3637. para. 1138: Witness TF1-334 testified that the AFRC troops arrived in Rosos at the beginning of the rainy season in 1998 and stayed there for three months, leaving in September[2054] 'Five-Five' was in charge of overseeing that the captured women were trained for combat.[2055] 'Five-Five' continued to regulate the "marriages" of the women abducted in Karina at Camp Rosos. 'Gullit' appointed a "Mammy Queen" - a woman at the camp who looked after women's affairs, including pregnancy, birth and sickness.[2056] 'Five-Five' issued a "disciplinary order" regulating the conduct of women which was explained to supervisors in the camp and to the Mammy Queen. According to this order, women who were unfaithful to their husbands should be punished.[2057] Soldiers and their "wives" reported problems directly to 'Five-Five' and if 'Five-Five' determined that the woman deserved punishment this could be delegated to the Mammy Queen. Women found by 'Five-Five' to have misbehaved could be beaten or given lashes. Women were also locked for long periods of time in a box meant for transporting rice.[2058] In one instance, witness TFl-334 observed a Staff Sergeant named "Junior" aka "General Bagehgeh" report to 'Five-Five' that he suspected his "wife" of misbehaving. 'Five-Five' called the woman before him and found her guilty. He ordered that she be sent to the Mammy Queen, be given a dozen lashes and be locked in the box. The witness escorted her to the box.[2059]

3638. para. 1139: The Trial Chamber considers the evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-334 together with that of Prosecution witness TF1-033 who testified to having been taken along with AFRC troops to Rosos during the rainy season in 1998.[2060] He testified that rape was widespread throughout the time he was in captivity with the AFRC troops and that the only thing done about sexual violence committed by ARFC troops by "the commanders" occurred at Rosos. The witness testified that according to the "jungle justice" rules at that time, any fighter who raped another fighter's abducted and forcefully married wife would be put to death. The witness specifically recalled an incident in which Alhaji Kamanda alias 'Gunboot' killed an AFRC fighter for raping another fighter's forcefully abducted and married wife.[2061]

3639. para. 1140: The evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-334 and TF1-033 is supported by that of Prosecution witness TF1-094, found by the Trial Chamber to have been subject to sexual slavery in Koinadugu District, who also testified that during the period of her sexual slavery, she was brought by the troops to Rosos.[2062]

3640. para. 1141: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-334, TFl-033 and TF1-094 that women captured by the AFRC/RUF were distributed to soldiers to be their "wives"; that captured women were brought to Rosos where they were subject to physical and psychological violence as a form of punishment; and that the women were detained with their "husbands" until the soldiers invaded Freetown is indicative of the deprivation of the captured women's liberty and the exercise of ownership over her person which taken together with acts of sexual violence committed against them, namely, rape at the hands of their rebel "husbands" or at the hands of other fighters satisfies the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of sexual slavery. The Trial Chamber finds further that this was a practice tolerated and regulated by the AFRC/RUF commanders.

3641. para. 1142: Prosecution witness TFl-334 also testified that in or about September 1998, after the troops left Rosos, SAJ Musa arrived in Major Eddie Town. During a meeting with the commanders there, he said that the troops would not be able to secure the women so the women should leave. The women did not leave.[2063]

3642. para. 1143: This evidence is generally supported by that of Defence witness DAB-095 who testified that he was in Colonel Eddie Town when it was used as a military camp for the SLAs under SAJ Musa. The witness was present during a muster parade held by SAJ Musa in Eddie Town when SAJ Musa gave an order that the SLAs should not attack civilians. Witness did not know about a Mammy Queen at Eddie Town. Soldiers were not allowed to rape civilians.[2064]

3643. para. 1144: The Prosecution argues that defence witnesses who gave insider type evidence such as DAB-095 lied in key parts of their evidence and colluded with each other and the Accused in order to ensure that their stories were the same.[2065] The Prosecution considers evidence given by such witnesses that they did not hear of any crimes, such as rape, being committed by the SLAs during the retreat from Freetown to be manifestly unreliable and untrue.[2066]

(v) Kailahun - Crimes

3645. para. 1146: The Indictment alleges that at all times relevant to the Indictment, an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were subjected to sexual violence. Many of these victims were captured in other areas of the Republic of Sierra Leone and brought to AFRC/RUF camps in the District and used as sex slaves.[2067]

3646. para. 1147: No specific concessions with regards to locations in Kailahun were found to have been made by the Prosecution at the Motion for Acquittal stage.[2068]

3647. para. 1148: In making its findings in relation to Kailahun, the Trial Chamber has examined the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-045 who testified that during the ECOMOG interventiol1 in Freetown in February 1998, he was in Kenema.[2069] "Operation Pay Yourself' was declared by Sam Bockarie during which time civilians were abducted by the troops and taken to Daru.[2070] The witness moved with the troops to Daru, where the next morning, he met his niece Aminata who was one of the captured civilians. Aminata told the witness that an "RUF" named Ibrahim captured her, raped her and told her she should be his "wife". Aminata was a young teenager at the time.[2071] The Trial Chamber finds on the basis of this evidence that the crime of sexual slavery is not proven as the evidence insufficiently establishes the exercise of ownership by the perpetrator over the victim.

(vi) Freetown and Western Area - Crimes

3648. See above: Chapter 4 – AFRC – Trial Judgment – Factual Findings - Freetown and Western Area - Crimes - paras. 1042 -1043 [2962].

3649. para. 1150: The Indictment alleges that between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 throughout Freetown and the Western Area members of the AFRC/RUF abducted hundreds of women and girls and used them as sex slaves.[2072]

3650. para. 1151: No specific concessions with regards to locations in Freetown and the Western Area were found to have been made by the Prosecution at the Motion for Acquittal stage.[2073]

3652. para. 1153: Prosecution witness TF1-023 testified that she was 16[2074] when the AFRC invaded Freetown in January 1999. She and her family tried to hide; however, she was captured by "rebels"[2075] in Calaba Town on 22 January 1999.[2076] She was taken by the rebels first to Allen Town and then back to Calaba Town.[2077] At Calaba town, she was given to an AFRC rebel,[2078] hereinafter "the Captain" to be his "wife".[2079] The Captain told the witness he would not take her as his "wife" as he had already been given another woman - the witness's cousin - and could not take care of two women at the same time.[2080] Instead, the Captain handed the witness over to a known AFRC Colonel,[2081] hereinafter "Colonel X", who took her as his "wife".[2082] There was no ceremony and he did not ask her consent.[2083] The witness was afraid. That night, Colonel X came into the room where the witness was instructed to sleep. He told her to undress, threatened her and had sex with her without her consent. Prior to this incident, the witness was a virgin.[2084]

3653. para. 1154: After that night, the witness was taken along with the rebels as they attempted to evade ECOMOG attacks, travelling to Allen Town, Waterloo, Benguema, Lumpa and Four Mile.[2085] At Benguema, the witness saw a man whom the soldiers[2086] said was the senior commander, Brigadier 'Gullit'[2087] At Four Mile the witness spent three weeks with Colonel X.[2088] During this time Colonel X and the witness lived together and he continued to have sex with her frequently. He did not ask her consent when he had sex with her; he said she was his "wife". Colonel X asked the witness to cook for him, but she did not because she did not know how.[2089] The witness felt there was no way for her to escape from Colonel X.[2090] She was unfamiliar with the area in which she was being held[2091] and Colonel X sent an armed escort with her wherever she went.[2092] She was afraid.[2093] There were approximately 400 armed rebels at Four Mile and the witness knew that those who tried to escape were caught and beaten by the rebels.[2094] The witness testified that Colonel X told her that the senior commander at Four Mile was Brigadier 'Bazzy'.[2095] She would see Brigadier 'Bazzy' regularly when he would visit Colonel X.[2096]

3654. para. 1155: There were other women given to soldiers as wives in Four Mile. In Lumpa, for example, the witness knew ten other women who had been captured and given as "wives" to AFRC rebels.[2097] Some were given to lieutenants and some were given to ordinary soldiers.[2098] The Prosecution asserts that this evidence was not challenged in cross-examination.[2099] 1156. As the "wife" of a commander, the witness was accorded certain privileges. The Trial Chamber notes that in chief the witness stated that she was not forced to do "anything". She clarified on cross-examination that she was not forced to do any work; she was not forced to cook or clean, for example.[2100] The witness testified that "people of lower ranks" respected her and deferentially called her "De Mammy" because of the Colonel.[2101] The Prosecution submits that this did not change the status of the witness who remained under sexual slavery because she had no way of leaving as an armed person watched over her and those who attempted to escape were caught and beaten.[2102] The Trial Chamber agrees with this submission. The fact that some individual abductees were treated less harshly than others does not, in our opinion, detract from the fact that they were forcibly taken and subjected to sexual slavery.

3655. para. 1157: Colonel X left the witness in Four Mile and went to Makeni. In his absence, Colonel X left her in the care of another AFRC captain,[2103] hereinafter "Captain Y", whom the witness accepted on cross-examination tried to look after her and to ensure that she did not come to any harm.[2104] The witness travelled with Captain Y and the rebels to Mile 38, Port Loko District and then to Magbeni[2105] where later, in August of 1999, the witness was able to escape. The witness was in the custody of Captain Y for approximately five months. During this time, Colonel X did not return.[2106] The witness saw 'Bazzy' several times in Mile 38.[2107] 'Bazzy' was the overall commander in Magbeni[2108]. In June or July, the witness also saw 'Gullit' in Magbeni.[2109]

3656. para. 1158: The Prosecution submits that the evidence of the witness remained consistent and was unsuccessfully challenged in cross-examination.[2110]

3657. para. 1159: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness's testimony of her forcible capture; the use of the term 'wife', in this context a label of possession; her detention with the troops as they travelled through the Western Area; her detention with Colonel X for three weeks in Four Mile at which time she felt that she could not escape for fear of being beaten or killed by him; and her subsequent detention by Colonel X and the other rebels for a period of several months, are all indicative of the deprivation of her liberty and the exercise of ownership over her person which, together with acts of sexual violence committed against her, namely 'Colonel X's repeated rape of the witness, satisfies the actus reus and mens rea of the crime of sexual slavery.

3658. para. 1160: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified that as the "wife" of Colonel X she was accorded certain benefits, for example, she was not forced to cook or clean and was deferentially called "De Mammy". The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that this is a relative benefit only and does not in any way undermine the absolute seriousness of the crime committed against the witness.

3659. para. 1161: The evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-023 is generally supported by that of Prosecution witness TF1-334 who testified that after the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999, a number of soldiers who did not "have women" before had new "wives".[2111] The soldiers gave the women food and clothing and the women cooked for the soldiers.[2112]

3660. para. 1162: Prosecution witness TFl-334 testified that civilians abducted during the retreat from Freetown[2113] were brought with the rebels to Benguema where the rebels were based for approximately one month.[2114] There were approximately 300 civilians at Benguema - men, women and children.[2115] During this time, the civilians that were abducted were "well-secured" meaning that they could not escape.[2116] Most of the young girls who were abducted from Freetown became the "wives" of "various commanders" meaning that they had sex with the commanders.[2117]

3661. para. 1163: In the Kissy area, where the witness knew some of the captured girls, they told the witness "what they would do with the men who captured them"; sometimes the witness would "see with my own eyes".[2118] The "wives" were also required to help with the cooking.[2119]

3662. para. 1164: Witness TFl-334 testified that "families", which the witness explained refers to the captured civilians travelling with the troops, travelled with the troops from Waterloo to Newton where they all stayed for about a month. The only civilians with the "troops" at Waterloo and Newton were those who arrived with them.[2120] The "women" were helping with the cooking and the "girls" were sleeping with the "commanders". The "commanders" would call them their "wives".[2121] 'Five-Five' was responsible for the women and girls in the camp at Newton. The soldiers would report problems with the women to 'Five-Five'.[2122]

3663. para. 1165: The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that witness TF1-334's testimony that civilian women were captured from Freetown and brought with the retreating troops to the Western Area, were held in Benguema for approximately one month and were taken to Kissy, Waterloo and Newton; that during their detention in Benguema the civilians were well secured so they could not escape; that young girls became the "wives" of various commanders; and that the

"wives" were required to cook for the soldiers is credible and is indicative of the deprivation of the captured women's liberty and the exercise of ownership over them by members of the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that acts of sexual violence described by the witness, namely that the "wives" had sex with the various commanders, were committed against the captured women. The Trial Chamber infers from the environment of violence and coercion that the women did not consent to these sexual acts. The Trial Chamber is thus of the opinion that the actus reus and mens rea elements of the crime of sexual slavery are satisfied on the basis of this evidence.

3665. para. 1167: Defence witness DBK-113 testified that he was with the troops during the invasion of Freetown in January, 1999.[2124] He testified that after SAJ Musa died, he remained with the troops in Hastings for three to four days. From Hastings, the witness passed through Allen Town, Wellington and Kissi and, on January 6th he came as far as Hill Cot Road. The witness cannot recall that a "Mammy Queen" was appointed during the move to Freetown.[2125] The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witness DBK-113 to be credible and consistent. However, the fact that the witness could not recall a "Mammy Queen" does not raise a reasonable doubt with regards to the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-023, TF1-094 and TF1-334 whose evidence indicates numerous incidents of sexual slavery following the 6 January 1999 invasion.

3666. para. 1168: The Trial Chamber has also carefully examined the evidence of witness DBK-126 who testified that when the AFRC entered Freetown, all the soldiers were with their wives. Only the detainees did not have wives.[2126] The Trial Chamber finds that in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary this statement is not credible.

3667. para. 1169: Witness DBK-126 also testified that she had a "boyfriend" who was a commander of a mortar platoon. The witness testified that from the time she and her "boyfriend" were in Kono at Masingbi Road, he had repeatedly proposed to her. He went to 'Junior Lion' whom the witness referred to as "the Chief,[2127] and told him he wanted the witness. 'Junior Lion' told the witness "this is your husband." She agreed because she had no option. They have a son together. After they left the bush, the witness told her "boyfriend" that she did not want him anymore.[2128] In Freetown, the witness was called a "rebel wife", but she testified that she does not consider herself a "rebel wife", as she was with the SLA and not the RUF. Although the witness also stated she had not heard the term "forced marriage" the Trial Chamber is satisfied that her evidence shows the actus reus and mens rea of sexual slavery.[2129]

(vii) Port Loko District – Crimes

3671. para. 1171: The Indictment alleges that about the month of February 1999, AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999 an unknown number of women and girls in various locations in the District were used as sex slaves by members of the AFRC/RUF.2130

3672. para 1172: No specific concessions with regards to locations in Port Loko District were found to have been made by the Prosecution at the Motion for Acquittal stage.[2131]

3673. para. 1173: In coming to its findings in Port Loko District, the Trial Chamber relies upon the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-282 and TF1-285 and Defence witness DAB-156.

3674. para. 1174: Witness TFl-282 testified that during the dry season in early 1999, "rebels"[2132] entered her village in Port Loko District.[2133] The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified in chief that the time period was "early in 1999" and in the "dry season".[2134] On cross-examination the witness accepted that the correct month was January but she could not say if it was towards the beginning or end of January.[2135]

and some with guns, came a second time and captured the witness along with other civilians hiding in the uncultivated area. Witness TF1-282 was 14 at the time. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness stated that she was born in 1985 but on cross-examination testified that she does not know how old she was when she was captured.[2136] The Trial Chamber accepts that the witness is innumerate and finds that this does not undermine her credibility.

3676. para. 1176: The witness testified that the civilians were made to sit on the ground and were surrounded by the rebels. The witness watched as an armed rebel selected a woman from the group and led her away to another area. The rebel brought the woman back a short while later and then selected the witness and led her along the same route where a man the witness referred to as '55' and another armed rebel were waiting. The witness testified that she knew the man was called '55' because the rebel who brought her to the area called the name '55' and nodded at him. '55' told the witness to undress and to lie down and then he raped her. After the rape the witness was light-headed and was unable to get up for some time. '55' told her to stand up and brought her back to the group of civilians.[2137]

3677. para. 1177: Witness TFl-282 testified that she later heard '55' giving orders to fire and to move to Sumbuya, although on cross-examination she admitted that she did not hear '55' give these orders directly.[2138] The witness also stated that she was later told by her rebel husband, whose name was given in closed session and hereinafter referred to as 'Rebel A',[2139] that '55' was the "big man" in Sumbuya and gave orders to loot.[2140] On cross-examination the witness stated that she only saw '55' once, when he raped her, and could not describe him.[2141]

3678. para. 1178: The Kanu Defence submits that witness TFl-282 is highly unreliable. In cross-examination, the witness was presented with a prior statement in which she described the person 'Five-Five' who raped her as "tall, slim, and fair in complexion, which means not too black."[2142] When presented with this account of her description of 'Five-Five' the witness recanted stating that she was not able to describe the man who raped her, as she only saw him once, and that she did not describe him as tall, slim and fair in complexion.[2143] The Trial Chamber finds that the witness's identification evidence is therefore inconsistent and cannot be relied upon. The Trial Chamber makes no findings on the basis of this evidence with regards to the Accused Kanu.

3679. para. 1179: After she was raped, the rebels, some of whom the witness described as wearing civilian attire and some of whom were in combat and who had guns took the witness to Sumbuya, a two day march. On the way, 'Rebel A' told the witness that he "wanted" her. When they arrived at Sumbuya, the named rebel took the witness to a house where he raped her. After that, the named rebel asked the witness to be his "wife". The witness testified that she said "yes" because saying no in the circumstances would make no difference and she was afraid she might have been killed.

3680. para. 1180: In cross-examination, a prior statement of witness TF1-282 was put to her in which she stated that the man who took her had asked the witness' brother to go and inform her parents that he had taken her as a wife and that after the war, he would go and see them. The witness testified that she could not remember saying this. It is the case of the Prosecution that, even if she had said so, it did not change the situation of the witness being in sexual slavery or forced 'marriage'.[2144] The Trial Chamber agrees that such retroactive action does not diminish the seriousness of the acts.

3681. para. 1181: The witness testified that the named rebel continued to rape her everyday.[2145] The witness and the named rebel lived in the house with two other rebels; all three rebels were armed. There were also many other rebels in Sumbuya. The witness was afraid of the named rebel and did not try to escape for fear of what he might do to her. The witness was kept in Sumbuya by the named rebel for less than a month.[2146] On cross examination, the witness stated that she did not know if she was with the rebels in Sumbuya during February.[2147]

3684. para. 1184: The Trial Chamber also relies on the evidence of Prosecution witness TF1-085, examined by the Trial Chamber, supra,[2149] that she was abducted from Wellington, Western Area by persons found by the Chamber to belong to the AFRC/RUF sometime shortly after the 6th of January 1999. She was forced by the rebels to carry a load and taken to Allen Town where a rebel, present at the time of the witness's abduction and whose name was given to the Court in closed session [hereinafter "named rebel"], raped her and told her she was his 'wife.' The witness was taken with the troops during the retreat from Freetown to Waterloo and then Masiaka, Port Loko District, where the named rebel continued to repeatedly rape her. The witness became pregnant and miscarried twice as a result of the rapes. In Masiaka, the named rebel "married" the witness in a ceremony, although the Trial Chamber has held that given the environment of coercion, there could be no valid consent on the part of the witness and therefore, this "marriage" could not have been legal. The witness was not forced to do any work for the named rebel, but she was detained against her will for several months and punished and threatened with death by the named rebel when she tried to escape.

3685. para. 1185: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the evidence above that the named rebel exercised ownership over the witness and committed acts of sexual violence against her. As such, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the actus reus and mens rea of the crime of sexual slavery are satisfied with regards to the evidence of witness TF1-085.

3686. para. 1186: The Trial Chamber also notes the evidence of Defence witness DAB-156 who testified that 'Junior Lion' took her as his "wife" by force in Kabala District after the AFRC was overthrown in Freetown in February 1998, but before the rainy season and that he brought her to Kurubonla, Port Loko District some time after that. The witness testified that at Kurubonla, 'Junior Lion' released the witness and a person the witness referred to as 'Simon' took her as his second wife. The witness testified that he was good to her and that after Simon and 'Junior Lion' moved to another town Simon arranged that she would stay with his brother, a man known to the witness as 'Foyo'.[2150] The Trial Chamber is not satisfied on the basis of this evidence that sexual slavery is satisfied as there is no indication of the elements of ownership or sexual violence. The Trial Chamber is also of the opinion that this evidence indicates that the witness may have received some benefit from this particular arrangement. However, the Trial Chamber is not willing to infer that this was also the case for other witnesses who have testified to sexual slavery nor, in any event, that this relative benefit would create doubt as to the seriousness of the crime of sexual slavery where it has been found in relation to the evidence of other witnesses.

3687. para. 1076: Evidence which may go to the proof of the elements of sexual slavery can not always be limited to a particular place or a particular instant in time. Rather, given the prolonged nature of the crime alleged, some of the evidence given by a number of witnesses relates to events which take place over time, sometimes running through the indicted period for one District into the indicted period of other Districts. Similarly, some of the evidence given by these witnesses cover more than one location within a District and often more than one District.

3688. para. 1077: To maintain the coherence of such testimony, the Trial Chamber will first examine this evidence on a witness by witness basis. The Trial Chamber will then make findings on the whole of the evidence by District as set out in the Indictment.

(ix) Evidence of sexual slavery not limited to a particular place or a particular time

a. Prosecution Witness TF1-094

3689. para. 1078: Prosecution witness TF1-094 testified that she was with her parents in the village of Bamukura, Koinadugu District in August of 1998 when the village was attacked by "rebels and SLAs".[1959] The witness, her parents and other family members fled to the bush but they were captured. The "rebels and SLAs" killed her parents[1960] and "one of them" threatened to kill the witness as well.[1961] An "SLA", whom the witness described as wearing combat, and to whom she referred as 'Andrew' intervened and said that he would save her.[1962] On cross-examination the witness clarified that at the time 'Andrew' said that he would save her, he did not actually save her as "if you were saving somebody ... you would not rape that person."[1963]

3690. para. 1079: 'Andrew' captured the witness, brought her to Yamadugu and raped her there. The witness was in "Class Two" at the time and had not yet started menstruating. The Trial Chamber observes that a child in Class Two is approximately 12 years old. The witness testified that she believed that if she had refused to have sex with 'Andrew', "they" would have killed her.[1964] The Trial Chamber finds that the environment of violence and the murder of both the witness's parents substantiates this belief.

3692. para. 1081: The Prosecution states that it was suggested to the witness in cross-examination that at the time she was pregnant, Andrew said he would marry her. In response, the witness did not specifically rebut this statement, but clarified that she was pregnant at the time and 'Andrew' had asked her not to abort the pregnancy.[1967] The Prosecution asserts, and the Trial Chamber accepts, that this shows that at the time, she was not legally married to him. The witness testified in cross-examination that Andrew used to care for her.[1968] It is the case of the Prosecution, however, that the fact that the men cared for their abducted 'wives' did not change the fact that these women were under sexual slavery or forced marriage as the men exercised ownership over them, denied them liberty and engaged them in acts of a sexual nature under a coercive environment whereby they were unable to give genuine consent.[1969] The Trial Chamber notes the environment of violence and coercion in which the events testified to by the witness took place and it is satisfied that any benefit received by the witness is relative only and in no way diminishes the seriousness of the acts committed against her.

3693. para. 1082: Witness TF1-094 testified that she was taken with the troops as they travelled to Bamukoro, Koinadugu District; Badela; Tumanya or "Pumpkin Ground", Koinadugu District where the witness stated SAJ Musa was the commander; Bofodia, Koinadugu District and Rosos, Bombali District. When they reached Rosos, the witness was four months pregnant. The witness testified that "55" was at Rosos and that there were many civilians at Rosos including hundreds of women.[1970]

3694. para. 1083: After Rosos, the witness was taken with the troops to Kamaranka; Kamalo, Bombali District; and then to Waterloo, Western Area. The witness testified that "55" was with the troops on the way to Waterloo. She was six months pregnant at the time and "55" beat her with a stick.[1971] The witness was then taken with the troops to Benguema, Western Area; Hastings, Western Area; and to Freetown during the AFRC invasion of 6 January 1999.[1972] During the AFRC retreat from Freetown, the witness was taken to Calaba Town, Western Area; Waterloo, Western Area – where she met' Andrew'; and then to Makeni, Bombali District. Andrew was shot dead in Makeni when the witness was seven months pregnant. The witness gave birth in Makeni on 19 April 1999, however, the child had died in the womb.[1973]

b. Defence Witness DAB-156

3695. para. 1084: As found by the Trial Chamber with regards to Count 6, supra, Defence witness DAB-156 was raped by Junior Lion in Kabala, Koinadugu District sometime after the AFRC was overthrown in Freetown in February 1998 but before the rainy season. The witness testified that Junior Lion held her, raped her, banged her on the forehead where she still has a scar, and knocked out some of her teeth.[1974] The witness testified that he took her as his "wife" by force. He abducted her in Yuromia Town, near Foday Street.[1975]

3696. para. 1085: The witness testified that she was taken by Junior Lion to Kono, Koidu, Kono District and Kurubonla, Port Loko District. In Kurubonla, the witness saw a large number of soldiers, their wives, and other civilians. The leader was SAJ Musa and his deputies were called FAT and King. Junior Lion was also a deputy. At Krubonla, Junior Lion released the witness and a person the witness referred to as 'Simon' took the witness as his second wife. The witness testified that he was good to her. After that Simon and Junior Lion moved to another town and Simon arranged that the witness would stay with his brother, a man known to the witness as 'Foyo'.[1976]

3697. para. 1086: Regarding witness DAB-156's evidence that she was captured and raped by George Johnson aka Junior Lion and taken to the Westside as a captive, the Prosecution submits that the witness's testimony ought to be completely disregarded because according to her own testimony she gave birth to her child in the Westside on 20 November 1999, and arrived in that area very shortly prior to the completion of her pregnancy.[1977] Thus, even if the events she has recounted in relation to Port Loko District are true (which the Prosecution disputes), her testimony falls well outside the relevant indictment period.[1978] The Trial Chamber agrees with this submission and makes no further findings on the basis of this evidence.

c. Prosecution Witness TF1-085

3698. para. 1087: Prosecution witness TF1-085 testified that she lived with her family in Wellington, Western Area when AFRC rebels invaded in early January 1999. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified in chief that the year was 1999 but stated on cross-examination that she does not know the year she was captured. She accepted from counsel that the year was "1999" but then remained inconsistent on the exact date, stating alternatively that it was the 5th, the 6th and "Thursday".[1979] The Trial Chamber finds that as the events happened many years ago and as the evidence of the witness is corroborated by the known date of the AFRC invasion of Freetown, 6 January 1999, the credibility of the witness is not undermined.

3699. para. 1088: The witness testified that she was approximately thirteen at the time.[1980] One day, shortly thereafter, the witness was warned by her neighbours that the rebels had arrived in Wellington. She hid in her house with her family but "rebels" whom the witness describes as "STF from Liberia" including a rebel whose name the witness gave to the Court in closed session,[1981] hereinafter 'Colonel Z', broke down the door. The rebels told the witness to come with them and when she refused they beat her, put a pistol to her neck and threatened to cut off her mother's hands.[1982] The rebels gave her a load to carry and took her to Allen Town.[1983]

3700. para. 1089: The witness testified that 'Five-Five' led the group in Wellington. She was told by "others" that he was '55'. She described him as huge, fat, tall, fair, black, carrying a stick that shot bombs, and wearing ronko.[1984] On cross-examination, the witness testified that he was "huge", "tall", and had body guards.[1985] The Kanu Defence asserts that witness TF1-085's description of a "big boss" named 'Five-Five' does not correspond with the Accused Kanu and is not corroborated by any other Prosecution witnesses.[1986] The Trial Chamber notes that the description of 'Five-Five' given by the witness does not correspond with the physical features of the Accused Kanu who is a thin man of medium height and therefore does not rely on her evidence in this regard.

3702. para. 1091: Witness TF1-085 was taken by the rebels from Allen Town to Waterloo which had been captured.[1989] The witness testified that a person she referred to as 'Five-Five' was in command in Allen Town[1990] and that in a village on the way to Waterloo, he ordered that the witness be beaten for cooking and making smoke.[1991] As discussed, supra, the Trial Chamber makes no findings with regards to the Accused Kanu on the basis of this evidence. The witness was then taken by the rebels to Masiaka, Port Loko District. The person the witness referred to as 'Five-Five' led the group to Masiaka.[1992] In Masiaka, 'Colonel Z' repeatedly forced the witness to have sex with him. As a result, the witness bled and 'Colonel Z' took her to the doctor. When she healed, 'Colonel Z' continued to have sex with her without her consent.[1993] The witness became pregnant and miscarried twice as a result of the rapes.[1994]

3703. para. 1092: In Masiaka, 'Colonel Z' "married" the witness in a ceremony and gave money to the person referred to by the witness as 'Five-Five' as a "father-in-law".[1995] The Prosecution submits that this did not create any valid marriage or change the witness's status of being under sexual slavery or in a forced marriage as she was not at liberty to leave and remained there under a coercive war environment. [l996] The Trial Chamber notes the environment of violence and coercion, namely, the witness's forcible abduction and her repeated rape by the rebel 'Colonel Z', and finds that given these circumstances the witness could not have validly consented to the "marriage". The Trial Chamber is therefore of the opinion that this was not a 'legal' marriage.

3704. para. 1093: 'Colonel Z' had more than six other captured wives in Masiaka.[1997] He did not force the witness to do any work around the house; however, his other wives were required to do so. The other wives beat the witness because they said that she took their husband away.[1998]

3705. para. 1094: 'Colonel Z' held the witness in Masiaka against her wil1.[1999] The witness begged 'Colonel Z' to let her return to Freetown. The witness testified that 'Colonel Z' gave her cocaine. She also stated that he gave her marijuana, a pistol and an AK -47 and taught her how to use the weapons for her security.[2000] On cross-examination, the witness stated that she carried the pistol with her. [2001]

3706. para. 1095: The witness tried to escape from Masiaka with two other women. They were approximately two miles away from town when they were caught by some "rebel boys". The rebels cut the two other women with a blade, marking their bodies with the acronym "AFRC/RUF". They took the witness to the police station in Masiaka where 'Colonel Z' picked her up. He brought her back to the house, beat her, and threatened to kill her.[2002]

3707. para. 1096: The witness was held Masiaka for several months after which time she, 'Colonel Z' and the rebels travelled to Lunsar, Port Loko District to avoid ECOMOG.[2003] The witness testified that 'Issa' went from Masiaka to Lunsar and that he was in charge together with the other rebels.[2004] 'Daramy' and 'Gold Teeth' were in Lunsar.[2005] They then travelled to Krubola Hill, Port Loko District where the witness and other civilians were trained to fight. They were trained on how to cock and fire a gun, how to evade enemies and how to attack.[2006] After the training, the witness and the other trained civilians were sent to fight in Kono. Some of the trained civilians were killed by ECOMOG during the attack.[2007] The Trial Chamber notes this evidence of witness TF1-085 will be addressed in the Factual Findings in relation to Count 12 (Child Soldiers). The Trial Chamber also notes that the Indicted period for Count 13 (Abductions and Forced Labour) for Kono District ends in January 2000 and thus makes no findings on the basis of this evidence in that regard.

3708. para. 1097: After the attack, the witness, the rebels and 'Colonel Z' returned to Port Loko District and then travelled to Makeni, Bombali District. Makeni was bombed and the witness was separated from 'Colonel Z' and she attempted to flee to Masiaka. She was detained by ECOMOG forces and then allowed to return to Freetown where she reunited with her mother. She was pregnant when she returned and underwent an abortion.[2008] The Trial Chamber makes no findings on the basis of this evidence in regards to Bombali District as the indicted period for sexual crimes in Bombali District ends on 30 November 1998, well before this evidence of the witness took place.

3709. para. 1098: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness testified that she was abducted by an "STF from Liberia" and that the Trial Chamber has no evidence before it to suggest with which faction, if any, these persons were affiliated. However, the witness's description of her abductors as "rebels"; and the route taken by the persons who captured the witness, namely from Wellington to Allen Town to Waterloo to Masiaka, Port Loko District where she was held for several months, which is consistent with the known route taken by AFRC/RUF forces on the retreat from Freetown; are consistent with a finding that her abductors were members of the AFRC/RUF.

3710. para. 1099: The Trial Chamber notes the Kanu Defence assertion that the evidence given by Prosecution witness TF1-085 can not be deemed reliable and should not be give any weight.[2009] The Trial Chamber found witness TF1-085 consistent and firm in her evidence and accepts her as a witness of truth.

