the ICTR Appeals Chamber, there may well be "situations in which the specific location of criminal activities cannot be listed, such as where the accused is charged as having effective control over several armed groups that committed crimes in numerous locations. In cases concerning physical acts of violence perpetrated by the accused personally, however, location can be very important."[2181]

1700. para. 833: An accused's proximity to the events at the location for which he is alleged to be criminally responsible is also a factor in determining the pleading specificity required. In the present case, Kallon's liability for instigating the murder of Waiyoh in Wendedu stems directly from his conduct in Wendedu. In May 1998, Waiyoh was being held at an RUF civilian camp in Wendedu. Kallon visited the camp and questioned CO Rocky about Waiyoh, "stating that he considered her a threat."[2183] On a subsequent visit to the camp in Wendedu, Kallon asked CO Rocky if he was "still keeping 'enemies' of the RUF in the camp."[2184] Kallon's bodyguards later visited the camp to enquire about Waiyoh again and Rocky then ordered that she be killed.[2185]

1701. para. 834: In view of the mode of Kallon's liability for the crime and that his culpable conduct occurred at the location, the location of the murder as having occurred at Wendedu was a material fact that must have been pleaded in the Indictment to inform Kallon clearly of the charges against him so that he could prepare a defence.[2186]

1702. para. 835: The Prosecution's failure to plead Wendedu as a location in the Indictment rendered the Indictment defective with respect to the pleading of Kallon's instigation of murder at Wendedu. As Kallon objected at trial to the pleading of a nonexhaustive list of locations,[2187] the Prosecution bears the burden of showing on appeal that the defect in the Indictment did not prejudice Kallon's ability to prepare his defence. The Prosecution has not offered any submissions that Kallon had notice of the charge as a result of timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual underpinnings of the charge.[2188]

1703. para. 836: The Appeals Chamber, therefore, finds that Kallon was not put on notice of the charge that he instigated murder at Wendedu. The trial against Kallon was thereby rendered unfair, and as a result he should not have been found responsible for the killing of Waiyoh.

(ii) Pleading – Dissents

a. Justice Fisher:

1704. para. 20 (p.517): The primary justification suggested by the Majority for its radical departure from customary international law is that its conflation of JCE 1 and JCE 3 mens rea standards "is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment."[33] That an Indictment may plead in the alternative does not establish that there is no distinction between the forms of liability so pled. Also, whether the Indictment permissibly pleaded JCE is irrelevant as an evidentiary matter.

1706. para. 23 (p.518): If in fact the Majority accepts the position of the Prosecution that the shared intent for commission of the crimes committed in Kailahun describes the common criminal purpose of the JCE, then Gbao would presumably have been liable under JCE 1 for the crimes in Kailahun District, and liable under JCE 3 for the crimes in other Districts. However, such a limited, "subsidiary" JCE was neither sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment nor found by the Trial Chamber. Nor did the Trial Chamber make any findings that the crimes in Bo, Kenema and Kono were reasonably foreseeable by Gbao as a consequence of the implementation of that "subsidiary" JCE, (as opposed to the country-wide JCE found by the Trial Chamber.) This theory therefore finds no support in the pleadings or the evidence.

1707. para. 24 (p.518-519): The only JCE pleaded, established and upheld in this case had as its Common Criminal Purpose to control the territory of Sierra Leone through the commission of the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14.[38] Gbao either shared the intent of this criminal purpose – both in terms of the type of crimes and the geographical scope it encompassed – or he did not.

(v) CAH - Existence of a widespread and systematic attack

a. Kenema – CAH – Existence of a widespread and systematic attack

1711. para. 637: The Trial Chamber found that there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in several districts during the junta period of May 1997 to February 1998.[1601]

1712. para. 642: The Appeals Chamber only addresses the arguments Sesay sets out in sufficient detail. He contends that because all the crimes found to have been committed took place in or after "late January" 1998 it suggest that there was no evidence of a concerted attack from 25 May 1997 until that time.[1610] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber observed that it had "heard evidence of numerous incidents of beatings and killings in Kenema Town during the Junta period."[1611] The Trial Judgment also states that, although the exact dates on which some of the incidents took place are unknown, the Trial Chamber was satisfied that they occurred within the Junta period, namely between 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998.[1612] Sesay fails to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have come to the conclusion reached by the Trial Chamber.

1713. para. 643: The Trial Chamber made numerous findings in relation to Kenema Town during the pertinent period. The Trial Judgment indicates that throughout the Junta period, individuals were harassed and their property confiscated.[1613] At unspecified times during the Junta period, numerous individuals were killed.[1614] Specifically, in late January and early February 1998, several individuals were detained, beaten and subsequently killed.[1615] Furthermore, the crimes as found by the Trial Chamber were not limited to that period. In October 1997, an individual was beaten and detained;[1616] and in the "early months" of the Junta regime, still others were killed.[1617] The fact that some of these individuals may have been killed to promote the image of the AFRC/RUF forces as the law enforcement authorities of the area does not mean that they necessarily fall outside the scope of the attack. Indeed, as the Trial Chamber put it, "these killings demonstrated the reckless disregard for civilian life characteristic of the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population."[1618] The Trial Chamber also found that numerous other crimes were committed in the relevant period.[1619]

1714. para. 644: In relation to Sesay's arguments concerning Tongo Fields, the Appeals Chamber notes that a semblance of law and order therein does not preclude the existence of an attack against a civilian population; the two may well co-exist as long as the civilian population is the primary object of the attack as opposed to a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.[1620] Thus, even if Sesay's arguments under this sub-ground were made out, it would not establish that the Trial Chamber erred in finding the existence of an armed attack in Tongo Fields during the period in question.

(vi) CAH - Attack against civilian population

a. Kailahun District – CAH – Attack against civilian population

1715. para. 714: In its holdings on the chapeau requirements of crimes against humanity, the Trial Chamber found that the AFRC/RUF directed an attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone from 30 November 1996 until at least the end of January 2000.[1845]

1716. para. 719: The Appeals Chamber understands Sesay's argument to mean that the occurrence of "few crimes" in Kailahun District negated the third requirement of crimes against humanity; that "the attack must be directed against any civilian population." The Appeals Chamber rejects this proposition. First, nothing in the Trial Judgment suggests that only "few crimes" were committed in Kailahun District; numerous crimes were found to have been committed by RUF fighters there.[1857] Second, as correctly noted by the Trial Chamber, the use of the word "population" does not mean that the entire population of the geographic entity in which the attack is taking place must have been subjected to that attack.[1858] It is sufficient to show that enough individuals were targeted in the course of the attack, or that they were targeted in such a way as to satisfy the trier of fact that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian "population", rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.[1859] In this respect, Sesay refers to the Haradinaj et al. Trial Judgment[1860] but fails to explain how the facts of that case[1861] are so similar to those of the present case that any reasonable trier of fact, based on the evidence here, would reach the same conclusion as the Haradinaj et al. Trial Chamber. Sesay's argument therefore fails.

1717. para. 720: Contrary to Sesay's assertion, paragraph 650 of the Trial Judgment does not buttress the claim that the RUF committed only few crimes in Kailahun District or that civilians supported the RUF.[1862] The Appeals Chamber further fails to see how the fact that amputations, mutilations and rapes were not committed in Kailahun District detracts from the Trial Chamber's reliance on the crimes which were committed in the District to conclude that the attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone extended to Kailahun District. This submission is rejected.

1718. para. 721: The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's conclusion in paragraph 955 of the Trial Judgment that "mistreatment of civilians was … a well organised and permanent feature of RUF operations, sanctioned at the highest level"[1863] emanated from several findings of the Trial Chamber including its finding in paragraph 953 of the Trial Judgment. While paragraph 953 is silent on any crimes against the civilian population, the Trial Chamber also found that during the relevant period that the RUF controlled Kailahun District, civilians were forced to work on farms owned by members of the RUF High Command including Bockarie, Sesay and Gbao;[1864] an unknown number of women and young girls entered into forced marriages with RUF rebels; and civilians were abducted and forced to act as porters, sex slaves and fighters.[1865] On that basis, the Trial Chamber reached the impugned conclusion in paragraph 955. Sesay does not demonstrate this conclusion to be unreasonable.

1719. para. 722: Contrary to Sesay's claim,[1866] the Trial Chamber considered the nature of RUF institutions in Kailahun District[1867] and the role and activities of the G5 unit[1868] in reaching its conclusion that an attack was directed at the civilian population in Kailahun District. It found, however, that the RUF continued to commit crimes against civilians in Kailahun District despite the fact that the RUF and some parts of the civilian population in Kailahun District generally cohabited and may have been relatively integrated.[1869] Similarly, while some of the activities of the G5 included monitoring the welfare of civilians, issuing travel passes and settling dispute between civilians and fighters,[1870] it also found that the G5 managed farms on which hundreds of civilians were engaged in forced labour as enslavement.[1871] Simply repeating the findings on the limited benign behavior of the RUF in Kailahun District without explaining how the Trial

Chamber erred in its assessment thereof when compared to the crimes committed against the civilian population, Sesay fails to show an error. His argument therefore fails.

1720. para. 723: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF ideology contained some ideal, attractive and virtuous norms in that they prohibited members of the RUF from raping and looting without the authorisation of Commanders and from killing or molesting "liberated" civilians and also provided punishments for violations.[1872] However, the Trial Chamber reasoned that the RUF found certain criminal conduct acceptable and permissible in certain situations, such as the practice of using civilians as forced labour, women as bush wives and children to participate in active hostilities.[1873] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber found that the RUF system of discipline was "highly selective"[1874] and that some crimes were punished in RUF-controlled areas and where no hostilities were taking place in order to appease the population who reacted to a particular situation.[1875] Additionally, the Trial Chamber found that the declared norms of the RUF prohibiting rape, unauthorised looting, killings or molestation of "liberated" civilians, were "… a mere farce intended to camouflage the planned enormity and gruesomeness of the ruthless brutality that characterised the actions of the RUF Commanders and their subordinates in the operational pursuance of the objectives of their 'broad-based' armed struggle ideology."[1876] While Sesay refers to evidence he posits buttressed the virtuous norms in the RUF ideology, he fails to explain why no reasonable trier of fact, based on other evidence could have arrived at these findings.[1877]

1721. para. 724: These findings, coupled with the Trial Chamber's findings on the crimes in Kailahun District,[1878] contrary to Sesay's submission,[1879] are consistent with the Trial Chamber's holding that "the mistreatment of civilians was particularly frequent and endemic in Kailahun District"[1880] and that the "attack" involved mistreatment of civilians by fighters throughout the Indictment period. Consequently, Sesay's submission fails.

(vii) CAH – Various

a. Kailahun District – CAH – Various

1722. para.1066: The Trial Chamber found Gbao liable pursuant to JCE 1 for the unlawful killing, as a crime against humanity, of one hors de combat SLA soldier, who was killed on Bockarie's orders in Kailahun District.[2943]

1723. para.1067: Gbao argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that the killing of this hors de combat SLA soldier constituted murder as a crime against humanity.[2944] In support of his argument, Gbao submits that, the Trial Chamber, in its own legal holdings, held that "it is trite law that an armed group cannot hold its own members as prisoners of war" and that the killing of the same individual did not constitute a war crime.[2945] In Gbao's view, these holdings contradict its finding of murder as a crime against humanity.

1724. para.1069: The Appeals Chamber finds Gbao's argument to be misconceived. The Trial Chamber held that the killing of the hors de combat SLA soldier "does not constitute the war crime of violence to life, as charged in Count 5 of the Indictment."[2947] Gbao was convicted of the unlawful killing of the hors de combat SLA soldier as a crime against humanity, as charged in Count 4 of the Indictment.[2948] There is no merit to Gbao's argument that this conviction contradicted the Trial Chamber's own findings.

(viii) Kenema District - Murder

1725. para. 370: The Trial Chamber found that acts of unlawful killings, physical violence and enslavement were committed in Kenema District, some of which amounted to terror and collective punishment.[901] It found that these crimes fell within time period of the Junta and that the common plan and plurality of person remained the same.[902]

1726. para. 374: In his first argument, Sesay essentially submits that the low number of crimes committed in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose in Kenema District between 25 May 1997 and 11 August 1997 and in Kenema Town between 25 May 1997 and late January 1998 negates the existence of a JCE covering these areas.[909]

1727. para. 375: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber could not determine the specific dates of each crime committed in Kenema Town during the Junta period.[910] It therefore remains unclear whether Sesay is correct that a low number of crimes were committed in Kenema from the onset of the Junta on 25 May 1997 until the commencement of the forced mining activities in August 1997. However, even assuming that Sesay is correct in that regard, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this renders unreasonable the Trial Chamber's finding that a JCE existed which encompassed "the territory of Sierra Leone", i.e. also Kenema District.[911] While evidence of the number of crimes committed in a certain area may be relevant to the assessment of whether a JCE existed, it is not determinative thereof. The Trial Chamber was entitled to consider, as it did, factors such as the geographic proximity of various crimes, including those in Kenema, their similar modus operandi[912] and their widespread and systematic nature[913] in its assessment of that question. Sesay's present submission does not challenge this assessment. In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls that although the forced mining in Tongo Fields did not commence until August 1997,[914] it is clear from the Trial Chamber's findings that the planned and systematic policy of the Junta and the centralised system pursuant to which this large scale enslavement was implemented must have been devised much earlier.[915] Indeed, "[w]ithin a week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of" Kenema Town.[916]

1728. para. 376: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Sesay fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the JCE extended to Kenema District from the onset of the Junta.

1729. para. 380: Sesay refers to evidence that the AFRC and RUF kept separate command structures in Kenema.[933] This evidence, which was cited by the Trial Chamber in its analysis of the AFRC/RUF organisation in Kenema,[934] does not detract from the finding that the two groups collaborated in Kenema.[935] Moreover, in none of these arguments does Sesay juxtapose the evidence he invokes with the evidence the Trial Chamber relied on, or otherwise attempt to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber could not reasonably have preferred the latter evidence over that which he proffers.

1730. para. 385: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Sesay does not show an error in the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the criminal means employed to achieve the objective in Kenema District.

1731. para. 419: Both Sesay and Gbao submit that the Trial Chamber made insufficient findings on the links between the principal perpetrators of certain crimes in Kenema and the JCE members.[1038] In order to assess their submissions on the proper factual basis, it is necessary to first address another argument by Sesay relating to the Trial Chamber's crime-base findings regarding Kenema.

1732. para. 420: Sesay argues that the finding in paragraph 1100 of the Trial Judgment created a presumption that the crimes in Kenema were committed for personal reasons rather than in pursuance of a common criminal purpose.[1039] The relevant part of paragraph 1100 reads:

> The Chamber is further satisfied that a nexus existed between the killing and the armed conflict, as the control exercised by the AFRC and RUF over Kenema Town during the Junta period created a permissive environment in which the fighters could commit crimes with impunity.

This finding is silent on the fighters' own reasons for committing crimes in Kenema Town. It only says that the permissive environment created by the AFRC and RUF there permitted them to do so with impunity. The presumption that Sesay reads into this finding is thus his own, and not one the Trial Chamber made. This argument fails.

1733. para. 421: The Appeals Chamber now turns to the alleged failures to make sufficient findings. Sesay and Gbao first submit that no link was shown between the JCE members and the persons who carried out the actus reus of the following crimes in Kenema Town: (i) the beating of TF1-122; (ii) the killing of Mr. Dowi; and (iii) the killing of an alleged Kamajor boss. TF1-122 was beaten by AFRC/RUF rebels at the Junta Secretariat in Kenema Town for having requested them to cease removing property from a woman.[1040] This incident was part of the so-called "flag trick:" It was common practice for those near the Junta Secretariat in Kenema Town to stand still during the raising and lowering of the Sierra Leonean flag; AFRC/RUF fighters would raise and lower the flag at irregular times and harass individuals who did not stand still and seise whatever property the latter were carrying.[1041] As to Mr. Dowi, he was killed by AFRC/RUF rebels when trying to prevent them from looting his freezer at his home in Kenema Town.[1042] Both crimes were found to have taken place in the context of the permissive environment created by the control exercised by the AFRC and RUF over Kenema Town wherein their fighters could commit crimes with impunity.[1043]

1734. para. 422: The fact, as noted, that this finding is silent on the perpetrators' own reasons for beating TF1-122 and killing Mr. Dowi is not determinative for whether the Trial Chamber found that they were used by the JCE members to commit these crimes in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1044] Of greater relevance for that issue is the finding that the "control exercised" by the AFRC/RUF over Kenema Town "created" an environment which permitted the beating and the killing.[1045] That control, the Trial Chamber found, was exercised by the Junta: "Within one week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of [Kenema] town."[1046] Indeed, the beating of TF1-122 was found to have taken place while he was in custody at the Junta's own Secretariat building in Kenema Town.[1047] At the head of the Junta were most of the JCE members, who shared the intent to employ beatings and killings, such as those now at issue, as a means to control the territory of Sierra Leone, including Kenema Town.[1048] The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that these findings suffice to show how the perpetrators of the crimes in question were used by JCE members acting in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1049] Sesay's and Gbao's submissions to the contrary fail.

1735. para. 423: The alleged Kamajor boss was killed by AFRC/RUF fighters during "Operation No Living Thing," which had been launched by the RUF and AFRC as a pre-emptive measure due to rumours of an impending Kamajor attack.[1050] "Operation No Living Thing" did not refer to a particular military campaign, but it "described a set of brutal and merciless tactics which AFRC/RUF fighters were encouraged to adopt in combat."[1051] The killing also formed part of the AFRC/RUF's "deliberate strategy to terrorise the civilian population and prevent any support for their opponents."[1052] Seen against the background that the AFRC/RUF Junta, headed by most JCE members, controlled Kenema Town,[1053] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that these findings suffice to explain the Trial Chamber's reasons why the killing was imputed to the JCE members. Sesay's and Gbao's claims to the contrary fail.

1736. para. 424: Next, Sesay and Gbao allege a lack of findings on the links between the JCE members and the perpetrators of the killings in Tongo Field of (i) a civilian at Lamin Street;[1054] and (ii) a Limba man.[1055] The Trial Chamber found that the killing at Lamin Street was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF fighters in a crowd of civilians publicly protesting against the fighters' raping women.[1056] It found that "the perpetrators intended to impart a clear public message that such protests would be met with violence."[1057] This conduct falls squarely within the finding that the "Junta 'government' brutally suppressed opposition", including through public executions, in order to control captured territory.[1058] These findings explain how the Trial Chamber found that the killing at Lamin Street, among others, evidenced a "systematic nature" of the crimes, which lead it to conclude that the peretrators were used by one or more JCE members acting in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1059] Sesay's and Gbao's claims of insufficient reasoning as regards this incident fail.

1737. para. 425: The Trial Chamber found that the Limba man was killed in Tongo Field by an AFRC/RUF fighter for refusing to give him palm wine.[1060] This crime was neither related to the AFRC/RUF forced mining activities in Tongo Field nor was it committed within the "permissive environment," which was limited to Kenema Town. In fact, the Trial Chamber held that the killing was "apparently [an] isolated crime."[1061] The proposition that the perpetrator was used in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose is further contradicted by the finding that "Captain Yamao Kati ordered that as the fighter had used his hand to fire a gun at a civilian, the fighter should also be shot in the hand."[1062] In view of these findings, the mere fact that the perpetrator was an "AFRC/RUF fighter" is insufficient reason for imputing this killing to a JCE member. The Trial Chamber therefore erred in law in so doing. Absent a valid conclusion in this regard, the Appellants' convictions under JCE for the killing of a Limba man in Tongo Field fall. Gbao's submissions are granted insofar they relate to the killing of a Limba man in Tongo Field.

1738. para.426: As a result, none of the Appellants could be held liable under the JCE mode of liability for crime. The Appellants' remaining challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings on the links between the perpetrators of the crimes in Kenema District and the JCE members fail.

1739. para.490: In respect of the crimes committed in Kenema District, the Trial Chamber found in paragraph 2060 of the Trial Judgment that

> [T]he Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved under Counts 3 to 5 (unlawful killings), Count 11 (physical violence) and Count 13 (enslavement) which he did not intend as a means of achieving the common purpose, might be committed by other members of joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control.

1740. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kenema District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kenema District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras. 617, 619 – 623 [7580].

1741. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Existence of a widespread and systematic attack – Kenema District – paras. 637, 642 – 644 [1711].

1742. para. 662: The Trial Chamber found that the following acts at Tongo Field constituted unlawful killings: (i) the killing of a civilian at Lamin Street,[1678] (ii) the killing of a Limba man,[1679] and (iii) the killing of 63 civilians at Cyborg Pit.[1680] In regard to the killing of 63 civilians at Cyborg Pit, the Trial Chamber found that "on three separate occasions, SBUs under the command of AFRC/RUF fighters killed over 20 civilians; 25 civilians; and 15 civilians at Cyborg Pit."[1681] On a fourth occasion at Cyborg Pit, "three civilians and two fighters were killed by the AFRC/RUF."[1682] It further found that the killing at Lamin Street and the killings at Cyborg Pit constituted acts of terrorism.[1683]

1743. para. 666: The Appeals Chamber recalls its conclusion that the Trial Chamber was not required to find that those who carried out the actus reus of the crimes had the requisite mens rea for acts of terrorism.[1695] Sesay's claims will be addressed in light of that conclusion. In that respect, the Appeals Chamber notes the Trial Chamber's findings that acts of terrorism were within the Common Criminal Purpose of the JCE,[1696] and that, with respect to Kenema District, Sesay intended the commission of acts of terrorism and "shared, with the other participants, in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes."[1697] The Trial Chamber

further found that one or more members of the JCE used the non-members who carried out the actus reus of the crimes to commit the crime of acts of terrorism.[1698]

1744. para. 667: In arguing that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the deaths at Cyborg Pit constituted unlawful killings,[1699] Sesay merely reargues his position at trial without addressing the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber. In particular, by only referencing the absence of corroborating testimony from other witnesses, Sesay fails to establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have preferred the affirmative testimonies of witnesses TF1-035 and TF1-045. This claim is therefore dismissed.

1745. para. 668: Contrary to Sesay's claim,[1700] the fact that the acts of violence were intended to serve a further goal, such as the enslavement of the civilian population, does not show that the intent to spread terror was not the principal purpose of those acts.[1701] Simply, it need not be shown that the intent was to spread terror only for its own sake.[1702] Rather, the requirement that the principal purpose be to spread terror serves to distinguish "terror that is merely an incidental effect of acts of warfare which have another primary object and are in all other respects lawful."[1703] Accordingly, whether the goal of the acts of terrorism was to further the enslavement of the civilian population, or further the Common Criminal Purpose of taking control of the territory of Sierra Leone by criminal means, the fact that the acts of terrorism were committed to further another objective would not show that the intent to spread terror was not the principal purpose of the acts of violence.

1746. para. 669: The Appeals Chamber considers that the facts highlighted by Sesay do not establish that the killings did not spread terror in fact.[1704] Moreover, even if the Trial Chamber had been satisfied that the killings did not have that effect, the actual terrorisation of the civilian populations is not an element of the crime,[1705] but is only an evidentiary consideration to be assessed in light of the circumstances as a whole. Sesay fails to address the other considerations the Trial Chamber relied on, and fails to establish that the Trial Chamber's conclusion was unreasonable.

(ix) Kono District - Murder

1753. para. 429: Sesay and Gbao allege that the Trial Chamber erred in imputing to members of the JCE[1069] the killings between February and March 1998 in Tombodu ordered by Savage and Staff Alhaji,[1070] the six killings in Yardu (and the subsequent amputation of TF1-197),[1071] and the killings of at least 29 civilians in Penduma on orders of Staff Alhaji in April 1998.[1072] Sesay further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in imputing the killings of 30 to 40 captive civilians by Rocky in Koidu in April 1998,[1073] and the killing of Sata Sesay's family in Wendedu.[1074] In addition, Gbao contends that the Trial Chamber failed to explain why it imputed the killing of Chief Sogbeh in Tombodu at sometime between February/March 1998 to the JCE members.[1075]

1754. para. 430: With regard to the unlawful killings committed or ordered by Rocky, Savage or Staff Alhaji, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber's finding that these individuals, together with Rambo RUF, "were directly subordinate to and used by members of the [JCE]" sufficiently explains how the Trial Chamber imputed their crimes to the JCE members.[1076]

1755. para. 431: Kallon challenges this finding.[1077] However, he does not address the evidence the Trial Chamber relied on to make it.[1078] He also fails to point to any parts of the record in support for his assertion that Rocky, Rambo, Savage and Staff Alhaji were not under the control of the Appellants. For his part, Sesay argues that the crimes of Savage, Staff Alhaji and their men did not fall within the Common Criminal Purpose because the finding that the rapes, killings and amputations in Penduma in April 1998 were committed "in a bid to disempower President Kabbah and to 'topple' his 'selfish and corrupt' regime" was "insufficient" to make such a finding.[1079] However, Sesay neither explains why that finding is insufficient, nor does he attempt to support his assertion with any reference to the evidence. Due to these flaws, Kallon's and Sesay's arguments are dismissed. The Appeals Chamber now turns to the specific killing incidents.

1756. para. 432: As to the killings by Rocky, Sesay argues that they were not part of the Common Criminal Purpose because Bockarie recalled Superman, Kallon and Rocky to Buedu for punishment when he heard of them.[1080] However, the finding he relies on does not sustain his claim that Superman, Kallon and Rocky were recalled "for punishment", as the Trial Chamber only found that they were summoned.[1081] Moreover, contrary to Sesay's claim, the fact that Rambo was not happy that one of the captive civilians (TF1-015) was still alive does not refute that the killings were committed in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1082] To the contrary, Rocky's own admonition to the captives before the massacre suggests that it was committed in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose:

> Those of you who were clapping today, let me tell you now … We are Junta rebels … As you see in Kono now, we are now in control. We own this place now … We are coming to send you to Tejan Kabbah for you to tell him that we own here.[1083]

In addition, the Trial Chamber found that in March 1998 members of the JCE had ordered the commission of crimes against civilians, including killings in Koidu Town, to punish them for being traitors and for failing to support the Junta.[1084] Sesay points to no part of the record in support for his additional claim that Rocky acted for personal reasons or pursuant to a "localised order from Rambo," nor is that claim borne out by the Trial Chamber findings he refers to, in particular seeing as Kallon was one of the fifteen Commanders assembled after the massacre who voted that TF1-015 should be killed.[1085] This submission fails.

1757. para. 433: With respect to the killings ordered by Savage and Staff Alhaji in Tombodu between February and March 1998, Sesay submits that they were committed for twisted self-gratification independently from the AFRC/RUF, but he neither points to any evidence in support nor does he address the evidence the Trial Chamber relied on for its findings on these killings.[1086] In particular, he does not challenge the findings that the execution of about 200 civilians on Savage's orders was committed because the victims were cheering for ECOMOG troops[1087] and that the "scale and gruesome nature" of the killings in Tombodu during this period "guaranteed their notoriety, as reflected by the evidence of several witnesses that the killings were reported to and discussed by Commanders in other locations."[1088] These submissions therefore fail as well.

1758. para. 434: Regarding the six killings in Yardu, Sesay submits that TF1-197 was unable to identify the perpetrators, or even their grouping.[1089] However, in the parts of TF1-197's testimony he invokes, the witness testified that the "RUF and AFRC" amputated his hand and that "those two groups … were the only two groups that were in Kono."[1090] Consequently, in the witness's mind, the "rebels" who captured him and the other six civilians, and who killed those six civilians before proceeding to amputate his hand, belonged to the AFRC/RUF.[1091] The Trial Chamber therefore did not err in finding that the perpetrators were "AFRC/RUF rebels."[1092] Because the witness's alleged failure to identify the perpetrators is the only basis for Sesay's submission that the killings were wrongly imputed, his submission is rejected. The Appeals Chamber is further satisfied that the Trial Chamber sufficiently explained how the JCE members availed themselves of the perpetrators of the killings. It held that the killings were part of a "polic[y] that promoted violence [and] targeted civilians"[1093] and that the "widespread commission by RUF and AFRC fighters"[1094] of unlawful killings such as the ones at issue demonstrated that the Common Criminal Purpose contemplated the commission of crimes as a means to control the territory of Sierra Leone. Sesay's and Gbao's allegations of a failure to provide a reasoned opinion in respect of this incident lack substance.

1759. para. 435: Sesay and Gbao submit that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasons as to why it imputed the killings of at least 29 civilians in Penduma in April 1998 to the JCE members. It is undisputed that these killings were carried out on orders of Staff Alhaji. The Appeals Chamber has already found that the Trial Chamber provided sufficient reasoning as to why Staff Alhaji's crimes were imputed to the JCE members. As Sesay and Gbao do not allege any error of fact in that reasoning, let alone with respect to the specific killings now at issue, their arguments are dismissed.

1760. para. 436: Gbao argues that the Trial Chamber failed to explain why the killing of Town Chief Sogbeh imputed to the JCE members. The Appeals Chamber notes that this crime was committed on the orders of Officer Med at the Tombodu Bridge mining site sometime in February/March 1998.[1095] Sogbeh was killed for refusing an order to mine, and the rebels warned teh civilians at the mine that the same faith awaited anyone who refused to work.[1096] Officer Med was the mining Commander at Tombodu Bridge[1097] and, as such, reported directly to Sesay.[1098] These findings show how the Trial Chamber imputed the killing to members of the JCE. Gbao's argument is dismissed.

1761. para. 437: Lastly, with respect to the killing of Sata Sesay's family, Sesay fails to explain how the alleged error in imputing this crime to the JCE led to a miscarriage of justice,[1099] seeing as the Trial Chamber did not enter a conviction under JCE for this crime.[1100] This submission is accordingly dismissed.

1762. para. 438: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the Appellants' submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide sufficient reasons for its conclusion that the unlawful killings in Kono District could be imputed to the members of the JCE. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses the Appellants' submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in so concluding.

(xi) Bo District - Murder

1775. para. 416: Gbao alleges that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasons for why the principal perpetrators of the unlawful killings during the 15 June 1997 attack on Tikonko and the 26 June 1997 attack on Gerihun (Counts 1 and 3 to 5) were used by a JCE member in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1029] Gbao argues no factual errors in the crime-base findings to which he refers.

1776. para. 417: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber gave some indication as to how the perpetrators of the crimes during the Tikonko and Gerihun attacks were used by JCE members, by finding that they were "AFRC/RUF fighters."[1030] This finding must moreover be read together with the holdings regarding the context in which the attacks occurred. In that regard, the Trial Chamber found that "the Junta regime did not enjoy consolidated territorial power over Bo District from the outset"[1031] and that "[a]t the end of May 1997, rumours abounded that the AFRC/RUF Junta suspected that Kamajors were hiding in Tikonko and that the AFRC/RUF were planning to attack the town and its civilians.[1032] the town and its civilians." In June 1997 that attack was carried out.[1033] Shortly thereafter AFRC/RUF fighters also attacked Sembehun and Gerihun.[1034] All three attacks followed the same modus operandi as other attacks in terms of the crimes committed in their midst, which, the Trial Chamber reasoned, showed that they "were not isolated incidents but rather a central feature of a concerted campaign against civilians."[1035] Indeed, among the perpetrators in the Gerihun attack were the heads of the AFRC Secretariat in Bo Town, Secretary of State AF Kamara and Brigade Commander Boysie Palmer.[1036]

1777. para. 418: The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that these findings provide sufficient reasoning as to how the unlawful killings in Tikonko and Gerihun fitted into the "widespread and systematic nature of the crimes" and how the perpetrators "were sufficiently closely connected" to JCE members acting in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose, which was the Trial Chamber's basis for imputing these crimes to one or more JCE members.1037 Gbao's submission is therefore untenable.

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

1785. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[52]

1786. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [53]

1787. These attacks [para. 38: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [54]

1788. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [55]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

1789. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [56]

(iii) Counts 3-5: Unlawful killings

i. Bo District - Between about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF attacked Tikonko, Telu, Sembehun, Gerihun and Mamboma, unlawfully killing an unknown number of civilians; [57]

ii. Kenema District - Between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations including Kenema town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians; [58]

iii. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya. [59]

iv. Kailahun District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, in locations including Kailahun town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians; [60]

v. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, in several locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumalu (or Kamalu), Kurubonla, Katombo, Koinadugu, Fadugu and Kamadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians; [61]

vi. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, in several locations in Bombali District, including Bonyoyo (or Bornoya), Karina, Mafabu, Mateboi, and Gbendembu (or Gbendubu or Pendembu), members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians; [62]

vii. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF conducted armed attacks throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area. These attacks included large scale unlawful killings of civilian men, women and children at locations throughout the city and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington, and Calaba Town; [63]

viii. Port Loko - Between about February 1999 and April 1999, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Port Loko District, including Manaarma, Tendakum and Nonkoba; [64]

1790. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 3: Extermination, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 4: Murder, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under article 2.a. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 5: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute.[65]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

1791. para. 804: The Trial Chamber has considered the available evidence below to determine whether the actus reus of the acts of murder under Article 2(a) and Article 3(a) of the Statute and extermination under Article 2(b) of the Statute is proved beyond reasonable doubt in respect of the locations and time frames pleaded in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber finds that where the actus reus of the crime has been established, the only reasonable inference on the evidence adduced is that the perpetrators intentionally killed the victim or caused serious bodily harm in the knowledge that death would likely result.

[63] AFRC Indictment, para. 49.
[64] AFRC Indictment, para. 50.
[65] AFRC Indictment, para. 50.

1792. para. 805: Where findings have been made of murder as crimes against humanity, the Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the perpetrators of the crimes were aware that their acts were part of the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population of Sierra Leone which was taking place at the time.

(i) Bo District - Crimes

1793. para. 806: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF attacked Tikonko, Telu, Sembehun, Gerihun, and Mamboma, unlawfully killing an unknown number of civilians".[1564]

1794. para. 807: No evidence of unlawful killings has been adduced with respect to the villages of Telu, Sembehun and Mamboma, as alleged in the Indictment.[1565]

1795. para. 808: The Brima Defence submits that no evidence was led by the Prosecution of any attack by the AFRC in Bo District, implying that the perpetrators of the crimes in Bo District were exclusively members of the RUF.[1566]

1796. para. 809: In arriving at the following factual findings, the Trial Chamber has examined the entirety of the evidence and relies on Prosecution Witnesses TF1-004, TF1-053 and TF1-054 and Defence Witness DBK-137, as well as Exhibit P-66.

a. Tikonko - Bo District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Tikonko – Bo District – Crimes

1797. para. 810: Witness TF1-004 testified that on or around 25 June 1997, two groups of more than 200 "soldiers" in military fatigue and red head bands attacked Tikonko.[1567] He stated that after the two attacks the streets of Tikonko were full of dead bodies and that as many as 200 persons may have lost their lives.[1568] Given the general nature of this evidence and the possibility that some of the persons killed were not protected persons, the Trial Chamber will make findings only on the specific incidents described by the witness below.

1798. para. 811: The witness testified that he was at Tikonko Junction when the first group of soldiers came from the direction of Bo. The first group of soldiers said that they were coming to kill Kamajors; he heard this from some market women who were fleeing and, later, from the soldiers themselves.[1569] One of the soldiers from the group asked the witness who he was and the witness replied that he was "with them" so that the soldiers would not kill him. The soldier said they had come for Kamajors and did not kill the witness.[1570]

1799. para. 812: Witness TF1-004 testified that a second group of soldiers followed the first and that they were "not selecting" meaning that they were killing people indiscriminately.[1571] The witness observed the soldiers kill five civilians and three Kamajors.[1572]

1800. para. 813: The burden of proof as to whether a combatant is hors de combat rests with the Prosecution.[1573] The witness did not describe with precision the circumstances in which the three Kamajors were killed. The Trial Chamber is therefore unable to determine whether they were taking active part in the hostilities at the time. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that five civilians were intentionally killed during the attack on Tikonko.

1801. para.814: Some time later, the witness came out of his hiding spot and saw an unknown number of dead people at Tikonko Junction. The corpses were dressed in civilian clothing.[1574] The Witness walked into Tikonko proper, towards his house and saw more corpses, both women and men.[1575] He heard a woman calling from a house. The witness entered the house and the woman asked him for water. The woman had been shot in the knee and her belly had been split open. She told the witness that the "soldiers" were responsible. The witness also observed approximately ten other bodies in the room with bullet wounds. In the next room, the witness saw the body of a man who had been shot in the back of the neck. A child was lying next to him, shot dead through the chest. The witness moved into a third room of the house where he observed another two bodies; one of a man who had been shot in the side and through the ears.[1576]

1802. para. 815: The witness left the house and continued walking towards his home. He saw the corpse of a man whose legs had been broken and whose skin appeared to have been removed from his forehead with a knife as well as the corpse of another man with bullet wounds lying in the gutter.[1577]

1803. para. 816: The witness entered another house, next to his home and saw the bodies of two dead women. One woman had a gunshot wound to the ear and her stomach had been split open so that the intestines had slipped out. The second woman had a gunshot wound in her side. The bodies were piled one on top of the other.[1578]

1804. para. 817: The witness testified that he did not know anyone in the village who owned guns that could have killed these individuals.[1579]

1805. para. 818: Two to three days after the attacks, the witness, together with some youths and elders from the village dug a mass grave, collected bodies from around the town and buried them. The witness estimates that they buried 20 bodies.[1580]

1806. para. 819: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the witness's evidence that at least 18 to 20 civilians were killed by "soldiers" during the attack on Tikonko.

1807. para. 820: The Brima and Kanu Defence submit that the witness in cross-examination accepted that the soldiers who attacked Tikonko in June 1997 were members of the RUF.[1581] The Trial Chamber notes that while witness TF1-004 testified that the "soldiers" attacking Tikonko identified themselves as belonging to the AFRC faction,[1582] he also stated that some of them were the "rebels" or RUF who had been stationed in Tikonko prior to the May 1997 coup.[1583] In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the above-established incidents were committed by members of either the AFRC faction or the RUF, but it cannot be determined beyond reasonable doubt to which of the two factions the perpetrators belonged.

b. Gerihun – Bo District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Gerihun – Bo District – Crimes

1808. para. 821: TF1-053 testified that on 26 June 1997, eight "soldiers" with guns, among them a certain AF Kamara, one AB Kamara and one Boysie Palmer, arrived in vehicles and entered house of Paramount Chief Sandy Demby in Gerihun.[1584]

1809. para. 822: TF1-054 watched as a group of soldiers shot Paramount Chief Demby in the stomach . . . another soldier stabbed him in the neck[1586] . . . TF1-054 found the dead body of the caretaker, Sumaila, lying in the bathtub. Witness TF1-054 did not give further information as to who killed Sumaila.[1587] Given the strong circumstantial evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Sumaila was also killed by the soldiers.

1810. para 823: The Brima Defence submits that the evidence of witness TF1-053 should not be relied upon and alleges that his testimony contradicted his earlier pre-trial statements.[1588] In addition, Defence witness DBK -137 testified that he heard that Kamajors were responsible for the death of Chief Demby.[1589] The Trial Chamber notes that the testimony of witness TF1-053 regarding the killing of Chief Demby was corroborated by witness TF1-054 and was not shaken on cross-examination.[1590] The Trial Chamber thus dismisses the version of events presented by witness DBK-137 which is based on hearsay.

1811. para. 824: On the same day, 26 June 1997, witness TF1-053 observed a "soldier" shoot and kill a boy who used to run errands for him, named Kamo Lahai.[1591] The witness also saw a dead woman lying on Old Bo Road. The witness was told by mourners that her name was Sukie and that she had been shot in the breast by a "soldier".[1592] Although witness TF1-053 did not mention the name Sukie in his pre-trial statement, the Trial Chamber finds that this does not affect the credibility of the witness as he explained that he only recalled her name when giving evidence at trial.[1593] The Trial Chamber is satisfied Sukie was unlawfully killed by a soldier during the attack on Gerihun.

1812. para. 825: On 26 or 27 June 1997, in the vicinity of the market in Gerihun, Witness TF1-053 encountered at least five corpses, both male and female.[1594] The Trial Chamber is unable to establish with certainty the identity of the perpetrators or whether the victims were protected persons. The Trial Chamber accordingly makes no findings on this incident.

(ii) Kenema District - Crimes

1813. para. 827: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations including Kenema town, members of AFRC/ RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians."[1595]

1814. para. 828: In making the following factual findings, the Trial Chamber has considered the entirety of the evidence and relies on Prosecution Witnesses TFl-122 and Defence Witnesses DAB-063 and DAB-147, as well as Exhibit P-24.

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

1815. para. 829: Following the coup in May 1997, both "RUF rebels" and "AFRC Juntas" took control of Kenema Town.[1596] These groups were present in Kenema until February 1998.[1597]

1816. para. 830: Not long after the takeover of Kenema Town, witness TF1-122 saw the house of one Pa Mansaray at Mambu Street on fire. According to the witness, the house had previously been occupied by Kamajors.[1598] Thereafter, he saw three dead bodies dressed in plain cloth - two elderly men and one younger man - lying on the street. Witness TF1-122 insisted that they were civilians and not Kamajors.[1599] However, in the absence of further evidence, the Trial Chamber cannot establish beyond reasonable doubt that these individuals were killed by members of the AFRC/RUF .

1817. para. 831: Witness TF1-122 gave evidence that at the end of May 1997 or shortly thereafter, a certain Ms. Dowei reported to the Kenema Police that "AFRC Juntas" and "RUF rebels" shot dead her husband who intervened while they were looting his property.[1600]

1818. para. 832: The testimony of witnesses TF1-122 and DAB-147, as well as Exhibit P-24, establish that in late January or early February 1998, a number of persons, among them BS Massaquoi, Brima Kpaka and Andrew Quee were arrested on the orders of Sam Bockarie of the RUF and brought to the AFRC Secretariat in Kenema. Bockarie announced that these persons were Kamajor supporters and would be killed.[1601] The detainees were then transferred to the Kenema Police Station. BS Massaquoi and Brima Kpaka were subsequently released on bail.[1602] Within a couple of days, BS Massaquoi was re-arrested by "AFRC juntas". He was then taken away, along with the other detainees, to an unknown location.[1603] Thereafter, at Lambaya stream near a waterfall called Dorwala, witness TF1-122 found the corpses of BS Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and four other individuals. Their bodies were covered with gunshot wounds, and the cranium of BS Massaquoi had been crushed by a cement block.[1604]

1819. para. 833: The Trial Chamber notes that the evidence on precisely who carried away BS Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and the other detainees is inconclusive. There is also no direct evidence on who killed the individuals found at Lambaya stream.[1606] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the evidence that unidentified members of AFRC/RUF were responsible for these killings.

1820. para. 834: In late June 1997, a certain Bonnie Wailer was detained at the Kenema police station. One day, witness TF1-122 saw Sam Bockarie arriving at the police station, accompanied by an unidentified AFRC Lieutenant and others.[1607] In the presence of police officers and civilians, witness TF1-122 heard Bockarie ordering that Bonnie Wailer and two other detained persons should be killed. Witness TF1-122 was present when "Bockarie's men" and "AFRC juntas" shot dead the three individuals.[1608] Their bodies were taken away on a military pickup van.[1609]

1821. para. 835: After the end of the rainy season in 1997, the Kenema police were investigating the burglary of the warehouse of the International Committee of the Red Cross ("ICRC") in Kenema. Witness TF1-122 heard Sam Bockarie announce that he would take the investigation into his own hands.[1610] As a result, Bockarie had two individuals arrested, one of whom was named Santos.[1611] On the same evening, Witness TF1-122 found the dead bodies of these two persons at his doorstep.[1612] Two days later, Sam Bockarie and "his boys" loaded the corpses onto a vehicle and drove off.[1613] Although Witness TF1-122 in a pre-trial statement stated that the burglary concerned the warehouse of 'Medecins Sans Frontieres', not of the ICRC,[1614] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that this inconsistency can be attributed to the lapse of time and that the credibility of Witness TF1-122 remains unshaken.

1822. para. 836: [I]n late December 1997, when 'Operation No Living Thing' was launched in Kenema, Witness TF1-122 saw the dead body of a man dressed in civilian clothes near the Sierra Leone Telecommunication Building on Hangh Road in Kenema Town.[1615] "RUF rebels" and "AFRC juntas" were dancing around the body and singing that they would kill all Kamajors. They split open the dead man's abdomen with a bayonet and stretched his intestines across Hangh Road and established a checkpoint around it. The body stayed there for three days.[1616]

1823. para. 837: At an unspecified time between May 1997 and February 1998, Sam Bockarie personally killed a farmer near the NIC Building in Kenema town with two gunshots. Witness TF1-122 heard the gunshots and arrived at the scene when the farmer was dying. Sam Bockarie remarked that all Kamajors must be "finished". Bockarie's "boys" then threw the farmer's dead body into a hole.[1617]

1824. para. 839: The Trial Chamber accepts on the evidence that some of the above killings can be attributed to Sam Bockarie of the RUF. However, it dismisses the Kanu Defence submission that none of the killings can be attributed to the AFRC faction as the testimony of witness TF1-122 implicating "AFRC juntas" in these incidents was not shaken on cross-examination.

(iii) Kono District - Crimes

1825. para. 841: The Prosecution alleges that "[a]bout mid February 1998, AFRC/RUF fleeing from Freetown arrived in Kono District. Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya."[1619]

1826. para. 842: No evidence has been led on unlawful killings with respect to the villages of Foindu, Willifeh and Biaya.[1620]

1827. para. 843: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TFl-334, George Johnson, TFl-216 and Defence witnesses DBK-129, DAB-018, and DAB-023.

a. Koidu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Koidu – Kono District – Crimes

1828. para. 845: In early March 1998, Johnny Paul Koroma declared Koidu Town a "no go area" for civilians. This declaration was reiterated by Issa Hassan Sesay of the RUF. 1623 Many civilians were killed following this order by AFRC and RUF troops in Koidu Town and surrounding villages.[1624] This testimony is generally corroborated by witnesses TF1-206 and TF1-217, who heard about killings in Koidu Town.[1625]

1829. para. 846: Documentary evidence suggests that in mid-June 1998, more than 650 civilians were killed as a result of the fighting in the area around Koidu.[1626] Again, the Trial Chamber is unable to attribute those killings to a specific faction.

1830. para. 847: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that an unknown number of civilians were unlawfully killed in Koidu, but is unable to determine beyond reasonable doubt whether these killings are attributable to AFRC and/or RUF forces in Kono District.

b. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

1831. para. 848: In or about April 1998, upon the orders of a certain 'Staff Alhaji Bayo', 53 people were burnt alive by "juntas" in a big house near late Sahr Fania's compound at Tombodu.[1627]

1832. para. 849: In mid-May 1998, 'Savage' locked 15 civilians into a house in Tombodu town which he then set ablaze. None of them escaped.[1628] Another 47 people were beheaded by 'Savage' and 'Guitar boy' and then thrown into a diamond pit.[1629] Witness George Johnson corroborated this evidence generally, testifying that 'Changabulanga' aka 'Savage' killed more than 150 people who were then thrown into a pit. He stated that all were civilians and had all been killed by machete.[1630] Several other witnesses testified that massive killings took place at the hands of AFRC/RUF fighters in Tombodu town between February and June 1998.[1631]

1833. para. 850: Witness TF1-033 testified that in or about March 1998, the Accused Brima ordered 'Savage' to attack Tombodu, which resulted in the killing of "hundreds of civilians".[1632] In the presence of AFRC commanders including the Accused Kamara and Kanu, many civilians were burned alive as they were locked up in houses which were then set on fire.[1633]

1834. para. 852: The following issues are in dispute amongst the parties regarding the testimony of witness TF1-033: the number of persons killed in Tombodu, the time frame when the killings took place and whether the Accused Brima ordered or was present while the crimes were committed.

1835. para. 853: In cross-examination, witness TF1-033 stated that 'Savage' was the sole commander of Tombodu at the time of the atrocities described and he was subordinate commander to 'Gullit'.[1636] Prosecution witness George Johnson testified that the Accused Brima arrived after the commission of crimes in Tombodu.[1637] Further, witness TF1-033 gave only very general information in relation to the alleged order and his testimony is inconsistent and contradicts the evidence of other reliable witnesses.[1638] For example, witness TF1-033 testified that the Accused Kanu was present in Tombodu in March 1998, at a time that other witnesses locate the Accused Kanu in Koinadugu District. Further, witness TF1-033 testified that the Accused Brima ordered Savage to attack Tombodu at a time where Tombodu was already the base of an AFRC Battalion in Kono District.[1639]

1836. para. 854: The Trial Chamber is thus of the view that the witness's evidence that the Accused Brima gave an order to 'Savage' to kill civilians in Tombodu is not probative and does not rely on it in making a finding on unlawful killings in Tombodu.

1837. para. 855: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that in the Indictment period for Kono District 'Staff Alhaji Bayo' intentionally killed 53 people in Tombodu; that 'Savage' intentionally killed 15 civilians in Tombodu; that Savage and Guitar boy intentionally killed another 47 people in Tombodu.

c. Mortema – Kono District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killing in Mortema – Kono District – Crimes

1838. para. 856: The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution has not led any evidence of unlawful killings in Mortema. However, the Defence witnesses DAB-025 and DAB-101 testified that on an unspecified day in 1998, the RUF attacked and took control of Mortema and an unknown number of people were killed as a result of the attack.[1640] As the attack was conducted by the RUF, the Trial Chamber will not make a final determination on the reliability of the evidence.

(iv) Kailahun District – Crimes

1839. para. 858: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, in locations including Kailahun town, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians."[1641]

1840. para. 859: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on Prosecution witnesses TF1-045, TF1-113, TF1-334 and Gibril Massaquoi and Defence witness DAB-147, DAB-140 and DAB-142.

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Kailahun – Kailahun District – Crimes

1841. para.860: Sam Bockarie was the senior commander of RUF troops which were in Kailahun District between February and June 1998.[1642] Witness TF1-113 testified that on his orders, a total of 67 persons were arrested in several villages in Kailahun District and detained at the G5 office in Kailahun Town. The persons were accused of being Kamajors.[1643] Some time later witness TF1-113 saw Sam Bockarie personally kill two individuals at the roundabout in Kailahun town. Eight dead bodies were already lying on the ground when he arrived at the scene.[1644] From the witness's testimony, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these eight persons were also killed by Bockarie. The ten persons killed were part of the group of 67 detained 'Kamajors'.

1842. para. 861: Following the incident at the roundabout, Sam Bockarie ordered the killing of the remaining 57 detained 'Kamajors'.[1645] In the witness's presence, Bockarie instructed the Military Police Commander Joe Fatoma to kill these individuals, threatening him with death if the order was not obeyed. The 57 individuals were shot following that order.[1646] Witness TF1-113's evidence is generally corroborated by a number of Defence Witnesses, although some of them testified that Sam Bockarie killed the 57 persons himself.[1647] Given that Witness TF1-113 was not shaken on cross-examination and the Defence Witnesses' accounts of events were less detailed than her own, the Trial Chamber relies on her evidence. Witnesses DAB-142 and DAB-147 corroborated the evidence that the civilians killed were alleged Kamajors.[1648]

1843. para. 862: As witness TF1-113 testified that the above incidents occurred shortly after Johnny Paul Koroma arrived in Kailahun Town and left for Kangema,[1649] the Trial Chamber is able to infer that the killings described occurred in the last half of March 1998.

1844. para. 863: However, it appears from the evidence that the 67 persons killed were combatants. The Trial Chamber recalls that if a victim is "a member of an armed organization, the fact that he is not armed or in combat at the time of the commission of crimes, does not accord him civilian status."[1650] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the detained and alleged 'Kamajors' were part of the civilian population.

(v) Koinadugu District - Crimes

1845. para. 865: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, in several locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumalu (or Kamalu), Kurubonla, Katombo, Koinadugu, Fadugu and Kamadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians."[1651]

1846. para. 866: No evidence on unlawful killings was led in respect of Heremakono, Kumalu (or Kamalu), Katombo, Kamadugu[1652] and Kurubonla.

1847. para. 867: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on Prosecution witnesses TF1-334, TF1-209 and TF1-147 and Defence witnesses DAB-081, DAB-083, DAB-077, DAB-078 and DAB-085, as well as Prosecution Exhibits P-57 and P-54 and Defence Exhibit D-24 (under seal).

a. Kabala - Koinadugu District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Kabala – Koinadugu District – Crimes

1848. para. 868: Witness TFl-209 witnessed the killing of her six year old son by a rebel called 'Jabie', loyal to SAJ Musa, at a farm in or near Kabala on an unspecified date in August 1998.[1653] Her husband was beaten to death with a 'mortar pestle' in the same attack by 'Jabie' and a certain 'Allusein', who was loyal to 'Superman's' group.[1654] The witness was sexually assaulted and abducted by the fighters. Her testimony in relation to these events is considered by the Trial Chamber below in its findings on Count 9.[1655]

1849. para. 869: In cross-examination, Defence Counsel referred the witness to a prior statement in which she stated that her son was two, and not six years old. The witness maintained that her child was six years of age when he was killed. She was able to provide a detailed account of the events and explained the inconsistencies with her prior statement.[1656] The Trial Chamber is thus satisfied that the witness's husband and son were killed by fighters loyal to SAJ Musa and 'Superman'.

1850. para. 870: On 17 September 1998, "rebels" attacked Kabala a second time. Witness TFl-147 testified that the rebels engaged in hostilities with loyal government SLA and ECOMOG forces. The witness was not present during those hostilities as he was hiding outside the town.[1657] However, he heard about the killing of many people.[1658] On his return to Kabala the next morning he saw ten corpses with gun shot wounds at the main junction in the centre of town.[1659] During cross-examination, the witness testified that the ten corpses that he saw were killed during the hostilities. The witness was not able to state whether the persons were civilians or by which armed organisation they were killed.[1660] In the absence of more specific evidence, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that these victims were killed by AFRC or RUF forces or that they were civilians.

1851. para. 871: The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of witness TFl-199, that in the course of the attack on Kabala, ECOMOG were captured. Lieutenant Colonel 'Savage' and his men captured seven ECOMOG and loyal government SLA soldiers, removed their combat uniform, lined them up with their hands tied behind their back and executed them.[1661] However, this incident occurred outside of the Indictment period for Koinadugu.

b. Koinadugu Town – Koinadugu District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Koinadugu Town – Koinadugu District – Crimes

1852. para. 872: AFRC and RUF forces under the command of SAJ Musa and 'Superman' attacked and occupied Koinadugu Town in late July 1998.[1662] Many civilians were killed upon the orders of 'Superman'.[1663] Specifically, Witness DAB-081 testified that more than ten civilians were beaten to death with machetes or sticks by the RUF.[1664]

1853. para. 873: Witness DAB-081 testified that one civilian boy, Lansana Farroo, was guarding a school in Koinadugu where child soldiers were being held. When he denied access to two RUF soldiers, they killed him.[1665]

1854. para. 874: In addition to the specific incidents described above, evidence of dead bodies found in the streets of Koinadugu Town was adduced at trial. The Trial Chamber finds this evidence insufficient to form the basis of findings of unlawful killings.[1666]

c. Fadugu – Koinadugu District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Fadugu – Koinadugu District – Crimes

1855. para. 875: Notwithstanding the Defence submission that ECOMOG may be accountable for some of the killings which occurred in Fadugu at the relevant time,[1667] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the following incidents cannot be attributed to ECOMOG.

1856. para. 876: On 22 May 1998, rebels attacked the town of Fadugu. They shot indiscriminately at civilians and killed an unspecified number.[1668] The Trial Chamber finds this evidence insufficient to form the basis of findings of unlawful killings.

1857. para. 877: Witness DAB-078 saw eight armed soldiers capture a civilian man, whom they believed was a member of the CDF, at a checkpoint in Fadugu on 22 May 1998.[1669] The soldiers beat the man to death, cut open his stomach and removed his intestines. The intestines were displayed openly at the checkpoint.[1670] In close vicinity to the checkpoint, a teacher and his younger brother were killed.[1671] The Trial Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the soldiers knew that the killings were part of the attack on the civilian population and therefore the requisite mens rea to establish a crime against humanity is lacking. However, on the evidence adduced, the Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators were aware that the victim was not taking active part in the hostilities and that they acted in furtherance of the armed conflict. However, the witness was not able to provide any details as to which faction the soldiers belonged.

1858. para. 878: During the early hours of 11 September 1998, there was a second attack on Fadugu by "rebels" in a campaign known as "Operation Die." An unknown number of civilians were killed in the course of this attack, including the local paramount chief of Mabolo who was burnt to death.[1672] This incident is corroborated by documentary evidence.[1673]

(vi) Bombali District - Crimes

1859. para. 880: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, in several locations in Bombali District, including Bonyoyo (or Bomoya), Karina, Mafabu, Mateboi and Gbendembu (or Gbendubu or Pendembu), members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians."[1674]

1860. para. 881: No evidence on unlawful killings was led with respect to Mafabu.[1675]

1861. para. 882: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on Prosecution Witnesses TF1-156, TF1-157, TF1-158, TF1-033, George Johnson and TF1-334 and Defence witnesses DBK-089, DBK-050 and DBK-094.

a. Bornoya - Bombali District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Bornoya - Bombali District – Crimes

1862. para. 883: Witnesses TFl-156, TFl-157 and TF1-158 testified that Bornoya was attacked by "soldiers" in the morning hours on an unspecified day in May 1998. Defence witnesses testified that the exact date of the attack was 8 May 1998. The assailants were armed and wore combat uniforms and red head bands.[1676] An unspecified number of civilians were killed during the attack.[1677]

1863. para. 884: A man wearing shorts, boots and a jacket uniform, and another man with a head band carrying a cutlass, slit open the stomach of a pregnant woman named Isatta and removed the foetus. Isatta died as a result.[1678] A certain Lansana Mansaray and Sarah Foday were assaulted and seriously wounded and later died as a result of their injuries.[1679] Two children of one Alhaji Sorie

Mansaray were intentionally burnt to death under a mattress which was set on fire.[1680] An unspecified number of other civilians were killed in the course of the attack, including Adama Kamara, Jammah Daboh, Sheriff Mansaray and Mohamdu Koroma.[1681] A female soldier called Adama hacked to death the father of witness TF1-158.[1682] Witness DBK-050 watched soldiers hack his younger brother to death with a cutlass, on the orders of a female soldier known to him as 'Adama Cut Hand'.[1683]

1864. para. 885: Witness TFl-158, who was abducted and later used as a child soldier by the troops that attacked Bornoya, testified that he learned from another abducted boy who had been with the troops since Kono District that the leaders of the troops included 'Gullit', 'Five-Five', 'O-Five' and SAJ Musa.[1684] He testified that he learned about those names during the subsequent attack on the nearby village of Karina. However, witnesses belonging to SAJ Musa's group testified that SAJ Musa and 'O-Five' were not en route with the advance team led by Brima.[1685] Nevertheless, Witness TFl-157, who was also abducted and later used as a child soldier, corroborates the fact that the troops were lead by 'Gullit' and 'Five-Five'.[1686] He testified that he only heard about those names once he arrived at Camp Rosos.[1687] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the attack on Bornoya was conducted by troops associated with the three Accused, as the village was on the route taken by the advance team led by Brima during the same time period.[1688]

b. Karina - Bombali District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Karina - Bombali District – Crimes

1865. para. 886: On 8 May 1998 AFRC soldiers attacked Karina, a Mandingo village in Bombali District. Previously, at Kamagbengbe, the Accused Brima ordered his troops to specifically target Karina, as he alleged that it was the home town of President Kabbah.[1689] All three Accused participated in the attack.[1690]

1866. para. 887: In the presence of witness TF1-334, the Accused Kamara and two other "juntas" locked five young girls into a house and subsequently set it ablaze. The five girls were burnt alive.[1691]

1867. para. 888: "Juntas" threw an unspecified number of little children into the flames of burning houses. The children were burnt alive.[1692] Soldiers stabbed a pregnant woman to death.[1693]

A certain Saccoh Kankoh Fanta was injured during the attack and subsequently died.[1694] An unspecified number of children were killed during the attack.[1695]

1868. para. 889: 'Cyborg', a security officer to the Accused Kamara, threw at least four children aged between five and ten years from a two-storey building in Karina.[1696] The witness did not clarify whether the four children died as a result. The Trial Chamber therefore is not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the children were killed.

1869. para. 890: A certain Eddie Williams, a.k.a. 'Maf', wrapped into an unknown number of people in a carpet inside a house and thereafter set the house on fire. The people were burnt alive. The Accused Kamara was watching from outside the house, together with Witness George Johnson and several personal security guards of the Accused Kamara.[1697]

1870. para. 89l: Prosecution Witnesses TFl-334, George Johnson, TFl-199 and TF1-055 testified that civilians were killed at the Karina mosque, including the Imam.[1698] Witness TFl-334 testified that the Accused Brima was at the mosque and accused the Imam of supporting President Kabbah. Brima allegedly said to the Imam: "You, you are the one that pray for people. You are one of Pa Kabbah's family ... [s]o you are the worst people here." The Witness stated that the Accused Brima then shot and killed the Imam, along with six men and five women with his 'Magnum' pistol.[1699] Witness George Johnson testified that the civilians at the mosque were killed by Halaji Kamanda aka 'Gun Boot'. However, Witness George Johnson did not see the civilians being killed, but rather observed dead bodies with gun shot wounds inside and outside the mosque subsequently.[1700]

1871. para. 892: The Defence presented a different version of events. The Defence adduced evidence in closed session that established beyond reasonable doubt that the Imam was not killed in the attack on Karina mosque.[1701] Defence Witnesses DBK-089 and DBK-094 gave evidence that the Imam left Karina three days prior to the attack, leaving the Imam's elder brother in charge of the mosque.[1702] The Imam's elder brother appointed someone to lead the prayers in the absence of the Imam.[1703]

1872. para. 893: Defence witnesses DBK-089 and DBK-094 did not dispute the killing of civilians at the mosque. The Brima Defence submits that the testimony of witness TF1-334 is unreliable based on his assertion that the Imam was killed.[1704] The Trial Chamber notes that when asked to whom Brima spoke at the mosque, Witness TFl-334 responded "It was the imam -- the imam that was in charge of the mosque who was leading prayers."[1705] The Trial Chamber is thus satisfied that the Witness referred to the person killed as the 'Imam' on the basis that this person was leading the prayers when the troops arrived at the mosque. This mistake on the part of the witness does not undermine the credibility of his evidence that the Accused Brima killed the person leading the prayers, along with 11 other civilians at the mosque.