(iii) Applicable law – Outrages Upon Personal Dignity (Article 3(e) of the Statute)

a. Elements of the Crime

3716. para. 715: Article 3(e) of the Statute safeguards the highly important value of human dignity[1396] by prohibiting "[o]utrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault". The crime of outrages upon personal dignity must be interpreted in light of the purpose behind Common Article 3 of the Conventions, which is: "to uphold the inherent human dignity of the individual";[1397] or to safeguard "the principles of humane treatment."[1398] The said crime is formulated in a manner which ensures broad and flexible interpretation. The list of offences subsumed under outrages against personal dignity constitutes a "non-exhaustive list of conduct", with humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and indecent assaults of any kind given by way of example."[1399] The ICRC Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention notes that: "[i]t seems useless and even dangerous to attempt to make a list of all the factors that make treatment 'humane'" and that treatment which degrades human dignity can take innumerable forms[1400]. The crime of outrages upon personal dignity was first articulated in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and is firmly entrenched in customary interactional law.

3717. para. 716: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of outrages upon personal dignity:

1. The perpetrator committed an outrage upon the personal dignity of the victim;

2. The humiliation and degradation was so serious as to be generally considered as an outrage upon personal dignity;

3. The perpetrator intentionally committed or participated in an act or omission which would be generally considered to cause serious humiliation, degradation or otherwise be a serious attack on human dignity; and

4. The perpetrator knew that the act or omission could have such an effect.[1401]

b. Findings

3718. para. 717: Count 9 has been charged in addition to or in the alternative to Count 6 (Rape), Count 7 (Sexual Slavery and Any Other Form of Sexual Violence) and Count 8 (Other Inhumane Act, Forced Marriage).[1402]

3719. para. 718: Rape (Count 6) is an offence which is specified in Article 3(e) of the Statute as being an outrage upon personal dignity. As stated by the ICTR Trial Chamber in Akayesu, "[l]ike torture, rape is used for such purposes as intimidation, degradation, humiliation, discrimination, punishment, control or destruction of a person. Like torture, rape is a violation of personal dignity".[1403]

3720. para. 719: With reference to the elements of sexual slavery set out in the discussion of Count 8 above, the Trial Chamber is similarly satisfied that sexual slavery is an act of humiliation and degradation so serious as to be generally considered an outrage upon personal dignity. The Trial Chamber in Kvocka held that "perform[ing] subservient acts," and "endur[ing] the constant fear of being subjected to physical, mental or sexual violence" in camps were outrages upon personal dignity.[1404] Sexual slavery, which may encompasses rape and/or other types of sexual violence as well as enslavement, entails a similar humiliation and degradation of personal dignity.

3721. para. 720: "Any other form of Sexual Violence" in the context of crimes against humanity is a residual category of sexual crimes listed under Article 2(g) of the Statute, and may encompass an unlimited number of acts. The Trial Chamber agrees with the conclusion of the ICTY Trial Chamber in Kvocka that "sexual violence is broader than rape".[1405] The prohibition embraces all serious abuses of a sexual nature inflicted upon the physical and moral integrity of a person by means of coercion, threat of force or intimidation.[1406]

3722. para. 721: The Indictment fails to provide any particulars as to the specific form of sexual violence alleged. One of the fundamental rights guaranteed to an accused under Article 17(4)(a) of the Statute is the right to be informed "of the nature and cause of the charge against him". An Indictment is defective if it does not state the material facts underpinning the charges with enough detail to enable an accused to prepare his or her defence.[1407] In the present case, given the broad scope of the offence of 'any other form of sexual violence', it was essential for the Indictment to clearly identify the specific offence or offences which the Accused are required to answer. The Trial Chamber finds that the Indictment is defective in this respect because it fails to plead material facts with sufficient specificity. For this reasons, the charge of 'any other form of sexual violence' is dismissed and thus will not be considered additionally or alternatively under Count 9.

3723. para. 722: Finally, as Count 8 has been dismissed for redundancy, the Trial Chamber will not consider it additionally or alternatively under Count 9.

The Prosecutor v. Samuel Hinga Norman, Moinina Fofana, and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-03-14-I, Indictment, 4 February 2004

CHAPTER 7 – VIOLENCE TO LIFE, HEALTH AND PHYSICAL OR MENTAL WELL-BEING OF PERSONS, IN PARTICULAR, CRUEL TREATMENT

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

3755. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[196]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

3756. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[197]

(iii) Counts 7 and 8: Physical Violence

> Count 7: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well/being of persons, in particular cruel treatment, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute
> In addition, or in the alternative:
> COUNT 8: Other inhumane acts, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute.

3757. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, committed widespread acts of physical violence against civilians, including the following:[198]

> i. Kono District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, mutilated and beat an unknown number of civilians in various locations, including Tombodu or Tumbodu, Kaima or Kayima, and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and other body parts and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of the civilians;[199]
> ii. Kailahun District: Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, beat an unknown number of civilians in locations throughout the District;[200]
> iii. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, mutilated and beat an unknown number of civilians in various areas of Freetown, including the northern and eastern areas of the city, the Kissy area around the State House, Fourah Bay, Upgun and the Kissy mental hospital, and Hastings, Wellington, Tumbo, Waterloo, and Benguema in the Western Area. The mutilations included cutting off limbs.[201]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District – Crimes

3758. para. 1210: The Indictment alleges that between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998 members of the RUF, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused, "mutilated and beat an unknown number of civilians in various locations including Tombodu or Tumbodu, Kaima or Kayima and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and other body parts and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of civilians".[2978]

3759. para. 1211: In arriving at its factual findings in Kono District, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the evidence of witnesses Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Mustafa Mansaray, Ibrahim

Fofana, Samuel Komba, TFI-375, Sofie Kondeh and Alex Tamba, in addition to relevant documentary evidence.

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

3760. para. 1212: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Mustafa Mansaray, Ibrahim Fofana and Samuel Komba in relation to these allegations.

3762. para. 1214: Alimamy Bobson Sesay also testified that he was in Tombodu in March or April 1998 and saw Savage, Guitar Boy and Staff Alhaji, members of the Junta, amputate the hands of 15 civilians, young people, who had been rejoicing because "they thought we were ECOMOG people". Alimamy Bobson Sesay stated that the victims were urged to seek relief from ECOMOG troops.[2983] The Trial Chamber finds that Savage amputated the arms of 15 civilians.

3764. para. 1216: Samuel Komba testified that after March 1998, he was captured by "fighters" while he was in the bush and forced to carry luggage to Tombodu.[2986] When Komba arrived in Tombodu, he and thirteen other captured persons were forced to lie on the ground.[2987] Fighters commanded by Savage, a member of the AFRC, put a mattress on top of the persons and lit the mattress on fire.[2988] Komba was able to free himself and kick the mattress away.[2989] As a consequence, Savage ordered that Komba's right hand be cut off with a cutlass.[2990] The attempted amputation failed, leaving the witness's fingers mangled.[2991] The Trial Chamber finds that Savage attempted to amputate the hand of Samuel Komba.

b. Kayima – Kono District – Crimes

3765. para. 1218: The Prosecution submits that around May 1998, civilian men, women and children were marked with the letters "RUF" and/or "AFRC" by mixed forces under the command of Komba Gbundema in Kayima.[2992] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TFI-375 and Sorie Kondeh.

3766. para. 1219: TFI-375 testified that, immediately after the Fitti-Fatta Operation in mid-1998, he arrived in Wordu to meet RUF Commander Komba Gbundema, who had a number of captured civilians with him.[2993] The RUF fighters used razor blades or sharp knives to carve the letters "RUF" onto the chests of the captured civilians, some of whom were children aged five and older who had been abducted from Kayima and Wordu.[2994] Gbundema also had adult and child civilian captives, on whom the RUF fighters carved the letters "RUF" with knives and razors.[2995] TF 1-375 testified that fighters carved the letters "RUF" on to the bodies of all of their victims and that males, females, adults, and children were targeted indiscriminately.[2996] The witness did not explain the purpose of these markings. TFl-375 testified that these markings "started taking place in Kayima on to Wordu".[2997]

3767. para. 1220: Sorie Kondeh was captured in Bayawandu in May 1998.[2998] Kondeh was taken to Kayima, where the commander in charge was Komba Gbundema.[2999] Once there, he and seventeen others were lined up.[3000] An AFRC fighter named Bangali carved the letters "RUF" and "AFRC" into the chest of the witness with a surgical blade.[3001] The others were marked with "RUF" or "AFRC".[3002] The witness had visible scars of the letters "RUF" and "AFRC" on his upper chest.[3003]

c. Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

3768. para. 1224: The Prosecution submits that captured civilians were marked with the letters "RUF" and "AFRC" in Wondedu.[3004] The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Alex Tamba Teh in relation to the allegations.

3769. para. 1225: Alex Tamba Teh, whose evidence was discussed above in relation to unlawful killings in Koidu Town,[3005] testified that at some time between April and November 1998,[3006] while he was being held captive by Rocky, an RUF commander, he saw rebels under Rocky's command use sharp objects to carve "RUF" and "AFRC" onto the bodies of an unknown number of captured civilian persons.[3007] Teh stated that the rebels "said the people shouldn't escape and go to ECOMOG. In fact they shouldn't escape and go, so with that carving if you go to the side of the ECOMOG they will kill you, so you never had anywhere else to go".[3008]

3770. para. 1226: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Teh's first-hand evidence is reliable as to these incidents. While Teh did not indicate the number of persons whom he saw being marked with the letters ""RUF" and "AFRC", the Trial Chamber finds that an unknown number of civilians who were captured were mutilated in this manner.

3771. para. 1227: Teh also testified that some time between April and November 1998, AFRC commander Banya put a flat stick in Teh's mouth and used the butt of his gun to knock out his teeth.[3009] Teh stated that Banya did this because Teh was alleged to have advised some captured civilians to hide in the bush so that they could rest.[3010] Banya told him, "[y]ou are a very lucky man that I have been told not to kill you, but I will give you something, I will do something to you that will remain with you everlasting".[3011]

(ii) Kailahun District– Crimes

3772. para. 1233: The Indictment alleges that between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters beat an unknown number of civilians in locations throughout Kailahun District.[3015]

3773. para. 1234: No locations were pleaded in the Indictment for Counts 7 and 8 in relation to Kailahun District. As previously indicated, the Trial Chamber finds that while evidence may support proof of existence of crimes relating to physical violence on a widespread or systematic basis, no finding of guilt for those crimes may be made in respect of locations not pleaded in the Indictment.[3016]

3774. para. 1235: The Trial Chamber will, therefore, only consider testimonies regarding Kailahun District in relation to the chapeau requirements. For that purpose, the Trial Chamber has considered the testimonies of TF1-362, TF1-189, Komba Sumana, TF1-026, Aruna Gbonda, Augustine Mallah, Dennis Koker and Mustapha M. Mansaray.

a. Bunumbu– Kailahun District – Crimes

3775. para. 1236: The Prosecution submits that hundreds of captured civilians, who were trained at Camp Lion training base at Bunumbu, were subjected to physical violence during their training.[3017]

3776. para. 1237: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF 1-362, TF 1-189 and Komba Sumana, and Exhibits P-088 and D-013.

i. Beating of Recruits at Bunumbu Training Base – Bunumbu- Kailahun District – Crimes

3777. para. 1238: TF1-362 testified that the Bunumbu training base, also called "Camp Lion", was established after the ECOMOG Intervention,30l8 and operated until the end of 1998/1999.[3019]

3778. para. 1239: Exhibit P-088, a document dated 24 September 1998, lists roles for instructors and staff.

3779. para. 1240: Confidential Exhibit D-O 13, a document dated 21 May 1998, states that on that date there were 603 total recruits at Camp Lion Training base in Bunumbu.[3020]

3780. para. 1241: TF1-362 testified that captured civilians, trained at Camp Lion training base in Bunumbu, were required to undergo halaba/halaka training. This training was intended to train recruits to dodge bullets. Ittook place in a round area surrounded by bricks; the instructors stood around the circle holding canes. The recruits would enter the circle and would then have to dodge being beaten by the canes. Halaka training would sometimes last 1-1/2 to 2 hours, and recruits went through these exercises 2-3 times a week. Many incurred injuries or died, especially the SBUs, SGUs, and the elderly.[3021]

3781. para. 1242: TF1-362 also testified that the practice of physically disciplining recruits at the Bunumbu training base was well known to the RUF High Command. Instructions to beat, kill or mark recruits were passed from the high command to Pearson to Cooper, and then carried out.[3022]

In addition, the number of recruits who died on the base during training was regularly reported to the second in command, Issa Sesay.[3023]

3782. para. 1243: TF1-362 described how Monica Pearson flogged and cut the hair of a recruit who fell in love with Pearson's lover. Following this incident, Pearson was punished by Issa Sesay; she was flogged, dismissed and placed in a water dungeon. When Bockarie arrived, he was notified about the incident and promoted Pearson to the rank of full colonel.[3024]

3783. para. 1244: TF1-189 testified that she heard that recruits at the training base at which C.O. Monica was the commander in 1999 were flogged by C.O. Monica if they were not able to run long distances or refused to do so.[3025]

3784. para. 1245: Komba Sumana testified that he was trained at the training base in the bush outside of Buedu during the rainy season for two months where he was under an instructor named "Monica". The recruits at the training base in Kailahun were not treated well and were beaten with a cane. He showed the Court scars on his legs which he stated were a result of these beatings.[3026] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that Sumana's military training ended in approximately July or August 1998.

ii. Attacks against civilians in Bunumbu Surrounding Area– Bunumbu - Kailahun District – Crimes

3785. para. 1246: The Prosecution submits that the recruits at Bunumbu training base were taught to commit acts of physical violence against others.[3027]

3786. para. 1247: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF1-362 and Komba Sumana.

3787. para. 1248: TF1-362 testified that recruits participating in "food finding missions" went to civilian houses to take food. The instructors and "base security" would carry arms while the recruits carried knives and sticks. If civilians resisted, the recruits and soldiers would beat the civilians or kill them and take the food by force.[3028]

3788. para. 1249: TF1-362 also described a method of training used at the base in which recruits were trained how to attack a city. During this training, villages near the base were alerted in advance that at a certain time they should not come outside. Then, at 5.00am in the morning, recruits and trainers would surround the village, lie in an ambush, and attack while the civilians

slept, entering their houses. tying them up, beating them with sticks, and taking their properties.[3029]

3789. para. 1250: Komba Sumana testified that he and other recruits at the training base in Kailahun District. where Monica was a trainer were taught how to attack a town and burn houses.3030

iii. Marking "RUF" Letters on Recruits at Bunumbu Training Base - Bunumbu -Kailahun District – Crimes

3790. para. 1251: The Prosecution submits that RUF recruits in Kailahun District were marked to prevent escape.3031

3791. para. 1252: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF1-362, TF 1-026 and TF 1-189.

3793. para. 1254: TF1-026 described how two girl recruits who were caught attempting to escape from the training base in Buedu were publicly shot and killed by Bockarie in order to deter other recruits from escaping. Bockarie then passed an order to mark the remaining 17 girls recruits with the letters "RUF" so that if they ran away and were caught they would be killed. The letters "RUF" were carved on TF1-026's chest with a knife. The other 16 recruits were carved as well.[3033] The Trial Chamber has found that TF1-026 was trained at Bunumbu training camp in Kailahun District from approximately February or March 1999 through approximately November or December 1999.[3034]

3794. para. 1255: TF1-189 testified that after she heard about the attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999, the rebels sent 20 captives, aged 12 to 18, both male and female, away from Mamboma village in Kailahun. The witness learned later on that they were sent to the training base in Kailahun on the route to Buedu, where C.O. Monica was in charge.[3035] She heard from her cousin that those recruits were carved with a razor blade for protection from gunshots and to classify them as part of the RUF. Males were carved on their backs with the letters "RUF" while females were carved differently on their backs and arms.[3036]

b. Violence towards Civilians who Resist Crimes Committed Against Them - Kailahun District – Crimes

3795. para. 1256: The Prosecution submits that civilians who were defiant or failed to comply with the forces' orders during the commission of crimes against them were beaten because of their resistance.[3037]

3797. para. 1258: Aruna Gbonda, a rice farmer and Deputy Chiefdom Commander, testified that he and other civilians at Talia were forced to farm rice for the RUF between 1996 and 2000. The civilians would give the RUF personnel the rice and were not paid. Those who were reluctant or delayed in doing so were beaten. Gbonda himself was beaten repeatedly by a person named Tom Sandi after bringing only 40-50 persons instead of 300 persons to clear a swamp in Gbaiama.[3038]

3798. para. 1259: Aruna Gbonda also described the violent treatment given to female civilians who were forced to fish for the RUF. The witness saw a beating of a woman twice for delaying collecting women to fish at Keyah River in Luawa Chiefdom, Kailahun, in March "1997', 1998".[3039]

3799. para. 1260: Augustine Mallah testified that civilians were flogged by RUF / AFRC forces in Buedu shortly after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998. Mallah testified that after the Intervention, the AFRC and RUF forces captured civilians mostly from Kenema and brought them to Buedu where they joined other civilians. The civilians performed domestic duties for the commanders and cultivated fields during the farming season. Civilians who refused to do those assignments and were not sick or very old were flogged until they were willing. Mallah personally witnessed civilians being beaten for refusing to work. He testified that flogging those who were defiant was needed in order to set an example for the other civilians.[3040]

3800. para. 1261: Dennis Koker, an adjutant at the Military Police office in Buedu from approximately March 1998 until approximately December 1999, testified that Victor Kallon from the RUF brought a girl, who was already stripped to her underpants to the police station. She subsequently told Koker that she had been beaten with 50 lashes. Kallon ordered that she be detained because, he said, she had "overlooked" him. The witness then spoke to the girl who told him that Kallon had kidnapped her from Kono and that he started beating her after she refused to have sex with him.[3041]

3801. para. 1262: Mustapha Mansaray, a member of the Internal Defence Unit (IOU) in Buedu from December 1996 until March/April 1997, testified that upon Sam Bockarie's and Issa Sesay's order, the RUF would order civilians to hand over to the RUF coffee, cocoa and Kola nuts. When civilians from villages in the surrounding areas of Buedu and Kailahun Town refused to do so, Bockarie's and Sesay's bodyguards would flog them and take the products forcefully. This conduct was reported to the District IOU, Francis Musa, but no action was taken thereafter.[3042]

(iii) Freetown and the Western Area– Crimes

3802. para. 1264: The Indictment alleges that, "between about 21 December 1998 and 28 February 1999, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters" mutilated and beat an unknown number of civilians. The Prosecution alleges that these acts were perpetrated in "various areas of Freetown, including the northern and eastern areas of the city, the Kissy area around the State House, Fourah Bay, Upgun and the Kissy Mental Hospital, and Hastings, Wellington, Turnbo, Waterloo, and Benguema in the Western Area". The alleged mutilations included cutting off limbs.[3043]

3803. para. 1265: The Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the evidence of witnesses TF1-358, Abu Bakarr Mansaray, TF1-104, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, TF1-026, Osman Jalloh, TF1-029, Paul Nabieu Conteh, Akiatu Tholley, TF1-143, James Kpumgbu, Ibrahim Wai, Alusine Conteh, Mohammed Sampson Bah, TF1-083, Mohamed Sesay, Corinne Dufka, TF1-028, Alpha lalloh, TF1-150 and Sarah Koroma, in addition to relevant documentary evidence.

a. Freetown, including the northern and eastern areas of the city – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3804. para. 1266: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of TF 1-358, Abu Bakarr Mansaray and TF1-104, as well as Exhibits P-227, P-249, P-250, P-251 and Confidential Exhibits P-077 and P-232.

3805. para. 1267: TF1-358 was a medical doctor who ran a medical facility in Freetown.[3044] He testified that on 8 January 1999, he arrived at his hospital to find it overwhelmed with patients who were brought in on ECOMOG vehicles. in push carts and carried on people's backs.[3045] The witness was informed by ECOMOG as they brought victims to the hospital's triage point that these patients were arriving from Freetown and "its immediate environs". and later patients arrived from Kissy, Wellington and "the outskirts of Freetown".[3046] The witness testified that "90 of the patients were suffering from some form of war injury."[3047] The witness testified that he saw a few "fresh amputations"[3048] and one case of a patient who suffered a failed amputation of his two hands.[3049] This flood of patients continued for two to three weeks, after which the main government hospital started to take cases.[3050]

3806. para. 1268: During this period, TF 1-358 treated two brothers who had each had one hand amputated by rebels in "the east end of town" while their parents watched.[3051] TF1-358 testified that the father of the boys told the witness that he was not able to intervene while his sons were being amputated because he knew that others had been killed for intervening.[3052]

3808. para. 1270: TF 1-358 treated a young nursing mother whose eyes had been pulled out in January but were still protruding from the sockets in January 1999. The incident occurred about seven to ten days before she was brought in for treatment, so they were badly infected. The patient stated that she had been gang raped by at least seven armed rebels while she was searching for food around King Harmon Road in central Freetown. They took out her eyes because if she could not see, she would be unable to identify them later.[3056] TF1-358 had to surgically remove both eyes. The victim was badly traumatised and became mentally unstable. The Trial Chamber has also considered Exhibits P-249 and P-250, which depict the patient and the injury to her eyes.[3057]

3809. para. 1271: Abu Bakarr Mansaray,3058 a mechanical engineer living in Freetown in January 1999,3059 testified that he was abducted by three "rebel boys" dressed in ECOMOG uniforms on 8 January 1999[3060] when he was living on Waterloo Street in Freetown. By the term "rebel", he testified that he meant a mixed group of rebels and soldiers.[3061] The three rebels were armed with AK-A7 rifles and spoke Liberian English.[3062] The rebels asked the witness to join them because they had lost men.[3063] Mansaray refused, so he was forcibly taken to State House, where Gullit was in command.[3064] The witness was beaten and then locked in the kitchen for four days without food and water with 50 other captives.[3065] On cross-examination, Mansaray testified that he sustained bruises from the beating.[3066]

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. Beating of civilians outside Good Shepard Hospital in Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3810. para. 1274: TF1-104[3067] was a nurse at the Good Shepherd Hospital in the Kissy District of Freetown in January 1999.[3068] He testified that when he went to work at 6.00am on the morning of 6 January 1999, there were five people waiting for treatment.[3069] The witness treated a Nigerian businessman named Ike, who had a very serious wound on his right wrist and an amputated ear. He reported that he had been shot by "these junta guys" when he attempted to escape.[3070] The witness also saw three other patients who had been shot by "RUF" or "juntas.[3071]

3811. para. 1275: As found in the preceding findings in Unlawful Killings,[3072] Junta and RUF fighters came into the hospital accusing the staff of treating ECOMOG and Kamajors, forced 200 patients outside, beat them and took them and others to Pa Zubay's house were 15 people were shot dead and others were wounded including the witness who was shot in the right arm, knee and right thigh.[3073] They also took the Nigerian, Ike, "out" and later shot him.[3074]

3812. para. 1276: The wounded people were taken to the hospital where four wounded civilians, including the witness, were treated. The witness was unable to count the number of people injured during this incident, but he testified that there were more than the four being treated in his unit.[3075]

ii. Amputations of two men's hands in Kissy Market – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3813. para. 1278: TF1-143, an RUF child soldier, testified that after joining Adama Cut Hand during the Freetown invasion, while on patrol in Kissy Market, he and another of "Adama Cut Hand's boys"[3077] approached a shop and knocked on the door. The two men inside did not open the door, so TF1-143 and his companion forced the door open and entered. After entering the shop, the other "boy" suggested that they should amputate the men's hands because they refused to open the door. The witness then used a machete to amputate one hand from each of the two civilian men inside the shop.[3078]

iii. Amputations of James Kpumgbu and others near Kissy Mental Hospital – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3814. para. 1280: James Kpumgbu testified that he lived in Kissy near the mental hospital when the rebels came to the area on 6 January 1999[3079] and that on that day, he was on Thompson Street on his way to the Kissy Mental Home with his child, sister and others in search of his parents. He passed by his house and saw that it had been burnt down and was told that the rebels had burned it.[3080] As he approached the door of the mental home four rebels, all dressed in black t-shirts, jeans, boots and some with headbands, called them.[3081] The rebels, three of whom had guns and one of whom had a machete, ordered the witness and two other men to sit beneath a mango tree outside the nearby St. Patrick's Church.[3082]

3815. para. 1281: The four rebels then surrounded Kpumgbu, and three of the rebels pointed guns at him while the rebel carrying the machete ordered him to put his arm on the root of the mango tree. The witness pleaded, but placed his arm as ordered and the rebel cut off his right hand.[3083] Kpumgbu testified that the rebel then chopped his left arm, leaving his hand still connected, but mutilated, and told him to ""go and tell Tejan Kabbah that they are fighting for power".[3084]

3816. para. 1282: After the amputation, Kpumgbu walked with difficulty down to Summertime, where he spent one night before continuing on to Connaught Hospital.[3085] While at Connaught Hospital, the witness met the two other men who had been detained with him outside the Mental Hospital by the rebels during that same incident. Kpumgbu testified that one of them, Mr Lansana, told him that the rebels had cut off his hands. The witness observed that Lansana was missing both of his hands and that the other man, Mr Babah, had both hands cut but not completely amputated.[3086]

3817. para. 1283: Kpumgbu testified that he is unable to fully use his left hand, he experiences pain, and his thumb and index finger do not function. He is unable to do anything to earn a living and people must assist him.[3087] The Trial Chamber has also considered Exhibits P-187 and P-188, which depict the witness's amputated right arm and mutilated left arm.[3088]

iv. Beating and amputation of Ibrahim Wai at Falcon Road in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area- Crimes

3818. para. 1286: Ibrahim Wai testified that in the early morning hours of 6 January 1999, he went out of his house on Falcon Street in Kissy and observed "blazing fires" and "civilians coming with bundles on their heads".[3090] He fled with his brother to go to PWD, and they encountered many other people also fleeing until they were turned away by ECOMOG. However they managed to cross the barrier and proceed to Berry Street.[3091]

3819. para. 1287: Wai returned to Kissy alone after five days but en route a "30 years old RUF rebel" asked him for money.[3092] Wai showed the rebel his wallet telling him that he did not have any money, the rebel told him to stretch out his hand. Wai testified that the rebel then gave him a dozen lashes on his hand, using a cable that the witness described to be about 0.7 centimetres in diameter.[3093] After lashing him, the rebel told Wai to go.[3094] Then a 14 year old boy with a gun threatened to kill him. He then returned to Kissy. The Trial Chamber has found that while Wai was staying at his in-law's, rebels under the command of Captain Blood attacked the witness and the family and Captain Blood amputated Wai's hand and the hands of Wai's brother-in-law's younger brother. In cross-examination he confirmed he saw the amputation of "the boy's hand".[3095] He did not see his brother-in-law's younger brother come out of the house after that, and he observed that the house was later set on fire. Wai testified that his brother-in-law's younger brother was still in the house when it was set on fire, and that he died in the burning house.[3096]

3820. para. 1288: The witness testified that on his way to Brookfields Hospital for treatment, he met two other civilians whose hands had also been amputated.[3097] According to Wai by the time they reached Brookfields Hospital he saw that there were "many whose hands were cut off' and he named four other amputees in addition to himself.[3098]

v. Amputations by Changa Bulanga in Low Cost Area and Shell Old Road Area - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area- Crimes

3821. para. 1294: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in approximately the third week of January 1999,[3100] when he and his fighting force had retreated to the hills around Kissy Mental Home, they observed the civilians below dancing and singing that their brothers had come to steal and welcoming ECOMOG. Gullit told the witness and the other fighters that the civilians were betraying them by behaving this way. Thereafter, Gullit passed an order and reorganised the troops to form fighting teams.[3l01] He appointed one squad to move to Low Cost Housing area, instructing them to be sure to "amputate people and burn houses in that area".[3102] The witness testified that Gullit commanded the witness's group to "go as far as Ferry Junction and do these things".[3103]

3822. para. 1295: Osman, known as Changa Bulanga was part of the fighting force Gullit sent to Low Cost area. The witness testified that when Changa Bulanga returned to Kissy Market, he told the witness that he had amputated arms and burned houses and he said he had completed his mission.[3104]

3823. para. 1296: Alimamy Bobson Sesay further testified that Changa Bulanga also performed amputations at Shell Old Road area.[3105] The witness testified that he saw Changa Bulanga amputate the arms of three civilians, two at the elbow and one at the wrist, before they moved to Crazy Yard to meet with Gullit and the brigade there. After amputating the civilians' arms, Changa Bulanga told the civilian victims to go see Pa Kabbah and ask him for hands.[3106]

vi. Amputations of Barrie and Alusine Conteh's hands at Parsonage and Leaden Streets in Kissy- Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3824. para. 1298: Alusine Conteh, a double amputee, testified that on the morning of 20 January 1999, he was at the intersection of Parsonage and Leaden Hall Streets in Kissy with a group of other civilians, including his wife, sister, his children, a friend, Julius, and his tenant Boi Barrie.[3107] The witness and his group encountered five men who told the witness and the others to halt or they would shoot them.[3108] Four of the five men wore combat uniforms and one wore civilian clothing and "disguised himself' with a "black cap like a net".[3109]

3825. para. 1299: Alusine Conteh testified that the men ordered Barrie to put down the things he was carrying. One of them. dressed in combat unifonn. who referred to himself as "Captain Two Hand No Mercy" ordered the "civilian" with them to "take care of' Barrie.[3110] The "civilian" took an axe and he chopped Barrie's left hand once. As he chopped again, one of Barrie's children walked behind him. One of the "soldiers" kicked her and she fell. Barrie's right arm was struck twice with the axe leaving his hands dangling by the flesh[3111] and he told him "go and tell Tejan Kabbah, no more politics, no more votes".[3112]

3826. para. 1300: The soldiers then called Alusine Conteh to come, and he placed his left hand on the slab. The "civilian" among the soldiers then hacked once at the witness's arm, severing his hand.[3113] Following Conteh's amputation, they tried to take the witness's son. who was strapped to his mother's back. Conteh pleaded with the soldiers to amputate his other hand instead of amputating his son's hands.[3114] The soldiers then told the witness to place his right hand. and as he did, they severed his hand from his arm.[3115] Before departing, the soldiers told the witness that he should go to Tejan Kabbah and tell Kabbah that he was "a messenger".[3116]

vii. Amputations of Mohamed Sampson Bah's hand on Rowe Street in Kissy- Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3827. para. 1303: Mohamed Sampson Bah's testimony in the AFRC trial was tendered into evidence pursuant to rule 92*bis* and he was cross examined in the instant trial. He testified that he saw rebels beating people with belts and sticks and houses, including his house, being burnt.[3118] He and seven other people were captured by the rebels on Rowe Street in January 1999 and taken to the commando Tafaiko. They were "placed in a queue", searched and their belongings were confiscated. The commando ordered the other seven to be killed "at a stretch". They were shot and Bah witnessed all seven die.[3119] The commando took Bah's gold-plated wrist watch, told him that he had "been sentenced" and that Bah's hand should be amputated.[3120] The commando forced Bah onto the ground, placed a foot on his chest and his arms were stretched out and Bah's hand was amputated.

viii. Amputation of TF1-083, Pa Sorie and Musa in Samuels Area in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3829. para. 1306: When the group reached the rebels' commander, who had a fair complexion and who was wearing a round hat and combat gear, the rebels told him "these are the people we brought".[3127] The commander said "some we are coming to eat them and the others, we are going to kill them".[3128] The commander ordered the five men, including the witness, Pa Sorie, Musa, and two others to lie on their backs and said that some of them they would kill and some of them they would "send", meaning amputate their hands.[3129]

3830. para. 1307: The commanders ordered that the hands of TF 1-083, Pa Sorie, and Musa be cut off and that the victims should "go to Kabbah and ask for Kabbah to give him a hand".[3130] A rebel stabbed TF 1-083 on his left arm near his bicep before amputating his right hand using an axe.[3131] TFI-083 was unable to see and fell into a gutter.[3132] However, he testified that he heard the rebels take Pa Sorie and cut off his hand.[3133] Pa Sorie met him later at the Connaught Hospital and told him that the rebels had cut off his hand.[3134]

3831. para. 1308: TF1-083 testified that the rebels took Musa, the last of the five civilians in the group, and they cut off four of his fingers.[3135] Musa then heard the commander say "You should not cut off Musa's fingers. You should cut off his hand, so that he can go to Kabbah and tell him to give him a new hand".[3136] Musa then begged for the rebels not to chop off his hand, they shot him and he fell down. TF1-083 testified that Musa was killed.[3137]

ix. Amputation of Mohamed Sesay's arms in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3832. para. 1310: Mohamed Sesay testified that he saw RUF and SLA who he referred to as the People's Arm[3139] on the morning of6 January and five or six days later saw Captain Blood at a checkpoint. The witness observed the "rebels and SLAs arguing".[3140] On 19 January 1999[3141] he was in Kissy hiding in the house of Mr Abass[3142] after his home had been burnt[3143] with about 50 other civilians, including old men and women.[3144] He saw seven "rebels", including one "commando" arrive.[3145] The commando carried a pistol. one rebel carried a machete. another rebel carried an axe and four others carried guns.[3146] The commando ordered the fighters to bring the 24 young men out of the house and to the junction where they asked them to queue up in preparation for having their arms amputated on a log which had been placed in front ofthem.[3147] As already found eight men were shot and killed. and five others were killed by splitting their heads with a machete.[3148] The witness and those with him were frightened.