1873. para. 894: In light of the above evidence, the Trial Chamber considers the testimony of witness DBK- 094, who claimed to have only seen seven dead bodies in Karina after the attack to be unreliable.[1706] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that in fact civilians were killed on a massive scale in Karina.[1707] One witness estimated that at least 200 civilians were killed in the attack on Karina.[1708] Even though other witnesses have not estimated any total figures for the event, the figure of 200 civilians killed is corroborated by the totality of the evidence given, the massiveness of the attack on the village and the general destruction caused.

c. Mateboi - Bombali District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killing in Mateboi - Bombali District – Crimes

1874. para. 895: At an unspecified time in 1998, the Accused Brima sent an AFRC "advance team" under the command of 'Captain Arthur' to Mateboi, a village close to Camp Rosos.[1709] Upon return to Camp Rosos, 'Captain Arthur' brought the decapitated head of the chief of Mateboi and handed it over the commanders at headquarters, which included the Accused Brima and Kamara.[1710]

d. Gbendembu - Bombali District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Gbendembu - Bombali District – Crimes

1875. para. 896: In or around August 1998, 'Gullit' ordered two AFRC commanders, one Salifu Mansaray and 'Arthur' to attack Gbendembu, on the basis that ECOMOG and loyal SLA troops were purportedly stationed there.[1711] Witness TF1-033 heard that 25 civilians were killed in the attack on Gbendembu and that 'Gullit' commended his men for "a job well done".[1712]

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1876. para. 899: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF conducted armed attacks throughout the city of Freetown and the Western area. These attacks included large scale unlawful killings of civilian men, women and children at locations throughout the city and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington, and Calaba Town".[1713]

1877. para. 900: The Prosecution has led evidence from witnesses who heard of killings of civilians and witnessed dead bodies in various locations in Freetown and the Western Area.[1714] While the Trial Chamber accepts this evidence as credible, given its general nature, the Trial Chamber relies on it to corroborate its findings on the more specific incidents described below.

1878. para. 901: The Trial Chamber has considered the available evidence and, in arriving at the following findings of fact, relies on the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-033, TF1-184, Gibril Massaquoi, TF1-334, TF1-024, TF1-I04, TF1-083, TF1-157, TF1-021, TF1-153 and TF1-084.

a. Freetown - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Freetown – East End Police - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1879. para. 902: Witness TFl-157 testified that when the troops entered Freetown, police officers and their families were specifically targeted and killed.[1715] The targeting of police officers followed a specific reminder by the Accused Kanu, who reiterated a previous order given to the troops by SAJ Musa at Newton, ordering that the troops should kill Nigerian soldier, Nigerian civilians, police officers and SLPP party members.[1716] The Accused Kanu reminded the troops of that order at a meeting near Orugu Village[1717] on the eve of the attack on Freetown. The Accused Brima, Kamara, the witness George Johnson, Hassan Papah Bangura and other battalion commanders were present at that meeting.[1718]

1880. para. 903: No suggestion has been made that the regular police were involved in the hostilities during the armed conflict in Sierra Leone. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the killed officers were civilians.

ii. Unlawful killings in Freetown – State House Area - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1881. para. 904: Witness TF1-033 testified that on 6 January 1999, while he was seated on a bench at State House with Gibril Massaquoi, fighters including 'Junior Sheriff' brought one boy to

State House. The witness saw the boy's ID card, from which the witness learnt that he was from Guinea-Bissau. Witness TF1-033 testified that 'Junior Sheriff' then shot and killed the boy.[1719]

1882. para. 905: Witness TF1-033 also testified that on 6 January 1999 and the subsequent four or five days thereafter, he observed civilians being killed around State House by AFRC fighters on the orders of 'Gullit'.[1720] The witness stated that people perceived to be Nigerians and civilians suspected of harbouring Nigerians were brought to State House and killed. Given the more detailed evidence of killings at State House considered below, some of which involved the Accused Brima, the Trial Chamber makes no additional findings on this general evidence of witness TF1-033.

1883. para. 906: On 6 January 1999, at State House, witness TF1-184 watched the Accused Brima shoot dead a woman, who was the girlfriend of one of the soldiers.[1721] Witness TF1-334 also described an incident wherein the Accused Brima shot and intentionally killed a woman at State House on that same day, whom he referred to as the wife of one of the soldiers.[1722]

1884. para. 907: Witness Gibril Massaquoi testified that when he entered State House on 6 January 1999, he saw sixteen persons in civil attire sitting on the ground inside the compound. The witness overheard 'Five-Five' talking to the men, who were explaining that they were not soldiers but Nigerian businessmen. 'Gullit' then arrived and told 'Five-Five' that the men were Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers who had removed their uniforms and were posing as civilians. Several of the Nigerians denied this. 'Gullit' then told his soldiers to "get rid" of the Nigerians.[1723] The witness testified that he saw 'Five-Five' and other soldiers take "some of them" across the road from State House to "a place now they are referring to as the Defence Building. It was formerly a hotel."[1724] The witness testified that 'Five-Five' shot and killed one man. Three others were shot and killed, although the witness does not state by whom. The four corpses and the remaining Nigerians, who were still alive, were then loaded into a white four wheel drive and taken away from State House.[1725]

1885. para. 908: The Trial Chamber has considered the cross-examination of witness Gibril Massaquoi on this point.[1726] It emerged that in a prior statement concerning the incident, the witness stated that he saw two persons being killed at "the defence building". He states that neither 'Gullit' nor 'Five-Five' personally killed anyone, but that "they gave orders to their men" to execute the Nigerians.[1727]

1886. para. 909: Witness TF1-184 gave the following evidence regarding killings he witnessed at State House on 6 January 1999:

> A. [...] So by this I left him and came inside State House. They came with four men-
>
> Q. Mr Witness, who is they? They came?
>
> A. We, our soldiers, junior soldiers, went to the defence. By then it was Paramount Hotel. They used to call it Paramount Hotel. That is where they brought this four civilian, including one woman. As they said, these people were Nigerians. Gullit shot at them. Five-Five took the woman. We left there. I came down. I came inside again.[1728]

The witness was not cross-examined on this evidence, which the Trial Chamber finds somewhat imprecise.

1887. para. 910: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that witnesses Gibril Massaquoi and TF1-184 describe the same incident, as their accounts are substantially similar and over six years passed between the event in question and their testimony. It is plausible that the discrepancies between the witnesses' accounts are explicable on the basis that the witnesses arrived at State House at a different point in time and described the incident from their various perspectives. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Accused Brima gave an order to his subordinates, including Kanu, to execute the civilians. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that Kanu shot and killed one civilian near State House and ordered his men to execute another three civilians.

1888. para. 911: Witness TF1-334 testified that on the same day, he observed 'Tito' bringing fourteen captured Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers, in uniform, to State House. 'Gullit' questioned these soldiers about their commander and where their "military hardware" was stored. The witness stated that 'Gullit' became irritated when the soldiers did not give adequate responses and he took a pistol and shot and killed two of them. He then ordered 'Tito' to execute the remaining soldiers. 'Tito' took the remaining twelve Nigerians "out the back of the State House" where they were executed by himand his men.[1729] The Trial Chamber observes, from the evidence of witness TF1-024, that the Defence building, formerly the Paramount Hotel, is situated behind State House but close by it.[1730] Witness TF1-334 was not cross-examined on this incident.

1889. para. 912: As there is a possibility that the victims were combatants, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that they belonged to the civilian population. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that at least four persons hors de combat were executed by AFRC soldiers who were acting in furtherance of the armed conflict.

1890. para. 913: On 6 January 1999, at Garrison Street outside State House, witness TF1-334 observed a AFRC named Lieutenant Colonel Kido shoot and kill approximately six civilians because they had "overlooked" him,[1731] meaning that they did not pay him sufficient respect.

1891. para. 914: Prior to the departure of the AFRC troops from State House, while Witness TFl-024 was in captivity there, he overheard a commander whom the others called 'Gullit' telling his fighters to force captured civilians to join the AFRC troops on their retreat, in order to replace those fighters killed by ECOMOG. Civilians who refused to join were shot in the presence of 'Gullit' and their dead bodies were thrown out the back of State House. The witness was unable to specify the number of civilians who were killed, but estimated that there were more than thirty.[1732] The Trial Chamber thus finds that at least thirty civilians were killed.

1892. para. 915: The Brima Defence submits that witness TF1-024's identification of 'Gullit' at State House was a mere guess, intended to favour the Prosecution case.[1733] In cross-examination it emerged that the witness, in a prior written statement, described 'Gullit' as a man of medium height, 'not too black' but rather 'fair in complexion'. The witness clarified that he did not intend to suggest that the person to whom he referred as 'Gullit' was white.[1734] The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of the witness, contained in a pre-trial written statement and repeatedly asserted in oral testimony, that he knew the person to be 'Gullit' by the fact that people called him by that name and he responded.[1735] Further, there is corroborating evidence from other witnesses that 'Gullit' was present at State House in the first week after the invasion.[1736]

1893. para. 916: The Brima Defence also challenge the witness's description of State House, submitting that it is contradicted by the description given by the Accused Brima in evidence.[1737] The Trial Chamber has reviewed the evidence of both witness TF1-024 and the First Accused in relation to the layout of State House and especially the kitchen.[1738] The Trial Chamber is of the view that the discrepancies between the two descriptions of the building are minor and explicable on the basis that the First Accused worked in the building for a number of years while on the witness's account he spent a short and stressful period in captivity there.

iii. Unlawful killings in Freetown – Kingtom - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1894. para. 917: In the second week that the troops were in Freetown, while the headquarters was still at State House, the 5th Battalion Commander 'Basky', aka Saidu Kambolai, came to State House and reported that he needed reinforcements at Kingtom, near Ascension Town, as ECOMOG had taken over the area.[1739] Witness TFl-334 was at State House in the presence of the three Accused, his superior Commander A[1740], Colonel Woyoh and some of the military supervisors when 'Basky' made this report. In response, the witness, his superior, Commander Basky and Colonel Woyoh gathered some men and returned to State House, where they introduced the men to 'Gullit'. 'Gullit' told the Operations Commander in front of the men that he needed the ground at Kingtom captured.

1895. para. 918: The troops, led by Operations Commander, Commander Basky and Colonel Woyoh and accompanied by the witness, went to Kingtom.[1741] The witness stated that the soldiers broke into houses and killed the civilians inside because they perceived them as 'traitors' who were collaborating with ECOMOG.[1742] The witness testified that the soldiers would knock on the door of the house and if the door was not opened, they would force it open and "[t]he first person who came out was a dead person."[1743] The witness was unable to estimate the number of civilians killed in this manner.

iv. Unlawful killings in Freetown – Fourah Bay - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1896. para. 919: Witness TF1-334 testified that in Freetown in January 1999, after the troops lost State House and Eastern Police and while the troops were at Savage Square, 'Gullit' received information that the people of Fourah Bay had killed one of his soldiers. 'Gullit' announced that he would lead the AFRC troops to Fourah Bay to burn houses and kill people in retaliation. The witness testified that troops including himself, 'Gullit', 'Bazzy', 'Five-Five', the Operation Commander, the Deputy Operation Commander and his superior "Commander A" moved to Fourah Bay. The troops attacked Fourah Bay and he observed a number of civilians being killed. The witness testified that all of the commanders participated in the attack, naming specifically 'Gullit' and 'Five-Five'. The troops then moved to Upgun.[1744]

1897. para. 920: Witness George Johnson corroborated the evidence of the Accused Brima ordering retaliatory killings of civilians in Fourah Bay, although he stated that Brima and the other commanders were at State House when they received the report about the soldier allegedly killed. The witness testified that he went on the attack, along with around one hundred AFRC soldiers, led by one Saidu Kambolia.[1745] "A lot of civilians" were killed, including men, women and children burned inside houses. Soldiers shot people who attempted to escape from burning houses.[1746] The attack was not limited to Fourah Bay Road but encompassed the entire Fourah Bay area. When asked to estimate the number of civilians killed, the witness replied that "I couldn't estimate because I could not go round the whole Fourah Bay to count each and every body."[1747] After the operation, the soldiers returned to State House where Brima was present.[1748]

1898. para. 921: Witness TFl-184 gave the most detailed account of an attack on Fourah Bay ordered by Brima in retaliation for the alleged killing of one of the soldiers by civilians in that area. He testified that he was at Ferry Junction, after the troops lost State House, with 'Gullit' and 'Five-Five' and Kamara was nearby.[1749] Upon receiving this information, 'Gullit' ordered a soldier named "Mines" to go to the SLRA to collect cutlasses. "Mines" subsequently returned with cutlasses, which he distributed to the troops with the assistance of one of the battalion commanders 'Changabulanga'.[1750] He described a demonstration of an amputation that 'Five-Five' gave for the troops at this point.[1751]

1899. para. 922: Brima then ordered the soldiers to move to the Upgun roundabout via Kissy Road. The witness testified that upon arrival at Upgun, the troops were summoned in a muster parade. 'Five-Five' and 'Gullit' held a discussion and then 'Five-Five' told the troops that 'Gullit' had said that the civilians should be taught a lesson. 'Five-Five' then ordered that any civilian the troops saw from Ross Road until Fourah Bay Road should be amputated and killed and the entire area should be burned down.[1752] The witness stated that it was normal practice for the commanders to have a discussion, after which 'Five-Five', whom the witness referred to as the "army chief commander", would inform the troops on the details of the operation.[1753]

1900. para. 923: According to the witness, the troops were then divided for the attack on Fourah Bay, with 'Five-Five' as the commander of one group and 'Bazzy' at Kissy Road. He then stated that after carrying out the orders, the troops were called back to where 'Gullit' was near Kissy Road.[1754]

1901. para. 924: The Kamara Defence submits that the testimonies of witnesses TF1-334, George Johnson and TF1-184 on the attack on Fourah Bay are inconsistent.[1755] The Trial Chamber accepts that there are discrepancies between the three accounts. Nonetheless, this does not mandate the dismissal of the entire testimony of each witness in relation to the attack on Fourah Bay. The Trial Chamber is of the view that the variations in the three accounts are explicable due to the passage of years since the events in question and the chaotic and stressful atmosphere existing at the relevant time, rather than bias on the part of witnesses George Johnson and TF1-334, as suggested by the Kamara Defence.[1756] However, the Trial Chamber notes that neither witness George Johnson nor TF1-334 were cross-examined on their testimony regarding the incident. In addition, witness TF1-184' s evidence was more detailed.

1902. para. 925: The Trial Chamber further finds it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused Brima personally killed any civilians. However, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, based on the consistent testimony of all three witnesses, that Brima ordered the attack on Fourah Bay.

1903. para. 926: The Trial Chamber further finds, based on the detailed eye-witness account of witness TF1-184 which was not shaken in cross-examination in this regard, that the Accused Kanu reiterated the order to the assembled troops prior to the attack. While both witnesses TFl-334 and TFl-184 testified that the Accused Kanu went on the attack, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the Accused Kanu personally killed any civilians.

v. Unlawful killings in Freetown – Guard Street - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1904. para. 927: At an unspecified point during the AFRC retreat from Freetown, witness TFl-334 encountered 'Captain Blood', who was a bodyguard of the Accused Kamara, with seven captured civilians at Guard Street. The witness watched 'Captain Blood' shoot and kill three of the civilians and kill the remaining four using a machete.[1757]

a. Kissy - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

vi. Unlawful killings in Kissy – Good Shepard Hospital - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1905. para. 928: Witness TFl-104 was working as a nurse at the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy in January 1999.[1758] He testified that on 18 January 1999, a group of "juntas" went to the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy and accused personnel there of treating ECOMOG and Kamajors. They forced everybody out of the hospital - patients, nurses, staff, and visitors - and beat them with a large stick called a 'coboko', which has a rope tied to it.[1759]

1906. para. 929: The "juntas" then took Witness TF1-104, along with other civilians, to a certain Pa Zubay's house a short distance away. At this house there were a number of juntas and commanders including 'Captain Shepherd', whom the witness had met previously, and an individual to whom the other juntas called 'Captain Blood'. The civilians were made to stand against a wall and the juntas opened fire and began shooting randomly from different directions. The witness was injured and indicated wounds on his elbow, knee and right hip for the record during his examination-in-chief. He testified that fifteen civilians were killed as a result of the shooting.[1760]

1907. para. 930: The Trial Chamber finds the elements in relation to Counts 4 and 5 (murder as a crime against humanity and a war crime respectively) have been established beyond reasonable doubt in respect of the shooting by 'juntas' at the house of 'Pa Zubay'.

vii. Unlawful killings in Kissy – Rogbalan Mosque - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1908. para. 931: Witness TFl-334 testified that while the troops were at Kissy Mental Home during the retreat from Freetown in January 1999, 'Gullit' called the Operation Commander and one Lieutenant Colonel named 'Gunboot' and "other commanders" to him. 'Gullit' told the assembled commanders that he had received information that civilians were harbouring ECOMOG forces in mosques. 'Gullit' further stated that AFRC troops should shoot and kill people they encounter in mosques, as these people were enemies.[1761] The witness stated that while the area had many mosques, 'Gullit' referred in particular to a mosque "down towards Shell Old Road, towards the junction" that was housing "collaborators".[1762] 'Gullit' chose 'Five-Five' to lead a group of men including the witness, his superior 'Supervisor A' and others to the mosque. As the troops approached the mosque, 'Five-Five' instructed them to start shooting at it. The witness stated that the mosque was big and there were many people inside. The troops opened the door and started shooting. The witness observed many people die in the mosque. The troops then withdrew.[1763]

1909. para. 932. On or about 22 January 1999, witness TF1-083 sought refuge from fighting between "rebels" and ECOMOG in Rogbalan Mosque. He encountered many corpses on the premises of the mosque, both inside the mosque itself and within the fenced area surrounding it. The witness estimated that there would have been seventy corpses. He stated that the dead included elderly people, men, women and children.[1764]

1910. para. 933: Witness TF1-021 testified that on a Friday afternoon in January 1999, around half past twelve to one o'clock, unarmed civilian worshippers were gathered at Rogbalan Mosque in Windsor St, Kissy. Over fifteen men armed with guns and machetes, stormed into the compound of the mosque. The men asked the civilians if they were praying, to which the civilians responded affirmatively. The witness stated that the men told the civilians "As you are here now, you are people who voted for Tejan Kabbah. We are going to kill all of you." The civilians collected money and offered it to their assailants so that they would leave. The men took the money and then began firing indiscriminately, killing people throughout the mosque. According to the witness, the men stated that the killings were not their fault, as they came in peace, but that of President Kabbah, since he did not recognise the People's Army.

1911. para. 934: The witness testified that he did not know to which group the men belonged as they did not wear identifying clothing and it was difficult to distinguish between the factions. He stated that he was thrown to the ground and the rebels stepped on him, telling him that he would die that way as they did not have any bullets left in their magazines. After the men departed, the witness counted the bodies. He testified that approximately 71 were killed, with 36 bodies inside the mosque, 7 at the back of the mosque, 7 in the toilet and 21 outside the mosque. The witness knew several of the victims personally and gave their names to the Trial Chamber.[1765]

1912. para. 935: In cross-examination, the Brima Defence put to witness TF1-021 a prior written statement in which he said that the attackers of Rogbalan Mosque identified themselves as belonging to the RUF, which the witness did not deny at trial.[1766] Specifically, the witness stated "I know this because when they were addressing us, they told us that they were RUF rebels and that they were People's Army."[1767]

1913. para. 936: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witness TF1-021 regarding the killings of civilians at the mosque to be clear, consistent and well corroborated by the evidence of TF1-083. The Brima Defence did not challenge either witness on the killing of civilians, but argued that the men responsible were members of the RUF and there is therefore no nexus with any of the Accused.[1768]

1914. para. 937: The Trial Chamber observes that witness TF1-021 testified that the mosque was attacked by RUF rebels, or members of the 'People's Army'. Although individual RUF members may have been active in Freetown, the Trial Chamber has found that the fighters present in Freetown in January 1999 were largely members of the AFRC and entirely under AFRC command. The term 'People's Army' was also used by members of the AFRC, particularly during the AFRC government period. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the lack of distinguishing insignia worn by the AFRC and RUF made it difficult for members of the public to identify the perpetrators of crimes by sight.

1915. para. 938: Documentary evidence was admitted which suggests that more than one mosque was attacked during the January 1999 invasion and retreat from Freetown.[1769] However, exhibit P-19, a map of Freetown, shows that the mosque attacked by witness TFl-334's group is situated on Whenzle St in Kissy. The Trial Chamber observes that Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy is located on the same street, and is satisfied the reference in the transcript to "Windsor Street" is due to an error. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the armed men who attacked Rogbalan Mosque were AFRC fighters as described in the testimony of witness TFl-334.

viii. Unlawful killings in Kissy - Kissy Mental Home - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1916. para. 939: Witness TFl-334 testified that one evening in January 1999, on the day that the AFRC troops arrived at Kissy Mental Home during the retreat from Freetown, the Accused Brima, in the presence of commanders including the Accused Kamara and Kanu, ordered troops to go out from the mental home and "clear up" the area. Brima stated that civilians were to be killed and amputated and houses burned as punishment for their support of ECOMOG.[1770] Specifically, he ordered the witness, 'Pikin', 'Shrimp', 'Hassim' and others to go as far as they could towards "PWD" killing people.[1771]

1917. para. 940: The witness stated that his group accordingly moved from the Kissy Mental Home, along the Old Road, towards Kissy market, where they heard civilians celebrating. The soldiers began firing machine guns at the civilians, killing an unspecified number of them. The troops went as far as Fisher Lane and then retreated to Kissy Mental Home, where they reported to 'Gullit' that the mission had been accomplished.[1772]

1918. para. 941: Witness TFl-334 further testified that in this period the AFRC troops held eight captured nuns at Kissy Mental Home. After ECOMOG began bombarding the troops there, two abducted clerics escaped. 'Gullit' ordered that the nuns should be killed so as to prevent them escaping and leaking information. Pursuant to this order, Foday Bah Marah a.k.a. 'Bulldoze' executed five nuns.[1773] Witness George Johnson also testified that the troops had eight abducted nuns at the mental home. However, he stated that when ECOMOG attacked the troops, Foday Bah Marah killed three nuns and the others escaped. The witness did not state whether this was pursuant to any order.[1774] Witness TF1-184 corroborated the evidence that three nuns were killed when the Nigerians attacked the mental home. He does not state who killed the nuns, but he testified that it was 'Gullit' who ordered their execution.[1775]

1919. para. 942: On the basis of the testimony of witnesses TF1-334, George Johnson and TF1-184, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that three nuns were killed on the orders of the Accused Brima.

1920. para. 943: Witness TF1-153 testified that in January 1999 as the AFRC troops and some captured civilians retreated from Kissy Mental Home area towards the Portee area by the Cotton Tree, the Accused Brima, in the presence of witness TF1-153, shot dead a nun because she was not walking quickly enough.[1776]

ix. Unlawful killings in Kissy - Rowe Street - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1921. para. 944: Witness TF1-084 testified that at an unspecified time in January 1999, at Rowe Street in the Kissy area of Freetown, "rebels" in military uniform commanded by a man named Tafaiko captured him, along with seven other civilians, and body-searched them for valuables. The "rebels" then lined up the other seven civilians and shot them dead in front of the witness.[1777]

1922. para. 945: In cross-examination, it emerged that in a prior statement the witness had referred to the rebels in Kissy as 'RUF'.[1778] He explained that the forces he saw in Kissy were mixed, with some wearing military uniform and others civilian attire on which was written 'RUF'.[1779] The Trial Chamber recalls that it was often difficult for members of the public to distinguish between AFRC and RUF fighters. In view of this, the Trial Chamber considers the witness's identification of his attackers to be unreliable.

1923. para. 946: The Trial Chamber notes that while some members of the RUF participated in the attack on Freetown, these individuals were fighting with the AFRC troops.[1780] The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the perpetrators of the attack were individuals associated with the AFRC troops.

x. Unlawful killings in Kissy - Fatamaran Street- Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1924. para. 947: On approximately 18 January 1999, witness TF1-098, his brother and his cousin were forced by rebels at gunpoint to follow them to a school on Fataraman Street.[1781] Upon arrival at the school, four other civilians captured by the rebels were joined with the witness's group. A certain Tommy, one of the rebels, amputated the hands of the seven captured persons.[1782] Witness TF1-098's cousin died as a result of the amputation.[1783]

b. Calaba Town - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

xi. Unlawful killings in Calaba Town - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1925. para. 948: Immediately after the withdrawal of the troops from Kissy Mental Home, at Calaba Town, witness Gibril Massaquoi saw a AFRC named "Foday Bah" shoot dead three nuns who supposedly refused to join the retreating troops.[1784] Thereafter, the witness also saw the dead body of a priest lying on the ground. The witness was not present when the priest was shot and does not know who the perpetrator is.[1785]

1926. para. 949: Having carefully considered the evidence of witnesses Gibril Massaquoi, TF1-334, TF1-184 and George Johnson in relation to the killing of three nuns around the time the troops retreated from Kissy Mental Home, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that this incident at Calaba Town is different to that described above as taking place at Kissy Mental Home and accordingly makes no additional findings.

c. Wellington - Freetown and the Western Area – Factual Findings

xii. Unlawful killings in Wellington - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

1927. para. 950: Witness TF1-085 was abducted by rebels in Wellington in January 1999. She testified that in Wellington, "I saw them burning houses, killing people and looting property."[1786] The Trial Chamber finds this evidence too general to make any additional finding of unlawful killings. However, the Trial Chamber has considered the witness's testimony regarding her abduction in its factual findings in relation to outrages on personal dignity.

(viii) Port Loko District – Crimes

1928. para. 952: The Prosecution alleges that "[a]bout the month of February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between about February 1999 and April 1999, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Port Loko District, including Manaarma, Tendakum and Nonkoba."[1787]

1929. para. 953: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution did not lead evidence of unlawful killings with respect to Tendakum.[1788]

1930. para. 954: In arriving at the following findings, the Trial Chamber has examined the available evidence and relies on the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TFl-334, George Johnson, TFl-157, TF1-023, TFl-253, TFl-256 and TFl-320 and Defence witnesses, DBK-129, DBK-012.

a. Manaarma - Port Loko District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Manaarma - Port Loko District – Crimes

1931. para. 955: Witness TF1-320 testified that on an unspecified date in April 1999, "soldiers" wearing military uniforms brought a number of civilians who had been captured in the surrounding villages to Manaarma. After separating the women from the men, the "soldiers" took an unspecified number of women to a house where they killed some of them with axes and shot dead the others.[1789]

1932. para. 956: In April 1999, witness TF1-253 was abducted on the way to Ro-Makambisa by "rebels" who took him to Manaarma.[1790] As they entered Manaarma, witness TF1-253 saw a pregnant woman whose head had been severed and her stomach opened by the "rebels".[1791] The Brima Defence submits that the testimony of witness TF1-253 is inconsistent and unreliable.[1792] However, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness's testimony on this particular incident was not shaken in cross-examination and therefore relies on his evidence.

1933. para. 957: The Prosecution submits that the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-253 and TF1-320, both residents of Manaarma who were abducted by rebels in April 1999 and taken to Port Loko,[1793] establishes that the "rebels" and "soldiers" who attacked Manaarma were in fact AFRC troops en route to Port Loko, where a major attack was staged at the end of April 1999.[1794] The Trial Chamber will thus consider the available evidence on the attacks on Port Loko and Manaarma in order to make a finding on this submission.

1934. para. 958: Witness George Johnson testified that en route to Port Loko, the troops attacked a village where a fat lady was killed by an AFRC captain using a machete.[1795] The witness, who was the commander of the troops at the time, then sent an advance troop to secure the village ahead. He testified that when he subsequently arrived at the next village, he observed a number of dead civilians and 'Sheriff complained to him that 'Cyborg' had killed them.[1796] The witness did not give the names of either village. He stated that no other villages were attacked en route to Port Loko.[1797] The witness led the troops to Port Loko, where they fought Malian ECOMOG soldiers and captured a large cache of arms and ammunition and two Malian soldiers.[1798]

1935. para. 959: Witness TF1-334 also went on the operation commanded by George Johnson to Port Loko.[1799] The witness testified that at Port Loko, Junior Lion and the other troops fought the Malians at Shelenka secondary school.[1800]

1936. para. 960: Witness TF1-253 was told by one of the rebels who captured him that he was part of Superman's group.[1801] However, he stated that "Johnson" and "Sesay" were the "big men" in Manaarma. He described Johnson as fat and black with plaited hair.[1802] "Colonel Sesay" was described as fair in complexion, not overly tall, wearing combat and a 'cap' that from the witness's description sounded like a balaclava.[1803] The witness states that "Johnson" was speaking into a device which the witness's described as "the thing [...] which is called a solar, normally they put it in the sun".[1804] The Trial Chamber infers that the witness is referring to a radio. Witness TF1-253 accompanied the troops as their captive to Port Loko. He testified that at Port Loko, the rebels fought the Malians at a secondary school called Schenlenker, at which point he escaped.[1805]

1937. para. 961: Witness TF1-320 also stated that at Port Loko, the rebels fought Malian ECOMOG soldiers at "Sri Lanka", a place near Low Shell Road.[1806] The Trial Chamber infers that the witness was referring to 'Shelenker' or 'Shelenka', the school referred to by witnesses TF1-320 and TF1-334.[1807]

1938. para. 962: Although the Trial Chamber has not relied on the testimony of Defence witness DBK-012 in relation to the command structure in Port Loko District, the Trial Chamber notes that the witness went on the operation to Port Loko and testified that the troops attacked Manaarma en route.[1808]

1939. para. 963: On the basis of the evidence of witnesses TF1-253 and TF1-320, the Trial Chamber finds that a group of rebels attacked Manaarma en route to Port Loko, where they engaged the Malian ECOMOG soldiers in combat at Shelenker/Shelenka secondary school. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the evidence of witnesses TF1-334 and DBK-012 that the group of rebels that attacked Manaarma were AFRC soldiers under the command of 'Junior Lion' aka George Johnson. In making this finding, the Trial Chamber has not relied on witness TF1-253's description of 'Colonel Sesay' and 'Colonel Johnson', which it found confused and contradictory.

d. Nonkoba - Port Loko District – Crimes

ii. Unlawful killings in Nonkoba - Port Loko District – Crimes

1940. para. 964: On the morning of 28 April 1999, "rebels" attacked the village of Nonkoba. Witness DBK-111 and other inhabitants of Nonkoba fled to the bush. The witness later learned that 36 villagers were killed in this attack, including his mother-in-law. He observed several dead bodies with severed heads.[1809]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Crimes against humanity ("CAH")

1941. para. 211: Article 2 of the Statute is entitled 'Crimes against humanity' and provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have power to prosecute persons who committed the following crimes as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population:
>
> a. Murder;
>
> b. Extermination;
>
> c. Enslavement;
>
> d. Deportation;
>
> e. Imprisonment;
>
>
> g. Rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution; forced pregnancy and any other form of sexual violence;
>
> h. Persecution on political, racial, ethnic or religious grounds;
> i. Other inhumane acts.

1942. para. 212: Article 2 of the Statute differs from similar provisions in the governing statutes of other international tribunals in that it does not specifically require such crime to have been committed "during armed conflict" (unlike its ICTY counterpart[361]), or "on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds" (unlike its ICTR counterpart[362]), or with the perpetrator's "knowledge of the attack" (unlike its ICC counterpart[363]).

1943. para. 213: The Trial Chamber endorses the following chapeau requirements or contextual elements of crimes against humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, as articulated in its Rule 98 Decision.[364]

a. Attack – Applicable law – CAH

1944. para. 214: An 'attack' has been defined as a "campaign, operation or course of conduct directed against a civilian population and encompasses any mistreatment of the civilian population".[365] The concepts of 'attack' and 'armed conflict' are distinct and separate notions, even though, under Article 2 of the Statute, the attack on any civilian population may be part of an armed conflict.[366] The 'attack' can precede, outlast, or continue during an armed conflict, thus it may, but need not be, be part of an armed conflict as such.[367]

b. Widespead or systematic attack – Applicable law - CAH

1945. para. 215: The requirement that the attack must be either widespread or systematic is disjunctive, so that once either requirement is met, it is not necessary to consider whether the alternative is also satisfied.[368] Proof that the attack occurred either on a widespread basis or in a systematic manner is sufficient to exclude isolated or random acts.[369] Each act occurring within the attack need not itself be widespread or systematic. It is sufficient that the act or various acts form part of an attack upon the civilian population that is either "widespread" or "systematic".[370] While isolated or random acts unrelated to the attack are usually excluded from the definition of crimes against humanity, a single act perpetrated in the context of a widespread or systematic attack upon a civilian population is sufficient to bestow individual criminal liability upon the perpetrator. Similarly, a perpetrator need not commit numerous offences to be held liable for crimes against humanity.[371] In the context of crimes against humanity, International Tribunals have defined the term "widespread" to denote "massive, frequent, large-scale action, carried out collectively with considerable seriousness and directed at multiple victims"; and the term "systematic" to denote "organised action following a regular pattern and carried out pursuant to a pre-conceived plan or policy, whether formalised or not."[372] That the crimes were supported by a policy or plan to carry them out is not a legal ingredient of crimes against humanity. However, it may eventually be relevant to establish the widespread or systematic nature of the attack and that it was directed against a civilian population.[373] Patterns of crimes, i.e., the non-accidental repetition of similar criminal conduct on a regular basis, are a common expression of 'systematic' occurrence.[374] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber endorses the interpretation of the ICTY Appeals Chamber that

> [t]he assessment of what constitutes a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack is essentially a relative exercise in that it depends upon the civilian population which, allegedly, was being attacked. A Trial Chamber must therefore 'first identify the population which is the object of the attack and, in light of the means, methods, resources and result of the attack upon the population, ascertain whether the attack was indeed widespread or systematic'. The consequences of the attack upon the targeted population, the number of victims, the nature of the acts, the possible participation of officials or authorities or any identifiable patterns of crimes, could be taken into account to determine whether the attack satisfies either or both requirements of a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack vis-a-vis this civilian population.[375]

c. Directed against any civilian population – Applicable law – CAH

1946. para. 216: There is an absolute prohibition against targeting civilians in customary international law.[376] The term "civilian population" has been widely defined to include not only civilians in the ordinary and strict sense of the term, but all persons who have taken no active part in the hostilities, or are no longer doing so, including members of the armed forces who laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other reason.[377] The targeted population must be predominantly civilian in nature and the presence of a number of non-civilians in their midst does not change the civilian character of that population.[378] The term "directed against" connotes that the civilian population must be the primary object of the attack and in determining whether or not an attack is so directed the Trial Chamber should consider, inter alia, the means and methods used in the course of the attack, the status and number of the victims, the nature of the crimes committed in course of the attack, the resistance to the assailants at the time and the extent to which the attacking force may be said to have complied or attempted to comply with the precautionary requirements of the laws of war.[379]

1947. para. 217: The use of the word 'population' does not mean that the entire population of the geographical entity in which the attack is taking place must have been subjected to that attack[380] although the targeting of only a limited and randomly selected number of individuals cannot satisfy the requirements of Article 2.[381]

1948. para. 218: The presence of combatants within the "civilian population" does not change the civilian nature of the population. However, the Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution defined the term "civilian" and "civilian population" as "persons who took no active part in the hostilities, or who were no longer taking an active part in the hostilities."[382] This definition is usually used for persons protected under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II and also covers combatants who no longer take active part in hostilities hors de combat. The definition proposed by the Prosecution would appear to cover all the references to the terms "civilian" and "civilian population" in the Indictment. With regards to alleged crimes under Article 2 of the Statute, however this definition is overly broad and inconsistent with customary international law.

1949. para. 219: Referring to principles of international humanitarian law, the Gali6 and Blaski6 Appeal Judgements, distinguished between a person hors de combat and a civilian:

> Persons hors de combat are certainly protected in armed conflicts through Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. This reflects a principle of customary international law. Even hors de combat, however, they would still be members of the armed forces of a party to the conflict and therefore fall under the category of persons referred to in Article 4(A)(1) of the Third Geneva Convention; as such, they are not civilians in the context of Article 50, paragraph 1, of Additional Protocol I. Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions supports this conclusion in referring to "[p]ersons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause" . [emphasis added][383]

Therefore, the Trial Chamber concludes that the term civilian must be narrowly defined in order to ensure a distinction in an armed conflict between civilians and combatants no longer participating in hostilities. The fact that the persons are hors de combat during the commission of a crime, does not render them "civilian" or being part of the "civilian population" for the purposes of Article 2 of the Statute. This distinction is particular important in a case were the Prosecution alleges that crimes against humanity were committed in a situation of armed conflict.

1950. para. 220: In order for the offence to amount to a crime against humanity, there must be a sufficient nexus between the unlawful acts of the perpetrator and the attack.[384] Although this nexus depends on the factual circumstances of each case, reliable indicia of a nexus include the similarities between the perpetrator's acts and the acts occurring within the attack; the nature of the events and circumstances surrounding the perpetrator's acts; the temporal and geographic proximity of the perpetrator's acts with the attack; and the nature and extent of the perpetrator's knowledge of the attack when he commits the acts.[385]

e. Mens rea – Applicable law – CAH

1951. para. 221: The mens rea or mental requisite for crimes against humanity is that the perpetrator of the offence must be aware that a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population is taking place and that his action is part of this attack.[386] Evidence of knowledge depends on the facts of a particular case; thus the manner in which this legal element may be proved may vary from case to case.[387] However, the perpetrator need not have been aware of the details of the pre-conceived plan or policy when he committed the offence and need not have intended to support the regime carrying out the attack on the civilian population.[388]

1952. para. 222: It does not suffice that an accused knowingly took the risk of participating in the implementation of a policy, plan or ideology.[389] Nevertheless, the accused need not know the details of the attack or approve of the context in which his or her acts occur;[390] the accused merely needs to understand the overall context in which his or her acts took place.[391] The motives for the accused's participation in the attack are irrelevant; the accused need only know that his or her acts are parts thereof.[392]

(ii) Pleadings

1953. para. 223: The Prosecution submits that the evidence adduced at trial suffices to prove the general requirements for crimes against humanity.[393] The Joint Defence submitted at the close of the Prosecution case that the Prosecution failed to prove the general requirements for crimes against humanity, although no specific detail was provided in support of this submission and it was not reiterated in their Final Briefs.[394]

(iii) Findings on general requirements - CAH

1954. para. 224: The Trial Chamber finds that it is established beyond reasonable doubt that a widespread or systematic attack by AFRC/RUF forces was directed against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment. The context in which the crimes alleged in the Indictment were committed has been described earlier in this Judgement.[395] Unless stated otherwise in the Factual Findings, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that each incident described therein formed part of a widespread or systematic attack within the meaning of Article 2 of the Statute. In arriving at this finding, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration reliable witness testimony adduced in respect of any locations in Sierra Leone within the Indictment period and documentary evidence from a number of sources, having carefully considered each document cited and being satisfied as to its authenticity and reliability.

1955. para. 225: The attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone during the period relevant to the Indictment evolved through two distinct stages and the Trial Chamber has divided its consideration of the evidence accordingly. The first stage coincides with the rule of the AFRC/RUF military government, from the May 1997 coup until the intervention of ECOMOG in February 1998. The attack against the civilian population was therefore state-sponsored, aimed broadly at quelling opposition to the regime and punishing civilians suspected of supporting the CDF /Kamajors.[396]

1956. para. 226: The second stage was precipitated by the removal of the AFRC/RUF government from Freetown, from which point onwards the two factions operated as non-state actors. The focal points of violence shifted as AFRC/RUF troops moved throughout the various provinces, faced with the challenge of more limited resources and poorer organisational capacity. The point has been made in the jurisprudence of the ICTY that such practical difficulties may typically result in attacks by non-State actors being less obviously classifiable as 'widespread' or 'systematic'.[397] However, the Trial Chamber finds that this was not the case in Sierra Leone. Instead, the continued attack against the civilian population was in most instances more frequent and brutal.

a. AFRC/RUF Government period

1957. para. 227: Reliable documentary evidence establishes that after the May 1997 coup, violence and human rights abuses against civilians increased. Extrajudicial killings, mutilation, amputations, rape and beatings of unarmed civilians were frequent.[398] The AFRC/RUF routinely directed attacks against civilians suspected of supporting the Kamajors, in the course of which civilians were shot and their property looted.[399] Such attacks were not limited to selected individuals. Rather, entire villages in the southern and eastern provinces were burned on the basis that they harboured Kamajors.[400]

1958. para. 228: In Bo District, for example, civilians were killed, property was looted and homes were burned during attacks executed jointly by AFRC/RUF troops on the villages of Tikonko, Gerihun, Sembehun and Telu Bongor in June 1997.[401] Kenema District was controlled by the AFRC/RUF from Kenema Town and frequent beatings and killings of civilians took place there throughout the junta period.[402] In December 1997, in Kenema Town, the AFRC/RUF declared a campaign code named 'Operation No Living Thing' which mandated the killing of civilians accused of being Kamajors.[403]

1959. para. 229: The diamond mines in Kenema District were also the site of sustained attacks on civilians. The AFRC/RUF mining operations at Tongo Field were particularly well-organised, with a system established for abducting large numbers of civilians and forcing them to work in the mines on certain days.[404] Witnesses testified that many civilians were assaulted or killed during this process.[405] This testimony is corroborated by documentary evidence from the US Department of State describing physical violence inflicted on civilian miners near Tongo Field.[406]

1960. para. 230: Certain features of this evidence prove that the attack against the civilian population was systematic. First, it was executed at the behest of the State, as AFRC/RUF government officials were routinely responsible for the commission of the crimes. In Bo District, for example, AFRC officials were involved in the burning down of the SLPP party office.[407] In Kenema Town, several alleged Kamajor supporters were arrested and detained at the police station, released on bail and then subsequently re-arrested and executed by AFRC officials.[408] A similar incident occurred in Kailahun District, where at least 57 alleged Kamajor supporters were arrested and shot by AFRC/RUF officials.[409]

1961. para. 231: The execution of the attack pursuant to pre-conceived policies or plans is an additional feature that demonstrates the systematic nature of the attack. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that civilians were forced to labour in the diamond mines in Tongo Field pursuant to a policy formulated and administered by the AFRC Secretariat.[410] In addition, the pattern of crimes evinces a policy that inflicting violence on civilians served to eradicate support for the Kamajors. The Trial Chamber emphasises in this regard that the alleged presence of Kamajors among the civilians does not preclude the characterisation of the attack as one directed primarily against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber accepts the submission of the Prosecution that throughout the junta period, the AFRC/RUF government sanctioned the commission of crimes against civilian population generally as a means of consolidating control and eliminating opposition to the regime.[411]

1962. para. 232: Although it is sufficient for the general requirements of crimes against humanity to establish that the attack was systematic, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it was also widespread as AFRC/RUF attacks were carried out frequently against a large number of civilian victims and involved the simultaneous commission of multiple serious offences.

b. Post AFRC/RUF Government Period (February 1998 January 2000)

1963. para. 233: The retreat of the AFRC/RUF from Freetown in 1998 was characterised by the infliction of violence against civilians.[412] Documentary evidence authored by the United Nations and Human Rights Watch reports that attacks in villages across Sierra Leone continued regularly throughout the year.[413] Such attacks "exhibited a characteristic modus operandi: amputation of limbs, mutilation, actual or attempted decapitation, rape, burning alive of men, women and children, destruction of homes, abduction and looting".[414] Numerous instances appear in the oral evidence of pregnant women being killed, beaten or raped in these attacks.[415] Civilians suffered amputations including arms, hands, feet, breasts, lips and ears.[416] The abducted civilians, numbered in their thousands[417], were forced to serve the AFRC/RUF as "porters, potential recruits or sex slaves".[418] Women were actively targeted through sexual violence.[419] The phenomenon of the 'bush wives' witnessed thousands of women forcibly married to rebels.[420]

1964. para. 234: The fact that civilians were the primary target of the attack is amply demonstrated by the nature of the offences described above, the majority of which served no military purpose. Instead, evidence establishes that the infliction of mass violence on the civilian population was on occasion regarded as a legitimate method for advancing the AFRC/RUF cause. The town of Karina in Bombali District was attacked in May 1998 because it was the alleged home town of President Kabbah.[421] The stated aim of the attack was to shock the entire country and the international community.[422] In addition to Karina, AFRC and/or RUF forces attacked civilians in a number of other villages in Bombali District, including Mandaha,[423] Rosos,[424] Bornoya,[425] Mateboi,[426] Gbendembu,[427] Madina Loko,[428] Kamadogbo,[429] Kamalu,[430] Kamagbengbe[431] and Batkanu.[432]

1965. para. 235: A report admitted in evidence, authored by UNHCR officers, details numerous incidents of killings, mutilations, beatings and rapes of civilians in Kono and Koinadugu Districts in 1998.[433] This report is corroborated by documentary evidence and the testimony of both Prosecution and Defence witnesses pertaining to attacks by the AFRC and/or RUF in Kono, Koinadugu and Kailahun Districts. In Kono District, civilians were attacked in Tombodu,[434] Kaima (or Kayima),[435] Koidu Town,[436] Foendor,[437] Bomboafuidu,[438] Yardu Sandu,[439] Penduma[440] and Mortema.[441] In Koinadugu District, civilians were attacked in Koinadugu Town,[442] Kabala,[443] Yifin,[444] Yiraye,[445] Yomadugu,[446] Bafodeya,[447] Krubola,[448] Bambukura[449] and Fadugu.[450] In Kailahun District, civilians were attacked in Kailahun Town,[451] Daru[452] and Buedu.[453] These locations are named on the basis that reliable evidence of attacks was adduced with respect to them. The Trial Chamber notes that these villages therefore represent a minimum assessment of the attack on the civilian population of Sierra Leone in the post-intervention period.

1966. para. 236: This attack culminated in the invasion of Freetown in January 1999, which has been described as "the most intensive and concentrated period of human rights abuses and international humanitarian law violations in Sierra Leone's civil war".[454] Reliable documentary evidence from several sources estimates that up to five thousand civilians were killed, one hundred had limbs amputated, thousands were raped, thousands were abducted, civilians were used by rebels as human shields and entire neighbourhoods were burnt to the ground, often with civilians inside their houses.[455] Eyewitnesses described the execution of members of religious orders[456] and civilians in mosques were also killed on suspicion that they had been harbouring ECOMOG soldiers.[457] A military expert testified that the damage to Freetown during the subsequent retreat appeared to have been a policy driven by spite as there was little military justification for the crimes committed.[458] Witnesses testified that violence against civilians continued over the following months in Port Loko, at locations including Masiaka,[459] Gberibana,[460] Manaarma,[461] Sumbuya,[462] Nonkoba[463] and Tendakum.[464]

1967. para. 237: The above evidence suffices to establish the widespread nature of the attack against the civilian population in the post-intervention period, given the frequency with which attacks occurred over a prolonged period throughout much of the territory of Sierra Leone and the untold number of civilian victims affected.

1968. para. 238: Although it is not strictly necessary, the Trial Chamber finds that the regular pattern of crimes committed demonstrates that the attack was also systematic. In addition, it is evident from the declaration by AFRC/RUF leaders of a number of 'operations' targeted at civilians that preconceived plans or policies for the execution of the attack existed. One of the most notorious of these was 'Operation Pay Yourself' which officially sanctioned the looting of civilian property on an unprecedented scale so that the soldiers could support themselves.[465] 'Operation Spare No Soul' saw troops instructed to kill, maim or amputate any civilian with whom they came into contact, burn villages and rape girls and women freely.[466] The area surrounding the AFRC headquarters in Rosos, Bombali District, was secured through "Operation Fearful" and "Operation Clear the Area" which respectively mandated the killing of any civilian in the vicinity and the looting and burning of surrounding villages.[467]

1969. para. 239: The Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused knew that their conduct formed part of this pattern of widespread or systematic attack. The evidence pertaining to this requirement will be presented in Chapter XI of this Judgement regarding the responsibility of the Accused.

(iv) Applicable law – Murder

1970. para. 688: Murder is charged under Article 2(a) of the Statute (Count 4 - Crime against Humanity) and Article 3(a) of the Statute (Count 5 - Violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Convention and of Additional Protocol II). The Trial Chamber observes that the elements defining murder are identical regardless of the provision under which it is charged.[1343] Thus, in addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute (for Count 4) and the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute (for Count 5), the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of murder:

1. The perpetrator by his acts or omission caused the death of a person or persons; and

2. The perpetrator had the intention to kill or to cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death.[1344]

1971. para. 689: For the actus reus of murder to be satisfied, the Prosecution is required to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrator's conduct substantially contributed to the death of the person.[1345] This does not necessarily require proof that the dead body of that person has been recovered.[1346] The death of the victim may be demonstrated through circumstantial evidence, provided it is the only inference that may reasonably be drawn from the acts or omissions of the perpetrator.[1347] Such circumstantial evidence may include factors such as proof of incidents of mistreatment against the alleged victim, pattern of mistreatment and disappearances of individuals in the location in question, general climate of lawlessness, length of time which has elapsed since the person disappeared and the fact that the alleged victim has not been in contact with others whom he would have been expected to contact.[1348]

1972. para. 690: The mens rea required for murder is intent to kill or cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death. Premeditation IS not a mens rea requirement.[1349]

(v) Bo District – Unlawful killings

a. Tikonko and Gerihun – Bo District – Unlawful killings

1973. para. 826: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, a minimum of 27 civilians were unlawfully killed in Bo District as charged under Counts 4 and 5. On the evidence adduced, the Trial Chamber has been unable to establish beyond reasonable doubt whether the perpetrators were members of the AFRC and/or RUF.

(vi) Kenema District – Unlawful killings

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Unlawful killings

1976. para. 840: By virtue of the foregoing evidence . . . the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed a minimum of 17 civilians in Kenema Town in Kenema District, amounting to the elements of Counts 4 and 5.

(vii) Kono District – Unlawful killings

a. Koidu, Tombodu and Mortema – Kono District - Unlawful killings

1977. para. 857: On the basis of the foregoing evidence, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of the AFRC unlawfully killed a minimum of 265 civilians in Tombodu, Kono District, as charged under Counts 4 and 5. [The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that these large scale killings satisfy the element of massiveness for the crime of extermination charged under Count 3 of the Indictment. The indiscriminate manner in which the victims were targeted and the fact that the killings occurred in a single village over a relatively short period of time establishes that the principal perpetrators of the individual killings intended to contribute to the overall and massive result of these killings.[1638]][66]

1978. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Kono District - paras. 1665-1668 [8017], 1856-1861 [8021], 1997-2000 [8027].

(viii) Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

a. Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

1980. para. 864: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, Sam Bockarie and his subordinates unlawfully killed 67 persons in Kailahun Town in Kailahun District. As the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the detained 'Kamajors' were part of the civilian population but only that they were hors de combat, the Trial Chamber concludes that only the elements of murder (Count 5) are established in respect of the killings in Kailahun Town.

1981. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Kailahun District – paras. 1674-1679 [8031], 1894-1897 [8037], 2006-2009 [8041].

(ix) Koinadugu District – Unlawful killings

a. Kabala, Koinadugu Town and Fadugu – Koinadugu District – Unlawful killings

1983. para. 879: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed a minimum of 21 civilians in Kabala, Koinadugu Town and Fadugu in Koinadugu District, amounting to the elements of Counts 4 and 5.

1984. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Koinadugu District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions – Koinadugu District - paras. 1686-1696 [8045], 1904-1906 [8056], 2015-2018 [8060].

(x) Bombali District – Unlawful killings

a. Bornoya, Karina, Mateboi and Gbendembu – Bombali District – Unlawful killings

1986. para. 897: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that between 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, members of the AFRC unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians in Bornoya, Mateboi and Gbendembu in Bombali District. Consequently, the Trial Chamber finds that the material elements in relation to Counts 4 and 5 have been established.

1987. para.898: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that each of the killings in Karina was part of a large scale killing which in its totality satisfies the element of massiveness for the crime of extermination as charged under Count 3 of the Indictment. The indiscriminate manner in which the victims were targeted and the fact that the killings occurred over a relatively short period of time establishes that the perpetrators of the individual killings intended to contribute to the overall and massive result of these killings.

1988. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bombali District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Bombali District - paras. 1700-1720 [8064], 1911-1920 [8085], 2025-2031 [8095].

(xi) Freetown and the Western Area – Unlawful killings

a. End Police, State House Area, Kingtom , Fourah Bay, Guard Street , Good Shepherd Hospital, Rogbalan Mosque, Kissy Mental Home, Rowe Street and Fatamaran Street

1990. para. 951: In light of the foregoing evidence and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between 6 January and 28 February 1999, AFRC forces killed at least 45 civilian men, women and children in the city of Freetown and in Kissy in the Western Area, as charged under Counts 4 and 5. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that these large scale killings satisfy the element of massiveness for the crime of extermination charged under Count 3 of the Indictment. The indiscriminate manner in which the victims were targeted and the fact that the killings occurred over a relatively short period of time establishes that the principal perpetrators of the individual killings intended to contribute to the overall and massive result of these killings.

(xii) Port Loko District – Unlawful killings

a. Manaarma and Nonkoba – Port Loko District – Unlawful killings

1995. para. 965: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between February and April 1999, in Port Loko District, an unknown number of civilians were unlawfully killed by AFRC troops in Manaarma, as charged under Counts 4 and 5. The Trial Chamber further finds that at least 36 civilians were unlawfully killed in Nonkoba, as charged under Counts 4 and 5. However, on the evidence adduced, the Trial Chamber has been unable to establish beyond reasonable doubt whether the perpetrators of the killings in Nonkoba were members of the AFRC and/or RUF.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-T, Judgement, 2 August 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kenema District – Crimes

a. Tongo Town – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Tongo Town - Kenema District – Crimes

2005. para. 377: On 16 November 1997 TF2-079 prepared a situation report on events occurring between 19 September and 13 November 1997 in Zone II Operational Frontline which included Lower Bambara and Dodo Chiefdoms. It requested arms and ammunitions and described attacks which had been launched in the area. It also narrated the following killing which was committed by Kamajors:

> On 9 November 1997, Siaka Lahai and eight of his Kamajor militia were patrolling Gboegiama Village armed with assault rifles and an RPG launcher. The Kamajors entered the village and captured Robert Ndanema, who was in possession of a large number of AFRC market due. Mr. Ndanema admitted complicity and was summarily executed.[650]

2006. para. 379: Around November 1997, while the rebels occupied Tongo and the Kamajors were headquarted in Panguma, Kamajors killed a small boy who had been travelling on foot from Tongo to Panguma. The boy was killed because he was coming from rebel-held territory.[652]

ii. Talama and Panguma after the Second Attack on Tongo – Kenema District – Crimes

2007. para. 386: [on the second attack on Tongo in early January 1998] Kamabote asked 12-year-old Foday Koroma what tribe he belonged to and the boy responded that he was a Loko. The boy also said that he was related to Akim, a rebel based in Tongo. Kamabote responded by striking him on the head with a machete, killing him.[671] The remaining Lokos, Limbas and Temnes were taken 20 to 25 feet away and Kamabote ordered his Kamajors to kill them. They used cutlasses to kill each of the 150 people in the queue. Afterwards, the Kamajors split open the stomach of one victim and displayed his entrails in a bucket before the remaining civilians.[672]

iii. Crimes Committed During and Subequent to the Third Attack on Tongo – Gathering of Civilians at the National Diamond Mining Corporation Headquarters – Kenema District – Crimes

2008. para. 390: [During the third attack on Tongo 14 January 1998] TF2-027 saw corpses on the side of the road on the way to headquarters. Some had visible wounds on their bodies and others did not.[686] … TF2-144 saw the corpse of a man named Joskie lying on the ground; the back of his neck had been chopped with a machete. TF2-144 also saw the corpse of an unidentified woman, but he was unable to tell whether she had wounds on her body.[688] After the attack, TF2-027 also saw Joskie Mboma's corpse on the street, as well as three other corpses. TF2-027 recognized one of the corpses as that of a Fullah boy who used to sell bread. This corpse was on its stomach and TF2-027 did not see any marks on the body.[689]

iv. 14 January 1998 - NDMC Headquarters – Tongo – Kenema District- Crimes

2009. para. 391: Witnesses testified that when they arrived at NDMC headquarters they saw hundreds of corpses of men and women at the entrance. There were also corpses on the football field inside where the civilians were gathering.[690] …After the rebels dispersed, TF2-022 saw a Kamajor with a cutlass chopping at three people who had been lying on the ground to avoid the crossfire.[693]

2010. para. 393: Kamabote stood before the crowd and called on two women to identify the rebels.[700] The women identified two men as rebels and Kamabote shot them both dead.[701] The women were ordered to continue identifying rebels and they pointed out more than 10 men.[702]

The Kamajors stripped these men and handed them over to armed Kamajors who took them toward Dodoma, which is a place behind the NDMC Headquarters where cows are slaughtered.[703] TF2-027 saw Kamajors lead another 200 men and women in the same direction. The members of this group had been identified as rebels and included a rebel youth leader, a woman who sold cookery and a man who sold second-hand clothing.[704]

2011. para. 394: TF2-047 saw a woman named Fatmata Kamara identify a rebel named Dr. Blood to Kamabote.[705] She complained that he and his colleagues used to eat at her shop without paying.[706] Kamabote ordered Dr. Blood to sit on the ground and then struck him in the neck and decapitated him.[707] Kamabote then killed Fatmata Kamara with a cutlass for having cooked for the rebels.[708] TF2-047 saw the Kamajors kill another person on that day.[709]

2012. para. 395: TF2-048 testified that she saw Kamajors take her husband's uncle behind a house at the NDMC Headquarters and return with blood on their machetes. She has never seen her husband's uncle again.[710] TF2-048 saw the same thing happen to a woman and a child.[711]

2013. para. 396: Kamajors led groups of Temne, Loko, Koranko and Limba tribe members away from the football field during the night.[712]

v. 15 Ianuary 1998 - NDMC Headquarters – Tongo – Kenema District – Crimes

2014. para. 398: [15 January 1998] The following morning TF2-022 saw many corpses in the field. Some of these corpses appeared to have been hacked by a machete, while others did not have any visible injuries.[714] The same morning, TF2-022 recognised a rebel named Cobra in a line of 20 men surrounded by armed Kamajors.[715] The men were accused of being rebels and were taken to an open space in the NDMC Headquarters known as the MP Office, where they were all hacked to death. The bodies of these rebels were left where they were killed.[716]

2015. para. 400: Around noon, a Kamajor commander ordered the civilians to leave the NDMC Headquarters. Before they could do so, another commander, angry that they were trying to leave, ordered Kamajors to shoot at the crowd.[720] The Kamajors began shooting sporadically. The civilians dropped to the ground and remained there until the firing stopped.[721] Many were hit by stray bullets.[722] One man next to TF2-022 was hit by a bullet. While the man was suffering from his wound, he was approached by a Kamajor who chopped at his back with a machete, then stole his belt and hit him with it, telling him to get up. The man eventually died.[723]

vi. 15 January - Outside NDMC Headquarters – Tongo – Kenema District – Crimes

2016. para. 401: TF2-048 turned and saw her older brother 15 yards away being held by three Kamajors who took his money and left.[728] Another Kamajor approached her brother and showed him a list of Limbas to be killed. He told him that he had come there for him and then cut off his ear.[729] The brother knelt down and asked the Kamajor to spare his life because he had a wife and children. The Kamajor cut his throat with a machete and then mutilated his body.[730] TF2-048 witnessed this but did not reveal their relationship because she knew that Kamajors were looking for Limbas.[731]

2017. para. 402: Another group of civilians that was allowed to leave the NDMC Headquarters was escorted by Kamajors to a checkpoint where Kamajors took their bags and belongings.[732] After finding a photograph of a rebel in one man's bag, the Kamajors hacked him to death.[733] TF2-022 knew this man to be a civilian.[734] TF2-022 was allowed to pass and eventually came to another checkpoint where a boy named Sule was hacked to death for carrying a wallet that resembled SLA fatigues.[735]

b. Bumie & Kamboma – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Bumie and Kamboma – Kenema District – Crimes

2018. para. 404: A group of civilians at the NDMC Headquarters was organized into lines to walk to Bumie.[742] Before they left the NDMC Headquarters, the Kamajors fired at the people in the lines, killing many of them.[743] The remaining people were brought to a house in Bumie.[744] The women were taken behind the house and the men were placed on the veranda in front.[745] The Kamajors told the men to look at the sun. Five of them were pulled from the group and were shot and killed.[746]

2019. para. 406: This group [see paragraph 405] of 15 men and women was joined by other civilians along the Kenema road. They eventually numbered 65 people.[750] The civilians were attacked by the Kamajors at Kamboma Bridge and taken to a house in Kamboma Town where they were told that the Kamajors had received orders to kill anyone who passed by.[751] The group was separated into two lines. The Kamajors shot each person in both lines and rolled the bodies into a swamp behind the house.[752] When there were only eight civilians left, the commander of Foindu Junction, Mohamed Kaineh,[753] arrived and told the Kamajors that it was an ambush and they should stop spoiling cartridges and use knives to kill the remaining people.[754] The remaining eight people were hacked on the napes of their necks with machetes.[755] TF2-015, who was the last person in the line, was hacked with a machete and rolled into the swamp on top of the other dead bodies. TF2-015 lay there for one hour before he was saved by rebels. He was the only one of the 65 civilians to survive.[756]

c. Lalehun – Kenema District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Lalehun – Kenema District – Crimes

2020. para. 408: In mid-February 1998, Aruna Konowa was tied up and brought to Lalehun by Kamajors.[761] He was forced to sleep at the Kamajors' Headquarters in Lalehun that night and the following morning the entire town was gathered at the court barri.[762] Chief Baimba Aruna, one of the Kamajor bosses of Lalehun, ordered Aruna Konowa to sit on the ground, denounced him as a rebel collaborator, and ordered him to be killed.[763] Kamajors took Konowa to the school compound and slit his throat with a knife and disembowelled him.[764] TF2-016 was present for the meeting at the barri and saw the body at the school compound afterwards.[765]

2021. para. 409: Kamajors killed Brima Conteh, the Nyawa town speaker, a few days later.[766] He was arrested by Kamajors from Lalehun at a meeting of the chiefs held by BJK Sei in Tongo.[767] Brima Conteh was stripped naked and taken to Lalehun, with a cement block on his head and a rope around his neck. He was paraded around town in this condition.[768] Baimba Aruna denounced Brima Conteh as the chief of the rebels and ordered his death.[769] Kamajors took Brima Conteh to a banana plantation and slit open his throat and stomach.[770] Two Kamajors at the insides of his stomach.[771] The Kamajors severed Brima Conteh's head and left his body at the plantation. A Kamajor was ordered to proceed to town with Brima Conteh's head for a celebration.[772] Another Kamajor named Vandi took Conteh's intestines to town in a five gallon container.[773] The Kamajors proceeded from house to house with his head and intestines; eventually they were left at Baimba Aruna's house.[774]

(ii) Bo District – Crimes

a. Koribondo – Bo District – Crimes

i. Unlawful killings in Koribondo – Bo District – Crimes

2022. para. 421: On Sunday, 15 February1998[809] at 9:30am, Kamajors arrested five Limba civilians named Sofiania, Sarrah, Momoh, Kamara, and Koroma at the Koribondo Junction. They were accused of being junta members responsible for killing Kamajors. While they were beaten, wounded and mutilated, the Kamajors sang the usual Kamajor song which precedes a killing.[810] Two of the civilians were shot and the other three were cut on the back of their necks with a cutlass, all five died from their wounds.[811] Sarrah and Momoh were beheaded and their heads were displayed at the junction; one was turned towards Blama Road and the other towards Sumbaya Road.[812]

2023. para. 422: On the same day, Kamajors mutilated and killed two Limba civilians: Sarah Binkolo and Sarah Lamina. Both of them were killed by the bridge along Blama Road in Koribondo. The Kamajors sang a Kamajor song while mutilating these women.[813]

2024. para. 423: On Monday, 16 February 1998, Kamajors killed eight people along Blama Road in Koribondo. The victims were five men belonging to the junta and three women who were the wives of soldiers. The women's names were Amie, Jainaba and Esther. These eight people were arrested, beaten and mutilated. Two of the women were killed by having sticks inserted through their genitals until they came out through the women's mouths.[815] The third was killed with a cutlass.[816] Four of the men were shot and the fifth was cut on the back of his neck with a cutlass; all five died from their wounds.[817]

2025. para. 424: The Kamajors disembowelled the women and put their entrails in a bucket. The women's stomachs were also removed. Their guts were made into checkpoints so that anyone coming past could see them.[818] Part of their entrails were eaten and their bodies were buried.[819]

2026. para. 425: On the same day, Kamajors killed Chief Kafala.[820] Chief Kafala had been accused of being a junta member who was leading soldiers. He was brought from Bendu to Koribondo in the presence of many people. Chief Kafala was decapitated and his body was mutilated in the street opposite the hospital. This was done in the presence of four civilians. Kamajors took Chief Kafala to the swamp where a Kamajor further mutilated him on the upper right shoulder and then forced him into a small hole with a shovel. Chief Kafala's feet were amputated and he was shot twice. The Kamajors ordered civilians present to cover him with mud; two of them did so while the Kamajors sang.[821]

2027. para. 426: After the capture of Koribondo, an elderly person named Lahai Bassie was arrested and beaten severely by Kamajors because his son was a soldier. The Kamajors found a picture of his son and also a letter from his son in his house.[822] Lahai Bessie died one week after the serious beatings he suffered at the hands of Kamajors.[823]

b. Bo - Bo District – Crimes

i. Crimes Committed Against Policemen by Kamajors on Arrival in Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2028. para. 451: While the Kamajors were in Bo they captured and killed police officers.[880] Those that were missing had been killed; they were not missing in action. The police that had been killed did not have ammunition.[881]

2029. para. 452: On 15 February 1998, Kamajors killed eight police men at the new police barracks; TF2-056 saw the corpses.[882]

ii. Killing of Corporal Freeman – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2030. para. 455: On 15 February 1998, while and Kandeyama Road opposite the police barracks, TF2-001 saw a group of Kamajors rush to Corporal Freeman and drag him to the road. The Kamajors then hacked Corporal Freeman to death with a cutlass. Freeman's corpse was dragged along the highway while the Kamajors shouted, "Allahu Akbar, Allahu Akbar." A little girl shouted, "Daddy, Daddy, they have killed your brother Freeman."[888]

iii. Killing of James Vandy – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2031. para. 459: On 16 February 1998, some Kamajors left the police barracks and headed towards Bo Township with loads on their heads. James Vandy, the Sub-Inspector of the Police Criminal Investigations Division, had been captured by the Kamajors and was made to walk in front of them. During this walk, some Kamajors turned and struck James Vandy; he fell, dead. The Kamajors cut James Vandy into pieces while singing, "Allahu, Akbar, Allahu Akbar." James Vandy was decapitated by the Kamajors. His head was thrown in a stream under under a bridge and the rest of his body was abandoned on the road.[893]

iv. Killings at Bo Government Hospital by Kamajors – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2032. para. 462: TF2-156 was also a patient at Bo Government Hospital. He witnessed Kamajors open fire at the hospital because several policemen were patients there. The Kamajors said the policemen were all juntas and should be killed.[899]

v. Killings and Mistreatment of Civilians – Bo – Bo District –Crimes

2033. para. 468: When Kamajors led by TF2-017 were in Bo on 15 February 1998, there was fear among the civilians. Many people had been killed. The situation reports of the civilians indicated excessive killing of civilians.

vi. Killing of Collaborators at MB Sesay's Hotel – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2034. para. 469: During the raid on MB Sesay's hotel on 15 February 1998, an unidentified woman who cooked for rebels was found hiding; she was shot and killed by Kamajors on the order of TF2-017.