3834. para. 1312: As the fighters were preparing to amputate the hand of another man, Rambo of the RUF[3155] arrived by vehicle with more than 40 "people" and ordered them to release the remaining people, saying he would punish the fighters for what they had done. The rebels saluted Rambo and conformed with his command.[3156] Sesay testified that Rambo then told all of them to follow him to his base, which was near the Kissy Mental Home, and before sending the witness away put 100,000 of an unidentified currency in his pocket saying that he should "endure, that was what God ordained". The witness became dizzy and fell and lay until the following morning, Friday, when he went to ECOMOG at Helena and was taken to Connaught Hospital.[3157]

3835. para. 1313: When[3158] Mohamed Sesay arrived at Connaught Hospital, he saw "so many others" who had been amputated.[3159] Some of those amputees told the witness that they had been amputated in Freetown.[3160]

x. Other Amputations in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3836. para. 1316: The Trial Chamber has also considered the evidence of Corinne Dufka, TF1-028, and Exhibits P-142B, P-197, P-188, P-263, P-286A, P-356A-B and confidential Exhibit P-077.

3837. para. 1317: Exhibit P-263, a BBC Focus on Africa radio broadcast,[3161] described the atrocities being committed by the retreating rebel forces in Kissy who were cutting "the limbs of civilians". A Mr Bangura, who lived on Bypass Road, told reporter Lansana Fofana that he had been lined up in a queue of 15 people to be amputated by the rebels. After the first two in the queue had been amputated, the rest of them fled for their lives. Four young men whose wrists had been mutilated told Fofana that the fighter who carried out these mutilations was a Liberian fighter known as CO Cut Hand.[3162] Exhibit P-356B, another Focus on Africa programme, broadcast on 22 January 1999, included a report by Winston Ojukutu-Macaulay, who travelled with ECOMOG to Kissy. On their way back to Freetown from Kissy, they transported five civilians who were amputated.[3163]

3838. para. 1318: Confidential Exhibit P-077 reports that a five-year-old girl was thrown into a fire at Blackhall Road on 28 January 1999.[3164]

3839. para. 1319: TFI-028 lived in Karina, Bombali District when the junta attacked in 1998.[3165] The witness was taken as a member of a group that entered Freetown on 16 January.[3166] The group stopped at Ferry Junction before "RUF boys" speaking Liberian language took the witness to

Blackhall Road and then to Kissy Road. At Kissy Road, the witness saw a "big bunch" of human hands that had been amputated, tied together, and buried in the dirt.[3167] She could not count them.[3168] She testified that as she knew the Junta had entered Freetown, and she inferred that they must have been responsible for putting the hands there.[3169]

3840. para. 1320: Witness Corinne Dutlca testified that she photographed a 13-year-old girl, who was one of three girls "who were rounded up from Kissy by a group of rebels ... around the 20th to 22nd of January ... and taken up to a hill and had their hands amputated".[3170]

c. Fourah Bay – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3841. para. 1326: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Alpha Jalloh and TF1-150, and Exhibits P-107, P-210 and Confidential Exhibit P-077.

3842. para. 1327: Confidential Exhibit P-077 states that on 21 January 1999, three children were executed at Fourah Bay and their three sisters had limbs amputated or mutilated.[3172]

3843. para. 1328: Alpha Jalloh3173 testified that on 6 January 1999, "rebels" and soldiers [3174] first came to his area in Younge Street.[3175] On 18 January 1999 rebels, some of whom were in uniform,[3176] came to the house on Manfred Lane where he was hiding with his younger brother, cousins and other civilians and led them by gunpoint to a primary school on Fataraman Street.[3177] There the rebels put them into a queue and told them that they would send them "to Pa Kabbah for Pa Kabbah to know that they were in control".[3178] The witness, his brother and cousin sat in the line with four others, including Edward Conteh and Sheku Bah[3179] and were called one at a time. A Krio speaking rebel named Tommy from the Freetown area who wore a combat uniform, cut off all of the hands of Conteh, Bah and the witness's cousin with an axe,[3180] then he cut the witness's left hand off. The rebels told the amputees that they could go to Pa Kabbah to get more hands.[3181] Jalloh testified that he heard that his "cousin couldn't survive, so he died. Where he laid, that was the place he died".[3182]

d. Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3844. para. 1332: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay.

3845. para. 1333: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that around the third week of January 1999,3183 following the operation in Fourah Bay, he and those in his fighting force, including Gull it, Bazzy and Five-Five, withdrew to Upgun where they mounted a defensive.[3184] Once in Upgun, Five-Five gave an instruction that they should start amputating limbs and he was "going to demonstrate it". Alimamy Bobson Sesay witnessed Five-Five capture three civilians and perfonu a demonstration by placing the captured civilians' arms on a mortar and giving one a "short sleeve" amputation, meaning an amputation at the wrist, and the other two "long sleeve" amputations, meaning an amputation above the elbow. Thereafter, according to Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Major Mines and Kabila captured and amputated an unknown number of civilians.[3185]

e. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3846. para. 1335: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Sarah Koroma, TF1-026 and Akiatu Tholley.

3847. para. 1336: Sarah Koroma testified that she first saw many "rebels" in Wellington, Loko Town, on 6 January 1999.[3186] Upon seeing the rebels and hearing from other civilians that the rebels were amputating people, Koroma fled to the bush with her children and husband.[3187] The witness remained in the bush for one week until the rebels threatened to kill anyone who did not come out of the bush.[3188] The rebels then captured Koroma, her husband and other members of their group on their way back to their homes in Wellington.[3189] Koroma testified that the rebels killed her husband and another child by hacking them with machetes.[3190] The rebels ordered the remaining civilians, including the witness, to sit in a line on the ground. The rebels then used a machete to chop off her left hand, and told her that she should go tell Tejan Kabbah that the rebels said they want peace.[3191] The rebels attempted to chop her right hand. but were unsuccessful.[3192] Further, the witness testified that she did not see what happened to the other civilians in the queue with her as she was "tormented".[3193]

3848. para. 1337: Sarah Koroma testified that she left the place where she was amputated and, as she was walking near Brewery, she was beckoned by two rebels who were not in the group who amputated her hand.[3194] One of them, who carried a knife and gun[3195] told the witness that he wanted to kill her because she was Tejan Kabbah's mother, but he hurled beer bottles at her instead because he did not have bullets in his gun.[3196] The other rebel, armed with a gun,[3197] pleaded with him to leave the witness alone as she was suffering from a recent amputation.[3198] Koroma testified that the rebel who threw the beer bottles at her also kicked her into a gutter and hit her on her thigh; the beer bottles hit her and she still has scars on her feet from the bottles. [3199] On the third day after this incident, Sarah Koroma sought treatment at Connaught Hospital, where she saw many patients with amputated legs. However, the witness did not testity as to where or by whom the other patients had been amputated.[3200]

3849. para. 1338: TFI-026 testified that she was in her home in Wellington on 6 January 1999 when nine RUF rebels entered with guns. They began firing their weapons and shot her sister, killing her.[3201] The rebels who were under the command of CO Rocky[3202] then forcefully took her from her home up a mountain. On their way out of the village, the rebels burned houses and amputated people's limbs.[3203]

3851. para. 1340: TF1-026 was with the RUF rebels during the time that they were burning houses and amputating civilians. The rebels told her she should be there to witness these acts because if she attempted to escape, they would do the same to her. [3206]

3852. para. 1341: Akiatu Tholley testified that she was on her way to the market in Wellington on 5 January 1999,[3207] when she heard that the rebels were com mg. Tholley then ran home to warn her family who locked themselves inside their house.[3208] Tholley testified that an unknown number of Krio-speaking men, wearing black t-shirts and black jeans entered the house.[3209]

3853. para. 1342: Tholley stated that when the men entered the house they amputated the first child they saw, who was about 3 or 4 years old. Tholley testified that after seeing the amputation she ran to hide in the wardrobe, where a rebel later found her and forced her outside. Once outside, the rebels began beating and kicking her and asked her to go with them.[3210] Tholley testified that upon seeing the rebels about to amputate her mother's hands, she told the rebels she would not leave with them and that they would have to amputate her too.[3211] Tholley testified that at that time, three rebels began beating her with the butt of a gun and a belt. [3212] According to Tholley, a rebel then dragged her under a mango tree, where she lay unconscious and oozing with blood until another group of rebels came by and took her along.[3213]

f. Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

3854. para. 1349: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Akiatu Tholley.

3855. para. 1350: Akiatu Tholley testified that after being taken from her home in Wellington, she accompanied a group of rebels to Waterloo.[3216] When she arrived at Waterloo, Tholley witnessed rebels killing men women and children, and amputating the hands of men and women.

Tholley testified that when they reached Waterloo the group was "mixed", but that she had often heard the rebels calling Five-Five's name and that he was the "overall boss" "the leader of the group".[3217]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

3856. See above: Chapter 1 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – paras. 561 – 568 [111].

(ii) See War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

3857. See above: Chapter 1 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 571 – 574 [119].

(iii) Violence to Life, Health and Physical or Mental Well-Being of Persons, in particular Cruel Treatment (Article 3(a) of the Statute)– Applicable law

3858. para. 434: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the following specific elements of the offence of cruel treatment must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

i. The act or omission of the perpetrator caused serious physical or mental suffering or injury or constituted a serious attack on human dignity;

ii. The perpetrator intended to cause serious mental or physical suffering or injury or a serious attack on human dignity or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur.[1047]

3859. para. 435: The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution has provided a definition of mutilation in its final trial brief, which adopts and slightly modifies the definition provided in the AFRC Trial Judgement.[1048] However, Count 10 of the AFRC Indictment charged "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutiiation",[1049] whereas Count 7 of the Indictment in this case charges only "cruel treatment". The Trial Chamber therefore finds that a specific definition of mutilation is not required, but notes that cruel treatment may encompass acts of mutilation, if such acts satisfy the requirements set out above.

(iv) Kono District– Physical Violence

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Physical Violence

3860. para. 1217: Based on Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence of the amputation of the arms of an unknown number of people at Yomandu Guinea Highway Superman area and Dabundeh Street, the 15 amputations in Tombodu, the amputation of the arms of Mustapha Mansaray and Ibrahim Fofana and four other people, and the attempted amputation and injury to Samuel Komb~ the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that in the time period of March to June 1998 the AFRC and RUF fighters caused serious physical suffering and injury to the victims. Given that the amputations were carried out by the AFRC and RUF fighters as a punishment, and that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to inflict suffering and injury, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they intended the serious injury and suffering to occur. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied on the evidence that the victims were civilians and finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking part in hostilities at the time of the amputations.

b. Kayima – Kono District – Physical Violence

3861. para. 1221: Based on TFI-375's evidence the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that immediately after the Fitti-Fatta Operation in mid-1998 an unknown number of people "starting at Kayima" were mutilated by the carving of RUF on their chests by RUF Commander Komba Gbundema, The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Commander Gbudema caused, and intended to cause, serious physical suffering and injury to the victims.

3862. para. 1222: Based on the evidence of Sorie Kondeh, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in May 1998 18 persons were carved with the letters "RUF" and/or "AFRC" by AFRC fighters in Kayima, and that in doing so the AFRC fighters caused, and intended to cause, serious physical suffering and injury to the victims.

3863. para. 1223: As the victims were captured civilians, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were not taking part in hostilities at the time of the amputations.

c. Wondedu – Kono District – Physical Violence

3864. para. 1228: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that, by the act of carving the letters "RUF" and "AFRC" into the bodies of an unknown number of their captive civilians some time between April and November 1998, RUF and AFRC fighters caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering upon their victims.

3865. para. 1229: The Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that by knocking out teeth of Teh, a captive civilian, as punishment some time between April and November 1998. AFRC Commander Banya caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering to Teh.

3866. para. 1230: Further, as the victims were captured civilians, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were not taking part in hostilities at the time of the mutilations.

d. Conclusion –Kono District - Physical Violence

3867. para. 1231: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, in various locations in Kono District, including Tombudo, Kayima, and Wondedu, members of the AFRC and RUF committed acts of cruel treatment and other inhumane acts against an unknown number of civilians, as charged in the Indictment,[3012] and as shown in the evidence above.

3868. para. 1232: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone[3013] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts of physical violence proved by the Prosecution in respect of Kono District formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[3014] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of physical violence in Kono District there was a nexus between the acts of physical violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of physical violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of physical violence in Kono District constitute other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute, and cruel treatment as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

(v) Kailahun District– Physical Violence

3869. para. 1263: The Trial Chamber finds the witnesses who testified to the foregoing incidents to be credible and their evidence supports proof of existence of crimes relating to physical violence on a widespread or systematic basis. The Trial Chamber will, therefore, only consider the foregoing evidence regarding Kailahun District in relation to the chapeau requirements.

(ii) Freetown and the Western Area– Physical Violence

a. Freetown, including the northern and eastern areas of the city – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3870. para. 1272: TF1-358 was a medical doctor who saw the actual injuries sustained by people coming to his hospital. He produced photographs he took of these patients and their injuries. These included amputations and the patient whose eyes had to be removed. The Trial Chamber finds his account to be detailed and credible. Given that these injuries were sustained at the time rebels were in Freetown, and TF 1-358's unchallenged evidence that 90% of injuries were war related together with Exhibits P-249, P-250, and Confidential Exhibit P-232, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the rebels caused serious physical suffering and injury to the amputation and mutilation victims. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, based on Mansaray's first-hand evidence, that by beating Abu Bakarr Mansaray, the rebels caused serious physical suffering and injury to him. Given the witness's description of the perpetrators the Trial Chamber finds that the "rebels" were members of the AFRC/RUF who were invading Freetown in January 1999.

3871. para. 1273: The Trial Chamber also finds that, given the nature of these acts and the degree of the harm suffered by the patients of TF1-358 and by Mansaray, and given that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to cause serious physical injury and suffering upon their victims, that the members of the AFRC/RUF intended to cause the serious physical injury and suffering. The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on TF1-385's description of the mutilated persons who he treated that the victims were civilians and, further, that Mansaray was a captured civilian and that none of these persons were taking part in hostilities at the time of the amputations, mutilations and beatings.

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

i. Beating of civilians outside Good Shepard Hospital in Kissy – Kissy - Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3872. para. 1277: Although TF1-104 saw and treated the injuries of the patients brought to Good Shepherd Hospital on the morning of 6 January 1999, how the injuries were sustained emanated from the statements of the patients and is hearsay. The witness's evidence of the beating of approximately 200 people, including staff and patients not taking part in hostilities is direct evidence of beatings and the Trial Chamber finds it credible. However, as indicated previously, as the Indictment particularizes only mutilation and beating, the Trial Chamber has not considered evidence of gunshot wounds in relation to Counts 7 and 8.[3076] The Trial Chamber accepts TF 1-104's evidence that a Nigerian man named Ike had his ear amputated by the "Junta" and that Ike was a businessman. Given that Ike was brought to a hospital in Kissy, the Trial Chamber considers it can safely infer this amputation occurred in a location in Kissy and finds accordingly. The Trial Chamber finds that Ike was amputated by Junta/RUF and that this caused serious physical injury. Given that the beatings were carried out as punishment for allegedly treating ECOMOG soldiers and Kamajors at the hospital, the Trial Chamber finds that the perpetrators intended to cause the serious physical injury and suffering. Further, as the victims were injured and/or civilians at the time of the beatings, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking direct part in hosti lities at the time of the attack. The witness described the group of men as a mix of "juntas" and the RUF, and in cross-examination he testified he knew some of perpetrators as RUF members and identified others by their dress. The Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators were members of the RUF and the AFRC.

ii. Amputations of two men's hands in Kissy Market – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3873. para. 1279: Based on the context, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations occurred in January 1999, and, as TF1-143 and his companion were members of the RUF and the AFRC respectively, that the amputations were perpetrated by members of the RUF/AFRC. The Trial Chamber find beyond reasonable doubt that these AFRC/RUF fighters caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering to the amputation victims. Further, as the victims were shopkeepers taking refuge in their shop, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they were civilians who were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

iii. Amputations of James Kpumgbu and others near Kissy Mental Hospital – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3874. para. 1284: Based on the above evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that James Kpumgbu's hands were mutilated and amputated by AFRC/RUF "rebels" near Kissy Mental Hospital on 6 January 1999. Kpumgbu observed Lansana and Babah's amputations and mutilations and the Trial Chamber accepts and finds that their hands were also amputated and mutilated. Given that Kpumgbu, Lansana and Babah had been captured and detained at the same time by the same rebels, the Trial Chamber accepts that these same rebels also amputated and/or mutilated Lansana and Babah. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that by these acts the AFRC/RUF fighters' caused, and intended to cause, the victims serious physical injury and suffering.

3875. para. 1285: Based on the witness's description of the perpetrators the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that they were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber at Para 202/3 unlawful killings.[3089] The Trial Chamber is further satisfied on the evidence that the victims were civilians and finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking part in hostilities at the time of the amputations.

iv. Beating and amputation of Ibrahim Wai at Falcon Road in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area- Physical Violence

3876. para. 1289: Wai was challenged in cross-examination regarding the lashing he received, and the Trial Chamber considers that he was consistent in this throughout his evidence and in the view of the Trial Chamber he did not exaggerate or prevaricate. Therefore the Trial Chamber accepts his account of being lashed by a cable and finds beyond reasonable doubt that he was beaten by being lashed on the hand.

3877. para. 1290: Based on Wai's testimony regarding his treatment by Captain Blood in Kissy, the Trial Chamber finds that Captain Blood struck Wai with the butt of a gun, and hit him on the back with the flat side of a machete. The Trial Chamber also finds beyond reasonable doubt that Captain Blood then amputated the witness's hand and Captain Blood or persons under his command amputated both hands of his brother-in-law's brother.

3878. para. 1291: The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering, to their victims.

As the witness and his relative were civilians in captivity at the time of these incidents, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they were not taking an active part in hostilities.

3879. para. 1292: Wai observed that two men he met on his way to Brookfields Hospital had both of their hands cut off. The Trial Chamber accepts his first hand observation of these two men's amputation and that he saw "that we were many whose hands were cut off' and accordingly finds that an unknown number of persons had their hands amputated. The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering to these amputation victims.

3880. para. 1293: Based on the witness's description of the perpetrators the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber3099

v. Amputations by Changa Bulanga in Low Cost Area and Shell Old Road Area - Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area- Physical Violence

3881. para. 1297: Based on Alimamy Bobson Sesay's eyewitness testimony that Changa Bulanga, a member of the AFRC. performed three amputations in Kissy and the amputation of an unknown number of persons in the Low Cost Area. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused, and intended to cause serious injury, and suffering to their victims. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt. Based on Changa Bulanga's statement that he had completed his mission which was to "amputate people...", that the victims were civilians who were not taking a direct part in hostilities at the time.

vi. Amputations of Barrie and Alusine Conteh's hands at Parsonage and Leaden Streets in Kissy- Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3882. para. 1301: Alusine Conteh repeatedly referred to the individual dressed in civilian clothing with the four soldiers as a "civilian". However, from Conteh's detailed testimony about the actions of this individual. the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the person who amputated Boi Barrie's and Conteh's hands was not a civilian but that the perpetrators were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber in the section of unlawful killings.[3117]

3883. para. 1302: Based on the above evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that both of Barrie's hands were mutilated and both of Alusine Conteh's hands were amputated by members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces in Kissy on 20 January 1999. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators' acts caused serious physical injury and sutTering. As the perpetrators told the witness to go and tell Tejan Kabbah "no more politic" they evinced an obvious intention to cause serious suffering and injury upon their victims. As all of the victims were civilians at the time of their amputation, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking an active part in hostilities.

vii. Amputations of Mohamed Sampson Bah's hand on Rowe Street in Kissy- Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3884. para. 1304: The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Commando Tafaiko a member of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber3121 amputated Bah's hand on Rowe Street in Kissy in January 1999. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that Bah was a civilian who was not taking part in hostilities at the time of the amputation.

viii. Amputation of TF1-083, Pa Sorie and Musa in Samuels Area in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3885. para. 1309: Based on TF1-083's evidence of his amputation, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the hands of TF1-083 and Pa Sorie were amputated and the fingers of Musa were amputated before he was shot at the Samuels area of Kissy on 22 January 1999. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering to the victims, and as the perpetrators told the witness to go to Kabbah, that they evinced an obvious intention to cause serious physical suffering and injury upon their victims. As the victims were captured civilians and lying on their backs at the time that these amputations occurred, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking an active part in hostilities. Based on the witness's description of the perpetrators, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber.[3138]

ix. Amputation of Mohamed Sesay's arms in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3886. para. 1314: Based on Mohamed Sesay's account of the amputation of both of his arms in Kissy, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that on 19 January 1999 at Kissy members of the Peoples Army under the command of Rambo amputated the hands of Mohamed Sesay. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering and that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to cause this serious physical injury and suffering upon their victim. As Sesay was a captured civilian when these amputations occurred, the Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that he was not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3887. para. 1315: The Trial Chamber accepts Mohamed Sesay's evidence that at Connaught Hospital he saw other people who had arms and hands amputated and that these amputations occurred in Freetown and finds beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of persons had their hands and/or arms amputated in January 1999 in Freetown.

x. Other Amputations in Kissy – Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area –Physical Violence

3888. para. 1321: The Trial Chamber finds that the information contained in Confidential Exhibit P-077 of physical violence committed in Kissy during the attack of Freetown is hearsay and is insufficiently precise to make a finding on the identity of the perpetrators of this crime. The Trial Chamber is unable to make a finding in relation to the crime of physical violence against civilians based solely on this evidence. However, this evidence may be used to corroborate other findings on specific incidents.

3889. para. 1322: TF 1-028's evidence that she saw a "big bunch" of human hands at Kissy Road clearly shows that amputations took place but it is insufficient in and of itself to establish the elements of Counts 7 or 8, as she did not witness the amputations, nor was she able to identify the perpetrators except by inference. However, this provides corroboration of more specific instances of amputation.

3890. para. 1323: The Trial Chamber finds that although the information contained in Exhibits P-263 and P-365A is hearsay, it is a contemporaneous account taken from the victims and eye witnesses and is credible and reliable. The report clearly shows that the victims were civilians and that the perpetrators were "rebels" or a Liberian fighter known as CO Cut Hand. It is corroborated by other documentary evidence and the corroborative evidence of the widespread nature of these amputations. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that two civilian men, four young civilian men and five civilians had their limbs amputated in Kissy in late January 1999 by AFRC/RUF invading forces.

3891. para. 1324: Although Corinne Dutka's account and the evidence of the amputation is based on hearsay, the Trial Chamber finds her account to be credible, and it was corroborated by her photographic evidence of the amputated 13 year old girl and the corroborative evidence of the widespread nature of these amputations. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that a 13 year old civilian girl not taking a direct part in hostilities had her hand amputated on or about 20 to 22 January 1999 in Kissy.

3892. para. 1325: The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that in each of the foregoing incidents the perpetrators' acts caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering to the victims. As the victims were civilians targeted by rebels the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking a direct part in hostilities. Based on the girl's description of the perpetrators as rebels, the Trial Chamber finds that they were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber.[3171]

c. Fourah Bay – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3893. para. 1329: Although the evidence in Confidential Exhibit P-077 is hearsay it is a contemporaneous account and the Trial Chamber accepts the credibility and reliability of the report and accordingly finds beyond reasonable doubt that on 21 January 1999 at Fourah Bay three unnamed sisters had limbs amputated or mutilated.

3894. para. 1330: Based on Jalloh's evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that seven persons, including the witness had their hands amputated by members of the RUF/AFRC in Fourah Bay on 18 January 1999.

3895. para. 1331: The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused, and intended to cause, serious physical injury and suffering to the victims. As the victims were captured civilians, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking direct part in hostilities at the time of the attack.

d. Upgun – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3896. para. 1334: Based on Bobson Sesay's eyewitness evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Five-Five, a member of the AFRC, amputated the arms of three individuals. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of civilians had hands amputated by Major Mines and Kabila. The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering to the victims, and that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to cause serious physical suffering and injury upon the victims. As the victims were captured civilians at the time of these amputations, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

e. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3897. para. 1343: The Trial Chamber accepts Sarah Koroma's evidence and finds beyond reasonable doubt that her left hand was amputated and her right hand was mutilated by rebels in Wellington on 6 January 1999. The Trial Chamber also finds beyond reasonable doubt, based on her evidence, that on the same day a second group of two rebels beat Koroma by throwing beer bottles at her, by kicking her into a gutter and kicking her in the thigh. Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering to Koroma and that they evinced an obvious intention to cause such serious physical injury and suffering.

3898. para. 1344: As Koroma testified only that these acts were perpetrated by "rebels", the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were members of the AFRC/RUF invading forces identified by the Trial Chamber.[3214]

3899. para. 1345: The Trial Chamber finds, however, that Koroma's evidence about other amputees she met at Connaught Hospital is insufficiently specific for it to make any findings in relation to Counts 7 and 8.

3900. para. 1346: The Trial Chamber accepts TF1-026's eyewitness evidence that rebels amputated the hands of seven people in Wellington on 6 January 1999. The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering to the victims, and that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to cause such serious physical injury and suffering. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt, based on the witness's evidence, that the amputations were perpetrated by the RUF, under the command of CO Rocky a member of the RUF/AFRC forces which invaded Freetown on 6 January 1999.

3902. para. 1348: As the victims in each of the foregoing findings were captured civilians at the time that they were beaten or amputated, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking direct part in hostilities at the time of the attacks.

f. Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3903. para. 1351: The Trial Chamber finds that Tholley's evidence based on her own observations to be credible and finds beyond reasonable doubt rebels amputated the hands of an unknown number of men and women in January 1999. The Trial Chamber therefore finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators caused serious physical injury and suffering to the victims, and that the perpetrators evinced an obvious intention to cause such serious physical suffering and injury upon their victims.

3904. para. 1352: As the victims were civilians at the time that they were amputated, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that they were not taking direct part in hostilities at the time of the attacks.

g. Conclusion –Freetown and the Western Area – Physical Violence

3905. para. 1353: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, in various areas of Freetown, including the northern and eastern areas of the city, the Kissy area around the State House, Fourah Bay, Upgun, and the Kissy mental hospital, and Hastings, Wellington, Turnbo, Waterloo, and Benguema in the Western Area, members of the AFRC and RUF committed acts of cruel treatment and other inhumane acts against an unknown number of civilians, as charged in the Indictment,3218 and as shown in the evidence above.

3906. para. 1354: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the RUF and/or AFRC forces directed a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[3219] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts physical violence proved by the Prosecution in respect of Freetown and the Western Area formed part of the said attack and that the perpetrators were aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[3220] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of physical violence in Freetown and the Western Area there was a nexus between the acts of physical violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of physical violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of physical violence in Freetown and the Western Area constitute other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute, and cruel treatment as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

3912. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,578 which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

3913. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

3914. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

3915. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

3919. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[202]

3920. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[203]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

3921. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian

[203] RUF Indictment, para. 42.

population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[204]

(iii) Counts 10-11: Physical Violence

3922. Widespread physical violence, including mutilations, was committed against civilians. Victims were often brought to a central location where mutilations were carried out. These acts of physical violence included the following:[205]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated and unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of civilians;[206]
> ii. Kenema District: Between 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations in Kenema District, including Kenema Town, members of AFRC/RUF carried out beatings and ill-treatment of a number of civilians who were in custody;[207]
> iii. Koinadugu Dustrict: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of RUF/AFRC mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Kabala and Konkoba (or Kontoba). The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" on the chests and foreheads of the civilians;[208]
> iv. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and and 31 November 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Bombali District, including Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka, Rosos (or Rosors or Rossos). The mutilations included cutting off limbs;[209]
> v. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilian men, women and children in various areas of Freetown and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town. The mutilations included cutting off limbs;[210]

3960. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 964 – 988 [567].

(iii) Applicable law – Violence to life, helath and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutilation

3961. para. 178: The Indictment charges the Accused under Count 10 with mutilation as a serious violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the mutilation of civilians in Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District between about May 1997 and April 1999.[333] Under this Count, the Accused are charged with "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutilation." The Chamber has analysed this offence as mutilation, as the category of "violence to life and person" does not exist as an independent offence in customary international law.[334]

3962. para. 179: The Chamber observes that the Ad Hoc Tribunals have repeatedly held that acts of mutilation can be prosecuted as falling under the category of inhumane acts as they cause serious mental or physical suffering or injury and/or constitute a serious attack on human dignity.[335] Further, the ICTR has recognised that mutilation, which can be irreparable, is a particularly serious form of physical harm.[336] Given that mutilation is a particularly egregious form of prohibited violence, this Chamber is satisfied that the prohibition against mutilation exists at customary international law and entails individual criminal responsibility.

> (i) The Accused subjected one or more persons to mutilation, in particular by permanently disfiguring the person or persons, or by permanently disabling or removing an organ or appendage;

(ii) The conduct was neither justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the person(s) concerned nor carried out in their interests;[337] and

(iii) The Accused intended to subject the person or persons to mutilation or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur.

3964. para. 181: While Common Article 3 and Article 4(2) of Additional Protocol II do not specifically provide for an exception for medically justified procedures, the Chamber finds that this exception should be logically inferred. As a result, this second element must be proven in order to establish that the offence of mutilation has occurred.[338]

3965. para. 182: Furthermore, the Prosecution is not required to establish that the mutilation seriously endangers the physical or mental health or integrity of the victim.[339]

(iv) Pleading

d. Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – Pleading

3969. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Pleading - Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – paras. 436 – 447 [626].

(v) Kono District – Physical violence

3971. para. 1310: The Indictment alleges that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving ARFC and RUF on the bodies of civilians.[2473]

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Physical violence

i. Amputations – Tombodu – Kono District – Physical violence

3972. para. 1311: The Chamber finds that the rebels led by Staff Alhaji that amputated the hands of three civilians in April 1998 at Tombodu inflicted grave physical injury and permanent disfigurement on these civilians, therefore constituting acts of mutilation and inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2474]

ii. Beating of TF1-197 near Tombodu – Tombodu – Kono District – Physical violence

3973. para. 1312: The Chamber finds that the beating inflicted by rebels on TF1-197 in the course of looting a group of civilian petty traders inflicted severe physical injury on him, leaving him permanently disfigured by a scar on the front left hand side of his head.[2475] The Chamber finds this beating to constitute an act of mutilation and an other inhumane act, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.

iii. Flogging of TF1-197 – Tombodu – Kono District – Physical violence

3974. para. 1313: The Chamber finds that the flogging of TF1-197 and his younger brother was sufficiently severe to constitute an act of unlawful physical violence as charged in Count 11, but that the evidence adduced does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that the flogging constituted an act of mutilation as charged in Count 10.[2476]

b. Wendedu – Kono District – Physical violence

3975. para. 1314: The Chamber finds that the conduct of rebels in knocking out several teeth of TF1-015 constitutes an act of mutilation through permanent disfigurement and an inhumane act, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2477]

c. Kayima – Kono District – Physical violence

3976. para. 1315: The Chamber finds that by carving "RUF" and/or "AFRC" on the bodies of 18 civilians, AFRC/RUF rebels committed acts of mutilation through permanent disfigurement and inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2478]

d. Sawao – Kono District – Physical violence

i. Amputations – Sawao – Kono District – Physical violence

3977. para. 1316: The Chamber finds that the rebels who amputated the hands of five civilian men in Sawao inflicted grave physical injury and permanent disfigurement on these civilians, therefore constituting acts of mutilation and inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2479]

ii. Beatings – Sawao – Kono District – Physical violence

3978. para. 1317: The Chamber also finds beyond reasonable doubt that captured civilians in Sawao were seriously beaten with sticks and the butts of guns.[2480] The Chamber is satisfied that these actions resulted in serious injury to their bodies and to their physical health, and constitutes inhumane acts as charged in Count 11.

e. Penduma – Kono District – Physical violence

3979. para. 1318: The Chamber finds that the amputation of the hands of at least three men in April 1998 in Penduma caused grave physical injury and permanent disfigurement to him, therefore constituting acts of mutilation and other inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2481]

f. Yardu – Kono District – Physical violence

3980. para. 1319: The Chamber finds that the amputation of the arm of TF1-197 in April 1998 in Yardu caused grave physical injury and permanent disfigurement on him, therefore constituting an act of mutilation and other inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.[2482]

g. Tomandu – Kono District – Physical violence

3981. para. 1320: The Chamber finds that the carving of 'RUF' into the backs and arms of several civilian men by rebels in approximately May 1998 in Tomandu caused grave physical injury and permanent disfigurement, therefore constituting acts of mutilation and other inhumane acts, as charged in Counts 10 and 11.