2035. para. 470: On the same occasion, Joseph Lappia, the Kamajor deputy commanding officer ordered the killing of John Musa. John Musa was considered a collaborator because he traded with rebels.

vii. Killing of TF2-058's Son – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

viii. Killing of a Woman and Mistreatment of Civilians at a Check Point – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2037. para. 474: On 17 February 1998, TF2-001, who left Bo after the attack, reached a Kamajor checkpoint at Fobu Village. He saw two men and women who had been forced to lay naked on the ground on their backs facing the sun. The Kamajors stepped on their stomachs; an unidentified woman's ribs were stepped on and she shouted and then was shot. This woman's guts oozed out between her legs. The woman was taken behind a house and Kamajors came back holding her heart in their hands. The Kamajors threatened to do the same thing with the other people that were lying down. These people were left lying under the sun for hours[919] as the Kamajors opened their anuses to see if they had defecated.[920] Joe Nunie, the senior leader of this group of Kamajors, eventually ordered TF2-001's release.[921]

ix. Killing of Enemy Combatant John Hota – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2038. para. 475: While in Bo, TF2-017 handed an unarmed child soldier wearing civilian clothes to Albert J Nallo. At the same time, Nallo was deployed at office of the Red Cross, near the clock tower where captured soldiers were taken and imprisoned.[922] John Hota was killed by the Death Squad, which had received direct instructions from Norman to kill John Hota because "he had no place to keep prisoners of war and had no food for them."[923] Hota's head was severed from his body and put in a white plastic bag.[924]

x. Torture of TF2·198 and Killing of his Brother – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

xi. Killing of TF2·030's Husband and Six Others on 23 February 1998 – Bo- Bo District – Crimes

2040. para. 479: On 22 February 1998, while TF2-030 and her husband were at their home near CKC Bo, a group of fifteen Kamajors armed with machetes and sharp irons surrounded TF2-030's husband. Her husband ran to a nearby swamp but the Kamajors followed him and chopped at him all over his body using a machete. TF2-030's husband died at 6 a.m. the following morning.[931] The Kamajors killed TF2-030's husband because he was a Temne; the Kamajors said they would weed all the Temne from Bo Town.[932] Six other people were hacked to death by the Kamajors at the same time.[933]

xii. Killing of TF2-156's Brothers – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2041. para. 481: The Kamajors chopped at TF2-156's brothers with machetes and killed them.[938] Sorie and the unidentified man were also killed.[939] The Kamajors thought TF2-156 was also dead and left him lying beside the bodies of these four people.[940]

xiii. Killings by Kamajors in a Park – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2042. para. 490: A Temne man was arrested in a park by Kamajors because they thought he was a Temne. When the man protested that he was not a Temne, he was shot. As they left, the Kamajors purposely stepped on the man's body.[953] Later in the evening, Kamajors burnt the Temne man's body.[954]

xiv. Killing of a Former Soldier by Kamajors at a Checkpoint – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2043. para. 493: When leaving Bo Town, TF2-067 was stopped at three checkpoints. At the first checkpoint he saw Kamajors capture a man that they believed to be a former soldier. The man denied the Kamajors' allegations. One of the Kamajors announced that they would kill the man because he was arguing. TF2-067 saw one Kamajor shoot the man. This killing was also witnessed by a large group of people passing through the checkpoint.[958]

xv. Killing of TF2-058's Husband – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2044. para. 499: On 27 April 1998, TF2-058 witnessed Kamajors kill her husband in the Duwebu Section of Bo Town. Approximately 15 Kamajors carrying various weapons including cutlasses, RPGs, knives and guns came up behind TF2-058 and her husband as they were walking home. The Kamajors called her husband a junta and began attacking him. He was struck in the eye and then the side with a long knife-like weapon. When he fell, all of the Kamajors stabbed him. TF2-058 ran away.[966] She did not return for her husband's body because she feared the Kamajors would see and kill her. She did not report the killing or confront the Kamajors because she feared that the Kamajors would kill her or burn down her house.[967]

xvi. Killings by Kamajors in a Swamp near Njai Town and at "Was hear " – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2045. para. 501: On 27 April 1998, TF2-058 witnessed Kamajors attack a man in the swamp near Njai Town in Bo. The Kamajors said "Alahu Akbar" as they killed him.[969] That same day, TF2-058 witnessed Kamajors hack at a man with cutlasses at "washcar" near the Shenge market. They were also saying "Alahu Akbar".[970]

xvii. Killing of TF2-088's Nephews and Eldest Son – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2046. para. 516: On 29 November 1997, TF2-088's eldest son and two of his nephews were shot and killed by Sundifu Samuka, Joseph Kulagbanda, and Wan Mohammed. These three corpses were thrown into the Taia River.[999] A third nephew was was shot while attempting to run from the Kamajors but he survived the shooting.[1000]

xviii. Killings in Mandu – Bo – Bo District – Crimes

2048. para. 518: Jeneba was the town mother of Nyandehun when she was captured by the rebels and was forced to cook and care for them.[1003] The Chief Kamajor James Bundu told Jeneba they would kill her because she had joined the rebels. She was shot by Philip Mboma, a Kamajor Battalion Commander based in Mandu. Her neck was cut with a cutlass by Philip Mboma and she fell to the ground and died.[1004]

2049. para. 519: James Bundu accused Daddy of being a rebel because he caught fish for the rebel's king, Smith Joseph.[1005] Philip Mboma cut Daddy in two at the waist with a cutlass. Daddy's intestines fell to the ground and he died.[1006] Gibril Mansaray forced four civilians and TF2-088's younger son to dig a hole and bury the bodies of Jeneba and Daddy.[1007]

xix. Killing of TF2-088's Son – Bo District – Crimes

2050. para. 522: Late in the evening of 22 April 1999, while TF2-088 was with his son in Kpetewoma village, he heard and saw his son screaming while being held by Kamajors.[1012] There was a gunshot, then a Kamajor named Borbor Aruna cut TF2-088's son's throat with a machete. His son was bleeding from the throat and gasping. There was a celebration in Gumahun after the Kamajors killed his son.[1013] TF2-088 went to the swamp where he saw his son's body. The Kamajors had cut his son open from the throat to the penis and had removed his internal organs including the heart, lungs and intestines.[1014] The body of his son was burnt in the presence of many commanders including Gibril Mansaray, James Bundu, David Joseph, Sundifu Samuka and Chief Mulai Abu of Nyandehun.[1015]

xx. Crimes Committed in Fengehun – Bo District – Crimes

2051. para. 532: TF2-007 was told by the Kamajors to say good-bye to his father. TF2-007's father was then tied and put inside a hut which was set on fire. After the burning, Kamajors decapitated TF2-007's father's corpse. Later in the day, TF2-007 saw the Kamajors dancing and holding a stick onto which they had attached his father's head. The Kamajors requested a token from TF2-007 in exchange for bringing his father's head but TF2-007 had nothing to give them and they passed by.[1030] He did not see his father's body again.[1031]

xxi. Killing of Ieneba and Iuma Ioe Betty by Vanjawai in Bama Bongor Chiefdom - Bo District – Crimes

2052. para. 533: Vandi Vanjawai was posted to a town called Gondama. He had authority in Soa Chiefdom, Jiama Bongor Chiefdom and Tikonko Chiefdom. Albert J Nallo made a report at Base Zero about killings involving Vanjawai: the first was the killing of a pregnant woman named as Jeneba in Gbonima Village and the second was having had his boys kill a man named Juma Joe Betty in Sulehun village. Albert J Nallo took Juma Joe Betty's elder brother Musa Joe Betty to Base Zero to report his brother's killing.[1032]

a. Killing of Kpana Manso – Bonthe District – Crimes

2053. para. 541: On the same day a Sherbro fisherman, Kpana Manso, was shot by Beigeh, the Kamajor Commander of the invading force.[1051] Kpano Manso was killed because he was wrongfully blamed for being the father of soldiers.[1052] Beigeh said he was the Battalion Commander of the Kamajor naval battalion, also referred to as the Kasilla Battalion. He said, "From now on Bonthe is under the control of the Kamajors, headed by […] Commander Morie Jusu Kamara."[1053]

b. Killings in Bonthe – Bonthe District – Crimes

2056. para. 549: At the same meeting a boy named Bendeh Battiama was accused of being a collaborator. The boy was trapped by Alfred Bobby and dragged to Heddy Road and shot. Rambo Conteh came back to the meeting and said that he was not satisfied, but at least he had spilled human blood on the soil of Bonthe. Rambo Conteh killed the boy.[1067]

c. Killing of Abu Conteh on 17 February 1998 – Bonthe District – Crimes

d. Mosandi, Molakaika, Bembay, Bolloh around 15 September 1997 – Bonthe District – Crimes

2058. para. 558: One evening around 15 September 1997,[1094] 34 civilians went to the villages near Bonthe Town to collect food. They were captured by Kamajors and taken to Mosandi. Three of them were killed: Bockarie Kpaka, Junisa and Pa Samuel Kamara. The civilians of Bonthe then took cutlasses and spears and went to Mosandi to liberate the captured civilians. The civilians were supported by the soldiers, who were in effective control of Bonthe at that time.[1095]

2060. para. 561: The civilians of Mobayeh fled into the bush after the Kamajors left, except for an old woman, named Musu Fai and a pregnant woman named Jebbeh Kpaka. The Kamajors killed Musu Fai. They ordered Jebbeh Kpaka to accompany them with the looted properties. They then asked her to go back but before she left, the Kamajors stabbed her to death. Jebbeh Kpaka fell on her back.[1100]

e. Unlawful killings in Motumbo around March 1998 – Bonthe District – Crimes

2062. para. 563: Around the beginning of March 1998, TF2-086 went with her business partner, Jitta, to Sebongie. On their way back to Bonthe many Kamajors, armed with machetes and guns, came out of the bush. TF2-086 was caught by five Kamajors, including Borbor from Motombo, Abu from Gondoma, Jitta from Mosebay and Baigeh from Mu. Abu Jakineh wounded TF2-086 with a cutlass on her head and wrist. Baigeh stabbed TF2- 086's belly and cut her neck.[1102] Borbor said: "Look how dead you are. Look how filthy. You are rebels. […] They [sic] are very dirty, filthy people." TF2-086 responded that she was not a rebel. Baigeh Mu pierced TF2-086's stomach with a stick. The Kamajors then asked TF2-086 to bring money; they took 140,000 leones from Jitta and TF2-086.[1103] After taking the money the Kamajors took Jitta to the bush and killed her. Afterwards Baigeh cut TF2-086 again on her neck with the machete and stabbed her in the stomach. TF2-086 nearly died.[1104]

f. Killings at Gambia Village, Jong Chiefdom – Bonthe District – Crimes

2064. para. 565: At the court barri in Gambia Village, as the Kamajors heard the sound of Norman's plane approaching, they split open the stomachs of three pregnant women and removed the fetuses, one after the other. The Kamajors decapitated the fetuses and put each of the skulls on a long stick. These were mounted "like a flag" at the junction which goes to Mattru.[1107] All three women died. Many civilians were present during this incident. Commander Sheku Kaillie was also present, but Norman had not yet arrived.[1108] After Norman arrived he went to see Kondewa at the society bush. The fetuses' heads had been put there for Norman to see. Later, the Kamajors removed the heads from the stick and smeared blood on their own faces. The Kamajors sang and celebrated as they went into town.[1109].

(iv) Talia/Base Zero - Crimes

a. Killings of civilians at Talia/Base Zero – Crimes

2065. para. 623: When they entered Talia, the Town Commanders were not carrying guns.[1272] Allieu Kondewa and Kamoh Bonnie, Kondewa's priest,[1273] were among the Kamajors. They were standing behind the town commanders. TF2-096 witnessed Allieu Kondewa take a gun from Kamoh Bonnie, and shoot one of the Town Commanders.[1274] The next morning, TF2-096 saw two graves. She was told that the Town Commanders were buried within them.[1275] Joe Tamidey and Ngobeh were also present in Talia on the day Kondewa shot the Town Commander.[1276]

2067. para. 625: TF2-188 was captured together with her mother in Blama and both women were made to carry loads to Talia. When they arrived in Talia, Allieu Kondewa told his boys to capture TF2-188's mother and said that the mother should be killed. TF2-188 saw the Kamajors kill her mother.[1278]

2069. para. 627: The killings of Jusu Shalley, Baggie Vaiey and Lahai Lebbie were witnessed by women held in Talia Yawbeko. The three men were captured together and brought to Talia and were killed the same night that they arrived.[1282] A large group of Kamajors and civilians surrounded them. Lahai Lebbi was tied up by Kamajors and burnt to death.[1283] Jusu Shalley and Baggie Vaiey were killed with machetes.[1284] All three men were civilians.[1285]

2070. para. 630: Sometime after 13 February 1998,[1289] a soldier, named Sgt. Kamanda[1290] was brought to Talia from Koribondo to surrender. Norman was not in Talia when the soldier arrived. Sgt. Kamanda was killed. When Norman returned to Talia and learned of the soldier's death, he said that the soldier should not have been killed, but should have been used for training.[1291]

2071. para. 632: Sometime between January and March 1998, Mustafa Fallon was killed in the Poro Bush[1295] in Talia as part of a Kamajor ritual. Mustafa Fallon was a fighting Kamajor who had been enlisted by Bobor Tucker, a.k.a. Jegbeyama, of the Death Squad.[1296] Many Kamajors were present when he was killed including Junisa, Gaima, Gibrilla, Amara Sengay, Jahman, Dr. Jigbao and Mustafa Fallon's two brothers, Momoh Rogers and Sheku Massaquoi. Norman, Fofana and Kondewa were also present. Norman threatened to kill anyone who told the truth about Mustafa Fallon's death. He said "[i]f you go and explain outside and if somebody should cry, if that secret leaks, we will kill you because you have nowhere to go. You cannot go to Bo. As long as you are within the Kamajor zone I have absolute power to get you wherever you are."[1297]

2075. para. 585: TF2-154 observed that Kamajors launched an RPG into her father's house and two young male tenants came running out.[1163] The tenants, who were aged approximately 19 and 22, were not related to TF2-154.114 Although both young men protested that they were not part of the junta, they were killed by the Kamajors.[1165] The Kamajors set TF2-154's father's house on fire.[1166]

iv. The Killing of Sergeant Mason, Corporal Fandai and Momoh Tawol - Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

Mason fell to the ground and another Kamajor chopped at his head and neck with a cutlass. Sergeant Mason died from the wounds inflicted by these Kamajors.[1173]

2077. para. 588: A group of Kamajors stopped Corporal Fandai and asked him who he was. Corporal Fandai responded that he was a police officer. The Kamajors, who were speaking in Krio, told Corporal Fandai that they wanted to kill him. Corporal Fandai asked for time to pray but was shot three times.[1174] Corporal Fandai's corpse was found on the ground near his home.[1175]

2078. para. 589: Momoh Tawol was sitting on his veranda when Corporal Fandai was killed. He asked in Krio who had fired; one of the Kamajors responded in Krio that they had made a mistake. One of the Kamajors then shot Momoh Tawol four times. Momoh Tawol fell on his knees and was shot three more times. The same Kamajor who had chopped at Sergeant Mason's head chopped at Tawol's head and neck.[1176] Momoh Tawol's corpse was left outside near his home.[1177]

v. The Killing of Sergeant Turay – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

2079. para. 591: TF2-039, a police officer, was stopped by a group of Kamajors that came to Kenema on Sunday morning, 15 February 1998.[1179] While the Kamajors were questioning him, Sergeant Turay came up to the group of Kamajors and was identified by one of them as the police supervisor.[1180] Sergeant Turay raised his hand to show the Kamajors an identification card and Brima Massaquoi, a Kamajor commander, chopped his hand.[1181] Sergeant Turay begged for his life and started backing up but Brima Massaquoi ordered the Kamajors to fire.[1182] Sergeant Turay was hit in the neck and did not get up again because there was constant firing.[1183] He died from wounds inflicted by the Kamajors.[1184]

vi. The Killing of SI Mimor – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

2080. para. 592: SI Mimor, who was partially paralyzed, was limping towards his quarters when he was spotted by Kamajors who shouted in Krio, "[l]ook at the policeman […] that we've been [sic] looking for." One of the Kamajors took his cutlass and chopped SI Mimor on his arm and leg. SI Mimor fell down, bleeding.[1185] His corpse was left outside.[1186]

vii. The Killing of OC Kano and Desmond Pratt – Kenema Town –Crimes

2081. para. 593: OC Kano and Desmond Pratt were stopped and questioned by Kamajors as they walked across the police football field.[1187] OC Kano produced an identity card. After examining the card the Kamajors shot OC Kanu and Desmond Pratt.[1188] Desmond Pratt's corpse was left outside.[1189]

viii. Killing of Police Officers at the Kenema Barracks – Kenema Town – Crimes

2082. para. 599: On Monday, 16 February 1998, after driving off the rebels, Kamajors entered the Kenema Police Barracks and started searching the houses.[1202] A group of three Kamajors searched the houses and killed some policemen that were hiding under their beds.[1203] At least one body was taken outside and burnt in the field.[1204]

ix. Killing of Alleged Junta – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

2083. para. 602: In late February 1998,[1210] TF2-151 was asked to accompany some Kamajors to the CDF office on Kaisamba Terrace.[1211] As they reached the junction closest to the CDF office, TF2-151 saw a boy run from the CDF office. He was pursued by people who shouted, "[c]atch him, he's a junta."[1212] The boy was caught by a Kamajor who chopped at him with a machete.[1213] The boy fell and was set on fire by a group of Kamajors.[1214] The Kamajors accompanying TF2-151 to the CDF office started to beat him and warned that if he did not cooperate, they would do to him what had been done to the boy.[1215]

x. Killing of Mr. Ojuku and other Mistreatment – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

2085. para. 605: Two days after the killing of Mr. Ojuku, TF2-144 saw Kamajors catch a man of 25 or 30 years at a checkpoint between Kahunla Street and Nyandeyama. The man was beaten, tied up and stabbed. TF2-144 left after seeing a Kamajor named Yamorto pierce the man's chest with a knife.[1225]

xi. Other Killings – Kenema District – Crimes

2086. para. 606: Between mid-September 1998 and mid-December 1998,[1226] TF2-152 was arrested by Kamajors and taken to a cell at the CDF office at Kaisamba Terrace.[1227] KBK Magonna handed TF2-152 and one other person over to Colonel Biko, a.k.a. Yamorto, who took them to Nyandeyama Yamorto Base, which is by the roundabout near the council and the court.[1228] On the way there, Colonel Biko cut open the stomach of TF2- 152's friend and created a checkpoint by stringing this person's guts between two sticks.[1229] The friend was not yet dead.[1230] Colonel Biko and the Kamajors said, "[y]ou are going to die here."[1231] Various organs were removed from TF2-152's friend's torso. TF2-152 was taken to the Kamajor base where he was tied and stripped naked. A friend of TF2-152's arrived and rescued him.[1232]

2087. para. 607: During the same period, TF2-152 saw Kamajors kill two people at the NP petrol station on Blama Road. A tire was put on one and thatch on the other and they were set on fire. On Hangha Road, three people were killed opposite Capitol by the police barracks.[1233]

(vi) Moyamba District – Crimes

a. Moyamba Town – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Murder of Mr. Thomas in Moyamba – Moyamba District – Crimes

2088. para. 639: After the Kamajors returned to Moyamba they searched for collaborators.[1311] The Kamajors looked specifically for Mr. Thomas,[1312] who was suspected of collecting information from Moyamba and selling it to the AFRC at Camp Charlie in Mile 91.[1313] When the Kamajors found Mr. Thomas they took him to Mustapha Ngobeh's place.[1314] Three or four days later, TF2-165 saw Mr. Thomas in the midst of a group of Kamajors[1315] who were singing, and dancing as they headed towards Shenge Park in Moyamba Town.[1316] People from the town stood around and waited to see what was going to happen to Mr. Thomas. TF2-165 heard the Kamajors say: "Go, […] you are now a free man […]"[1317] Mr. Thomas began to leave but was shot in the back by a Kamajor and fell.[1318] Kamajors dragged Mr. Thomas' corpse to Langowa Street where they decapitated him.[1319] Some Kamajors drank blood from the body of Mr. Thomas; some rubbed the blood on their bodies; and one Kamajor took Thomas' head and placed it on his own head.[1320] The Kamajors proceeded along Langowa Street with Mr. Thomas' head still on one of the Kamajor's heads. The headless body of Mr. Thomas was left in Langowa Street for some time.[1321]

ii. Killing of One Person in Shenge Park (Moyamba Town) – Moyamba District – Crimes

2089. para. 640: In late 1997 or early 1998, Kamajors brought three people to Shenge Park.[1322] The Kamajors set fire to a tire on Chief Siaka Stevens Street opposite the court barri. [1323] A few minutes later they brought three hairless men from the Native Administration cell.[1324] The Kamajors said that they would give justice to one of the three in Moyamba but that the other two would be taken back to Shenge so that their people would know they were "bad" people.[1325] The hands of all three men were tied.[1326] The Kamajors placed one of the men on the fire and he burnt to ashes.[1327] Kenei Torma and Chuck Norris were in control of the Kamajors in Moyamba at that time.[1328]

b. Sembehun – Moyamba District

i. Murder in Yakarji in Sembehun – Moyamba District – Crimes

2090. para. 649: On the morning of the third day after the Kamajors arrived in Sembehun, they travelled two miles to a village called Yakarji.[1355] In Yakarji the Kamajors looted a Mazda van which had been in the care of TF2-073's brother-in-law.[1356] The Kamajors beat TF2-073's brother-in-law severely and forced him to show them where the van was located.[1357] They looted the vehicle and brought it back to their base in Sembehun. TF2- 073's brother-in-law died from the beatings a few weeks after this event.[1358]

c. Rokonta and Surrounding Areas – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Arrest ofTF2-166's Family and Killing of her Father on 11 May 1998 – Rokonta – Moyamba District – Crimes

2091. para. 653: The CDF returned and entered Rokonta Village on Sunday, 11 May 1998 at 8:00pm.[1370] The Kamajors arrived at TF2-166's father's house and opened fire. The family tried to escape to Mabang[1371] but some of them were captured, including TF2-166 and her parents. TF2-166's father was hit[1372] and taken in a vehicle with some family members[1373] to Masanki Village[1374] where Amadou Mahoi was the CDF commander.[1375] Those captured had to carry her father's looted property.[1376] Gibrille Kamara, a CDF from Rokonta, came and tied her father's hands;[1377] the latter shouted and offered 500,000 leones to the CDF to spare his life. They took the money and Lamina Pupil, a CDF member, said that they would kill TF2-166' father. One CDF said: "This child […] is sharp, […] let's tie her and kill her after killing the father. [sic]" They said they would rape TF2-166 before killing her.[1378] One CDF, Mohamed Lingon, tied TF2-166's left foot. Mohamed Koroma of Mayenoh and Commander Amadou Muhoi[1379] stabbed the witness' father in the eye with a knife,[1380] cut his mouth[1381] and threw hot water on him. TF2-166's father died.[1382] TF2-166 escaped with the help of one Kamajor.[1383]

d. Bradford – Moyamba Disrtict – Crimes

i. Murder of Ruffus Charlie speaker at Bradford in 1997 – Moyamba Disrtict – Crimes

2092. para. 655: In late 1997 Albert J Nallo was the CDF Director of Operations in Moyamba.[1389] In this capacity Albert J Nallo had control over Moyamba District. When Albert J Nallo went to Moyamba Town, he learned from Mustapha Ngobeh that four days earlier Abu Bawote, the Commander in the Ribbi area,[1390] had killed the Chiefdom Speaker. Mustapha Ngobeh related that he had seen Abu Bawote in Bradford with the severed hand of the Chiefdom Speaker; Bawote had dried the hand and tied in to his neck as a necklace. Albert J Nallo reported this incident to Fofana and Norman and told Norman that this Chiefdom Speaker was a collaborator. Norman responded: "Well, a Collaborator deserves that. That was the standing order. You know that was the standing order I passed long ago."[1391]

ii. Third Arrival at Bradford on 23 March 1998 - Moyamba Disrtict – Crimes

2093. para. 658: On 23 March 1998, Kamajors came to Bradford at 7:00am. There were Kamajors from Moyamba as well as Obai's group; Obai commanded them all. The Kamajors fired indiscriminately at the civilian population. All the families of Bradford ran and hid in the bush.[1400] TF2-167's grandson Aluseini, who was three and a half years old, was shouting. One Kamajor shot at him and Aluseini died.[1401] The Kamajors threatened to kill all of TF2-167's children.[1402]

iii. Capture and Murder of One Civilian near Makabi Loko in Tune 1998 – Moyamba District – Crimes

e. Murders in Kongonani – Crimes

2095. para. 666: In February or March 1999, a report of two murders that occurred in Kongonani,[1424] was made to TF2-073 in Sembehun.[1425] Three traders were captured by eight Kamajors. One of them escaped; the other two were shot.[1426] On the day he received this report, TF2-073 attended a meeting of Kamjors called by the local chief to investigate the killings.[1427] Eight Kamajors suspected of having committed the killings confessed. One was Tiby Bangura, the other John Aruna. TF2-073 informed the District Officer of these killings; the matter was then referred to the Criminal Investigation Division of the Sierra Leone Police.[1428] The eight Kamajors were taken to Tihun. Kondewa was in Tihun at this time.[1429] The Kamajors were detained for about a month by the police.1430

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law - Crimes against Humanity ("CAH")

2096. para. 110: The general requirements which must be proved to show the commission of a Crime against Humanity are as follows:

(i) There must be an attack;

(ii) The attack must be widespread or systematic;

(iii) The attack must be directed against any civilian population;

(iv) The acts of the Accused must be part of the attack; and

(v) The Accused knew or had reason to know that his or her acts constitute part of widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population.

a. Attack – Applicable Law – CAH

2097. para. 111: The Chamber adopts the definition of attack as meaning a "campaign, operation or course of conduct"[114] and notes that, in the context of a Crime against Humanity, the said term is not limited to the use of armed force, but also encompasses any mistreatment of the civilian population.[115] The Chamber further notes that an attack can precede, outlast, or continue during an armed conflict. Thus it may, but need not, be part of an armed conflict.[116] Therefore, in the Chamber's opinion, the distinction between an attack and an armed conflict reflects the position in customary international law that crimes against humanity may be committed in peace time and independent of an armed conflict.[117]

b. Widespread or systematic attack – Applicable law – CAH

2098. para. 112: In the Chamber's view, the requirement that the attack must be either widespread or systematic is disjunctive and not cumulative.[118] The Chamber is of the opinion that the term "widespread" refers to the large-scale nature of the attack and the number of victims, while the term "systematic" refers to the organised nature of the acts of violence and the improbability of their random occurrence.[119] The Chamber adopts the view that "[p]atterns of crimes - that is the non-accidental repetition of similar criminal conduct on a regular basis - are a common expression of such systematic occurrence"[120] and further subscribes to the interpretation of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Kunarac et al. case which stated that:

> [T]he assessment of what constitutes a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack is essentially a relative exercise in that it depends upon the civilian population which, allegedly, was being attacked. A Trial Chamber must therefore 'first identify the population which is the object of the attack and, in light of the means, methods, resources and result of the attack upon the population, ascertain whether the attack was indeed widespread or systematic'. The consequences of the attack upon the targeted population, the number of victims, the nature of the acts, the possible participation of officials or authorities or any identifiable patterns of crimes, could be taken into account to determine whether the attack satisfies either or both requirements of a 'widespread' or 'systematic' attack vis-a-vis this civilian population.[121]

2099. para. 113: The existence of a policy or plan, or that the crimes were supported by a policy or plan to carry them out, may be evidentially relevant to establish the widespread or systematic nature of the attack and that it was directed against a civilian population, but it is not a separate legal requirement of crimes against humanity.[122] Furthermore, the Chamber is of the view that customary international law does not presuppose a discriminatory or persecutory intent for all crimes against humanity.[123]

c. Directed against any civilian population – Applicable law – CAH

2100. para. 114: The attack must be directed against any civilian population. This requires that the civilian population "be the primary rather than an incidental target of the attack".14 Accordingly, the Chamber recalls its adoption of the interpretation of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kunarac et al. which stated that:

> [T]he expression. 'directed against' is an expression which 'specifies that in the context of a crime against humanity the civilian population is the primary object of the attack'. In order to determine whether the attack may be said to have been so directed, the Trial Chamber will consider, inter alia, the means and method used in the course of the attack, the status of the victims, their number, the discriminatory nature of the attack, the nature of the crimes committed in its course, the resistance to the assailants a: the time and the extent to which the attacking force may be said to have complied or attempted to comply with the precautionary requirements of the laws of war. To the extent that the alleged crimes against humanity were committed in the course of an armed conflict, the laws of war provide a benchmark against which the Chamber may assess the nature of the attack and the legality of the acts committed in its midst. [125]

2101. para. 115: The Chamber concur, with the view of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Blaskic case that there is an absolute prohibition against targeting civilians in customary international law.[126]

2102. para. 116: The term "civilian population" must be interpreted broadly.[127] The Chamber is satisfied that customary international law, determined by reference to the laws of armed conflict, has established that the civilian population includes all of those persons who are not members of the armed forces or otherwise recognised as combatants.[128]

of soldiers as well as their status.[130] The presence of members of resistance armed groups or former combatants who have laid down their arms, within a civilian population, does not alter its civilian nature.[131]

2104. para. 118: The Chamber recognises that the protection of Article 2 of the Statute extends to "any" civilian population including, if a state takes part in the attack, that state's own population[132] and that there is no requirement that the victims are linked to any particular side.[133] It is also our view that the existence of an attack upon one side's civilian population would not justify or cancel out that side's attack upon the other's civilian population.[134]

2105. para. 119: The Chamber concurs with the interpretation that "the use of the word 'population' does not mean that the entire population of the geographical entity in which the attack is taking place must have been subjected to that attack".[135] However, the targeting of a select group of civilians - for example, the targeted killing of a number of political opponents - cannot satisfy the requirements of Article 2.[136] It would therefore be sufficient to show that enough individuals were targeted in the course of the attack, or that they were targeted in such a way as to satisfy the Chamber that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian "population", rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.[137]

d. The acts of the Accused must be part of the attack – Applicable law - CAH

2106. para. 120: The requirement that the acts of the Accused must be part of the attack is satisfied by the "commission of an act which, by its nature or consequences, is objectively part of the attack.[138] This is established if the alleged crimes were related to the attack on a civilian population, but need not have been committed in the midst of that attack.[139] A crime which is committed before or after the main attack or away from it could still, if sufficiently connected, be part of that attack. However, it must not be an isolated act. "A crime would be regarded as an 'isolated act' when it is so far removed from that attack that, having considered the context and circumstances in which it was committed, it cannot reasonably be said to have been part of the attack.[140] Only the attack, not the individual acts, must be widespread or systematic.[141]

e. Mens rea – Applicable law – CAH

part thereof.[142] The Prosecution must show that the Accused either knew or had reason to know that his acts comprised part of the attack. Evidence of knowledge depends on the facts of a particular case. The manner in which this legal element may be proved may therefore vary from case to case.[143] The Accused must have known or had reason to know that there is an attack on the civilian population and that his acts comprised part of that attack. The Accused needs to understand the overall context in which his acts took place,[144] but need not know the details of the attack or share the purpose or goal behind the attack.[145] The motives for the Accused's participation in the attack are irrelevant.[146] It is also irrelevant whether the Accused intended his acts to be directed against the targeted population or merely against his victim, as it is the attack, and not the acts of the Accused, which must be directed against the targeted population.[147]

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

a. Widespead or systematic attack – CAH – Findings on general requirements

2108. para. 691: The Chamber finds that the following events constitute part of a widespread attack:

1. The attacks by Kamajors on Tongo in late November/early December 1997; in early January 1998; and on 14 January 1998;
2. The attack by Kamajors on Koribondo between 13 and 15 February 1998;
3. The attack by Kamajors on Bo Town between 15 and 23 February 1998;
4. The attack by Kamajors on Bonthe 15 February 1998; and
5. The attack by Kamajors on Kenema between 15 and 18 February 1998;

2109. para. 692: In light of the broad geographical area over which these attacks occurred, the Chamber is satisfied that the requirement of a widespread attack has been established in this case. Since the requirement that an attack be widespread or systematic is disjunctive, the Chamber does not need to consider whether the attack was also systematic.

b. Attack directed against civilian population of Sierra Leone – CAH – Findings on general requirements

there is evidence that these attacks were directed against the rebels or juntas that controlled towns, villages, and communities throughout Sierra Leone.[1528] In this regard, the Chamber recalls the admission of the Prosecutor that "the CDF and Kamajors fought for the restoration of democracy."[1529]

2111. para. 694: Having thus found that the essential requirement of an attack against the civilian population has not been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, the Chamber finds that Fofana and Kondewa are not guilty of Crimes against Humanity as charged in Count 1 (Murder as a Crime against Humanity) and Count 3 (Other Inhumane Acts as a Crime against Humanity).

(iii) Applicable Law- Murder

2112. para. 143: The constitutive elements of the offence of murder as a Crime against Humanity are:

> (i) The death of one or more persons;
> (ii) The death of the person(s) was caused by an act or omission of the Accused; and

2113. para. 144: In this regard, the Chamber is of the opinion that proof beyond reasonable doubt that a person was murdered does not necessarily require proof that the dead body of that person has been recovered. The fact of a victim's death can be inferred circumstantially from all the evidence presented to the Trial Chamber.[185] In addition, the Prosecution must prove that the victim or victims died as a result of acts or omissions of the Accused.[186]

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-A, Judgment, 28 May 2008

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Talia/Base Zero – Unlawful killings

a. Kondewa — Killing of town commander – Talia/Base Zero - Unlawful Killings

2134. para. 201: Witness TF2-096 testified that she saw Kondewa shoot one of the town commanders and that he fell. Immediately after witnessing this incident, the witness ran away. The Appeals Chamber finds that the fact that she did not herself witness that the town commander was dead, leaves the possibility open that someone else may have killed the town commander. The Trial Record does not contain any evidence corroborating the veracity of Witness TF2-096's testimony that the Kamajors identified the graves of the two people dancing. Furthermore, no evidence indicates the identity of the Kamajors or whether they were present during the incident during which Witness TF2-096 saw Kondewa shoot the town commander. In addition, no further evidence concerned whether the town commander died. No nexus exists between Kondewa's act and the death of the town commander. The evidence that the town commander died is insufficient and, therefore, the offence of murder has not been proved.

2135. para. 202: Therefore, because Witness TF2-096's testimony did not establish that the town commander died, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the only reasonable inference was that Kondewa killed the town commander. Further, even if it had been established that the Town Commander died, someone else could have killed the town commander after Witness TF2-096 ran away, given that it has not been established that the town commander died because of Kondewa's shot.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) CAH – Findings – Attack directed against civilian population

a. Introduction

2137. para. 233: The Trial Chamber convicted Fofana and Kondewa under Counts 2 and 4, finding that the legal requirements for murder and cruel treatment as well as the general requirements for war crimes were satisfied.[442] However, the Trial Chamber acquitted them of Counts 1 and 3 because it held that the general requirements of crimes against humanity were not satisfied in this case.

2138. para. 234: The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in not finding that the general requirement for crimes against humanity was satisfied.[443]

b. Attack directed against civilian population – CAH – Findings on general requirements

2140. para. 245: The Prosecution submits that two legal errors arise from that finding: first, it contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the fact that CDF fought for democracy was a relevant factor; and second, that the Trial Chamber incorrectly considered that, as a matter of law, an attack is not directed against a civilian population if civilians are targeted in the course of an attack against opposing forces.

i. Whether Fighting for Democracy May be a Material Element for the Purposes of CAH – CAH

2141. para. 246: The Prosecution submits that "the elements of crimes against humanity prohibit attacks against the civilian population regardless of their purpose."[461] The Appeals Chamber notes Kondewa's contentions that while the existence of a plan or policy can be evidentially relevant in proving that an attack was directed against a civilian population – although it is not a legal element of crimes against humanity – "it should be evidentially relevant in proving that an attack was not directed against a civilian population."[462]

2142. para. 247: In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, it is manifestly incorrect to conclude that widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population cannot be characterised as crimes against humanity simply because the ultimate objective of the fighting force was legitimate and/or aimed at responding to aggressors. The Appeals Chamber deems it necessary to emphasise that rules of international humanitarian law apply equally to both sides of the conflict, irrespective of who is the "aggressor," and that the absolute prohibition under international customary and conventional law on targeting civilians precludes military necessity or any other purpose as a justification. The Appeals Chamber holds that it is no justification that the perpetrators of a crime against humanity were fighting for the restoration of democracy.

2144. para. 249: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber is unable to find that references by the Trial Chamber to the purpose for which the CDF was fighting was a decisive consideration in its determination of the general requirements for crimes against humanity.

ii. Whether an Attack Could Not be One "Directed Against A Civilian Population" if Civilians are Attacked in Connection with Legitimate Military Operations - CAH

2145. para. 250: The Prosecution argues that the challenged finding of the Trial Chamber implies that, as a matter of law, an attack could not be one "directed against a civilian population"

if civilians are attacked in the course of, or immediately after, an attack directed against opposing forces.464 At the appeals hearing, the Prosecution specified that it would be incorrect to consider that an attack against a civilian population occurring at the same time as, or immediately after a military attack and undertaken by the same fighting forces "must all be seen as one attack."[465] Kondewa agreed with this interpretation of the law.[466]

2146. para. 251: The Appeals Chamber finds no ambiguity in the Trial Chamber's articulation of the applicable law. The Trial Chamber did not exclude the possibility that these attacks were directed against a civilian population merely because there was proof of military attacks targeting the opposing forces. Instead, the Trial Chamber found that, while there were attacks against the rebels or juntas, there was no evidence beyond reasonable doubt of the existence of parallel and coexisting attacks directed against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber found that a number of civilians were killed and subject to mistreatments.[467]

(ii) Attack directed against civilian population - CAH – Findings on general requirements

a. Preliminary considerations

2148. para. 257: Relying on Kunarac Appeal Judgment, the Trial Chamber stated that "directed against a civilian population" requires "that the civilian population be the primary rather than incidental target of the attack."[483] In Kunarac, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that:

> "In order to determine whether the attack may be so directed [against a civilian population], the Trial Chamber will consider, inter alia, the means and method used in the course of the attack, the status of the victims, their number, the discriminatory nature of the attack, the nature of the crimes committed in its course, the resistance to the assailants at the time and the extent to which the attacking force may be said to have complied or attempted to comply with the precautionary requirements of the laws of war."[484]

2149. para. 258: The Trial Chamber stated that "civilian population" must be interpreted broadly. It includes "all those persons who are not members of the armed forces or otherwise recognised as combatants."[485] It also stated that the population must be predominantly civilian in nature and that the presence of certain non-civilians in their midst does not change the character of the population.[486] It further stated that the use of the word "population" does not mean that the entire population of the geographical entity in which the attack is taking place must have been the subject of that attack.[487] The Trial Chamber finally stated that:

> "the targeting of a select group of civilians – for example, the targeted killing of a number of political opponents – cannot satisfy the requirements of Article 2. It would therefore be sufficient to show that enough individuals were targeted in the course of the attack, or that they were targeted in such a way as to satisfy the Chamber that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian 'population', rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals."[488]

2150. para. 259: Article 50 of Additional Protocol I provides:

> "A civilian is any person who does not belong to one of the categories of persons referred to in Article 4 A (1), (2), (3) and (6) of the Third Convention and in Article 43 of this Protocol. In case of doubt whether a person is a civilian, that person shall be considered to be a civilian. 2. The civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians. 3. The presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character."

The Appeals Chamber considers that Article 50(1) of the Additional Protocol I is a useful tool in determining a "civilian population." The Appeals Chamber agrees with the view expressed in several judgments of international tribunals that "the presence within a population of members of resistance groups, or former combatants, who have laid down their arms, does not alter its civilian characteristic"[489] and "[t]he civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians and the presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character."[490] In line with this principle, the Appeals Chamber takes the view that the presence of rebels or juntas within the victims does not deprive the population of its civilian character.

1997,[494] and that the Kamajors "turned against the police because of their 'alleged collaboration with the junta.'"[495] The Appeals Chamber further notes, from the Trial Judgment, that "while the Kamajors were in Bo, they captured and killed police officers. […] The police that had been killed did not have ammunition."[496] The Appeals Chamber therefore, holds, that police officers who have been subject to killings and mistreatments in Bo are "civilians." In Kenema, a number of police officers were also killed when the Kamajors entered Kenema Town on 15 February 1998.[497] The Trial Judgment shows no findings that those police officers were armed or fought against the Kamajors. The following day, upon the return of the juntas to Kenema, there were exchange of fire for several hours between the Kamajors and the rebels–among whom were police officers who were fighting.[498] In this context, the Appeals Chamber does not consider those police officers as "civilians."

b. Attacks Tongo in late November/early December 1997, early January 1998 and on 14 January 1998; in Koribondo between 13 and 15 February 1998; in Bo Town between 15 and 23 February 1998; in Bonthe on 15 February 1998; and in Kenema between 15 and 18 February 1998 - General requirements – CAH

2156. para. 265: In determining whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence adduced did not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the attacks were "directed against a civilian population" the Appeals Chamber will now consider the relevant findings of fact made by the Trial Chamber in respect to each of the locations where the attacks have been carried out by the Kamajors, namely: in Tongo in late November/early December 1997, early January 1998 and on 14 January 1998; in Koribondo between 13 and 15 February 1998; in Bo Town between 15 and 23 February 1998; in Bonthe on 15 February 1998; and in Kenema between 15 and 18 February 1998.[505]

(iii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

a. Attack directed against civilian population - CAH

2157. para. 297: The Trial Chamber concluded, in respect of the third element for crimes against humanity, (i.e., an attack "directed against a civilian population") that:

> "the evidence adduced does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the civilian population was the primary object of the attack. By contrast, there is evidence that these attacks were directed against the rebels or juntas that controlled towns, villages, and communities throughout Sierra Leone. In this regard the Chamber recalls the admission of the Prosecutor that 'the CDF and the Kamajors fought for the restoration of democracy.'"[638]

2159. para. 299: The Appeals Chamber will now consider whether, based on the findings of the Trial Chamber in relation to the attacks on Tongo, Koribondo, Bo, Bonthe and Kenema, it was open to the Trial Chamber to conclude that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the attacks were not "directed against the civilian population." The Appeals Chamber approves the opinion of the Trial Chamber that the expression "directed against" a civilian population requires that "the civilian population which is subjected to the attack must be the primary rather than an incidental target of the attack."[639] The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that what must be primary is the civilian population as a target and not the purpose or the objective of the attack.

2160. para. 300: The Trial Chamber found that "the evidence adduced does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the civilian population was the primary object of the attack. By contrast, there is evidence that these attacks were directed against the rebels or juntas that controlled towns, villages, and communities throughout Sierra Leone."[640] The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber appears to have misdirected itself when applying the principle it had already stated, by confusing the target of the attack with the purpose of the attack. When the target of an attack is the civilian population, the purpose of that attack is immaterial.

2162. para. 302: The Appeals Chamber has examined the findings in regard to each of the locations earlier mentioned. There is no doubt from those findings that the Trial Chamber was satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that civilians were attacked in various ways by the Kamajors in several of these locations. It was on these findings that the Trial Chamber found that war crimes were proved beyond reasonable doubt.

2165. para. 305: In this context, the Appeals Chamber notes the holding of the Trial Chamber in its Sentencing Judgment that:

> "[I]nstead of limiting themselves and directing these attacks on legitimate military targets and objectives . . . the Accused Persons and their Kamajors . . . went beyond these acceptable military and legal limits and carried out killings and other atrocities against unarmed civilians who they characterised and designated as 'rebel collaborators'. In fact, we note here that the crimes for which they have been found guilty were perpetrated by the Accused Persons and CDF/Kamajor fighters when combat activities and operations against the enemy AFRC forces were already over.[646]

2166. para. 306: In view of the absence of military operations between the Kamajors and the rebels/soldiers at the time of the commission of most of the crimes against the civilians, the Appeals Chamber rejects Fofana's submission that those civilians were "collateral victims" of military operations,[647] and further opines that those civilians could not reasonably be considered as mere "incidental targets"[648] of a legitimate military attack. Rather, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, the context of the commission of the crimes, remote from military operations, supports a reasonable conclusion that the "attacks" were, in fact, specifically "directed against" a civilian population, within the meaning of Article 2 of the Statute.

2167. para. 307: In view of these findings of fact, taken as a whole, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the criminal conduct against those civilians was neither random nor isolated acts but was rather perpetrated pursuant to a common pattern of targeting the civilian population.

2169. para. 309: The Prosecution's First Ground of Appeal is granted in this respect. Under this Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber to enter corresponding convictions against Fofana and Kondewa under Counts 1 and 3 in respect of all acts for which they were found by the Trial Chamber to be guilty under Counts 2 and 4.[649] The Appeals Chamber will next consider whether the remaining legal requirements for crimes against humanity are satisfied in this case.

b. The Act Must be Part of the Widespread or Systematic Attack Against the Civilian Population - CAH

2170. para. 310: In regard to the fourth element the Prosecution submits that on the basis of the findings of the Trial Chamber and the evidence it accepted, the only conclusion open to any reasonable trier of fact is that the crimes that were committed were part of an attack against a civilian population.

2172. para. 312: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the submission of the Prosecution and finds that the fourth element of crimes against humanity is proved.

2173. para. 313: We now turn to the fifth element of crimes again humanity.

c. Mens rea - CAH

2177. para. 317: In relation to the attack on Tongo, Norman told the Kamajors that "there is no place to keep captured or war prisoners like the juntas, let alone their collaborators"650 and that "all collaborators should forfeit their properties."[651] In relation to the attack on Koribondo, Norman instructed the Kamajors not to "leave any house or any living thing there, except mosque, church, the barri and the school,"[652] and that "anyone left in Koribondo should be termed an enemy or a rebel and killed."[653] He further said that the capture of Koribondo had failed "because the civilians had given their children to the juntas in marriage and thus, they were all 'spies and collaborators' [and], [t]herefore, . . . 'anybody that was met there should be killed' and nothing should be left 'not even a farm' or '[. . .] a fowl.'"[654] In relation to the attack on Bo, Norman told the Kamajors to "kill enemy combatants and people who had connections with or supported the rebels and who were therefore worse than the combatants;" he referred to them as "collaborators."[655] At several occasions, Norman also ordered the Kamajors to kill police officers.[656]

Kamajors, through killings of definite individuals in view of any perceived or alleged relationships with the rebels, the commission of mass-killings of groups of civilians, a recurrent targeting of police officers and indiscriminate shootings at civilians, the burning of their houses or looting of their properties.

2179. para. 319: The evidence accepted by the Trial Chamber shows that the actual perpetrators of the crimes knew that a widespread or systematic attack was planned to break any possible resistance or collaboration by the population. Orders had been given to do so and punishment for not obeying was made clear to the perpetrators as well.[657]

2180. para. 320: The Appeals Chamber states that the only conclusion is that the actual perpetrators had the requisite knowledge.

2181. para. 321: The Appeals Chamber holds that whenever the Trial Chamber has found Fofana and Kondewa individually criminally responsible for war crimes under Counts 2 and 4, it reasonably follows that the same responsibility attaches to them for crimes against humanity in the same locations.[658]

d. Disposition - CAH

2183. Regarding Fofana's criminal responsibility in relation to Tongo Town, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) – CDF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Fofana – Tongo Town – paras. 54 – 57, 61 - 64 [8467].

2184. Regarding Kondewa's criminal responsibility in relation to Tongo Town, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – CDF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kondewa – Tongo Town – paras. 70-73, 75– 79 [8475], 85- 86 [8489].

2185. Regarding Fofana's criminal responsibility in relation to Koibondo, Bo District, and Kenema District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liablity) – CDF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Fofana - Koribondo, Bo District, and Kenema District – paras. 97 – 98, 101 – 103 [8503].

2186. Regarding Kondewa's criminal responsibility in relation Koibondo, Bo District, and Kenema District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liablity) – CDF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kondewa - Koribondo, Bo District, and Kenema District – paras. 109 – 111 [8508].

2187. Regarding Kondewa's criminal responsibility in relation Bonthe District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3. Liablity) – CDF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kondewa – Bonthe District – paras. 171-173, 175– 179 [9320], 181- 182 [9330], 186 – 189 [9335].

i. Dissent – Justice King

2188. Partially dissenting Opinion of Justice King, para. 58: The Prosecution, however, argues in its Appeal Brief that it had proved the specific elements of the crimes in Counts 1 and 3 and that the Appeals Chamber should grant the relief it seeks in paragraph 2 of the Prosecution's Notice of Appeal.[1143] Since I have held that the Trial Chamber was correct in law in finding that the third general requirement to prove the offence of Crimes against Humanity had not been met, I see no reason to consider the specific elements in respect of those crimes in Counts 1 and 3. It follows therefore, that Ground One of the Prosecution Grounds of Appeal is untenable. I accordingly dismiss it and uphold the Trial Chamber's acquittal of Fofana and Kondewa on Counts 1 and 3 of the Indictment.

2189. See below: Partially dissenting Opinion of Justice King, paras, 81 – 94 [8485] regarding Kondewa's criminal responsibility, Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Responsibility).

(c) Summary Findings

2190. para. 112: In relation to the attacks on Tongo, the Appeals Chamber, Justice King dissenting, upholds the Trial Chamber's convictions of Kondewa and Fofana, pursuant to Article 6(1), of aiding and abetting violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4 respectively).

respectively) as well as pillage, a violation of Article 3.a. common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute (Count 5).

2192. para. 114: The Appeals Chamber dismisses the Prosecution's Third and Fourth Grounds of Appeal and dismisses, Justice King dissenting, Kondewa's Fourth Ground of Appeal.

2193. para. 203: Having found that the death of the Town Commander was not proved beyond reasonable doubt, the Appeals Chamber comes to the conclusion that the Trial Chamber was in error in finding that the Town Commander was killed by the Kamajors as alleged in the Indictment.

CHAPTER 3 – VIOLENCE TO LIFE, HEALTH AND PHYSICAL OR MENTAL WELL-BEING OF PERSONS, IN PARTICULAR, MURDER

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Factual Findings

2300. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

2301. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

2302. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

(b) Legal Conclusions

2304. Regarding Taylor's Criminal Liability, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Criminal Liability - paras. 497-595 [6630].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

2305. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[78]

2306. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[79]

[78] RUF Indictment, para. 40.
[79] RUF Indictment, para. 42.

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

2307. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[80]

(iii) Counts 3-5: Unlawful killings

2308. Victims were routinely shot, hacked to death and burned to death. Unlawful killings included the following:[81]

> i. Bo District: Between about 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF attacked Tikonko, Telu, Sembehun, Gerihun, Mamboma, unlawfully killing an unknown number of civilians;[82]

Mafabu, Mateboi, and Gbendembu (or Gbendembu or Pendembu), members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians;[87]

vii. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF conducted armed attacks throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area. These attacks included large scale unlawful killings of civilian men, women, and children at locations throughout the city and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington, and Calaba Town;[88]

viii. Port Loko: About the month of February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between about February 1999 and April 1999, members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Port Loko District, including Manaarma, Tendakum, and Nonkoba.[89]

2309. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 3: Extermination, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 4: Murder, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under article 2.a. of the Statute

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 5: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute.[90]

2366. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 964 – 988 [567].

(iii) Applicable law – Murder

2367. para.141: The Chamber notes that the Indictment charges the Accused under Counts 5 and 17 with "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder", as a serious violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute. The Chamber has analysed this offence as murder, as the category of 'violence to life and person' does not exist as an independent offence in customary international law.[274]

2368. para.142: The Chamber takes the view that the elements of the offence of murder as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II are the same as for murder as a crime against humanity,[275] except for the general elements outlined above for crimes of this type. The constitutive elements are as follows:

(i) The death of one or more persons;

(ii) The death of the person(s) was caused by an act or omission of the Accused; and

(iii) The Accused intended to either kill or to cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death.[276]

(viii) Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

2394. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings - paras. 1444 – 1446 [1671].

a. Kailahun Town - Killing of 63 suspected Kamajors and one AFRC fighter hors de combat – Kailahun District – Unlawful killings

2396. para.1450: We find that the 63 civilians killed had been detained prior to their execution and were not taking an active part in hostilities at the time of their death. We conclude that a nexus existed between the killings and the armed conflict, as Bockarie ordered the killings in retaliation to the Intervention and due to his anxiety that Kamajors had infiltrated the civilian population. Consequently, the Chamber finds that these killings constitute the war crime of murder, as charged under Count 5 of the Indictment.

2397. para.1451: However, we recall that Kayioko an hors de combat member of the AFRC, who fought alongside the RUF in the armed conflict. The Chamber is of the opinion that the law of armed conflict does not protect members of armed groups from acts of violence directed against them by their own forces.

2398. para.1452: The law of international armed conflict regulates the conduct of combatants vis-à-vis their adversaries and persons hors de combat who do not belong to any of the armed groups participating in the hostilities. In this respect, we recall that the field of application of the

Third Geneva Convention is restricted to persons "who have fallen into the power of the enemy."[2754]

2400. para.1454: We therefore find that the killing of Kayioko does not constitute the war crime of violence to life, as charged in Count 5 of the Indictment.

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

2444. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[91]

Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [92]

2446. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [93]

2447. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [94]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

2448. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. 2491. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 249 – 254 [1031].

(iii) Applicable law – Murder

2492. para. 688: Murder is charged under Article 2(a) of the Statute (Count 4 - Crime against Humanity) and Article 3(a) of the Statute (Count 5 - Violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Convention and of Additional Protocol II). The Trial Chamber observes that the elements defining murder are identical regardless of the provision under which it is charged.[1343] Thus, in addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute (for Count 4) and the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute (for Count 5), the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of murder:

1. The perpetrator by his acts or omission caused the death of a person or persons; and

2493. para. 689: For the actus reus of murder to be satisfied, the Prosecution is required to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrator's conduct substantially contributed to the death of the person.[1345] This does not necessarily require proof that the dead body of that person has been recovered.[1346] The death of the victim may be demonstrated through circumstantial evidence, provided it is the only inference that may reasonably be drawn from the acts or omissions of the perpetrator.[1347] Such circumstantial evidence may include factors such as proof of incidents of mistreatment against the alleged victim, pattern of mistreatment and disappearances of individuals in the location in question, general climate of lawlessness, length of time which has elapsed since the person disappeared and the fact that the alleged victim has not been in contact with others whom he would have been expected to contact.[1348]

2494. para. 690: The mens rea required for murder is intent to kill or cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death. Premeditation is not a mens rea requirement.[1349]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law – War crimes/Violations of Common Article 3

2582. para. 122: The general requirenents which must be proved to show the commission of War Crimes pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute are as follows:

> (i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged violation of Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II;
>
> (ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict;148
>
> (iii) The victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation; 149 and
>
> (iv) The Accused knew or had reason to know that the person was not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the act or omission.

a. The Existence of an Armed Conflict

2583. para. 123: The Chamber concludes that the application of Article 3 of the Statute requires that the alleged acts of the Accused.)e committed in the course of an armed conflict, and "it is immaterial whether the conflict is internal or international in nature."[150]

2584. para. 124: Relying on the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Tadic case, and as it held in the CDF Rule 98 Decision, the Chamber rules that under Common Article 3, "an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between states or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a state".[151] Therefore, the criteria for establishing the existence of an armed conflict are the intensity of the conflict and the organisation of the parties.[152] These criteria are used "solely for the purpose, as a minimum, of distinguishing an armed cc nflict from banditry, unorganised and short-lived insurrections, or terrorist activities, which are not subject to international humanitarian law".[153]

2585. para. 125: The Chamber notes that Additional Protocol II contains a stricter threshold for the establishment of an armed conflict than Common Article 3. Article 1 of the Protocol provides in relevant parts:

> 1. This Protocol, which develops and supplements Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 without modifying its existing conditions of application, shall apply to all armed conflicts ... which take place in the territory of a High Contracting Party between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups which, under responsible command, exercise such control over a part of its territory as to enable therr. to carry out sustained and concerted military operations and to implemt:nt this Protocol.
> 2. This Protocol shall not apply to situations of internal disturbances and tensions, such as riots, isolated and sporadic acts of violence and other acts of a similar nature, as not being armed conflicts.

2586. para. 126: This Chamber is therefore satisfied that where the Prosecution has alleged an offence under Additional Protocol II, then the following conditions must be met in order to establish the element of armed conflict:

> (i) An armed conflict took place in the territory of Sierra Leone between its armed forces and dissident armed forces or other organized armed groups; and The dissident armed forces or other organized groups:
>
> (ii) Were under responsible command;
>
> (iii) Were able to exercise such control over a part of their territory as to enable them to carry out sustained and concerted military operations; and
> (iv) Were able to implement Additional Protocol II.[154]

2587. para. 127: The first requiremen, that there be an armed conflict, has already been discussed in the context of the Common Article 3 test of armed conflict. The Chamber notes, therefore, that any armed conflict satisfying the higher threshold of the Additional Protocol II test would automatically constitute armed conflict under Common Article 3. The term "armed forces" is to be defined broadly.[155] The armed forces or groups must be under responsible command which implies a degree of organization to enable them "to plan and carry out concerted military operations, and to impose discipline in the name of a de facto authority."[156] They must also be able to control a part of the territory of the country enabling them "to carry out sustained and concerted military operatiom" and to implement Additional Protocol II.

2588. para. 128: The Chamber also finds that international humanitarian law applies from the beginning of such armed conflicts and extmds beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is reached, or, in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement is achieved.[157] Until that moment, international humanitarian law continues to apply in the whole territory of the warring States or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party whether or not actual combat takes place there.[158]

2589. para. 129: What distinguishes a war crime from a purely domestic crime "is that a war crime is shaped by or dependant upon the ernvironment - the armed conflict - in which it is committed".[159] As to the precise nature of the nexus between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, the Chamber, consistent with thl: decisions of the Appeals Chambers of the ICTY and of the ICTR on this issue, rules that the nexus requirement is fulfilled if the alleged violation was closely related to the armed conflict.[160] When the violation alleged has not occurred at a time and place in which fighting was actually taking place, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that "it would be sufficient […] that the alleged crimes were closely related to hostilities occurring in other parts of the territories controlled by the parties to the conflict".[161] The crime 'need not have been planned or supported by some form of policy' and the armed conflict 'need not have been causal to the commission of the crime, but the existence of an armed conflict must, at a minimum, have played a substantial part in the perpdrator's ability to commit it, his decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed or the purpose for which it was committed'.[162] The nexus requirement is satisfied where the Accused acted in furtherance of or under the guise of the armed conflict.[163] The expression "under the guise of the armed conflict" does not mean simply "at the same time as an armed conflict" and/or " in any. circumstances created in part by the armed conflict".[164]

2590. para. 130: The Chamber subscribes to the jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals which outlined the following factors in determining whether or not the act in question was sufficiently related to the armed conflict, inter alia: "the fact that the [Accused] is a combatant; the fact that the victim is a non-combatant; the fact that the victim is a member of the opposing party; the fact that the act may be said to serve the ultimate goal of a military campaign; and the fact that the crime is committed as part of or in the context of the [Accused's] official duties".[165] It has also been stated that the determination of a close relationship between particular offences and an armed conflict will usually require consideration of several factors, not just one.[166]

c. Protected Persons

synonymous and be categorised as "all persons not taking direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation."[167]

2594. para. 134: Article 13(3) of Additional Protocol II provides that civilians are immune from attack for as long as they do not take a direct part in hostilities.[l71] The question of whether civilians have participated directly in hostilities has to be decided on the specific facts of each case and there must be a sufficient causal relationship between the act of participation and its immediate consequences.[172] The Chamber takes the view that the direct participation should be understood to mean "acts which by their nature and purpose, are intended to cause actual harm to the enemy personnel and material."[173]

2595. para. 135: The Chamber is therefore of the opinion that persons Accused of "collaborating" with the government or armed forces would only become legitimate military targets if they were taking direct part in the hostilities. Indirectly supporting or failing to resist an attacking force is insufficient to constitute such participation. In addition, even if such civilians could be considered to have taken a direct part in hostilities, they would only have qualified as legitimate military targets during the period of their direct participation.[174] If there is any doubt as to whether an individual is a civilian he should be presumed to be a civilian and cannot be attacked merely because he appears dubious. 175 When it comes to establishing civilian status for the purposes of a criminal prosecution, however, it is the Prosecution which bears the onus of doing so.[176]

2596. para. 136: The armed law enforcement agencies of a State are generally mandated only to protect and maintain the internal order of the State. Thus, as a general presumption and in the execution of their typical law enforcement duties, such forces are considered to be civilians for the purposes of international humanitarian law.[177] This same presumption will not exist for military police or gendarmerie who operate under the control of the military.[178] The Chamber notes that, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of 1991[179] and the The Police Act[180] of 1964, the Sierra Leone Police operates under the control of the Minister of Internal Affairs, a civilian authority.

2597. para. 137: The Chamber is of the opinion that the status of police officers in· a time of armed conflict must be determined in light of an analysis of the particular facts of a case. A civilian police force, for example, may be incorporated into the armed forces, which will cause the police to be classified as combatants instead of civilians. This incorporation may occur de lege, by way of a formal Act, or de facto.

(ii) War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirement

2599. para. 697: With respect to the other general requirements for war crimes, where findings have been made of murder (Count 2), cruel treatment (Count 4), pillage (Count 5), acts of terrorism (Count 6), or collective punishments (Count 7) as war crimes, the Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators were aware of the protected status of the victims who were either civilians (a category which includes "collaborators" and police officers) or captured enemy combatants. Similarly, where such findings have been made the Chamber is satisfied that the alleged crimes were closely related to the armed conflict.

(iii) Applicable law – Murder – War Crimes/Violations of Common Article 3

2600. para. 145: The Chamber notes that the Indictment charges the Accused under Count 2 with: "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder", as a serious violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute. The Chamber has analysed this offence as murder, since the category of 'violence to life and person' does not exist as an independent offence in customary international law.[187]

2601. para. 146: The Chamber takes the view that the elements of the offence of murder as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II are the same as for murder as a Crime against Humanity,[188] except for the general elements outlined in the Introduction for crimes of this type. The constitutive elements are as follows:

(i) The death of one or more persons;

(ii) The death of the person(s) was caused by an act or omission of the Accused; and

(iii) The Accused intended to either kill or to cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that it would likely result in death.

2602. para. 147: The status of the victim as a person not taking direct part in the hostilities is an element of the offence.[189] This implies that the Prosecution must show that the mens rea of the Accused encompassed the fact that the victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities.[190]

(iv) Towns of Tongo Field - Murder

2603. para. 750: As set out above in Sections V.2.3.3-V.2.3.7 the Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 2, Murder:

(i) In early January 1998, a 12 year old boy named Foday Koroma was killed in Talama because he was related to a rebel from Tongo;

(ii) In early January 1998, 150 Loko Limba and Temne tribe members were separated from members of other tribes and were killed in Talama;

(iii) On 14 January 1998, two men identified as rebels were killed by Kamabote at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo;

(iv) On 14 January 1998, Kamabote killed a man named "Dr. Blood," and a woman named Fatmata Kamara at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo. Both were considered to be collaborators;

(v) On 14 January 1998, at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo, two women identified than 10 men as collaborators. These men were led by armed Kamajors to a place behind the Headquarters where cows were also led the same direction;

(vi) On 14 January 1998, Kamajors took TF2-048's uncle, an unidentified woman and an unidentified child behind a house at NDMC Headquarters in Tongo. The Kamajors returned with blood on their machetes. These people have not been seen again;

(vii) On 15 January 1998, 20 men who had been accused of being rebels were hacked to death with machetes at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo;

(viii) Around noon on 15 January 1998, Kamajors shot at a crowd of civilians at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo. Many civilians were hit by stray bullets and at least one died;

(ix) On 15 January 1998, at an intersection near the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo, TF2-048's brother was killed by a Kamajor;

(x) On 15 January 1998, Kamajors at a checkpoint hacked one man to death for carrying a photograph of a rebel;

(xi) On 15 January 1998, Kamajors at another checkpoint hacked a boy named Sule to death for carrying a wallet that resembled SLA fatigues;

(xii) Kamajors separated men and women in Bumie and killed five men after making them stare at the sun;

(xiii) Shortly after the third attack on Tongo a group of 65 civilians was separated into two lines in Kamboma; the Kamajors shot the first 57 people and rolled the bodies into a swamp behind the house; The last eight people were hacked in the neck with machetes and rolled into the swamp with other bodies. Only one man survived;

(xiv) In mid-February 1998, Aruna Konowa was killed at Lalehun, on the order of a Kamajor boss named Baimba Aruna because he was considered to be a collaborator;

(xv) A few days after the killing of Aruna Konowa, Brima Conteh was killed in Lalehun by Kamajors who accused him of being the "chief of the rebels."

2604. para. 751: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (xv) and concludes that all perpetrators are Kamajors. We find that individuals were killed intentionally; in the majority of cases they were specifically targeted because of the perpetrator's belief that they were "collaborators" or rebels. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all the evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraphs 750i-xv was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred above in paragraph 750, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time that they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

2605. para. 752: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established beyond reasonable doubt with respect to each incident described in paragraph 750.

2606. para. 753: With respect to those incidents described in paragraph 750 above, the Chamber is satisfied not only that the general requirements of war crimes have been established but also that the specific elements of murder have been met with respect to each incident. However, the Chamber finds that the specific elements of the crime of murder have not been establish with respect to paragraph 750, as the conclusion that these people were killed is not the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence.

2607. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Towns of Tongo Field, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Towns of Tongo Field - paras. 763-764 [8378].

2608. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's superior responsibility in relation to Towns of Tongo Field, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Towns of Tongo Field - paras. 721 [9165], 733-734 [9166], 745-746 [9168].

(v) Koribondo - Murder

2609. para. 786: As set out above in the Factual Findings, The Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 2, Murder:

(i) On 15 February 1998, the mutilation and killing at Koribondo Junction of five limba who had been accused of being collaborators;

(ii) On 15 February 1998, the mutilation and killing at Blama Road of two Limba civilians;

(iii) On 16 February 1998, the killing of eight people along the Blama Road; five men belonging to the junta, and three soldiers' wives;

(iv) On 16 February 1998, the killing and mutilation of Chief Kafala took place in the street opposite the hospital. Chief Kafala had been accused of collaboration; this killing took place in the presence of many people;

(v) After the capture of Koribondo, Lahai Bassie was arrested, beaten and accused of being a collaborator because his son was a soldier. He died of his wounds one week later.

2610. para. 787: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (v) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were

Kamajors under the effective control of Fofana. We find that individuals were intentionally killed; in the majority of cases they were specifically targeted because of the perpetrator's belief that they were collaborators or rebels. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 786 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 786, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

2611. para. 788: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established with respect to each incident described in paragraph 786.

2612. para. 789: With respect to those incidents described in paragraph 786 listed above, the Chamber is also satisfied not only that the general requirements of war crimes have been established but also that the specific elements of murder have been established with respect to each incident.

2613. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Koribondo, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Koribondo - paras. 765-771 [8380], 799-808 [8387].

2614. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's superior responsibility in relation to Koribondo, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Koribondo - paras. 756 [9170], 772-784 [9171], 798 [9197], 805-808 [9198].

(vi) Bo District – Murder

a. Fofana – Bo District – Murder

2615. para. 830: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 2, Murder:

(i) The killing of an unidentified woman who was alleged to have cooked for rebels, by Kamajors, on order of TF2-017;

(ii) The killing of John Musa, an alleged collaborator, by Kamajors under the control of Joseph Lappia.

2616. para. 831: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (ii) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were Kamajors under the effective control of Fofana. We find that individuals were intentionally killed; in the majority of cases they were specifically targeted because of the perpetrator's belief that they were collaborators or rebels. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 830 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 830, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

2618. para. 833: With respect to those incidents described in paragraph 830 listed above, the Chamber is also satisfied not only that the general requirements of war crimes have been established but also that the specific elements of murder have been established with respect to each incident.

2619. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bo District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions -Bo District - paras. 809-815 [8394], 847-855 [8401].

2620. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's superior responsibility in relation to Bo District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions -Bo District - paras. 809 [9202], 816-829 [9203], 846 [9233], 852-855 [9234].

(vii) Bonthe District - Murder

a. Kondewa - Bonthe District - Murder

2621. para. 883: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 2, Murder:

(i) On 15 February 1998, Kpana Manso was killed by Beigeh, a Kamajor Commander subordinate to Morie Jusu Kamara.

(ii) On 16 February 1998, Bendeh Battiama was accused of being a collaborator and was killed by a Kamajor named Rambo Conteh.

(iii) On 17 February 1998, Abu Conteh was killed at St. Joseph's Secondary School by one of Mori Jusu's Kamajors.

(iv) In early March 1998, a woman named Jitta was killed by a Kamajor named Beigeh between Sebongie and Bonthe.

(v) TF2-087's uncle was killed in Gambia village by Kondewa's deputy Sheku Kallie, after having reported to Kondewa the misconduct of some of his boys.

(vi) During the same period, three pregnant women were killed in Gambia village by Kondewa's boys before Norman's arrival in Gambia.

2622. para. 884: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (vi) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were Kamajors under the effective control of Kondewa. We find that individuals were intentionally killed; in the majority of cases they were specifically targeted because of the perpetrator's belief that they were collaborators or rebels. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 830 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 883, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

2623. para. 885: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established with respect to each incident described in paragraph 883.

2624. para. 886: With respect to those incidents described in paragraph 883(i) through (iv), listed above, the Chamber is satisfied that Kamajors under the effective control of Kondewa intentionally caused the deaths of Kpana Manso, Bendeh Battiama Abu Conteh, and a woman named Jitta.

2625. para. 887: The Chamber is therefore satisfied not only that the general requirements of war crimes have been established but that the specific elements of murder have been established with respect to the killing of Kpana Manso, Bendeh Battiama, Abu Conteh, and a woman named Jitta.

2626. para. 888: The Chamber finds, however, that the evidence adduced has not established beyond a reasonable doubt that the killings described in paragraph 883(v) and (vi) occurred during the time period set out in the indictment. The Chamber finds that Kondewa is not guilty with respect to these killings.

2627. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bonthe District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions -Bonthe District - paras. 856-859 [8407], 863-866 [8411].

2628. Regarding Fofana's and Kondewa's superior responsibility in relation to Bonthe District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - CDF - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions -Bonthe District - 856 [9238], 860-863 [9239], 867-881 [9243], 882 [9258], 903 [9279].

(ix) Talia/Base Zero - Murder

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-A, Judgment, 28 May 2008

(a) Factual Findings

2635. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

2636. para. 112: In relation to the attacks on Tongo, the Appeals Chamber, Justice King dissenting, upholds the Trial Chamber's convictions of Kondewa and Fofana, pursuant to Article 6(1), of aiding and abetting violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4 respectively).

2637. para. 113: In relation to the attacks on Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District, the Appeals Chamber upholds the Trial Chamber's acquittals of Kondewa and Fofana, pursuant to Article 6(1), of violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4, respectively) as well as pillage, a violation of Article 3.a. common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute (Count 5).

2638. para. 114: The Appeals Chamber dismisses the Prosecution's Third and Fourth Grounds of Appeal and dismisses, Justice King dissenting, Kondewa's Fourth Ground of Appeal.

2639. See below: Partially dissenting Opinion of Justice King, paras, 81 – 94 [8485] regarding Kondewa's criminal responsibility, Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Responsibility).

2640. para. 203: Having found that the death of the Town Commander was not proved beyond reasonable doubt, the Appeals Chamber comes to the conclusion that the Trial Chamber was in error in finding that the Town Commander was killed by the Kamajors as alleged in the Indictment.

2641. para. 204: The Appeals Chamber grants Kondewa's Second Ground of Appeal.

[110] Taylor Indictment, para. 5.

2644. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, committed widespread acts of sexual violence against civilian women and girls, including the following:[111]

> i. Kono District: Between 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations, including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Wondedu, and AFRC and/or RUF camps, such as "Superman Ground," "Guinea Highway," and "PC Ground"; abducted an unknown number of women and girls from various locations within the District, or brought them from locations outside the District, and used them as sex slaves;[112]
> ii. Kailahun District: Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations throughout Kailahun District; abducted many victims from other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought them to locations throughout the District and used them as sex slaves;[113]
>
> iii. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 2002, raped and unknown number of women and girls throughout Freetown and the Western area, and abducted an unknown number of women and girls and used them as sex slaves.[114]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District – Crimes

2645. para. 877: The Indictment alleges that between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998 members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian Fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused, raped an unknown number of women and girls at various locations throughout Kono District including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Wondedu and AFRC and/or RUF camps such as "Superman Ground", "Guinea Highway" and "PC

[113] Taylor Indictment, para. 16.

Ground".[2306] The Trial Chamber will not consider instances of rape in locations that have not been specifically pleaded in the Indictment for findings of guilt,[2307] although this evidence has been considered in relation to the chapeau requirements.

2646. para. 878: In arriving at its factual findings in Kono District, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses Gibril Sesay, Finda Gbamanja, Corinne Dufka, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Alex Tamba Teh, TF1-375, Isaac Mongor, Alice Pyne and TF1-189 in addition to relevant documentary evidence in P-073, P-336 and P-078.

a. Evidence of widespread rape in Kono District – Kono District – Crimes

2647. para. 879: In her expert report,[2308] Prosecution expert witness Beth Vann reported that an estimated 500,000 refugees fled from the conflict in Liberia and Sierra Leone into Guinea in 1998-1999. The report did not specify precisely the numbers of Liberian refugees or of Sierra Leonean refugees. Sierra Leonean refugees fled from the RUF and AFRC forces in approximately March to April 1998. They were primarily from the Kono and Kailahun Districts and arrived in camps along the border in neighbouring Guinea. Another "large group of Sierra Leoneans sought refuge in Guinea from the January 1999 joint AFRC/RUF attack of Freetown".[2309] The largest concentration of camps was in the Gueckedou-Kissidougou prefectures, just across the border from the Kono and Kailahun Districts of Sierra Leone. The refugees described atrocities committed by armed groups, including the RUF and AFRC, in Kono and Kailahun Districts. These atrocities included war-related sexual violence.[2310]

2648. para. 880: Vann is a master's level social worker with 25 years experience in health and social services. Since 1996 her work focused on sexual and gender based violence against women and children in populations affected by armed conflict. She interviewed approximately 60 victims of sexual violence during the course of her work in Guinea in 1998-1999 and reported: "[g]irls as young as 13 and women up to age 55 described having been abducted while fleeing fighting or gathering food or firewood, and then raped, often repeatedly, and often by several men. Some were held for only a day, others were held for two months before they were able to escape. All described seeing many other captives who were also raped, forced to serve as 'wives' (cooking, cleaning and used for sex)".[2311] She reported that during the year she worked in Guinea, several times a month 13-20 year old girls would arrive at one of the camps and most would eventually disclose that they have been abducted and held as sexual slaves or "wives", and had been repeatedly raped by one or more combatants. Eighty-four percent of those interviewed were able to identify their attackers; the RUF was "clearly…the perpetrator in the majority of sexual violence incidents reported". Other named armed groups or "rebels" were also named.[2312]

2649. para. 881: Vann also conducted focus group sessions with groups of refugee men, women and adolescent girls taken from a total of 110 people living in three camps comprised exclusively of refugees from Kono and Kailahun Districts who fled in the first half of 1998. She states, "All of the participants described witnessing at least one public rape of a civilian female in or near their home town/village just before flight or during the time they were running to refuge in Guinea. Approximately one-third of the women participants disclosed that they themselves had been sexually assaulted – some with weapons or other objects inserted into the vagina, others forced to perform oral sex. Most participants identified the attackers as "rebels" or "RUF" or "Junta". "Many indicated that it was sometimes impossible to know for sure which faction the group belonged to" but later studies showed 40% of rape attackers were RUF. Notably, all participants disclosed that they knew of at least one woman or girl from their community who had been taken by the 'rebels' and was never seen again".[2313]

2650. para. 882: Vann reported that in "the middle to late 1998 and beyond", a group of medical personnel reported to her that there were very high rates of sexually transmitted infections, unwanted pregnancies due to sexual violence, and large numbers of women/girls with traumatic injuries in the genital and anal areas.[2314] Vann reported that, as a consequence of war-related sexual violence among the 60 victims she interviewed, the primary concern related to their mental health. They exhibited signs of post-traumatic stress disorder; most were socially isolated and expressed feelings of shame, anger and depression and feared stigmatisation, rejection and retribution. Many feared others would find out what had happened to them. They also suffered from sexually transmitted diseases.[2315] Based on reports and interviews Vann concluded that war-related sexual violence among the refugee population in Guinea was underreported due to fears of stigma and rejection, and the lack of assistance services.[2316]

2651. para. 883: Vann reported that some women and girls who were abducted remained with their captors. Based on reports and her research she concluded that the reasons for this included a belief that they had no choice once they had children and particularly economic dependence, identification with the abductor, drug addiction, more desirable food options reportedly available in the bush, fear of rejection by their families and communities, and customisation to their new way of life and surrogate families were also factors.[2317]

2652. para. 884: Vann's observations are mirrored by an Amnesty International Report, entitled "Sierra Leone, 1998 – a year of atrocities against civilians", which documents that as the AFRC and RUF rebels were pursued eastwards by ECOMOG forces to towns including Koidu from February through April 1998, the rebels were responsible for widespread rape and other forms of sexual assault and abduction.[2318] Similarly, Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) reported that "[a]ccording to the patients, the civilian population of Kono is terrorised by various armed groups, who have been carrying out executions, mutilations, rapes and kidnappings. Attacks are reported to be very systematic, with groups of people rounded up and killed, wounded, or raped, one by one".[2319]

b. Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

2653. para. 886: The Prosecution submits that following the ECOMOG Intervention of February 1998, retreating AFRC/RUF forces travelled to Kono District, specifically Koidu Town. "Their pattern of terror by committing widespread rapes reached unprecedented levels in February, March and April 1998".[2320] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Prosecution witnesses Gibril Sesay, TF1-189 and Finda Gbamanja in relation to these allegations.

i. Evidence of Rape upon the Capture of Koidu Town – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

2654. para. 887: Witness Gibril Sesay testified that after the ECOMOG Intervention, rebels arrived in Koidu Town.[2321] The witness stated that when the rebels arrived, they began looting and raping civilians.[2322] He learned about the rapes when he went to the hospital and spoke to Dr Gborie as well as some of the women who explained what had happened to them.[2323]

2655. para. 888: The Trial Chamber cannot make findings on this evidence without further information regarding the perpetrators and circumstances of the rapes alleged, however, the evidence demonstrates that rape was widespread in Koidu Town and may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

ii. Rape of Finda Gbamanja – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

2656. para. 889: In February 1998, witness Finda Gbamanja, her parents and siblings lived in Koidu Town.[2324] Gbamanja testified that she was captured with her family by Peppe, a rebel in Superman's group,[2325] in Baima Town where they were hiding.[2326] After having been taken to Koidu Town by the rebels, she was detained by Peppe despite "his colleague" telling him that she was "a small girl".[2327] Her parents interceded and sought her release but Peppe beat her mother and killed her father.[2328] That night, Peppe took Gbamanja to Koidu Town. On the way, a rebel named "Sergeant Foday" who also was a member of Superman's group,[2329] fought Peppe for possession of Gbamanja. Peppe threatened to kill Gbamanja so that neither could have her. Another rebel, named "Well Man", intervened and "awarded" Gbamanja to Peppe.[2330] Peppe later took her to his house and "slept" with her. She testified that he raped her causing her to bleed and be so weak that she could not stand.[2331]

2657. para. 890: Subsequently, Peppe took Gbamanja to his sister Hawa's "place" where she found many other "wives of rebels" who had been trained as fighters.[2332] She was forced to work. Hawa sent Gbamanja and two other girls to search for vegetables.[2333] Gbamanja stated that while she was harvesting pepper Sergeant Foday met her, threatened her and, under duress, she followed him to his house close to the Opera in Koidu Town.[2334] She stated, "I was there as his wife", and that "I was there for some time",[2335] which she explained meant that Sergeant Foday had sex with her every night.[2336] Gbamanja testified that she did not "volunteer" to have sex with Sergeant Foday but "had no option" but to do so.[2337] She remained at Koidu Town until it was attacked by ECOMOG. She then travelled with Sergeant Foday to Superman Ground.[2338] She could not specify how long she was with Sergeant Foday.

2658. para. 891: The witness did not know her age at the time of the incident[2339] but she had not yet started her menses.[2340] Gbamanja was able to recall that she was captured after Johnny Paul Koroma was overthrown from power in Freetown[2341] on or about 14 February 1998[2342] as she had heard that over the radio.[2343] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the crimes took place during the Indictment period.

2659. para. 892: The Defence challenged several aspects of Gbamanja's testimony as compared with her prior statements.[2344] She was not challenged on her evidence that she was raped by Peppe and Sergeant Foday. The witness explained the inconsistencies highlighted by the Defence as errors of transcription.[2345] The Trial Chamber considers that these inconsistencies are immaterial to the substance of Gbamanja's testimony of the rapes. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Gbamanja's testimony of the rapes she suffered is reliable.

iii. Rape of TF1-189 – Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

2660. para. 895: TF1-189 testified that she was raped by five male "rebels" whose ages ranged, in her estimation, from 15-25 years in the living room of a house in a village in Kono in March 1998. Other villagers were outside on the veranda.[2346] The witness testified to similar rapes of other girls and young women on preceding days in a house with the door open and people gathered on the veranda.[2347] She stated "… they do it deliberately for us to see what they are doing".[2348]

2661. para. 896: She was then abducted by the five rebels and brought into Koidu Town to their "boss Superman" and offered to him as a wife. When he rejected her she was taken to a hall where other people were held.[2349] Following an attempted escape and recapture she was held in a house with 13 other girls.[2350] She remained there from approximately mid-March 1998 to August 1998.[2351] At this house she and other girls were forced to work and she had to be a "wife" to the person who brought her and to other men. She explained that she had to have sexual intercourse with men at "any time anyone can just…".[2352] TF1-189 explained that this meant that she had sexual intercourse with these men.[2353] She named several SLA, Junta and RUF perpetrators including one referred to as Commander A in private session.[2354]

2662. para. 897: TF1-189 testified that five other females who stayed in the same compound were similarly forced to be "wives" to their captors.[2355] She never refused to have sexual intercourse with her captors because she was afraid of the consequences. She was forbidden to leave the compound under threat of death.[2356]

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

2663. para. 899: The Prosecution submits that AFRC and RUF forces settled in Tombodu in or about March 1998, with Mohamed Savage as commander, and that rapes were committed.[2357] The Trial Chamber has examined the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Perry Kamara and Sahr Bindi in relation to allegations of rape in Tombodu during this period.

2664. para. 900: Perry Kamara provided evidence regarding the practice of having "wives" in Tombodu.[2358] His evidence is insufficient to prove the elements of the crime of rape, but may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

2665. para. 901: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that "many" young women between the ages of 8 and 15 were captured by AFRC and RUF fighters in Kono District. The witness stated, "[w]e captured them, so whatever they did we were forcing them to do it because we had guns" and explained that this meant "we had sex with them" and some became pregnant.[2359] The witness testified that the young women lived with various SLA and RUF commanders and that some of the commanders made them into their "wives". The witness explained that he had captured a young girl in Kono District who stayed with him. He did not marry the girl he had captured. Alimamy Bobson Sesay further testified that the young women cooked, laundered and helped to pound rice in addition to having sexual intercourse with the commanders, both senior and junior.[2360]

2666. para. 902: Alimamy Bobson Sesay stated that this conduct occurred between March and June 1998 and that it occurred in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu Town, Bumpe, Tombodu and Yengema.[2361]

2667. para. 903: Witness Sahr Bindi testified that he was captured by AFRC/RUF soldiers[2362] and taken to Tombodu in around April 1998.[2363] Bindi testified that while he and two other men were tied to a mango tree, he saw a Limba woman named Sia Lappia, a suckling mother with a child strapped on her back, being "brought" to Staff Alhaji who was on the veranda of a house.[2364] Staff Alhaji told her to take the child off her back and when she was "reluctant" and "refused" he then pointed a gun at Lappia's ear. Bindi watched as the woman put down her child and was forced to take off her clothes at gunpoint. He saw Staff Alhaji hit Lappia on her genitals and then have sex with her.[2365]

d. Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

2668. para. 906: The Prosecution submits that rape was also widespread in Wondedu.[2366] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Alex Tamba Teh in relation to this incident.

2669. para. 907: Teh testified that at some time after the Intervention, he and fellow villagers were captured by armed men, some in military uniform and some in "ordinary trousers" under the command of Rocky and Rambo.[2367] Teh was taken by Rocky to Wondedu.[2368] There the witness heard women screaming at night and heard them say "[y]ou have not married me, now you want to use me as your wife". He often spoke to these women the next day. He described a conversation in which one woman, Rebecca, told him that women had been abducted at gun point and forced to have sex with their captors. She stated, "They […] bring us, use us, use – forcefully sex us". The witness concluded that "this was the time I realised that they were being raped".[2369]

e. AFRC and/or RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

2670. para. 909: The Prosecution submits that on or about April 1998, the AFRC/RUF lost control of Koidu Town, but retained bases in Kono District, including Superman Ground, Guinea Highway and PC Ground. The Prosecution further submits that Isaac Mongor, SLA, STF and RUF fighters captured civilians and brought them to the bases where women captives had sex with fighters under coercive circumstances.[2370]

2671. para. 910: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Isaac Mongor, Finda Gbamanja, TF1-375 and Alice Pyne in relation to allegations at AFRC and RUF camps in Kono District during this period.

i. Superman Ground – AFRC and/or RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

2672. para. 911: Witness Isaac Mongor, a high ranking RUF commander, testified that armed members of the RUF, SLA, and STF including the witness himself would take civilian women to "Superman Ground" as wives.[2371] Mongor explained that "to take as […] wife" meant "they will take them to go and sleep with them, to use them, to have sex with them".[2372] A captured civilian woman "had no choice. You were under the sole control of the gunman and the gunman was going to take you as his wife".[2373]

2673. para. 912: Finda Gbamanja, who was abducted and taken to Kono, testified that after staying in Sergeant Foday's house, AFRC/RUF members including Sergeant Foday and Peppe, took her and other captured civilians to Superman Ground in Meiyor when ECOMOG attacked Koidu Town.[2374] Gbamanja testified that at Superman Ground, she and a captured boy stayed with Sergeant Foday "for a long time" and that Sergeant Foday "used to have sex with" her.[2375] She testified that she never agreed to have sex with Sergeant Foday but that "there was no option".[2376] Sergeant Foday sent her to "Mamie's house" when his wife Fatty came from Kailahun. Fatty was jealous and fought Gbamanja but Sergeant Foday continued to have sex with Gbamanja at Mamie's house "whenever he needed [her] to have sex".[2377] Gbamanja testified that she was with Foday for "a long time" and at Mamie's house "for some time again".[2378]

ii. Guinea Highway – AFRC and/or RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

2674. para. 915: The Prosecution did not adduce any evidence of rape at the AFRC/RUF camp called "Guinea Highway" in Kono District.

iii. PC Ground – AFRC and/or RUF Camps – Kono District – Crimes

2675. para. 916: TF1-375 testified that when the AFRC/RUF rebels retreated to PC Ground after being forced out of Koidu Town by ECOMOG, women and girls were taken by the rebels to PC Ground. The witness further testified that "[a]ll women had men. All of them had their husbands … they were with them as wives".[2379] When asked to clarify the meaning of the term "wife" as used by the witness, TF1-375 explained that "[w]hen you captured somebody, whether she was willing or not when you want her you would make her your wife, so forcibly or willingly she has to become a wife for you have to become the wife [of] whoever liked you".[2380] TF1-375 elaborated that there was no ceremony involved, "[t]he only ceremony is to go and sleep",[2381] meaning that RUF rebels had sexual intercourse with abducted women and girls.[2382] The Trial Chamber finds that this evidence is insufficient to establish the elements of the crime of rape, but that it may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

2676. para. 917: Alice Pyne testified that AFRC/RUF fighters at PC Ground would capture civilians, men, women, and children. Fighters would take women away, bring them to the base and turn the women into their wives.[2383] Pyne explained that "they would sleep together".[2384] When questioned as to whether women volunteered to become wives of the combatants, Pyne answered no.[2385] Although this evidence suggests that involuntary sexual intercourse occurred, the Trial Chamber finds that it does not establish the elements of the crime of rape. However, this evidence may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

2677. para. 918: Mongor also testified that at PC Ground civilian women would be taken to be the wives of the gunmen, members of the RUF, AFRC and STF and that captured civilian women had "no choice".[2386] The witness further clarified that the wording "to take as […] wife" meant "they will take them to go and sleep with them, to use with them, to have sex with them".[2387] Mongor testified that he had taken a civilian woman as a "wife" at that time at PC Ground and stated "I did not give any money for her, I did not ask her parents, so I take her as my wife too".[2388] Mongor's evidence shows that he and other RUF, AFRC and STF members had sex with captured women who had "no choice".[2389]

f. Rape of Sia Kamara – Kono District – Crimes

2678. para. 920: Witness Sia Kamara, whose testimony in the RUF trial was received pursuant to Rule 92*bis*, was cross-examined in the present trial on 15 October 2008. In her prior testimony Kamara testified that she, her husband and his younger brother fled Tongo when it was attacked by Kamajors. They fled to Segbwema, Bunumbu, and Gandorhun and arrived in Kainako, Kono "Chiefdom" in the dry season. Two days later they fled to the bush when they were informed by other civilians that Kamajors "who had transformed into soldiers/rebels" had entered Koidu. Kamara explained that she meant that "they ran away from Kamajors", but later they were told that "it was now rebels and not Kamajors again".[2390] On cross-examination, she explained that she had encountered civilians fleeing from Koidu Town who told her that Kamajors had entered Koidu Town.[2391] Kamara testified that the bush she fled to was close to Yegbema,[2392] about two and a half miles from Gandorhun and about one and a half miles from Kainako.[2393]

2679. para. 921: Approximately three weeks later, Kamara saw about seven vehicles passing by. She "heard" that it was Johnny Paul Koroma heading towards the "Guinea end". She saw the same vehicles "coming towards Koidu end" about a week later.[2394] On cross-examination, Kamara confirmed that she first saw Johnny Paul Koroma after the ECOMOG Intervention, when the AFRC and RUF were driven out of Freetown and he passed through the area where she was living. He was disguised as a woman.[2395]

2681. para. 923: Kamara testified that while her husband was away finding food, she was discovered by two "rebels". The first was wearing a soldier's uniform and was armed with a gun. The second was wearing civilian clothing with combat khaki trousers and was armed with a stick with red cloth tied to it. The rebel with the gun pointed it at Kamara and ordered her to undress and lie down, which she did. He raped her. Kamara was unable to refuse due to the coercive circumstances. As this was happening, a third rebel, also armed with a stick, arrived. The other two rebels stood by as the rape occurred. After the first rebel raped her, Kamara was raped by "the other one". She testified that she did not agree to have sex with him, but the rebel with the gun was standing by them so she could not fight. After she had been raped by the second rebel, she was raped by the third. Kamara testified that these rapes happened in the "middle of the forest in the open".[2397]

2682. para. 924: After the three rapes, the rebels took Kamara "into the hills" where she saw a number of other civilians who had been captured, some of whom she recognised. She and the other civilians were given loads to carry to Sawoa while the rebels walked in front and behind them. Kamara testified that she thought the rebels were going to kill her and could not think of escaping. Kamara estimates that it was over two and a half miles to Sawoa which was in the Kono "area".[2398]

2683. para. 925: In Sawoa, Kamara heard the rebels address a man as "Lieutenant T" and heard him say that ECOMOG had captured Kailahun Town and Kono, that they were going to "show them that we own the country" and that it was now Operation No Living Thing. Lieutenant T ordered the rebels to kill the civilians.[2399] The Trial Chamber has found that the AFRC forces lost control of Kono District in April 1998.[2400]

2684. para. 926: Kamara testified that the rebels asked one of the captured civilians about Kamajors and Kabbah. When the civilian replied that she knew nothing, the rebels beat the civilians. Kamara testified that a boy of approximately 14 years brought a mortar and cut off the right hands of all the captured men, five in total, including Kamara's brother, who was seated next to her. After the five men had their hands amputated, Kamara was also struck on the upper arm. The rebels then separated out the young "virgins" from the women and took them away.[2401]

2685. para. 927: Kamara testified that the rebels took her and the remaining captured women, six in total, in the direction of Benguema Fiama. Some of the rebels were armed with guns and some with sticks. At Fall Road, the rebels ordered the women to undress and lie down, which they did. Kamara thought that the rebels were going to kill them. A rebel with a gun undressed and had sex with her. She was unable to refuse. There were many other rebels standing by. Then another rebel, armed with a stick, also had sex with her. When he had finished, he took the stick and shoved it into her vagina. Kamara testified that she experienced great pain and bleeding and that she continued to feel pain at the time of her testimony some years later. Kamara testified that she then heard another rebel say that the women were to be killed.[2402] She then fled to a swamp, where she spent the night. She was bleeding and became unconscious. The following day, she was able to find her husband and three days later, she was brought to Connaught Hospital in Freetown by ECOMOG. She testified that she remained there "until the time the rebels entered Freetown".[2403]

2686. para. 928: On cross-examination, Kamara admitted that she could not distinguish between the SLA and RUF, and that she considered anyone who was carried a gun and who "terrorised" civilians was a rebel.[2404] She insisted, however, that she was captured by "rebels" and not Kamajors and testified that the persons who captured her threatened to amputate her hand because they suspected her of being a Kamajor or a Kamajor supporter. She was unable to say who Lieutenant T's "boss" was but testified that the rebels said they had come from Freetown and were heading for Fiama. She stated that the men spoke Krio, Mende and "Liberian".[2405] By "Liberian" Kamara clarified that she heard them use the phrase "My meh, let's go" which she testified is the way Liberian people speak.[2406]

(ii) Kailahun District – Crimes

2687. para. 933: The Indictment alleges that between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002 members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian Fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused, raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations throughout Kailahun District.[2408]

2689. para. 935: Witnesses Mustapha Mansaray, Perry Kamara, Isaac Mongor, Issa Sesay, TF1-168, TF1-375, Edna Bangura and DCT-068 gave evidence relevant to allegations of rape in Kailahun District, in addition to Exhibits P-073, P-078, P-077 and P-277.

2690. para. 936: In 1998, Amnesty International reported that "[i]n those areas of the country which remained under the control of rebel forces thousands of civilians, including women and children, effectively remained captive, many of them in Kailahun District, a stronghold of the RUF since the beginning of the internal armed conflict. Some estimates put this number as high as 10,000. They were used to carry goods, as human shields or for sexual slavery".[2409] Expert

Witness Vann reported that a majority of rape victims from Sierra Leone that she interviewed in Gueckedou Camp in Guinea named the perpetrators as members of the AFRC/RUF or "rebels".[2410]

2691. para. 937: Expert witness TF1-150 documented human rights abuses in Sierra Leone from May 1998 through 2000. This witness had published a report by July 1998 which documented that "rebels" were holding large numbers of civilian captives, including women and girls who were being used for forced sexual activity, in various areas of Sierra Leone, but mostly in Kailahun District.[2411]

2692. para. 938: TF1-174 worked at an interim care centre in Makeni where captured girls were provided with assistance. TF1-174 stated that the girls at the centre had been captured from districts including Kailahun District. The girls that TF1-174 worked with had been raped and turned into "wives" of RUF commanders. One girl was said to have been a "wife" of Issa Sesay. She was 14 or 15 years old.[2412]

2693. para. 939: While this evidence is not sufficiently specific to prove any individual instances of rape, it demonstrates that rape was committed on both a widespread and systematic basis in Kailahun District.

a. Rape of women by the RUF throughout Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

2694. para. 940: Witness Isaac Mongor testified that he would visit Kailahun District at unspecified times.[2413] Mongor stated that RUF fighters used captured women in Kailahun District for sexual purposes and some were trained as soldiers.[2414]

2696. para. 942: Issa Sesay testified that rape was not allowed and that rape was punishable by death.[2417] Sesay testified that he did not hear about or see rape in Kailahun from 1992 through disarmament.[2418] Sesay stated that he did hear about rape occurring in other parts of Sierra Leone, but said that actions were taken against the perpetrators.[2419]

2697. para. 943: DCT-068, who had been a member of the RUF from August 1992,[2420] was in Kailahun District from 1992 to 1998.[2421] The witness testified that he had never seen women being raped and that anyone in the RUF who committed rape would be disciplined.[2422] He further testified that women were not assigned to commanders and only women combatants would be assigned work in a particular area. DCT-068 gave the example of Sam Bockarie, and explained that if Bockarie wanted a woman for love, he would talk to that woman in respect of love[2423] and stated that the RUF members could not force anyone to have any kind of relationship with them.[2424] However, DCT-068 also stated that "in that situation because of fear certain people accept certain things because they want their life to be saved".[2425] DCT-068 conceded that he had never seen an RUF commander in an area where the RUF had taken control approach women to offer their love,[2426] but he also stated he had received no complaints about rape in his capacity as a G5,[2427] responsible for civilians.[2428]

2699. para. 945: Witness Edna Bangura testified that she was captured from her school in Masingbi, Tonkolili District in 1994.[2429] At the time, she was 10 years old.[2430] Bangura testified that an RUF patrol commander named "CO Blood"[2431] took her to Buedu where she was forced to remain until November or December 1998.[2432]

2700. para. 946: Bangura testified that shortly after arriving in Buedu in 1994, she was assigned to stay with a rebel commander named CO Scorpion and his wife, Hawa.[2433] She was assigned to a small girls unit.[2434] She did domestic chores for Hawa.[2435] Bangura's testimony is inconsistent as to how long she stayed with Hawa, stating at one point that it was less than a year and at another point, that it was many years.[2436] However, Bangura stated that she stayed with Hawa after CO Scorpion left for Freetown, and that she left Buedu with Hawa, following the fighters.[2437] Bangura testified that when she went to Makeni, she was still with Hawa.[2438]

2701. para. 947: Bangura testified as to two specific rapes being committed against her in Buedu prior to 30 November 1996.[2439] Both instances of rape were perpetrated by CO Ray,[2440] who Bangura stated, "…raped me. He forced me. He forced me into sex" but these instances occurred before the Indictment period.

2702. para. 948: Bangura testified that women would be captured by fighters when they went to the war front and that these women became "wives" or would stay with fighters as either house help or as bodyguards.[2441]

2703. para. 949: Bangura also testified that CO Musa was her husband in Buedu after CO Ray died.[2442] She did not provide any details during her direct examination as to the length or nature of her relationship with CO Musa other than that he was her husband. On cross-examination, when asked for how long she was CO Musa's "wife", Bangura explained,

> No, I cannot tell now. Like I am saying, if it was like when I am at this age now that such a thing happened to me I would have been able to tell you the exact particulars, but at that time I was a small child. I was not mature enough to be thinking about or remembering a whole lot of things. I was a small child at that time.[2443]

2704. para. 950: The Defence challenged the witness on a record of an interview with the Prosecution which records her as saying, "CO Musa was killed some time in 1994 during one of the attacks, after which the witness was raped by one CO Ali, an RUF rebel. The witness was taken as a wife by CO Ali, and not CO Musa".[2444]

2705. para. 951: During her cross-examination before this Trial Chamber, Bangura stated that CO Ali and CO Musa was the same person. It was only when Defence counsel confronted the witness with exhibits and testimony in a prior case before the Special Court for Sierra Leone which indicated that CO Ali and CO Musa were different people did the witness agree,[2445] stating that counsel's question confused her.[2446]

2706. para. 952: Issa Sesay testified that Bangura could not have been taken to Buedu from 1994 to 1998 because the NPRC, not the RUF, controlled Buedu from October/November 1993 until April 1995.[2447] Sesay further testified that people were not brought from Kangari Hills to Kailahun until the AFRC coup in 1997.[2448]

2707. para. 953: Issa Sesay's testimony on this point is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-168 and by Exhibit P-277.

b. Rape of women in Buedu that were abducted in Kenema in the wake of "Operation Pay Yourself" – Kailahun District – Crimes

2708. para. 955: The Prosecution submits that "[i]n February 1998, when 'Operation Pay Yourself' was declared by Sam Bockarie in Kenema, more than 400 civilians […] were abducted and taken to Daru in Kailahun District".[2449] The Prosecution further submits that "these abducted women were taken to Buedu and forced to have sex with their captors".[2450]

2709. para. 956: The Trial Chamber has considered the testimony of Augustine Mallah and Aruna Gbonda in making its findings.

2710. para. 957: Witness Augustine Mallah testified that when the AFRC and RUF left Kenema District in February 1998,2451 they captured civilians, including beautiful women who were held against their will and would become "wives".[2452] He estimated that more than 400 civilians were captured and taken to locations controlled by the AFRC and RUF throughout Kailahun District, including Kailahun Town, Pendembu and Dodo.[2453] The AFRC and RUF also brought civilians who had been previously captured and who had been with the troops for some time.[2454] Mallah testified that he went to Buedu with Sam Bockarie, RUF and AFRC troops and most of the captured civilians.[2455]

2711. para. 958: Mallah testified that he found his niece, Aminata, who was approximately 13 years old, in Daru.[2456] She told him that she had been captured by an "RUF boy" called Ibrahim in Kenema, who had sex with her and told her that she was going to be his "wife".[2457] Mallah took his niece away from Ibrahim.[2458]

2712. para. 959: Mallah stayed in Buedu for approximately two months.[2459] Both the AFRC and RUF were in Buedu and everyone reported to Bockarie.[2460] Mallah testified that the captured civilians in Buedu were there to cook and to have sexual intercourse with the AFRC and RUF soldiers who captured them.[2461] Mallah did not witness women refusing sexual intercourse, and stated that the women were forced by their captors to have sex.[2462]

2713. para. 960: Witness Aruna Gbonda testified that after Tejan Kabba had been reinstated,[2463] which was in March 1998,[2464] he saw that Mosquito and the other rebels came to Kailahun District from Kenema District with male and female civilians.[2465] The captured civilians included adult women and girls who were from Kenema.[2466] The women were taken to Kailahun Town and other villages.[2467] When the rebels and the civilians arrived in Kailahun Town, food was scarce and Gbonda stated that they would ask him where they could find bananas.[2468] When Gbonda spoke to the women and girls, they said that the rebels under Mosquito and Issa Sesay had forcefully captured them and that when they were dislodged from Freetown, some were brought by the rebels to Buedu and some to Kailahun Town.[2469] The women told Gbonda that the rebels had turned them into their wives and "put them into their homes forcefully".[2470]

Gbonda stated that there were many captured women and girls, and that he had personally spoken to about twenty.[2471]

c. Rape after February 1998 of captured women in Buedu from March to December 1999 – Kailahun District – Crimes

2715. para. 963: Witness Dennis Koker testified that he left Koidu Town in February 1998 and went to Kailahun District together with Issa Sesay, Eldred Collins and others.[2472] He passed through Gandorhun,[2473] Magburaka[2474] Mendeburma, Mendelaema, Manowa, and was sent to the front lines in Jokibu.[2475] He arrived in Buedu approximately one month after the ECOMOG Intervention.[2476] Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. "Mosquito"), was in charge in Buedu. Members of the RUF and AFRC were also present including Johnny Paul Koroma, Edward P. Kanneh, Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and others.[2477]

2716. para. 964: Mosquito made Koker a Military Policeman (MP) and then an adjutant at the MP office, in which capacity he issued passes to civilians and soldiers.[2478] Koker testified that civilians captured in Masiaka, Makeni and Koidu were brought to Buedu.[2479] A pass and screening system through the MP Office was in place to count and manage the captured civilians in Buedu and to prevent them from escaping.[2480]

2717. para. 965: Koker testified that many women were captured by the RUF and AFRC and detained in Buedu and that "they would marry them without paying bride prices".[2481] Sometimes, commanders would come to Koker's office with women and ask him to "confine" them because they had "overlooked" i.e. been disrespectful. The commanders would ask Koker to "confirm" or charge the women. Koker left Buedu on 16 December 1999, the day after Sam Bockarie left for Liberia.[2482] During the entire time he was at the MP office, he believes there may have been up to 1,300 civilians captured, including men, women and children.[2483]

d. TF1-189 raped by RUF members in Kailahun Town – Kailahun District – Crimes

2718. para. 967: TF1-189, whom the Trial Chamber has found was captured by RUF/AFRC rebels in Kono District in March 1998 and raped in Koidu Town by Commander A (named by the witness in closed session) and other RUF rebels from March through August 1998,[2484]

testified that she was taken by the rebels and "SLA Juntas" to Kailahun Town when Koidu Town was attacked by ECOMOG. The overall leader of the group that left was an RUF commander named Superman.[2485]

2719. para. 968: TF1-189 testified that they arrived in Kailahun Town in August 1998, during the rainy season and remained there less than two months until September 1998. TF1-189 was forced to stay with a commander named Gogomeh, together with five other female captives and four rebels.[2486] TF1-189 testified that during this time, she and the other captured women and girls were forced to cook, wash the rebel's clothes and were "wives".[2487] In private session, TF1-189 testified that Commander A also continued to have sex with her in Kailahun Town.[2488]

2720. para. 969: In September, TF1-189 left Kailahun Town because it was being attacked by ECOMOG jets. She went to another location in Kailahun District together with 40 captives and a rebel.[2489] TF1-189 revealed the location in private session.[2490]

(iii) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2721. para. 973: The Indictment alleges that between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused "raped an unknown number of women and girls throughout Freetown and the Western area".[2492] The Prosecution further submits that rape was an intrinsic element of the "reign of terror" unleashed by the AFRC and RUF when they entered Freetown on 6 January 1999,[2493] and that rape was a standard practice of the rebels as they advanced towards and attacked Freetown.[2494]

2722. para. 974: The Prosecution led evidence of acts of rape occurring in the Western area outside of Freetown.[2495] In arriving at its factual findings in Freetown, the Trial Chamber has examined the testimony of Perry Kamara, James Kpumgbu, Abu Bakarr Mansaray, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, TF1-085, TF1-028, Ibrahim Wai and TF1-083, TF1-029 and TF1-023 in addition to relevant documentary evidence.

a. Rape in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2723. para. 975: Witnesses Perry Kamara and James Kpumgbu provided evidence that rape occurred as part of the January 1999 Freetown attack without providing details about the victims, perpetrators or the specific circumstances.[2496] TF1-358, a doctor, testified that a number of female patients, mostly from Freetown, narrated histories of rape during January 1999 by "rebels" to him.[2497] Histories included "gang rape" and rape in front of husbands and relatives[2498] in various locations including Freetown.[2499] Reports from organisations such as Human Rights Watch,[2500] Amnesty International,[2501] FAWE,[2502] UNOMSIL[2503] and experts[2504] also provide evidence of widespread rape and sexual abuse occurring as part of the Freetown invasion in January 1999. The evidence contained in the documentary evidence is hearsay and/or not sufficiently specific to prove any individual act of rape.[2505] However, as the evidence demonstrates that rape was widespread throughout Freetown in the Indictment period, it may be relevant as corroboration for specific incidents of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber. The evidence has been considered for the chapeau requirement that the crimes be widespread or systematic.

i. State House – Rape in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2724. para. 976: The Prosecution submits that while AFRC and RUF fighters were based at the State House, commanders forced young girls aged 14 to 16 to have sexual intercourse with them.[2506] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses Abu Bakarr Mansaray and Alimamy Bobson Sesay in relation to rapes allegedly taking place in the State House area.

2725. para. 977: Witness Abu Bakarr Mansaray, whose testimony in the AFRC trial was tendered into evidence through Rule 92*bis*, was cross-examined in this trial on 29 October 2008. He testified that he was captured by rebels in Freetown in January 1999 and taken to State House where he was detained in a kitchen for four days.[2507] Mansaray testified that each night he was detained at State House he observed "many women" and young girls being raped outside.[2508] He was able to witness the rapes through the window, as the rebels around the State House used a lamp.[2509] Mansaray testified that he knew what he saw was rape, because all the women were crying, and some said, in Krio, "we not agree. We are small child. We are school-going girls".[2510] The victims included women and little children and the perpetrators were rebels.[2511] Mansaray did not know which faction the perpetrators belonged to.[2512] However, Mansaray testified earlier that Gullit and "his boys" had been at the State House.[2513]

2726. para. 978: Although the witness initially gave the date of his capture as January 1998, he later clarified that he meant January 1999.[2514] As it is clear that his capture occurred in the context of the January 1999 attack on Freetown, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the alleged rapes fall within the Indictment period.

2727. para. 979: Mansaray stated that he saw some of the victims being raped and sexual intercourse taking place. He also testified that he heard screaming and all of the victims crying, and the voices of some of the women and girls.[2515]

2728. para. 981: Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that after the junta captured State House on 6 January 1999, the SLA and RUF captured young girls in Freetown and brought them to State House, which had many rooms.[2516] All of the commanders captured young girls;[2517] most of the girls were aged 14 to 16. The SBUs also captured girls, aged around 8 to 9 to use for sex.[2518] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that the girls "were forced to do anything, so they accepted…to have sexual intercourse with the commanders".[2519]

2729. para. 982: When asked in cross-examination if he raped any women between 1997 and June 2000, Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he captured a young girl and had sex with her "when we came to Freetown".[2520] As Bobson Sesay distinguished this from events in Freetown after the 1997 coup the Trial Chamber is satisfied that he is referring to the time of the 1999 Freetown attack. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that this incident falls within the Indictment period.

ii. Blackhall Road – Rape in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2730. para. 985: The Prosecution submits that when RUF and Junta fighters entered Freetown, RUF rebels brought girls aged 12 to 13 years to a house on Blackhall Road and raped them.[2521] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF1-028 in relation to the allegation.

2731. para. 986: TF1-028 testified that she was captured by Juntas in Karina,[2522] and then travelled through Rosos to Eddie Town.[2523] In Eddie Town, SAJ Musa held a meeting announcing that everyone was to go Freetown.[2524] The witness and the Juntas travelled to Benguema, where SAJ Musa died, and then continued towards Freetown.[2525] Once the group arrived in Freetown, the witness stayed at Ferry Junction for about two weeks.[2526] TF1-028 was then moved to Blackhall Road, where she was held for approximately one week and several days.[2527]

2732. para. 987: At Blackhall Road, the witness testified that the Juntas and the RUF would bring "small children", girls of about 12 to 13 years, to the house she was staying in and rape them in her presence. The witness testified that she pleaded with the RUF, but that they did not listen to her.[2528]

2733. para. 988: The witness could not remember the year that this occurred, but she remembered it was in January.2529 However, in light of her description of her journey and of SAJ Musa's death, it is clear that she is referring to the Freetown attack which occurred in January 1999.[2530] As such, the alleged rapes fall within the Indictment period.

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. Rape of girls in Kissy on or about 22 January 1999 – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2734. para. 990: The Prosecution submits that in Kissy, rebels raped girls aged 13 to 15.[2531] The Trial Chamber has considered the testimony of witness Ibrahim Wai in relation to the allegation.

2735. para. 991: Ibrahim Wai was in his family's house in Kissy around 22 January 1999[2532] when a rebel named Captain Blood[2533] and another rebel entered the house and amputated his hand.[2534] After his amputation, the rebels pushed him outside, and he went to the nearby outside toilet where he sat for some time.[2535] While he was in the toilet, he testified that he saw the rebels bringing girls, laying them outside in the open and raping them.[2536] The rebels asked the girls how old they were, and some replied that they were 13, 14 or 15.[2537] The witness testified that when the last rebel came to rape one of the girls, she said she was tired.[2538] She screamed and cried and asked "that the guy should get up away from her".[2539] The rebel then called his leader, who was a woman. This leader said if the girl did not lie down she would tell the rebel boy to kill her.[2540] After that "the boy" had sex with her.[2541] The witness testified that he was able to see what was happening, because the toilet he was in had no door, the girls were in an open place, and although it was night the area was bright because of the flames from burning houses.[2542]

c. Rape of TF1-029 in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2736. para. 993: The Prosecution submits that TF1-029 was abducted by Major Arif and taken to Calaba Town and Benguema where she was forced to have sex with him. The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF1-029.[2543]

abducted from her house in Wellington by the "RUF and the SLAs" on 22 January 1999.[2544] On cross-examination in the RUF case, she confirmed that the men who came to her house were all wearing soldier's uniforms, carried weapons and were part of a mixed group of soldiers and RUF rebels including five small boys.[2545] She was captured by an SLA soldier named "Major Arif".[2546]

2738. para. 995: The mixed group of RUF and SLA fighters brought the witness, together with 50 other civilians who were captured in the same house, to Calaba Town.[2547] The witness was held there for two weeks.[2548] The witness testified that during this time she lived in Major Arif's house together with his cousins and other RUF and SLA soldiers[2549] and was raped there by Major Arif ten times.[2550] By "rape", the witness stated that she meant he "forced me to have sex".[2551] The witness was sixteen years old when this occurred.[2552] TF1-029 further testified that she saw that the other women who were abducted were also raped.[2553]

2739. para. 996: The rebels then took the witness to Benguema.[2554] She testified that when they arrived in Benguema, she was again raped ten times by Major Arif.[2555]

2740. para. 997: TF1-029 testified that the RUF and SLAs also raped other girls while in Benguema. The witness knows this because the girls who had been captured and raped told her what had happened to them.[2556]

2741. para. 998: Major Arif permitted the witness to leave Benguema on 10 March 1999.[2557] On-cross-examination, TF1-029 insisted that the rebels were mixed RUF and SLA but that most of the people she "dealt with" were SLAs, including Colonel O-Five, Brigadier Five-Five, Colonel Tito, and Colonel Rambo. O-Five, Tito and Five-Five were in control of the soldiers from Calaba Town up to Four Mile.[2558]

d. Rape of Akiatu Tholley in Allen Town and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2742. para. 1000: The Prosecution submits that Akiatu Tholley was abducted from Wellington and raped in the Western Area.[2559] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Akiatu Tholley.

2743. para. 1001: Witness Akiatu Tholley testified that she was in Wellington when "rebels" came to her house on the night of 5 January 1999.[2560] Rebels came to her home on three subsequent occasions as detailed in the section on unlawful killings.[2561] On cross-examination,

Tholley denied a prior statement taken by the Prosecution in which she stated that the rebels came to her house for the first time on 6 January 1999, the day after they entered Wellington.[2562]

2744. para. 1002: Tholley was captured by a rebel named James. Tholley testified that James was accompanied by his "boys" whom he had captured and who carried his ammunition. James' boys gave Tholley and other captured civilians ammunition to carry and took them to Allen Town. James also had his "wives" with him.[2563] On cross-examination, Tholley testified that her cousin Amina was captured again on this occasion and that she did not see Amina again until she returned to Freetown.[2564]

2745. para. 1003: Tholley testified that James took her to the Mammy Dumbuya Church[2565] where she saw rebels raping, beating and killing many young girls, although she was not able to estimate how many.[2566] Tholley testified that she refused to have sex with James, and that he raped her and damaged her in her vagina. She had not yet had her menses. Tholley lost consciousness[2567] and when she awoke, she found herself in a small hut with an old woman who told her that "they" had brought Tholley to her and that she had treated Tholley's injuries with herbs. Tholley testified that James then arrived and killed the old woman.[2568]

2746. para. 1004: James took Tholley to Waterloo, Western Area together with his "wives" and "boys", the other rebels and other captured civilians.[2569] The group was led by Five-Five.[2570] Tholley testified that she remained with James in Waterloo for a "long time" but was unable to say how long.[2571] Tholley testified that after James captured her and raped her in the Mammy Dumbuya Church, he continued to have sex with her against her will.[2572] Tholley did not want to be his "wife".[2573]

2747. para. 1005: Tholley testified that the rebels she was with were a "mixed group" and the leader was Five-Five.[2574] James told Tholley that he belonged to the STF and ULIMO and that he had been part of the Liberian war until "the time they joined the rebels". She did not know to which group Five-Five belonged.[2575]

2748. para. 1006: The Trial Chamber finds that Tholley's evidence of her movements with the rebels is consistent with other evidence of the pattern of RUF/AFRC movements at this time. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that James was an STF member and that he captured Tholley prior to the retreat from Freetown in late January 1999 and that she remained under his control in the Western Area until early April 1999.

e. Rape of TF1-023 in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile by a member of the AFRC from late January until March, 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

2749. para. 1008: TF1-023, whose evidence in the AFRC trial was introduced through Rule 92bis, was cross-examined in the present case on 22 October 2008. She testified that she and her family sought refuge when the AFRC invaded Freetown. They moved from Cline Town, where they were living, back and forth to various places including Wellington and Portee in Eastern Freetown.[2576] On 22 January 1999, TF1-023 was in Wellington when it was attacked so she fled to Consider Lane in Calaba Town. That same afternoon, she and five or six others were captured by a group of rebels. The witness was captured by a "young boy" who was wearing combat trousers and a T-shirt and who was armed with a gun. He was part of a group of approximately 200 people, some of whom were wearing combat uniforms and others civilian clothes with head ties. They were armed with guns and cutlasses. There were also captured civilians among the group. The witness was 16 years old at the time and was not armed.[2577]

2750. para. 1009: The rebels brought TF1-023 and the other captured civilians to an unidentified location and then to Allen Town. There, they encountered a group of approximately 300-400 rebels and captured civilians. The witness and other captured civilians were prevented from escaping by the Small Boys Unit.[2578] The witness was held at Allen Town for about 3 days[2579] and was then taken by a rebel, whom she named in a Confidential Exhibit,[2580] to Calaba Town.[2581] Trial Chamber will refer to the rebel as "Captain A". The witness testified that there were approximately 50-100 rebels in Calaba Town. Some were in combat uniform and some were wearing jeans and T-shirts.[2582]

2751. para. 1010: In Calaba Town, Captain A handed TF1-023 over to a commander, whom she named in a Confidential Exhibit.[2583] The Trial Chamber will refer to the commander as "Colonel B". Captain A told the witness that she should be Colonel B's "wife" and Colonel B accepted this. Colonel B did not ask for the witness's consent. There was no marriage ceremony.[2584] That night, Colonel B threatened the witness, shouted at her and forced her to have sex with him. It was the first time she had sex. After that night, she continued to "sleep with" Colonel B.[2585]

2752. para. 1011: TF1-023 remained in Calaba Town for three days. On the third day, she and the rebels walked to Allen Town, Waterloo and then Benguema where they remained for about four days. They then continued on to Lumpa and Four Mile where they stayed for about a month.[2586] On cross-examination, the witness clarified that she remained with "the armed men" in Freetown from 22 to 29 January. She left Freetown on 29 January, and it took about two days to reach Benguema, where they spent about three days. From Benguema TF1-023 and the other captured civilians were forcefully taken to Four Mile where they stayed for approximately a month.[2587] Colonel B was not always with the witness; he joined her in Benguema and again in Four Mile. The witness does not know where he was in the interim.[2588]

2753. para. 1012: The witness lived with Colonel B for about three weeks in Four Mile, after which he left her and went to Makeni. During those three weeks, he asked her to cook, but she did not as she did not know how. During those three weeks she continued to sleep with him because he told her that she was his "wife". He never asked her consent before sex. The witness was not able to leave.[2589] There were approximately 400 armed rebels at Four Mile. Some "people" at Four Mile tried to escape but they were beaten. This made the witness afraid and she decided not to try to run away.[2590] Colonel B also had an armed guard follow her so she could not escape.[2591]

2754. para. 1013: When Colonel B left for Makeni, he left the witness in the "care of" a captain, whom the witness identified in a Confidential Exhibit.[2592] The Trial Chamber will refer to the captain as "Captain C". The witness remained in the custody of Captain C from approximately March through August.[2593]

2755. para. 1014: TF1-023 testified that the rebels she named in the exhibits told her that they were members of the AFRC. She first saw their senior commander, Brima or "Gullit" in Benguema. He was a Brigadier at the time. At Four Mile, Colonel B told her that the senior commander was "Bazzy". He used to visit Colonel B and the witness would see him regularly.[2594] On cross-examination, TF1-023 testified that a boy called Alhassan identified Bazzy to her at Four Mile, but that "everyone" told her that Bazzy was the senior commander. She did not talk with Bazzy.[2595] On cross-examination, TF1-023 testified that throughout her "journey" the rebels were a mixed group of AFRC and RUF, but that the ones she had direct contact with were all AFRC.[2596]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Crimes Against Humanity ("CAH")

2756. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – paras. 504 – 515 [1383].