(vi) Kenema District – Physical violence

3982. para. 1096: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and physical violence (Counts 10 to 11) between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, in various locations throughout Kenema District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).2136

3983. para. 1097: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraphs were committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Kenema District at the relevant time.[2137] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3984. para. 1109: The Indictment alleges that "between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations in Kenema District, including Kenema Town, members of the AFRC/RUF carried out beatings and ill-treatment of a number of civilians who were in custody."[2147] The Chamber notes that the Prosecution has not alleged that acts of mutilation, as charged in Count 10 of the Indictment, were committed in Kenema District.[2148]

a. Beating of TF1-122 – Kenema District – Physical violence

3985. para. 1110: The Chamber recalls that TF1-122 was arrested and thoroughly beaten with a belt by AFRC/RUF members, resulting in serious physical injury.[2149] The Chamber finds that the beating of TF1-122 while in custody constitutes an inhumane act, as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

b. Initial arrest of TF1-129 – Kenema District – Physical violence

3986. para. 1111: The Chamber recalls the first arrest of TF1-129.[2150] The Chamber finds that Sesay personally and intentionally inflicted injury to the mental health of TF1-129 when he forcibly entered his office, aimed his gun at TF1-129 and then fired his gun between TF1-129's legs. In addition, the Chamber finds that the following acts inflicted serious physical injury on TF1-129: Captain Lion broke a bottle against his head; rebels kicked, spat at and urinated on TF1-129 while in the boot of the van; and rebels beat TF1-129 while he was moved around the Secretariat building.

3987. para. 1112: The Chamber is satisfied that, taken together, these acts are of comparable gravity to the crimes against humanity in Article 2 of the Statute. We accordingly find that the beating of TF1-129 constitutes an inhumane act, as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

c. Beating of rebel named Francis – Kenema District – Physical violence

3988. para. 1113: The Chamber recalls that Sesay ordered his bodyguards, Captain Lion and at least six rebels to beat a rebel named Francis.[2151] As Francis was a fighter, and the precise reasons why Sesay ordered that he be beaten are unclear, the Chamber is of the view that this act does not form part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone. We therefore find that the general requirements of crimes against humanity have not been established by the Prosecution in respect of this beating, which does not then amount to an inhumane act as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

d. Beatings of suspected collaborators: January 1998 - Kenema District – Physical violence

3989. para. 1114: Bockarie and other members of the RUF inflicted grave physical injuries on B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee, Brima Kpaka, TF1-129, Paramount Chief Moinama Karmoh and four others who were arrested in late January 1998 on suspicion of being Kamajor collaborators.2152 The Chamber finds that these beatings constitute inhumane acts, as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

e. Beatings of suspected collaborators: February 1998 - Kenema District – Physical violence

3990. para. 1115: Further mistreatment of B.S. Massaquoi and five other civilian detainees occurred on 6 February 1998 when these individuals were re-arrested.[2153] The Chamber is satisfied that the treatment of these civilians by AFRC/RUF rebels, including by Bockarie, resulted in great suffering and serious physical injury, and amounted to inhumane acts as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

f. "Flogging" of the Police Commissioner and CPO - Kenema District – Physical violence

3991. para. 1116: The Chamber recalls that Sesay and his subordinates "flogged" and "humiliated" the Police Commissioner and the Chief Police Officer in Kenema.[2154] The Chamber recalls that proof of an inhumane act requires the Prosecution to demonstrate that the physical or mental injury inflicted on the victim is of sufficiently similar severity to the other crimes against humanity in Article 2 of the Statute.

3992. para. 1117: The Prosecution did not adduce evidence as to the actual physical or mental injuries, if any, inflicted by Sesay and his men on the victims. The witnesses, neither of whom had spoken directly to the victims about the event, did not clarify what the terms "flogging" and "humiliation" entailed, apart from explaining that being forcibly taken away with Sesay amounted to humiliation. In the absence of evidence as to the nature and severity of the "flogging," the Chamber finds that this conduct is not sufficiently grave to constitute an inhumane act, as charged in Count 11 of the Indictment.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Physical violence

3993. para. 1566: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 to 11), enlistment, conscription and use of children in hostilities (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999 in locations of the city of Freetown and the Western Area. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2).

3994. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

3995. para. 1584: The Prosecution alleges that "between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilian men, women and children in various areas of Freetown, and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town. The mutilation included cutting off limbs."[3025]

3996. para. 1585: The Chamber recalls its findings that:

(i) rebels severed the hand of TF1-331 at Loko Town;[3026]

(ii) a rebel named Commando severed both hands of TF1-101 on 19 January 1999;[3027]

(iii) three young RUF rebels, on 22 January 1999, amputated the hand of TF1-022 and another civilian;[3028]

(iv) rebels amputated both arms and severed the tongue of a boy named Samuel whom they suspected of being a Kamajor;[3029] and

(v) on 21 January 1999, Captain Blood amputated TF1-097's hand and both hands of one of the witness's relatives.[3030]

3997. para. 1586: The Chamber is satisfied that these victims were civilians and finds that none of these acts were justified by medical, dental or hospital treatment of the persons concerned. The Chamber notes that these acts resulted in the permanent disfigurement and disabling of the victims, and therefore constitutes mutilation.

3998. para.1587: The Chamber accordingly finds it established beyond reasonable doubt that these amputations constitute mutilation and inhumane acts, as charged under Counts 10 and 11 of the Indictment.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

4003. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – para. 492 [1693].

4004. para. 898: The Trial Chamber found that Kallon incurred JCE liability under Counts 10 to 11, inter alia, for the physical mistreatment of TF1-122 and the infliction of physical violence on TF1-129 in Kenema Town,[2348] and the amputation of the hands of three civilians[2349] and the flogging of TF1-197 and his brother in Tombodu in Kono District.[2350]

4005. para. 899: Kallon submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact by convicting him for acts of physical violence at locations in Kono District not pleaded in the Indictment, and that this defect was not cured.[2351]

4006. para. 901: With respect to physical violence in Kono District, the Indictment particularises the charge under Counts 10 and 11 in relation to Kono District as follows:

> Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of the civilians.[2356]

4008. para.903: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the specificity required for the pleading of locations will depend on factors including those previously listed.[2357] Kallon was convicted for acts of physical violence pursuant to his participation in the JCE. Kallon makes no submission that he directly participated in any of these crimes, and in fact he contends he did not know of them. His liability is pursuant to his participation in the JCE and it is derived from his conduct in relation to other events and crimes which were committed at locations that were named in the Indictment.[2358]

4009. para.904: In regard to his notice of the alleged criminal acts in Penduma and Yardu, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that nonexhaustive pleading of locations may be adequate in light of the "sheer scale" of the alleged crimes.[2359] The Appeals Chamber has not found error in the Trial Chamber's general approach to applying the exception,[2360] and Kallon has not offered any argument why this exception to the requirements for pleading specificity should not apply to the acts of physical violence in Penduma and Yardu, in view of the fact that his liability is pursuant to his participation in the JCE. Accordingly, this submission is dismissed.

(ii) Pleading – Dissents

4013. para. 70 (p.531): The Majority concludes, I believe wrongly, that the Trial Chamber was correct when it declined to review on appeal the adequacy of the pleading of locations and relied instead on its pre-trial decisions on the form of the Indictment. That Trial Court decision, which the Majority upholds, relied on the mode of liability and in addition the "sheer scale" exception without inquiring further as to the necessity for, or the practicability of, alleging particular locations. It concluded that pleading entire districts or using phrases "such as" and "including but not limited to" was "acceptable if the reference is … to locations but not otherwise."[104] The Trial Chamber fails to reason this conclusion or explain why location is as a general matter less material to notice necessary to understand the charges and prepare a defence than other facts for which it did not allow such vague pleading.

4014. para. 71 (p.531-532): In my view, the Majority wrongly upholds the Trial Chamber in its application of the "sheer scale" exception to the pleading of locations because the exception does not apply when it is practicable for the Prosecution to adduce witness evidence of the material fact.[105] Contrary to the approach adopted by the Trial Chamber in its pre-trial decision on the form of the Indictment, it is not enough simply to find the cataclysmic dimensions of the alleged criminality.[106] Rather, the "sheer scale" exception is grounded in the impracticability of pleading in greater detail as a consequence of the scale of the alleged crimes,[107] and the Trial Chamber therefore must assess not only the general dimensions of the criminality, but, given the crimes as pleaded in the Indictment, whether the scale of the crimes charged made it "impracticable" for the Prosecution to plead locations with greater specificity.[108] As held by the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, the Prosecution is expected to know its case before proceeding to trial and may not rely on the weaknesses of its own investigation in order to mould the case against the accused in the course of the trial depending on how the evidence unfolds.[109]

4015. para. 72 (p.532): The Prosecution did know before proceeding to trial about the acts of mutilation and physical violence against the four persons in Penduma and Yardu. The Prosecution's Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief shows that it would adduce evidence of the exact crimes under Counts 10 and 11 that were found to have occurred at those villages. In relation to Penduma, the Prosecution knew it had a witness who would, and did, testify with specificity about the specific events of the crime.[110] In relation to Yardu, the Prosecution knew that the witness it would later rely upon at trial expressly named Yardu during the investigation as the location of the exact crimes which were found by the Trial Chamber.[111]

4016. para. 73 (p.532-533): Likewise, it was practicable for the Prosecution to include in the Indictment that the burnings that were charged as Acts of Terrorism and Collective Punishment in Kono occurred in Koidu Town. The Prosecution Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief shows that a witness relied upon by the Trial Chamber would give evidence in relation to Koidu Town, that the "rebels burnt the town."[112]

4017. para. 74 (p.533): This information might have been considered (with additional disclosures) to cure the defective Indictment, but, as the Appeals Chamber noted, "the Prosecution bears the burden of showing on appeal that the defect in the Indictment did not prejudice Kallon's ability to prepare his defence. The Prosecution has not offered any submissions that Kallon had notice of the charge as a result of timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual underpinnings of the charge."[113]

4018. para. 75 (p.533): Since the Prosecution knew from the outset the evidence with which it intended to establish these discrete and site-specific crimes, the "sheer scale" exception did not apply. The Trial Chamber's application of the "sheer scale" exception to relieve the Prosecution of its duty to name these locations in the Indictment is, in my opinion, an error, resulting from the Trial Chamber's failure to first inquire as to whether it was practicable for the Prosecution to provide more details in the Indictment.

4019. para. 76 (p.533): The error is compounded by the Trial Chamber's attenuated analysis of whether the pleading of locations was defective. Rather than properly assessing the degree of specificity required for the pleading of locations, the Trial Chamber wrongly considered the Appeals Chamber to have "explicitly held that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to limit evidence that falls outside locations not specifically mentioned in the Indictment."[114] Relying in part on this incorrect reading of the Appeals Chamber's holding in Brima et al., the Trial Chamber failed to consider whether the Appellants lacked sufficient notice of crimes charged at locations that were not named in the Indictment.[115]

4020. para. 77 (p.533-534): Contrary to the interpretation ascribed by the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber actually held that the Brima et al. Trial Chamber properly exercised its discretion to (i) reverse a previous decision that the pleading of locations was sufficient, (ii) hold that the pleading of locations was defective, and (iii) refuse to enter convictions for crimes at unnamed locations. The Appeals Chamber stated that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to reconsider such a decision if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to prevent an injustice.[116] The Appeals Chamber further held that:

> [T]he Trial Chamber's limited treatment of the evidence of crimes committed in such locations was a proper exercise of its discretion in the interest of justice, taking into account that it is the Prosecution's obligation to plead clearly material facts it intends to prove, so as to afford the Appellants a fair trial.[117]

4021. para. 78 (p.534): By so holding, the Appeals Chamber agreed with the Brima et al. Trial Chamber that the pleading of locations non-exhaustively through the use of phrases such as "in locations including," "in various locations in [a specified] District, including," "in several locations including" is insufficiently specific and can render an indictment defective in regard to crimes charged at unnamed locations.

4022. para. 79 (p.534): I recognise that in cases of crimes committed on a massive scale there are inherent difficulties in pleading the material facts, such as the identity of the victims, the time and place of the events, and the means by which the offence was committed. Nonetheless, since the Brima et al. Appeal Judgment, the Appeals Chamber has held that Trial Chambers must apply the "sheer scale" exception in a manner that safeguards the fair trial rights of the accused. To do so, I would submit, the Trial Chamber must determine the degree of specificity for pleading locations particular to the charges in the Indictment and whether it is practicable for the Prosecution to plead location with sufficient specificity to give notice of the crimes alleged. The factors provided by the Appeals Chamber, and discussed above, guide an assessment of the required degree of specificity for pleading locations. It is my view that such inquiry must focus on the relevance of location both to the accused's ability to defend against the crime itself and against his liability for the crime.

4023. para. 80 (p.534-535): As held by the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, where the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution was capable of pleading a material fact, but it did not, then the "sheer scale" exception does not apply.[118] If the Trial Chamber concludes that the Indictment is defective, such defects will render the trial unfair with respect to the affected charge if the Prosecution has not cured the resulting prejudice by providing timely, clear and consistent notice of the material facts of the charge.[119]

4025. para. 82 (p.535): I therefore find the Indictment defective with respect to the pleading of Koidu Town under Counts 1, 2 and 14 and Penduma and Yardu under Counts 10 and 11. I further find that although the pleading of Penduma and Yardu under Counts 10 and 11 was only challenged on appeal by Kallon, the lack of notice with respect to these named locations affected the fair trial rights of Sesay as well since he was also convicted for these crimes.[120] I would, therefore, allow Sesay's Ground 8, in part, and Kallon's Grounds 19 and 22 and reverse the convictions for Sesay and Kallon under Counts 1 and 2 for acts of burning in Koidu Town and Counts 10 and 11 for the crimes at Penduma and Yardu in Kono District. As I would not have found JCE liability for Gbao, I need not address his liability for crimes at these locations.

b. Justice Winter:

4026. para. 5 (p.482-483): In addition to this clarification, I also wish to express my complete agreement with the reasoning and conclusions expressed by Hon. Justice Fisher in her Partially Dissenting and Concurring Opinion insofar as it pertains to Gbao's Sub-Grounds 8(j) and 8(k), Gbao's Sub-Ground 8(i), Sesay's Grounds 33 and 46, and her opinion regarding the failure to plead locations with sufficient specificity. In particular, I join her dissent from the Majority's decision to confirm Gbao's conviction under JCE liability, given the Trial Chamber's findings that he did not share the Common Criminal Purpose with the other participants in the case before us.

4029. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged and JCE mens rea (short review) – paras. 467 - 468, 482, 492 - 493 [756] and see, also, Justice Fisher's and Justice Winter's Dissenting Opinions in that regard.

(v) Kono District - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular, cruel treatment

4030. para. 443: Sesay and Gbao submit that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasoning to impute the following crimes of physical violence in Kono District to the JCE members:[1118] (i) the beating of TF1-197 on one occasion between February and March 1998 near Tombodu (including the pillaging of property from him);[1119] (ii) the act of knocking TF1-015's teeth out in the Wendedu camp;[1120] (iii) the amputation of the hands of three civilians by rebels led by Staff

Alhaji in Tombodu in April 1998;[1121] (iv) the amputations of the hands of at least three men in Penduma in April 1998;[1122] (v) the amputation of the hands of five civilian men in Sawao between February and April 1998;[1123] (vi) the flogging of TF1-197 and his brother by rebels under the command of Staff Alhaji;[1124] (vii) the beating of an unknown number of civilian men with sticks and the butts of guns in Sawao between February and April 1998;[1125] and (viii) the carving of "AFRC" and/or "RUF" on the bodies of 18 civilians in Kayima between February and April 1998.[1126] Sesay also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in imputing these crimes to the JCE members. The Appeals Chamber will consider each crime incident in turn and, in so doing, address the alleged errors of fact and the alleged failure to provide a reasoned opinion together.

4031. para. 444: With regard to the beating of TF1-197 between February and March 1998, Sesay submits that TF1-197's testimony that the witness was told that the leader of the rebels who beat him and pillaged[1127] items from him, named Musa, reported to Staff Alhaji is insufficient to impute this crime to the JCE members.[1128] However, Sesay does not dispute TF1-197's testimony as such, nor does he account for the finding that Staff Alhaji was "directly subordinated" to members of the JCE.[1129] For his part, Gbao refers to the finding that "[o]ne of the rebels referred to his boss as Commando," but fails to explain how this is relevant to the evidence that the rebels' leader, whether he was called "Musa" or "Commando," reported to Staff Alhaji.[1130] In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that beatings such as the one in question were "regularly" committed by AFRC/RUF rebels in the area between February and March 1998 as part of their looting civilian property,[1131] and that "Operation Pay Yourself," ordered by Koroma in February 1998,[1132] was endorsed by Superman who was the overall Commander for Kono District.[1133] For these reasons, Sesay's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in imputing this crime, as well as his and Gbao's submissions that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasons for so doing, are rejected.

4032. para. 445: As regards the knocking out of TF1-015's teeth, Sesay submits that the Trial Chamber found it to be "a capricious punishment instilled on [TF1-015] by Captain Banya."[1134] However, Sesay does not account for the Trial Chamber's finding that this beating took place at the Wendedu camp, to which TF1-015 had been brought by Rocky.[1135] Wendedu camp was one of many camps "established in Kono District by the RUF" in which civilians were rounded up and forced to reside.[1136] Kallon in particular was involved in organising the Wendedu camp.[1137] Given the Trial Chamber's findings on the general coercive environment in these camps, which included beatings,[1138] the Appeals Chamber finds that it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to impute Captain Banya's mistreatment of TF1-015 to the members of the JCE. Sesay's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in imputing this crime, as well as his and Gbao's submissions that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasons for so doing, are dismissed.

4033. para. 446: Sesay argues that there is "no evidence" to support that the rebels, led by Staff Alhaji, who (i) amputated the hands of three civilians in Tombodu in April 1998; and (ii) flogged TF1-197 and his brother were used by members of the JCE.[1139] However, Sesay fails to demonstrate an error as he does not challenge the Trial Chamber's explicit finding that Staff Alhaji was "directly subordinated to and used by" JCE members to commit crimes in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1140] That finding also sufficiently explains how the Trial Chamber imputed these crimes to the JCE members. Sesay's and Gbao's submissions therefore fail.

4035. para.448: However, neither Sesay nor Gbao addresses the Trial Chamber's finding, made in respect of these very crimes, that "[t]he amputations and carvings practised by the AFRC/RUF were notorious. These crimes served as a permanent, visible and terrifying reminder to all civilians of the power and propensity to violence of the AFRC and RUF."[1142] With respect to the mistreatment in Sawao, Sesay also fails to acknowledge the finding that, shortly before being amputated and beaten, the victims were brought before a rebel leader in Sawao who stated: "My instructions are if you capture [civilians], kill them and leave them there."[1143] load [sic] of arms. Now that you say you don't want our military rule, then go to your civilian rule."[1146] Sesay's and Gbao's submissions as to these crimes are rejected.

4036. para.449: These findings are examples of the "widespread commission" of these types of crimes, which demonstrated that the AFRC/RUF leadership contemplated the commission of crimes as a means to control the territory of Sierra Leone.[1144] Similar to the crimes of sexual violence, the Trial Chamber thus found that the JCE members availed themselves of the perpetrators to commit these crimes in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose. Indeed, the amputations of the three men in Penduma in April 1998 were committed by rebels led by Staff Alhaji, who was explicitly found to have been used by the JCE members in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1145] Staff Alhaji's address to one of the victims of this incident is telling: "go to Tejan Kabbah for him to give you a hand because he has brought ten containers

4037. para.450: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the Appellants' submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide sufficient reasons for its conclusion that the physical violence in Kono District could be imputed to the members of the JCE. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses the Appellants' submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in so concluding.

(vii) Kenema District - Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular, cruel treatment

4047. para. 370: The Trial Chamber found that acts of unlawful killings, physical violence and enslavement were committed in Kenema District, some of which amounted to terror and collective punishment.[901] It found that these crimes fell within time period of the Junta and that the common plan and plurality of person remained the same.[902]

4048. para. 419: Both Sesay and Gbao submit that the Trial Chamber made insufficient findings on the links between the principal perpetrators of certain crimes in Kenema and the JCE members.[1038] In order to assess their submissions on the proper factual basis, it is necessary to first address another argument by Sesay relating to the Trial Chamber's crime-base findings regarding Kenema

4049. para. 420: Sesay argues that the finding in paragraph 1100 of the Trial Judgment created a presumption that the crimes in Kenema were committed for personal reasons rather than in pursuance of a common criminal purpose.[1039] The relevant part of paragraph 1100 reads:

> The Chamber is further satisfied that a nexus existed between the killing and the armed conflict, as the control exercised by the AFRC and RUF over Kenema Town during the Junta period created a permissive environment in which the fighters could commit crimes with impunity.

This finding is silent on the fighters' own reasons for committing crimes in Kenema Town. It only says that the permissive environment created by the AFRC and RUF there permitted them to do so with impunity. The presumption that Sesay reads into this finding is thus his own, and not one the Trial Chamber made. This argument fails.

4050. para. 421: The Appeals Chamber now turns to the alleged failures to make sufficient findings. Sesay and Gbao first submit that no link was shown between the JCE members and the persons who carried out the actus reus of the following crimes in Kenema Town: (i) the beating of TF1-122; (ii) the killing of Mr. Dowi; and (iii) the killing of an alleged Kamajor boss. TF1-122 was beaten by AFRC/RUF rebels at the Junta Secretariat in Kenema Town for having requested them to cease removing property from a woman.[1040] This incident was part of the so-called "flag trick:" It was common practice for those near the Junta Secretariat in Kenema Town to stand still during the raising and lowering of the Sierra Leonean flag; AFRC/RUF fighters would raise and lower the flag at irregular times and harass individuals who did not stand still and seise whatever property the latter were carrying.[1041] As to Mr. Dowi, he was killed by AFRC/RUF rebels when trying to prevent them from looting his freezer at his home in Kenema Town.[1042] Both crimes were found to have taken place in the context of the permissive environment created by the control exercised by the AFRC and RUF over Kenema Town wherein their fighters could commit crimes with impunity.[1043]

4051. para. 422: The fact, as noted, that this finding is silent on the perpetrators' own reasons for beating TF1-122 and killing Mr. Dowi is not determinative for whether the Trial Chamber found that they were used by the JCE members to commit these crimes in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.Of greater relevance for that issue is the finding that the "control exercised" by the AFRC/RUF over Kenema Town "created" an environment which permitted the beating and the killing.[1045] That control, the Trial Chamber found, was exercised by the Junta: "Within one week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of [Kenema] town."[1046] Indeed, the beating of TF1-122 was found to have taken place while he was in custody at the Junta's own Secretariat building in Kenema Town.[1047] At the head of the Junta were most of the JCE members, who shared the intent to employ beatings and killings, such as those now at issue, as a means to control the territory of Sierra Leone, including Kenema Town.[1048] The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that these findings suffice to show how the perpetrators of the crimes in question were used by JCE members acting in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose.[1049] Sesay's and Gbao's submissions to the contrary fail.

4052. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kenema District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kenema District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras. 617, 619 – 623 [7580].

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4058. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[213]

4059. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [214]

4060. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [215]

4061. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [216]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

[214] AFRC Indictment, para. 38.

campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [217]

(iii) Counts 10-11: Physical Violence

4063. Widespread physical violence, including mutilations, was committed against civilians. Victims were often brought to a central location where mutilations were carried out. These acts of physical violence included the following: [218]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of the civilians; [219]
> ii. Kenema District - Between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations in Kenema District, including Kenema town, members of AFRC/RUF carried out beatings and ill-treatment of a number of civilians who were in custody; [220]
> iii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Kabala and Konkoba (or Kontoba). The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" on the chests and foreheads of the civilians; [221]
> iv. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Bombali District, including Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka, Rosos (or Rossos or Rosors). The mutilations included cutting off limbs; [222]
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilian men, women and children in various areas of Freetown, and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town. The mutilations included cutting off limbs; [223]

vi. Port Loko: About the month of February 1999, the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including cutting off limbs; [224]

4064. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 10: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutilation, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kenema District - Crimes

4065. para. 1192: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations in Kenema District, including Kenema town, members of the AFRC/RUF carried out beatings and ill-treatment of a number of civilians who were in custody".[2152]

4066. para. 1193: In reaching the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber relied on the testimony of Prosecution witness TFl-122, and exhibit P-24.

a. Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

4068. para. 1195: AFRC/RUF troops were stationed in Kenema Town between May 1997 and February 1998.[2155] Witness TFl-122 testified that AFRC/RUF soldiers used to "set a trap" on civilians with the national flag. The witness explained that the flag of Sierra Leone used to be raised every morning at 6am outside the AFRC/RUF Secretariat building at 14 Hangh Road. The law stated that civilians had to stand still while the flag was being raised. However, sometimes the AFRC/RUF would raise the flag at different times of the morning. The AFRC/RUF soldiers would then arrest civilians who were unaware of the changed time and were walking in the street. They took these individuals to their Secretariat and took away any possessions that they had on them[2156] If a person resisted, she or he would be beaten and confined. The witness testified that this happened "continuously".[2157] On one such occasion the witness tried to prevent the soldiers from arresting a woman but the soldiers then began beating him with their belts.[2158]

4069. para. 1196: In early February 1998, Sam Bockarie arrested the chairman of Kenema Town Council, B.S. Massaquoi; Brima Kpaka, a prominent business man; Andrew Quee, a civil servant and about four others on the grounds that they were "Kamajor supporters"[2159] These individuals were initially detained at the AFRC Secretariat in Kenema Town.[2160] In the presence of both Sam Bockarie and the man in charge of the local AFRC Secretariat, the detainees were made to lie on the floor with tied hands to the back. They were assaulted, as a result of which B.S. Massaquoi had a swollen face, Brima Kpaka had an injury above his eye and the others had bruises.[2161] They were kept at the AFRC Secretariat building for three days.[2162] After handing them over to the police,[2163] AFRC/RUF troops rearrested them saying that they were to be taken to SOS East Brigade Headquarters.[2164] The AFRC/RUF troops beat and kicked B.S. Massaquoi.[2165] Subsequently, B.S. Massaquoi, Andrew Quee and the four other individuals were all killed.[2166]

(ii) Kono District – Crimes

4070. para. 1198: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving 'AFRC' and 'RUF' on the bodies of the civilians".[2167]

4071. para. 1199: No evidence of physical violence was led in respect of Wondedu.

Johnson, TF1-198, TF1-216, TFl-272 and TF1-334, Defence Witness DAB-098 and Exhibits P-24, P-26, P-27, P-51 and P-56.

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

4073. para. 1201: Following an order of Johnny Paul Koroma in March 1998 children were abducted and trained to perform amputations on civilians in areas within the Kono District, including Tombodu.[2168] Documentary evidence corroborates the occurrence of physical violence, including mutilations, in Tombodu.[2169]

4075. para. 1203: 'Savage' then announced that he would cut off the hands of the fourteen captives, including witness TF1-072.[2172] The men were forced to lie on ground and were tied together. 'Small Mosquito' urinated on them. He then covered them with a mattress that he set on fire with the men still lying underneath. Witness TF1-0n was burnt on his shoulder before he managed to free himself. On account of his attempted escape 'Savage' flogged the Witness on his face so severely that his vision is permanently impaired.[2173] 'Savage' then ordered the witness to place his hand on a nearby tree stump and attempted to amputate his right hand. The Witness was so terrified that he defecated. His right hand was not entirely amputated, but permanently disfigured. The Trial Chamber was able to observe that the Witness' fingers are mangled. He stated that he is unable to read or write as result of the assault.[2174] The witness was not shaken on cross-examination with regard to the identity of the commander 'Savage'.[2175]

4076. para. 1204: In about May 1998, Witness TF1-334 watched 'Savage' personally amputate the hands of about fifteen civilians. The civilians were celebrating what they believed was an ECOMOG takeover of Tombodu when in fact it was 'Savage' and his men who were wearing Nigerian ECOMOG uniforms. 'Savage' retaliated against the civilians for celebrating what they believed was his defeat.[2176] The witness testified that 'Savage' told the civilians that "they should go and tell ECOMOG that he, Savage, was in Tombodu and this was to be a warning to the other civilians".[2177]

4077. para. 1205: Witnesses TF1-033 and DAB-098 also testified that civilians were amputated by troops under the command of 'Savage' in Tombodu.[2178]

4078. para. 1206: In April 1998, witness TF1-216 was abducted and taken to Tombodu, along with a number of other civilians. At Tombodu, a commander called 'Staff Alhaji' ordered that the witness' hands and the hands of five other civilians be amputated. Following the amputation they were told to go and see President Kabbah as "he [...] got one container [of] hands for US".[2179]

b. Kaima/Kayima – Kono District – Crimes

4080. para. 1208: The Brima Defence submits that the credibility of witness TF1-074 is undermined by inconsistencies between his testimony and his pre-trial statement as to whether particular individuals mentioned in his testimony were AFRC or RUF troops. The Brima Defence thus submits that RUF troops were solely responsible for the events described.[2184] While the witness may have been mistaken regarding the affiliation of particular troops, the Trial Chamber notes that witness TF1-074 testified consistently that both the AFRC and the RUF were present in Kayima. The witness testified that he was able to distinguish between the two groups since the AFRC soldiers wore combat while the RUF were armed but wearing civilian clothing[2185] The Trial Chamber also accepts the detailed and credible evidence of witness TF1-074 that it was an AFRC soldier Bangalie who was responsible for marking his body.