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

2757. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 547 – 559 [1395].

(iii) Applicable law – Rape

2758. para. 415: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the following elements of the crime of rape must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

> (i) The non-consensual penetration, however slight, of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or by any other object used by the perpetrator, or of the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; and
> (ii) The perpetrator must have the intent to effect this sexual penetration, and the knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim.[1022]

2759. para. 416: The consent of the victim must be given voluntarily, as a result of the victim's free will, assessed in the context of the surrounding circumstances.[1023] This is necessarily a contextual assessment. However, in situations of armed conflict or detention, coercion is almost universal.[1024] Force or the threat of force provides clear evidence of non-consent, but force is not an element per se of rape and there are factors other than force which may render an act of sexual penetration non-consensual or non-voluntary on the part of the victim.[1025] 'Continuous resistance' by the victim, physical force or even threat of force by the perpetrator are not required to establish coercion.[1026] A person may be incapable of giving genuine consent if affected by natural, induced or age related incapacity.[1027] The Trial Chamber acknowledges that the very specific circumstances of an armed conflict where rapes on a large scale are alleged to have occurred, coupled with the social stigma which is borne by victims of rape in certain societies, render the restrictive test set out in the elements of the crime difficult to satisfy. Circumstantial evidence may therefore be used to demonstrate the actus reus of rape.[1028]

2760. para. 417: In addition, the Trial Chamber is guided by the provisions of Rule 96 of the Rules, which provides, in relevant part that:

> In cases of sexual violence, the Court shall be guided by and, where appropriate, apply the following principles:
>
> (i) Consent cannot be inferred by reason of any words or conduct of a victim where force, threat of force, coercion or taking advantage of a coercive environment undermined the victim's ability to give voluntary and genuine consent;

(ii) Consent cannot be inferred by reason of any words or conduct of a victim where the victim is incapable of giving genuine consent;

(iii) Consent cannot be inferred by reason of the silence of, or lack of resistance by, a victim to the alleged sexual violence.

(iv) Kono District – Rape

a. Evidence of widespread rape in Kono District – Rape

2761. para. 885: While this evidence is not sufficiently specific to prove any individual instances of rape, it demonstrates that rape was committed on a widespread basis in Kono District and may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

b. Koidu Town – Kono District – Rape

2762. para. 888: The Trial Chamber cannot make findings on this evidence without further information regarding the perpetrators and circumstances of the rapes alleged, however, the evidence demonstrates that rape was widespread in Koidu Town and may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of rape described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

2763. para. 893: Gbamanja testified that Sergeant Foday had sex with her every night and that she had no option but to comply. Considering the coercive environment, Gbamanja's young age at the time, and her testimony that Sergeant Foday threatened her and that she followed him under duress, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Sergeant Foday, a member of the RUF, intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with Gbamanja during the time that she stayed in his house and that he knew of the victim's non-consent.

2765. para. 898: Based on the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that several men who were members of the RUF/AFRC junta, including those named in closed session, intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with TF1-189. Given the coercive circumstances of captivity and threat in which these acts occurred the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators knew of TF1-189's non-consent.

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Rape

2766. para. 904: Alimamy Bobson Sesay, an SLA commander and perpetrator, provided clear and reliable evidence of how commanders captured women, forced them to have sex with commanders and of the coercive environment in which such acts took place. Based on his evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that in Tombodu between March and June 1998, commanders of the AFRC, including Alimamy Bobson Sesay, intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with an unknown number of women and that they knew of the women's non-consent.

2767. para. 905: Bindi's evidence was clear, based on direct observation and reliable. Based on this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Staff Alhaji intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with Sia Lappia and that he knew of the victim's non-consent.

d. Wondedu – Kono District – Rape

2768. para. 908: Teh clearly heard women objecting to being "used" during the night and Rebecca gave a contemporaneous account of her rape following her abduction. The Trial Chamber finds that the direct evidence of the women's protests and the words used clearly show that Rebecca and other women were forced to have sex with their captors. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that men under the command of Rocky intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with Rebecca and with an unknown number of other women, and that they knew of the victims' non-consent.

e. AFRC and/or RUF Camps – Kono District – Rape

2769. para. 913: Isaac Mongor, an RUF commander and perpetrator, provided clear and reliable evidence of how captured civilian women were forced to have sexual intercourse with members of the RUF, AFRC, and STF, including the witness himself, and of the coercive environment in which such acts took place. Based on his evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, AFRC, and STF, including the witness himself, intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with an unknown number of women at Superman Ground in April 1998. Considering the coercive environment where the sexual intercourse occurred, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators knew of the women's non-consent.

2770. para. 914: The Trial Chamber finds the testimony of Finda Gbamanja to be credible. Based on her evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Sergeant Foday, a member of the RUF, intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with the witness at Superman Ground and that, owing to the coercive environment, the witness did not consent and Sergeant Foday knew of her non-consent.

2771. para. 915: The Prosecution did not adduce any evidence of rape at the AFRC/RUF camp called "Guinea Highway" in Kono District.

2772. para. 919: Isaac Mongor, an RUF commander and a perpetrator, provided clear and reliable evidence of how captured civilian women were forced to have sexual intercourse with members of the RUF, AFRC, and STF, including the witness himself, and the coercive environment in which such acts took place. Mongor's evidence is corroborated by TF1-375 and Pyne. Based on the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, AFRC, and STF, including Isaac Mongor, intentionally engaged in non-consensual intercourse with an unknown number of women in PC Ground in or about April 1998. Given the coercive environment in which the sexual intercourse occurred, the Trial Chamber finds that perpetrators knew that the women did not consent to sexual intercourse.

f. Rape of Sia Kamara – Kono District

2773. para. 929: Kamara's description of events corresponds with the movements of the AFRC and RUF. Given her testimony that one of the rebels who captured her was dressed in a soldier's uniform; that "Lieutenant T" stated that they would show ECOMOG that "we own the country" and that it was now Operation No Living Thing; that the rebels asked the civilians about Kamajors and Kabbah and that they suspected Kamara of being a Kamajor; and her testimony that the rebels stated that they had come from Freetown, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Kamara was abducted by members of the AFRC/RUF and not Kamajors.

2774. para. 930: On the basis of Kamara's testimony, the Trial Chamber finds that Kamara was abducted from a location in the bush near Yegbema in March/April 1998 by members of the AFRC/RUF, that she was forced to engage in sexual acts by three members of the AFRC/RUF in this same location, and that she was later forced to engage in sexual acts and sexually brutalised by two other members of the same group of AFRC/RUF at Fall Road between Sawoa and Benguema Fiama. The Trial Chamber finds from Kamara's testimony of her inability to refuse to submit to these acts and from the environment of violence and coercion that Kamara did not consent to these acts. The Trial Chamber finds that the five members of the AFRC/RUF who detained, raped and forced Kamara to carry loads intended to exercise these acts. Based on the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF and AFRC intentionally engaged in non-consensual intercourse with Kamara in approximately March/April 1998 in Kono District. Given the coercive environment in which the sexual intercourse occurred, the Trial Chamber finds that perpetrators knew that Kamara did not consent to sexual intercourse.

g. Conclusion – Kono District - Rape

2775. para. 931: The Trial Chamber finds the elements of the crime of rape have been proved beyond reasonable doubt for each of the following incidents:

(i) Finda Gbamanja was raped in Koidu Town by an RUF rebel named Peppe in February 1998;

(ii) Finda Gbamanja was raped by RUF Sergeant Foday in Koidu Town and at Superman Ground in 1998;

(iii) TF1-189 was raped in Koidu Town by her SLA and RUF captors between March and August 1998;

(iv) AFRC commanders, including Alimamy Bobson Sesay, raped an unknown number of women and girls in Tombodu between March and June 1998;

(v) Sia Lappia was raped by RUF Staff Alhaji in Tombodu in approximately April 1998.

(vi) Rebecca and an unknown number of women were raped at Wondedu by RUF men under the command of Rocky in 1998;

(vii) An unknown number of women were raped in Superman Ground by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters in or about April 1998;

(viii) An unknown number of women and girls were raped at PC Ground by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters including Isaac Mongor in or about April 1998;

(ix) Sia Kamara was repeatedly raped by AFRC and RUF fighters in approximately March/April 1998 in Kono District.

2776. para. 932: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2407] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the rapes proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kono District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned rapes in Kono District constitute rape as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

(v) Kailahun District – Rape

a. Rape of women by the RUF throughout Kailahun District – Kailahun District

2777. para. 954: Given the inconsistencies in Bangura's testimony regarding the time of the alleged rapes in 1994-1998, the Trial Chamber is unable to find beyond reasonable doubt that these events occurred after 30 November 1996.

b. Rape of women in Buedu that were abducted in Kenema in the wake of "Operation Pay Yourself" – Kailahun District

2778. para. 961: Based on the evidence of Augustine Mallah and Aruna Gbonda, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that in Buedu and Kailahun Town beginning in February 1998, AFRC and RUF fighters held an unknown number of women in captivity, and intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with them. Given the coercive circumstances that resulted from the women being held captive, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators knew of the victims' non-consent.

c. Rape after February 1998 of captured women in Buedu from March to December 1999 – Kailahun District 2779. para. 966: Based on Koker's evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC/RUF members detained women in a coercive environment and intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with them from March 1998 to December 1999. Given that they were forcibly detained against their will, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators knew of the women's non-consent.

d. TF1-189 raped by RUF members in Kailahun Town – Kailahun District

2780. para. 970: The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that between August and September 1998 in Kailahun, an RUF rebel named Commander A intentionally engaged in non-consensual sexual intercourse with TF1-189, and that Commander A knew of TF1-189's non-consent to these sexual acts.

e. Conclusion – Kailahun District - Rape

2781. para. 971: Based on the evidence above the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002 members of the AFRC/RUF raped TF1-189 and an unknown number of women in the Kailahun District.

2782. para. 972: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2491] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the rapes proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kailahun District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned rapes in Kailahun District constitute rape as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

(vi) Freetown and the Western Area – Rape

a. Rape in Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area

2783. para. 980: Mansaray was cross-examined on his tendered evidence but not on that part of his evidence cited above, which the Trial Chamber finds credible. On the basis of his direct observations, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that "rebels", which included AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters under Gullit's command, intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with an unknown number of women and girls on the grounds of the State House, over a period of three nights in January 1999. The Trial Chamber further notes that these instances of sexual intercourse occurred in a public area, perpetrated by rebels who had just invaded the city. Considering the evidence that the women and girls were crying and protesting, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the sexual intercourse was non-consensual, and that the perpetrators knew of the victims' non-consent.

2784. para. 983: The Trial Chamber finds that it is clear from Alimamy Bobson Sesay's testimony that the girls who were brought to State House were captured by members of the AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters who intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with them. Based on his statement that the girls "were forced to do anything, so they accepted to have sexual intercourse with the commanders" and in light of the coercive circumstances of their capture by these forces, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the girls did not consent to sexual intercourse with the forces and that the perpetrators knew of their non-consent.

2785. para. 984: The Trial Chamber further finds Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a commander in the AFRC, captured and intentionally had sexual intercourse with a young girl in Freetown during the 1999 attack. Given the coercive environment and the fact that the girl was captured the Trial Chamber finds that she did not consent to the sexual intercourse and that Bobson Sesay knew of her non-consent.

2786. para. 989: TF1-028's evidence that members of the RUF intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with young girls is based on her direct observations while in the same room as the victims, and is credible. The witness provided an estimate of the ages of the victims. Given that this was a situation in which young girls were captured by rebel forces in the context of an attack on a city, and noting that the rebels had sexual intercourse with them in the presence of others including TF1-028, who pleaded with them, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the victims did not consent, and that the perpetrators knew of their non-consent.

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Rape

2787. para. 992: Based on Wai's direct observation, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC rebels under the Command of Captain Blood intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with young girls, aged 13-15 years, in an open area, despite resistance by at least one victim, in circumstances in which there was violent coercion. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that, given the coercive environment and threats, there was no consent by the girls and that the perpetrators knew that the victims did not consent.

c. Rape of TF1-029 in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area

2788. para. 999: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that between 22 January 1999 and 10 March 1999, which is during and after the Indictment period, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema, Major Arif, an SLA soldier, intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with TF1-029. Based on the evidence of the environment of violence and abduction, as well as the witness's testimony that she was "forced to have sex", the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that she did not consent to these acts of sexual intercourse and that Major Arif knew of her non-consent.

d. Rape of Akiatu Tholley in Allen Town and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area

e. Rape of TF1-023 in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile by a member of the AFRC from late January until March, 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area

2790. para. 1015: The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that between 22 January and approximately March 1999, which extends beyond the Indictment period for Freetown and the Western Area, Colonel B, a member of the AFRC, intentionally engaged in sexual intercourse with TF1-023. The Trial Chamber finds, based on the evidence of the environment of violence and coercion to which TF1-023 testified, that she did not consent to these sexual acts, and that Colonel B knew that she did not consent.

f. Conclusion – Freetown and Western Area - Rape

2791. para. 1016: Based on the evidence above, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) Men and boys, members of AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters, under the command of Gullit, raped an unknown number of women and girls in the grounds of the State House over three nights in January 1999;

(ii) AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian commanders and fighters raped an unknown number of girls inside State House during the Freetown attack of January 1999;

(iii) Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a commander in the AFRC, captured and raped a young girl in Freetown during the 1999 attack;

(iv) RUF fighters raped an unknown number of girls in a house on Blackhall Road during the Freetown attack of January 1999;

(v) Rebels under the command of Captain Blood raped an unknown number of girls in Kissy on or about 22 January 1999;

(vi) Major Arif, an SLA soldier, raped TF1-029 between 22 January 1999 and 10 March 1999, which is during and after the Indictment period, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema;

(vii) James, an STF fighter, between late January and early April 1999 raped Akiatu Tholley in Allen Town and in Waterloo;

(viii) Colonel B, a member of the AFRC, raped TF1-023 between 22 January and approximately March 1999.The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.2597 The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the rapes proved by the Prosecution in respect of Freetown and the Western Area formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned rapes in Freetown and the Western Area constitute rape as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Factual Findings

2797. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

2798. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

2799. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

2800. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

2801. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

2804. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[115]

2805. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[116]

[115] RUF Indictment, para. 40.
[116] RUF Indictment, para. 42.

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

2806. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[117]

(iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

2807. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages." Acts of sexual violence included the following:[118]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the district including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-Town, Foender (or Foendu), Tomenduh, Fokoiya, Wondedu, and AFRC/RUF camps such as "superman camp" and Kissi-Town camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the district and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[119]
>
> ii. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono, and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[120]
>
> iii. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages," and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[121]
> iv. Kailahun District: At all times relevant to this indictment, an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the district, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[122]

v. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages," and/or forced them into other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[123]

vi. Port Loko District: About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces fled to various locations in Porto Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the district were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[124]

2808. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 8: Other inhuman act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.[125]

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

2830. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 942 – 963 [1598].

(iii) Applicable law – Rape

2831. para. 143: The Indictment charges the Accused in Count 6 with rape as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the rapes of women and girls in Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Kailahun District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District in different time periods relevant to the Indictment.[277]

2832. para. 144: This Chamber opines that the offence of rape has long been prohibited as a war crime in international humanitarian law.[278] It is also prohibited as a crime against humanity in the Allied Control Council Law No. 10[279] and in the Statutes of the ICTY,[280] the ICTR[281] and the ICC.[282] The status of rape as an offence under customary international law entailing individual criminal responsibility has been reaffirmed before the Ad Hoc tribunals.[283] Indeed, the ICTY Trial Chamber in Kunarac declared that "[r]ape is one of the worst sufferings a human being can inflict upon another."[284]

2833. para. 145: Thus, the Chamber has held that the constitutive elements of rape are as follows:

(i) The Accused invaded the body of a person by conduct resulting in penetration, however slight, of any part of the body of the victim or of the Accused with a sexual organ, or of the anal or genital opening of the victim with any object or any other part of the body;

(ii) The invasion was committed by force, or by threat of force or coercion, such as that caused by fear of violence, duress, detention, psychological oppression or abuse of power against such person or another person or by taking advantage of a coercive environment, or the invasion was committed against a person incapable of giving genuine consent;[285]

(iii) The Accused intended to effect the sexual penetration or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur; and

(iv) The Accused knew or had reason to know that the victim did not consent.[286]

2834. para. 146: The first element of the actus reus defines the type of invasion that is required to constitute the offence of rape and covers two types of penetration, however slight. The first part of the provision refers to the penetration of any part of the body of either the victim or the Accused with a sexual organ. The "any part of the body" in this part includes genital, anal or oral penetration.[287] The second part of the provision refers to the penetration of the genital or anal opening of the victim with any object or any other part of the body. This part is meant to cover penetration with something other than a sexual organ which could include either other body parts or any other object.[288] This definition of invasion is broad enough to be gender neutral as both men and women can be victims of rape.[289]

2835. para. 147: The second element of the actus reus of rape refers to the circumstances which would render the sexual act in the first element criminal. The essence of this element is that it describes those circumstances in which the person could not be said to have voluntarily and genuinely consented to the act.[290] The use or threat of force provides clear evidence of nonconsent, but it is not required.[291] The ICTY Appeals Chamber has emphasised that the circumstances "that prevail in most cases charged as either war crimes or crimes against humanity will be almost universally coercive. That is to say, true consent will not be possible."[292]

2836. para. 148: The last part of this element refers to those situations where, even in the absence of force or coercion, a person cannot be said to genuinely have consented to the act. A person may not, for instance, be capable of genuinely consenting if he or she is too young, under the influence of some substance, or suffering from an illness or disability.[293]

2837. para. 149: The Chamber observes that the very specific circumstances of an armed conflict where rapes on a large scale are alleged to have occurred, coupled with the social stigma which is borne by victims of rape in certain societies, render the restrictive test set out in the elements of the crime difficult to satisfy. Circumstantial evidence may therefore be used to demonstrate the actus reus of rape.[294]

2838. para. 150: The mens rea requirements for the offence of rape are that the invasion was intentional and that it was done in the knowledge that the victim was not consenting.

2839. para. 151: The Chamber draws attention to the principles regarding inferences that cannot be drawn from evidence adduced in cases of sexual assault that are set out in Rule 96 of the Rules.

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

2840. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Criminal acts and events – paras.411 – 414, 417 – 419 [604].

b. Locations – Pleading

c. Timeframes – Pleading

2842. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Timeframes – paras. 423 – 432 [616].

d. CAH – Pleading

2843. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Pleading – CAH – paras.448 - 449 [1628].

(v) Kono District – Rape

2846. para. 1284: The Chamber has found that no evidence was adduced in respect of Tomendeh, Fokoiya and "Superman camp", despite the allegations in the Indictment.[2450] We further find that no evidence of rapes was adduced in relation to Foendor and Kissi Town.

2847. para. 1285: As an observation pertinent to the evidence on Count 6 in respect of all Districts, the Chamber notes that numerous witnesses used the term "rape" without the Prosecution seeking to clarify the use of the term and the conduct entailed by it. We are cognisant that it is natural for some witnesses to be reticent to provide explicit details of sexual violence, especially in Sierra Leonean society where stigma often attaches to victims of such crimes. Nonetheless, we consider it an unfortunate reality in post-conflict Sierra Leone that "rape" is a commonly understood concept. The Chamber is therefore of the view that the use of the term "rape" by reliable witnesses describes acts of forced or non-consensual sexual penetration consistent with the actus reus of the offence of rape. This approach may be reinforced by circumstantial evidence of violence or coercion.[2451]

a. Koidu – Kono District – Rape

2848. para. 1286: The Chamber recalls the testimony of TF1-217 and TF1-141 that an unknown number of women were "raped" in Koidu during the February/March 1998 attack by AFRC/RUF rebels.[2452]

2849. para. 1287: The Chamber observes that an atmosphere of violence prevailed in Koidu during the attack, noting the lootings, burnings and killings occurring simultaneously.[2453] The Chamber finds that in such violent circumstances the women were not capable of genuine consent. The Chamber accordingly finds that an unknown number of women were raped in Koidu, as charged in Count 6.

b. Tombodu – Kono District – Rape

2850. para. 1288: The Chamber recalls the evidence that in Tombodu, Staff Alhaji pointed a gun at a woman, ordered her to lie down and then had sex with her.[2454] The Chamber finds that the elements of rape as charged in Count 6 are proved beyond reasonable doubt in respect of this incident.

c. Sawao, Penduma and Bumpeh – Kono District – Rape

2851. para.1289: The Chamber recalls its findings that:

> (i) sexual acts were perpetrated on TF1-195 five times and an unknown number of times on five other women by rebels in Sawao;[2455]
>
> (ii) sexual acts were perpetrated on TF1-217's wife eight times and on an unknown number of other women by rebels in Penduma;[2456]
>
> (iii) sexual acts were perpetrated on TF1-218 twice by rebels in Bumpeh;[2457] and,
> (iv) rebels inserted a pistol in the vagina of a female civilian in Bomboafuidu.[2458]

2852. para. 1290: The Chamber is satisfied from the evidence in respect of each of these incidents that the actus reus of rape is established. The perpetrators' acts occurred in the context of armed rebels capturing groups of civilians, and threatening, killing or physically injuring them. The Chamber is satisfied that in such circumstances the women did not consent and were in fact incapable of genuine consent. The Chamber accordingly finds that each of these acts constitute rape as charged in Count 6.

(vi) Kailahun District – Rape

2853. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

2854. para. 1459: The Prosecution alleges that "at all times relevant to the Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in [Kailahun] District were subjected to sexual violence," including the capture of victims and their use as sex slaves and/or their entry into 'forced marriages.'[2759] We consider that "at all times relevant to [the] Indictment" means from 30 November 1996[2760] to about 15 September 2000.[2761] The Chamber heard credible evidence of rapes which occurred during the pleaded time frame; however, rape was not particularised as a crime charged in the Indictment in for Kailahun District.[2762] We therefore decline to consider whether the crime of rape has been proved in Kailahun District.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Rape

2855. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

2856. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

2857. para. 1574: The Prosecution alleges that "between 6 January and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sexual slaves and/or forced them into 'marriages' and/or subjected them to other forms of sexual violence. The 'wives' were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their 'husbands'."[3012]

2858. para. 1575: The Chamber recalls the expert evidence of TF1-081 that as many as 648 of the 1,168 patients treated after the attack on Freetown were raped.[3013] The Chamber is satisfied that the vast majority of these rapes were committed by the rebel forces and considers that this evidence further corroborates our specific findings of rape.

2859. para. 1576: The Chamber recalls its findings that:

(i) an unknown number of women were raped at State House;[3014]

(ii) a large number of civilians under the control of witness TF1-093 were raped;[3015]

(iii) an unknown number of women at Benguema and Calaba Town were raped by AFRC rebels throughout February 1999;[3016] and

(iv) an unknown number of women were raped in Kissy.[3017]

2860. para. 1577: The Chamber is satisfied that the use of the term "rape" by credible witnesses describes acts of forced sexual penetration consistent with the actus reus of the offence of rape.[3018] The Chamber observes that an atmosphere of extreme violence prevailed during the attack on the Freetown peninsula, noting the lootings, burnings, amputations and killings that occurred simultaneously. The Chamber finds that in such circumstances the individuals who were forced to have intercourse were incapable of genuine consent.[3019] The Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators of each of these acts knew or had reason to know that the victims did not consent.

2861. para. 1578: The Chamber accordingly finds that these acts constitute rape as charged under Count 6 of the Indictment.

(v) CAH – Attack against civilian population

a. Kailahun District – CAH – Attach against civilian population

(vi) Kono District - Rape

2872. para. 439: Sesay and Gbao submit that the Trial Chamber failed to explain how it imputed to the JCE members the following crimes of sexual violence committed in Kono District:[1101] (i) the rapes and outrages on personal dignity in Bumpeh on or about March 1998;[1102] (ii) the rape of a woman in Tombodu by Staff Alhaji in April 1998;[1103] (iii) the rapes of TF1-127's wife and of an unknown number of women in Penduma in April 1998;[1104] (iv) the rapes and genital mutilations in Bomboafuidu;[1105] (v) the rapes of TF1-195 and of five other women in Sawao between February and April 1998;[1106] [1107] and (vi) the forcible marriage of an unknown number of women in the civilian camp at Wendedu on or about April 1998.

2873. para. 440: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's finding that the rapes in Kono District "were not intended merely for personal satisfaction or [as] a means of sexual gratification for the fighter."[1108] Rather, these acts were committed "in order to break the will of the population and ensure their submission to AFRC/RUF control."[1109] The Trial Chamber further found that the rebel forces "systematically engage[ed] in sexual violence in order to demonstrate that the communities were unable to protect their on wives, daughters, mothers and sisters."[1110] It also held that "countless women of all ages were routinely" subjected to the practice of forced marriage and sexual slavery.[1111] "[T]he pattern of sexual enslavement employed by the RUF was a deliberate system."[1112] These findings are reflected in the Trial Chamber's findings on the JCE in Kono District, where it held that the "widespread commission by RUF and AFRC fighters of [inter alia] rapes, sexual slavery, 'forced marriages'… demonstrates that the common purpose agreed to by the AFRC and RUF leadership continued to contemplate the commission of crimes within the Statute as a means of increasing its exercise of power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone."[1113]

2874. para. 441: In other words, the AFRC/RUF leadership, which included most of the JCE members,[1114] availed themselves[1115] of their fighters to commit sexual violence, including forced marriages, in Kono District in order to achieve the objective of controlling the territory of Sierra Leone. Although not expressed in those exact terms, the Trial Chamber's reasons why it imputed these crimes to the JCE members are nonetheless clear. Sesay's and Gbao's submissions that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in this regard are therefore dismissed.

2875. para. 442: Sesay also challenges the imputation of the rapes and genital mutilations in Bomboafuidu on the basis that the perpetrators were unidentified.[1116] However, as he does not point to the evidence to contest the Trial Chamber's finding that the perpetrators were "AFRC/RUF rebels,"[1117] his argument is rejected.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

2886. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[126]

2887. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema,

[126] AFRC Indictment, para. 37.

Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [127]

2888. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [128]

2889. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [129]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

2890. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[130]

[130] AFRC Indictment, para. 50.

(iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

2891. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages". Acts of sexual violence included the following:[131]

> i. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-town (or Kissi Town), Foendor (or Foendu), Tomendeh, Fokoiya, Wondedu and AFRC/RUF camps such as "Superman camp" and Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the District and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[132]
> ii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[133]
>
> iii. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition, an unknown number of abducted women and girls were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[134]
>
> iv. Kailahun District - At all times relevant to this Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the District, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[135]
>
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the City of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages" and/or subjected them to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[136]

vi. Port Loko District - About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence by members of the AFRC/RUF. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands".[137]

2892. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

Count 8: Other inhumane act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

[136] AFRC Indictment, para. 56.
[137] AFRC Indictment, para. 57.

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District - Crimes

2893. para. 969: The Indictment alleges that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout Kono District including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-town (or Kissi Town), Foendor (or Foendu), Tomenueh, Fokoiya, Wondedu, and AFRC/RUF camps such as "Superman camp" and Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp.[1813]

2894. para. 970: The Prosecution has conceded that there was no evidence of rape in respect of Tomendeh, Fokoiya, "Superman Camp"/Kissi Town Camp, Kissi Town, or Tombodu.[1814]

2895. para. 971: The Trial Chamber has carefully considered the evidence on rape, a crime against humanity, relative to Kono District of Prosecution witnesses TF1-198, TF1-206, TF1-272, TF1-019, TF1-033, and TF1-217 and Defence witnesses DBK-129, DAB-025, DAB-l15, DAB-114, DBA-113, DAB-123, DAB-128, DSK-103, DAB-127, DAB-134, DAB-129, DAB-101, DAB-125, and DAB-124. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence given by these witnesses with regards to the commission of crimes under Count 6 relates to locations not specified in the Indictment and therefore makes no findings on the basis of their evidence.

2896. para. 972: In arriving at its factual findings, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-217, TF1-019, TF1-076 and Defence witnesses DBK-117.

a. Koidu Town – Kono District - Crimes

2897. para. 973: Prosecution witness TF1-217 testified that "juntas" and "rebels" under the command of a certain 'Akim Sesay' attacked Koidu Town and raped young girls in February or March 1998.[1815] On cross-examination, witness DBK-117 gave similar evidence. The witness, who was based in Koidu from April 1998 until it was overtaken by ECOMOG[1816] and again when Koidu was recaptured by 'Superman' in December 1998, testified that the RUF raped women and girls when they went on patrols in Kono District.[1817] The Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of both Prosecution witness TF1-217 and Defence witness DBK-117 to be vague and insufficient to satisfy the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of rape.

2898. para. 974: The Trial Chamber also notes the evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-019 but finds that the relevant aspects fall outside of the indicted period for Kono District and therefore makes no findings in this regard.[1818]

b. Foendor/Foendu – Kono District - Crimes

2900. para. 976: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the witness's description of the perpetrators as "rebels", wearing combat trousers or shorts and t-shirts, carrying guns and a cutlass and speaking Liberian English that they were members of either the AFRC or the RUF.

2901. para. 977: The Prosecution argues that it did not attempt to identify specifically the attacker of witness TF1-076, but submits that the attacker was a member of the Junta under the command of both AFRC and RUF commanders. [1821]

2902. para. 978: The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution in its Final Brief listed the preceding evidence of witness TF1-076 as having occurred in Tombodu.[1822] The Trial Chamber finds this is a mischaracterisation of the evidence. The witness clearly testified that she left Tombodu and was in the bush near Foendor when she was attacked. The Trial Chamber also notes that the- Prosecution conceded that it did not lead evidence on Count 6 in Tombodu.[1823]

2903. para. 979: The Trial Chamber finds the testimony of witness TF1-076 to be credible; however, the Prosecution failed to establish that the evidence of the witness falls within the indicted period for Kono District (14 February through 30 June 1998). The witness testified that the events occurred in 1998 but did not provide any further direct or circumstantial evidence to guide the Chamber. Where two reasonable inferences are possible on the available evidence, the Trial Chamber is bound to interpret the evidence to the benefit of the Accused. The Trial Chamber therefore makes no further findings on the evidence of witness TF1-076.

c. Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

2904. para. 980: In making its factual findings in Wondedu, the Trial Chamber takes into consideration the evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-217 who testified that women, including his sister, were abducted from Wondedu.[1824] However, no further evidence was adduced which would suggest that the women he knew were raped.

(ii) Koinadugu District - Crimes

2905. para. 982: The Indictment alleges that between about 14 February and 30 September 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District including Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono and Fadugu.[1825]

2906. para. 983: The Prosecution has conceded that it did not lead evidence of rape in respect of Heremakono.[1826]

2907. para. 984: The Trial Chamber has carefully considered the evidence on rape, a crime against humanity, relative to Koinadugu District of Prosecution witnesses TFl-153, TF1-033, TFl-199 and Defence witnesses DAB-090, DAB-086, DAB-088 and DAB-089. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence given by these witnesses relates to locations not specified in the Indictment and therefore makes no findings on the basis of their evidence.

2908. para. 985: In coming to its findings in relation to Koinadugu District, the Trial Chamber has examined the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TFl-199 and TFl-209 and Defence witnesses DBK-083 DAB-079, DAB-081, DAB-078, DAB-085 and DBK-156.

a. Kabala – Koinadugu District - Crimes

2909. para. 986: Defence witness DAB-156 testified that after the AFRC was overthrown in Freetown in February 1998 but before the rainy season, she was raped by 'Junior Lion'[1827] in Kabala. He held her, raped her, banged her on the forehead where she still has a scar, and knocked out some of her teeth.[1828] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the actus reus and mens rea of rape are satisfied on the basis of this evidence.

2910. para. 987: Witness DBK-083 testified that sometime after the AFRC and RUF were forced to withdraw from Freetown,[1829] a column of troops passed by his farm outside of Kabala. The witness testified that the troops were led by SA] Musa and Superman. At that time, the witness heard reports of rapes.[1830]

2911. para. 988: The Trial Chamber also notes, but does not rely on, the testimony of witness TF1-199 with regards to a possible incident of rape in Kabala. The Trial Chamber finds that the relevant evidence falls outside of the indicted period. The witness testified that he came to Kabala in 1998. While no specific date was given by the witness of his arrival, the Trial Chamber notes the witness stated that he was abducted by the AFRC/RUF in Bombali District at Christmas time 1998 and travelled with the AFRC/RUF to several places prior to arriving in Kabala.[1831] As such, he could not have been in Kabala prior to 30 September 1998, the end of the indicted period for Koinadugu.

b. Koinadugu Town – Koinadugu District - Crimes

2912. para. 989: Witness TFl-209 testified that she was "in Kabala in Koinadugu Town" in August of 1998 when the witness heard and saw "rebels" carrying guns shooting outside her home. The "rebels" were dressed in combat and civilian clothes with pieces of red and white cloth tied around their heads.[1832] The witness fled. The next day, the witness was at her mother's farm when she, her husband, her six year old child and some neighbours were attacked by "rebels".

2913. para. 990: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified in chief that the timeframe of these events was August 1998 but that on cross-examination, when asked whether she remembered when she was captured, she stated that she was not sure of the dates because she had never been to school, and that she could not remember the year. When asked if she remembered August 1998, the witness stated that she remembered August was in the rainy season and that was the time in which she was captured.[1833] The Trial Chamber notes, in light of the repeated evidence and references before it, that the annual rainy season in Sierra Leone extends from May to September. The Trial Chamber accepts that witness TFl-209 has little formal education and that her indication of August is not inconsistent with the Chamber's determination of the rainy season. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that it can rely upon the timeframe adduced of August 1998.

2914. para. 991: The witness described the persons who attacked her as "rebels and soldiers" and as "juntas". They were armed.[1834] The witness saw four rebels arrive; two went towards a neighbouring farm and two remained at the witness's mother's farm.[1835] Two rebels raped the witness in the presence of her husband. The two rebels told her to "bow down" and they removed her "pants" and "lappa". The witness stated that the rebels and raped her "as their wife." The witness was pregnant at the time of the rapes. She stated that her "pregnancy was wasted"[1836] which the Trial Chamber understands to mean that she miscarried as a result of the rapes.

2915. para. 992: The witness testified that the rebels beat her husband to death with a mortar pestle and shot her child dead. A rebel cut the witness's hand with a knife when she tried to hold on to her child.[1837] The witness also testified that she saw the rebels rape other women and children during the attack. She was unable to estimate how many persons were raped. She estimated that the children who were raped were approximately nine to ten years old.[1838]

2916. para. 993: After the attack, the rebels looted some belongings, such as rice, and forced civilians to carry those belongings to town. In town, the witness learned that the men who raped her belonged to Superman and SAJ Musa's groups.[1839]

2917. para. 994: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness's testimony was unclear with regards to her location at the time of the attacks. She testified that she was "in Kabala in Koinadugu" at the time that she first saw rebels in August 1998, but then continued to respond to the Prosecutor's questions with regards to "Koinadugu."[1840] She also testified that the rebels she saw at this time told her they were going to Kabala.[1841] On cross-examination, the witness clarified that in August 1998 in the rainy season she was not in Kabala, but in Koinadugu.[1842]

2918. para. 995: On the second occasion the witness saw rebels, at the time that according to her testimony she was raped, the witness testified she had fled to her mother's farm but did not give the precise location of the farm. She subsequently testified that after the attack she was brought "to town" by the rebels.[1843] Although she did not explicitly specify which town she was referring to, the Trial Chamber infers, as discussed below, that she was taken to Koinadugu Town. The Trial Chamber similarly infers that witness's mother's farm is located in the environs of Koinadugu Town.

2919. para. 996: The Trial Chamber finds the witness's evidence with regards to this attack credible and not significantly shaken on cross-examination. From the description of her attackers as armed "rebels and soldiers", as "juntas", and as members of 'Superman' and SAJ Musa's groups, known commanders of the RUF and the AFRC respectively, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators of the attack belonged to either the AFRC or the RUF. The Trial Chamber infers from the context of violence and coercion that the witness did not and could not have validly consented to the sexual intercourse. The Trial Chamber is thus satisfied that the actus reus and mens rea elements of rape are met with regards to this incident.

2920. para. 997: The Trial Chamber also considers the further evidence of witness TF1-209 suggesting acts of sexual violence occurred subsequent to this attack. The witness testified that captured civilians, including herself, were taken "to town" where the witness indicated that she was then held by two persons she named as 'Jabie' and 'Allusein'. The witness testified that the person who captured her took her to a house where the witness cooked and laundered for him. The witness testified that he turned her into his "wife" which she explained meant that he would have sex with her whenever he felt like it.[1844] The witness indicated that this person was 'Jabie'. The witness testified that following 'Jabie's death, she was held and abused by 'Allusein'.[1845]

2921. para. 998: The witness testified that she had seen 'Jabie' and 'Allusein' before, when she was captured and raped at her mother's farm outside of Koinadugu Town. The witness testified that she recognised them as the rebels who had beaten her husband to death and 'Jabie' as the rebel who had shot her child dead.[1846]

2922. para. 999: The witness was strenuously challenged on the periods of time and sequence of her interactions with 'Jabie' and 'Allusein'. She remained calm and unshaken in her answers but appeared to have some difficulty in conveying what exactly she meant. However, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness did not resile from her evidence in chief that she entered into relationships by force or duress with 'Jabie' for three months from the time of her capture to the time of' Jabie's' death and subsequently with Allusein for one month.[1847]

2923. para. 1000: With regards to the affiliations of the two men, the witness first testified that' Jabie' was a member of SAJ Musa's group and that 'Allusein' was a member of 'Superman's group.[1848] The witness subsequently testified that the person who took her to his house and made hereinto his wife upon her arrival in Koinadugu Town was a member of 'Superman's group.[1849] This is inconsistent with her statement that she was first with 'Jabie' and that he belonged to SAJ Musa's group. The witness later reiterated that' Allusein' was part of Superman's group.[1850] She also testified that after she was captured and taken to Koinadugu Town, she frequently saw a man she referred to as 'Five-Five', who was one of several rebels who told her about atrocities they had committed together, but that this man had left Koinadugu Town by the time the witness was with 'Allusein'.[1851] On cross-examination Counsel put it to the witness that she changed her reference in a prior statement from "Fire-Fire" to 'Five-Five'. The Trial Chamber is satisfied by the witness's clear statements that 'Five-Five' and "Fire-Fire" were separate persons with different names and that "Fire-Fire" was a small, short boy who was known for killing and to whom she had never spoken.

2924. para. 1001: With regards to her location during these events, the Trial Chamber notes that witness TF1-209's testimony was at times unclear. The Trial Chamber has found that following the attack at her mother's farm the witness was brought to Koinadugu Town by the rebels. The witness testified that some time after she had been held for four months, she was present in Koinadugu when members of the CDF came from Kabala and there was a fight in which two members of the CDF were killed[1852] and that sometime following that Koinadugu was completely burnt.[1853] The witness testified that following this she went to a village near Koinadugu called Kalkoya.[1854] 1002. On cross-examination when asked by Counsel where she was when she was with the rebels 'Allusein' and 'Jabie' the witness replied, "Koinadugu. In the Koinadugu District or Kabala." Counsel for Kanu then asked if she was in Kabala, and the witness replied, "Yes, in my village."[1855]

2925. para. 1003: Later on cross-examination the witness stated that she was in Koinadugu at the time after SAJ Musa and Superman fought and when SAJ Musa went to Morya.[1856] Counsel and the witness then had the following exchange:

> Q: Madam Witness, when you say Koinadugu, do you mean the district or a town in Koinadugu District?
>
> A: It was a town. The town is also called Koinadugu District. When you talk of Kabala, it is in the Koinadugu District. Kabala. That has the name Koinadugu District. They only say it is Kabala.
>
> Q: You see what I am asking you, when you talk about Koinadugu, do you mean Kabala2
>
> A: No. The Koinadugu District in Kabala.
>
> Q: Is there a separate town, apart from Kabala, called Koinadugu2
>
> A: Yes, that is my own village. That is where my father was born.
>
> Q: Your village is called Koinadugu2
> A: Yes.[1857]

2926. para. 1004: On further cross-examination by Counsel for Kanu the witness stated that she stayed with 'Jabie' and 'Allusein' in Koinadugu Town[1858] and that during the whole of the three months she was with' Jabie' she stayed primarily in one house in Koinadugu Town, occasionally going during the day to farms in the bush.[1859]

2927. para. 1005: The Trial Chamber accepts that the witness may have been nervous to appear before it and that it may have been difficult for her to testify to events that would have been extremely traumatic. The Trial Chamber also notes that the witness's testimony was being translated and that the witness is uneducated, all of which may account for some apparent inconsistencies in her testimony. The Trial Chamber found her to be reliable and unshaken in her testimony and having carefully reviewed the evidence of the witness, is satisfied of the following:

2928. para. 1006: Witness TFl-209 was abducted and brought to Koinadugu Town in approximately August, 1998, by members of the AFRCIRUF. In Koinadugu Town she stayed first with a certain 'Jabie' for a period of three months and subsequently with a certain' Allusein' for one month.

2929. para. 1007: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness's identification of 'Jabie' as one of the persons present when she was attacked at her mother's farm; her description of attackers at her mother's farm as armed "rebels and soldiers", "juntas"; and her description of 'Jabie' as being a member of SAJ Musa's group or Superman's group; are consistent with a finding that 'Jabie' was a member of the AFRC or RUF.

2930. para. 1008: The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the repeated references to Koinadugu Town and the witness's detailed descriptions of events that occurred there in her presence, that she was held by 'Jabie' in Koinadugu Town.

2931. para. 1009: Finally, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the testimony of the witness that 'Jabie' repeatedly had sex with her and that given the context of violence, to wit, the previous attacks against the witness, the death of her husband and her child at the hands of 'Jabie', her abduction and her subsequent confinement, that the witness could not have validly consented to the repeated acts of sexual intercourse. The Trial Chamber is thus satisfied that the actus reus and mens rea elements of rape are met with regards to this incident.

2932. para. 1010: The Trial Chamber notes that further evidence was given by witness TF1-209 regarding possible acts of sexual violence perpetrated by 'Allusein' in Koinadugu Town following the death of' Jabie'. However, the Trial Chamber finds that this evidence falls out of the indictment period. The Trial Chamber has accepted that the witness was attacked in or about August, 1998 and after this attack she was held by 'Jabie' until he was killed, a period of three months. The Trial Chamber therefore concludes that' Jabie's death must have occurred some time in November, 1998 and that any events testified to by the witness occurring in the month after this point fall well outside of the indicted period for Koinadugu District which ends on 30 September 1998. The Trial Chamber therefore makes no findings with regards to Count 6 on the basis of this testimony.

2933. para. 1011: The Trial Chamber finds that the evidence of witness TF1-209 is generally supported by that of Defence witness DAB-079 who testified that he was based in Kabala and was operating with the CDF shortly after the AFRC Coup in May 1997.[1860] The witness's professional capacity, given to the Trial Chamber in closed session,[1861] put him in a position to receive information from CDF contacts about the activities of other parties in the region including SLA, AFRC and ECOMOG forces. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness had indirect access to approximately 1000-1700 people and received weekly reports from Koinadugu Town as well as other locations such as Kabala, Yifin and Geberefed. The witness testified that on the basis of these reports and his own knowledge that members of the RUF committed rapes but that the SLAs were more disciplined.[1862]

2934. para. 1012: The witness testified that in Kabala, the "SLA"s, including the commanders KIS Kamara and SAJ Musa, arrived after the AFRC was driven out of Freetown by ECOMOG in February 1998.[1863] They arrived on approximately the 15th of February.[1864] A week after the SLAs arrived, starting on approximately February 22nd, the RUF also began to arrive, followed by Sam Bockarie on approximately 24 May.[1865]

2936. para. 1014: The witness testified that by contrast, when the RUF arrived, Kabala became "extremely chaotic". The RUF contingent included 'Superman', 'Johnny Hemoe' and Captain Rahman D. Kobah a.k.a. 'Blackman'. The witness testified that during this time, the RUF were known to loot property, beat civilians, enter houses without permission and steal food and that there were a number of children with weapons among them. On cross-examination the witness testified that the RUF committed rapes. The witness testified that he knew of one rape in particular as he was informed of it by a woman who had been raped by 'Superman'. The witness estimated that members of the RUF raped approximately four to five women. The witness stated that the rapes motivated some civilians in Kabala to form the CDF.[1867]

2937. para. 1015: Later in his evidence in chief, the witness suggested that rape was a trademark of the RUF. The witness testified that in the reports he received on the activities of groups in the area his sources often referred generally to "rebels" which could denote either the AFRC or the RUF. Nevertheless, the witness testified that although the groups were together, each group had its trademark. The SLAs were more restrained whereas the RUF would attack more indiscriminately and more rampantly. The SLA tended to loot food while the RUF tended to burn down houses and to rape.[1868]

2938. para. 1016: Witness DAB-079 also testified that some SLAs stayed in Kabala for eight to nine months and that during that time he did not see any SLAs perpetrating sexual violence.[1869]

2939. para. 1017: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witness DAB-079, although largely hearsay, to be credible and consistent. The witness was not significantly shaken on cross-examination. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the testimony given by the witness relating to rapes alleged to have been committed by members of the RUF is insufficient to support the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime, and does not rely upon it in this regard.

2940. para. 1018: While the Trial Chamber does not make any findings which would support a finding of rape on the basis of witness DAB-079's evidence, the Trial Chamber notes that the implication that the RUF may have committed rapes in Koinadugu District, including Koinadugu Town, during this time period generally supports the evidence of rapes committed against witness TF1-209 and others, the perpetrators of which the Trial Chamber has found belonged to the RUF or the AFRC.

2941. para. 1019: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of witness DAB-079 that SAJ Musa instructed his troops not to intimidate civilians but notes that this general prohibition, in and of itself, does not create a reasonable doubt with regards to the veracity of the incidents of rape described by described by witness TFl-209. Similarly, the Trial Chamber finds that the fact that witness DAB-079 did not witness any acts of violence committed in Kabala by SLAs does not in and of itself create a reasonable doubt that in fact no rapes were committed by members of the AFRC during this time period either in Kabala or elsewhere in the District. The Trial Chamber accepts that the witness was in a particular position to receive wide-ranging information on the activities of parties to the conflict in and around Kabala, including Koinadugu Town, but the Defence has not demonstrated that this information network was in any way exhaustive. Nor has the Defence demonstrated that the information network systematically collected information on possible crimes committed by the parties to the conflict. The witness's testimony therefore does not create a reasonable doubt with regards to the specific incidents of rape to which witness TF1-209 testified in great detail.

2942. para. 1020: Finally, the Trial Chamber notes that the evidence of both witness TF1-209 and witness DAB-079 is generally supported by that of Defence witness DAB-08l who testified that while he was in captivity in Koinadugu Town after August 1998, he did not hear of SAJ Musa ordering any harassment of civilians; however, he heard that the RUF were committing rapes.

c. Fadugu – Koinadugu District - Crimes

2943. para. 1021: The Prosecution asserts that there were two attacks in Fadugu; one in May and one in September, 1998.[1870] Noting the evidence of witness DAB-078 who testified that he did not see or hear about any rapes when Fadugu was attacked on 22 May 1998,[1871] the Trial Chamber finds no evidence was led of rape in Fadugu during the May attack.

2944. para. 1022: With regards to the attack in September, the Trial Chamber has carefully reviewed the testimony of witness DAB-078 who also testified that he was in Fadugu Town when ECOMOG forces in the town were attacked on 11 September 1998. The witness testified that he hid during the attack and when the gunfire subsided he ran to a house. When he arrived he found four men who were attempting to rape a girl. The witness described two of the men as wearing soldier's uniforms and two in civilian clothes. Three of the men were armed with guns.[1872] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from this description and from the context of the attack that the men were members of the AFRC or RUF.

2945. para. 1023: The men detained the witness and forced him to watch as they raped the girl.[1873] The witness testified that the girl died from the rape due to excessive bleeding. After the attack, the witness did not see the men again. The witness later met a woman in the bush who told him that the rebels had called a meeting where 'Savage' introduced himself as the commander of the attack. His second in command was 'Ishmael'.[1874] The witness knew that 'Savage' and 'Ishmael' were SLAs "from the discussion with the men."[1875] The Trial Chamber finds the testimony of witness DAB-078 to be detailed, consistent and credible and that the actus reus and mens rea of rape are satisfied with regards to this incident.

2946. para. 1024: The Trial Chamber has carefully reviewed the testimony of Defence witness DAB-085 who testified that between February and September 1998, he did not see or hear about any rapes or sexual violence by members of the AFRC.[1876] The Trial Chamber finds that this evidence, though credible, does not raise reasonable doubt as to the testimony given by witness

DAB-078 as the witness did not provide any evidence that he would have been in a position to know whether or not the incident described by witness DAB-078 in fact occurred.

2947. para. 1025: The Trial Chamber notes that Prosecution witness TF1-199 also gave evidence of rape in Fadugu[1877] but the Chamber has not taken this evidence into consideration in its factual findings on Count 6 as the evidence relates to events which fall outside of the indicted period. The witness testified that he was abducted at Christmas time, 1998, in Bombali District and travelled to several places before arriving in Fadugu.[1878] As such, it is impossible that he could have been in Fadugu prior to the end of the indicted period, 30 September, 1998.

(iii) Bombali District – Crimes

2949. para. 1028: At the Motion for Acquittal stage the Prosecution conceded that there was no evidence of rape in respect of Mandaha.[1880]

2950. para. 1029: The Trial Chamber has carefully considered evidence relevant to the crime of rape in Bombali District of Prosecution witnesses TF1-334 and TF1-033 and Defence witnesses DBK-090, DBK-094, DBK-086, DBK-I02, DBK-089 and DBK-101. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence given by these witnesses relates to locations not specified in the Indictment and therefore makes no findings on the basis of their evidence.

2951. para. 1030: In arriving at its factual findings, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the evidence given by Prosecution witnesses TFl-269, TF1-267, TF1-033 and George Johnson and Defence witness DBK-113.

a. Rosos – Bombali District - Crimes

2952. para. 1031: Prosecution witness TF1-269 testified that she was living in Rosos during the war when, during the rainy season, "rebels" entered the town and captured her. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the time period described by the witness is May through July 1998. The witness testified that some of the rebels were wearing vests and some were wearing combat. Three of the rebels raped her. One of the rebels had a gun and the other had a knife. After they had raped her, a rebel pushed her to the ground and cut her in the back of the neck.[1881] The existence of a scar on the witness's body was noted by the Chamber.[1882] The witness testified that two of the rebels convinced the others not to kill her.

2953. para. 1032: The three rebels spoke to the witness in Temne and asked her to show them where the other civilians were hiding. The witness took them to a nearby area; however the civilians were not there. Rather, there were only more rebels. One of these rebels, whom the witness described as wearing a T -shirt, told the witness to take his penis in her mouth. She refused and the rebel said he would have her killed. The rebel put his penis in her mouth and tried to rape her vaginally. When the witness resisted the rebel brought her over to another group of rebels. The witness testified that some of these rebels were armed with guns, some with sticks and some with knives and they were wearing a mix of combat and civilian clothes. One of these rebels hit the witness's head and left shin with a stick. The witness was unable to walk and her leg remains scarred. The scar on the witness's left shin was noted by the Trial Chamber.[1883] After she was beaten the witness was raped twice more. The witness described the last rebel who raped her as wearing civilian dress.[1884] Altogether, the witness was raped by five rebels.[1885]

2954. para. 1033: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witness TFl-269 to be detailed and consistent. The Defence was unable to adduce any major inconsistencies in her testimony during cross-examination. As such, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence described to be credible and that the actus reus and mens rea of rape are satisfied on the basis of her evidence.

2956. para. 1035: The witness tried to run away, but a soldier kicked her and she fell down. The soldier tore off all her clothes, including her "knicker"[1891] - which the Trial Chamber understands to mean underwear - and brutally raped her. The witness stated, "he took his penis and thrust it into my vagina and started pounding me like he was pounding mud ... he did not sex me as people do normally. He did it abnormally".[1892] The witness was then raped by another rebel. She tried to fight him but he pinned her back on the ground. A third rebel - who was armed, came and told the witness, "If you open your mouth, I will shoot you dead" and then raped her. The witness testified that she experienced great pain. A fourth rebel came and the witness tried to get up, but as she bent to rise "somebody" pushed her back down onto her back. The fourth rebel also raped the witness. She was afraid he would kill her and she could not resist. The witness testified that the last rape was particularly painful. She stated, "it seem[ed] as though all my guts were coming out".[1893] When the rebels left, the witness tried to get up but she fell back down again as she was so weak.[1894] The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of this evidence that the actus reus and mens rea of rape are proven.

2957. para. 1036: The witness testified further that when the rebels left the village, her daughter ran to her and told her that she too had been raped by two rebels from the same group - the only group of rebels to come to Rosos that day.[1895] The witness's daughter told her that "they" stuffed her mouth with cloth and raped her one after the other. The witness saw that her daughter was bleeding from her vagina. Prior to this incident, her daughter was a virgin.[1896]

2958. para. 1037: The Trial Chamber notes that in her evidence-in-chief, the witness refers to her daughter alternately as her "sibling", "daughter" and "lady".[1897] On cross-examination the witness adopted prior statements which use the term "daughter".[1898] The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified in Krio which was translated into English. The Chamber is satisfied that the various terms used do not undermine the credibility of the witness and that a girl that the witness knew very well was raped that day. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence given by witness TF1-267 in chief to be highly detailed and coherent and the witness was not shaken on cross-examination. The Trial Chamber therefore finds the evidence to be credible and is satisfied on the basis of this evidence that the actus reus and mens rea of rape are satisfied.

2959. para. 1038: The evidence of Prosecution witnesses TFl-269 and TFl-267 is supported generally by that of Prosecution witness TF1-033 who testified to being with AFRC troops at Rosos during the rainy season in 1998.[1899] He testified that rape was widespread throughout the time he was in captivity with the AFRC troops.[1900]

2960. para. 1039: Prosecution witness, George Johnson aka' Junior Lion', testified that towards the end of April or early May 1998, when the AFRC advanced to Rosos, he was appointed as a Provost Marshal in charge of discipline to ensure that "jungle justice" was adhered to. The witness testified that "jungle justice" included a prohibition against rape during operations. Punishment for breaching "jungle justice" included public flogging or death.[1901] The Trial Chamber finds that the mere prohibition of rape does not create any doubt as to whether the incidents of rape testified to in great detail by Prosecution witnesses TF1-269 and TF1-267 in fact occurred.

2961. para. 1040: The Trial Chamber has carefully examined the evidence of witness DBK-113, who testified that he went to Rosos with the AFRC and stayed there for about three or four months.[1902] On cross-examination, the witness testified that he did not see or hear about any rapes of female civilians at Rosos.[1903] In the absence of evidence establishing that the witness was in a position to broadly determine whether rapes were or were not occurring and given the highly detailed and credible evidence of Prosecution witnesses to the contrary, the Trial Chamber finds that this evidence does not raise reasonable doubt that rapes did in fact occur in Rosos at this time.

(iv) Freetown and Western Area – Crimes

2963. para. 1043: In arriving at its factual findings in Freetown and the Western Area, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the evidence given by Prosecution witnesses TF1-334, TF1-024, Gibril Massaquoi, TF1-033, TF1-153, TF1-083 and Defence witnesses DBK-012 and DBK-126.

a. State House – Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

2964. para. 1044: The Prosecution submits that there is evidence that all three Accused committed rape or instigated or aided and abetted the sexual violence at the State House and elsewhere during the invasion and retreat.[1905] The Prosecution further submits that in January 1999, the three Accused were at State House where soldiers brought and engaged women in forceful sexual intercourse.[1906]

2965. para. 1045: Witness TF1-334 testified that on 6 January 1999, he saw "soldiers" bring an unknown number of abducted women to rooms within the State House and rape them there.[1907] He testified that the most beautiful ones were brought to the senior commanders, including 'Gullit', 'Bazzy' and '55,.[1908] Witness TFl-334 saw 'Gullit' with a girl who told the witness that she was in Form Two;[1909] that is, approximately 12 years old.[1910] The witness did not see 'Gullit' abduct the girl.[1911] The girls with '55' and 'Bazzy' were also very young school girls.[1912] The girl with Bazzy was approximately 12-15 years old.[1913] Gullit was with his girl up to Makeni; '55' stayed with his girl until the retreat from Freetown; and 'Bazzy' was with his girl until Westside.[1914] The Trial Chamber has previously considered general issues of credibility with regards to witness TFl-334 and finds the evidence given by him with regards to rapes at the State House to be reliable. However, the Trial Chamber finds this evidence insufficient to prove the actus reus and mens rea of rape.

2966. para. 1046: The evidence of witness TF1-334 is generally supported by that of witness TF1-024 who testified that on 8 January 1999,[1915] he was captured by a group of rebels and soldiers.[1916] The Trial Chamber notes that the witness describes his abductors variously as "rebels and soldiers [...] combin[ed] together", as "rebel boys", as "rebels and soldiers [...] all mixed together". The witness also describes them as wearing "ECOMOG" uniforms and speaking Liberian English.[1917] The rebels and soldiers took the witness to State House where he was detained for four nights in a kitchen on the ground level.[1918] Through the kitchen window, the witness testified that he could see women and girls being raped[1919] by "Gullit's boys" every night in the compound.[1920] He heard the women cry and heard the girls saying "We do not agree. We are school-going girls." ("A no de gri Mi na small pikin.")[1921]

2967. para. 1047: The witness testified that he saw 'Gullit' twice at the State House.[1922] The rebels called him "Honorable Gullit" and he was "commanding his boys."[1923] When ECOMOG forces approached the State House, 'Gullit' ordered the rebels to leave and left together with them.[1924]

2968. para. 1048: The Trial Chamber notes that on cross-examination, the witness testified that the girls who were raped were given 5000 leones, but that this was not pay.[1925] The Trial Chamber finds that given the overwhelmingly coercive environment and the suggestion of the young age of the victims, no attribution of consent to the sexual acts can be derived from this payment. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the testimony of witness TF1-024 is detailed and coherent. The witness was not shaken on this evidence on cross-examination. The Trial Chamber accepts this evidence as credible. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the actus reus and mens rea elements of rape are satisfied on the basis of this evidence.

2969. para. 1049: The evidence of witnesses TFl-334 and TF1-024 is also generally supported by Prosecution witness Gibril Massaquoi who testified that while the three Accused were in command at State House in January 1999, he heard complaints from civilians that "Military Police" came into people's homes "to look for girls".[1926] The witness heard a civilian complain to the Accused Kamara about looting and entering homes at night. The witness did not see or hear of anyone being punished for looting or entering houses looking for women in Freetown.

2970. para. 1050: By contrast, the Trial Chamber notes that a number of witnesses testified that they were not aware of any rapes occurring at State House in early January, 1999.

2971. para. 1051: Prosecution witness TF1-033 testified that he was at State House with the AFRC troops on 6 January 1999[1927] and that he did not witness any rapes while he was there.[1928]

2972. para. 1052: Defence witness DBK-012, an ex-SLA who was a member of the AFRC during the war, similarly testified that he did not see or hear of any raping going on at State House during the invasion of Freetown in January 1999.[1929] He was neither able to confirm or deny that young girls were brought to State House by the AFRC to be raped.[1930]

2973. para. 1053: Witness DBK-126 testified that she was captured in Koidu Town by a "boy" whom the witness referred to as 'Bravo' shortly after the AFRC was overthrown in Freetown in February 1998. The witness testified that 'Bravo's' boss was Junior Johnson also known as Junior Lion.[1931] The witness testified that she was with the troops when the AFRC invaded Freetown. In Freetown Junior Lion made the witness cook for him and bring him food at the Adelaide Police Station. Three days later, the government troops moved Junior Lion to State House. The witness continued to take food to him there. The witness testified that 'FAT Sesay' was in charge of the State House. She testified that the Accused Kamara was not at State House during this period and that she did not see the soldiers rape anyone.[1932] On cross-examination, however, the witness admitted that she had brought food to the Accused Kamara at the State House.[1933]

2974. para. l054: The Prosecution notes that this witness has already pleaded guilty to contempt of Court for attempting to intimidate Prosecution witnesses.[1934]

2975. para. 1055: The Trial Chamber recalls its discussion of the evidence of witnesses who did not see atrocities committed in Freetown, wherein it found that in light of the overwhelming evidence to the contrary, no weight was to be afforded to this aspect of their testimony.

b. PWD - Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

2976. para. 1056: Prosecution witness TFl-153 testified that 'Gullit' called him to the AFRC Headquarters at PWD during the time of the AFRC invasion. The witness testified that he saw young civilian women at the PWD several times. The witness testified that "soldiers" had abducted the girls from the Annie Walsh School near the East End Police Station. Tina Musa told the witness later that the girls had told her that they were all raped at the place they were caught.[1935]

2977. para. 1057: Witness TFl-153 also testified that around this same time, 'Gullit' called him and told him he "had strangers" for him at PWD.[1936] The witness went upstairs and saw a group of priests and nuns locked in a room. The witness spoke to a priest who told him that they had been captured and brought to the PWD. The priest said that all the nuns had been raped. The witness approached 'Gullit' to ask him to release the priests and nuns, but 'Gullit' said "They are all involved. They are making us suffer."[1937]

2978. para. 1058: The Brima Defence asserts that witness TFl-153 abandoned portions of his statement and was desirous of impressing the bench by giving evidence damaging to the Accused as he had received a witness allowance.[1938] The Trial Chamber has previously addressed general issues of credibility with regards to witness TF1-l53. The Trial Chamber notes that the evidence given by the witness with regards to rapes of young girls and nuns at PWD is hearsay evidence.