4081. para. 1209: In March 1998, when witness DSK-I03 arrived in Koidu Town, a number of amputees were being treated by ECOMOG. The amputees said their hands had been amputated by 'Savage's group.[2186]

4082. para. 1210: In addition, documentary evidence corroborates the evidence given by the witnesses of physical violence by members of the AFRC/RUF in Kono District, including Kayima.[2187]

4083. para. 1211: From 6 April 1998 onward, the surgical teams of MSF at Connaught Hospital in Freetown started recording an increase in the number of patients suffering from severe mutilations. Between 6 April and 4 May 1998 Connaught Hospital received 115 patients,[2188] most of whom were severely mutilated. Most of them came from Kono.[2189] Some had received some basic medical treatment from ECOMOG just outside Koidu.[2190] They were brought to the hospital in ECOMOG trucks.[2191]

4084. para. 1212: The majority of patients suffered deep lacerations, broken limbs, field amputations and amputations. A few suffered gunshot wounds and the lips, ears and fingers of some had been cut.[2192] Of the 115 patients admitted to Connaught Hospital between 6 April and 4 May 1998 four men had had both arms amputated; 14 men had had one arm amputated; five men, in addition to having their arms amputated had a part of, one or both ears cut off; 23 patients had deep lacerations on lower arms, severed tendons, broken ulna and radius, as a result of cutlass attacks; seven patients had either a complete hand or several fingers missing as a result of cutlass attacks.[2193] Between 6 April 1998 and 27 July 1998, an MSF surgical team treated almost 300 patients with amputations, severe mutilations or gunshot wounds at the hospital. The majority of the cases treated were lacerations to the head or neck or amputations of arms, hands, fingers, ears or lips. This number represented, however, only a fraction of the number of such victims, many of whom never reached medical help.[2194] According to humanitarian agencies in Freetown, only about one in four victims of mutilations by rebel forces survived their injuries.[2195]

(iii) Koinadugu District – Crimes

4085. para. 1214: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Kabala and Konkoba (or Kontoba). The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving 'AFRC' on the chests and foreheads of the civilians".[2196]

4086. para. 1215: No evidence of physical violence was adduced in respect of Konkoba.[2197]

4087. para. 1216: In reaching the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has considered the entire evidence and relies on the testimony of Prosecution witness TF1-199 and Defence witness DAB-156, as well as exhibit P-51.

a. Kabala – Koinadugu District – Crimes

4088. para. 1217: Witness TF1-199, a member of an SBU (Small Boys Unit), testified that in approximately mid-May 1998, Lieutenant-Colonel 'Savage' led an attack by AFRC/RUF forces on Kabala Town. The witness participated in the attack and he testified that after the AFRC/RUF forces had successfully captured the town, they amputated the hands of an unknown number of civilians.[2198]

(iv) Bombali District – Crimes

4089. para. 1219: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween about 1 May 1998 and 31 [sic] November 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Bombali district, including Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka, Rosos (or Rossos or Rosors). The mutilations included cutting off limbs."[2199]

4090. para. 1220: No evidence of mutilations was led in respect of Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka.[2200]

4091. para. 1221: In arriving at the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has considered the entirety of the evidence and relies on the testimony of Prosecution witness TF1-269.

a. Rosos – Bombali District - Crimes

4092. para. 1222: During the rainy season of 1998, in Rosos, Witness TF1-269 was attacked by three persons she referred to as 'rebels'. One of the rebels cut Witness TF1-269 in the back of her neck in an attempt to kill her.[2201] The Trial Chamber was able to observe a scar of about two inches on the neck of the Witness.[2202]

(v) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

4093. para. 1225: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilian men, women and children in various areas of Freetown, and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town. The mutilations included cutting off limbs''.[2205]

4094. para. 1226: No evidence was adduced in relation to Calaba Town.

4095. para. 1227: The Prosecution led evidence of witnesses seeing amputated people or stating that 'rebels' committed amputations in various parts of Freetown and the Western Area.[2206]

Documentary evidence confirms that in Freetown during January 1999, hundreds of civilians had their limbs amputated or were subjected to other forms of mutilation. The mutilations were usually inflicted with machetes or axes and the victims included men, women and children.[2207] While the Trial Chamber accepts this evidence as credible, given its general nature, the Trial Chamber relies on it to corroborate its findings on the more specific incidents described below.

a. Upgun – Freetown - Crimes

4097. para. 1229: The Trial Chamber has found that in January 1999, an attack on Fourah Bay was ordered by the Accused Brima in retaliation for the alleged killing of an AFRC soldier by civilians.[2208] Witness TFl-184 testified that prior to the troops commencing the attack, in the Kissy Old Road area, 'FiveFive' demonstrated an amputation on a civilian, explaining to them that a 'long hand' is the amputation of the hand, while a 'short hand' is the amputation of an arm around the bicep area (above the elbow and below the shoulder)[2209] Witness TF1-184 identified 'Five-Five' as the Accused Kanu.[2210]

b. Kissy Old Road – Freetown – Crimes

4098. para. 1230: Witness TF1-334 testified about a demonstration of an amputation carried out by 'FiveFive' subsequent to the attack on Fourah Bay, at Kissy Old Road. According to the witness, 'FiveFive' arrived at Upgun with Major Mines and Captain Kabila and announced that it was time for the amputations to begin. He stated that he would carry out the first amputations in order to set an example for the others. Kanu called for two civilians nearby to be brought to him and he amputated both hands of both civilians with a machete at their wrists, explaining the difference between what he referred to as 'short sleeve' and 'long sleeve' amputations. 'Five-Five' then told the civilians that since they voted for 'Pa Kabbah' they should go to him and ask him for hands. In the presence of the Accused Kanu, ten more civilians were then rounded up and Captain Kabila and Major Mines amputated them at the elbow. Major Mines told them to go to 'Pa Kabbah' or ECOMOG to complain.[2211]

c. ‘Operation Cut Hand’ at PWD – Freetown – Crimes

4099. para. 1231: Witness TF1-153 testified that while the headquarters was at PWD, a soldier came from Fourah Bay “with his head bust” reporting that the civilians there had been fighting the soldiers.[2212] The witness subsequently heard that ‘Bazzy’ had raided a WFP warehouse in the nearby area and collected a number of machetes he found there. Later that evening, the witness saw ‘Bazzy’ and overheard a conversation between him and SAJ Musa’s wife. Tina Musa asked ‘Bazzy’ why his men were holding machetes. According to the witness, ‘Bazzy’ replied “We are just [returning] from Operation Cut Hand”. The witness testified that from this conversation he understood that the machetes from the warehouse had been used to amputate people.[2213]

d. Rowe Street –Kissy – Crimes

4100. para. 1232: The Trial Chamber has relied on the evidence of witness TF1-084 of his arrest in Rowe Street, Kissy, by rebels in January 1999 in its findings on unlawful killings.[2214] In addition to the evidence recounted therein, the witness stated the rebel commander, a certain Tafaiko, ordered that witness TF1-084’s hand was to be amputated. The rebels put witness TF1-084 on the ground, stood on his chest, stretched out his arms, and intentionally chopped off his hand with an axe.[2215]

e. Fatamaran Street – Kissy – Crimes

4101. para. 1233: On approximately 18 January 1999, witness TF1-098, his brother and his cousin were forced by rebels at gunpoint to follow them to a school on Fataraman Street.[2216] The witness described the rebels as being dressed in black T-shirts, some had soldier combats and tied mufflers with the American flag.[2217] Upon arrival at the school, four other civilians captured by the rebels were joined with the witness’ group. ‘Tommy’, one of the rebels, dressed in combat, amputated the hands of the seven captured persons, including the left hand of the witness. Having done so, the rebels told them to go to ‘Pa Kabbah’ and he would give them new hands.[2218] Witness TF1-098’s cousin died as a result of the amputation.[2219]

f. Old Road (Locust and Samuels area) – Kissy – Crimes

4102. para. 1234: On 22 January 1999, on Old Road in the Locust and Samuels area, witness TF1-083 and his family were captured by a group of rebels. The rebel commander told witness TF1-083 and others to lie flat on their backs to be killed or amputated. The rebels took two people to a comer and then returned with bloody knives. The commander ordered the rebels to cut off the hands of the remaining people. He said anyone whose hand is cut should go to Kabbah and ask him for a hand. One rebel stabbed witness TF1-083 with a knife in the left upper arm. The rebels chopped witness TF1-083's hand off with two blows of an axe.[2220] The hand of a man named Pa Sorie was also Cut.[2221] The rebels cut off the fingers oaf man named Mussa. The commander ordered the rebels to cut off the entire hand and when Mussa begged for mercy, the rebels killed him.[2222]

g. Parsonage Street – Kissy – Crimes

4103. para. 1235: On 22 January 1999, witness TF1-278 was fleeing from the rebels with his family and some of his tenants with their families when they were stopped by four persons wearing SLA uniforms and one person wearing civilian clothes near Parsonage Street in Freetown.[2223] A soldier named 'Captain Two Hand' ordered the soldiers to cut off the tenant's hands. A rebel in civilian clothes used an axe to cut off both of his hands. The soldiers told the tenant to "go and tell Tejan Kabbah this is what we have done. Go and tell no more politics, no more voting."[2224] Soldiers then amputated witness TF1-278's left hand. The witness testified that his child shouted "Hey, soldier, don't cut my father's hand, please. He is working for us."[2225] One of the soldiers ordered that the child's hand be amputated. The witness asked the soldier to amputate his right hand in exchange for sparing his child. The rebels amputated his right hand, before releasing the witness and the other civilians, telling them "You are the messenger of Tejan Kabbah. Go and tell Tejan Kabbah that we cut off your hand. Since you did not allow for peace we are saying good-bye to you."[2226]

h. Old Shell Road – Kissy - Crimes

4104. para. 1236: At Old Shell road, immediately prior to the troops' arrival at Kissy Mental Home, witness TF1-334 observed Osman Sesay a.k.a. 'Changamulanga' amputating six young civilian men at the elbow. 'Changamulanga' told the men to go to 'Pa Kabbah' and he would give them back their hands because they had voted for him. None of the three Accused were present during the amputations, but the troops subsequently moved to Kissy Mental Home to meet them.[2227]

i. Kissy Mental Home – Kissy – Crimes

4105. para. 1237: The Trial Chamber has found that the evening the troops arrived at Kissy Mental Home during the retreat from Freetown in January 1999, in the presence of the Accused Kamara and the Accused Kanu, the Accused Brima issued an order to the troops to burn houses and kill civilians in retaliation for their support of ECOMOG.[2228] In addition to ordering the witness to kill people in the PWD area, the witness overheard the Accused Brima ordering 'Changamulanga', 'Mines' and Colonel Kido to go towards the "low cost area" and amputate people.[2229] However, the witness did not testify as to whether this order to commit amputations was carried out. The Trial Chamber therefore does not make a finding of physical violence on this evidence. However, the Trial Chamber considers this evidence to generally corroborate the findings of physical violence made below in relation to Kissy Mental Home.

4106. para. 1238: Witness George Johnson testified that on the day that the troops arrived at Kissy Mental Home, the Accused Kanu ordered the soldiers, in the presence of the Accused Brima, the Accused Kamara and other commanders, to go to the eastern part of Freetown and amputate up to 200 civilians and send them to Ferry Junction. After the order was given, the witness observed fighters, including Kabila, 'Born Naked', 'Cyborg', and 'SBU Killer', moving towards the eastern part of Freetown. On their return, their machetes were covered with blood and they brought with them many amputated arms.[2230]

4108. para. 1240: Witness TFl-184 testified that during the period that the troops were at Kissy Mental Home, he observed 'Gullit' amputating a civilian's hand at Shell Company by Old Road.[2233]

4109. para. 1241: George Johnson testified that at Kissy Mental Home, a soldier named Kabila amputated the arms of a captured Nigerian ECOMOG soldier.[2234] The witness observed FAT Sesay writing a letter, which Kanu placed the around the ECOMOG soldier's neck. The ECOMOG soldier was sent to meet other ECOMOG soldiers at Ferry Junction.[2235] The Trial Chamber notes that this incident was not directed against the civilian population, but against a combatant. Therefore the Trial Chamber will consider this incident only in relation to Count 10.

j. Wellington –Crimes

4110. para. 1242: Witness TF1-085 testified that in January 1999, 'rebels' broke the door to her mother's house in Wellington where she was hiding along with some other civilians. The 'rebels' cut off the hand of one of the children, aged four or five years, who had been hiding in the house. The witness was then abducted by the rebels.[2236] The witness' testimony regarding subsequent events has been considered in the Trial Chamber's findings on outrages on personal dignity.[2237]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

4111. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 - paras. 241- 242 [1023].

a. There must have been an armed conflict whether non-international or international in character at the time the offences were allegedly committed 4112. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – There must have been an armed conflict whether non-international or international in character at the time the offences were allegedly committed - paras. 243 – 245 [1025].

b. There must be a nexus between the armed conflict and the alleged offence

4113. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – There must be a nexus between the armed conflict and the alleged offence - paras. 246 – 247 [1028].

c. The victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation

4114. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – The victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation - para. 248 [1030].

(ii) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

4115. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements - paras.249 – 254 [1031].

(iii) Applicable law – Violence to Life, Health and Physical or Mental Well-Being of Persons, in Particular Mutilation

4116. para. 724: Regarding the specific act of mutilation, III addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of 'mutilation' :

> 1. The perpetrator intentionally subjected the victim to mutilation, in particular by permanently disfiguring the victim, or by permanently disabling or removing an organ or appendage of the victim;
> 2. The perpetrator's conduct was neither justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the victim, nor carried out in the victim's interest.[1409]

4117. para. 725: The Trial Chamber notes that in its 'Rule 98 Decision' an additional element was given requiring that "the perpetrator's conduct caused death or seriously endangered the physical or mental health of the victim". The Prosecution submits that this additional element is superfluous and should not been retained.[1410] The Trial Chamber agrees that such a requirement is superfluous and will not retain it.

(iv) Kenema District– Physical Violence

a. Kenema Town – Physical Violence

4118. para. 1197: In light of the foregoing evidence, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that AFRC/RUF troops carried out beatings and ill-treatment of at least seven civilians who were in their custody in Kenema Town in Kenema District. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements in relation to Counts 10 and 11 are established in respect of these incidents.

4119. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bo, Kemena and Kailahun Districts, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Bo, Kenema and Kailahun Districts - paras. 1641-1650 [7991], 1842-1847 [8001], 1982-1984 [8007], 1987-1991 [8012].

(v) Kono District – Physical Violence

a. Tombodu and Kaima/Kayima – Kono District - Physical Violence

4121. para. 1213: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the question of the criminal responsibility of the Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, troops under the command of 'Savage' intentionally mutilated at least sixteen civilians by cutting off their limbs in Tombodu in Kono District, as charged under Counts 10 and 11. The Trial Chamber further finds beyond reasonable doubt that in this same period AFRC/RUF soldiers carved the letters 'AFRC' and 'RUF' on the bodies of eighteen civilians in Kayima in Kono District, as charged under Counts 10 and 11.

4122. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Kono District - paras. 1665-1668 [8017], 1856-1861 [8021], 1997-2000 [8027].

363. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Kono District - paras. 1665 [8868], 1669-1673 [8869], 1856 [8874], 1862-1893 [8875], 1997 [8907], 2001-2005 [8908].

(vi) Koinadugu District – Physical Violence

a. Kabala – Koinadugu District - Physical Violence

4123. para. 1218: By virtue of the foregoing, and leaving aside for the present the question of the criminal responsibility of the Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians by cutting off their limbs in Kabala in Koinadugu District. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements in relation to Counts 10 and 11 are established.

4125. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Koinadugu District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Koinadugu District - paras.1686 [8933], 1697-1699 [8934], 1904 [8937], 1907-1910 [8938], 2015 [8942], 2019-2024 [8943].

(vii) Bombali District – Physical Violence

a. Rosos – Bombali District – Physical Violence

4126. para. 1223: The Trial Chamber however makes no finding on this incident as the only act of mutilation particularised in the Indictment is "cutting off limbs".[2203]

4127. para. 1224: The Trial Chamber notes that a significant amount of evidence was led on mutilations in other locations in Bombali District, in particular in Karina.[2204] No findings have been made on this evidence as the locations were not pleaded in the Indictment.

4128. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Bombali District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Bombali District - paras. 1700-1720 [8064], 1911-1920 [8085], 2025-2031 [8095].

4129. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Bombali District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Bombali District - paras. 1700 [8949], 1721-1744 [8950], 1911 [8974], 1921-1928 [8975], 2025 [8983], 2032-2044 [8984].

(viii) Freetown and Western Area – Physical Violence

4130. para. 1243: In light of the foregoing evidence, and leaving aside for the present the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC fighting forces mutilated at least 237 civilians and one soldier by cutting off their limbs in various areas of Freetown and in Kissy and Wellington in the Western Area. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements in relation to Count 10 (violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutilation) and Count 11 (other inhumane acts) have been established in Freetown and the Western Area.

4131. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Freetown and Western Area - paras. 1745-1786 [8102], 1929-1941 [8144], 2045-2064 [8157].

4132. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Freetown and Western Area - paras. 1745 [8997], 1787-1810 [8998], 1929 [9022], 1942-1950 [9023], 2045 [9032], 2065-2080 [9033].

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Finding

4133. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

4134. para. 204: The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in deciding not to consider mutilations under Count 11 as well as under Count 10 because considering mutilations and beatings and ill- treatment under the same Count would have resulted in a duplicitous charge.[311] The Prosecution submits that the convictions of the accused for mutilations as a war crime fail to recognise that acts of mutilation were also crimes against humanity, as they occurred as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population.[312] The Prosecution further submits that mutilations, and acts of physical violence other than mutilation:, are not separate crimes, but are different ways of committing the war crime of violence to life, health and physical or mental wellbeing of persons, as well as the crime against humanity of "Other Inhumane Acts." Therefore, the Prosecution argues that Counts 10 and 11 were not defective If pleaded because both forms of physical violence may properly be alleged in both counts without resulting in a duplicitous charge.[313]

4135. para. 205: As discussed above, the rule against duplicity prohibits the charging of two separate offences in the same count.[314] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that Count 11 charged only the offence of "Other Inhumane Acts" as a crime against humanity, which was supported by material facts alleging mutilations as well as beatings and ill-treatment. Thus, Count l1 on its face is not duplicitous. The Appeals Chamber also notes the distinction between charging conduct and charging offences. Article 2.i is a residual category which encompasses various forms of conduct. However, it is a single offence. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that alleging multiple forms of conduct in the same count was not duplicitous because Count 11 only charged one offence, namely "Other Inhumane Acts."[315] It follows that Count 11 would not have been duplicitous had the Trial Chamber considered evidence of both mutilations and beatings and ill-treatment.

4136. para. 206: However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering mutilations only under Count 10. The Appeals Chamber notes that Count 10, which alleges "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular mutilations," is clearly supported by the paragraphs alleging mutilations, The allegations of beatings and ill-treatment could not have been used to support Count 10. The Indictment would therefore have been much clearer had the Prosecution limited the factual allegations in support of Count 10 to mutilations. Furthermore, the Prosecution's intention to rely on acts of mutilation in support of Count 11 would have been much clearer had it separated the facts supporting this Count from those supporting Count 10. Consequently, the Prosecution's combination of the material facts that support Counts 10 and 11 created a degree of ambiguity in the Indictment. In light of this ambiguity, it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to consider evidence of mutilations solely under Count 10. Thus, the Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence of mutilations under Count 11 as well as under Count 10. Ground Eight of the Prosecution's Appeal is therefore dismissed.

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Samuel Hinga Norman, Moinina Fofana, and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-03-14-I, Indictment, 4 February 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4137. Paragraph 4 through 21 is incorporated by reference.[226]

4138. These actions [para. 23: The CDF, largely Kamajors, engaged the combined RUF/AFRC forces in armed conflict in various parts of Sierra Leone - to include the towns of Tongo Field, Kenema, Bo, Koribondo and surrounding areas and the Districts of Moyamba and Bonthe.] by the CDF, largely Kamajors, which also included looting, destruction of private property, personal injury and the extorting of money from civilians, were intended to threaten and terrorize the civilian population. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. Typical CDF actions and the resulting crimes included: [Paragraphs 24.a to 24.f incorporated by reference].[227]

(ii) Counts 6-7: Terrorizing the Civilian Population and Collective Punishments

4139. At all times relevant to this Indictment, the CDP, largely Kamajors, committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 22 through 27 and charged in counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian populations of those areas and did terrorize those populations. The CDP, largely Kamajors, also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for their support to, or failure to actively resist, the combined RUFf AFRC forces.[228]

4140. Acts of physical violence and infliction of mental harm or suffering included the following:

[228] CDF Indictment, para. 28.

a. Between about 1 November 1997 and 30 April 1998, at various locations, including Tongo Field, Kenema Town, Blama, Kamboma and the surrounding areas, the CDF, largely Kamajors, intentionally inflicted serious bodily harm and serious physical suffering on an unknown number of civilians;[229]

b. Between November 1997 and December 1999, in the towns of Tongo Field, Kenema, Bo, Koribondo and surrounding areas, and the Districts of Moyamba and Bonthe, the intentional infliction of serious mental harm and serious mental suffering on an unknown number of civilians by the actions of the CDF, largely Kamajors, including screening for "Collaborators," unlawfully killing of suspected "Collaborators," often in plain view of friends and relatives, illegal arrest and unlawful imprisonment of "Collaborators", the destruction of homes and other buildings, looting and threats to unlawfully kill, destroy or loot;[230]

4141. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 3: Inhumane Acts, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 4: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.a. of Statute.

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-T, Judgement, 2 August 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Towns of Tongo Field– Crimes

4142. para. 388: One member of the group of civilians detained by Kamabote, TF2-035, knew a Kamajor Commander Named Baggey Waters in Panguma. BJK Sei allowed them to leave together. Sometime later, TF2-035and Baggey Waters settled together in Ngiehun. TF2-035 had been living there sometime when Kamabote arrived and discovered that he was a limba and had been a member of the group taken from Tongo. TF2-035 had survived the killing of the Limbas in Talama by claiming to be a Madingo. Kamabote gave a single-barrel shotgun to a 12 year old boy named "Small Hunter" and ordered him to kill TF2-035. Two Kamajors intervened on TF2-035's behalf but their efforts were unsuccessful. "Small Hunter" shot TF2-035 five times, but he managed to escape into the bush. One bullet is still in his body.

[230] CDF Indictment, para. 26(b).

4143. para. 390: There was gunfire in Tongo at the beginning of the attack and chaos created by thousands of civilians running toward the NDMC Headquarters.[685] TF2-027 saw corpses on the side of the road on the way to the headquarters. Some had visible wounds on their bodies and others did not.[686] TF2-015 was shot while running to the NDMC Headquarters, as were three women that he was running with.[687] TF2-144 saw the corpse of a man named Joskie lying on the ground; the back of his neck had been chopped at with a machete. TF2-144 also saw the corpse of an unidentified woman, but he was unable to tell whether she had wounds on her body.[688] After the attack, TF2-027 also saw Joskie Mboma's corpse on the street, as well as three other corpses. TF2-027 recognised one of the corpses as that of a Fullah boy who used to sell bread. This corpse was on its stomach and TF2-027 did not see any marks on the body.[689]

(ii) Kaliahun District – Crimes

a. Dodo Junction – Kaliahun District - Crimes

4144. para. 407: TF2-144 was among the group of people who were led by the Kamajors from NDMC Headquarters toward Dodo on 15 January 1998. In Panguma, on the way to Dodo, they were stopped by Musa Junisa's troops who checked the civilians for passes and taxes. TF2-144 witnessed the Kamajors strike a woman on the back after checking her. She was carrying a child on her back. TF2-144 does not know whether she died. The other civilians were allowed to pass but Kamajors would occasionally arrive and take civilians from the queue as they were walking to Dodo. At a checkpoint in Dodo, this same group of civilians was stopped and told to remove their passes and taxes. TF2-144 saw Kamajors hack the right hand of a man who was identified as a rebel because of the shoes he wore.

(iii) Bo District – Crimes

a. Beating of OC Bundu, OC Katta and OC Ndanema – Bo District - Crimes

4145. para. 453: On 15 February 1998, Kamajors under the leadership of Nallo, Agbamu Murray and John Ngombeh beat OC Bundu (the SSD boss) at the Bo Police Station. OC Bundu was then forcefully taken to his house in which Kamajors searched for ammunition. The Kamajors took ammunition that they found at OC Bundu's house and returned to the police station.[883] Later on the same day, TF2-001 witnessed another group of Kamajors capture OC Bundu, OC Ndanema, and OC Katta at gunpoint and beat them. OC Katta was beaten particularly harshly and he cried.[884] TF2-001 feared for his life.[885]

b. Mutilation/Personal Injury to TF2-119 – Bo District - Crimes

4146. para. 458: TF2-119 begged for his life but the Kamajors responded that they would execute him and that they would never defy Norman's orders. One Kamajor cut the back of TF2-119's neck while another shouted, "Allahu, Akbar." TF2-119's ears were partially severed. TF2-119's face and arm were cut with a machete. The Kamajors chopped at TF2-119's back, shoulders, left arm, the back of his head, and the bone of his big toe on his right foot. The Kamajors left thinking TF2-119 was dead.[892]

c. Kllings at Bo Government Hospital by Kamajors – Bo District - Crimes

4147. para. 461: On 19 February 1998,[897] while TF2-119 was at Bo Government Hospital, a group of Kamajors came and captured an unidentified man next to TF2-119's bed. The captured man said he had been shot by the juntas when pulling out of Bo. The Kamajors carried this man away because they suspected he was a junta.[888]

d. Mutilation of TF2-006 and Wounding of Five People – Bo District - Crimes

4148. para. 472: When the Kamajors entered Bo they chased, captured and chopped at people with cutlasses. TF2-006 witnessed Kamajors attack five people with knives.[915] There was a lot of gunfire and many civilians fled crying. Some civilians were killed and others suffered amputations.[916] The Kamajors hit TF2-006 with a stick and amputated the fingers on his left hand with a cutlass.[917]

e. Killing of a Limba man by Kamajors after 15 February 1998 – Bo District – Crimes

4149. para. 473: After their occupation of Bo, the Kamajors identified one man as a junta collaborator because he was a Limba. The Kamajors sang a ritual song, "Allahu, Akbar," and hacked the man to death. After killing him, the Kamajors mutilated his body.[918]

f. Torture of TF2·198 and Killing of his Brother – Bo District - Crimes

4150. para. 477: On 16 February 1998, Kamajors searched the house of TF2-198's brother and found TF2-198 and his brother. They were thrown to the ground, beaten, and tied up by Kamajors.[926] Other people who had come to Bo from Koribondo were also beaten.[927]

g. Assault on TF2-156 and Killing of his Brothers- Bo District - Crimes

4151. para. 480: Around 22 February 1998,934 a local man named Sorie was chased by Kamajors who were armed with cutlasses, knives and guns.[935] The Kamajors captured TF2-156, his two brothers, Sorie and an unidentified man. Kamajors chopped at TF2-156 with a machete and cut his foot, stomach, chest and face.[936] TF2-156's lip was split in three places; two of his teeth were knocked out and one tooth was broken.[937]

4152. para. 481: The Kamajors chopped at TF2-156's brothers with machetes and killed them.[938] Sorie and the unidentified man were also killed.[939] The Kamajors thought TF2-156 was also dead and left him lying beside the bodies of these four people.[940]

h. Arrest of TF2-06 7 and his Father – Bo District - Crimes

4153. para. 491: TF2-067 and his father were arrested and taken to Kamajor headquarters at 88 Mahei Boima Road.[955] On the way to the headquarters, the Kamajors also arrested TF2-067's uncle. TF2- 067's uncle was held at gunpoint and the Kamajors asked him if he was a Temne. TF2-067's uncle was also brought to the Kamajor headquarters.[956]

4154. para. 492: TF2-067's father and uncle were placed with other adults while TF2-067 was placed with children his own age and younger. TF2-067's father spoke in Mende to the Kamajors. The eldest Kamajor, who was the leader of a group of small boys, ordered the release ofTF2-067's father. TF2- 067's father requested the release of TF2-067 and TF2-067's uncle. The Kamajors released TF2- 067, but refused to release TF2-067's uncle because his uncle did not speak Mende. TF2-067 has not seen his uncle since.[957]

i. Killing of a Former Soldier by Kamajors at a Checkpoint – Bo District - Crimes

4155. para. 494: At the second checkpoint, Kamajors who call themselves "Black December" stopped the group with whom TF2-067 was travelling. The Kamajors questioned the leader of the group and then allowed them to pass. At the third checkpoint, the leader of the group was again questioned before the group was allowed to pass.[959]

j. Arrest and Beating of a Limba Man – Bo District - Crimes

4156. para. 495: A Limba man was arrested and taken to the Bo District Commander, Kosseh Hindwa, at the Kamajor headquarters located in 88 Mahei Boima Road.[960] The Limba man was beaten in front of Hindowa. He was beaten because it was suspected that his daughter was in love with a junta. TF2-056 spoke with Kosseh Hindowa and denied the Kamajor's suspicions. Hindowa requested 100,000 Leones for the release of the Limba man.[961] TF2-056 paid the money and the man was released. The Limba man had welts all over his body and was in pain; he died one month later.[962]

k. Arrest and Cruel Treatment of Two Limba Men – Bo District - Crimes

4157. para. 496: Two Limba men were arrested by Kamajors who forced the captives to remove their clothing, tied them with FM Rope. The Kamajors planned to put pepper on the prisoner's genitals. TF2-056 offered Moses Sandy, a Kamajor commander from Koribondo, 110,000 leones for the release of the two men. Moses Sandy accepted the money and demanded 15 bushels of rice. TF2-056 convinced Moses Sandy to accept 10 bushels of rice. The two limba men were held for two days and were released on the third day.[963]

l. Arrest and Cruel Treatment of a Limba Man – Bo District - Crimes

4158. para. 497: A Limba man accused of being a junta was arrested, undressed, and beaten by the Kamajors. They forced the man to roll on the ground a distance of 10 metres and then a Kamajor hit him with a gun. TF2-056 witnessed the incident, requested the assistance of ECOMOG and paid 300,000 leones to the Kamajor Abu Tawa to secure the release of the Limba man and the return of everything that had been seized by the Kamajors from the Limba Man's house. Abu Tawa had requested 400,000 leones but TF2-056 asked him to accept 300,000 leones.

m. Arrest and Beating of a Woman- Bo District - Crimes

4159. para. 498: A Mende woman who was accused of being a cook for a rebel named Mosquito was captured by a Kamajor commander named Moses Sandy.[965] She was held by ECOMOG at their headquarters and was beaten everyday. TF2-056 paid 100,000 leones to the Kamajors to secure the woman's release. Upon determining that the woman was not a cook for the Mosquito, the ECOMOG commander released the woman to TF2-056.

n. Killing of TF2-058's Husband – Bo District – Crimes

4160. para. 500: TF2-058 left Bo for two months and returned in early July. She learned that her husband's body had been taken to Gbetema and had been eaten by Kamajors.[968]

o. Harassment of TF2-156- Bo District - Crimes

4161. para. 502: In order to go to the hospital to receive regular medical treatment, TF2-156 had to pass a checkpoint manned by Kamajors. Each time he passed through the checkpoint, the Kamajors would attack, capture, arrest or harass him. On one occasion, the Kamajors arrested him and held him captive for a short time. They called him a junta and said that the next time they captured him they would eat him.[971]

p. Mistreatment of TF2·119 at the Brigade Junction on the Bo·Freetown Road – Bo District - Crimes

4163. para. 504: Meanwhile, TF2-119's brother was taken to a booth and accused of being a collaborator. About 30 Kamajors surrounded TF2-119 and threatened to kill him. The Kamajors dragged, pulled, and shoved TF2-119. He fell to the ground, crying. TF2-119's plasters were removed. One Kamajor asked for a weapon to be brought to him and another an AK-47. TF2-119 was dragged to an open pit behind the booth in which there lay naked male bodies. One Kamajor tried to push TF2-119 into the pit but TF2-119 held onto the Kamajor trousers and shouted. TF2-119 was rescued from this ordeal by an ECOMOG soldier TF2-119 does not know if the Kamajors accepted the ECOMOG dealing with the situation but they had to accept it because by then ECOMOG were their superiors.

q. Crimes in Mongere and Gumahun Areas – Bo District – Crimes

4164. para. 515: On 29 November 1997, TF2-088 sent his son and three of his nephews to retrieve his gun so that he could give it to the Kamajors.[995] Later that day, TF2-088 saw his gun in the hands of Kamajors at the court Barri.[996] Those present included the battalion commanders Alhaji hassan Sheriff, Sundifu Samuka, and Joseph Kulagbanda. Gibril Mansaray, the Kamajor secretary, was also present. James Bundu, the Chief Kamajor, refused to return TF2-088's gun and threatened to kill all the people who had gone to collect it.[997] James Bundu said that anyone who did not join the Kamajors would be considered a rebel.[998]

r. Mistreatment of TF2-088 at the Court Barri in Gumahun – Bo District – Crimes

4165. para. 520: On the evening of 30 November 1997, at the Gumahun court barri, James Bundu asked TF2-088 whether he had called the Kamajors cannibals. When TF2-088 admitted he had done so,[1008] Joseph Kulagbanda, Sundifu Samuka and John Rainbo placed him flat on the ground. He was stripped naked while his hands were tied behind his back with FM rope brought by Gibril Mansaray. A mixture of charcoal powder with clay, ash and water brought by James Bundu was put all over TF2-088's body and his genitals were rubbed with pepper.[1009]

4166. para. 521: James Bundu stepped on TF2-088's stomach and took 41,000 leones that TF2-088 had in his shirt.[1010] James Bundu accused TF2-088 of being a thief and then each of his 13 commanders lashed TF2-088 10 times. TF2-088 was released when his wife's sister paid 5000 leones, which the Kamajors requested for his release.[1011]

s. Killing of TF2-088's Son – Bo District - Crimes

4167. para. 524: TF2-088 later learned that the ash from his son's corpse was used to perform the last initiation in Mongere Town in Norman's compound. After this initiation the Kamajors went to TF2-088's home and beat his children and several Limba people staying at his house. The Kamajors demanded food and took all TF2-088's property 250,000 leones of his money, and burnt down one of his houses.

t. Crimes Committed in Fengehun – Bo District - Crimes

4168. para. 531: During the dry season of 1998, five Kamajors arrested TF2-007 and took him to the compound where they held his father captive. TF2-007 saw his father tied with a rope around his waist. Part of his father's right ear had been cut off. TF2-007's father was surrounded by approximately 10 Kamajors who were dancing.[1029]

(iv) Bonthe District – Crimes

a. Case of Lahai Koroma/Actions by Kondewa – Bonthe District - Crimes

4169. para. 552: On 15 February, Kamajors looked for Lahai Ndokoi Koroma, a Chiefdom Speaker, in the Catholic mission,[1073] who was accused of being a junta collaborator.[1074] They threatened to kill everyone if Lahai Ndokoi Koroma was not produced.[1075] He was captured by Kamajors, stripped naked and tied.[l076] Three delegations came from Base Zero, Talia, to investigate the matrer. The first delegation was led by Imam Fuad; the second was led by Commander Vanjawai acting under instructions of Kondewa.[1077] The first delegation told the people of Bonthe that their fate depended on Kondewa and asked to be paid 400,000 leones.[1078] Both delegations asked Father Garrick to pay for those who had a relationship with soldiers; they threatened that if he did not pay they would kill those people.[1079]

(v) Kenema District

a. Mistreatment of and Threats to Kill TF2-041; Killing of Sergeant Fosana – Kenema District – Blama - Crimes

4170. para. 577: Kamajors fired into the air as they entered police barracks in Blama. TF2-021 was frightened, so he went and hid in the bush outside town.[1139] That evening, Kamajors searched the bush and found TF2-041. They brought him to a Kamajor Co at Koribondo road who became angry and hit TF2-041 in the face with a stick, breaking one of his teeth.[1140]

4171. para. 578: Kamajors then took TF2-041 and Sergeant Fosana to Alhaji Medama, the Ground Commander in Blama.[1141] On the way there, Kamajors beat TF2-041 and told him that Norman had instructed that police should be killed.[1142]

4172. para. 580: After some time, TF2-041 woke up and returned to the bush to hide.1146 Over the course of a week, he walked 12 miles to a village with a hospital.[1147] Some Kamajors in the village threatened to kill TF2-041 but the town Chief intervened on his behalf.[1148] TF2-041 was taken to Blama for treatment, on the way there, the Kamajors escorting him again threatened to kill him but TF2-041 begged for his life and was spared.[1149]

b. Arrest and Mistreatment of TF2-151; Killing of Alleged Junta – Kenema District - Crimes

4173. para. 603: TF2-151 was taken to Mr. Fefegula's office inside the CDF Headquarters.[1216] He was stripped naked and was accused of being a junta.[1217] Though he denied the allegations the Kamajors continued to beat him.[1218] One Pa came and asked the Kamajors not to kill TF2-151; he was then released.[1219]

c. Second Arrest and Further Mistreatment of TF2-151 – Kenema District - Crimes

4174. para. 608: In December 1998, a Kamajor came into TF2-151's shop and asked him to come along with him and Mr. Fefegula. They drove to a shop where spare parts were sold. Brima Kpaka came out of the shop and accused TF2-151 of being a junta. TF2-151 was taken to the CDF office at Kaisamba Terrace. The Kamajors beat him and put him in a cell. The following day, Mr. Fefegula and Brima Kpaka questioned TF2-151 and threatened to kill him if he lied. TF2-151 was accused of being a junta. His hands were tied behind his back with FM rope and he was beaten by Kamajors. Hours later, when Mr. Fefegula instructed that he should be released, TF2-151 was in a great deal of pain. He was unable to use his hands for seven months. His wife had to clean him when he went to the toilet.

4175. para. 609: Two or three days after he was released, TF2-151 was re-arrested by KBK Magonna and was taken back to the CDF office. At the CDF office, KBK Magonna ordered that TF2-151's radio, money, jeans, and sandals be taken from him. KBK Magonna ordered some Kamajors to beat TF2-151 and told him that he would come kill him later. TF2-151 was put in a cell and remained there for some hours.

(vi) Talia/Base Zero – Crimes

a. Capture and Beating of TF2-134 by Kamajors - Talia/Base Zero

4176. para. 619: TF2-134 was captured by Kamaj rs in a village near Bonthe and forcefully brought to Talia.[1259] The Kamajors were armed with cutlasses and machetes. After two separate unsuccessful attempts to escape,[1260] she was tied with rope and beaten until she vomited blood.[1261] TF2-134 was then kept in a guardroom until sometime later in the day when a Kamajor came and ordered her to leave. [1262]

b. Capture of TF1 -109 and Looting – Talia/Base Zero

4177. para. 621: TF2-109 was captured by Kamajors along with other women and three men in her village of Mattru Jong and was taken to Talia. A Kamajor named Komoh Bonnie told TF2-109 that they were taking her to Talia to save her from the rebels. The Kamajors also took their property, including furniture, household items, and clothing.[1266] TF2-109 was held in Talia for three days. During that time she met TF2-108.[1267]

c. Treatment of Collaborators – Talia/Base Zero - Crimes

i. Detention of TF2-096's Friend by Kondewa – Talia/Base Zero - Crimes

4178. para. 631: Kondewa's bodyguards Kafi Jini, Jahman,1292 Junisa and Bokindeh came to Talia to buy cassava from TF2-096. They said that TF2-096's friend, who was also selling cassava, was a rebel.[1293] Jahman reported TF2-096's friend to Kondewa and later that day Kamajors arrested TF2-096's friend and took her to Nyandehun. She was held in a cage and was not released until 40,000 leones were paid to Kondewa.[1294]

(vii) Moyamba District - Crimes

a. Bradford – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Third Arrival at Bradford on 23 March 1998 – Bradford – Moyamba District - Crimes

4179. para. 659: TF2-167's son Ibrahim was shot in the dead by Kamajors while he was trying to escape. TF2-167 found Ibrahim alive and although his son survived, he no longer behaves normally all the time. During this attack, Kamajors looted from TF2-167.[1403]

ii. Fourth Arrival at Bradford of the Kamajors on 25 March 1998 – Bradford – Moyamba District - Crimes

4180. para. 660: On 25 March 1998, Kamajors under the command of Obai returned to Bradford and again fired at civilians. TF2-168's wife ran into the thick bush but was caught by the Kamajors. TF2-168 saw the Kamajors approaching his wife. A Kamajor commander named

Kakpata asked TF2-168's wife to give him some money which she had wrapped around her waist. TF2-168's wife said that the money was something that she was afraid to lose and gave the Kamajors the money which was 1,600,000 leones.[1404] Afterwards Kakpata said to the other Kamajors: "Don't you want to shoot that woman?" The Kamajors shot TF2-168's wife and she fell down slowly.[1405] A six year old child was also present when TF2-168's wife was shot.[1406]

4181. para. 662: The Kamajors arrested TF2-173, his friends, and other people and held them at gunpoint.[1410] TF2-173 was lying on the ground. When he tried to raise his head he was shot in his right arm. The Kamajors had gone wild and were firing indiscriminately. Kamajors chased TF2-173 and two other people called out for him; TF2-173 and others ran and hid in the bush.[1411]

iii. Capture and Murder of One Civilian near Makabi Loko in Tune 1998 – Bradford – Moyamba District - Crimes

4182. para. 663: One day in June 1998 at about 4:00am,[1412] the Vondos[1413] came to Makabi Loko from various villages.[1414] They started firing indiscriminately in the village and TF2-170 ran away. No bullets hit him but TF2-170 fell down and was captured.[1415] A member of the CDF hit TF2-170 in the back with his gun. They took him to their Patrol Commander Kakpata.[1416] TF2-170 discovered that four of his relatives were also captives:[1417] Pa Jibo, Pa Serry Bangura, Pa Santigie Salami and Aluseini Kabbah.[1418] Kakpata said that Aluseini Kabbah had been captured for the second time and that he had failed to show the Vondos where the Gbethis were despite a promise to do so. For this reason, Kakpata stated he would kill Aluseini Kabbah and leave him there.[1419]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

4183. See above: Chapter 1 – CDF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – paras. 122 – 137 [1115].

(ii) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 - Findings on general requirements

4184. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 695 – 697 [1131].

4185. para. 154: The Indictment charges the Accused under Count 4 with cruel treatment as a serious violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(a) of the Statute. Under this Count, the Accused are charged with "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment". The Chamber has analysed this offence as cruel treatment, since the category of "violence to life and person" does not exist as an independent offence in customary international law.[196]

4186. para. 155: The Chamber endorses the jurisprudence of the ICTY in which cruel treatment, punishable under Article 3 of the ICTY Statute as a violation of the laws or customs of war, including violations of Common Article 3 and other inhumane acts, punishable under Article 5 of the ICTY Statute as a Crime against Humanity, were said to require proof of the same elements.[197] Thus, the Chamber concludes that elements of the offence of cruel treatment as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II are the same as of other inhumane acts as a Crime against Humanity, except that the victim of cruel treatment must be a person not taking direct part in the hostilities,[198] and the Accused must have known or had reason to know that the victim was a person not taking direct part in the hostilities.

> (iii) The Accused intended to cause serious mental or physical suffering or injury or a serious attack on human dignity or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this would likely occur.[200]

(iv) Tongo Field – Physical Violence

> 1. On 14 January 1998, at the NDMC Headquarters in Tongo, a Kamajor hacked at three people with a cutlass;

2. On 15 January 1998, at a checkpoint in Dodo, Kamajors hacked the hand of a man they thought was a rebel;

3. Shortly after the third attack on Tongo, a group of 65 civilians was separated into two lines at Kamboma; One man was hacked in the neck with a machete but survived;

4. Some time after escaping a checkpoint at Panguma, Kamabote found TF2-035 in Ngiehun; On discovering that TF2-035 was a Limba, Kamabote ordered a child soldier named "Small Hunter" to kill TF2-035; Small Hunter shot TF2-035 five times; one bullet is still in his body;

4189. para. 757: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i)-(iv) and concludes that all these acts were committed by Kamajors. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all the evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each acts described in paragraph 756 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict o to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 756, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time that the acts described above occurred and, furthermore, that the perpetrators knew that they were not taking an active part in hostilities.

4191. para. 763: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for aiding and abetting in the preparation of the crimes committed in the towns of Tongo Field as found under Counts 2, 4, and 7 above.

4192. para. 764: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for aiding and abetting in the preparation of the crimes committed in the towns of Tongo Field as found under Counts 2, 4, and 7 above.

(v) Koribondo – Physical Violence

4193. para. 791: As set out above in the Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 4, Cruel Treatment:

1. On 13 February 1998, TF2-032's nine room house in Koribondo was set on fire by Kamajors. TF2-032 testified that he is still suffering from the loss; his children are scattered, and despite his advanced age he currently sleeps in a kitchen;

2. Between 13 and 15 February 1998, after the capture of Koribondo, Kamajors went on a rampage and burned 25 houses. People felt helpless, discouraged and feared for their lives.

4194. para. 792: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (ii) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were Kamajors under the effective control of Fofana. We find that individuals were intentionally killed; in the majority of cases they were specifically targeted because of the perpetrator's belief that they were collaborators or rebels. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 791 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 791, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

4195. para. 793: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that both the general requirements of war crimes and the specific requirements of cruel treatment have been established with respect to the burning of TF2-032's house described in paragraph 791(i) and the burning of many houses, described in 791(ii).

4197. para. 799: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond a reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either article 6(1) or 6(3) for any criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Koribondo during the time frame charged in the Indictment.

(vi) Bo District – Physical Violence

a. Responsibility of Fofana – Bo District – Physical Violence

4198. para. 835: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 4, Cruel treatment:

1. On 15 February 1998 OC Bundu was detained and beaten by Kamajors under the leadership of Nallo, Agbamu Murray and John Ngombeh;

2. On 16 February 1998, in Kandeyama, TF2-001 and other police were separated from other civilians on the order of the Kamajor leaders including Agbamu Murray. The police were arrested;

4199. para. 836: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (ii) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were Kamajors under the effective control of Fofana. The Chamber finds that OC Bundu and TF2-001 were targeted by the Kamajors because of their status as police officers, a group that was considered by the Kamajors to have collaborated with the juntas. Furthermore, the incidents described above occurred on the day the Kamajors entered Bo or the following day. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 835 was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 835, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

4200. para. 837: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established with respect to each incident described in paragraph 835.

4201. para. 846: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible as a superior, pursuant to Article 6(3) for the crimes committed in Bo District as found under Counts 2, 4, 5, and 7.

b. Kondewa

(vii) Bonthe District – Physical Violence

a. Fofana

4203. para. 863: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Bonthe District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

b. Kondewa

4204. para. 890: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 4, cruel treatment:

a. On 15 February 1998, Kamajors captured Lahai Ndokoi Koroma. He was stripped naked and and tied. Three delegations came from Talia to investigate the matter;

b. On 16 February 1998, at a meeting at St. Patrick's Parish Compound in Bonthe Town, Julius Squire announced that the Kamajors were looking for three collaborators. At the same meeting, TF2-116 was singled out and his life was threatened because of alleged collaboration with the juntas;

c. At the same meeting, a boy named Bendeh Battiama was singled out and accused of being junta. He was later killed by Rambo Conteh;

d. In early March 1998, TF2-086 was detained by Kamajors including Baigeh, along the road between Sebongie and Bonthe. The Kamajors threatened her life saying, "Look how dead you are."

sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 889, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time they were killed and, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

4206. para. 892: The Chamber finds that in light of the circumstances under which these events occurred, it is a reasonable inference that the screening for collaboration experienced by Lahai Ndokoi Koroma, TF2-116, Bendeh Battiama, and TF2-086 caused serious mental suffering, particularly in the case of TF2-116 and TF2-086 whose lives were threatened at the same time.

4207. para. 893: The findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established and the specific elements of cruel treatment have been established with respect to each incident described in paragraph 889 (ii)-(v).

4208. para. 894: By contrast, the Chamber finds that the specific elements of the crime of cruel treatment have not been established with respect to 889 (i), as it has not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that those people whose homes were burnt endured serious mental suffering or injury.

(viii) Kenema District – Physical Violence

a. Fofana

4209. para. 911: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Kenema District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

b. Kondewa

4210. para. 918: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Kenema District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

(ix) Talia/Base Zero – Physical Violence

4211. para. 929: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, (including through Joint criminal enterprise) or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning preparation or execution of any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Talia/Base Zero during the time frame charged.

4212. para. 930: Likewise, the Chamber concludes that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) as a superior for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Talia/Base Zero during the time frame charged.

(i) Tongo Town – Physical Violence

a. Fofana

4215. para. 54: The Prosecution argues that because the actus reus of aiding and abetting is satisfied, the actus reus is also satisfied for instigating. However, the Trial Chamber found, relying on ICTY Appeals Chamber jurisprudence, that unlike the actus reus of instigating, the actus reus of aiding and abetting does not require a causal link between the act of aiding and abetting and the commission of the crime. The Appeals Chamber holds that the actus reus of instigating requires a causal link which aiding and abetting does not and accordingly disagrees with the Prosecution's proposition.

4216. para. 55: Fofana's speech at the First Passing Out Parade at Base Zero was removed both temporally and geographically from the unlawful acts committed by the Kamajors in Tongo Town in January 1998. This alone would not be enough to deny a causal link between the speech and the crimes alleged. However, in this case the Appeals Chamber is of the view that there is insufficient evidence to show how Fofana's words influenced the perpetration of crimes which took place at a significantly different place and time. Fofana's speech may have substantially contributed to the military effort, but not to the crimes as such. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber was not in error in finding that Fofana's speech did not have a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crimes or that a causal relationship did not exist and that the actus reus for instigating was, consequently, not satisfied.

4217. para. 56: With regard to the mens rea required for "instigating," the Prosecution submits that Fofana's intent or knowledge that crimes would likely be committed may be inferred from his substantial contribution to the planning, which was done with knowledge of the crimes which Norman had ordered in the execution of the plan. Fofana's words "[n]ow you've heard the National Coordinator [. . .] any commander failing to perform accordingly and losing your own ground, just decide to kill yourself there and don't come to report to us" are ambiguous and may be interpreted not as approving Norman's unlawful orders, but rather as an appeal to each of the commanders to fight hard and not loose his ground. Further, Fofana's call "to destroy the soldiers finally from where they were [. . .] settled" was directed at the military campaign and does not include any incitement to perpetrate unlawful acts. This leads the Appeals Chamber to conclude that there were other possible interpretations of the evidence than the one suggested by the Prosecution. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that Fofana did not have the requisite mens rea.

4218. para. 57: Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in failing to convict Fofana for instigating the commission of crimes in Tongo Town. The Prosecution's Fourth Ground of Appeal, therefore, fails in this respect.

4219. para. 61: Regarding the requisite actus reus, given the absence of factual findings by the Trial Chamber concerning the nature of Fofana's participation in the commanders' meetings in December 1997, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to conclude that evidence of Fofana's presence did not by itself amount to planning. Although Fofana participated in these commanders' meetings and held a position of responsibility as Director of War, it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to conclude that this evidence alone did not prove beyond reasonable doubt that he participated in the planning of the criminal conduct which took place in Tongo Town.

4220. para. 62: Regarding the requisite mens rea, the Trial Chamber found that Fofana participated in the commanders' meetings. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the findings did not indicate that he participated at those meetings in the planning of unlawful acts rather than in the successful completion of military operations.

4221. para. 63: The Appeals Chamber therefore, concludes that the evidence did not disclose beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana possessed the requisite mens rea for planning violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute, violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute as well as collective punishments, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute.

4222. para. 64: The Appeals Chamber finds that in this respect, the Prosecution's Fourth Ground of Appeal must fail.

b. Kondewa

4223. para. 70: Kondewa submits that the Trial Chamber committed an error of law. However, he states that he agrees with the legal requirements of aiding and abetting found by the Trial Chamber. Further, he agrees that the applicable standard for actus reus is that of "substantial effect." His challenge is therefore not directed at the legal standard as such but rather at the Trial Chamber's application of the facts. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, is of the view that Kondewa raises an error of fact rather than law, and his arguments will be considered in this context.

4224. para. 71: Although not specifically raised in this appeal, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that it is necessary to determine whether, as a matter of law, words of encouragement and support may have a "substantial effect" even though they were spoken at a time and place that are temporally and geographically removed from the commission of the crimes. The Trial Chamber held that the actus reus of aiding and abetting may occur before, during, or after the perpetration of the crime and at a location geographically removed from the place where the crime is committed, if the act of the aider and abetter has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. In this regard, the Trial Chamber relied on the ICTY Appeals Chamber decision in Blaškić which found that the acts of aiding and abetting "may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated, and that the location at which the actus reus takes place may be removed from the location of the principal crime." Further, it is recognized in the jurisprudence of other ad hoc Tribunals that "encouragement" and "moral support" are two forms of conduct which may lead to criminal responsibility for aiding and abetting a crime.

4225. para. 72: The Appeals Chamber agrees that "encouragement" and "moral support" may constitute the actus reus and that acts of aiding and abetting can be made at a time and place removed from the actual crime.

4226. para. 73: In regard to the actus reus for aiding and abetting, the Trial Chamber found that Kondewa's speech at the First Passing Out Parade had a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crimes in Tongo. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that at the First Passing Out Parade Norman instructed the Kamajors "to kill captured enemy combatants and 'collaborators' to inflict physical suffering or injury upon them and to destroy their houses" After Norman and Fofana spoke "all the fighters looked at Kondewa, admiring him as a man with mystic powers, and he made the last comment saying that the time for surrender of the rebels had long been exhausted and that they did not need any surrendered rebels." The Trial Chamber then found that in uttering these words Kondewa effectively supported Norman's instructions and encouraged the Kamajors to execute Norman's unlawful orders. The Trial Chamber also noted that no fighter would go to war without Kondewa's blessing because they believed that Kondewa transferred his mystical powers to commit such acts.

4227. para. 75: Even though the First Passing Out Parade in December 1997 was temporally and geographically removed from the second and third attacks on Tongo Town, the Appeals Chamber observes that one of the purposes of the Passing Out Parade was for Norman to give instructions to the Kamajors for the second and third attacks on Tongo Town, not just instructions concerning unlawful acts. For this reason temporal and geographic remoteness is not of significance to the question of whether Kondewa's speech substantially contributed to the perpetration of the crimes. Thus, in the light of all the circumstances of this case, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the only inference available on the evidence was that through his blessings and speech at the First Passing Out Parade Kondewa substantially contributed to the perpetration of the crimes in Tongo Town.

4228. para. 76: Regarding the requisite mens rea, the Appeals Chamber agrees with Kondewa that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on the fact that he had received the report to Base Zero of the Kamajors' previous crimes in Tongo. On the contrary, the Trial Chamber found that

Norman and Fofana received this report, not Kondewa. Thus, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in relying on this report.

4229. para. 78: On these findings the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Kondewa by his words of encouragement aided and abetted the commission of criminal acts ordered by Norman in Tongo.

4230. para. 79: The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes, Justice King dissenting, that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding Kondewa responsible for aiding and abetting the commission of crimes in Tongo Town. The Appeals Chamber accordingly finds, Justice King dissenting, that Kondewa's Fourth Ground of Appeal must fail and upholds his conviction in relation to violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4, respectively).

4231. para. 85: In this case, in order to show a causal link between Kondewa's speech and the crimes committed in Tongo Town, the Prosecution must lead evidence to show that the Kamajors who were present at the First Passing Out Parade at which Kondewa's speech was made were the same Kamajors who subsequently committed the crimes in Tongo Town. There was no such evidence before the Trial Chamber. For this reason the Appeals Chamber finds that "instigation" for the crimes charged in Tongo Town was not proved.

4232. para. 86: Consequently, the Prosecution's Fourth Ground of Appeal fails in this respect.

(ii) Koribondo, Bo District, and Kenema District – Physical Violence

a. Fofana

4233. para. 97: Given the absence of factual findings by the Trial Chamber concerning the nature of Fofana's participation in the January 1998 commanders' meetings, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to conclude that evidence of Fofana's presence at these meetings does not amount to planning.[231] Although Fofana attended these meetings and held a position of responsibility as Director of War, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that this evidence alone does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana designed the criminal conduct which took place in Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District, or that his involvement in the planning process substantially contributed to the criminal conduct which occurred. Furthermore, despite the Trial Chamber's finding that Fofana provided commanders with arms, ammunition and a vehicle which were used by the Kamajors during their attack on Kebi Town, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was open to the Trial Chamber to conclude that Fofana's provision of logistics for attacks in Bo District did not substantially contribute to the commission of criminal acts in Bo District.

4236. para. 102: Furthermore, although Fofana was present at the January 1998 commanders' meeting the Trial Chamber did not make any factual findings as to the nature of Fofana's participation during these meetings. The Appeals Chamber opines that Fofana's mere presence at these meetings did not amount to aiding and abetting the criminal conduct which took place in Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District. Furthermore, in regard to the Trial Chamber's finding that Fofana provided commanders with arms, ammunition and a vehicle prior to their attack on Kebi Town, the Appeals Chamber holds that Fofana's provision of logistics is not sufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that he contributed as an aider and abetter to the commission of specific criminal acts in Bo District.

4237. para. 103: Thus, The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber was correct in finding Fofana not liable for aiding and abetting the commission of crimes in Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District. Consequently, the Prosecution's Third and Fourth Grounds of Appeal must fail.

b. Kondewa

4238. para. 109: The Trial Chamber found that Kondewa's speech at the Second Passing Out Parade did not amount to urging, encouraging or prompting the Kamajors to commit criminal acts.[232] In addition, there was an absence of a finding by the Trial Chamber concerning the nature of Kondewa's participation in the January 1998 commanders' meetings at which Norman gave orders for the commission of unlawful acts during the "all-out offensive." The fact that Kondewa held a position of responsibility as High Priest and that he spoke at the Second Passing Out Parade and attended Commanders' meetings is not sufficient to conclude that this evidence alone does prove beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa encouraged or supported the criminal conduct which took place in Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District.

4239. para. 110: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the findings of the Trial Chamber that giving "words of moral support and encouragement to the Kamajor fighters who were about to conduct military operations on the junta-held territories"[233] or blessings, as well as providing medicine which the Kamajors believed would protect them against the bullets does not constitute aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of the criminal acts in Bo District.

4240. para. 111: The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber was correct in finding Kondewa not liable for aiding and abetting the commission of crimes in Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District. Consequently, the Prosecution's Third and Fourth Grounds of Appeal fail in this respect.

(iii) Bonthe District – Physical Violence

a. Kondewa

4241. para. 171: Kondewa alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in both law and fact in finding that he was responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) for the crimes committed in Bonthe District. It is evident, however, from the submissions that he does not challenge the Trial Chamber's articulation of the legal requirements for the establishment of superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute. Kondewa, therefore, does not allege an error of law, but is instead concerned with the way in which the Trial Chamber applied the law to the particular facts of his case. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that this submission, in essence, questions the inferences drawn from facts found by the Trial Chamber and is therefore factual in nature. Kondewa must therefore satisfy the standard of review for alleged errors of fact.

4242. para. 172: Kondewa's arguments concern the Trial Chamber's application of the effective control test in determining a superior-subordinate relationship between him and the perpetrators of certain criminal acts during the attack on Bonthe. Even though Kondewa disputes the totality of the Trial Chamber's findings regarding his role as a superior, he does not proffer any argument in support of other aspects of his ground of appeal. Kondewa's arguments are specifically limited to the finding of the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship. Although Kondewa challenges the finding that he had both the legal and material ability to prevent the commission of criminal acts by his subordinate Morie Jusu Kamara and other subordinates and to punish them for those crimes, the Trial Chamber's finding that he knew or had reason to know that certain crimes were being committed or that he failed to prevent their commission or to punish the alleged perpetrators was not challenged as such.

4243. para. 173: In order for the Appeals Chamber to assess a party's arguments on appeal, the party must set out its grounds of appeal clearly, logically and exhaustively and must support allegations of error with precise references to the trial judgment or other material that supports his appeal. The Appeals Chamber will not consider submissions which are obscure, contradictory, vague or suffer from formal or other deficiencies. The Appeals Chamber will, therefore, only consider the Trial Chamber's application of the effective control test, and determine whether based on the findings of fact, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that a superior subordinate relationship existed between Kondewa and these Kamajors.

4244. para. 175: As has been noted, the position taken by the Prosecution is that there is no distinction between the legal standards required for proof of a superior-subordinate relationship in the case of "civilian" as opposed to "military" superior. The Appeals Chamber holds that the test for establishing the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship is effective control for both military and civilian superiors.

determined that [his] status as High Priest gave him any higher degree of authority in Bonthe." The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber indeed found that Kondewa's status as High Priest did not amount to effective control over the Kamajors.

4247. para. 179: The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the Trial Chamber did not base its findings on the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship for Bonthe District on Kondewa's de jure position as High Priest alone. In addition to Kondewa's de jure status, the Trial Chamber relied on his de facto status as a superior to his alleged subordinates, as disclosed by evidence of his actual exercise of effective control over Kamajors who committed crimes in Bonthe District. Although his position as High Priest was one of several factors considered by the Trial Chamber in determining the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that this is not a material factor in view of the overwhelming evidence of his actual exercise of effective control. Such include evidence of the relationship with his alleged subordinates in Bonthe, including an incident occurring in August 1997, events occurring during the 15 February 1998 attack on Bonthe, and a reaction to a letter sent from the Attorney-General to Kamajors in Bonthe in March 1998.

4248. para. 181: The Appeals Chamber concurs that effective control must be established at the time of commission of the alleged crimes. The Appeals Chamber is of the view, however, that even though an accused cannot be convicted for criminal acts falling outside the period of the Indictment, evidence of matters occurring outside the timeframe of the Indictment may be taken into account where relevant and probative of the accused's responsibility as a superior. The evidence was relied upon by the Trial Chamber to establish that at a time before the commission of the crimes, Kondewa had effective control and that he had authority and power to issue oral and written directives to the Kamajors in the area. He had the power to order investigations for misconduct, and to hold court hearings and to threaten the imposition of sanctions of "a terrible death" on the Kamajors if they lied to him. The evidence also establishes Kondewa's pre-existing relationship with Squire.

4250. para. 186: The Trial Chamber's findings on the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship in each location was based on the totality of the evidence in the case with regard to such location. In the case of Bonthe, Kondewa's position as High Priest, which gave him a certain status, was just one of several factors considered by the Trial Chamber. The Trial Chamber also found that Kondewa had authority and power to issue oral and written directives; that he could order investigations for misconduct and hold court hearings; and that he had the legal and material ability to issue orders to Kamara. Furthermore, Kondewa himself acknowledged his authority and control over Bonthe by stating publicly that he refused "to give any areas under his control to a military government but to the democratically elected Government of President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah.

4251. para. 187: The Appeals Chamber finds that it was open to a reasonable trier of fact, based on all the evidence adduced, to conclude that Kondewa's de facto status as superior resulted in the exercise of effective control over the Kamajors who committed crimes in Bonthe. The fact that the Trial Chamber found that Kondewa did not exercise the same degree of control over Kamajors in other locations does not render the Trial Chamber's findings in relation to Bonthe inconsistent or illogical.

4252. para. 188: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Kondewa has failed to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion that a superior-subordinate relationship existed between him and his alleged subordinates in Bonthe District.

(iv) Pleading

a. Liability for Collective Punishments As Cruel Treatment

i. Kondewa

4254. para. 224: The Appeals Chamber finds that the correct definition of collective punishments is:

a. the indiscriminate punishment imposed collectively on persons for omissions or acts for which some or none of them may or may not have been responsible;

b. the specific intent of the perpetrator to punish collectively.

4255. para. 225: In light of the above definition of collective punishments, it is the view of the Appeals Chamber that convictions are permissible for collective punishments, in addition to murder, cruel treatment and pillage. The crime of collective punishments requires proof of an intention to punish collectively, which murder, pillage and cruel treatment do not. In addition, murder requires the death of the victim, which collective punishments does not and pillage requires proof of appropriation which the crime of collective punishments does not. Finally, cruel treatment requires proof of serious mental or physical suffering or injury, which collective punishments does not. Thus, because each of these crimes requires proof of materially distinct elements, cumulative convictions are permissible in this instance.

4256. para. 226: Despite our finding that the Trial Chamber did not err in determining that cumulative convictions are permissible for the crime of collective punishments in addition to murder, cruel treatment and pillage, the Appeals Chamber must, nonetheless, re-examine the Trial Chamber's factual findings on collective punishments in light of the Appeals Chamber's definition of the elements of this crime.

4257. para. 227: In relation to the commission of murder and cruel treatment in Tongo, the Trial Chamber found both Fofana and Kondewa liable pursuant to Article 6(1) for aiding and abetting in the preparation of the commission of collective punishments under Count 7. In relation to the commission of murder and cruel treatment in Koribondo, the Trial Chamber found Fofana liable as a superior, pursuant to Article 6(3), for the commission of collective punishments under Count 7. In relation to the commission of murder, cruel treatment and pillage in Bo District, the Trial Chamber found Fofana liable as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3), for the commission of collective punishments under Count 7. Finally, in relation to the commission of murder, cruel treatment and pillage in Bonthe District, the Trial Chamber found Kondewa liable as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3), for the commission of collective punishments under Count 7.

4258. para. 228: The Trial Chamber relied on numerous factual findings concerning murder, cruel treatment and pillage to support its convictions of Fofana and Kondewa for the commission of collective punishments in the various locations mentioned above. The Appeals Chamber's examination of these findings reveals that the victims of murder, cruel treatment and pillage were being targeted in these places because of their identities or their locations at the time of the Kamajors' attacks. In particular, the Kamajors targeted individuals who were identified or accused of being rebels and collaborators, or who were related to rebels. In addition, the Kamajors targeted Loko, Limba and Temne tribe members, policemen and civilians in close proximity to the National Diamond Mining Company (NDMC) Headquarters in Tongo. Finally, many other civilians appear to have been targets of murder, cruel treatment and pillage merely by chance, due to the indiscriminate nature of the attacks on these locations. Thus, the Trial Chamber's factual findings indicate that the individuals who came under attack in Tongo, Koribondo, Bo District and Bonthe District were being targeted due to their perceived identities, their locations, or by sheer chance.