2979. para. 1059: The evidence of witness TF1-153 is generally supported by Prosecution witness TF1-334 who testified that roughly three weeks after the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown, Brima, Kamara and Kanu went to PWD Junction[1939] to call for reinforcements from the RUF.[1940] Around that time, Brima ordered the "troops" to abduct civilians in order to attract the attention of the international community.[1941] Kamara and Kanu were present also.[1942] Civilians, including a number of young girls were then abducted by the rebels and the commanders[1943] from Freetown and brought to the headquarters at PWD.[1944]

2980. para. 1060: The Trial Chamber finds that the hearsay evidence of witness TF1-153 that women and girls were raped at PWD and the general evidence of witness TF1-334 that young girls were abducted and brought to PWD is insufficient to satisfy the actus reus and mens rea elements of rape.

c. Greater Freetown - Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

2981. para. 1061: The Trial Chamber has carefully considered the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-104 who testified that "RUF junta guys" tried to rape his colleague, a certain 'Saata' at the Good Shepherd Clinic in Freetown sometime between 6 January 1999 and 14 January 1999.[1945] The Trial Chamber makes no findings on this evidence, as it goes to proof of a crime, namely attempted rape, over which this Court has no jurisdiction.

2982. para. 1062: Prosecution witness TF1-083 testified that in "Freetown" on about 16 January 1999, "rebels" whom the witness described as wearing "combat" but who were not ECOMOG came at night and took his sister-in-law out of their house. The witness and his brother ran and hid in nearby plantations. When the witness's sister-in-law returned later that evening, she told the witness and his brother that she had been raped.[1946]

2983. para. 1063: The evidence of witness TF1-083 is generally supported by that of Prosecution witness TF1-033 who testified that after the AFRC lost the battle in Freetown he remained with the AFRC troops during their retreat for three weeks. During this time the eastern part of Freetown was occupied by AFRC "fighters" under the command of 'Gullit'. The witness testified that 'Gullit' ordered his men to commit atrocities as they were retreating and that women and girls were raped by the fighters.[1947]

2984. para. 1064: The Trial Chamber has carefully considered the objections of the Defence with regards to the credibility of witness TF1-033.[1948] The Trial Chamber has previously considered the credibility of witness TF1-033 in general terms.[1949]

2985. para. 1065: Defence witness DAB-100 testified that he heard that there were rapes by the AFRC/RUF during the invasion of Freetown in 1999. The Trial Chamber gives this statement little weight as no specific incidents were elaborated by the witness.

2986. para. 1066: By contrast, Defence witness DBK -012 testified that there were no rapes during the attack on Freetown in January 1999 because this was against the ideology of SAJ Musa, to whom he referred as the "Five Star General". Anyone who would rape a civilian would have been executed.[1950] The Trial Chamber finds that this evidence does not raise a reasonable doubt as to the veracity of the overwhelming and detailed evidence to the contrary.

2987. para. 1067: The Trial Chamber also notes, but does not rely on, the evidence of Defence witness DSK-113 who testified that he was taken with the AFRC to Freetown during the January 1999 invasion. He testified that during the journey from Benguema to Freetown he did not see any SLA soldiers carrying out any rapes.[1951] This evidence relates to time periods not indicted.

(iii) Applicable law – Rape

2997. para. 692: The prohibition of the crime of rape in armed conflict is firmly enshrined in customary international law.[1351] Rape was proscribed as a crime against humanity in the Allied Control Council Law No. 10 and prosecuted as 'inhuman acts' before the Tokyo Tribunal.[1352] Rape as a crime against humanity is found in the statutes of the ICTY, the ICTR and the ICC[1353] and has been defined largely through the jurisprudence of the ICTY and the ICTR.[1354]

2998. para. 693: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of rape:

> 1. The non-consensual penetration, however slight, of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or by any other object used by the perpetrator, or of the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; and
> 2. The intent to effect this sexual penetration, and the knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim.[1355]

2999. para. 694: Consent of the victim must be given voluntarily, as a result of the victim's free will, assessed in the context of the surrounding circumstances.[1356] Force or threat of force provides clear evidence of non-consent, but force is not an element per se of rape and there are factors other than force which would render an act of sexual penetration non-consensual or non-voluntary on the part of the victim.[1357] This is necessarily a contextual assessment. However, in situations of armed conflict or detention, coercion is almost universal. 'Continuous resistance' by the victim, and physical force, or even threat of force by the perpetrator are not required to establish coercion.[1358] Children below the age of 14 cannot give valid consent.[1359]

3000. para. 695: The Trial Chamber acknowledges that the very specific circumstances of an armed conflict where rapes on a large scale are alleged to have occurred, coupled with the social stigma which is borne by victims of rape in certain societies, render the restrictive test set out in the elements of the crime difficult to satisfy. Circumstantial evidence may therefore be used to demonstrate the actus reus of rape.[1360]

[139] Taylor Indictment, para. 5.

3024. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, committed widespread acts of sexual violence against civilian women and girls, including the following:[140]

> i. Kono District: Between 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations, including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Wondedu, and AFRC and/or RUF camps, such as "Superman Ground," "Guinea Highway," and "PC Ground"; abducted an unknown number of women and girls from various locations within the District, or brought them from locations outside the District, and used them as sex slaves;[141]
>
> ii. Kailahun District: Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations throughout Kailahun District; abducted many victims from other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought them to locations throughout the District and used them as sex slaves;[142]
>
> iii. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 2002, raped and unknown number of women and girls throughout Freetown and the Western area, and abducted an unknown number of women and girls and used them as sex slaves.[143]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kailahun District – Crimes

a. Women used as sexual slaves by the RUF throughout Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Crimes

3025. para. 1026: Witnesses Mustapha M. Mansaray, Perry Kamara, Isaac Mongor, Dennis Koker, Finda Gbamanja, TF1-375, TF1-371, TF1-189 Edna Bangura, Issa Sesay, and DCT 068

[140] Taylor Indictment, para. 14.
[141] Taylor Indictment, para. 15.
[142] Taylor Indictment, para. 16.
[143] Taylor Indictment, para. 17.

gave evidence relevant to allegations of sexual slavery in Kailahun District, in addition to Exhibits P-073, P-078, P-077 and P-277.

3026. para. 1027: The expert report of Beth Vann stated that Sierra Leonean refugees fled AFRC and RUF forces in approximately March-April 1998 and arrived in camps along the border in neighbouring Guinea.[2608] The largest concentration of camps was in Gueckedou-Kissidougou prefectures, which borders Kono and Kailahun Districts in Sierra Leone.[2609] The refugees described atrocities committed by armed groups, including the AFRC and RUF in Kono and Kailahun Districts.[2610] Vann reported that the refugees included many victims of war-related sexual violence.[2611]

3027. para. 1028: Vann further reported that according to the victims she interviewed, sexual slavery was a common practice, especially amongst the RUF and AFRC. The report explains that sexual slavery "involves the abduction of females – whether young girls or old women – who are then forced to serve as de facto 'wives' to officers and troops. Serving as a 'wife' includes finding food, cooking, cleaning, washing clothes, complying with forced sexual relations, bearing and caring for children".[2612] The majority of rape victims from Sierra Leone that she interviewed in Gueckedou Camp named the perpetrators as members of the AFRC/RUF or "rebels".[2613] The majority of documented incidents of sexual violence reported took place between 1997 and 1999.[2614]

3028. para. 1029: In 1998, Amnesty International reported that "[i]n those areas of the country which remained under the control of rebel forces thousands of civilians, including women and children, effectively remained captive, many of them in Kailahun District, a stronghold of the RUF since the beginning of the internal armed conflict. Some estimates put this number as high as 10,000. They were used to carry goods, as human shields or for sexual slavery".[2615]

3029. para. 1030: Expert witness TF1-150 documented human rights abuses in Sierra Leone from May 1998 through 2000. This witness had published a report by July 1998 which documented that "rebels" were holding large numbers of civilian captives, including civilians who were being used for forced sexual activity, in various areas of Sierra Leone, but mostly in Kailahun District.[2616]

with had been raped and turned into "wives" of RUF commanders. One girl was said to have been a wife of Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander. She was 14 or 15 years old.[2617]

3031. para. 1032: While this evidence is not sufficiently specific to prove any individual instances of sexual slavery, it demonstrates that sexual slavery was committed on a widespread basis in Kailahun District and may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of sexual slavery described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

3032. para. 1033: Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor testified that he would visit Kailahun District at unspecified times.[2618] Mongor stated that RUF fighters used captured women in Kailahun District for sexual purposes and some were trained as soldiers.[2619] Mongor explained that captured women had no choice but to remain with the RUF fighters and submit to them, but did not indicate what duties "wives" were expected to perform.[2620]

3033. para. 1034: Prosecution Witness TF1-371 testified that after the 1991 attacks on Sierra Leone by RUF and NPFL fighters, captured women and girls would involuntarily become the "bush wives" of RUF commanders.[2621] These women and girls would be the sexual partners of the commanders and have children by them, and would also do domestic chores, such as cooking and laundry.[2622]

3034. para. 1035: Defence Witness Issa Sesay testified that rape was not allowed and that rape was punishable by death[2623] and that he did not see or hear about any instances of rape in Kailahun from 1992 through to the time of disarmament.[2624] Sesay stated that he did hear about rape occurring in other parts of Sierra Leone, but said that disciplinary action was taken against the perpetrators.[2625]

3035. para. 1036: Defence Witness DCT-068, who had been a member of the RUF from August 1992,2626 and who was in Kailahun District from 1992 to 1998[2627] testified that he had never seen women being raped or assigned to commanders. DCT-068 gave the example of Sam Bockarie, and explained that if Bockarie wanted a woman for love, he would talk to that woman in respect of love.[2628]

3036. para. 1037: DCT-068 insisted that women were not coerced into working as domestic servants to commanders but did acknowledge that women, other than the wives of commanders, were relied upon when the RUF needed people to assist with domestic work or farming.[2629]

b. Captured civilians used as sexual slaves in Pendembu – Kailahun District – Crimes

3037. para. 1039: Prosecution Witness Mustapha M. Mansaray was a member of the RUF Defence Unit (IDU) in Kailahun District from approximately November 1996 until July 2000, with the exception of a two-week assignment in Makeni.[2630] Mansaray testified that the IDU was responsible for investigating violations of RUF laws. Investigations were undertaken by a panel of the Joint Security Board of Investigation composed of an IDU representative, an Intelligence Officer of the G5 (responsible for protection of civilians), a representative of the Military Police and representatives from other units.[2631]

3038. para. 1040: Mansaray testified that while he was assigned as 1st Brigade IDU chief in Pendembu in May/June 1999, one of his duties was to "screen" civilians who had been captured by fighters.[2632] He recorded their names, dates of birth, their village or town of origin in addition to records of the numbers of captured civilians.[2633] Civilians were captured from the areas around Daru and Segbwema[2634] and others were "returnees" from Liberia.[2635] Mansaray estimated that there were about 500 captured civilians staying with the fighters at Pendembu.[2636]

3039. para. 1041: Mansaray testified that after the captured civilians had been screened, their captured family members already in Pendembu, if any, could "sign for them" and take them to live with them as the fighters did not have enough space to keep them or to provide food for them.[2637] Some of the civilians without family members were signed for by fighters who took the civilians to their houses to do domestic work.[2638] Mansaray testified that some of these fighters took the captured women to their homes to have sexual intercourse with them and would tell him that they had "married" them.[2639] Mansaray also testified that some fighters did not report the women they had captured.[2640] Rather, they took the women directly to their houses. Mansaray is not aware of what happened to such women.[2641]

3040. para. 1042: On cross-examination, Mansaray testified that after having been captured, some women were willing to stay with the fighters and others were not.[2642]

c. Evidence of sexual slavery in Buedu from November 1996 until 1998 – Kailahun District – Crimes

3041. para. 1044: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witness Edna Bangura, Issa Sesay, TF1-168 and Exhibit P-277 in relation to alleged instances of sexual slavery in Buedu.

3042. para. 1046: The evidence of witness Edna Bangura of her capture and subsequent detention in Buedu has been recited in the section dealing with rape.[2645]

3043. para. 1047: Bangura testified that women would be captured by fighters when they went to the war front and that these women became "wives" or would stay with fighters as either house help or as bodyguards.[2646] Bangura explained that when a woman became a "wife" in the context of rebels capturing women, they did not go to perform marriage rites anywhere. They would just capture them and bring them and consider them to be their wives and the women in return would do everything to them just like a husband and wife.[2647]

3045. para. 1049: The Defence challenged the witness on the record of an interview with the Prosecution which records her as saying, "CO Musa was killed some time in 1994 during one of the attacks, after which the witness was raped by one CO Ali, an RUF rebel. The witness was taken as a wife by CO Ali, and not CO Musa",[2651] and on a number of inconsistencies between her testimony and the statement that she gave to Prosecution investigators on 29 October 2003 concerning CO Musa.

3046. para. 1050: During cross-examination before this Trial Chamber, Bangura stated that CO Ali and CO Musa was one and the same person. It was only when Defence counsel confronted the witness with exhibits and testimony in a prior case before the Special Court for Sierra Leone which indicated that CO Ali and CO Musa were different people that the witness agreed,[2652] admitting that Counsel's question confused her.[2653]

3047. para. 1051: Issa Sesay testified that Bangura could not have been taken to Buedu to be used as a sexual slave from 1994 to 1998 because the NPRC, not the RUF, controlled Buedu from October/November 1993 until April 1995.[2654] Sesay further testified that people were not brought from Kangari Hills to Kailahun until the AFRC coup in 1997.[2655]

3048. para. 1052: Issa Sesay's testimony on this point is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-168 and by Exhibit P-277, which reports that "[t]owards the end of 1993, the RUF was almost pushed out of Kailahun district by the government forces and early in 1994 Cpl. Sankoh was forced to move out of Kailahun district for Kenema district".[2656] The remaining RUF fighters in Kailahun were concentrated in Ngeima town, Luawa Chiefdom and other jungle hideouts, while government troops controlled the major villages and towns, including Buedu.[2657]

d. Evidence of sexual slavery in Kailahun District after February 1998 – Kailahun District – Crimes

3050. para. 1056: The testimony of witness Augustine Mallah of the capture of women and their forcible transfer and detention in locations controlled by the AFRC and RUF throughout Kailahun District, including Kailahun Town, Pendembu and Dodo[2661] has been recited in the section on rape.[2662]

3051. para. 1057: Mallah stayed in Buedu for approximately two months.[2663] Both the AFRC and RUF were in Buedu and everyone reported to Bockarie.[2664] Mallah testified that the captured civilians in Buedu were there to cook and have sexual intercourse with the AFRC and RUF soldiers who captured them.[2665] Mallah did not witness women refusing sexual intercourse, although he stated that it may have been possible for a woman who had been with the RUF for a long time to leave the man if she had a good reason[2666] but

> [t]he moment you would be, say for example, leaving Vandi you should get married to Momoh, because if you did not do that you would just be there like a football […] When Musa comes he will kick you and you will go to Vandi and he too will kick you. Like me, if I come and I want to have an affair to have sex with a woman and I don't have a woman and you are there without a husband, I would just go to you.[2667]

3052. para. 1058: Mallah explained that the women were forced by their captors to have sex[2668] if the women did not want to die. "[T]hey just have to do it, whether they were willing or not".[2669] Mallah also testified that there was a pass system in Buedu which controlled the movements of captured civilians.[2670]

3053. para. 1059: Witness Aruna Gbonda testified that after Tejan Kabbah had been reinstated,[2671] which was in March 1998,[2672] he saw Mosquito and the other rebels come to Kailahun District from Kenema District with male and female civilians.[2673] The captured civilians included adult women and girls who were from Kenema.[2674] The women were taken to Kailahun Town and other villages.[2675] When the rebels and the civilians arrived in Kailahun

Town, food was scarce and Gbonda stated that they would ask him where they could find bananas.[2676] When Gbonda spoke to the women and girls, they said that the rebels under Mosquito and Issa Sesay had forcefully captured them and that when they were dislodged from Freetown, some were brought by the rebels to Buedu and some to Kailahun Town.[2677] The women told Gbonda that the rebels had turned them into their wives and "put them into their homes forcefully".[2678] Gbonda stated that there were many captured women and girls, and that he had personally spoken to about twenty.[2679]

e. Evidence of Sexual Slavery after February 1998 to December 1999 in Buedu – Kailahun District – Crimes

3054. para. 1061: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Dennis Koker in relation to evidence of sexual slavery in Buedu from February 1998 to December 1999.

3055. para. 1062: The testimony of Witness Dennis Koker that he left Koidu Town in February 1998 and went to Kailahun District where he was appointed as a military policeman and adjutant has been recited in the section on rape.[2680]

3056. para. 1063: Koker testified that during the period 1998-1999 many women were captured by the RUF and AFRC and detained in Buedu and that the captors "would marry them without paying bride price".[2681] Sometimes, commanders would often come to Koker's office with captured women and ask him to "confine" or discipline the women because they had "overlooked the commanders", i.e. been disrespectful.[2682] While in detention, the women would in the absence of their captors, explain to Koker that the RUF commanders had captured them on the front line and forcibly "turned them into wives" but that in fact the commanders were not their real husbands.[2683]

3057. para. 1064: Koker recalled one incident when "CO Victor Kallon", an RUF Major, brought a girl to the office and said she had disrespected him. CO Kallon had stripped the girl down to her underwear and given her 50 lashes with a long cable made from a vehicle tyre, before asking Koker to lock her up.[2684] CO Kallon asked Koker to detain her. When CO Kallon left, the girl explained to Koker that CO Kallon had captured her in Kono and taken her "as his wife", but that the commander was in fact not her husband. When she refused to have intercourse with him he beat her and brought to Koker's MP office.[2685]

3058. para. 1065: Koker testified about the various things he observed happening to civilians in Buedu throughout the time he was there, some 21 months,[2686] until the ceasefire. Koker left Buedu on 16 December 1999, the day after Sam Bockarie left for Liberia.[2687] During the entire time he was at the MP office, he believes there may have been up to 1300 civilians captured, including men, women and children.[2688]

f. TF1-189 used as a sexual slave by RUF members in Kailahun Town from August 1998 until September 1998 – Kailahun District – Crimes

3059. para. 1067: TF1-189, whom the Trial Chamber has found was captured by RUF/AFRC rebels in Kono District in March 1998 and subjected to sexual slavery in Koidu Town by Commander A (named by the witness in closed session) and other RUF rebels from March through August 1998, testified that she was taken by the rebels and "SLA Juntas" to Kailahun Town when Koidu Town was attacked by ECOMOG in August 1998. The overall leader of the group that left was an RUF commander named Superman.[2689]

3060. para. 1068: TF1-189 testified that they arrived in Kailahun Town in August 1998, during the rainy season and remained there less than two months until September 1998. TF1-189 was forced to stay with a commander named Gogomeh, together with five other female captives and four rebels.[2690] TF1-189 testified that during this time, she and the other captured women and girls were forced to perform the following duties, namely to cook, wash the clothes of male and female rebels, and to be "wives" to the rebels.[2691] In private session, TF1-189 testified that in addition Commander A had continued to have sex with her in Kailahun Town.[2692]

3061. para. 1069: TF1-189 testified that she was allowed to leave Gogomeh's place only twice, on both occasions to accompany a female rebel to shop for food items.[2693] She did not try to escape because she was warned that if she tried to do so "it would not be good for her". None of the other captured women and girls escaped.[2694] The witness learned from Commander A[2695] that the commanders in Kailahun Town included Colonel Mike Lamin and Issa Sesay who were both members of the RUF, "Akim" who was an "AFRC Junta", CO Gogomeh and Superman.[2696] Other commanders included CO Koko and "Old Ma Fatty".[2697]

3062. para. 1070: In September, TF1-189 left Kailahun Town because it was being attacked by ECOMOG jets. She went to another location in Kailahun District that she named in private session,[2698] together with other 40 captives and a rebel.[2699]

(ii) Kono District – Crimes

a. Evidence of sexual slavery in Kono District – Kono District – Crimes

3063. para. 1080: The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of Dennis Koker, TF1-375, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Perry Kamara, Isaac Mongor, Alice Pyne and Alex Tamba Teh to be relevant to allegations of sexual slavery in Kono District, in addition to Exhibits P-051, P-073, P-77, P-78 and P-366.

3064. para. 1081: The Report of Expert Witness Beth Vann[2705] documenting accounts by refugees of sexual slavery committed by the AFRC/RUF in Kono and Kailahun Districts has been referred to above.

3065. para. 1082: An Amnesty International report entitled "Sierra Leone, 1998 – a year of atrocities against civilians" reports that as the AFRC and RUF rebels were pursued eastwards by ECOMOG forces to towns, including Koidu, from February through April 1998, the rebels were responsible for widespread rape, other forms of sexual assault and abduction.[2706]

b. Abducted Women from Bombali and Kono Districts used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town and Superman Ground – Kono District – Crimes

3066. para. 1083: Witness Perry Kamara testified that following the retreat from Freetown in February, 1998, the leadership of the RUF and AFRC including Johnny Paul Koroma, Issa Sesay, Isaac Mongor, SAJ Musa, Brigadier Mani, General Bropleh, Denis Mingo a.k.a. Superman, Morris Kallon, Five-Five, Gullit, Bazzy and Colonel Tee, convened a meeting in Makeni, Bombali District.[2707] At the meeting it was decided to conduct "Operation Pay Yourself". Kamara testified that this meant that the fighters were free to take anything they wanted from the civilians and to abduct them. Following the meeting, fighters were permitted to gather food, abduct people and to "take people's wives away from them". They burned houses and raped many women. Women who resisted were killed.[2708]

3067. para. 1084: Following the meeting, SAJ Musa led a break-away group to Kabala, Koinadugu District and the rest of the commanders and fighters broke into three groups and went to Koidu Town.[2709] Kamara's group passed through Magburaka, Matotoka, Makali, Sewafe, and Bumpe before reaching Koidu Town. Kamara testified that throughout this route, the AFRC, RUF and STF fighters looted civilian's food, abducted children and "women from their husbands", and killed civilians.[2710] Although not categorically stated, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the evidence that civilians abducted en route were in the group that reached Koidu Town. They remained in Koidu Town for approximately a week[2711] and then retreated to Superman Ground, one or two miles away along the highway towards Guinea.[2712] In the areas surrounding Superman Ground and the various nearby camps, including Banya Ground, Sewafe bypass, Yomandu, Tombodu, and Gandorhun Highway, fighters would go on food-finding missions and abduct civilians, including men, women and children for various purposes including doing domestic chores[2713] and mining diamonds.[2714] Kamara testified that "forceful marriage" occurred, because the fighters needed civilian women to "marry them as bush wives".[2715]

3068. para. 1085: Kamara identified Exhibit P-051 as a record of various lists that were normally kept by Superman and the Joint Security.[2716] The witness recognised his own name amongst a list of soldiers and their ranks at Superman Ground.[2717] Other RUF/AFRC commanders listed include Denis Mingo, Isaac Mongor, Morris Kallon, RUF Rambo a.k.a. "Premo", Peter B. Vandi, Hector B. Lahai (AFRC), Lansana Conteh, Major Bai Bureh, Matthew Barbue, Martin George and CO Rocky.[2718]

3069. para. 1086: The document includes another hand-written list entitled "Name of Civilians at Banya Ground" dated 13 July 1998[2719] and "Name of Civilians from Banya Ground and Their Care Taker" (undated).[2720] Kamara explained that the civilian women named in the list lived with commanders against whom their names were listed. He stated that some of the women were used as labourers and others were "wives" to the commanders with whom they stayed.[2721]

3070. para. 1087: Exhibit P-051 also includes hand-written lists entitled "Names of Civilians from Banya Ground", dated 30 November 1998;[2722] "Names of new captives along Guinea/Sierra Leone highway", dated 6 December 1998;[2723] and "Names of Civilian Women and Officers in charge", dated 15 July 1998.[2724] Kamara confirmed that the latter list indicates civilians under the control of RUF and AFRC fighters who were used for domestic work, hard labour and as sex slaves.[2725] Kamara testified that the Joint Security sent a copy of this document to all the various commanders within the RUF units comprising of G5, MP, IO and IDU.[2726]

3071. para. 1088: DCT-068, a G5 in Buedu at the relevant time, to whom this document was shown, denied that it indicated that women were assigned to commanders and ventured the opinion that "it's possible that these women knew what these commanders did for them…so they decided to stay with this commander"[2727] He denied that they were "wives".[2728]

c. Abducted Women from Koidu Town and Mortema used as sexual slaves – Kono District – Crimes

3072. para. 1090: TF1-375, an RUF rebel under the command of Superman, testified that in March 1998 a second attack on Koidu Town was organised and led by Superman, hours after a previous failed attempt to take the town by the RUF forces under the command of Rambo and Isaac Mongor.[2729] TF1-375 testified that during this second attack, "some of the commanders captured girls and made them into their wives".[2730]

3073. para. 1091: Following this attack, there were other attacks in Kono District. TF1-375 testified that approximately three months after the attack on Koidu,[2731] a joint AFRC and RUF attack was launched against Mortema under the command of Short Bai Bureh.[2732] TF1-375 did not participate in this attack but some of his friends told him what happened.[2733] He observed that some of those who returned brought some girls with them as their wives.[2734] TF1-375 did not ask the ages of the girls, but stated that some were 14, 15 and 20 years old.[2735] Some of the girls remained in Koidu Town with the troops and some were taken to a combat camp.[2736] All of the women and girls were detained by the men who captured them "as wives" and these women and girls were forced to retreat with their captors. The witness explained that the captured women and girls were called "wives" because if captured "whether you like it or not" (they) were treated as wives.[2737]

d. Evidence of Sexual Slavery at Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

3074. para. 1093: Witness Alex Tamba Teh testified that after he was captured in approximately April 1998,[2738] an RUF commander named Rocky took Teh to his base in Wondedu.[2739] Upon his arrival, Teh saw other captured civilians there.[2740] The captured women were forcibly used as "sexual objects" or "sex slaves".[2741] Teh heard women screaming at night and spoke to them during the day.[2742] One of the women told him that she and other women had been abducted at gun point and forced to have sex with their captors.[2743] It was at this time that Teh realised they were being raped.[2744]

e. Women used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town in February 1998 – Kono District – Crimes

3075. para. 1095: Witness Dennis Koker retreated with the AFRC[2745] when they were driven out of Freetown in February 1998[2746] and fled with a group led by Johnny Paul Koroma, Eldred Collins and other commanders[2747] to Tombo,[2748] Fogbo,[2749] Masiaka,[2750] Port Loko District;[2751] and then Makeni, Bombali District[2752] where Issa Sesay was also present.[2753] Koker testified that the soldiers and rebels captured civilians from the villages surrounding Masiaka[2754] and in Makeni.[2755] The civilians included men, women and children. He testified that the RUF and juntas would sometimes "marry" captured women which meant that they would make them their "wives".[2756]

3076. para. 1096: Koker testified that the group then travelled to Koidu Town, Kono District.[2757] He estimated that they arrived in Koidu Town approximately one week after leaving Freetown.[2758] Koker remained in Koidu Town for a week[2759] and resided with Eldred Collins and Morris Kallon at Guinea Highway, about 200 yards from the centre of town. "Isaac", Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman),[2760] Gullit, Alex Tamba Brima, Johnny Paul Koroma and others commanders were all present in Koidu Town at that time.[2761]

3077. para. 1097: Koker testified that while he was in Koidu Town he observed that AFRC and RUF "operations people"[2762] captured civilians, including women and children, from Koidu Town and the surrounding villages[2763] and that, as in Makeni, women were captured to be wives. He stated that this happened from the start of the war, it was common and happened "wherever they went". He saw it occur in Freetown, Masiaka, Makeni and it continued in Kono.[2764] On cross-examination, Koker admitted that he did not hear an order given by commanders to capture civilians in Kono in February 1998, but explained that it was a common practice by every fighter as well as junior and senior commanders.[2765] It was put to Koker on cross-examination that he did not mention abduction of women and children from Kono District in his first three interviews with the Prosecution but he was not given an opportunity to explain this discrepancy.[2766] As Koker was interviewed 10 times by the Prosecution about numerous subjects, the Trial Chamber finds that not mentioning abduction in the earliest interviews does not significantly affect his credibility.

f. Women used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town from March to June 1998 – Kono District – Crimes

3079. para. 1100: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he himself had his own sex slave whom he referred to as his "wife" whom he had captured in Kono District and who stayed with him.[2773] On cross-examination, he explained that he did not in fact "marry" the girl he had in Kono; rather he captured her and "we would go and sleep together because she was under captivity. It was against her will. I was using her against her will. So I was taking it that I was raping her, because I was carrying on and she had to agree to what I said. If I say, 'Let us lie down', she will lie down".[2774] Alimamy Bobson Sesay referred to this woman as his "bush wife".[2775]

3080. para. 1101: The witness testified that the ages of the captured women who were taken as wives ranged from about 8 to 20 years old. Alimamy Bobson Sesay's own "wife" was about 15 or 16 years old.[2776] Members of the Small Boys Unit took the younger girls, aged 8 to 10.[2777] The SBUs lived with the captured girls and had sex with them.[2778] Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he saw this himself.[2779] The commanders including Superman, Bazzy and Bomb Blast were aware of this but did not discipline "the boys" for these acts.[2780] The witness stated that the commanders "were aware but nobody did anything about it. They told them, 'Boys, enjoy yourselves'. They said, 'This is your own time'".[2781]

g. RUF and AFRC fighters brought sexual slaves from Koidu Town to PC Ground and Superman Ground in 1998 – Kono District – Crimes

3081. para. 1103: TF1-375, an RUF rebel under the command of Superman, testified that after Koidu Town was lost by the RUF and the AFRC to ECOMOG, the AFRC/RUF troops retreated to PC Ground and then to Superman Ground which was about six or seven miles from Koidu Town.[2782] The girls and women who had been abducted and brought to Koidu Town were also brought by those who abducted them to PC Ground and later to Superman Ground as their "wives".[2783] TF1-375 describes these women as "wives" because "they were with us as husband and wife, so we used to call them our wives. Whether you like it or not, if somebody captured you and liked you, you would become his wife".[2784]

3082. para. 1104: Witness Isaac Mongor, at the time a frontline RUF commander under Superman,[2785] testified that in 1998, members of the RUF, SLA and STF, including Mongor himself, took captured civilian women in Kono District and detained them against their will.[2786] The women were under the sole control of the fighters and could not refuse.[2787] Mongor testified that this meant they would take the women, use them and have sex with them.[2788] They took the women to PC Ground which was at Guinea Highway, behind Superman Ground, and which was under the command of Major Konowa.[2789] Mongor testified that civilian women who were captured on attacks were also taken to Superman Ground and given and used there as "wives".[2790]

3084. para. 1106: In cross-examination, Mongor confirmed a prior statement to the Prosecution in which he said that rape was very common amongst RUF soldiers and that this remained the case for a long time, starting during the early stages of the war.[2794] Mongor confirmed that the RUF had rules against raping and looting, but it happened nonetheless.[2795] If commanders tried to stop it, soldiers would have gone to other commanders who tolerated it.[2796] He testified that some RUF combatants were disciplined for sexual assaults and that he personally witnessed Issa Sesay execute three young combatants in Makeni who allegedly gang raped a girl.[2797] Mongor described this incident in a different interview as an "exception to the rule" and stated that rapes occurred all the time and that "bush wives" were forced to have sex.[2798] Mongor testified that there was a disciplinary system in place, but that its implementation was limited primarily to offences by one soldier against another. He testified that with regard to serious offences, "the laws were there, but its implementation was limited".[2799]

3085. para. 1107: Witness Alice Pyne gave corroborating evidence of women brought from Kono District used as "wives" at PC Ground. She testified that she came to PC Ground in March 1998 after ECOMOG took over Koidu and worked as a radio operator for Superman and remained there for five months.[2800] At that time, she observed that RUF fighters captured civilians in areas around Kono District and brought them to the training base at PC Ground. She testified that the captured female civilians were made bush wives to the commanders and were forced to have sex and perform domestic chores.[2801]

h. TF1-189 used as a sexual slave by RUF members at Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

3086. para. 1110: TF1-189, whose evidence was discussed above in relation to Counts 2, 3 and 4, was captured and raped in a location in Kono District revealed in private session[2803] by rebels who identified themselves as RUF and Junta in March 1998.[2804] The witness testified as to the identity of one the rebels in private session.[2805] For the purpose of this Judgement, the Trial Chamber will refer to this person as "Rebel A".

3087. para. 1111: Rebel A and other rebels took TF1-189 to Superman's compound in Koidu Town.[2806] TF1-189 testified that she saw Superman at this compound.[2807] She stated that she heard Rebel A address him as "C.O. Superman" and told Superman that they had brought a "wife" for him.[2808] Superman responded that he did not want a wife and told them to take the witness away.[2809]

3088. para. 1112: The rebels took her to a hall where other people were held.[2810] After one attempted escape she was taken to the compound where Rebel A stayed, she remained at Rebel A's "place" in Koidu Town until August 1998.[2811] TF1-189 also testified that 13 other girls and women were there.[2812] They told her that they were captives and had all been abducted from around Kono District.[2813]

3089. para. 1113: TF1-189 testified that she and the other captured women and girls were made to cook and pound rice.[2814] She was afraid that she would be killed if she refused to perform these duties.[2815] TF1-189 further testified that she and five of the captured women and girls were forced to be "wives" to the rebels.[2816] TF1-189 explained that being a "wife" meant that the rebels would have sexual intercourse with them and they could not refuse.[2817]

3090. para. 1114: TF1-189 did not leave Rebel A's "place" until August 1998 as he told her that she would be killed if she tried to do so.[2818] In private session, the witness testified that she was made to be "a wife" to three of the rebels, Rebel A and two RUF rebels whose names she did not know.[2819] The witness also testified that to her knowledge, neither the rebels who used her sexually nor anyone else was ever punished for this abuse.[2820]

3091. para. 1115: TF1-189 stated that Rebel A told her that the commanders in Koidu Town at this time included C.O. Superman, Gogomeh and Gibril Massaquoi, who belonged to the RUF and Five-Five who was an "SLA Junta".[2821] She was taken to Gibril Massaquoi's compound where the commander was CO Gogomeh. Commander A worked for Gibril Massaquoi[2822] but TF1-189 did not state that Gibril Massaquoi was present and named Gogomeh as the commander.

i. Use of Finda Gbamanja as sexual slave by a RUF member in Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

3092. para. 1120: Witness Finda Gbamanja testified that after "Paul Koroma" was removed from power in Freetown,[2824] between the dry season and the rainy season,[2825] she and her family left Koidu Town because it was attacked by "rebels".[2826] They fled first to Baiama, then to the "bush" when Baiama was taken over by rebels[2827] and then returned again to Baiama.[2828] The witness was young at the time and did not remember her age.[2829]

3093. para. 1121: The Trial Chamber notes that the ECOMOG invasion which ousted Johnny Paul Koroma from power was launched on 14 February 1998[2830] and that Koidu Town was captured by the AFRC/RUF on in late February or early March 1998.[2831] On the basis of the evidence set out in the proceeding paragraph, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Gbamanja and her family left Koidu Town in or after March 1998 and returned to Baiama Town shortly thereafter.

3096. para. 1124: Under duress Gbamanja followed Foday to his house in Koidu Town and he made her his "wife". Gbamanja remained at Sergeant Foday's house "for some time" and was forced to have sex with him every night[2839] and forced to launder, cook and fetch water for Sergeant Foday. She could not run away.[2840] Gbamanja testified that she remained in Koidu Town until it was attacked by ECOMOG, at which point Sergeant Foday and other rebels took her with them to Superman Ground, Kailahun District. Gbamanja stated that this occurred when "it was close to the dry season".[2841] On cross-examination, Gbamanja testified that she could not recall how long she stayed with Sergeant Foday but that "it was a long time". She denied prior statements taken by the Prosecution which stated that she only stayed with him a week.[2842]

3097. para. 1125: The RUF/AFRC lost control of Koidu Town to ECOMOG, and RUF troops loyal to Superman reassembled at Superman Ground around April 1998.[2843] Considering Gbamanja's evidence as a whole, including her evidence of prior and subsequent events, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Gbamanja left Koidu Town to go to Superman Ground in approximately April, 1998.

3098. para. 1126: On cross-examination, Gbamanja explained that Sergeant Foday kept her hidden in his house even though he was more senior than Peppe. She testified that this was because of the system whereby captured women were normally "kept" by the rebel who captured them irrespective of the rebel's rank.[2844]

j. Use of Finda Gbamanja as a sexual slave by rebels at Superman Ground – Kono District – Crimes

3099. para. 1129: Witness Finda Gbamanja, whom the Trial Chamber has found was subjected to sexual slavery in Koidu Town between approximately March and April 1998, by Sergeant Foday, a rebel loyal to Superman, also testified that after Koidu Town was attacked by ECOMOG, she was taken to Superman Ground, located at Meiyor, by rebels including Sergeant Foday, Well Man and a rebel named Sidique.[2846]

3100. para. 1130: Gbamanja testified that she stayed at Superman Ground for a "long time" with Sergeant Foday. During this time, she continued to cook and launder for Sergeant Foday and he continued to force her to have sex with him.[2847] Following the arrival of Foday's wife, Fatty, Gbamanja was taken to the house of a rebel named "Mamie" who was Sidique's wife[2848] where she stayed for "some time". Gbamanja testified that while she was at Mamie's house, Sergeant Foday continued to rape her and she was forced to pound rice, launder and harvest palm oil for Mamie.[2849] On cross-examination, Gbamanja testified that although it was a long time, she did not know how many weeks or months she stayed with Mamie.[2850] She denied a prior statement taken by the Prosecution in which it was recorded that she stayed with Mamie for three months.[2851] Gbamanja testified that in the dry season, Sergeant Foday forcibly sent her to work for his mother and the RUF "government" in Giema.[2852] She was there during Christmas.[2853] On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that Gbamanja was held in Superman Ground first directly by Sergeant Foday and later by Mamie from approximately April until at least October, 1998.

3101. para. 1131: Gbamanja testified on cross-examination that she did not know the difference between the RUF and the AFRC[2854] but that Peppe himself told her the rebels were RUF.[2855] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from Gbamanja's description of the rebels and the events that both Peppe and Sergeant Foday were rebels loyal to Superman. The Trial Chamber finds that Gbamanja's evidence is corroborated by the record in Exhibit P-051 which was identified by witness Perry Kamara as a record of civilians captured and under the control of commanders who were used for domestic work, hard labour and as sexual slaves.

k. Use of Sia Kamara as a sexual slave by rebels near Yegbema and Sawoa – Kono District – Crimes

3102. para. 1133: Witness Sia Kamara, whose testimony in the RUF trial was received pursuant to Rule 92*bis*, was cross-examined in the present trial on 15 October 2008. In her prior testimony Kamara testified that she, her husband and his younger brother fled Tongo when it was attacked by Kamajors. They fled to Segbwema, Bunumbu, and Gandorhun and arrived in Kainako, Kono "Chiefdom" in the dry season. Two days later they fled to the bush when they were informed by other civilians that Kamajors "who had transformed into soldiers/rebels" had entered Koidu. Kamara explained that she meant that "they ran away from Kamajors", but later they were told that "it was now rebels and not Kamajors again".[2856] On cross-examination, she explained that she had encountered civilians fleeing from Koidu Town who told her that Kamajors had entered Koidu Town.[2857] Kamara testified that the bush she fled to was close to Yegbema,[2858] about two and a half miles from Gandorhun and about one and a half miles from Kainako.[2859]

3103. para. 1134: Approximately three weeks later, Kamara saw about seven vehicles passing by. She "heard" that it was Johnny Paul Koroma heading towards the "Guinea end". She saw the same vehicles "coming towards Koidu end" about a week later.[2860] On cross-examination, Kamara confirmed that she first saw Johnny Paul Koroma after the ECOMOG intervention, when the AFRC and RUF were driven out of Freetown and he passed through the area where she was living. He was disguised as a woman.[2861]

3105. para. 1136: Kamara testified that while her husband was away finding food, she was discovered by two "rebels". The first was wearing a soldier's uniform and was armed with a gun. The second was wearing civilian clothing with combat khaki trousers and was armed with a stick with red cloth tied to it. The rebel with the gun pointed it at Kamara and ordered her to undress and lie down, which she did. He raped her. Kamara was unable to refuse due to the coercive circumstances. As this was happening, a third rebel, also armed with a stick, arrived. The other two rebels stood by as the rape occurred. After the first rebel raped her, Kamara was raped by "the other one". She testified that she did not agree to have sex with him, but the rebel with the gun was standing by them so she could not fight. After she had been raped by the second rebel, she was raped by the third. Kamara testified that these rapes happened in the "middle of the forest in the open".[2863]

3106. para. 1137: After the three rapes, the rebels took Kamara "into the hills" where she saw a number of other civilians who had been captured, some of whom she recognised. She and the other civilians were given loads to carry to Sawoa while the rebels walked in front and behind them. Kamara testified that she thought the rebels were going to kill her and could not think of escaping. Kamara estimates that it was over two and a half miles to Sawoa which was in the Kono "area".[2864]

3107. para. 1138: In Sawoa, Kamara heard the rebels address a man as "Lieutenant T" and heard him say that ECOMOG had captured Kailahun Town and Kono, that they were going to "show them that we own the country" and that it was now Operation No Living Thing. Lieutenant T ordered the rebels to kill the civilians.[2865] The Trial Chamber has found that the AFRC forces lost control of Kono District in around April 1998.[2866]

3108. para. 1139: Kamara testified that the rebels asked one of the captured civilians about Kamajors and Kabbah. When the civilian replied that she knew nothing, the rebels beat the civilians. Kamara testified that a boy of approximately 14 years brought a mortar and cut off the right hands of all the captured men, five in total, including Kamara's brother, who was seated next to her. After the five men had their hands amputated, Kamara was also struck on the upper arm. The rebels then separated out the young "virgins" from the women and took them away.[2867]

3109. para. 1140: Kamara testified that the rebels took her and the remaining captured women, six in total, in the direction of Benguema Fiama. Some of the rebels were armed with guns and some with sticks. At Fall Road, the rebels ordered the women to undress and lie down, which they did. Kamara thought that the rebels were going to kill them. A rebel with a gun undressed and had sex with her. She was unable to refuse. There were many other rebels standing by. Then another rebel, armed with a stick, also had sex with her. When he had finished, he took the stick and shoved it into her vagina. Kamara testified that she experienced great pain and bleeding and that she continued to feel pain at the time of her testimony some years later. Kamara testified that she then heard another rebel say that the women were to be killed.[2868] She then fled to a swamp, where she spent the night. She was bleeding and became unconscious. The following day, she was able to find her husband and three days later, she was brought to Connaught Hospital in Freetown by ECOMOG. She testified that she remained there "until the time the rebels entered Freetown".[2869]

3110. para. 1141: On cross-examination, Kamara admitted that she could not distinguish between the SLA and RUF, and that she considered anyone who was carried a gun and who "terrorised" civilians was a rebel.[2870] She insisted, however, that she was captured by "rebels" and not Kamajors and testified that the persons who captured her threatened to amputate her hand because they suspected her of being a Kamajor or a Kamajor supporter. She was unable to say who Lieutenant T's "boss" was but testified that the rebels said they had come from Freetown and were heading for Fiama. She stated that the men spoke Krio, Mende and "Liberian".[2871] By "Liberian" Kamara clarified that she heard them use the phrase "My meh, let's go" which she testified is the way Liberian people speak.[2872]

(iii) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

a. Evidence of sexual slavery in Freetown and the Western Area – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3111. para. 1150: Prosecution expert witness Beth Vann, as already discussed in relation to Kailahun and Kono Districts, reported that Sierra Leonean refugees fled the RUF and AFRC forces approximately March-April, 1998 and arrived in camps along the border in neighbouring Guinea.[2875] Vann reported that, according to the victims she interviewed, sexual slavery was a common practice, especially amongst the RUF and AFRC.[2876] Vann reported that "[a]ll of the newly arriving refugees I spoke with during this period clearly identified the perpetrators of these attacks as RUF and AFRC; […] the most commonly used term was "rebels".[2877] As with the victims of sexual violence from Kono and Kailahun interviewed in Guinea by Vann, victims from the Freetown area who fled in January (1999) suffered from mental health problems and sexually transmitted diseases. Some were socially isolated.[2878]

3112. para. 1151: Vann also worked with the Sierra Leonean Chapter of the Forum for African Women Educationalists (FAWE) from February-March 2002.[2879] The FAWE sexual violence counselling and health care programme, initiated after the 1999 Freetown invasion, cared for 1,862 female abductees within its first six months of operation, most from Freetown and some from Makeni and Kono.[2880] As a result of the sexual violence to which they were subjected, many women and girls treated by FAWE were pregnant or had babies, were rejected by their families and had no prospects for the future.[2881]

3113. para. 1152: Prosecution Witness TF1-081, a gynaecologist working with FAWE following the 6 January 1999 attack on Freetown, whose evidence was received pursuant to Rule 92*bis*, testified that in addition to the counselling team, a medical team was set up to give medical treatment to abductees who had returned to Freetown.[2882] From March through December, 1999, the program treated 1164 patients, 99% of whom had been abducted, the majority from Freetown and a few from Makeni and Kono.[2883] Of the 1168[2884] treated patients, 684 were victims of sexual abuse or rape.[2885] TF1-081 was not able to specify the exact number of patients who had been abducted during the January 6 invasion and did not know how the patients returned to Freetown.[2886]

3114. para. 1153: In a report prepared by the witness based on data collected monthly between March and December 1999,[2887] TF1-081 reported that 77% of patients were women;[2888] 58.5% had been sexually abused or raped; 52% suffered from sexually transmitted diseases and 17.1% had become pregnant.[2889] He explained that the report was compiled as a scientific paper[2890] with the purpose of documenting patient reports and illnesses and was not conducted for the purposes of scientific or sociological research.[2891]

3115. para. 1154: TF1-081 testified that as a gynaecologist, the majority of gynaecological and obstetric cases in the program were sent to him[2892] and that the "vast majority" of the patients he examined suffered from sexually transmitted diseases or other gynaecological problems or were pregnant.[2893] TF1-081 testified that it was not the purpose of his interactions with his patients to discover the identity of the perpetrators of the reported acts or to assess the truth of what they said,[2894] but he recorded that his patients had been abducted by the RUF and AFRC and that some had been "married" in the bush.[2895]

3116. para. 1155: TF1-150, who documented human rights abuses during the Freetown attack,[2896] reported that rape was a "standard practice" of the rebel combatants during the invasion and that some girls were subsequently abducted and taken away by the retreating rebels. TF1-150 documented reports of former abductees who indicated that women captives were raped "as a matter of course".[2897] Escapees reported that women and children were detained to cook and used for sexual purposes.[2898] Reports that boys and girls had been taken for sexual purposes or to cook food continued into February 1999.[2899]

3117. para. 1156: Reports by Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, tendered into evidence by the Prosecution, also document instances of civilian women and girls having been abducted and subjected to sexual slavery by members of the AFRC and/or RUF or by "rebels" during the attack on Freetown in similar circumstances to the incidents detailed above.

b. Captured girls and women used as sexual slaves in Benguema from approximately mid-February to March 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3118. para. 1157: Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a member of the AFRC,[2900] testified that following the retreat from Freetown, his troops attacked Tombo in mid-February and thereafter were based in Benguema until approximately March 1999.[2901] He testified that captured civilians brought by the troops to Benguema included young girls and women. The troops used the captured girls and women to pound rice, to cook, to carry loads and as "jungle wives". The women and girls were captured while the troops were in Kono and while en route to Benguema. Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that the women were "subdued" with weapons and would do whatever the troops wanted them to do, including having sexual intercourse with them. This happened throughout Benguema.[2902] The girls and women were not free to leave. Commanders who had "women under" them were required to monitor their movements and would be required to produce "whosoever was missing".[2903]

3119. para. 1158: Alimamy Bobson Sesay also testified that the SBUs in Benguema used the younger girls to cook, launder and pound rice. They also "used them as wives" meaning that they had sexual intercourse with them. The witness testified that he saw "things like that" happen while he was with the group in Benguema.[2904]

3120. para. 1159: Alex Tamba Brima, Five-Five, Hassan Papa Bangura, Abdul Sesay, Bioh Sesay, SLA Rambo Red Goat, Foday Bah Marah aka Bulldoze, Saidu Kambolai aka Basky, Tarawalli a.k.a. Goldteeth, O-Five, Junior Sherif and the witness were the commanders in Benguema at that time.[2905]

3121. para. 1160: TF1-375, a bodyguard attached to Superman, was with RUF Rambo under the command of Issa Sesay in Jui during the time of the Freetown invasion.[2906] He testified that his group received reports from the forces in Freetown during the invasion.[2907] The forces stayed in Freetown for two weeks. As the forces retreated, they started to burn down houses and abducted a large number of girls.[2908]

3122. para. 1161: TF1-029, whose evidence is discussed in further detail below, was abducted from Wellington and used as a sexual slave in Calaba Town and Benguema by a member of the AFRC. She testified that she heard that over a thousand other women had been abducted were also raped by the SLAs and the RUF. This was explained to the witness by a friend who told her that if they abducted a girl, "they have the right to rape you and [take] you to be their wives".[2909]

3123. para. 1162: Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator who testified that he was sent by Morris Kallon and Sam Bockarie to join SAJ Musa and Gullit in order to establish effective communications between the two groups prior to the invasion,[2910] testified that he was among the troops who attacked Freetown on 6 January 1999.[2911] He testified that when the troops retreated he gathered information from commercial radio and BBC media that the rebels in Freetown raped and abducted civilians.[2912] He stated that he heard a "radio communication" that Rambo's group and the Red Lion battalion had retreated and joined those who were retreating along the main highway to Waterloo and Masiaka.[2913] The group was comprised of combatants as well as abducted civilians from Freetown, including women who were being used as "bush wives".[2914]

c. TF1-029 used as a sexual slave in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3124. para. 1165: As noted in the section on Rape Witness TF1-029's evidence in the RUF trial was introduced through Rule 92*bis.* She was called for cross-examination in the instant trial on 22 October 2008 and testified to her abduction and rape by Major Arif as particularised above. The mixed group of RUF and SLA fighters brought the witness, together with 50 other civilians who were captured in the same house, to Calaba Town.[2916] The witness was held there against her will for two weeks[2917] and while she was forced to live in Major Arif's house together with his cousins and other RUF and SLA soldiers[2918] she was raped there by Major Arif ten times.[2919] The witness was sixteen years old when this occurred.[2920] TF1-029 further testified that she saw that the other women who were abducted were also raped.[2921]

3125. para. 1166: The rebels then took the witness to Benguema.[2922] She testified that when they arrived in Benguema, she was raped by Major Arif and that, again, she was raped ten times.[2923]

3126. para. 1167: TF1-029 testified that the RUF and "SLAs" also raped other girls while in Benguema. The witness knows this because the girls who had been captured and raped told her what had happened to them.[2924]

3127. para. 1168: Major Arif permitted the witness to leave Benguema on 10 March 1999.[2925] On-cross-examination, TF1-029 insisted that the rebels were mixed RUF and "SLA" but that most of the people she "dealt with" were SLAs, including Colonel O-Five, Brigadier Five-Five, Colonel Tito, and Colonel Rambo. O-Five, Tito and Five-Five were in control of the soldiers from Calaba Town up to Four Mile.[2926]

d. Akiatu Tholley used as a sexual slave in Allen Town and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3128. para. 1171: The evidence of Witness Akiatu Tholley of the invasion of her home and her subsequent abduction and rape has been recited in the sections on Unlawful Killings and Rape.[2928]

3129. para. 1172: Tholley was captured by a rebel named James. Tholley testified that James was accompanied by his "boys" whom he had captured and who carried his ammunition. James' boys gave Tholley and other captured civilians ammunition to carry and took them to Allen Town. James also had his "wives" with him.[2929]

3130. para. 1173: In Allen Town, James' boys stripped all the civilians naked and made them lie down on the ground, threatening to kill them. Tholley testified that in the same moment, an Alpha jet flew over head and Tholley, the rebels and the other captured civilians all fled.[2930] Tholley fled to a house where she encountered a woman named Fatmatta, one of James' wives, who gave her a dress to wear because she was naked. James soon discovered Tholley at the house.[2931]

3131. para. 1174: Tholley testified that James took her to the Mammy Dumbuya Church[2932] where she saw rebels raping, beating and killing many young girls, and that he raped her there.[2933]

3132. para. 1175: James took Tholley to Waterloo, Western Area together with his "wives" and "boys", the other rebels and other captured civilians.[2934] The group was led by Five-Five.[2935] Tholley testified that she remained with James in Waterloo for a "long time" but was unable to say how long.[2936] After Waterloo, James took Tholley to Masiaka, Bombali District[2937] where he was the ground commander and where the other commanders were Five-Five, Gold Teeth, Daramy and Cartel.[2938] Tholley testified that Gold Teeth and Daramy were also among the rebels who came to her house in Wellington during the Freetown invasion.[2939] Tholley testified that she stayed in Masiaka for more than two months and that Issa Sesay was present.[2940]

3133. para. 1176: Tholley testified that the rebels she was with were a "mixed group" and the leader was Five-Five.[2941] James told Tholley that he belonged to the STF and ULIMO and that he had been part of the Liberian war until "the time they joined the rebels". She did not know to which group Five-Five belonged.[2942]

3134. para. 1177: Five-Five, Gold Teeth, Daramy and Cartel are known members of the AFRC. The AFRC passed through the villages of Waterloo, Hastings, Wellington and Kissy and invaded Freetown on 6 January 1999; they retreated approximately three weeks later first to Benguema and then Waterloo.[2943] The Trial Chamber finds that Tholley's evidence of her movements with the rebels is consistent with other evidence of the pattern of AFRC movements at this time. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that James was a STF member and that he captured Tholley prior to the retreat from Freetown in late January 1999 and that she remained under his control in the Western Area until early April 1999.

3135. para. 1178: Tholley testified that James was her "husband" because he had captured her and because from the time he raped her in the Mammy Dumbuya Church, he continued to have sex with her against her will.[2944] Tholley did not want to be his wife.[2945] During the entirety of her capture, Tholley became pregnant three times.[2946] Tholley testified that some of James's other "wives" had also been captured during the fighting. Two were Liberian, one was from Kono and five were captured in Freetown.[2947]

e. Evidence that TF1-023 was used as a sexual slave in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile by a member of the AFRC from late January until March, 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes 3136. para. 1181: The evidence of TF1-023, whose evidence in the AFRC trial was introduced through Rule 92*bis*, was cross-examined in the present case on 22 October 2008. In her prior testimony she testified about her abduction and detention by Captain A and subsequent "handing over" to and rape by Colonel B as detailed in the foregoing paragraphs.

3137. para. 1182: TF1-023 remained in Calaba Town for three days. On the third day, she and the rebels walked to Allen Town, Waterloo and then Benguema where they remained for about four days. They then continued on to Lumpa and Four Mile where they stayed for about a month.[2949] On cross-examination, the witness clarified that she remained with "the armed men" in Freetown from 22 to 29 January. She left Freetown on 29 January, it took about two days to reach Benguema. After three days at Benguema they went to Four Mile where they stayed for approximately a month.[2950] Colonel B was not always with the witness; he joined her in Benguema and again in Four Mile. The witness does not know where he was the interim.[2951]

3138. para. 1183: The witness lived with Colonel B for about three weeks in Four Mile, after which time he left her and went to Makeni. During those three weeks, he asked her to cook, but she did not as she did not know how. During the three weeks she continued to "sleep" with him because he told her that she was his "wife". He never asked her consent before sex. The witness was not able to leave.[2952] There were approximately 400 armed rebels at Four Mile. Some "people" at Four Mile tried to escape but they were beaten. This made the witness afraid and she decided not to try to run away.[2953] Colonel B also had an armed guard follow her so she could not escape.[2954]

3139. para. 1184: When Colonel B left for Makeni, he left the witness in the "care of" a captain, whom the witness identified in a Confidential Exhibit.[2955] The Trial Chamber will refer to this person as "Captain C". The witness remained in the custody of Captain C from approximately March through August.[2956]

3140. para. 1185: TF1-023 testified that she knew of other captured women in Lumpa who had been given to rebels as "wives".[2957] In Lumpa, she knew ten others whose "husbands" were lieutenants or ordinary soldiers, but none of the other women's rebel "husbands" were commanders. As a commander's wife, the witness was given special treatment. She was not forced to do "anything" and those with lower ranks gave her respect. To show her respect, they would call her "de mammy".[2958] The witness testified that her cousin was also captured in Calaba Town and that Captain A took her cousin as his "wife".[2959]

3141. para. 1186: TF1-023 testified that the rebels she named in the exhibits told her that they were members of the AFRC. She first saw their senior commander, Brima or "Gullit" in Benguema. He was a Brigadier at the time. At Four Mile, Colonel B told her that the senior commander was "Bazzy". He used to visit Colonel B and the witness would see him regularly.[2960] On cross-examination, TF1-023 testified that a boy called Alhassan identified Bazzy to her at Four Mile, but that "everyone told" her that Bazzy was the senior commander. She did not talk with Bazzy.[2961] On cross-examination, TF1-023 testified that throughout her "journey" the rebels were a mixed group of AFRC and RUF, but that the ones she had direct contact with were all AFRC.[2962]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Crimes Against Humanity ("CAH")

3142. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – paras. 504 – 515 [1383].

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

3143. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 547 – 559 [1395].

(iii) Applicable law – Sexual Slavery

3144. para. 418: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the following elements of the crime of sexual slavery must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

i. The perpetrator exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such a person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty.

ii. The perpetrator caused such person or persons to engage in one or more acts of a sexual nature;

iii. The perpetrator intended to engage in the act of sexual slavery or acted with the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur.[1029]

3145. para. 419: The actus reus of the offence of sexual slavery comprises two elements, first, that the Accused exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership of a person or persons (the slavery element) and second, that the enslavement involved sexual acts (the sexual element).[1030] The mens rea for the violation consists in the intentional exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership, over the victim.[1031]

3146. para. 420: The primary characteristic of enslavement is the absence of the consent or free will of the victim.[1032] In determining whether the perpetrator exercised a power attaching to the right of ownership over the victim, the Chamber will take into account the existence of such factors or indicia as "control of the victim's movement, control of their physical environment, psychological control, measures taken to deter escape, use or threat of force or coercion against the victim, duration, assertion of exclusivity, subjection to cruel treatment and abuse, control of sexuality and forced labour", a list that is by no means exhaustive.[1033] There is no requirement that there be any payment or exchange in order to establish the exercise of ownership.[1034] The deprivation of liberty may include exacting forced labour or otherwise reducing a person to servile status.[1035] The Chamber also notes that the expression "similar deprivation of liberty" has been interpreted to cover situations in which the victims may not have been physically confined, but were otherwise unable to leave the perpetrator's custody as they would have nowhere else to go and feared for their lives.[1036]

3147. para. 421: In addition to proving enslavement, the Prosecution must also prove that the Accused caused the enslaved person to engage in an act or acts of a sexual nature. The acts of sexual violence are the additional element that, when combined with evidence of slavery, constitutes sexual slavery.[1037]

3148. para. 422: The Trial Chamber notes that in this case, unlike the AFRC case and the RUF case, "forced marriage" is not charged in the Indictment. Nevertheless, the evidence adduced by the Prosecution under the charges related to Sexual Violence includes extensive testimony by women and girls regarding forced conjugal association to which they were subjected. In the absence of the charge of "forced marriage", the Trial Chamber has considered this evidence with regard to the charges in the Indictment, as well as the past jurisprudence of the SCSL with regard to this issue.

3149. para. 423: The Trial Chamber notes that the review of this issue by the Court has been hampered by the erroneous pleadings of the Prosecution with regard to various forms of sexual violence. The Trial Chamber recalls that in the AFRC case it was faced with a procedural challenge raised by the failure of the Prosecution to distinguish between the crime of sexual violence and the crime of sexual slavery. Count 7 of the Indictment in that case, sexual slavery, was dismissed as duplicitous. Justice Doherty opined that the count need not have been dismissed in its entirety. Justice Sebutinde expressed the view that the defect in the indictment could be cured by an amendment dividing the offences into separate counts. In its Judgement in the AFRC case, the Trial Chamber noted that the Prosecution had not availed itself of Justice Sebutinde's suggested remedy.[1038]

3150. para. 424: In the Trial Chamber's view, the Prosecution erred in other Indictments by charging "forced marriage" as a crime that falls within the scope of the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts. Because it was charged in this manner, the Trial Chamber was required to review the charge in this manner. In her dissent in the AFRC Judgement, Justice Doherty observed, "the abduction of girls and their coercion into marital unions, as described by the Prosecution expert and by witnesses, is not the same nor comparable to arranged or traditional marriages".[1039] She defined the crucial element of "forced marriage" to be "the imposition, by threat or physical force arising from the perpetrator's words or other conduct, of a forced conjugal association by the perpetrator over the victim".[1040] Similarly Justice Sebutinde, in her concurrence in the AFRC Judgement, described this phenomenon as "the forceful abduction and holding in captivity of women and girls ('bush wives') against their will, for purposes of sexual gratification of their 'bush husbands' and for gender-specific forms of labour including cooking cleaning, washing clothes (conjugal duties)".[1041] The Trial Chamber considers, as expressed by both Justice Doherty and Justice Sebutinde in the AFRC case, that the sexual and non-sexual acts involved in this forced conjugal association cannot be considered separately as they are integrated in this form of abuse.

3151. para. 425: The Trial Chamber considers that, in the absence of a charge of "forced marriage", the evidence adduced by the witnesses of forced conjugal association can be considered afresh with their testimony as a starting point. In the Trial Chamber's view the term "forced marriage" is a misnomer for the forced conjugal association that was imposed on women and girls in the circumstances of armed conflict, and which involved both sexual slavery and forced labour in the form of domestic work such as cooking and cleaning.

3152. para. 426: The Trial Chamber notes that in the absence of any specific charge relating to forced conjugal association, which was extensively testified to in this case, the elements of sexual slavery are satisfied, that is the deprivation of liberty and the imposition of non-consensual sex. The Appeals Chamber decision in the AFRC case noted other elements that go beyond sexual slavery as the basis for its decision, namely the "forced conjugal association with another person resulting in great suffering, or serious physical or mental injury on the part of the victim" and "a relationship of exclusivity between the 'husband' and 'wife'".[1042] The Trial Chamber does not consider the nomenclature of "marriage" to be helpful in describing what happened to the victims of this forced conjugal association and finds it inappropriate to refer to their perpetrators as "husbands".