4259. para. 229: The Trial Chamber's factual findings do not, however, indicate that these individuals were objects of attack because of perceived acts or omissions for which the Kamajors sought to punish them.

4260. para. 230: The Appeals Chamber holds that Trial Chamber's factual findings do not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators of these crimes were attacking protected persons in these areas with the intent to collectively punish them for their perceived acts or omissions. In the result, the Appeals Chamber finds that the requisite mens rea for collective punishments, which represents the key distinction between targeting and collectively punishing, has not been satisfied. Given that the mens rea requirement for collective punishments has not been met, the Appeals Chamber need not examine whether the actus reus has been fulfilled.

4261. para. 231: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber, Justice Winter dissenting, reverses the Trial Chamber's verdict of Fofana and Kondewa for collective punishments under Count 7 and substitutes a conviction of not guilty.

b. Liability for Crimes Against Humanity as Cruel Treatment

4262. para. 246: The Prosecution submits that "the elements of crimes against humanity prohibit attacks against the civilian population regardless of their purpose." The Appeals Chamber notes Kondewa's contentions that while the existence of a plan or policy can be evidentially relevant in proving that an attack was directed against a civilian population – although it is not a legal element of crimes against humanity – "it should be evidentially relevant in proving that an attack was not directed against a civilian population."

4263. para. 247: In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, it is manifestly incorrect to conclude that widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population cannot be characterised as crimes against humanity simply because the ultimate objective of the fighting force was legitimate and/or aimed at responding to aggressors. The Appeals Chamber deems it necessary to emphasise that rules of international humanitarian law apply equally to both sides of the conflict, irrespective of who is the "aggressor," and that the absolute prohibition under international customary and conventional law on targeting civilians precludes military necessity or any other purpose as a justification. The Appeals Chamber holds that it is no justification that the perpetrators of a crime against humanity were fighting for the restoration of democracy.

4265. para. 249: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber is unable to find that references by the Trial Chamber to the purpose for which the CDF was fighting was a decisive consideration in its determination of the general requirements for crimes against humanity.

4266. para. 251: The Appeals Chamber finds no ambiguity in the Trial Chamber's articulation of the applicable law. The Trial Chamber did not exclude the possibility that these attacks were directed against a civilian population merely because there was proof of military attacks targeting the opposing forces. Instead, the Trial Chamber found that, while there were attacks against the rebels or juntas, there was no evidence beyond reasonable doubt of the existence of parallel and coexisting attacks directed against the civilian population. The Trial Chamber found that a number of civilians were killed and subject to mistreatments.

4267. para. 252: The Appeals Chamber is unable to conclude that the Trial Chamber considered that, as a matter of law, a military attack cannot coexist with an attack directed against a civilian population.

4268. para. 259: Article 50 of Additional Protocol I provides:

> i. 'A civilian is any person who does not belong to one of the categories of persons referred to in Article 4 A (1), (2), (3) and (6) of the Third Convention and in Article 43 of this Protocol. In case of doubt whether a person is a civilian, that person shall be considered to be a civilian. 2. The civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians. 3. The presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character.'
> ii. The Appeals Chamber considers that Article 50(1) of the Additional Protocol I is a useful tool in determining a 'civilian population.' The Appeals Chamber agrees with the view expressed in several judgments of international tribunals that 'the presence within a population of members of resistance groups, or former combatants, who have laid down their arms, does not alter its civilian characteristic' and '[t]he civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians and the presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character.' In line with this principle, the Appeals Chamber takes the view that the presence of rebels or juntas within the victims does not deprive the population of its civilian character.

4269. para. 260: The Appeals Chamber further considers that perceived "collaborators" are accorded civilian status under international law. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Judgment mentions the killings and mistreatments of a number of police officers. The Trial Chamber found that, as a general presumption and in the execution of their typical law enforcement duties, police forces are considered civilians for the purpose of international humanitarian law, unless they operate under the control of the military.

4270. para. 261: The Trial Chamber noted in this regard that the Sierra Leone Police operated under the control of a civilian authority. Nonetheless, as stated by the Trial Chamber, the status of police officers has to be determined on a case-by-case basis. In its factual findings in respect to the attack in Bo, the Trial Chamber found that, in the early stage of the conflict in Sierra Leone the police were duty bound to support the soldiers, but that they ceased to support the junta in late 1997, and that the Kamajors "turned against the police because of their 'alleged collaboration with the junta.'" The Appeals Chamber further notes, from the Trial Judgment, that "while the Kamajors were in Bo, they captured and killed police officers. [. . .] The police that had been killed did not have ammunition." The Appeals Chamber therefore, holds, that police officers who have been subject to killings and mistreatments in Bo are "civilians." In Kenema, a number of police officers were also killed when the Kamajors entered Kenema Town on 15 February 1998. The Trial Judgment shows no findings that those police officers were armed or fought against the Kamajors. The following day, upon the return of the juntas to Kenema, there were exchange of fire for several hours between the Kamajors and the rebels–among whom were police officers who were fighting. In this context, the Appeals Chamber does not consider those police officers as "civilians."

4271. para. 263: In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber the argument is misconceived and inconsistent with the well-established principle that discriminatory intent is only a requirement for the crime of persecution, and not for other crimes against humanity. Further, while several cases have held that crimes against humanity were committed as a result of attacks against civilian populations sharing a common nationality, race or ethnicity, the same has also been found in several cases where civilians were targeted based on less defined grounds. In some of these cases alleged or perceived opponents to a regime, faction or political party have been targeted. Indeed, the Trial Chamber found in the AFRC Trial Judgment that attacks against the civilian population were "aimed broadly at quelling opposition to the regime and punishing civilians suspected of supporting the CDF/Kamajors."

4272. para. 264: The Appeals Chamber holds that as a matter of law perceived or suspected collaborators with the rebels or juntas, as in the present case, are likewise part of a "civilian population." The Appeals Chamber will now turn to the main issue in this ground of appeal, in light of the Trial Chamber's factual findings.

4273. para. 299: The Appeals Chamber will now consider whether, based on the findings of the Trial Chamber in relation to the attacks on Tongo, Koribondo, Bo, Bonthe and Kenema, it was open to the Trial Chamber to conclude that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the attacks were not "directed against the civilian population." The Appeals Chamber approves the opinion of the Trial Chamber that the expression "directed against" a civilian population requires that "the civilian population which is subjected to the attack must be the primary rather than an incidental target of the attack." The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that what must be primary is the civilian population as a target and not the purpose or the objective of the attack.

4274. para. 300: The Trial Chamber found that "the evidence adduced does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the civilian population was the primary object of the attack. By contrast, there is evidence that these attacks were directed against the rebels or juntas that controlled towns, villages, and communities throughout Sierra Leone." The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber appears to have misdirected itself when applying the principle it had already stated, by confusing the target of the attack with the purpose of the attack. When the target of an attack is the civilian population, the purpose of that attack is immaterial.

4276. para. 302: The Appeals Chamber has examined the findings in regard to each of the locations earlier mentioned. There is no doubt from those findings that the Trial Chamber was satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that civilians were attacked in various ways by the Kamajors in several of these locations. It was on these findings that the Trial Chamber found that war crimes were proved beyond reasonable doubt.

4277. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that having found as earlier stated, the Trial Chamber fell into error in not testing these findings against the actual situation in the various locations, before coming to a general conclusion that attacks directed against a civilian population had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Had it done so it would have found on the evidence that there were locations in which the rebels and junta had already withdrawn before the attack on the civilian population by the Kamajors occurred.

4278. para. 306: In view of the absence of military operations between the Kamajors and the rebels/soldiers at the time of the commission of most of the crimes against the civilians, the Appeals Chamber rejects Fofana's submission that those civilians were "collateral victims" of military operations, and further opines that those civilians could not reasonably be considered as mere "incidental targets" of a legitimate military attack. Rather, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, the context of the commission of the crimes, remote from military operations, supports a reasonable conclusion that the "attacks" were, in fact, specifically "directed against" a civilian population, within the meaning of Article 2 of the Statute.

4279. para. 307: In view of these findings of fact, taken as a whole, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the criminal conduct against those civilians was neither random nor isolated acts but was rather perpetrated pursuant to a common pattern of targeting the civilian population.

4281. para. 309: The Prosecution's First Ground of Appeal is granted in this respect. Under this Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber to enter corresponding convictions against Fofana and Kondewa under Counts 1 and 3 in respect of all acts for which they were found by the Trial Chamber to be guilty under Counts 2 and 4. The Appeals Chamber will next consider whether the remaining legal requirements for crimes against humanity are satisfied in this case.

4282. para. 312: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the submission of the Prosecution and finds that the fourth element of crimes against humanity is proved.

4283. para. 315: However, in regard to the fifth element the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the knowledge required in order to find that crimes against humanity had been committed is that of the actual perpetrator.

4284. para. 316: For this reason, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether the actual perpetrators had such knowledge.

4286. para. 320: The Appeals Chamber states that the only conclusion is that the actual perpetrators had the requisite knowledge.

4287. para. 322: The Appeals Chamber, Justice King dissenting, sets aside the verdict of not guilty against Fofana and Kondewa by the Trial Chamber under Counts 1 and 3 and substitutes, therefore, a verdict of guilty on those Counts. The Appeals Chamber will consider and impose appropriate sentences in respect of those Counts as part of its Disposition of the Prosecution's Tenth Ground of Appeal.

Summary Findings

4288. para. 112: In relation to the attacks on Tongo, the Appeals Chamber, Justice King dissenting, upholds the Trial Chamber's convictions of Kondewa and Fofana, pursuant to Article 6(1), of aiding and abetting violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4 respectively).

4289. para. 113: In relation to the attacks on Koribondo, Bo District and Kenema District, the Appeals Chamber upholds the Trial Chamber's acquittals of Kondewa and Fofana, pursuant to Article 6(1), of violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder and cruel treatment, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute (Counts 2 and 4, respectively) as well as pillage, a violation of Article 3.a. common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute (Count 5).

4290. para. 114: The Appeals Chamber dismisses the Prosecution's Third and Fourth Grounds of Appeal and dismisses, Justice King dissenting, Kondewa's Fourth Ground of Appeal.

4291. para. 321: The Appeals Chamber holds that whenever the Trial Chamber has found Fofana and Kondewa individually criminally responsible for war crimes under Counts 2 and 4, it reasonably follows that the same responsibility attaches to them for crimes against humanity in the same locations.

CHAPTER 8 – OTHER INHUMANE ACTS

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

3. Appellate Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

4352. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

4353. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

4354. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

4355. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 – 343 [6457].

(b) Legal Conclusions

4357. Regarding Taylor's Criminal Liability, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Criminal Liability - paras. 497-595 [6630].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4358. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[240]

4359. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[241]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

4360. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45

through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[242]

(iii) Counts 10-11: Physical Violence

4361. Widespread physical violence, including mutilations, was committed against civilians. Victims were often brought to a central location where mutilations were carried out. These acts of physical violence included the following:[243]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated and unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of civilians;[244]

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

4399. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 942 – 963 [1598].

(iii) Applicable law – Other inhumane acts

4400. para. 164: The Indictment in Count 8 charges the Accused with "other inhumane acts" as a crime against humanity under Article 2 of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the women and girls being forced into "marriages" and being forced to perform a number of conjugal duties under coercion by their "husbands" in Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Kailahun District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District in different time periods relevant to the Indictment.[311] Count 11 charges the Accused with the same offence, but is related instead to the Accused's alleged responsibility for acts of violence including beatings and ill-treatment of civilians in Kenema District and the mutilation of civilians in Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District between about May 1997 and April 1999.[312]

4401. para. 165: The Chamber recalls that the Appeals Chamber ruled that the offence of other inhumane acts forms part of customary international law.[313] The Chamber is of the opinion that the crime of other inhumane acts is a residual category for serious acts which are not otherwise enumerated in Article 2 but which nevertheless require proof of the same general requirements.[314]

4402. para. 166: The Appeals Chamber has emphasised that the crime of other inhumane acts is designed to be "inclusive in nature, intended to avoid unduly restricting the Statute's application to crimes against humanity.[315] The Chamber noted that a wide range of criminal or violent acts, including sexual crimes, have been recognised as other inhumane acts in the jurisprudence of international tribunals and concluded that the offence of other inhumane acts cannot be limited to exclude crimes with a sexual or gender component or nature.[316]

4403. para. 167: As a result, this Chamber will consider all acts or omissions alleged to constitute other inhumane acts in order to determine whether or not they are of such a character as to satisfy the elements of the crime.

4404. para. 168: Consistent with the foregoing, the constitutive elements of the crime of other inhumane acts are:

(i) The occurrence of an act or omission that inflicts great suffering or serious injury to body, or to mental or physical health;

(ii) The act or omission is sufficiently similar in gravity to the acts referred to in Article 2(a) to Article 2(h) of the Statute;

(iii) The Accused was aware of the factual circumstances that established the character of the gravity of the act;[317] and

(iv) The Accused, at the time of the act or omission, had the intention to commit the inhumane act or acted in the knowledge that this would likely occur.[318]

4405. para. 169: The Chamber is satisfied that in order to assess the seriousness of an act or omission, consideration must be given to all the factual circumstances of the case which may include the nature of the act or omission, the context in which it occurred, the personal circumstances including the age, gender and health of the victim, and the physical, mental and moral effects of the act or omission on the victim.[319]

4406. para.170: The Chamber takes the view that the mens rea for the offence of other inhumane acts is established where the Accused, at the time of the act or omission, intended to inflict great suffering or serious injury to body, or to mental or physical health of the victim, or where it is shown that he or she had reasonable knowledge that the act or omission would likely inflict great suffering or serious injury to body, or to mental or physical health.[320]

4407. para. 171: The Chamber recognises that a third party could suffer serious injury to mental health by witnessing acts committed against others, particularly against family or friends. The Chamber is also of the opinion that the Accused may be held liable for causing serious injury to mental health to a third party who witnesses acts committed against others only where, at the time of the act, the Accused had the intention to inflict serious injury to mental health on the third party, or where the Accused had reasonable knowledge that his act would likely cause serious injury to mental health on the third party. To this effect, the Chamber endorses the view of the

ICTR Trial Chamber in Kayishema and Ruzindana that "if at the time of the act, the Accused was unaware of the third party bearing witness to his act, then he cannot be held responsible for the mental suffering of the third party."[321]

4408. para. 172: In relation to Count 11, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution has pleaded beatings and ill-treatment in Kenema District, while in other Districts the conduct charged is mutilation. The Chamber considers that the crime of other inhumane acts may encompass both types of conduct.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4465. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[251]

4466. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians.[252]

4467. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [253]

4468. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [254]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

4470. Widespread physical violence, including mutilations, was committed against civilians. Victims were often brought to a central location where mutilations were carried out. These acts of physical violence included the following: [256]

> i. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Kaima (or Kayima) and Wondedu. The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on the bodies of the civilians; [257]
> ii. Kenema District - Between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, in locations in Kenema District, including Kenema town, members of AFRC/RUF carried out beatings and ill-treatment of a number of civilians who were in custody; [258]
> iii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including Kabala and Konkoba (or Kontoba). The mutilations included cutting off limbs and carving "AFRC" on the chests and foreheads of the civilians; [259]
> iv. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in Bombali District, including Lohondi, Malama, Mamaka, Rosos (or Rossos or Rosors). The mutilations included cutting off limbs; [260]
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilian men, women and children in various areas of Freetown, and the Western Area, including Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town. The mutilations included cutting off limbs; [261]
> vii. Port Loko: About the month of February 1999, the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Between February 1999 and April 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF mutilated an unknown number of civilians in various locations in the District, including cutting off limbs; [262]

4471. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or

(iii) Applicable law – Other Inhumane Acts

4500. para. 726: The elements of Chapter 11, a crime against humanity as "other inhumane acts", have been discussed earlier.[1411] With regard to particular acts of physical violence, the seriousness of the act or omission and its degree of gravity must be examined on a case-by-case basis. The Trial Chamber notes that the particulars mentioned in paragraphs 58 through 64 mainly identify acts of mutilations which are covered by Chapter 10. Paragraph 60 of the Indictment particularises beatings and ill-treatment. The Trial Chamber will consider these acts solely under Chapter 11, as considering mutilations and ill-treatment under the same Chapter would result in a duplicitous charge. Therefore, with regard to acts of violence other than 'mutilation', such as beatings and ill-treatment,[1412] the Trial Chamber will assess the seriousness of a particular conduct and its sufficient gravity on a case-by-case basis. In that regard consideration must be given to all the factual circumstances, including the nature of the act or omission which forms the factual basis of the charges, the context in which it occurred, including the personal circumstances and the effects on the victim.[1413]

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Findings

4508. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading – Forced Marriage

4509. para. 181: A preliminary point worthy of note is that the Prosecution may have misled the Trial Chamber by the manner in which forced marriage appeared to have been classified in the Indictment. The Indictment classifies Count 8 "Other Inhumane Acts" along with Counts 6, 7 and 9 under the heading "Sexual Violence." Under this heading in paragraphs 52 to 57, the Indictment alleges acts of forced marriages. This categorisation of forced marriages explain, but does not justify, the classification by the Trial Chamber of forced marriage as "sexual violence." Notwithstanding the manner in which the Prosecution had classified "Forced Marriage" in the Indictment and the submissions made by the Prosecution in this appeal which is inconsistent with such classification, the Appeals Chamber will consider the submissions made as an issue of general importance that may enrich the jurisprudence of international criminal law.

4510. para. 182: The first issue for the Appeals Chamber's deterr1inatic n relates to the scope of "Other Inhumane Acts" under Article 2.i of the Statute. The Tria Chamber concluded that in light of the exhaustive categorisation of sexual crimes under Article 2.g, the offence of "Other Inhumane Acts" must be restrictively interpreted so as to exclude offences of a sexual nature.[272] The Appeals Chamber considers that it is implicit in the Trial Chamber's finding that it considered forced marriage as a sexual crime.

4511. para. 183: In order to assess the correctness of the Trial Chamber's finding, regard must be given to the objective of the prohibition of "Other Inhumane Acts" in international criminal law. First introduced under Article 6.c of the Nuremberg Charter, the crime of "Other Inhumane Acts" is intended to be a residual provision so as to punish criminal acts not specifically recognised as crimes against humanity, but which, in context, are of comparable gravity to the listed crimes against humanity.[273] It is therefore inclusive in nature, intended to avoid unduly restricting the Statute's application to crimes against humanity.[274] The pro 1ibition against "Other Inhumane Acts" is now included in a large number of international legal instruments and forms part of customary international law.[275]

4512. para. 184: The jurisprudence of the international tribunals shows that a wide range of criminal acts, including sexual crimes, have been recognised as "Other Inhumane Acts." These include forcible transfer,[276] sexual and physical violence perpetrated upon dead human bodies,[277] other serious physical and mental injury, forced undressing of women and marching them in public,[279] forcing women to perform exercises naked,[280] and forced disappearance, beatings, torture, sexual violence, humiliation, harassment, psychological abuse, and confinement in inhumane conditions.[281] Case law at these tribunals further demonstrates that this category has been used to punish a series of violent acts that may vary depending upon the context.[282] In effect, the determination of whether an alleged act qualifies as an "Other Inhumane Act" must be made on a case-by-case basis taking into account the nature of the alleged act or omission, the context in which it took place, the personal circumstances of the victims including age, sex, health, and the physical, mental and moral effects of the perpetrator's conduct upon the victims.[283]

4513. para. 185: The Trial Chamber therefore erred in law by finding that "Other Inhumane Acts" under Article 2.i must be restrictively interpreted. A tribunal must take care not to adopt too restrictive an interpretation of the prohibition against "Other Inhumane Acts" which, as stated above, was intended to be a residual provision. At the same time, (are must be taken not to make it too embracing as to make a surplusage of what has been expressly provided for, or to render the crime nebulous and incapable of concrete ascertainment. An over-broad interpretation will certainly infringe the rule requiring specificity of criminal prohibitions.

4514. para. 186: Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber sees no reason why the so-called "exhaustive" listing of sexual crimes under Article 2..g of the Statute should foreclose the possibility of charging as "Other Inhumane Acts" crimes which may among others have a sexual or gender component.[284] As an ICTY Trial Chamber has recognised, "[h]owever much care [was] taken in establishing a list of all the various forms of infliction, one would never be able to catch up with the imagination of future torturers who wish to satisfy their bestial instincts; and the more specific and complete a list tries to be, the more restrictive it becomes."[285] The Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that Article 2.i of the Statute excludes sexual crimes.

a. The Nature of "Forced Marriage" in the Sierra Leone Conflict and its Distinction from Sexual Slavery – Pleading – Forced Marriage

4515. para. 187: The Appeals Chamber recalls the Trial Chamber's finding that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution did not establish the elements of a non-sexual offence of forced marriage independent of the crime of sexual slavery under Article 2.g of the Statute;[286] and that the evidence is completely of the crime of sexual slavery, leaving no lacuna in the lav. that would necessitate a separate crime of forced marriage as an "Other Inhumane Act."[287]

4516. para. 188: The Trial Chamber defined sexual slavery as the perpetrator's exercising any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons by imposing on them a deprivation of liberty, and causing them to engage in one or more acts of a sexual nature.[288] In finding that the evidence of forced marriage was completely of the crime of sexual slavery, the Trial Chamber found that the relationship of the perpetrators to their "wives" was one of ownership, and that the use of the term "wife" was indicative of the perpetrator's intent to exercise ownership rights over the victim.[289] Implicitly, the Trial Chamber found that evidence of forced marriage was predominantly sexual in nature.

4517. para. 189: According to the Prosecution, the element that distinguishes forced marriage from other forms of sexual crimes is a "forced conjugal association by the perpetrator over the victim. It represents forcing a person into the appearance, the veneer of a conduct (i.e. marriage), by threat, physical assault or other coercion."[290] The Prosecution adds that while acts of forced marriage may in certain circumstances amount to sexual slavery, in practice they do not always involve the victim being subjected to non-consensual sex or even forced domestic labour.[291] Therefore, the Prosecution contends that forced marriage is not a sexual crime.

4518. para. 190: The trial record contains ample evidence that the perpetrators of forced marriages intended to impose a forced conjugal association upon the victims in their ban exercise an ownership interest and that forced marriage is not predominantly a sexual crime. There is substantial evidence in the Trial Judgment to establish that throughout the conflict in Sierra Leone, women and girls were systematically abducted from their homes and communities by troops belonging to the AFRC and compelled to serve as conjugal partners to AFRC soldiers.[292] They were often abducted in circumstances of extreme violence,[293] compelled to move a long with the fighting forces from place to place,[294] and coerced to perform a variety of conjugal duties including regular sexual intercourse, forced domestic labour such as cleaning and cooking for the "husband," endure forced pregnancy, and to care for and bring up children of the "marriage."[295] In return, the rebel "husband" was expected to provide food, clothing and protection to his "wife,"

including protection from rape by other men, acts he did not perform when he used a female for sexual purposes only.[296] As the Trial Chamber found, the relative benefits that victims of forced marriage received from the perpetrators neither signifies consent to the forced conjugal association, nor does it vitiate the criminal nature of the perpetrator's conduct given the environment of violence and coercion in which these events took place.[297]

4519. para. 191: The Trial Chamber findings also demonstrate that these forced conjugal associations were often organised and supervised by members of the AFRC or civilians assigned by them to such tasks.[298] A "wife" was exclusive to a rebel "husband," and my transgression of this exclusivity such as unfaithfulness, was severely punished.[299] A "wife" who did not perform the conjugal duties demanded of her was deemed disloyal and could face serious punishment under the AFRC disciplinary system, including beating and possibly death.[300]

> "the most devastating effect on women of the war was the phenomenon called 'bush wife', rebel wife or jungle wife. This was a phenomenon adopted by rebels whereby young girls or women were captured or abducted and forcibly taken as wives ... The use of the term 'wife' by the perpetrator was deliberate and strategic. The word 'wife' demonstrated a rebel's control over a woman. His psychological manipulations of her feelings rendered her unable to deny him his wishes .. By calling a woman 'wife', the man or 'husband' openly staked his claim and she was not allowed to have sex with any other person. If she did, she would be deemed unfaithful and the penalty was severe beating or death.
> 'Bush wives' were expected to carry out all the functions of a wife and more ... [S]he was expected to show undying loyalty to her husband for his protection and reward him with 'love and affection ... 'Bush wives' were constantly sexually abused, physically battered during and after pregnancies, and psychologically terrorised by their husbands, who thereby demonstrated their control over their wives. Physically, most of these girls experienced miscarriages, and received no medical attention at the time ... Some now experience diverse medical problems such as severe stomach pains ... some have had their utems removed; menstrual cycles are irregular; some were infected with sexually transmitted diseases and others tested HIV positive."[301]

4521. para. 193: In light of all the evidence at trial, Judge Doherty, m her Partly Dissenting Opinion, expressed the view that forced marriage involves "the imposition, by threat or physical force arising from the perpetrator's words or other conduct, of a forced conjugal association by the perpetrator over the victim."[302] She further considered that this crime satisfied the elements of "Other Inhumane Acts" because victims were subjected to mental trauma by being labelled as rebel "wives"; further, they were stigmatised and found it difficult to reintegrate into their communities. According to Judge Doherty, forced marriage qualifies as an "Other Inhumane Acts" causing mental and moral suffering, which in the context of the Sierra Leone conflict, is of comparable seriousness to the other crimes against humanity listed in tile Statute.[303]

4522. para. 194: Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber also notes that in their respective Concurring and Partly Dissenting Opinions, both Justice Sebutinde and Justice Doherty make a clear and convincing distinction between forced marriages in a war context end the peacetime practice of "arranged marriages" among certain traditional communities, noting that arranged mamages are not to be equated to or confused with forced marriage during armed conflict.[304] Justice Sebutinde goes further to add, correctly in our view, that while traditionally arranged marriages involving minors violate certain international human rights norms such as the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), forced marriages which involve the abduction and detention of women and girls and their use for sexual and other purposes is clearly criminal in nature.[305]

4523. para. 195: Based on the evidence on record, the Appeals Chamber finds that no tribunal could reasonably have found that forced marriage was subsumed in the crime against humanity of sexual slavery. While forced marriage shares certain elements with sexual slavery such as non-consensual sex and deprivation of liberty, there are also distinguishing factors. First, forced marriage involves a perpetrator compelling a person by force or threat of force, through the words or conduct of the perpetrator or those associated with him, into a forced conjugal association with a another person resulting in great suffering, or serious physical or mental injury on the part of the victim. Second, unlike sexual slavery, forced marriage implies a relationship of exclusivity between the "husband" and "wife," which could lead to disciplinary consequences for breach of this exclusive arrangement. These distinctions imply that forced marriage is not predominantly a sexual crime. The Trial Chamber, therefore, erred in holding that the evidence of forced marriage is subsumed in the elements of sexual slavery.

4524. para. 196: In light of the distinctions between forced marriage and sexual slavery, the Appeals Chamber finds that in the context of the Sierra Leone conflict, forced marriage describes a situation in which the perpetrator through his words or conduct, or those of someone for whose actions he is responsible, compels a person by force, threat of force or coercion to serve as a conjugal partner resulting in severe suffering, or physical, mental or psychological injury to the victim.

b. Does Forced Marriage Satisfy the Elements of "Other Inhumane Acts"? – Pleading – Forced Marriage

4525. para. 197: The Prosecution submits that the crime charged under Count 8 is "Other Inhumane Acts," which forms part of customary international law, and therefore, does not violate the principle of nullum crimen sine lege. Therefore, the Prosecution submits that the only question on appeal is whether forced marriage satisfies the elements of "Other Inhumane Acts." The Prosecution argues that forced marriage amounts to an "Other Inhumane Acts" and that the imposition of a forced conjugal association is as grave as the other crimes against humanity such as imprisonment, causing great suffering to its victims.[307] In particular, the Prosecution argues that the mere fact of forcibly requiring a member of the civilian population to remain in conjugal association with one of the participants of a widespread or systematic attack directed against the civilian population is at least, of sufficient gravity to make this conduct an "Other Inhumane Acts."[308]

4526. para. 198: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution flat the notion of "Other Inhumane Acts" contained in Article 2.i of the Statute forms part of customary intemational law.[309] As noted above, it serves as a residual category designed to punish acts or omissions is not specifically listed as crimes against humanity provided these acts or omissions meet the following requirements:

> (i) inflict great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health;
> (ii) are sufficiently similar in gravity to the acts referred to in Article 2.a to Article 2.h of the Statute; and
> (iii) the perpetrator was aware of the factual circumstances that established the character of the gravity of the act.[310]

The acts must also satisfy the general chapeau requirements of crimes against humanity.

4527. para. 199: The Appeals Chamber finds that the evidence before 1he Trial Chamber established that victims of forced marriage endured physical injury by being subjected to repeated acts of rape and sexual violence, forced labour, corporal punishment, and depravation of liberty. Many were psychologically traumatised by being forced to watch the killing or mutilation of close family members, before becoming "wives" to those who committed these atrocities and from being labelled rebel "wives" which resulted in them being ostracised from their communities. In cases where they became pregnant from the forced marriage, both they and their children suffered long term social stigmatisation.

4528. para. 200: In assessing the gravity of forced marriage in the Sierra Leone conflict, the Appeals Chamber has taken into account the nature of the perpetrator's conduct especially the atmosphere of violence in which victims were abducted and the vulnerability of the women and girls especially those of a very young age. Many of the victims of forced marriage were children themselves. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber has considered the effects of the perpetrators' conduct on the physical, moral, and psychological health of the victims. The Appeals Chamber is firmly of the view that acts of forced marriage were of similar gravity to several enumerated crimes against humanity including enslavement, imprisonment, torture, rape, sexual slavery and sexual violence.

4529. para. 201: The Appeals Chamber is also satisfied that in each case, the perpetrators intended to force a conjugal partnership upon the victims, and were aware that their conduct would cause serious suffering or physical, mental or psychological injury to the victims. Considering the systematic and forcible abduction of the victims of forced marriage, and the prevailing environment of coercion and intimidation, the Appeals Chamber finds that the perpetrators of these acts could not have been under any illusion that their conduct was not criminal. This conclusion is fortified by the fact that the acts described as forced marriage may have involved the commission of one or more international crimes such as enslavement, imprisonment, rape, sexual slavery, abduction among others.

4530. para. 202: The Appeals Chamber has carefully given consideration to whether or not it would enter fresh convictions for "Other Inhumane Acts" (forced marriage). The Appeals Chamber is fully aware of the Prosecution's submission that entering such convictions would reflect the full culpability of the Appellant. The Appeals Chamber is also aware that the Trial Chamber relied upon the evidence led in support of sexual slavery and forced marriage to enter convictions against the Appellants for "Outrages upon Personal Dignity" under Count 9 of the Indictment. Since "Outrages upon Personal Dignity" and "Other Inhumane Acts" have materially distinct elements (in the least, the former is a war crime, and the latter a crime against humanity) there is no bar to entering cumulative convictions for both offences on the basis of the same facts. However, in this case the Appeals Chamber is inclined against entering such cumulative convictions. The Appeals Chamber is convinced that society's disapproval of the forceful abduction and use of women and girls as forced conjugal partners as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, is adequately reflected by recognising that such conduct is criminal and that it constitutes an "Other Inhumane Act" capable of including individual criminal responsibility in international law.

4531. para. 203: The Appeals Chamber therefore grants Ground Seven of the Prosecution's Appeal.

(ii) Pleading – Mutilations

4532. para. 204: The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in deciding not to consider mutilations under Count 11 as well as under Count 10 because considering mutilations and beatings and ill-treatment under the same Count would have resulted in a duplicitous charge.[311] The Prosecution submits that the convictions of the accused for mutilations as a war crime fail to recognise that acts of mutilation were also crimes against humanity, as they occurred as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population.[312] The Prosecution further submits that mutilations, and acts of physical violence other than mutilation:, are not separate crimes, but are different ways of committing the war crime of violence to life, health and physical or mental wellbeing of persons, as well as the crime against humanity of "Other Inhumane Acts." Therefore, the Prosecution argues that Counts 10 and 11 were not defective If pleaded because both forms of physical violence may properly be alleged in both counts without resulting in a duplicitous charge.[313]

mutilations," is clearly supported by the paragraphs alleging mutilations, The allegations of beatings and ill-treatment could not have been used to support Count 10. The Indictment would therefore have been much clearer had the Prosecution limited the factual allegations in support of Count10 to mutilations. Furthermore, the Prosecution's intention to rely on acts of mutilation in support of Count11 would have been much clearer had it separated the facts supporting this Count from those supporting Count 10. Consequently, the Prosecution's combination of the material facts that support Counts 10 and 11 created a degree of ambiguity in the Indictment. In light of this ambiguity, it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to consider evidence of mutilations solely under Count 10. Thus, the Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence of mutilations under Count 11 as well as under Count 10. Ground Eight of the Prosecution's Appeal is therefore dismissed.