3153. para. 427: What happened to the girls and women abducted in Sierra Leone and forced into this conjugal association was not marriage in the universally understood sense of a consensual and sacrosanct union, and should rather, in the Trial Chamber's view, be considered a conjugal form of enslavement. While noting that all forms of forced marriage violate human rights under international law, the abuses perpetrated on women and girls in this context is clearly criminal in nature, and of sufficient gravity as to constitute a crime against humanity. It constitutes a form of enslavement in that the perpetrator exercised the powers attaching to the right of ownership over their "bush wives" and imposed on them a deprivation of liberty, causing them to engage in sexual acts as well as other acts. The Trial Chamber notes that conjugal relations involve both sexual and non-sexual acts. All of these forced acts, both sexual and non-sexual acts, fall within the definition of enslavement in the view of the Trial Chamber. As noted by the Appeals Chamber, "bush wives" were "coerced to perform a variety of conjugal duties including regular sexual intercourse, forced domestic labour such as cleaning and cooking for the 'husband', endure forced pregnancy, and to care for and bring up children of the 'marriage'".[1043]

3154. para. 428: With respect to the powers of ownership, the Trial Chamber notes that there is no differentiation between the forced sexual and non-sexual acts described, and the Appeals Chamber did not express the view that these acts did not constitute enslavement, but merely that they were not limited to sexual forms of slavery. The Trial Chamber is of the view that the conjugal slavery best describes these acts, and while they may constitute more than sexual slavery, they nevertheless satisfy the elements of sexual slavery.

3155. para. 429: The Trial Chamber considers that part of the confusion created by the Prosecution's charge of "forced marriage" was its presentation as the conceptualization of a new crime. In light of the above considerations, the Trial Chamber considers that conjugal slavery is better conceptualized as a distinctive form of the crime of sexual slavery, with the additional component described by the Appeals Chamber. However, the Trial Chamber is of the view that this additional component, which relates to forced conjugal labour, is simply a descriptive component of a distinctive form of sexual slavery. It is not a definitional element of a new crime, in the same way that gang rape is a distinctive form of rape, yet nevertheless falls within the scope of the crime of rape.

3156. para. 430: The Trial Chamber considers that unlike the concept of "forced marriage", as it was presented by the Prosecution in the AFRC and other cases before this Court, conjugal slavery is not a new crime with additional elements. Rather it is a practice with certain additional and distinctive features that relate to the conjugal aspects of the relationship between the perpetrator and the victim, such as the claim by the perpetrator to a particular victim as his "wife" and the exercise of exclusive sexual control over her, barring others from sexual access to the victim, as well as the compulsion of the victim to perform domestic work such as cooking and cleaning. In the Trial Chamber's view, these are not new elements that require the conceptualization of a new crime.

(iv) Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

a. Women used as sexual slaves by the RUF throughout Kailahun District – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3157. para. 1038: Based on the witness's admission that women were in an environment of fear and his evasive demeanour while giving evidence on this topic the Trial Chamber finds the witness's statements that abducted women were treated with "love" and not forced to have sexual relations, to be contrary to the overwhelming volume of evidence and to be disingenuous and unreliable.

b. Captured civilians used as sexual slaves in Pendembu – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3158. para. 1043: The Trial Chamber finds that by depriving the women of their liberty, forcing them to engage in sexual acts, and in some cases forcing them to do labour, the perpetrators intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them, thus committing the crime of sexual slavery in Pendembu from November 1996 to July 2001.

c. Evidence of sexual slavery in Buedu from November 1996 until 1998 – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3159. para. 1053: Given the inconsistencies in Bangura's testimony regarding the time of her alleged sexual enslavement(s) in 1994-1998, the Trial Chamber is unable to find beyond reasonable doubt that these events occurred after 30 November 1996. Further, due to inconsistencies relating to the perpetrators and the location of the alleged crimes, the Trial Chamber is also unable to determine the identity of the person or persons who committed the crimes alleged or the location in which they occurred. However the Trial Chamber accepts Bangura's evidence that women would be captured by fighters when they went to the war front and that these women became "wives" or would stay with fighters as either house help or as bodyguards.[2658] The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has not proved the required elements for the crime of sexual slavery in relation to this witness from November 1996 through November or December 1998 but that Banguara's evidence that women were captured and used as "wives" and house help demonstrates that sexual slavery was widespread in Buedu and may be relevant as corroboration for specific instances of sexual slavery described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

d. Evidence of sexual slavery in Kailahun District after February 1998 – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3160. para. 1060: Based on the evidence of Augustine Mallah and Aruna Gbonda, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of women were held in captivity by AFRC and RUF fighters, who thereby exercised powers of ownership over them and forced to work for them and to have sexual intercourse with them in Buedu and Kailahun Town. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators intended to use the captured women and girls as sexual slaves as shown by the restriction on their movements and the repeated sexual acts perpetrated upon them under the threat of force. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt the elements of sexual slavery in Kailahun District from February to April 1998.

e. Evidence of Sexual Slavery after February 1998 to December 1999 in Buedu – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3161. para. 1066: Based on Koker's evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between 1998 and 1999 AFRC/RUF members in Buedu captured and detained women and girls for long periods thereby exercising powers of ownership over them, and that while in captivity, these women and girls were used for sexual purposes by their captors. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that the AFRC/RUF members intended to use the captured women as sexual slaves. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC/RUF members in Buedu committed acts of sexual slavery against an unknown number of women and girls from March 1998 to December 1999.

f. TF1-189 used as a sexual slave by RUF members in Kailahun Town from August 1998 until September 1998 – Kailahun District – Sexual Slavery

3162. para. 1071: The Trial Chamber finds that between August and September, 1998 in Kailahun, an RUF rebel named Commander A, named by TF1-189 in private session and loyal to Superman, together with Gogomeh and/or other rebels, exercised the powers of ownership over TF1-189 by holding her in captivity and forcing her to labour for their benefit. The Trial Chamber also finds that Commander A forced TF1-189 to have sexual intercourse with him, as he had done previously in Koidu Town. The Trial Chamber finds that Commander A intended to use TF1-189 as a sexual slave. Accordingly the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

3163. para. 1072: Given the coercive capture of female civilians, their forced detention and inability to leave, and the forced sexual acts perpetrated upon them during their capture the Trial Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that AFRC/RUF members used and intended to use the captured women and girls as sexual slaves. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved, beyond a reasonable doubt that sexual slavery occurred in the Kailahun District from November 1996 to 18 January 2002.

3164. para. 1073: The Trial Chamber finds in each of the aforementioned crimes mentioned in this section concerning Kailahun District, that the perpetrators intentionally exercised powers of ownership over their victims by depriving them of their liberty, and in some cases forcing them to work, and in all cases the victims were forced to engage in acts of a sexual nature thus constituting the crime of sexual slavery.

3165. para. 1074: Based on the foregoing, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) An unknown number of women and girls captured in Kenema District were used by AFRC and RUF members as sexual slaves between February and March 1998 in Buedu and Kailahun Town;

(ii) Between March 1998 and December 1999, an unknown number of captured women and girls were used as sexual slaves by AFRC/RUF members in Buedu;

(iii) TF1-189 was used as a sexual slave by a member of the RUF at Kailahun Town from August to September 1998.

3166. para. 1075: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2700] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the incidences of sexual slavery proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kailahun District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned incidences of sexual slavery in Kailahun District constitute sexual slavery as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

(v) Kono District – Sexual Slavery

a. Abducted Women from Bombali and Kono Districts used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town and Superman Ground – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3167. para. 1089: The Trial Chamber finds that between 1 February 1998 and 31 December 1998 in Koidu Town and at such camps as Superman Ground members of the AFRC, RUF, AFRC/RUF Junta and Liberian fighters abducted an unknown number of women and girls and forcefully detained them and forced them to have sexual relations. The Trial Chamber finds that the Commanders of the RUF and AFRC knew, promoted and encouraged these acts by promulgating Operation Pay Yourself. Based on the evidence and the context in which the crimes occurred, the Trial Chamber finds that the acts of the perpetrators formed part of both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population and that the perpetrators had knowledge that their acts formed part of a widespread attack against a civilian population. However the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence is not sufficiently specific to return a finding of guilt but that it may be considered as corroboration for specific instances of sexual slavery described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

b. Abducted Women from Koidu Town and Mortema used as sexual slaves – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3168. para. 1092: The Trial Chamber finds that between 1 February 1998 and 31 December 1998 in Koidu members of the AFRC, RUF, AFRC/RUF Junta and Liberian fighters abducted an unknown number of women and girls and forcefully detained them and forced them to have sexual relations. Given the context in which the crimes occurred, the Trial Chamber finds that the acts of the perpetrators formed part of both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population and that the perpetrators had knowledge that their acts formed part of such an attack against a civilian population. However the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence is not sufficiently specific to return a finding of guilt but that it may be considered as corroboration for specific instances of sexual slavery described by witnesses testifying before the Trial Chamber.

c. Evidence of Sexual Slavery at Wondedu – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3169. para. 1094: Based on Teh's evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that RUF members detained an unknown number of women thereby exercising powers of ownership over them and caused the women they had captured to engage in acts of a sexual nature. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that RUF members intended to use the captured women as sexual slaves. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that RUF members in Wondedu committed acts of sexual slavery against an unknown number of women and girls in April 1998.

d. Women used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town in February 1998 – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3170. para. 1098: The Trial Chamber finds Koker's evidence that he travelled with the group of captured civilians and was in Koidu Town where he observed AFRC and RUF fighters take captured civilians as "wives" to be reliable. Based on Koker's evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that an unknown number of women were captured in Masiaka, Makeni and Koidu Town and detained by their captors and were forced to have sexual intercourse with them. The Trial Chamber finds that these women were used as sexual slaves by the retreating AFRC and RUF fighters in Kono District and further finds that AFRC/RUF members intended to use the captured women and girls as sexual slaves. Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been established beyond reasonable doubt.

e. Women used as sexual slaves in Koidu Town from March to June 1998 – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3171. para. 1102: Alimamy Bobson Sesay, as an SLA commander who travelled throughout Kono District, saw and knew about the conduct of fighters. He also stated that he had his own sexual slave. The Trial Chamber finds his evidence to be reliable. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of women and girls by depriving them of their liberty and forced them to engage in acts of a sexual nature. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been established beyond reasonable doubt.

f. RUF and AFRC fighters brought sexual slaves from Koidu Town to PC Ground and Superman Ground in 1998 – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3172. para. 1108: Based on the consistent evidence of Isaac Mongor, TF1-375 and Alice Pyne, in addition to the evidence of Perry Kamara referred to above, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of women were intentionally abducted, held in captivity and forced to have sexual intercourse with their AFRC, RUF and STF captors throughout Kono District and in particular at PC Ground and Superman Ground.. The Trial Chamber finds that these women were used as sexual slaves by their AFRC, RUF and STF captors who intended to use the detained women and girls as sexual slaves. Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been established beyond reasonable doubt.

g. TF1-189 used as a sexual slave by RUF members at Koidu Town – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3173. para. 1116: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that between March and August 1998 in Koidu Town, Rebel A, a member of the RUF, exercised powers of ownership over TF1-189 by holding her in captivity either independently or with the assistance of other rebels and thereby deprived her of her liberty. Rebel A and/or the other rebels working with Rebel A, forced TF1-189 to labour for their benefit.

3174. para. 1117: The Trial Chamber also finds that during this period, Rebel A and two other RUF rebels engaged in acts of a sexual nature with TF1-189. From her evidence describing the environment of violence and coercion, the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-189 did not consent to these sexual acts and that Rebel A and the two other RUF rebels intended to use TF1-189 as a sexual slave.

3175. para. 1118: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

h. Use of Finda Gbamanja as sexual slave by a RUF member in Koidu Town – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3176. para. 1127: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that between approximately March and April 1998, in Koidu Town, Peppe and Sergeant Foday, RUF rebels loyal to Superman, exercised powers of ownership over Gbamanja by holding her in captivity, depriving her of her liberty and by forcing her to labour for their benefit. The Trial Chamber also finds that Peppe and Sergeant Foday forced Gbamanja to engage repeatedly in acts of a sexual nature. The Trial Chamber infers from the environment of violence and coercion, Gbamanja's young age at the time of the events, in addition to her evidence of capture following the killing of her father, that Gbamanja did not consent to these sexual acts. The Trial Chamber finds Peppe and Sergeant Foday intended these acts. The Trial Chamber further finds the witness's evidence is indicative of a recognised system of ownership and distribution of captured girls as sexual slaves among the AFRC/RUF troops loyal to Superman. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

i. Use of Finda Gbamanja as a sexual slave by rebels at Superman Ground – Kono District – Sexual Slavery 3177. para. 1132: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that between approximately April and October 1998, at Superman Ground, Gbamanja was held in captivity by Sergeant Foday and Mamie, both of whom forced her to labour for their benefit. During this time Sergeant Foday, with the assistance of Mamie, continued to intentionally exercise powers of ownership over Gbamanja by depriving her of her liberty, forcing her to have sex, and by ultimately sending her to work in Giema. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

j. Use of Sia Kamara as a sexual slave by rebels near Yegbema and Sawoa – Kono District – Sexual Slavery

3178. para. 1142: Kamara's description of events corresponds with the movements of the AFRC and RUF. Given her testimony that one of the rebels who captured her was dressed in a soldier's uniform; that "Lieutenant T" stated that they would show ECOMOG that "we own the country" and that it was now Operation No Living Thing; that the rebels asked the civilians about Kamajors and Kabbah and that they suspected Kamara of being a Kamajor; and her testimony that the rebels stated that they had come from Freetown, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Kamara was abducted by members of the AFRC/RUF and not Kamajors.

3179. para. 1143: On the basis of Kamara's testimony, the Trial Chamber finds that Kamara was abducted from a location in the bush near Yegbema in March/April 1998 by members of the AFRC/RUF, that she was forced to engage in sexual acts by three members of the AFRC/RUF in this same location, and that she was later forced to engage in sexual acts and sexually brutalised by two other members of the same group of AFRC/RUF at Fall Road between Sawoa and Benguema Fiama. The Trial Chamber finds that the members of the AFRC/RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Kamara by depriving her of her liberty through her abduction and detention; by exacting forced labour from her by forcing her to carry a load; and that she was forced to engage repeatedly in acts of a sexual nature by multiple members of the group. The Trial Chamber finds from Kamara's testimony of her inability to refuse to submit to these acts and from the environment of violence and coercion that Kamara did not consent to these acts. The Trial Chamber finds that the five members of the AFRC/RUF who detained, raped and forced Kamara to carry loads intended to exercise these acts. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

3180. para. 1144: The Trial Chamber finds in each of the aforementioned crimes mentioned in this section concerning Kono District, that the perpetrators intentionally exercised powers of ownership over their victims by depriving them of their liberty, and in some cases forcing them to work, and in all cases the victims were forced to engage in acts of a sexual nature thus constituting the crime of sexual slavery.

3181. para. 1145: The Trial Chamber has found the elements of sexual slavery have been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt for the following acts:

(i) An unknown number of women were used as sexual slaves by RUF and AFRC fighters in Koidu Town in February 1998;

(ii) An unknown number of women were used as sexual slaves by RUF and AFRC fighters in Koidu Town in March to June 1998;

(iii) An unknown number of women were used as sexual slaves by RUF, AFRC and STF fighters at Superman Ground and PC Ground in around April 1998;

(iv) TF1-189 was used as sexual slave by members of the RUF in Koidu Town between 12 March 1998 and August 1998;

(v) An unknown number of women were used as sexual slaves by members of the RUF in Wondedu in April 1998;

(vi) Finda Gbamanja was used as a sexual slave by a member of the RUF in Koidu Town from approximately March/April 1998;

(vii) Finda Gbamanja was used as a sexual slave by rebels loyal to Superman at Superman Ground from approximately April to October 1998;

(viii) Sia Kamara was used as a sexual slave by members of the AFRC/RUF loyal to Superman near Yegbema and Sawoa in approximately March/April 1998.

3182. para. 1146: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2873] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the incidences of sexual slavery proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kono District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned incidences of sexual slavery in Kono District constitute sexual slavery as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

(vi) Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual Slavery

a. Captured girls and women used as sexual slaves in Benguema from approximately mid-February to March 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual Slavery

3183. para. 1163: As discussed in relation to his evidence of sexual slavery in Kono District, the Trial Chamber notes that Alimamy Bobson Sesay was a commander who was present in locations where crimes were occurring and finds his evidence to be reliable. Based on his evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that members of the AFRC/RUF, the STF and Liberian fighters intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of women and girls by depriving them of their liberty and controlling their movements in Benguema until approximately March 1999. The Trial Chamber further finds that the women and girls were forced to engage in acts of a sexual nature with their captors and that their captors intended to use these women and girls as sexual slaves. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been established beyond reasonable doubt.

b. TF1-029 used as a sexual slave in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema – Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual Slavery

3184. para. 1169: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that between 22 January 1999 and 10 March 1999, which is during and after the indictment period, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema, members of the AFRC/RUF including Major Arif, an AFRC soldier, exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of women including TF1-029 by abducting them and holding them in captivity either independently or with the assistance of other rebels and thereby depriving them of their liberty. The Trial Chamber also finds that during this period, members of the AFRC/RUF, including Major Arif, engaged in acts of a sexual nature with an unknown number of women and girls including TF1-029, namely repeated rape. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the evidence of the environment of violence and coercion, together with the testimony of TF1-029 that she was "forced to have sex", that she did not consent to these sexual acts. The Trial Chamber finds that Major Arif intended to use TF1-028 and an unknown number of women and girls as sexual slaves. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt.

c. Akiatu Tholley used as a sexual slave in Allen Town and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual Slavery

3185. para. 1179: On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that between late January and early April, 1999 James, an STF fighter, exercised powers of ownership over Tholley by holding her in captivity and depriving her of her liberty. The Trial Chamber finds that during this period James caused Tholley to engage in acts of a sexual nature, namely rape, by having sex with Tholley against her will. The Trial Chamber finds that James intended to use Tholley as a sexual slave. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt.

d. Evidence that TF1-023 was used as a sexual slave in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile by a member of the AFRC from late January until March, 1999 – Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual Slavery 3186. para. 1187: The Trial Chamber finds that between 22 January and approximately March, 1999, which extends beyond the Indictment period for sexual slavery in Freetown and the Western Area, Colonel B, a member of the AFRC under the command of Alex Tamba Brima and Brima Bazzy Kamara, exercised powers of ownership over TF1-023 by holding her in captivity and depriving her of her liberty. The Trial Chamber finds that during this period, Colonel B caused TF1-023 to engage in acts of a sexual nature, namely rape, by having sexual intercourse with TF1-023 against her will. The Trial Chamber finds that Colonel B intended to use Tholley as a sexual slave. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of sexual slavery have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

e. Conclusion – Sexual Slavery

3188. para. 1189: The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved the following instances of sexual slavery beyond a reasonable doubt:

(i) An unknown number of women and girls were used as sexual slaves by AFRC fighters in Benguema until approximately March 1999;

(ii) TF1-029 was used as a sexual slave by Major Arif, an ex-SLA/AFRC soldier, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema from late January to March 1999;

(iii) Akiatu Tholley was used as a sexual slave by an STF fighter named James in Allen Town and Waterloo from approximately late January through early April 1999;

(iv) TF1-023 was used as a sexual slave by a member of the AFRC in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile from late January through March 1999.

3189. para. 1190: The Trial Chamber finds in each of the aforementioned crimes mentioned in this section concerning Kailahun District, that the perpetrators intentionally exercised powers of ownership over their victims by depriving them of their liberty, and in some cases forcing them to work, and in all cases the victims were forced to engage in acts of a sexual nature thus constituting the crime of sexual slavery.

3190. para. 1191: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed both a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2963] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the incidences of sexual slavery proved by the Prosecution in respect of Freetown and the Western Area formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned incidences of sexual slavery in Freetown and the Western Area constitute sexual slavery as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

(b) Factual Findings

3196. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

3197. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

3198. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

3199. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3203. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[144]

3204. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[145]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

3205. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[146]

[144] RUF Indictment, para. 40.

(iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

3206. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages." Acts of sexual violence included the following:[147]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the district including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-Town, Foender (or Foendu), Tomenduh, Fokoiya, Wondedu, and AFRC/RUF camps such as "superman camp" and Kissi-Town camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the district and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[148]
>
> ii. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono, and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[149]
>
> iii. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages," and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[150]
> iv. Kailahun District: At all times relevant to this indictment, an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the district, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[151]

v. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages," and/or forced them into other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[152]

vi. Port Loko District: About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces fled to various locations in Porto Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the district were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[153]

3207. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 8: Other inhuman act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.[154]

3230. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 942 – 963 [1598].

(iii) Applicable law – Sexual slavery

3231. para. 152: The Indictment in Count 7 charges the Accused with sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the abduction and use as sexual slaves of women and girls in Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Kailahun District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District. The Accused are also alleged to be responsible for the subjection of women and girls to other forms of sexual violence in Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District. All of the allegations are said to have occurred in different time periods relevant to the Indictment.[295]

3232. para. 153: As the Chamber has held that Count 7 of the Indictment is bad for duplicity and that the appropriate remedy is to proceed on the basis that the offence of sexual slavery is properly charged within Count 7 and to strike out the charge of "any other form of sexual violence, the Chamber will here consider only the elements of the offence of "sexual slavery".[296]

3233. para. 154: The specific offence of sexual slavery was included for the first time as a war crime and a crime against humanity in the ICC Statute.[297] The offence is characterised as a crime against humanity under Article 2(g) of the Statute and the Indictments before the Special Court were the first to specifically indict persons with the crime of sexual slavery.

3234. para. 155: By this assertion, the Chamber does not suggest that the offence is entirely new. It is the Chamber's view that sexual slavery is a particularised form of slavery or enslavement and acts which could be classified as sexual slavery have been prosecuted as enslavement in the past. In the Kunarac case, for instance, the Accused were convicted of the offences of enslavement, rape and outrages on personal dignity for having detained women for months and subjected them to rape and other sexual acts.[298] In that case, the ICTY Appeals Chamber emphasised that "it finds that enslavement, even if based on sexual exploitation, is a distinct offence from that of rape."[299]

3235. para. 156: The Chamber opines that the prohibition of the more particular offences such as sexual slavery and sexual violence criminalises actions that were already criminal. The Chamber considers that the specific offences are designed to draw attention to serious crimes that have been historically overlooked and to recognise the particular nature of sexual violence that has been used, often with impunity, as a tactic of war to humiliate, dominate and instil fear in victims, their families and communities during armed conflict.[300]

3236. para. 157: As discussed in more detail below, this Chamber takes the view that the offence of enslavement is prohibited at customary international law and entails individual criminal responsibility.[301] The Chamber is satisfied that this would equally apply to the offence of sexual slavery which is "an international crime and a violation of jus cogens norms in the exact same manner as slavery."[302]

3237. para. 158: Consistent with the Rule 98 Decision, the Chamber has held that the relevant constitutive elements of sexual slavery are:

> (i) The Accused exercised any or all the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such a person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty;
>
> (ii) The Accused caused such person or persons to engage in one or more acts of a sexual nature; and
> (iii) The Accused intended to exercise the act of sexual slavery or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur.[303]

3238. para. 159: This Chamber considers that the actus reus of the offence of sexual slavery is made up of two elements: first, that the Accused exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person or persons[304] (the slavery element) and second, that the enslavement involved sexual acts (the sexual element).

3239. para. 160: In determining whether or not the enslavement element of the actus reus has been established, the Chamber notes that the list of actions that reflect the exercise of a power of ownership that is included in the element is not exhaustive. The Chamber adopts the following indicia of enslavement identified by the ICTY in Kunarac et al.: "control of someone's movement, control of physical environment, psychological control, measures taken to prevent or deter escape, force, threat of force or coercion, duration, assertion of exclusivity, subjection to cruel treatment and abuse, control of sexuality and forced labour."[305]

3240. para. 161: The Chamber also notes that the expression "similar deprivation of liberty" may cover situations in which the victims may not have been physically confined, but were otherwise unable to leave as they would have nowhere else to go and feared for their lives.[306]

3241. para. 162: To convict an Accused for this offence, the Prosecution must also prove that the Accused caused the enslaved person to engage in acts of a sexual nature. The acts of sexual violence are the additional element that, when combined with evidence of slavery, constitutes sexual slavery.[307]

3242. para. 163: The Chamber emphasises that the lack of consent of the victim to the enslavement or to the sexual acts is not an element to be proved by the Prosecution, although whether or not there was consent may be relevant from an evidentiary perspective in establishing whether or not the Accused exercised any of the powers attaching to the right of ownership.[308] The Chamber subscribes to the statement of the ICTY Appeals Chamber that "circumstances which render it impossible to express consent may be sufficient to presume the absence of consent."[309] The duration of the enslavement is not an element of the crime, although it may be relevant in determining the quality of the relationship.[310]

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

e. Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence – Pleading

3247. para.456: The Kallon Defence argued that Count 7 charges two separate and distinct crimes ("sexual slavery" and "any other form of sexual violence") as one, and thus violates the rule against multiplicity, duplicity or vagueness.[870] The Kallon Defence noted that the Appeals Chamber found a similar Count in the AFRC Indictment was duplicitous, and noted the remedies set out by the Appeals Chamber in the AFRC Appeal Judgement as available to the Trial Chamber in light of this duplicity. It also noted the Prosecutor's Notice re Count 7 of the Indictment, in which the Prosecution elected to proceed on the basis of sexual slavery alone.[871] However, it submitted that the Prosecution may not unilaterally elect which crime to proceed upon. The Kallon Defence argued that, in accordance with the AFRC Appeal Judgement, the power of election lies solely with the Trial Chamber and that the most appropriate remedy is that it should make that election only after a comprehensive review of the evidence, and a determination of which of the elements of the duplicitous Counts the defence has defended fully.[872]

3249. para.458: The Chamber has considered the remedies available to it as outlined by the Appeals Chamber.[874] In so doing, we have taken into account the Prosecution's Notice re Count 7 of the Indictment in which the Prosecution requested permission to proceed on the basis of the offence of sexual slavery and not on the offence of any other form of sexual violence.[875] It is the considered view of this Chamber that the Prosecution cannot unilaterally elect upon which crime to proceed.[876] However, in light of all of the circumstances of this trial and the evidence that has been led, the Chamber is satisfied that the appropriate remedy is to proceed on the basis that the offence of sexual slavery is properly charged within Count 7 and to strike out the charge of "any other form of sexual violence".[877] As a result, the Chamber will only consider whether or not the offence of sexual slavery has been established in this case.

3250. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 24 (p.704): In this part of the Opinion, I address in some detail the issue of duplicity as an alleged defect in the form of the Indictment. The issue is so fundamental that it needs some further judicial elucidation and elaboration and in the light of what, in my respectful opinion, is some degree of opaqueness in the existing law. Duplicity remains a contentious issue in law, but some principles are settled and beyond question.

3251. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B. Thompson – para. 25 (p.704): The alleged irregularity stems from the formulation of Counts 7 and 12. Count 7 is formulated in these terms:

> Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, A CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.8 of the Statute

3252. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 26 (p.704): In effect, the said Count charges each of the Accused with an unspecified number of separate and distinct offences of a "sexual nature, to wit, sexual slavery" and "any other form of sexual violence." I opine that it is settled as anything can be said to be in the field of criminal law that it is impermissible to charge, whether under national criminal law or international criminal law, an Accused person in a single Count with more than one offence. This goes to the issue of the principle of legality. Charging in this way leads to uncertainty, vagueness and duplicity.

3253. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B. Thompson – para. 27 (p.704-705): The case-law and textual authorities make it clear that where an Indictment adopts the Count system of charging offences, and more than one crime is charged in a Count or where allegations are framed in such a way to create uncertainty and vagueness the particular Count is defective on grounds of duplicity, sometimes referred to as multiplicity.

3254. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B. Thompson – para. 28 (p.705): The preponderant view of the law deducible from a comparative analysis of the jurisprudence of most of the major criminal law systems of the world is that this mode of laying charges in an Indictment offends one basic rule governing specificity as to the form of the indictment. It is that each Count must contain a specific offence. Count 7 is accordingly bad for duplicity. This finding notwithstanding, I concur in the position taken in the Main Judgement to proceed on the basis that the crime of sexual slavery is properly charged in the said Count and to strike out the offence of "any other form of sexual violation."

(v) Kono District – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3256. para. 1291: The Chamber recalls its findings that:

(i) an unknown number of women were taken as "wives" by AFRC/RUF fighters in Koidu in February and March 1998;[2459]

(ii) an unknown number of women were forcibly kept as "wives" by RUF fighters in the civilian camp at Wendedu;[2460] and,

(iii) TF1-016 and her daughter were forcibly "married" to RUF members in Kissi-Town.[2461]

3257. para. 1292: In relation to the finding that TF1-217's sister was taken as a "wife" by Captain Bai Bureh in Wendedu, the Chamber observes that the Prosecution did not adduce evidence to prove the course of events after the rebels captured TF1-217's sister.[2462] In the absence of further detail, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not established beyond reasonable doubt the elements of Counts 7 and 8 in respect of this specific incident. However, the Chamber has taken this evidence into account to corroborate its finding that an unknown number of women were taken as wives and held as sex slaves by AFRC/RUF rebels in Wendedu in this time frame.

3258. para. 1293: The Chamber concludes from the evidence pertaining to Koidu and Wendedu that a consistent pattern of conduct existed towards women who were forced into conjugal relationships. These "wives" were "married" against their will, forced to engage in sexual intercourse and perform domestic chores, and were unable to leave their "husbands" for fear of violent retribution. The Chamber is satisfied that the "husbands" were aware of the power exercised over their "wives" and therefore were aware that their "wives" did not genuinely consent to the "marriage" or perform conjugal "duties" including sexual intercourse and domestic labour of their own free volition.

3259. para. 1294: The Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the perpetrators intended to deprive the women of their liberty by exercising powers attaching to the right of ownership over them, including by forcing the women to engage in acts of a sexual nature. The Chamber thus finds that in February to May 1998, the AFRC/RUF rebels forced an unknown number of women into sexual slavery in Koidu; that RUF rebels forced an unknown number of women into sexual slavery in Wendedu; and that an RUF member forced TF1-016 and her daughter into sexual slavery in Kissi-Town, as charged in Count 7.

3260. para. 1295: In relation to Count 8, the Chamber is satisfied that the conduct described by numerous reliable witnesses that rebels captured women and "took them as their wives" in Koidu and Wendedu satisfies the actus reus of 'forced marriage,' namely the imposition of a forced conjugal association. We consider that the phenomenon of "bush wives" was so widespread throughout the Sierra Leone conflict that the concept of women being "taken as wives" was well-known and understood.

3261. para. 1296: The Chamber observes that the conjugal association forced upon the victims carried with it a lasting social stigma which hampers their recovery and reintegration into society.[2463] This suffering is in addition to the physical injuries that forced intercourse commonly inflicted on women taken as "wives". The Chamber thus finds that the perpetrators' actions in taking "wives" in Koidu inflicted grave suffering and serious injury to the physical and mental health of the victims, and that the perpetrators were aware of the gravity of their actions.

3262. para. 1297: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that AFRC/RUF rebels forced an unknown number of women into marriages in Koidu; that AFRC/RUF rebels forced an unknown number of women into marriages in Wendedu; and that an RUF member forcibly married TF1-016 in Kissi-Town, which crimes constitute inhumane acts as charged in Count 8.

(vi) Kailahun District – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3263. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

3264. para. 1445: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2748] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3265. para. 1459: The Prosecution alleges that "at all times relevant to the Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in [Kailahun] District were subjected to sexual violence," including the capture of victims and their use as sex slaves and/or their entry into 'forced marriages.'[2759] We consider that "at all times relevant to [the] Indictment" means from 30 November 1996[2760] to about 15 September 2000.[2761] The Chamber heard credible evidence of rapes which occurred during the pleaded time frame; however, rape was not particularised as a crime charged in the Indictment in for Kailahun District.[2762] We therefore decline to consider whether the crime of rape has been proved in Kailahun District.

a. Sexual Slavery and 'Forced Marriage' of TF1-314 – Kailahun District – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3266. para. 1460: The Chamber recalls TF1-314's testimony that she was abducted from Masingbi in Tonkolili District at age 10 and taken to Buedu in Kailahun District where she lived from 1994 to 1998.[2763] The Chamber concludes from her evidence that she was raped twice before being "married" to a rebel Commander in Buedu. As the Commander's "wife" TF1-314 was forced to engage in domestic chores and to have sexual intercourse with him. The Chamber is satisfied that TF1-314 remained as the "wife" of the Commander as she feared that, if she were to escape, she could be captured and fall into the hands of Kamajors who would kill her because she came from a rebel zone. The Chamber finds that TF1-314 did not consent to her "marriage" and that, moreover, genuine consent was not possible in such coercive circumstances.

3267. para. 1461: Based upon the foregoing, the Chamber is satisfied that the Commander intended to exercise powers attaching to the right of ownership over TF1-314 and that he deliberately forced her into a conjugal partnership. The Chamber thus finds that the elements of sexual slavery and the other inhumane act of 'forced marriage' have been established, as charged under Counts 7 and 8 of the Indictment.

b. Sexual Slavery and 'Forced Marriage' of TF1-093 – Kailahun District – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3268. para. 1462: The Chamber recalls that during the rainy season of 1996, TF1-093 was raped by Superman's bodyguards in Moyamba District.[2764] As this rape was committed outside of the temporal jurisdiction of the Special Court and in a District not pleaded in the Indictment for sexual violence, the Accused are not charged for this act committed in Moyamba District.

3269. para. 1463: The Chamber concludes that TF1-093 was taken after the rainy season of 1996 to Kailahun District where she was forced into an exclusive conjugal relationship with Superman and was forced to become his 'wife'. The Chamber is satisfied that TF1-093 was incapable of giving her genuine consent and became Superman's 'wife' because she feared she would have been killed. As Superman's wife, she cooked and did laundry for him and had sex with him, all of which caused her to endure physical and mental suffering. The Chamber further finds that Superman exercised the rights of ownership over TF1-093 by virtue of this exclusive conjugal relationship with the victim. The Chamber also finds that Superman gave drugs to TF1-093 which reflects his intention to further abuse and exercise control over her.

3270. para. 1464: Based upon the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the elements of sexual slavery and of 'forced marriage' as an other inhumane act have been established beyond reasonable doubt. We therefore find that the 'forced marriage' of TF1-093 constitutes sexual slavery and an other inhumane act, as charged under Counts 7 and 8 of the Indictment.

c. Sexual Slavery and 'Forced Marriages' of other civilians – Kailahun District – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3271. para. 1465: The Chamber has found that RUF rebels forcefully captured and abducted an unknown number of women and girls from locations throughout Sierra Leone and took them to Kailahun District. The Chamber concludes that it was common practice for rebels to keep captured women subject to their control as sex slaves and to force conjugal relationships on women who unwillingly became their 'wives.'[2765]

3272. para. 1466: The Chamber finds that acts of sexual violence were intentionally committed against women and girls in the context of a hostile and coercive war environment in which genuine consent was not possible. The Chamber also finds that when the rebels forcefully took victims as ‘wives’ they intended to deprive them of their liberty. The Chamber finds that the use of the term ‘wife’ by the rebels was deliberate and strategic, with the aim of enslaving and psychologically manipulating the women and with the purpose of treating them like possessions.

3273. para. 1467: The Chamber is satisfied that many fighters had ‘bush wives’, who, similarly to the cases of TF1-314 and TF1-093 discussed above, were intentionally forced to have sex with therebels. The Chamber also finds that the perpetrators intended to exercise control and ownership over their victims who were unable to leave or escape for fear that they would be killed or sent to the front lines as combatants. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that young girls and women were intentionally forced into conjugal relationships with rebels.

3274. para. 1468: We also find that many women were forced into marriage by means of threats, intimidation, manipulation and other forms of duress which were predicated on the victims’ fear and their desperate situation.

3275. para. 1469: In relation to the sexual offences alleged in the Indictment, the Chamber notes that the Accused have canvassed the defence of consent and contend that the women and girls who they captured and abducted during attacks, and who were victims of those offences, willingly consented to the alleged marriages and sexual relationships. The Defence also contends that the marriages which were so contracted were conducted with the requisite consent of the parties involved. The Chamber observes, however, that parental and family consent to the so-called marriages of these sexually enslaved and abused women was conspicuously absent.

3276. para. 1470: In light of the foregoing and given the violent, hostile and coercive environment in which these women suddenly found themselves, the Chamber first of all considers that the sexual relations with the rebels, notwithstanding the contention of the Defence to the contrary, and on the basis of very credible and compelling evidence, could not, and was, in circumstances, not consensual because of the state of uncertainty and subjugation in which they lived in captivity.

3277. para. 1471: In this regard, the Chamber is of the opinion and so holds, that in hostile and coercive circumstances of this nature, there should be a presumption of absence of genuine consent to having sexual relations or contracting marriages with the said RUF fighters.

3278. para. 1472: The Chamber is satisfied that ‘bush wives’ were not only forced into exclusive conjugal sexual relationships but were also expected to perform domestic chores and to bear children.

3279. para. 1473: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that all the elements of sexual slavery and of 'forced marriage' as an other inhumane act have been established. We conclude that an unknown number of women were subjected to sexual slavery and 'forced marriages' in Kailahun District, as charged under Counts 7 and 8 of the Indictment.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Sexual slavery and 'forced marriages'

3280. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

3281. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3282. para. 1579: The Chamber recalls its findings that:

(i) rebels abducted a 10 year-old girl and, in the presence of TF1-022, gave the girl to one rebel to be his 'wife;'[3020]

(ii) TF1-023 and ten other women were given as 'wives' to AFRC Commanders and fighters, with TF1-023 being forced to have sexual intercourse with her 'husband' on multiple occasions; and[3021]

(iii) TF1-029 was forced into a 'marriage' with Major Arif and forced to have sexual relations with him.[3022]

3283. para. 1580: The Chamber further finds, recalling the testimony of TF1-334 that the practice of taking women, including young girls, to become the 'wives' of various Commanders and to perform sexual acts and domestic chores for their 'husbands' was widespread,[3023] that an unknown number of other women were forced into 'marriages' in Freetown and the Western Area.

3285. para. 1582: The Chamber therefore finds that these acts constitute sexual slavery and 'forced marriages,' as charged under Counts 7 and 8 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District

3289. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Factual Findings – Kono District – para. 428 [712].

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

3290. para. 132: Kallon challenges the pleading of his liability as a superior for crimes in Kono District. The Appeals Chamber notes that he was convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute of the following crimes in Kono District:

> (i) Acts of terrorism (Count 1), for sexual slavery in Kissi Town, Kono District;
>
> (ii) Sexual slavery (Count 7) in Kissi Town, Kono District;
>
> (iii) Other inhumane acts (forced marriage) (Count 8) in Kissi Town, Kono District;
>
> (iv) Outrages upon personal dignity (Count 9) in Kissi Town, Kono District;
> (v) Enslavement (Count 13) in relation to events in unspecified locations in Kono District;

and 13 were committed[263] and states that by his "acts or omissions in relation to these events, … MORRIS KALLON …, pursuant to … Article 6.3. of the Statute, [is] individually criminally responsible for" the crimes charged under Counts 6-9 and 13.[264]

3292. para. 134: In relation to sexual violence, forced marriages and acts of terrorism at Kissi Town in Kono District, Kallon additionally argues that his subordinates at Kissi Town "were never sufficiently or at all particularized."[265] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that in addition to the pleading of Kallon's superior position, discussed above, the Indictment states that the crimes were committed by "members of AFRC/RUF" at "Kissi-town (or Kissi Town)… and AFRC/RUF camps such as … Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp."[266] The Indictment, therefore, puts Kallon on notice of the charge that ARFC/RUF members who were his subordinates at Kissi Town committed the crimes charged in Counts 6-9. Kallon fails to argue how this pleading did not sufficiently identify his subordinates.

3293. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

a. Justice Fisher:

(iii) Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose – Sexual slavery

3296. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose – paras. 377 -378 [754].

3297. para. 356: Indeed, Sesay himself recognises the finding that the Supreme Council was involved in the planning and organisation of the enslavement at Tongo Fields in Kenema from August 1997. However, he argues, the only crimes committed before that point in time were the terror attacks in Bo in June 1997, and so there were no crimes on the basis of which the Trial Chamber could infer the existence of a JCE.[852] However, although the enslavement at Tongo Fields commenced in August 1997,[853] it is evident from the Trial Chamber's findings that the "planned and … systematic policy of the Junta" which devised the large scale enslavement and implemented it "pursuant to a centralised system" must have started much earlier.[854] Indeed, "[w]ithin a week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of" Kenema Town.[855] Moreover, whether or not it amounted to acts of terrorism,[856] sexual violence in Kailahun was a means to achieve the AFRC/RUF objective throughout the Junta period.[857] The fact that the victims of the forced marriages were initially captured before the Indictment period does not detract from the finding that these crimes were "for the benefit… of the Junta" throughout their continuous commission.[858]

3298. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged and JCE mens rea (short review) – paras. 467, 468, 482, 492, 493 [756] and see, also, Justice Fisher's and Justice Winter's Dissenting Opinions in that regard.

(v) CAH – Attack against civilian population

a. Kailahun District – CAH – Attack against civilian population

(vi) Sexual slavery – Legal requirements

3300. para. 726: The Trial Chamber convicted Sesay for committing sexual slavery (Count 7), "other inhumane acts" (forced marriage, Count 8) and outrages upon personal dignity (Count 9) against Witnesses TF1-093 and TF1-314, and "an unknown number" of other women in Kailahun District.1882

3301. para. 732: Sesay raises several arguments concerning the Trial Chamber's consideration of coercive circumstances and the absence of the victim's consent to the acts. He contends, in part, that the Trial Chamber erred in law in presuming the absence of consent of an unknown number of women.

3302. para. 733: In paragraphs 1465 through 1473 of the Trial Judgment, the Trial Chamber found that the circumstances surrounding the sexual relations and marriages included that (i) the women and girls were "forcefully captured and abducted" from "throughout Sierra Leone" and taken to Kailahun District,[1898] (ii) that these abductions took place "in the context of a hostile and coercive war environment,"[1899] (iii) that the women and girls could not leave for fear of being killed or sent into armed conflict,[1900] and (iv) that women and girls were subjected to "threats, intimidation, manipulation and other forms of duress which were predicated on the victims' fear and their desperate situation."[1901] The Trial Chamber found that the hostile and coercive circumstances were such that "genuine consent was not possible,"[1902] and it concluded that "[i]n light of the foregoing and given the violent, hostile and coercive environment in which these women suddenly found themselves … the sexual relations with the rebels … was, in [the] circumstances, not consensual because of the state of uncertainty and subjugation in which they lived in captivity."[1903]

3303. para.734: The Trial Chamber's reasoning led to a finding of the exercise of rights of ownership and of the force, threats of force and coercion used to compel victims. In part, the reasoning results in a finding of the absence of consent, not a presumption thereof, however, the absence of consent is neither an element of sexual slavery nor of forced marriage. Sexual slavery, a form of enslavement,[1904] "flows from claimed rights of ownership"[1905] to which consent is impossible.

3304. para.735: With respect to forced marriage, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the offence "describes a situation in which the perpetrator[,] … compels a person by force, threat of force, or coercion to serve as a conjugal partner."[1906] The conduct must constitute an "other inhumane act," which entails that the perpetrator: (i) inflict great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health; (ii) sufficiently similar in gravity to the acts referred to in Article 2.a through Article 2.h of the Statute; and that (iii) the perpetrator was aware of the factual circumstances that established the character of the gravity of the act.[1907] As a crime against humanity, the offence also requires that the acts of the accused formed part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the accused knew that his crimes were so related.[1908]

3305. para. 736: The Appeals Chamber considers that where the Prosecution has proved the legal requirements of the offence, that is, that an accused, by force, threat of force, or coercion, or by taking advantage of coercive circumstances, causes one or more persons to serve as a conjugal partner, and the perpetrator's acts are knowingly part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population and amount to the infliction of great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health sufficiently similar in gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, then consent is impossible[1909] and therefore is not a relevant consideration. As found by the Trial Chamber, "given the violent, hostile and coercive environment in which these women suddenly found themselves … the sexual relations with the rebels … could not [be], and was, in [the] circumstances, not consensual because of the state of uncertainty and subjugation in which they lived in captivity."[1910] Such captivity in itself would have vitiated consent in the circumstances under consideration.[1911]

3306. para. 737: After finding the absence of consent, the Trial Chamber went on to opine generally that, in circumstances such as the ones it had just found, "there should be a presumption of absence of genuine consent to having sexual relations or contracting marriages with the said RUF fighters."[1912] This additional statement did not provide the framework for its analysis and nothing suggests that it informed its findings on the elements of the offences. Rather, it is precatory, conditional, and follows the Trial Chamber's analysis of the circumstances that eliminated the possibility of genuine consent. The impugned statement is therefore an obiter dicta. The Appeals Chamber finds no error of law in the Trial Chamber's approach.

3315. para. 386: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF sustained a widespread and systematic pattern of conduct in Kailahun which included military training, child recruitment, enslavement of civilians and sexual slavery.[949] These crimes were for the benefit of the RUF and the Junta in furthering their ultimate goal of taking political, economic and territorial control over Sierra Leone.[950]

3316. para. 387: Sesay submits that the evidence concerning Kailahun District supports that no common criminal purpose existed during the Junta period.[951] He argues that paragraph 2047 of the Trial Judgment appeared to conclude that the RUF and AFRC forces did not act jointly in Kailahun.[952] Furthermore, there was no evidence that AFRC/RUF commanders were involved in Kailahun or that any RUF member committed or used others to commit acts of terror and collective punishment there during the Junta period.[953] No additional arguments are offered, either in response or reply.

3317. para. 388: The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Sesay's submission. The Trial Chamber made extensive findings on RUF members and Commanders, including Superman,[954] committing acts of sexual slavery and forced marriage[955] as well as enslavement[956] in Kailahun District. Whereas only the former two crimes also amounted to acts of terrorism,[957] the Appeals Chamber recalls that it was not required that the crimes constituted either such acts or collective punishment in order to fall within the Common Criminal Purpose.[958]

3318. para. 389: As to whether the AFRC and RUF acted in concert in Kailahun, the Appeals Chamber notes that the relevant part of paragraph 2047 of the Trial Judgment reads:

> The Junta Government exercised control over most of Sierra Leone, and the RUF forces acted jointly with the AFRC forces in relation to other locations [than Kailahun] in the country during the period in question.

This finding by a Majority of the Trial Chamber neither affirms nor rejects that the AFRC and RUF acted jointly in Kailahun.

3319. para. 390: However, whether the leaders of the AFRC and RUF acted in concert in the specific geographical area of Kailahun District was not determinative for the Trial Chamber's conclusion that they shared a common criminal purpose which encompassed that District. Rather, what mattered for the Trial Chamber was whether the two groups acted in concert on a country-wide level:

> The widespread and systematic crimes [by the RUF in Kailahun [959]] were for the benefit of the RUF and the Junta in furthering their ultimate goal of taking political, economic and territorial control over Sierra Leone. We find it was only through their joint action that the AFRC and RUF were able to control the entire country, because the RUF needed the AFRC to access Kenema and Bo Districts, while the AFRC could not bring Kailahun within the sphere of the Junta Government control without cooperation from the RUF. Thus, RUF activities in Kailahun furthered the ultimate goal of joint political, economical and territorial control.[960]

3320. para. 391: Sesay does not argue that these findings are erroneous, either in law or in fact. His submission is therefore rejected.

3321. para. 453: Sesay contends that the Trial Chamber failed to identify the perpetrators or the victims of the forced marriages in Kailahun, and to identify the necessary link between the direct perpetrators and the JCE members.[1158]

3322. para. 454: The Trial Chamber considered that its findings on the acts of sexual violence and forced marriage in Kono District apply also to the forced marriages in Kailahun District now at issue.[1159] Those findings, which have been set out above, clarify how the perpetrators of these crimes were used by members of the JCE.[1160] Furthermore, with respect to Kailahun District specifically, the Trial Chamber held that the "widespread and systematic pattern" of crimes such as forced marriages "were for the benefit of the RUF and the Junta in furthering their ultimate goal of taking political, economic and territorial control over Sierra Leone."[1161] Sesay's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to identify the link between the perpetrators of the forced marriages in Kailahun and JCE members acting in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose therefore fails. Given the widespread and systematic pattern of these crimes, the fact that some of the victims were unidentified, or that the perpetrators were identified only as "RUF fighters,"[1162] does not render the Trial Chamber's finding on that link unreasonable. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that Superman, himself a JCE member,[1163] committed one of the forced marriages in Kailahun District,[1164] and that Bockarie also had a captured "wife."[1165] Sesay's submission is therefore rejected.

3325. para. 726: The Trial Chamber convicted Sesay for committing sexual slavery (Count 7), "other inhumane acts" (forced marriage, Count 8) and outrages upon personal dignity (Count 9) against Witnesses TF1-093 and TF1-314, and "an unknown number" of other women in Kailahun District.[1882]

taken to Kailahun District,[1898] (ii) that these abductions took place "in the context of a hostile and coercive war environment,"[1899] (iii) that the women and girls could not leave for fear of being killed or sent into armed conflict,[1900] and (iv) that women and girls were subjected to "threats, intimidation, manipulation and other forms of duress which were predicated on the victims' fear and their desperate situation."[1901] The Trial Chamber found that the hostile and coercive circumstances were such that "genuine consent was not possible,"[1902] and it concluded that "[i]n light of the foregoing and given the violent, hostile and coercive environment in which these women suddenly found themselves … the sexual relations with the rebels … was, in [the] circumstances, not consensual because of the state of uncertainty and subjugation in which they lived in captivity."[1903]

3329. para. 735: With respect to forced marriage, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the offence "describes a situation in which the perpetrator[,] … compels a person by force, threat of force, or coercion to serve as a conjugal partner."[1906] The conduct must constitute an "other inhumane act," which entails that the perpetrator: (i) inflict great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health; (ii) sufficiently similar in gravity to the acts referred to in Article 2.a through Article 2.h of the Statute; and that (iii) the perpetrator was aware of the factual circumstances that established the character of the gravity of the act.[1907] As a crime against humanity, the offence also requires that the acts of the accused formed part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the accused knew that his crimes were so related.[1908]

3330. para. 736: The Appeals Chamber considers that where the Prosecution has proved the legal requirements of the offence, that is, that an accused, by force, threat of force, or coercion, or by taking advantage of coercive circumstances, causes one or more persons to serve as a conjugal partner, and the perpetrator's acts are knowingly part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population and amount to the infliction of great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health sufficiently similar in gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, then consent is impossible[1909] and therefore is not a relevant consideration. As found by the Trial Chamber, "given the violent, hostile and coercive environment in which these women

suddenly found themselves … the sexual relations with the rebels … could not [be], and was, in [the] circumstances, not consensual because of the state of uncertainty and subjugation in which they lived in captivity."[1910] Such captivity in itself would have vitiated consent in the circumstances under consideration.[1911]

3331. para. 737: After finding the absence of consent, the Trial Chamber went on to opine generally that, in circumstances such as the ones it had just found, "there should be a presumption of absence of genuine consent to having sexual relations or contracting marriages with the said RUF fighters."[1912] This additional statement did not provide the framework for its analysis and nothing suggests that it informed its findings on the elements of the offences. Rather, it is precatory, conditional, and follows the Trial Chamber's analysis of the circumstances that eliminated the possibility of genuine consent. The impugned statement is therefore an obiter dicta. The Appeals Chamber finds no error of law in the Trial Chamber's approach.

3332. para. 738: Sesay also contends the Trial Chamber erred in fact in finding that there was an absence of consent. He made similar submissions at trial, and these arguments were expressly rejected.[1913] On appeal, Sesay fails to show that the Trial Chamber could not reasonably have found the absence of consent on the basis of its findings of fact. He fails to show that any of the women and girls found to have been the victims of sexual slavery were not in fact subjected to the forms of violence and coercion that were the basis of the Trial Chamber's findings on the absence of consent. Accordingly, his submissions fail to demonstrate the Trial Chamber's finding was unreasonable.

3333. para. 739: Sesay further contends that, based on the evidence, the absence of consent should not have been found with respect to all sexual relations and "marriages" in Kailahun.[1914] The Trial Chamber made no such finding regarding all marriages in Kailahun. Instead, the Trial Chamber confined its analysis to situations in which women and girls were forced into "marriages." It found that TF1-314 was raped twice before being "married" to an RUF commander.[1915] The Trial Chamber also accepted the testimony of TF1-314 that other girls between 10 and 15 years of age were taken as "wives" by rebels in Buedu.[1916] The Trial Chamber found that TF1-093 became Superman's "wife" because she feared she would have been killed.[1917] A senior RUF Commander testified that when a Commander conquered a particular territory young girls would be abducted. These girls would find it extremely difficult to escape.[1918] Denis Koker, the MP Adjutant in Kailahun District between 1998 and 1999, testified that it was regular practice for women to be forcibly taken as "wives" and some commanders had five or six "wives."[1919] The Trial Chamber found that the women and girls were abducted from various locations throughout Sierra Leone and subjected to hostile and coercive circumstances in which "genuine consent was not possible."[1920]

3334. para. 740: The Trial Chamber's findings were sufficient to establish the actus reus of sexual slavery and forced marriage. Having thus found, inter alia, that the victims were subject to enslavement, force and coercion, the Trial Chamber did not have to examine the issue of consent, and in particular to have assessed whether every victim did not consent. Sesay's argument is thus without merit. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Sesay's speculative contention that the coercive circumstances were created in part by "outside forces" rather than by the RUF/AFRC forces that perpetrated the crimes.

Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras. 817, 820 – 824 [7759].

Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Gbao – paras. 967, 972- 983, 986 – 994 [7780].

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3337. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[155]

3338. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [156]

3339. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [157]

3340. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [158]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

3341. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. (iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

3342. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages". Acts of sexual violence included the following: [160]

> i. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-town (or Kissi Town), Foendor (or Foendu), Tomendeh, Fokoiya, Wondedu and AFRC/RUF camps such as "Superman camp" and Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the District and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[161]
> ii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[162]
>
> iii. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition, an unknown number of abducted women and girls were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[163]
>
> iv. Kailahun District - At all times relevant to this Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the District, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[164]
>
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the City of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages" and/or

vi. Port Loko District - About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence by members of the AFRC/RUF. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands".[166]

3343. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

Count 8: Other inhumane act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Preliminary Remarks

3344. para. 969: Count 9 (Outrages on Personal Dignity) has been charged in addition to or in the alternative to Count 6 (Rape), Count 7 (Sexual Slavery and Any Other Form of Sexual Violence) and Count 8 (Other Inhumane Act, Forced Marriage). As discussed, supra, in Chapter II, Defects in the Indictment, the Trial Chamber has dismissed Count 7 for duplicity[1952] and as discussed, supra, in Chapter IX, Applicable Law, the Trial Chamber has dismissed Count 8 for redundancy.[1953] As additionally discussed, supra, in Chapter IX, Applicable Law, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the acts of rape and sexual slavery are encompassed by the definition of outrages on personal dignity and will consider evidence to this effect presently.

3345. para. 1070: In coming to its findings in relation to Count 9, the Trial Chamber relies on the findings made in relation to Count 6, supra, as well as its findings on the chapeau elements of war crimes.[1954]

(ii) Applicable law – Sexual slavery

3366. para. 708: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes Against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the elements of the crime of sexual slavery are as follows:

> 1. The perpetrator exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such a person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty.
>
> 2. The perpetrator caused such person or persons to engage in one or more acts of a sexual nature;
> 3. The perpetrator committed such conduct intending to engage in the act of sexual slavery or in the reasonable knowledge that it was likely to occur.[1380]

3367. para. 709: The powers of ownership listed in the first element of sexual slavery are non-exhaustive. There is no requirement for any payment or exchange in order to establish the exercise of ownership.[1381] Deprivation of liberty may include extracting forced labour or otherwise reducing a person to servile status.[1382] Further, ownership, as indicated by possession, does not require confinement to a particular place but may include situations in which those who are captured remain in the control of their captors because they have no where else to go and fear for their lives.[1383] The consent or free will of the victim is absent under conditions of enslavement.[1384]

3368. para. 710: The Prosecution evidence in the present case does not point to even one instance of a woman or girl having had a bogus marriage forced upon her in circumstances which did not amount to sexual slavery. Not one of the victims of sexual slavery gave evidence that the mere fact that a rebel had declared her to be his wife had caused her any particular trauma, whether physical or mental. Moreover, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, had there been such evidence, it would not by itself have amounted to a crime against humanity, since it would not have been of similar gravity to the acts referred to in Article 2(a) to (h) of the Statute.

3369. para. 711: The Trial Chamber finds that the totality of the evidence adduced by the Prosecution as proof of "forced marriage" goes to proof of elements subsumed by the crime of sexual slavery. As exhaustively examined in Chapter X Factual Findings, infra,[1385] so-called "forced marriages" involved the forceful abduction of girls and women from their homes or other places of refuge and their detention with the AFRC troops as they attacked and moved through various districts. The girls and women were taken against their will as "wives" by individual rebels.[1386] The evidence, showed that the relationship of the perpetrators to their "wives" was one of ownership and involved the exercise of control by the perpetrator over the victim, including control of the victim's sexuality, her movements and her labour; for example, the "wife" was expected to carry the rebel's possessions as they moved from one location to the next, to cook for him and to wash his clothes.[1387] Similarly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the use of the term "wife" by the perpetrator in reference to the victim is indicative of the intent of the perpetrator to exercise ownership over the victim, and not an intent to assume a marital or quasi-marital status with the victim in the sense of establishing mutual obligations inherent in a husband wife relationship. In fact, while the relationship of the rebels to their "wives" was generally one of exclusive ownership, the victim could be passed on or given to another rebel at the discretion of the perpetrator.[1388]

3370. para. 712: None of the witnesses gave evidence that they considered themselves to be in fact "married". (One witness testified that she had been "married" to her rebel "husband" in a ceremony,[1389] but no consent could be inferred given the environment of violence and coercion.) Rather, the repeated assertion of the witnesses was that they had been "taken as wives".[1390] They were held against their will and a number tried to escape.[1391] There was no evidence that any of the women taken as "wives" stayed on with their rebel "husbands" following the end of hostilities.[1392]

3371. para. 713: In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds, by a majority,[1393] that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution is completely subsumed by the crime of sexual slavery and that there is no lacuna in the law which would necessitate a separate crime of "forced marriage" as an 'other inhumane act'. In view of the Trial Chamber's findings that Count 7 is bad for duplicity, the Trial will in the interests of justice consider the evidence of Sexual Slavery under Count 9.

3372. para. 714: The Trial Chamber further finds that alleged offences of a residual, non-sexual nature do not belong under the part of the Indictment entitled "Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence". The Trial Chamber finds by a majority[1394] that Count 8 is redundant insofar as the crime of sexual slavery will be dealt with in Count 9. Other residual crimes of a non-sexual nature are dealt with in Count 11. Count 8 is therefore dismissed.[1395]

(iii) Pleadings

a. Pleading of Count 7 - Duplicity

3373. para. 92: The Brima and Kamara Defence submit that Count 7 "offends the rule against duplicity" as the Accused are charged with two separate offences under the same count.[142] The Prosecution submits that the Defence has left it too late to raise the argument that the Indictment is defective. It cites as authorities Rule 72 of the Rules and Brdanin Trial Judgement, which held that "normally, an allegation pertaining to the vagueness of an indictment is dealt with at the pre-trial stage."[143]

3374. para. 93: This argument has not been previously raised by the Defence and although an alleged defect III an indictment should be primarily raised by way of a preliminary motion pursuant to Rule 72(B)(ii), the Trial Chamber, as mentioned above, is not precluded from reviewing in this Judgement whether shortcomings in the form of the Indictment have actually resulted in prejudice to the rights of the Accused.[144] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber notes that the Defence did not raise the objections at such a late stage for tactical advantages, but merely followed the opinion of Justice Sebutinde in her "Separate and Concurring Opinion" to the Rule 98 Decision.[145] Justice Sebutinde expressed the view that Count 7 was "duplex and defective in as far as it does not enable the accused persons to know precisely which of the two crimes (sexual slavery or sexual violence) they should be defending themselves against" and that the situation could "prejudice a fair trial of the accused persons if left uncorrected."[146] Justice Sebutinde did not think that Count 7 was incurably defective, at that stage, and could be cured by an amendment dividing the offences into two separate counts.[147] Since then, the Prosecution has not availed itself of Justice Sebutinde's suggested remedy.

3375. para. 94: At the Rule 98 stage the question was not considered by the majority since no such question was before the Trial Chamber and it confined itself to considering the prima facie state of the evidence to establish Count 7.[148] Both the Brima and Kamara Defence allege that Count 7 in its current form has made it difficult for the Accused to fully understand the nature and the cause of the charges brought against them.[149] The Trial Chamber has accordingly reviewed the pleading of Count 7 and agrees with the opinion of Justice Sebutinde that it is bad for duplicity, for the reasons set out in her opinion previously mentioned and that such a pleading prejudices the rights of the Accused.

3376. para. 95: The Trial Chamber by majority finds that Count 7 is bad for duplicity and is accordingly dismissed in its entirety.[150]

b. Pleading – Dissent

3377. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 1 (p.582): I agree with my learned colleagues on the findings of the Judgement on Counts 1 to 6 and 9 to 14. However, my concerned about their findings on Counts 7 and 8 compels me to write this dissenting opinion on those counts.

3378. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 2 (p.582): The majority rejects Count 7 as bad for duplicity and my learned colleagues provide compelling arguments for such a conclusion. However, in my respectful opinion, their reasons are formalistic and disregard the fundamental issue, which is whether the right of the Accused to be informed promptly and in detail about the nature and the cause of the charges against them has been violated.[1]

3379. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 3 (p.582): I share the majority's view that the second limb of Count 7 viz "other forms of sexual violence" was not particularised by the Prosecution. I do not, with respect, agree that if Count 7 as pleaded is duplicitous, the Trial Chamber must dismiss it in its entirety.

3380. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 4 (p.582): The history of the challenges to the Indictments is detailed in Chapter II of this Judgement and I do not need to repeat it here.[2]

3381. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 5 (p.582): In their Final Briefs, the Accused Kamara and Brima submit, for the first time and in almost identical terms, that Count 7 offends the rule against duplicity. Counsel rely on the decision of the Prosecutor v. Kamerera to support the general principle that the allegations within an indictment are defective if they are not sufficiently clear and precise to enable an accused to fully understand the nature and the cause of the charges against him.[3] Counsel further cite the Separate Opinion of Honourable Justice Sebutinde in the Rule 98 Decision, arguing that Count 7 in its current state has made it difficult for the Accused Kamara and Brima to "fully understand the nature and the cause of the charges against him".[4]

3382. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 6 (p.583): Despite this submission, neither Counsel made any applications relating to Count 7 before opening the Defence case. Instead the Defence presented evidence on all counts, including Count 7.

3383. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 7 (p.583): The Prosecution did not deal with the issue of duplicity in Count 7 of its Final Brief but orally addressed the Trial Chamber in Closing Arguments, stating "[...] we say, barring exceptional circumstances, and the Defence has not demonstrated any, and barring a showing of actual prejudice to the Defence, and, we would add, barring and showing that this has been raised at the earliest opportunity, we would submit that it is far too late to raise this at this stage of the proceedings [...] but as Judge Sebutinde pointed out in paragraph 9 of her Separate Opinion in the Rule 98 Decision, no prejudice to the Defence has been established arising out ofthis".[5]

3384. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 8 (p.583): The rule against duplicity is one of elementary fairness. The accused must know the nature of the case against him. Hence the rule evolved that a count must allege one offence and a count alleging more than one offence should be quashed before arraignment. Objections on the ground of duplicity are normally made prior to the indictment being put but can be made in the course of the hearing. As stated in Blackstone's on Criminal Practice, "rejection of a Defence motion to quash a count bad for duplicity is a good ground of appeal, although it may be open to the Court of Appeal to apply the proviso and dismiss the appeal if there has been no miscarriage of justice".[6]

3385. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 9 (p.583): The learned author further noted "that although the objection can be taken at a later stage, the Court of the Appeal has disapproved of the Defence postponing the application to quash for purely tactical reasons".[7]

3386. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 10 (p.583): Whilst I do have no doubt of the fundamental nature of the accused's right to be informed of the nature and cause of the charge against him, the defence is under a corresponding duty to raise the issue prior to the commencement of trial or at the earliest opportunity thereafter. I do not consider it to be in the interests of justice to allow the accused to invoke this right to quash an indictment after the case has closed, without showing that he was materially prejudiced. This is particularly so in cases such as the present, when the Accused were not only silent on the issue throughout the trial, but proceeded to adduce evidence and defended themselves on the charge.

3387. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 11 (p.584): I am accordingly obliged to disagree with my learned colleagues, who have held that justice in this case is met by dismissing Count 7 in its entirety. As stated by the Trial Chamber in Prosecutor v. Kupreskic, "[...] the efficient discharge of the Tribunal's functions in the interest of justice warrants the conclusion that any possible errors of the Prosecution should not stultify criminal proceedings whenever a case nevertheless appears to have been made by the Prosecution and its possible flaws in the formulation of the charge are not such as to impair or curtail the rights of the Defence".[8]

3388. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 12 (p.584): On the facts and submissions before me, I do not consider that there has been a miscarriage of justice. I would not have dismissed the count but would have considered evidence relating to sexual slavery only.

3389. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 13 (p.584): I regret that the very short time available has precluded me from more fully addressing this Issue.

c. Pleading – Separate Concurring Opinion – Forced Marriage

3390. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice Sebutinde – para. 1 (p.574): Let me begin by stating that I agree fully and unreservedly with the findings and disposition of the Trial Chamber in the Judgement on all Counts in the Indictment. This opinion only examines the phenomenon of "forced marriage" in the context of the Sierra Leone Conflict and its characterisation as a crime under international humanitarian law.

3391. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice Sebutinde – para. 2 (p.574): I do however, feel compelled to expound on one area in the Judgment, namely the phenomenon of "forced marriage" in the context of the Sierra Leone conflict. The Trial Chamber has, to some extent, dealt with this subject in the Chapter on Applicable Law. It is my considered view however, that given the fact that the subject of "forced marriage" as a crime committed in the context of an armed conflict is a relatively novel area that has hitherto not received much attention in the jurisprudence of the International Tribunals,[1] it merits a deeper analysis of the evidence adduced before the Trial Chamber during the trial in order to appreciate the Trial Chamber's characterisation of this crime as a form of Sexual Slavery as defined in Article 7(1)(g)2 of the Rome Statute. That is what I seek to do in this Separate opinion.

3392. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice Sebutinde – para. 16 (p.580): From the above excerpts of the Report, as well as the oral evidence of numerous Prosecution witnesses that testified before the Trial Chamber, I am of the firm view that the phenomenon of forced 'marriage' during the Sierra Leone conflict bears all the hallmarks or characteristics of the crime against humanity of Sexual Slavery. The general and specific elements of the crime against humanity of Sexual Slavery are satisfied in that forced 'marriage' invariably occurred as part of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population in Sierra Leone. In addition-

(i) The 'bush husband' exercised any or all the powers attaching to the right of ownership over his 'bush wife' whereby not only was she was held under captivity and not at liberty to leave but, in addition, she was forced to render gender-specific forms of labour (conjugal duties) including cooking, cleaning, washing clothes and carrying loads for him, for no genuine reward.

(ii) Invariably, the 'bush husband' regularly subjected his 'bush wife' to sexual intercourse, often without her genuine consent and to the exclusion of all other persons;

(iii) The 'bush husband' abducted and forcibly kept his 'bush wife' in captivity and sexual servitude with the intention of holding her indefinitely in that state or in the reasonable knowledge that it was likely to occur.[12]

3393. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice Sebutinde – para. 17 (p.580): Neither the Prosecution nor the Defence in their respective submissions draw the same conclusions from Mrs. Bangura's Report.[13] Interestingly, the Prosecution who called Mrs Bangura as its Expert witness on the subject did not once, refer to her Report or testimony in support of its case, insisting instead, that the crime of 'forced marriage' is subsumed under the crime against humanity of "other inhumane act", a view the Trial Chamber has dismissed.

3394. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice Sebutinde – para. 18 (p.580-581): I would conclude this Separate Concurring Opinion by reiterating that I fully endorse the Trial Chamber's finding that the crime of "forced marriage" is completely subsumed in the crime against humanity of Sexual Slavery and that there is no lacuna in the law which would necessitate a separate crime of "forced marriage" as an "other inhumane act". I further endorse the Trial Chamber's decision, in the interests of justice, to consider the overwhelming body of evidence of sexual slavery under Count 9 (Outrages upon Personal Dignity). Although it would ideally have been more appropriate to consider the evidence of forced marriage under a count of Sexual Slavery, that option does not arise in this case as Count 7 of the Indictment was dismissed as bad for duplicity. To throw out the overwhelming body of evidence of 'forced marriage' as a consequence of the Prosecution's procedural error would, in my opinion, be doing a great injustice to the hundreds of victims of 'forced marriage' who look to this Court for redress.

d. Pleading – Partly Dissenting Opinion – Forced Marriage

3395. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 14 (p.584): I dissent on the majority decision on Count 8, other inhumane acts, particularised as forced marriage. The majority, after considered deliberations, held that the evidence pleaded by the Prosecution is completely subsumed by the crime of sexual slavery and accordingly dismissed Count 8 for redundancy. Having considered the evidence, I respectfully disagree.

3396. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 15 (p.584): The majority, in adopting this approach, has consequently declined to determine whether 'forced marriage' is of sufficient gravity to meet the requirements of an 'other inhumane act' as per Article 2(i) of the Statute.

3397. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 22 (p.586): Both the Prosecution and Defence called expert evidence, tendering reports by Mrs. Zainab Bangura and Ms Dorte Thorsen respectively.[18]

3398. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 36 (p.588): Having considered the description of traditional marriage in parts of West Africa given by the Defence expert and the evidence of both the Prosecution expert and the witnesses, I am of the view that the abduction of girls and their coercion into marital unions, as described by the Prosecution expert and by witnesses, is not the same nor comparable to arranged or traditional marriages. In particular the consent of the girl and/or her parents are not sought, there is no involvement of the family of either "spouse" and there is no ceremony or ritual fulfilled. Hence I do not agree with the Kanu Defence submission that the phenomenon of "bush wives" is a replication of customary marriage.[24] On the evidence of traditional marriages described by both experts, I find the phenomenon of forced marriage has little or no similarity to traditional marriage.

3399. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 37 (p.589): Witnesses were called by both the Prosecution and Defence, who gave evidence of being abducted and forced into marriage. Given the detailed recount of their testimony in the majority Judgement,[25] I will give only a brief synopsis of particular witnesses.

3400. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 50 (p.591): I would therefore distinguish the phenomenon from sexual slavery. The evidence of witnesses shows victims had no protection from rape and were available to any rebel but were not stigmatised as "rebel wives" or "bush wives".

3401. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 51 (p.591): Additionally, I am satisfied on the basis of the testimony of the Prosecution expert witness that the use of the term 'wife' is indicative of forced marital status which had lasting and serious impacts on the victims. I find the label of 'wife' to a rebel caused mental trauma, stigmatised the victims and negatively impacted their ability to reintegrate into their communities.[32] I would therefore have found that the actus reus and mens rea of an Other Inhumane Act, Forced Marriage, are satisfied with regards to the foregoing evidence.

3402. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 52 (p.592): I reiterate that the conduct contemplated as "forced marriage" does not necessarily involve elements of physical violence such as abduction, enslavement or rape, although the presence of these elements may go to proof of the lack of consent of the victim. The crime is concerned primarily with the mental and moral suffering of the victim. As stated by the Trial Chamber in Akayesu:

> An attack may also be non violent in nature, like imposing a system of apartheid, which is declared a crime against humanity in Article 1 of the Apartheid Convention of 1973, or exerting pressure on the population to act in a particular manner, may come under the purview of an attack, if orchestrated on a massive scale or in a systematic manner.[33]

3403. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 53 (p.592): The crucial element of 'forced marriage' is the imposition, by threat or physical force arising from the perpetrator's words or other conduct, of a forced conjugal association by the perpetrator over the victim.

3405. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 55 (p.592): In assessing the seriousness of an act or omission the factual circumstances must be taken into account. The assessment includes the nature of the act or omission which forms the factual basis of the charges, the context in which it occurred, the personal circumstances of the victim including sex, age, and health as well as the mental, physical and moral effect upon the victim.[35]

3406. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 56 (p.592): As the suffering of the alleged victim is inherently subjective, the personal circumstances of the victim must include the cultural environment in which the act or omission took place and in which the effects of the act are felt.

3407. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 57 (p.592): I am satisfied on the evidence that the conduct considered as 'forced marriage' results in serious harm to the mental and physical health of the victim and meets this threshold.

3408. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 69 (p.595): I consider that international treaties and domestic law provide that marriage is a relationship founded on the mutual consent of both spouses. In 'forced marriage' the consent of the victim is absent. In the absence of such consent, the victim is forced into a relationship of a conjugal nature with the perpetrator thereby subsuming the victim's will and undermining the victim's exercise of their right to self-determination.

3409. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 70 (p.595): I reiterate that the conduct contemplated as 'forced marriage' does not necessarily involve elements of physical violence such as abduction, enslavement or rape, although the presence of these elements may go to prove the lack of consent of the victim. The crime is concerned primarily with the mental and moral suffering of the victim.

3410. Separate Partly Dissenting Opinion – Justice Doherty – para. 71 (p.595): By vitiating the will of one party and forcing him or her to enter into and remain in a marital union the victim is subject to physical and mental suffering the phenomenon of forced marriage transgresses the internationally accepted conventions that both parties must consent to a marriage. It is contrary to principles of criminal law shared by common law and civil law systems alike, as well as Islamic law and the legal systems of some Asian and African states. I consider, on the evidence before me, that the act of forced marriage is of similar gravity and nature to the other enumerated crimes against humanity and that the act causes serious bodily or mental harm. Accordingly, I consider and hold that forced marriage constitutes a crime against humanity.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Findings

3424. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleadings

a. Prosecution's Sixth Ground of Appeal: The Duplicity of Count 7

3425. para. 88: In its Sixth Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that Count 7 of the Indictment violated the "rule against duplicity" and prejudiced the rights of the Appellant. Count 7 of the Indictment alleged that the Accused bore individual criminal responsibility for "sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a crime against humanity punishable under Article 2.g of the Statute."[149]

3426. para. 89: The Trial Chamber found that Count 7 violated the rule against duplicity and dismissed the count in its entirety.[150] It noted that the argument that the Count was bad for duplicity, should have been raised by a Preliminary Motion under Rule 72(B)(ii). Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber considered that it was "not precluded from reviewing in the [Trial Judgment] whether shortcomings in the Form of the Indictment have actually resulted in prejudice to the rights of the Accused."[151] The Trial Chamber was satisfied that the Appellant did not delay raising the objection for tactical advantages, but had merely followed the "Separate and Concurring Opinion" of Justice Sebutinde to the Rule 98 Decision.[152] In Justice Sebutinde's Rule 98 Opinion, she held that Count 7 was duplicitous, duplex and defective and could "prejudice a fair trial of accused persons if uncorrected."[153] Justice Sebutinde was of the opinion that Count 7 was not incurably defective (at the Rule 98 stage), and suggested that it could be cured by an amendment dividing the offences into two separate counts.[154] However, the Trial Chamber indicated that it was not considering the question of duplicity and would instead confine itself to considering the prima facie state of the evidence to establish Count 7.[155]

3427. para. 90: In its Judgment, the Trial Chamber revisited Count 7 and endorsed Justice Sebutinde's Rule 98 Opinion that the Count offended the rule against duplicity.[156] It adopted her Rule 98 Opinion that Article 2.g of the Statute "encapsulates five distinct categories of sexual offences... each of which is comprised of separate and distinct elements."[157] It held that Count 7 of the Indictment charged the Appellant with two distinct crimes against humanity in one count, namely "sexual slavery" and "any other form of sexual violence."[158]

3428. para. 91: On appeal, the Prosecution first argues that the Trial Chamber committed procedural and legal error by reconsidering earlier interlocutory decisions concerning defects in the form of the Indictment at the final judgment stage without first reopening hearings on the issue.[159] Second, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber committed legal, factual or procedural error in finding that Count 7 was defectively pleaded.[160] In the alternative, the Prosecution argues that even if Count 7 was defectively pleaded, any defects were subsequently cured or did not prejudice the Appellant.[161] The Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber to reverse the Trial Chamber's decision and to revise the Trial Judgment to enter convictions against Brima, Kamara and Kanu under Count 7 for sexual slavery as well as under Count 9 for the war crime of "Outrages upon Personal Dignity."[162]

3429. para. 92: The issues that arise for determination in this Ground of Appeal are:

(i) whether the Trial Chamber erred in reconsidering the question of duplicity without reopening the issue to the Parties;

(ii) whether Count 7 violates the rule against duplicity;

(iii) if it does, whether the defect has been cured and whether the Trial Chamber erred in its choice of remedy.

3430. para. 93: In respect of the first issue, the Prosecution submits that it was entitled to proceed on the basis that the form of pleading of Count 7 was not an issue because the Trial Chamber had settled issues of defects in the form of the Indictment in earlier interlocutory decisions, none of which challenged the manner in which the Prosecution pleaded Count 7.[163] Furthermore, it submits that it is impermissible for an accused to raise a challenge to the form of the Indictment at the end of a trial.[164]

3431. para. 94: In response, Brima and Kamara submit that the Trial Chamber is empowered to reconsider its earlier decisions approving the Indictment without reopening hearings because the Prosecution had an opportunity in its closing arguments to address Count 7 but chose to do so only in a very cursory manner.[165] They further argue that the Prosecution failed to take advantage of an opportunity to amend the Indictment pursuant to Rule 50, as suggested by Justice Sebutinde's Rule 98 Opinion.[166]

3432. para. 95: In respect of the second issue, the Prosecution argues that:

(i) "[t]he rule against duplicity, as it exists in national legal systems, does not, and cannot, apply in the same way in proceedings before international criminal courts;"[167]

(ii) a single count may permissibly charge all violations of a single provision of the Statute;[168]

(iii) that even if sexual slavery and "any other form of sexual violence" constitute separate crimes, "[t]here was no ambiguity as to the legal characterisation of what the Accused were charged with, or the material facts underpinning those charges;"[169]

(iv) that while a formal amendment to the Indictment, as suggested in Justice Sebutinde's Rule 98 Opinion, would have cured Count 7 by recasting it in two separate counts, it "would have been of no practical or substantive consequence whatsoever" because the Defence was in no way prejudiced by the manner in which Count 7 was pleaded.[170]

3433. para. 96: In their respective response briefs, Brima and Kamara argue that Count 7 is entirely unclear as to what crimes were allegedly committed.[171] Kanu submits that he was "severely prejudiced in so far as he was not able to tell precisely which of the two crimes in the Count he should have defended himself against, and that materially affected the conduct of his defence."[172]

3434. para. 97: In respect of the third issue, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to consider whether the defective pleading of Count 7 was subsequently cured by timely, clear, and consistent information.[173] In the alternative, it argues that even if the Appellant were not given timely, clear and consistent information, the appropriate remedy, as stated by Justice Doherty in her Partly Dissenting Opinion[174], would have been to sever the allegation of "any other form of sexual violence" from Count 7, leaving only the allegation of sexual slavery.[175]

3435. para. 98: In response, Brima and Kamara submit that the Trial Chamber's power to cure defects in the Indictment may be used only where the material facts supporting those charges have not been pleaded with sufficient precision.[176] They argue that this power simply allows the Prosecution "to introduce material facts at a later stage in order to give the indictment a sufficient factual basis, and has no relevance to a legal flaw in the wording of the charges."[177] Kanu submits that "the nature of the defect in this instance was such that, short of amending the Indictment, [it] could not be cured" and that the disclosures made by the Prosecution subsequent to the filing of the Indictment actually made his understanding of the charges even less clear.[178]

3436. para. 99: The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that the Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber reconsidered its prior decision is misconceived. Until its final judgment, the Trial Chamber did not rule on whether Count 7 was defective, even though Justice Sebutinde did point out that the Count was duplicitous in her Rule 98 Opinion.

3437. para. 100: Objections relating to defects in the form of the indictment should normally be raised at the pre-trial stage by way of a preliminary motion.[179] Where issues of defect in the form of an indictment are raised after the trial, it is incumbent on the party to show that its preparation of its case was materially impaired by the defect in the Indictment.

3438. para. 101: The rule against duplicity is not about vagueness but about a failure to plead with specificity the offences charged in the Count.

3439. para. 102: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber that Article 2.g of the Statute provides for five distinct crimes against humanity, each of which is of a sexual nature, among which are "sexual slavery" and "any other form of sexual violence." "Sexual slavery" requires the exercise of rights of ownership over the victim, which is not the case for "other forms of sexual violence." Consequently, Count 7 of the Indictment, which charges the commission of "sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence," offends the rule against duplicity by charging two offences in the same count. The dispositive question, therefore, is not whether the rule was violated, but what are the consequences. In Bizimungu, the ICTR Appeals Chamber stated that "[t]he rule against duplicity generally forbids the charging of two separate offences in a single count, although a single count may charge different means of committing the same offence."[180] In Naletilić & Martinović the ICTY Trial Chamber noted that common law jurisdictions developed the rule against duplicity in order to ensure precision and certainty in charging.[181]

3440. para. 103: The Appeals Chamber holds that the rule against duplicity applies to international criminal tribunals such that the charging of two separate offences in a single count renders the count defective, although a single count may charge different means of committing the same offence. Accordingly, Count 7 of the Indictment, which charges the commission of "sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence," violates the rule against duplicity.

3442. para. 105: Upon its finding that Count 7 violated the rule against duplicity, the Trial Chamber dismissed the count in its entirety. The Trial Chamber's choice of remedy was premised on its finding that any proceedings on the basis of a duplicitous count would render the trial unfair to the Appellants.

3443. para. 106: The duplicitous pleading of Count 7 placed the Appellants in the position of having to defend two crimes in the same count. The residual nature of the crime of "any other form of sexual violence" requires clarification of the conduct the Prosecution would rely upon to prove the offence.

3444. para. 107: A review of case law on this issue reveals that Courts typically quashed convictions entered on duplicitous counts.[182] According to other case law, a duplicitous count does not necessarily require the conviction to be quashed.[183] Courts have used other remedies which vary, depending on the particular harm to be avoided and the stage at which the threatened harm arises. Some Courts have held that an accused person who has been indicted on the basis of a duplicitous count may nonetheless be properly prosecuted and convicted if either the Prosecutor elects which of the charges in the offending Count he will proceed with, or the Court instructs the jury to agree as to which of the distinct offences the defendant actually committed.[184]

3445. para. 108: In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber considers that the remedies available to the Trial Chamber included:

(i) quashing the count;

(ii) ordering that the Indictment be amended;

(iii) directing the Prosecution to elect to proceed on the basis of one of the two offences in the duplicitous count;

(iv) upon a review of the entire case, determining which of the two offences charged in the count the Appellant had defended fully, having regard to the manner in which the defence case had been conducted;[185] and

(v) refusing to consider evidence of one of the two charges so as to eliminate the duplicity of Count 7.[186]

Each case is to be considered on its own merits.

3446. para. 109: In the instant case, from the evidence accepted by the Trial Chamber and the findings it had made, it should have chosen the option to proceed on the basis that the offence of sexual slavery had been properly charged in Count 7, return appropriate verdict on that Count in respect of the crime of sexual slavery and struck out the charge of "any other form of sexual violence."

3447. para. 110: Although the Trial Chamber had not chosen that option, no miscarriage of justice has resulted therefrom. It is not necessary for the Appeals Chamber to substitute a conviction for sexual slavery as the Trial Chamber relied upon the evidence of sexual slavery to enter convictions for Count 9 which charged the offence of "outrages upon personal dignity."

3448. Regarding Kanu's responsibility for planning the commission of sexual slavery, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) – AFRC – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – paras. 298 – 302 [7225], 305 – 306 [7232].

b. Prosecution's Seventh Ground of Appeal: Forced Marriage – Other Inhumae Acts

3449. para. 175: Under its Seventh Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's dismissal of Count 8 of the Indictment, which charged Brima, Kanara and Kanu with the crime of "Other Inhumane Acts" (forced marriage), punishable under Article 2.i of the Statute.

3450. para. 176: In dismissing Count 8 for redundancy, the Trial Chamber found that Article 2. i of the Statute ("Other Inhumane Acts") must be restrictively interpreted to exclude crimes of a sexual nature, because Article 2.g of the Statute, which encompasses'[r]ape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy and any other form of sexual violence," exhaustively enumerates sexual crimes.[258] The Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution did not adduce any evidence that forced marriage was a non-sexual crime; that the Prosecution evidence with respect to forced marriages was completely subsumed in the crime of sexual slavery; and that there is no lacuna in the law which would necessitate a separate crime of forced marriage as an "Other Inhumane Acts."[259] The Trial Chamber also found that use of the term "wife" by the perpetrator signified an intention to exercise ownership over the victim rather then to assume a marital or quasi-marital status with the victim.[260]

3451. See below: Chapter 8 - AFRC –Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Prosecution's Seventh Ground of Appeal: Forced Marriages – paras. 181 – 203 [4509].

CHAPTER 6 – OUTRAGES UPON PERSONAL DIGNITY

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3457. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[167]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

3458. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[168]

(iii) Counts 4-6: Sexual Violence

> Count 4: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;
>
> And:
>
> Count 5: Sexual slavery, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;
>
> In addition, or in the alternative:
>
> Count 6: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.

3459. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or Alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, committed widespread acts of sexual violence against civilian women and girls, including the following:[169]

> i. Kono District: Between 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations, including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Wondedu, and AFRC and/or RUF camps, such as "Superman Ground," "Guinea Highway," and "PC Ground"; abducted an unknown number of women and girls from various locations within the District, or brought them from locations outside the District, and used them as sex slaves;[170]
> ii. Kailahun District: Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations throughout Kailahun District; abducted many victims from other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought them to locations throughout the District and used them as sex slaves;[171]
>
> iii. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 2002, raped and unknown number of women and girls throughout Freetown and the Western area, and abducted an unknown number of women and girls and used them as sex slaves.[172]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

3460. para. 1194: The Trial Chamber has found in the Preliminary Issues Section that it would not consider evidence of sexual violence other than rape and sexual slavery under Count 6, Outrages Upon Personal Dignity,[2968] as the Accused was not provided with notice that any other forms of sexual violence were charged under this count.[2969]

3461. para. 1195: The Trial Chamber has therefore considered, for each district, the acts of rape and sexual slavery that it has found have been proved beyond reasonable doubt as the crimes against humanity of rape, Count 4, and sexual slavery, Count 5, to determine whether they also constitute war crimes under Outrages upon Personal Dignity, Count 6, and found that they do in each case.

3462. para. 1196: Further, witnesses testified that the perpetrators of rape or sexual slavery forced women and girls to undress, sometimes in public, as a prelude to the rape; that many women and girls were raped or gang raped in public, frequently in front of neighbours or members of their community and/or in the presence of husbands and/or relatives who were forced to watch. Several witnesses testified that an object, such as a piece of wood, was inserted into the vaginas of victims after the rape or gang rape. The Trial Chamber considers that these actions resulted in further humiliation and degradation of the victims, thus aggravating the crime of outrages upon personal dignity. Therefore the Trial Chamber has indicated where instances of rape and sexual slavery involved any such additional elements of humiliation and degradation, such as forced undressing, sexual mutilation and/or public humiliation.

3463. para. 1197: The Trial Chamber has also further examined relevant documentary evidence. Exhibit P-073, an expert report entitled "Conflict-Related Sexual Violence in Sierra Leone" authored by Beth Vann, recorded that:

> Rape was reported by 84 of the 94 women reporting sexual violence in the PHR [Physicians for Human Rights] study. Approximately one third of these women reported experiencing gang rape, abduction, stripped of clothing, forced to undress. Respondents also reported sexual slavery, molestation, forced marriage, and insertion of foreign objects into the genital opening or anus.[2970]

3464. para. 1198: The expert report also states that, in relation to focus group sessions conducted by the author, "[a]ll participants described witnessing at least one public rape of a civilian female in or near their home town/village just before flight or during the time they were running to refuge in Guinea".[2971]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

3465. See above: Chapter 1 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – paras. 561 – 568 [111].

(ii) Applicable law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

3466. See above: Chapter 3 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 571 – 574 [119].

(iii) Applicable law – Outrages upon Personal Dignity

3467. para. 431: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the following specific elements of the crime of outrages upon personal dignity must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

(i) The perpetrator humiliated, degraded or otherwise violated the personal dignity of the victim;

(ii) The humiliation, degradation or other violation was so serious as to be generally considered as an outrage upon personal dignity;

(iii) The perpetrator intentionally committed or participated in an act or omission which would be generally considered to cause serious humiliation, degradation or otherwise be a serious attack on human dignity; and

(iv) The perpetrator knew that the act or omission could have such an effect.[1044]

3468. para. 432: The Trial Chamber considers that sexual slavery, including the abduction of women and girls as "bush wives", a conjugal form of sexual slavery, is humiliating and degrading to its victims and constitutes a serious attack on human dignity, falling within the scope of outrages upon personal dignity.

(iv) Kono District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3469. para. 1199: The Trial Chamber finds that the acts of rape and sexual slavery that it has found to be proved beyond reasonable doubt in Kono District also constitute in each case a serious humiliation, degradation and violation of the personal dignity of the victims, and that the perpetrators intentionally committed these acts and knew that their acts would produce this effect.

3470. para. 1200: The Trial Chamber thus finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) An RUF rebel named Peppe committed an outrage upon personal dignity by raping Finda Gbamanja in Koidu Town in February 1998;

(ii) SLA and RUF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity by gang raping TF1-189 in Koidu Town between March and August 1998;

(iii) RUF Staff Alhaji committed an outrage upon personal dignity on Sia Lappia, who had her clothes removed, was hit in her private parts and then raped at gun point in the presence of other captured persons, including her child, in approximately April 1998;

(iv) AFRC commanders, including Alimamy Bobson Sesay, committed outrages upon personal dignity by raping an unknown number of women and girls in Tombodu between March and June 1998;

(v) RUF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity by raping Rebecca and an unknown number of women in Wondedu in 1998;

(vi) RUF, AFRC and STF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity by raping an unknown number of women at Superman Ground in April 1998;

(vii) RUF, AFRC and STF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity by raping an unknown number of women at PC Ground in or about April 1998;

(viii) Sergeant Foday committed an outrage upon personal dignity by raping Finda Gbamanja in Koidu Town and at Superman Ground in 1998;

(ix) A member of the RUF committed an outrage upon personal dignity on TF1-189 who was used as sexual slave in Koidu Town between 12 March 1998 and August 1998;

(x) Sergeant Foday committed an outrage upon personal dignity on Finda Gbamanja who was used as a sexual slave in Koidu Town from approximately March/April 1998;

(xi) Rebels loyal to Superman committed an outrage upon personal on Finda Gbamanja who was used as a sexual slave at Superman Ground from approximately April to October 1998;

(xii) AFRC and RUF fighters committed an outrage upon personal dignity on Sia Kamara who was repeatedly raped and used as a sexual slave in approximately March/April 1998 in Kono District.

3471. para. 1201: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[2972] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Kono District there was a nexus between the acts of sexual violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of the sexual violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Kono District constitute outrages upon personal dignity as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(v) Kailahun District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3472. para. 1202: The Trial Chamber finds that the acts of rape and sexual slavery that it has found to be proved beyond reasonable doubt in Kailahun District also constitute in each case a serious humiliation, degradation and violation of the personal dignity of the victims, and that the perpetrators intentionally committed these acts and knew that their acts would produce this effect. However, as no locations were pleaded in the Indictment for Chapter 6 in relation to Kailahun District such evidence does not fall within the scope of the Indictment, and is relevant only insofar as it demonstrates that the activity was widespread or systematic, and therefore assists in establishing the chapeau requirements.

3473. para. 1203: The Trial Chamber thus finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) AFRC and RUF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of women captured in Kenema who were used as sexual slaves after February 1998 in Buedu and Kailahun Town;

(ii) AFRC and RUF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of women used as sexual slaves in Buedu, including an incident of a woman who was considered to be "disrespectful" being stripped down to her underwear and beaten, between February 1998 and December 1999 in Buedu;

(iii) An RUF member committed an outrage upon personal dignity on TF1-189 who was used as a sexual slave in Kailahun Town from August to September 1998.

3474. para. 1204: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[2973] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Kailahun District there was a nexus between the acts of sexual violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of the sexual violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Kailahun District constitute outrages upon personal dignity as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(vi) Freetown and the Western Area – Outrages upon personal dignity

3475. para. 1205: The Trial Chamber finds that the acts of rape and sexual slavery that it has found to be proved beyond reasonable doubt in Freetown and the Western Area also constitute in each case a serious humiliation, degradation and violation of the personal dignity of the victims, and that the perpetrators intentionally committed these acts and knew that their acts would produce this effect.

3476. para. 1206: The Trial Chamber thus finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) Men and boys, members of AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian fighters, under the command of Gullit, committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of women and girls who were raped in public in the grounds of the State House where others viewed the acts over three nights in January 1999;

(ii) AFRC, RUF, STF and Liberian commanders and fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of girls who were raped inside State House during the Freetown attack of January 1999;

(iii) Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a commander in the AFRC, committed an outrage upon personal dignity by raping a young girl captured in Freetown during the January 1999 attack;

(iv) RUF fighters committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of girls in a house, in the presence of other persons, on Blackhall Road during the Freetown attack in January 1999;

(v) Rebels under the command of Captain Blood committed outrages upon personal dignity on an unknown number of girls, who were raped in public and in view of other persons, in Kissy on or about 22 January 1999;

(vi) Major Arif, an SLA soldier, committed an outrage upon personal dignity on TF1-029 who was used as a sexual slave in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema from late January to March 1999;

(vii) James, an STF fighter, committed an outrage upon personal dignity on Akiatu Tholley who was used as a sexual slave in Allen Town, where she and others were undressed and raped in the view of other people, and in Waterloo from approximately late January through early April 1999;

(viii) A member of the AFRC committed an outrage upon personal dignity on TF1-023 who was used as a sexual slave in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile from late January through March 1999.

3477. para. 1207: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[2974] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Freetown and the Western Area there was a nexus between the acts of sexual violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of the sexual violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of sexual violence in Freetown and the Western Area constitute outrages upon personal dignity as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Factual Findings

3483. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

3484. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

3485. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

3486. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

3487. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3490. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[173]

3491. These attacks [para. 41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[174]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

3492. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[175]

[174] RUF Indictment, para. 42.
[175] RUF Indictment, para. 44.

(iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

3493. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages." Acts of sexual violence included the following:[176]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the district including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-Town, Foender (or Foendu), Tomenduh, Fokoiya, Wondedu, and AFRC/RUF camps such as "superman camp" and Kissi-Town camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the district and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[177]
>
> ii. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono, and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[178]
>
> iii. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages," and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[179]
>
> iv. Kailahun District: At all times relevant to this indictment, an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the district, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[180]
> v. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the city of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages," and/or forced them into other forms of sexual violence. The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[181]

vi. Port Loko District: About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces fled to various locations in Porto Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls at various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the district were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages." The "wives were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[182]

3494. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And

Count 8: Other inhuman act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.[183]

3523. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 964 – 988 [567].

(iii) Applicable law – Outrages upon personal dignity

3524. para. 173: The Indictment charges the Accused in Count 9 with outrages upon personal dignity as a violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II punishable under Article 3 of the Statute. The Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the acts outlined above in Counts 6 through 8 of the Indictment.

3525. para. 174: The Chamber notes that acts that constitute outrages upon personal dignity are prohibited under Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and Article 4(2)(e) of Additional Protocol II. It is well established that the offence of outrages upon personal dignity exists under customary international law and entails individual criminal responsibility.[322] In this regard, the ICTY Trial Chamber in Furundzija observed:

> The general principle of respect for human dignity is the basic underpinning and indeed the very raison d'être of international humanitarian law and human rights law; indeed in modern times it has become of such paramount importance as to permeate the whole body of international law. This principle is intended to shield human beings from outrages upon their personal dignity, whether such outrages are carried out by unlawfully attacking the body or by humiliating and debasing the honour, the self-respect or the mental well being of a person.[323]

3526. para. 175: The Chamber considers that the constitutive elements of this offence are as follows:

(i) The Accused humiliated, degraded or otherwise violated the dignity of one or more persons;

(ii) The severity of the humiliation, degradation or other violation was of such degree as to be generally recognized as an outrage upon personal dignity;[324] and

(iii) The Accused intended the act or omission in the knowledge that the act could have the effect of humiliating, degrading or otherwise violating the dignity of the person.

3527. para. 176: The actus reus of the offence is that there was an act or omission that caused serious humiliation, degradation or otherwise violated the personal dignity of the victim. The second element reflects that the determination of whether or not the act is severe enough to constitute an outrage upon personal dignity must be based on an objective assessment.[325] It is not necessary that the act cause "lasting suffering" to the victim.[326]

3528. para. 177: The Chamber also recognises that the mens rea of the offence does not require that the Accused had a specific intent to humiliate or degrade the victims,[327] that is, that he perpetrated the act for that very reason.[328] The act or omission must, however, have been done intentionally and the Accused must have known "that his act or omission could cause serious humiliation, degradation or otherwise be a serious attack on human dignity."[329] The Chamber considers that there is no requirement to establish that the Accused knew of the "actual consequences of the act",[330] but only of its possible consequences.[331] There is no additional requirement to establish that the Accused had a discriminatory intent or motive.[332]

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

3529. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Criminal acts and events – paras. 411-414, 417– 419 [604].

b. Locations – Pleading

c. Timeframes – Pleading

d. Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – Pleading

3532. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Pleading - Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – paras. 436 – 447 [626].

e. Outrages upon personal dignity – Pleading

3533. para. 468: Count 9 charges the Accused with outrages upon personal dignity based on their alleged responsibility for the acts outlined in Counts 6 to 8 – that is, "rape", "sexual slavery", "other inhumane acts" and "any other form of sexual violence". Kallon submitted that the Chamber should follow Trial Chamber II, which, based on an identical Count in the AFRC Indictment, held that "given the broad scope of the offence of "any other form of sexual violence", it was essential for the Indictment to clearly identify the specific offence or offences which the Accused are required to answer.[895] Trial Chamber II found that the Indictment was defective in this respect because it failed to plead material facts with sufficient precision.[896] Trial Chamber II therefore dismissed "any other form of sexual violence" as a basis for charges of "outrages of personal dignity", a finding which was undisturbed on appeal.[897] The Kallon Defence submitted that similarly, the allegations of "any other form of sexual violence" cannot be used to substantiate Count 9, and it should therefore be dismissed in part.

3534. para. 469: The Chamber recalls that it has found that Count 7 was bad for duplicity, and as a remedy, struck out "any other form of sexual violence" from this Count. However, the Chamber opines that conduct which constitutes "any other form of sexual violence" could still be considered as the basis for charges of "outrages of personal dignity".

3535. para. 470: The Chamber, however, recalls that the Appeals Chamber in the AFRC Case held that "the residual nature of the crime of "any other form of sexual violence" requires clarification of the conduct the Prosecution would rely on to prove the offence.[898] The Indictment does not provide any such clarification. The Chamber must therefore consider whether this defect has been cured.

f. Forced marriages – Pleading

3536. para. 463: The Gbao Defence submitted that when seeking to amend the Indictment to add Count 8, the Prosecution referred solely to Count 8 as a charge of 'forced marriage.' Further, in granting leave to the Prosecution to amend the Indictment, the Chamber addressed the proposed additional Count as being restricted to charges of 'forced marriage,' and did not address the possibility of any other crimes being charged under Count 8.[883] The Gbao Defence submitted that the Prosecution should therefore be precluded from arguing that claims unrelated to 'forced marriage' can be considered under Count 8 of the Indictment.[884]

3537. para. 464: The Chamber recalls that in seeking leave to amend the Indictment, the Prosecution specifically sought leave to add a new charge of 'forced marriage' as an "other inhumane act"[885] and thereafter consistently indicated that Count 8 relates solely to 'forced marriage.' The Chamber notes further that in its Final Trial Brief, the Prosecution made no submission to the effect that "other inhumane acts" other than 'forced marriage' should be considered in determining the Accused's liability under Count 8 of the Indictment.[886]

3538. para. 465: Predicated upon the foregoing, the Chamber is certainly not disposed to consider acts that are not related to 'forced marriage' under Count 8 even if they could be capable of constituting an "other inhumane act".

3539. para. 466: The Sesay Defence also argued in its Final Trial Brief that the crime of 'forced marriage' has been defectively pleaded.[887] It submitted that in the 2004 Request for Leave to Amend the Indictment,[888] the Prosecution argued that 'forced marriage' was fundamentally a sexual crime based on the same underlying material facts as the existing charges. As such, 'forced marriage' was originally pleaded as being primarily a sexual crime.[889] Counsel for Sesay contended that in the Prosecution's Rule 98 motion, however, the Prosecution changed its position and characterised the crime of 'forced marriage' as one which was not predominantly sexual in nature.[890] This position has since been confirmed by the Appeals Chamber in the CDF Appeals Judgement.[891] The Sesay Defence argued that it was misled as to the material elements of the 'forced marriage' Count, and this defect was not cured. Therefore, the Chamber should dismiss Count 8, and in the alternative, Count 9 of the Indictment for lack of notice.[892]

3540. para. 467: In the AFRC Appeal Judgement, although the Appeals Chamber noted the confusion caused by the Prosecution's placement of the offence of 'forced marriage' under the sexual violence section of the Indictment, it ultimately held that the Trial Chamber should have considered the crime of 'forced marriage' as a non-sexual offence.[893] The Chamber notes that there is no requirement that the Indictment plead the legal characterization of the crime, as long as it adequately pleads the material facts underlying the offence. The Chamber finds that the material facts underlying the offence of 'forced marriage' were sufficiently pleaded in the Prosecution Request for Leave to Amend the Indictment[894] and in the amended Indictment itself. While the Chamber finds that the Prosecution may have created confusion by its initial characterization of the offence as predominantly sexual in nature, it does not find that the offence of 'forced marriage,' as pleaded in Count 8 or Count 9, is defective on this basis.

(v) Kono District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3541. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions –Kono District – Unlawful killings - paras. 1266 – 1267 [1630].

a. Rapes, sexual slavery and 'forced marriages' – Kono District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3542. para. 1298: The Chamber finds that the acts of rape, sexual slavery and 'forced marriage,' as described above, also constitute in each case a severe humiliation, degradation and violation of the dignity of the victims and the perpetrators knew or ought to have known that that their acts would produce this effect.[2464]

3543. para. 1299: The Chamber thus finds that, as charged in Count 9, AFRC/RUF rebels committed outrages on personal dignity in respect of an unknown number of civilians in Koidu; that Staff Alhaji committed an outrage on the personal dignity of a civilian woman in Tombodu; that AFRC/RUF rebels committed outrages on personal dignity in respect of six women in Sawao, TF1-217's wife and an unknown number of other women in Penduma, TF1-218 in Bumpeh, and a woman in Bomboafuidu; that RUF rebels committed outrages on personal dignity in respect of an unknown number of women in Wendedu; and that an RUF rebel committed an outrage on the personal dignity of TF1-016's daughter.

3544. para. 1300: The Chamber recalls its finding that RUF member Kotor forcibly married TF1-016 in Kissi Town.[2465] Although the Chamber finds that Kotor was not an RUF fighter, we hold that war crimes may be committed by persons who are not members of a party to a conflict, as long as a functional relationship existed between the act and the conflict.[2466]

3545. para. 1301: The Chamber recalls that Kotor worked for the RUF over a period of many months, that he was among a group of RUF rebels who were offered an abducted "wife," and that he lived in a residence with armed RUF fighters from whom his "wife" was too afraid to attempt escape. The Chamber is satisfied from this evidence that Kotor enjoyed a close relationship with the RUF which permitted him to force TF1-016 into a "marriage". The Chamber thus finds that a clear functional relationship existed between Kotor's conduct and the armed conflict, such that Kotor's acts constitute an outrage on the personal dignity of TF1-016, as charged in Count 9.

b. Bumpeh – Kono District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3546. para. 1302: The Chamber recalls that in February/March 1998, rebels in Bumpeh ordered a couple to have sexual intercourse in the presence of the other captured civilians and their daughter. After the enforced rape they forced the man's daughter to wash her father's penis.[2467]

3547. para. 1303: The Chamber recalls its finding that conduct which constitutes "any other form of sexual violence" may form the basis for charges of outrages upon personal dignity.[2468] The Chamber observes, however, that the Prosecution did not particularise the conduct that constitutes other forms of sexual violence. The Prosecution also restricted its pleadings on sexual violence in the Indictment to crimes committed against "women and girls," thereby excluding male victims of sexual violence.[2469] The Prosecution therefore failed to adequately plead material facts which it then relied on as evidence of crimes, rendering the Indictment defective. The Chamber must therefore determine whether this defect in the Indictment was cured by clear, timely and consistent notice of the material facts to the Accused.

3548. para. 1304: The Prosecution disclosed a witness statement of TF1-218 in which it is alleged that rebels forced a couple to have sexual intercourse in public and abused the couple's 10 year old daughter.[2470] As this statement was disclosed prior to the start of the Prosecution case on 5 July 2004, the Chamber finds that this constitutes adequate notice of the material particulars of the form of sexual violence alleged. The Chamber finds that the defect in the Indictment was cured by clear, timely and consistent notice to the Defence.

3550. para. 1306: The Chamber accordingly finds that AFRC/RUF rebels committed two outrages upon personal dignity, as charged in Count 9 of the Indictment.

c. Bomboafuidu - Kono District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3551. para. 1307: The Chamber finds that the conduct of AFRC/RUF rebels in forcing approximately 20 captive civilians to have sexual intercourse with each other and slitting the genitalia of several male and female civilians constituted a severe degradation, harm and violation of the victims' personal dignity.[2471] The Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators knew their actions would have this effect and so intended.

3552. para. 1308: Again, the Chamber observes that the Prosecution did not particularise the conduct that constitutes other forms of sexual violence and did not plead forms of sexual violence committed against male victims. However, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution adequately notified the Defence of the material fact of this allegation by the disclosure of such information in the witness statement of TF1-192.[2472] Therefore, the Chamber finds that the defect in the Indictment was cured in a timely, clear and consistent manner causing no material prejudice to the Defence in the preparation of their case.

3553. para. 1309: The Chamber therefore finds that AFRC/RUF rebels in Bomboafuidu committed outrages upon the personal dignity of an unknown number of civilians, as charged in Count 9.

(vi) Kailahun District – Outrages upon personal dignity

3554. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

3556. para. 1474: The Chamber is satisfied that the acts of sexual violence in respect of which findings were made under Counts 6 to 8 resulted in the humiliation, degradation and violation of the dignity of the victims.[2766] The Chamber is satisfied that the victims of sexual slavery and 'forced marriage' endured particularly prolonged physical and mental suffering as they were subjected to continued sexual acts while living with their captors under difficult and coercive circumstances. Due to the social stigma attached to them by virtue of their former status as 'bush wives' and the effects of the prolonged forced conjugal relationships to which they were subjected, these women and girls were too ashamed or too afraid to return to their communities after the conflict. Accordingly, many victims were displaced from their home towns and support networks.[2767]

3557. para. 1475: The Chamber finds that these violations were serious and that the perpetrators were aware of their degrading effect. We accordingly find that TF1-093, TF1-314 and an unknown number of other women were subjected to outrages upon their personal dignity in Kailahun District, as charged in Count 9 of the Indictment.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Outrages upon personal dignity

3558. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

3559. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3560. para. 1583: The Chamber finds that these crimes of rape, sexual slavery and 'forced marriage' constitute in each case a severe humiliation, degradation and violation of the dignity of the victims and the perpetrators knew that their acts would have this effect.3024 The Chamber accordingly finds that AFRC rebels committed outrages on personal dignity in respect of an unknown number of civilians in Freetown and the Western Area between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999. These acts constitute the crime thas charged in Chapter 9 of the Indictment.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3583. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[184]

3584. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [185]

3585. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [186]

3586. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [187]

[184] AFRC Indictment, para. 37.
[185] AFRC Indictment, para. 38.
[186] AFRC Indictment, para. 39.

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

3587. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [188]

(iii) Counts 6-9: Sexual Violence

3588. Widespread sexual violence committed against civilian women and girls included brutal rapes, often by multiple rapists, and forced "marriages". Acts of sexual violence included the following: [189]

> i. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls at various locations throughout the District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Kissi-town (or Kissi Town), Foendor (or Foendu), Tomendeh, Fokoiya, Wondedu and AFRC/RUF camps such as "Superman camp" and Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp. An unknown number of women and girls were abducted from various locations within the District and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[190]
> ii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Koinadugu District, such as Kabala, Koinadugu, Heremakono and Fadugu. In addition an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[191]

iii. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in locations in Bombali District, including Mandaha and Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). In addition, an unknown number of abducted women and girls were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[192]

iv. Kailahun District - At all times relevant to this Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone, brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the District, and used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[193]

v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of AFRC/RUF raped hundreds of women and girls throughout the City of Freetown and the Western Area, and abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves and/or forced them into "marriages" and/or subjected them to other forms of sexual violence. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands";[194]

vi. Port Loko District - About the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF raped an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District. In addition, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were used as sex slaves and/or forced into "marriages" and/or subjected to other forms of sexual violence by members of the AFRC/RUF. The "wives" were forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands".[195]

3589. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 6: Rape, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

[191] AFRC Indictment, para. 53.
[192] AFRC Indictment, para. 54.
[193] AFRC Indictment, para. 55.
[194] AFRC Indictment, para. 56.
[195] AFRC Indictment, para. 57.

Count 7: Sexual slavery and any other form of sexual violence, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.g. of the Statute;

And:

Count 8: Other inhumane act, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 9: Outrages upon personal dignity, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.e. of the Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Preliminary Remarks

3590. para. 969: Count 9 (Outrages on Personal Dignity) has been charged in addition to or in the alternative to Count 6 (Rape), Count 7 (Sexual Slavery and Any Other Form of Sexual Violence) and Count 8 (Other Inhumane Act, Forced Marriage). As discussed, supra, in Chapter II, Defects in the Indictment, the Trial Chamber has dismissed Count 7 for duplicity[1952] and as discussed, supra, in Chapter IX, Applicable Law, the Trial Chamber has dismissed Count 8 for redundancy.1953 As additionally discussed, supra, in Chapter IX, Applicable Law, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the acts of rape and sexual slavery are encompassed by the definition of outrages on personal dignity and will consider evidence to this effect presently.

3591. para. 1070: In coming to its findings in relation to Count 9, the Trial Chamber relies on the findings made in relation to Count 6, supra, as well as its findings on the chapeau elements of war crimes.[1954]

(ii) Kono District - Crimes

3592. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Kono District (14 February 1998 - 30 June 1998) - Crimes paras. 969 – 972 [2893].

3593. para. 1100: The Indictment alleges that between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 an unknown number of women and girls were abducted by members of the AFRC/RUF from various locations within the District and used as sex slaves.[2010]

3594. para. 1101: The Prosecution has conceded that it has not led evidence in respect of Tomendeh, Fokoiya, Superman Camp/Kissi Town Camp, Kissi Town or Tombodu.[2011]

3595. para. 1102: In making its findings in relation to Kono District, the Trial Chamber relies upon the evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-334 and Defence witnesses DAB-125 and DAB-W1.

3596. para. 1103: Prosecution witness TF1-334 testified that from the time Johnny Paul Koroma declared Koidu a "no go" area for civilians in early March, 1998, civilians were captured by "rebels" from the surrounding villages such as Tombodu and Yamadu. Civilians who tried to escape were executed.[2012] Women - particularly the young and beautiful ones - were placed under the full control of "commanders"; they became their "wives". As their "wives" the women cooked for the rebels and the other soldiers in Kono. They were also "used sexually."[2013] This was an open practice. Witness TF1-334, "Commander A" and other soldiers all "had sexual intercourse" with captured women.[2014]

3597. para. 1104: The Prosecution submits that this evidence has not been challenged by any Defence evidence and as such the Prosecution version of events must be accepted.[2015]

3598. para. 1105: The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that witness TF1-334' s testimony that women were captured; that captured civilians who tried to escape were executed; that captured women were place under the "full control" of commanders and became their "wives"; and that these women cooked for the commanders and other soldiers is indicative of the deprivation of the captured women's liberty and the exercise of ownership over them by members of the AFRC. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied on the evidence of the witness, namely that the women were "used sexually" and that soldiers, including himself, had sexual intercourse with captured women, that acts of sexual violence were committed against the captured women. The Trial Chamber infers from the environment of violence and coercion that the women did not consent to these sexual acts. The Trial Chamber is thus of the opinion that the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of sexual slavery are satisfied on the basis of this evidence.

3599. para. 1106: The evidence of witness TF1-334 is generally supported by that of witness DAB-101 who testified that after hearing on the radio about "Operation No Living Thing" he was captured and released three times by the RUF in Kono District. The "rebels" were based at Mortema at this time. The witness was captured, together with two other civilians, by the RUF a fourth time. The rebels were armed and were wearing civilian clothing. The rebels told the witness that they would release him if he agreed to turn over two of his nieces to them to be their "wives". The witness testified that the nieces advised him to accept the offer so he did. The girls were 15 and 17 years old at the time. The witness then went back to the "bush". The witness saw the girls again after the war. The girls told the witness their "ordeal"; they said they were beaten but did not tell the witness anything else.[2016] The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that girls aged 15 and 17 years of age, in the context of coercion and violence, could not have validly consented to "marriage".

3600. para. 1107: Witness DAB-IOI also testified that, generally, women that were captured by the rebels were transformed into their 'wives'. They were usually sent to spy for the rebels or to find food. In Mortema, the witness did not hear about any rapes. He also never heard the name of the Accused Brima.[2017]

3601. para. 1108: The evidence of witness TF1-334 is also generally supported by that of witness DAB-125 who testified that around Wordu Town, if "they" saw a young girl they would hold and turn her into their wife.[2018]

a. Koidu – Kono District - Crimes

3602. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Kono District – Koidu - Crimes - paras. 973, 974[2897].

b. Foendor/Foendu – Kono District - Crimes

3603. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Kono District – Foendor/Foendu – Crimes - paras. 975-979 [2899].

c. Wondedu – Kono District - Crimes

3604. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Kono District – Wondedu – Crimes - para. 980[2904].

(iii) Koinadugu District – Crimes

3605. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Koinadugu District – Crimes - paras. 982-985 [2905]

3606. para. 1110: The Indictment alleges that between 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998 an unknown number of women and girls were abducted and used as sex slaves by members of the AFRC/RUF.[2019]

3607. para. 1111: The Prosecution has conceded that it has not led evidence in respect of Heremakono.[2020]

3608. para. 1112: In making its findings in relation to Koinadugu District, the Trial Chamber relies on the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-094, TF1-133, and TF1-209 and Defence witness DAB-079 and DAB-156.

3609. para. 1113: As examined, supra, in the evidence by witness section, witness TF1-094 testified that in August of 1998 she was abducted by a certain 'Andrew' from her village, Bambukura, Koinadugu District. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the witness's description of 'Andrew' as an "SLA" dressed in combat that Andrew was a member of the AFRC or the RUF. The witness testified that after Andrew abducted her, he repeatedly raped her. The witness became pregnant within the first month of being with Andrew. She testified that she had to do his laundry and other chores and that Andrew considered the witness to be his "wife". The witness was taken with the troops as they travelled to Bombali District. They reached Rosos when the witness was four months pregnant.

3610. para. 1114: The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the witness's testimony of her forcible abduction; the murder of her parents in her presence which established an context of fear and violence; her fear that she too would be killed if she did not have sex with 'Andrew'; the extraction of her forced labour by 'Andrew', namely laundering and other chores; the use of the term 'wife'; and her detention with the troops for approximately four to five months as they travelled through Koinadugu District to Bombali District are all indicative of the deprivation of her liberty and the exercise of ownership over her person by 'Andrew' which together with acts of sexual violence, namely, 'Andrew's repeated rape of the witness and her subsequent pregnancy, satisfies the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of sexual slavery.

3611. para. 1115: Prosecution witness TF1-133 testified that captured women in Koinadugu District were forced to be "wives" to members of the AFRC or RUF and that she was present in Krubola for a period of seven months and Serekolia for a period of three months during which time "forced marriages" were supervised and organised by herself for members of the AFRC and RUF.

3612. para. 1116: The witness testified that in Kumala, in April 1998, at the time that the villagers were "getting ready to make [their] farms" at the end of the dry season, she, her siblings and one of her husband's other wives, were captured by four "rebels" whom the witness named as 'Mohammed the Killer', 'Trouble', 'Arpick' and 'Cyborg'. Some of the rebels were in uniform and some were in civilian dress.[2021] The witness and her family members, together with some other captured civilians known to the witness - Bamba lalloh and Sialo Kamara - were taken by the rebels on a path towards Woronbiai. Before they reached town, 'Mohammed the Killer', who was armed, raped the witness. The witness testified that she was unable to refuse. At the same time, another rebel – whom the witness named as 'RPG' - raped the witness's husband's other wife.[2022]

3613. para. 1117: The witness was kept with the rebels at Woronbiai for eight days. There the witness learned that Mohammed the Killer's commander was named 'Cobra'.[2023] Other commanders at Woronbiai were 'Colonel Tee' who was SLA; 'Pa Mani' who was SLA; and 'Rambo'. 'Rambo' and 'Pa Mani' were the overall commanders at Woronbiai.[2024] At Woronbiai, 'Mohammed the Killer' wanted to marry the witness to 'Cobra'. The witness refused. 'Mohammed the Killer' said the witness should be killed and he wounded her with a bayonet. The witness was injured on her hip and buttocks.[2025] The witness was led away by a rebel to be killed, however, 'Rambo' intervened.[2026] ·Rambo' and 'Pa Mani' punished 'Mohammed the Killer' by having him beaten.[2027] 'Cobra' said "You have brought this woman for me. If she says she doesn't love me, leave her alone".[2028] The witness was treated for her injuries. For the eight days she was in Woronbiai, the witness lived with 'Cobra'.[2029]

3614. para. 1118: All of the women who were captured at the same time as the witness were given to "men" as their "wives" which meant that the women had to have sex with the men. The witness's husband's other wife was given to a "rebel" named Komba; Bamba Jalloh was given to a Mende "rebel" named Yubao. Sialo Kamara was made to work for the wives of the rebels. She laundered clothes and washed dishes.[2030]

3615. para. 1119: The Trial Chamber notes that in its Final Brief, the Prosecution cites the proceeding testimony of witness TFl-133 as evidence of crimes committed in Woronbiai, Kana District.[2031] The Trial Chamber finds that this is a mistaken assertion. Witness TF1-133 clearly testified that she was in the bush outside of Kumala, near Alikalia, when she was captured, and that she was raped in the bush on the way to Woronbiai. She also testified that immediately prior to the attack on Kumala, Yifin had been attacked.[2032] The Trial Chamber has no doubt that the proceeding events the witness describes took place in Koinadugu District.

3616. para. 1120: Witness TFl-133 testified that then she and an unknown number of other women who had been captured by "rebels" were taken with the rebels - including 'Cobra' and "Brigadier" Mani – to Krubola where they stayed for seven months. At Krubola, they "met" another group of rebels which included a "fighter" named 'Savage', a "rebel" named 'Komba Gbundema', and a "rebel" named 'Superman'. There were other men there, but the witness did not know their names. The men at Krubola were all "under" Komba Gbundema.[2033] The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of this evidence that the rebels present at Krubola at this time were both members of the AFRC and RUF.

3617. para. 1121: In Krubola, the captured women cooked and "had sex" with the rebels and were forced to be their "wives". The witness stated that when a women was "betrothed" to a man, she became his "wife" which according to the witness, meant that "whoever you were with would have sex with you." The witness testified that when the rebels captured women, they would have sex with them before bringing them to where the rebels were based. When the captured women were taken to the base, they would be handed over to a person who would have sex with that woman all the time. The "bosses and stronger guys" all had wives who were captured but the subordinates were not allowed to have wives. The subordinates would be sent to the front and they would always bring back captured civilians, including women.

3618. para. 1122: The witness testified that in her presence the "elders" and "bosses" including 'Rambo', 'Colonel Tee' and 'Pa Mani' made a law that whoever was given a woman would be the sole owner over her and that a man should not covet his colleague's wife. "If you were caught, you will be killed". Captured children were made to work for the captured "wives" of the rebels.[2034] On cross-examination, the witness testified that the children were captured because older civilians wanted them to work for them.

3619. para. 1123: At the time that groundnuts were about to be harvested the rebels moved to Serekolia, Koinadugu District. On the way, the rebels travelled through Mongo which "was captured". The rebels that moved included Kombo Gbundema's group, 'Superman', 'Savage', 'Colonel Tee' and 'Pa Mani'. They remained in Serekolia for three months. While they were there the civilians voted for the witness to represent them. She was appointed the "Mammy Queen" by 'Pa Mani', 'Colonel Tee' and their clerk Alhaji. As the Mammy Queen, the witness would investigate captured civilians who had been mistreated and cases where husbands or wives had sex with someone else's spouse. If a woman was found guilty of having sex with someone else's husband she could be given 200 lashes. If a man raped another man's wife, he could be killed.[2035]

3620. para. 1124: The Prosecution asserts that the witness's position as a "Mammy Queen" did not in any way help her or the other "wives'" plight, as it did not affect the powers of the men over their abducted 'wives', or afford them any liberty to leave or refuse to engage in acts of a sexual nature with their so called husbands.[2036]

3621. para. 1125: The Prosecution also asserts that witness TFl-133 was not discredited on cross-examination and that her evidence has not been challenged by any Defence evidence and as such, the Prosecution version of events should be accepted.[2037]

3622. para. 1126: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the evidence of witness TF1-133 that women captured in Koinadugu District were subject to repeated rape by members of the AFRC/RUF were made to labour for members of the AFRC/RUF, namely to cook, launder clothes and wash dishes; were labelled as "wives", in this context a label of possession, and placed in exclusive relationships of ownership by certain rebels; were punished with physical violence if the exclusive sexual relationship was violated; and were detained at rebel bases in Krubola and Serekolia and made to travel together with the troops; are all indicative of the deprivation of liberty and the exercise of ownership over captured women together with acts of sexual violence satisfying the actus reus and mens rea of the crime of sexual slavery.

3624. para. 1128: In addition to these findings, the Trial Chamber also relies upon the evidence of witness TFl-209 that when she and other captured civilians were brought to Koinadugu Town, they were taken to the "MP's" office where their names were recorded by a person to whom the witness referred as 'Mongo.' The witness testified that this was done so that the captured civilians would not go missing. The witness described 'Mongo' as dressed in combat and stated that he was the boss of the Military Police.[2039]

3625. para. 1129: The witness testified that following this registration process she was taken by the "person" who captured her to 'Jabie's house where she cooked and laundered for him. The witness testified that he turned her into his "wife" which she explained meant that he would have sex with the witness whenever he felt like it.[2040] The witness also testified that with the exception of excursions during the day to farms in the bush, she stayed in the same house with 'Jabie' in Koinadugu Town for three months until he was killed.[2041]

3626. para. 1130: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness's testimony of her forcible capture; the registration of her name by 'Mongo' when she arrived in Koinadugu Town and her perception that this was done to prevent her and other captured civilians from "going missing"; the extraction of her forced labour by 'Jabie', namely cooking and laundering; the use of the term 'wife', in this context a label of possession; and her detention in the same house as 'Jabie' is indicative of the , deprivation of her liberty and the exercise of ownership over her person which together with acts of sexual violence, namely, 'Jabie's repeated rape of the witness found previously by the Trial Chamber satisfies the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of sexual slavery.

3627. para. 1131: The evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-094, TF1-133, and TF1-209 IS generally supported by that of Defence witnesses DAB-156 and DAB-079. As found by the Trial Chamber with regards to Chapter 5, supra, Defence witness DAB-156 was raped by 'Junior Lion' in Kabala sometime after the AFRC was overthrown in Freetown in February 1998 but before the rainy season.[2042] The witness also testified that he took her as his "wife" by force and that he abducted her in Yuromia Town, near Foday Street.[2043]

3628. para. 1132: Witness DAB-079 testified that he did not receive any information about sexual violence in Kabala Town by the SLAs, although there were rumours of 'bush wives' in the interior. The witness was part of a CDF information network of 1000-1700 people and was receiving weekly reports from Kabala, Koinadugu, Yifin, Geberefe and other locations.[2044]