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Samuel Hinga Norman, Moinina Fofana, and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-03-14-I, Indictment, 4 February 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4535. Paragraph 4 through 21 is incorporated by reference.[264]

4536. These actions [para. 23: The CDF, largely Kamajors, engaged the combined RUF/AFRC forces in armed conflict in various parts of Sierra Leone - to include the towns of Tongo Field, Kenema, Bo, Koribondo and surrounding areas and the Districts of Moyamba and Bonthe.] by the CDF, largely Kamajors, which also included looting, destruction of private property, personal injury and the extorting of money from civilians, were intended to threaten and terrorize the civilian population. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. Typical CDF actions and the resulting crimes included: [Paragraphs 24.a to 24.f incorporated by reference].[265]

(ii) Counts 6-7: Terrorizing the Civilian Population and Collective Punishments

4537. At all times relevant to this Indictment, the CDP, largely Kamajors, committed the crimes set forth in paragraphs 22 through 27 and charged in counts 1 through 5, including threats to kill, destroy and loot, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian populations of those areas and did terrorize those populations. The CDP, largely Kamajors, also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for their support to, or failure to actively resist, the combined RUFf AFRC forces.[266]

(iii) Counts 3-4: Physical Violence and Mental Suffering

a. Between about 1 November 1997 and 30 April 1998, at various locations, including Tongo Field, Kenema Town, Blama, Kamboma and the surrounding areas, the CDF, largely Kamajors, intentionally inflicted serious bodily harm and serious physical suffering on an unknown number of civilians;[267]

b. Between November 1997 and December 1999, in the towns of Tongo Field, Kenema, Bo, Koribondo and surrounding areas, and the Districts of Moyamba and Bonthe, the intentional infliction of serious mental harm and serious mental suffering on an unknown number of civilians by the actions of the CDF, largely Kamajors, including screening for "Collaborators," unlawfully killing of suspected "Collaborators," often in plain view of friends and relatives, illegal arrest and unlawful imprisonment of "Collaborators", the destruction of homes and other buildings, looting and threats to unlawfully kill, destroy or loot;[268]

4539. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 3: Inhumane Acts, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.i. of the Statute;

In addition, or in the alternative:

Count 4: Violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

4573. See above: Chapter 2 – CDF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – CAH – Findings on general requirements - paras. 691 – 693 [2108].

4574. para. 694: Having thus found that the essential requirement of an attack against the civilian population has not been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, the Chamber finds that the Fofana and the Kondewa are not guilty of Crimes against Humanity as charged in Count 1 (Murder as a Crime against Humanity) and Count 3 (Other Inhumane Acts as a Crime against Humanity).

(iii) Applicable law - Other inhumane acts

4575. para. 149: The Chamber is of the opinion that the crime of other inhumane acts is a residual category for serious acts which are not otherwise enumerated in Article 2 but which nevertheless require proof of the same general requirements.[191]

4576. para. 150: In the Chamber's view, the constitutive elements of the crime of other inhumane acts are:

> (i) The occurrence of an act or omission of similar seriousness to the other acts enumerated in Article 2 of the Statute;

(iii) The Accused, at the time of the act or omission, had the intention to commit the inhumane act or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this would likely occur.[192]

4577. para. 151: In order to assess the seriousness of an act or omission, consideration must be given to all the factual circumstances of the case which may include the nature of the act or omission, the context in which it occurred, the personal circumstances including the age, gender and health of the victim, and the physical, mental and moral effects of the act or omission on the victim.[193]

4578. para. 152: The Chamber takes the view that the intention to inflict other inhumane acts is satisfied where the Accused, at the time of the act or omission, had the intention to inflict serious mental or physical suffering or injury or to commit a serious attack on the human dignity of the victim, or where he or she had reasonable knowledge that the act or omission would likely cause serious physical or mental suffering or injury or a serious attack on human dignity.[194]

4579. para. 153: The Chamber recognises that a third party could suffer serious mental harm by witnessing acts committed against others, particularly against family or friends. The Chamber is also of the opinion that the Accused may be held liable for causing serious mental harm to a third party who witnesses acts committed against others only where, at the time of the act, the Accused had the intention to inflict serious mental suffering on the third party, or where the Accused had reasonable knowledge that his act would likely cause serious mental suffering on the third party. To this effect, the Chamber endorses the view of the ICTR Trial Chamber in Kayishema and Ruzindana that "if at the time of the act, the Accused was unaware of the third party bearing witness to his act, then he cannot be held responsible for the mental suffering of the third party."[195]

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(i) Charges

4595. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[269]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

(iii) Count 9: Child Soldiers

> Count 9: Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces, or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities, an OTHER SERIOUS VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW, punishable under Article 4.c. of the Statute

4597. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, routinely conscripted, enlisted and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities. Many of these children were first abducted, then trained in AFRC and/or RUF camps in various locations throughout the country, and thereafter used as fighters.[271]

2. Trial Judgement

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual findings

(i) General – Factual Findings

4598. para. 1357: The Prosecution has not pleaded specific locations with regard to conscripting, enlisting and/or use of boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in armed hostilities. In accordance with established jurisprudence, the Trial Chamber has found that due to the continuous nature of the crime of conscripting, enlisting and/or use of boys and girls under the age of 15, the pleading of particular locations is impracticable.[3229] Therefore, the Trial Chamber has considered evidence of conscripting, enlisting and/or use of boys and girls under the age of 15, in all locations in Sierra Leone.

4599. para. 1361: The Trial Chamber heard evidence from many witnesses who observed children who appeared to be under the age of 15 at training bases, or engaged in various war-related activities. The Trial Chamber is aware that an official document if authenticated or uncontested is more reliable evidence of age than a witness's perception but also acknowledges that such documentary evidence is not available in many parts of Sierra Leone. The Trial Chamber is also cognisant that these witnesses made estimations of age on the basis of the child's appearance, height or physical development and/or the witness's personal experiences, rather than on objective proof of age.[3234] Given the inherent uncertainties in such estimations, the Trial Chamber has exercised caution in determining the ages of children associated with the rebel factions in its findings and has excluded all evidence related to child soldiers where it is not satisfied that such evidence referred to persons under age of 15 years.[3235]

4600. para. 1362: The Trial Chamber has found that the AFRC, RUF, the AFRC/RUF or junta forces were armed groups.[3236]

(ii) Conscription and Enlistment of Child Soldiers

a. General - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Soldiers

4601. para. 1363: The Prosecution evidence relates, almost entirely, to forcible conscription of children under the age of 15 into an armed force or group in circumstances of coercion. The evidence shows that in the majority of cases children were abducted and then trained.[3237]

4602. para. 1364: Children were trained in Masingbi Road,[3238] Superman Ground[3239] and Yengema in Kono District,[3240] Rosos in Bombali District, 3241 Port Loko,[3242] and Bunumbu in Kailahun District.[3243] Although evidence was adduced on two locations called "Bunumbu", in the west and in the east of Kailahun,[3244] the Trial Chamber is satisfied, based on evidence on its proximity to Buedu,[3245] that the Bunumbu training base was located in the east of Kailahun District.

4603. para. 1365: At the end of the training, children were given personal weapons[3246] and assigned to frontline commanders.[3247]

b. Tonkolili District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders –Child Soldiers

4604. para. 1366: Perry Kamara testified that he was a radio operator for the RUF,[3248] and was stationed in Kangari Hills under the command of Isaac Mongor from early 1996 to May 1997.[3249] At the time the RUF in Kangari Hills abducted many civilians, some of whom were aged 12, 15 and 16.[3250] Some boys were sent to the training base which had between 500 and 1000 abducted trainees. They were forcibly marked "RUF" on the forehead or back to prevent escape. Other abductees were forced to marry, or used for hard labour.[3251]

c. Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child Soldiers

i. Children abducted and trained by the RUF and AFRC at Bunumbu after ECOMOG Intervention - Kailahun District – Child Soldiers

4606. para. 1369: The witness testified that the procedure at Bunumbu was the same as it had been at Matru Jong,[3254] which was a training base used by the RUF prior to 30 November 1996. Children were first screened based on age and health, and then assigned to SBUs and SGUs. SBUs were as young as seven. SGUs were nine to 15 years of age.[3255] The training lasted from two weeks to six months.[3256] "Recruits" who tried to escape were either killed or branded on their faces or chests with the letters "RUF".[3257]

4607. para. 1370: The military training at Bunumbu including preparing ambushes,[3258] dodging bullets (Halaka training) and dismantling weapons.[3259] Some civilian "recruits" died during military training exercises and the High Command was informed.[3260] After the training, SBUs were sent to the front lines to fight or were assigned as bodyguards.[3261]

4608. para. 1371: During the training, SBUs were forced to participate in food-finding by the AFRC and RUF missions.[3262]

4609. para. 1372: Dennis Koker testified that approximately one month after the AFRC and RUF were driven out of Freetown,[3263] they arrived in Buedu along with civilians they had captured on the way from Kono, Quiva Road junction, Masiaka, Makeni and Koidu. The stronger ones were taken for military training at Bunumbu, and after the training they were sent as reinforcements to fight in the war. Some of those sent for training told Koker they were aged 12 or 14 and he saw that they were "very small" and "not fit for military work".[3264] During the 21 months Koker spent in Buedu up to 500 children were recruited as SBUs and given guns. They did domestic chores and fought at the war front.[3265] Koker testified that SBUs were small children aged 7 to 14.[3266]

4611. para. 1374: TF1-189 testified that after she heard about the attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999, the rebels sent 20 captives, aged 12 to 18, both male and female, away from Mamboma village in Kailahun. TF1-189 learned that the rebels took them to "the training base" at which C.O. Monica was the commander, where they were taught how to use guns. After the training, the trainees were taken to the front lines.[3269] The witness was informed about this recruitment from her cousin, who was one of those trained, and who was 16 at the time of her abduction. Her cousin also said that she was given a gun and was assigned to guard a commander.[3270]

4612. para. 1375: Aruna Gbonda testified that from 1996 to 2000, some of the RUF rebels in Kailahun were "little children" aged 8 to 10 years old who were abducted and then trained. Some carried guns.[3271]

4613. para 1376: Exhibit D-013, a report by a Training Commander at Camp Lion, Bunumbu from 21 May 1998, records the presence of 53 SBUs at the base, but does not specify their age.[3272]

ii. Abduction and training of Komba Sumana in approximately July/August 1998 – Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4614. para. 1379: Komba Sumana testified that he lived in Tankoro village near Koidu Town at the time when the "soldiers have overthrown".[3273] On cross-examination, Sumana confirmed a prior statement in which he said he was in Koidu when he heard that ECOMOG had dislodged the AFRC from Freetown, in approximately February 1998.[3274] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from this description that the event referred to by Sumana is the ECOMOG Intervention of 14 February 1998.[3275]

4615. para. 1380: Approximately two months later, after the rainy season had begun, his parents and siblings were captured by "rebels" outside of Pakidu village and taken in the direction of Koidu Town.[3276] Sumana then came under the care of an aunt. They travelled together to Koidu Town, having heard that ECOWAS was there. On the way, they were attacked by "rebels" and became separated.[3277] Approximately a week later, still during the rainy season, three "rebels" attacked Sumana and another civilian in the bush outside Koidu Town and captured them. The rebels were male "youths" wearing military uniform trousers with a black and green combat pattern and civilian clothes and were carrying guns. They spoke Liberian English.[3278]

4616. para. 1381: On cross-examination, Sumana testified that he could not recall the month or the year in which he was abducted, but that it was during the "mango season" and "at the time we were finally driven out of Koidu Town",[3279] some months after ECOMOG drove the rebels out of Freetown.[3280] Sumana also denied having told the Prosecution that he was abducted in approximately February 1998, as was recorded by an investigator in a prior statement.[3281]

4617. para. 1382: The Trial Chamber recalls the evidence presented before it that the "mango season" generally begins in April or May.[3282] The Trial Chamber also recalls its finding that Koidu Town was captured by junta forces in late February/early March 1998 and that they were forced by ECOMOG to retreat in early April.[3283] The Trial Chamber finds Sumana's evidence consistent with evidence of these known events and concludes that he was captured in around April 1998.

4618. para. 1383: Sumana testified that he was "very small" and did not yet have any facial hair at the time of his capture.[3284] He stated that before they were driven out of Koidu Town, his father "used to tell" him that he was 14 years old.[3285]

4619. para. 1384: Sumana also testified that he was born in 1984 but he was unable to say in which month.[3286] He presented the court with a birth certificate which he testified was obtained by his father at the end of the war. This certificate, issued on 22 June 2003, shows from hospital records that he was born on 10 August 1984.[3287] The Trial Chamber notes that Sumana stopped his education in Class 4 and cannot read.[3288]

4620. para. 1385: Sumana also presented the Court with a voter identification card which he testified he obtained in Freetown in 2002, during the elections.[3289] This card shows that he was "age 18"[3290] and the date of the elections as 14 May 2002.

4621. para. 1386: Sumana testified that after he was captured, the "rebels" brought him to their base in Kissi Town. There, Sumana saw many other captured civilians and "rebels". Their "boss" was "Major Wallace", a former Liberian ULIMO fighter who joined the STF and spoke Krio, Liberian English and a Liberian tribal language Sumana did not recognise. Major Wallace's "boss" in Kissi Town was "Superman". When they were in Liberia, Major Wallace was under Colonel Alhaji Kromah.[3291] Sumana learned his captors were named Wuya, Opong and Alie.[3292] On cross-examination, Sumana confirmed that all three were former ULIMO fighters who had joined the STF.[3293] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from Sumana's description of his abductors and their associates that he was abducted by members of the STF.

4622. para. 1387: Sumana testified that he became a member of the "SBU" and performed domestic chores; he was not able to explain what SBU stands for.[3294] Approximately three weeks after Sumana was brought to Kissi Town, Issa Sesay assembled the captured civilians at PC Ground and stated that Mosquito had requested that the civilians be sent to Kailahun for training. Morris Kallon selected more than 200 men, women and children, including Sumana, to participate in this training. At the time of selection, the civilians were held at gunpoint and

Sumana testified that "[t]hey said if anybody refused to go they would kill him".[3295] On cross-examination, Sumana testified that this happened at the time the mangos were ripening which may have been April.[3296]

4623. para. 1388: Sumana testified that the training took place during the rainy season in the bush outside of Buedu. The trainees undertook two months of training under an instructor named "Monica" who spoke Liberian English. Sumana was taught to crawl on the ground during an ambush, how to shoot, dismantle, clean and reassemble an AK-47 gun, how to attack a town and how to burn houses. The civilians were sometimes beaten and given little food. One man fell ill and died. Sumana showed the Court scars on his right knee and ankle and on his left shin which he testified were the result of crawling on the ground during the training.[3297] On the basis of his evidence, and on Sumana's testimony of later events set out below, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Sumana's military training ended in approximately July or August 1998.

4624. para. 1389: On cross-examination, Sumana agreed that the "Monica" who conducted the training was also known as "Colonel Monica" and that the training camp was located "in Buedu". The Defence referred the witness to other evidence suggesting that Colonel Monica Pearson, a known RUF trainer, was not in Buedu in 1998, but rather in Camp Lion in Bunumbu, some 14 miles away. Sumana explained that "they" used to say that she was in Buedu, but that "we" were in the bush and did not go to Buedu. He then reiterated that he was at a camp "in Buedu" where he was trained by a female Liberian named Monica.[3298] The Trial Chamber notes that according to Exhibit P-276, a map of Kailahun District marked by TF1-168, Bunumbu is approximately 15 kilometres outside of Buedu.[3299] The Trial Chamber notes that, in his own description of the location, the witness seemed to refer interchangeably to "in Buedu" and the bush outside of Buedu. The Trial Chamber relies on his repeated spontaneous descriptions of a location "outside of Buedu" and "in the bush" and is satisfied that this is not inconsistent with the location of the training camp at Bunumbu.

iii. Abduction and training of Edna Bangura – Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child Soldiers

4625. para. 1394: The evidence of witness Edna Bangura of her capture in Masingbi, Tonkolili District in 1994 and subsequent detention in Buedu has been recited in the section dealing with Count 4 (rape).[3301]

4626. para. 1395: In Buedu, Bangura was assigned to CO Scorpion. The day after she arrived, CO Issa ordered that she and other captured civilians be sent for training. Bangura testified that she was not yet 11 when she was sent for training and estimated that the other people sent for training were between 10 to 25 years old.[3302] She was subsequently assigned to a Small Girls Unit "for small girls between the age brackets of 8, 11, 12, 13". She saw small boys of similar ages who were formed into Small Boys Units and who acted as securities.[3303] She was sent with others in groups of up to 20, some but not all of whom, were armed to villages where they took "whatever we were able to see" and where they captured civilians, men, women and children and forced them to carry the looted goods.[3304]

4627. para. 1396: Bangura testified that she was trained "in Buedu" for two weeks by Monica Pearson whom she believed was Liberian.[3305] At the training, they were taught how to set an ambush, how to retreat and how to use a gun. Bangura was trained with a two pistol grip gun. She testified that she was very small and that she had to place the gun somewhere higher than herself so that she could duck under the strap. Other people were trained with G3s and LARs; Bangura was unable to explain what an LAR is. She estimated that there were 50 or more people trained with her.[3306]

4628. para. 1397: On cross-examination, Bangura explained that the training camp was not in fact in Buedu Town but rather in a place that she estimated was about one or two hours walk away.[3307] Defence counsel suggested to her that Monica Pearson worked in a camp which was 14 miles away in Bunumbu and doubted that it was possible to walk this far in an hour or two. Bangura suggested that they used to run. The Trial Chamber has noted that according to Exhibit P-276, a map of Kailahun District marked by TF1-168, Bunumbu is approximately 15 kilometres outside of Buedu.[3308] Bangura went on to testify on cross-examination that she knows of a place called Bunumbu but she does not know how far it is from Buedu nor does she know if there was an RUF training camp located there. However, inconsistently, Bangura also stated that she had been to Bunumbu, then stated that she did not know it was Bunumbu or the names of other villages but was emphatic that she "was trained somewhere around Buedu".[3309]

iv. Abduction and training of TF1-026 from January to November/December 1999 - Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4629. para. 1403: TF1-026, born on 9 November 1984,[3316] was 14 years old on 6 January 1999 when nine RUF rebels, under the command of CO Rocky, came to her house in Wellington, Freetown, where she lived with her family.[3317] The rebels abducted the witness, who went with them unwillingly.[3318]

4631. para. 1405: After this three weeks period in Makeni, Brigadier Issa ordered CO Rocky to take the women to be trained in Kailahun. The witness and 19 other girls and women were taken by a vehicle to Kono, and from Kono they walked to Buedu, Kailahun District. In Buedu they were handed over to Mosquito, "the big man of all of them", who told CO Rocky to take them to "Buedu field" to be trained.[3322]

4632. para. 1406: At the training field, CO Rocky handed over the girls and women to an RUF woman Vanguard named Krio Mammy for training. Mosquito arrived at the field, said "they" should start training them, and informed the girls and women that anyone caught trying to escape would be killed. The trainees were then provided military training for six months. All the trainees received a gun during the training and were trained how to use it, how to crawl while using arms, and how to shoot a gun, an "AK". They also had a G3. They were told the training was needed in the RUF, and if the ECOMOG attacked they would need to know how to shoot, crawl, roll and escape. The witness was 14 years old during her training, while the others ranged in age from 18 to 26.[3323]

4633. para. 1407: During the training the witness tried to escape with three other female trainees. They were told a boat would come and take them to Liberia. After finding out that Mosquito had heard of their attempt, the witness and her friend returned to the training camp, while the two other females were captured by Mosquito. Mosquito then shot and killed the two recaptured girls in front of the other trainees, telling them that this was an example of what would happen to them if they tried to escape. Another female trainee had already died because the training made her ill. After the execution of the two trainees, all the remaining 17 trainees had the letters "RUF" carved onto their chests with a knife, so that if they "ran away wherever (they) went if caught (they) would be killed".[3324]

4634. para. 1408: After the six months of training, Mosquito ordered that the women be brought back to Makeni, Bombali District, and handed over to Brigadier Issa. The witness spent two months in Makeni, during which she did domestic chores for Brigadier Issa and his wife.[3325] She was forcibly married to a "RUF boy".[3326] The witness escaped to her home village after she became pregnant. She spent a total of nine months in rebel captivity.[3327]

d. Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

i. Children abducted and trained by the AFRC and RUF between March and December 1998 - Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders –Child Soldiers

4635. para. 1412: Dennis Koker testified that approximately a week after the AFRC was expelled from Freetown,3329 they captured many children aged 12 or 14 years from Koidu Town and the surrounding area in Kono and forcefully used these children as reinforcements to fight for them. The children had guns and fought for the RUF.[3330]

4636. para. 1413: Alice Pyne testified that in March 1998, while she was at PC Ground, the RUF captured children from villages near PC Ground and took them to the training base at Superman Ground.[3331] The captured children who were sent for training at Superman Ground were aged 8-13. After they "graduated" they would be distributed to commanders. The training at Superman Ground was the same type of training the witness underwent at Dia.[3332] At Dia, the training included how to attack, how to mount an ambush, how to crawl and manoeuvre.[3333]

4637. para. 1414: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that SBUs, some aged 8 to 12, were given basic weapon training at Masingbi Road from mid-March to April 1998, and was himself involved in providing such training.[3334] The witness also saw SBUs given basic training in Kono by Junior Sherrif, Savage, Tito in Yengema, Amara Kallay, Komba Gbundema, Emmanuel Williams aka Rocky and Colonel Isaac Mongor.[3335]

4638. para. 1415: Emmanuel Bull testified that after April 1998, while he was with the RUF/AFRC between Woama and Baima,[3336] he heard that Bai Bureh had ordered the RUF/AFRC to train young men. The witness and others were then trained for two weeks by Kallay Amara, Anthony and Jah Spirit on how to use weapons. Some of the trainees were Small Boys Units, aged 13 and upwards. Usually at mid-day the trainees were sent on food finding missions, accompanied by gunmen.[3337]

ii. Children trained by the AFRC and RUF after December 1998 in Yengema – Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4639. para. 1423: TF1-362 testified that at the end of 1998, when Kono was "cleared",[3341] Yengema training base was established.[3342] The same procedures that had been used at Bunumbu training base were employed at Yengema viz. dividing the recruits into five platoons, including an SBU platoon.[3343] The recruits were trained with live ammunition and were sent on food finding missions. The youngest and oldest "recruits" died most often.[3344] After the training, the "recruits" were assigned to the frontline commanders including Morris Kallon, Denis Mingo and Rambo.[3345] SBUs were also assigned to commanders as bodyguards.[3346]

iii. Abduction, training and use of TF1-143 in September 1998 – Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4640. para. 1425: TF1-143 stated that he was born on 1 March 1986,[3348] and testified that he was 12 years old in September 1998.[3349] At this time, the witness was living in Kabala Town, Koinadugu District,[3350] when he heard heavy shooting.[3351] His family ran away to his mother's village, Konkoba, located 12 miles from Kabala Town.[3352] Two nights later, TF1-143's family was captured at gunpoint and locked in a house with 150 civilians.[3353] TF1-143 testified that there were over 200 rebels in the town.[3354] Some rebels were wearing combat trousers, black shirts and red bandanas on their heads. Most of them had heavy weapons.[3355]

4641. para. 1426: The next morning, four armed rebels came to the house.[3356] Two rebels, named Kabila and Mohamed, marked all 50 children with "AFRC" and/or "RUF". Kabila marked "RUF" on TF1-143's chest with a razor blade.[3357] TF1-143 testified that after being marked, he and the other children were taken out of Konkoba village and assigned to commanders, including Five-Five, O-Five, Komba and others.[3358] TF1-143 and another boy named "Short Pepper" were assigned to Kabila.[3359]

4642. para. 1427: After being assigned to Kabila and taken away from Konkoba the group went food finding and then stopped at a village, the name of which TF1-143 did not know, to rest. At this village TF1-143 underwent a "forced" training – his first.[3360] Kabila forced TF1-143 to learn how to dismantle a weapon, clean it and put it back together. The weapon was a large gun with a round box and large chains.[3361]

4643. Para. 1428: TF1-143 testified that the group from Konkoba eventually made its way to Koinadugu Town, where TF1-143 and the other captured children were introduced to SAJ Musa by their commanders. The commanders gave SAJ Musa two boys whom they had reserved for him.[3362] TF1-143 testified that the rebels who had captured him were under SAJ Musa's group, which was a mix of AFRC and RUF fighters.[3363]

4644. para. 1429: After meeting with SAJ Musa in Koinadugu Town, Kabila told TF1-143 that their group was to be in the advance team to Freetown. Kabila, TF1-143, the other boy and Kabila's "wife", a young woman he had captured, went to the forest, or "jorbush". In the jorbush

TF1-143 and the other boy underwent a second training. They learned how to dismantle a weapon, clean it, couple it up, cock it, put it on safety, how to manoeuvre and how to crawl.[3364] In the evening, they returned to Koinadugu Town from the jorbush.[3365]

e. Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

i. Children trained at Camp Rosos and used by the AFRC in July 1998 - Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4645. para. 1433: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that small boys were captured during the "SLA" attack on Karina in July 1998 and were assigned to the wives of SLA and RUF commanders to do "small works". Later on, the small boys were given "personal training" as SBUs in Camp Rosos on weapons and guard duties.[3367] At Camp Rosos, 77 people were trained, the majority of whom were SBUs aged 8 to 12. They were trained for three weeks by Junior Sherrif, Major Eddie, Five-Five and the witness himself. In order to prepare them for the attack on Freetown, SBUs were trained how to use weaponry, lay ambushes, and were given drills in Fighting In a Built Up Area (FIBUA).[3368]

ii. Children taken from care centre in Makeni in May 2000 and continued recruitment until 2001 - Bombali District –Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4646. para.1435: TF1-174 testified that in mid-April 2000, he met with a British "MILOB member", Colonel Joe, the "CO" of KENBATT-5, Augustine Gbao and Morris Kallon to decide whether the care centre for children in Makeni should continue to function. Gbao and Kallon said that they must hear from Issa Sesay and Foday Sankoh before making a decision. When the witness visited Gbao at Teko Barracks, "we" heard "them" talking in a room used to communicate with Issa Sesay or Foday Sankoh. Eventually, the witness was told he could move the children, but that he must give the RUF a list of the names.[3369] However, RUF personnel demanded the return of children who "were good fighters".[3370] Between 1 and 5 May 2000 he saw RUF members taking more than 100 children from the centre.[3371] By 14 or 15 May 2000 another 100 children were gone from the centre. One of the remaining children told the witness that 45 children had been taken to fight in Lunsar but that they were killed in an accident on the way.[3372]

4647. para. 1436: TF1-174's account is corroborated by Exhibit P-334, an Amnesty International Report, which reports that it is believed that 30 boys aged 14 to 17 were threatened and intimidated to join the RUF in May 2000 at Makeni care centre.[3373]

4648. para. 1437: The Coalition to Stop the Use of Child Soldiers reports that a group of 72 former child combatants at Makeni rehabilitation centre were forced to re-join the RUF in 2001.[3374]

iii. Abduction and training of TF1-158 in 1998 – Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers 4649. para. 1440: TF1-158 testified that he was 10 years old when rebels attacked his town, Bonoya,[3375] Bombali District a few months before the AFRC attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999. After the attack on the village the rebels forced the witness to join them by holding him at gun point. He testified that "if anybody refused to go that person would be killed".[3376] The rebels took him to Rosos and forced him to carry items looted from civilians en route.

4650. para. 1441: On cross-examination, TF1-158 testified that Gullit, Five-Five, O-Five, Staff Alhaji and Adama Cut Hand were in the group that captured him,[3377] while the group's leader was SAJ Musa.[3378] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from his description of his abductors and their associates that he was abducted by members of the AFRC.

4652. para. 1443: On cross-examination TF1-158 testified he was first captured when Kabbah was President,3380 but later confirmed a prior statement in which he stated that the attack on Bonoya occurred after the overthrow of President Tejan Kabbah.[3381] He also agreed with Defence Counsel that he did not give the OTP a date for the events,[3382] and that the date "May 1998" referred to in his prior testimony in the AFRC trial was provided by Counsel.[3383]

iv. Abduction and Training of TF1-158 in approximately July 1999 – Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4654. para. 1447: After escaping from Rosos, the witness was captured again in Kamayusufu, Bombali District,[3386] shortly after he heard about the Lomé Peace Accord on the radio.[3387] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the context that this event occurred in approximately July 1999. Some of the rebels who captured the witness wore full military uniform, and others wore red headbands, military uniform shorts or sleeveless shirts. Officer Demo, who was an SLA soldier with Savage's group told him they would take him back as they had done before, after which the rebels took him to Kamabai.[3388] The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the witness's description of his abductors and their associates that he was abducted by members of the AFRC.

4655. para. 1448: In Kamabai, the witness was trained "how to go and attack Kabala" and how to dismantle, clean and couple a gun. He testified that "[w]e were [aged] ten", and that other trainees were aged 15.[3389] On cross-examination the witness denied his testimony in the AFRC trial where he approved a former statement to the OTP indicating that they had spent 5 days in Kabala during which the witness was taught "weapon handling" by Savage.[3390]

f. Port Loko District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

i. Abduction of Akiatu Tholley from January to April 1999 – Port Loko District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4656. para. 1451: Akiatu Tholley gave evidence of conscription of children into the armed factions and their use in hostilities including evidence that she was trained militarily in Port Loko District. The Trial Chamber has made findings in relation to aspects of Tholley's evidence under Count 6, Sexual Slavery. The Trial Chamber has found, inter alia, that Tholley was abducted from Wellington, Western Area during the retreat from Freetown in late January, 1999 by a member of the AFRC named "James" who was under the command of Santigie Borbor Kanu; that James repeatedly raped Tholley; that she was given weapons to carry to Allen Town; that she was detained by James in Masiaka from approximately April through May, 1999; that James taught her to use an AK-47 and a pistol; and that during this time she was given military training in Port Loko District, that she unsuccessfully tried to flee after which James gave her drugs which caused her to have "a change of mind" and was held in captivity by James in Allen

4657. para. 1452: Tholley testified that she could not recall when she was born.[3393] On cross-examination she also testified that she did not recall her prior testimony given in April 2005 in the AFRC trial, in which she stated that she was born in February and knew from having seen her birth certificate that she was 19 years old at the time she gave that evidence.[3394] Defence Counsel put to Tholley a statement given during an interview with the Prosecution in February/March 2005 in which it was recorded that she was born on 28 February, was 19 years of age and that her birth certificate had been eaten by rats. Tholley confirmed this and repeated that she does not know when she was born.[3395] On re-examination, Tholley confirmed that in the same interview she had also stated, "I can't remember the year. I know I am aged 19 now. I thought I was older but found my birth certificate after my first interview with the OTP. I no longer have it as it was eaten by rats".[3396] The Trial Chamber also notes that Tholley testified that she had not yet begun her menses at the time she was raped by James in Allen Town,[3397] an event the Trial Chamber has found occurred in late January, 1999.

(iii) Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child Soldiers

4659. para. 1458: Children aged 10-14 years guarded civilians who were forced to mine[3403] for diamonds by the RUF, and carried weapons[3404] to ensure that these civilians did not escape.[3405] Several witnesses testified that if civilians tried to take diamonds from the mining area, children were ordered to kill them.[3406] The Prosecution alleges the diamonds mined were used to purchase materiel used in hostilities.[3407]

4660. para. 1460: Evidence was adduced on the use of children as bodyguards to military commanders.[3411] Children were given arms to guard the commanders' physical safety, homes, property and women.[3412]

4661. para. 1461: Several witnesses also testified regarding the participation of children in food finding missions.[3413] These missions occurred throughout the conflict where food was scarce, and children sent on these missions were sometimes armed[3414] or accompanied by gunmen.[3415]

4662. para. 1462: Evidence was adduced that children committed crimes including amputations,[3416] decapitation,[3417] rape,[3418] looting,[3419] burning structures,[3420] and capturing,[3421]

threatening, beating,[3422] and killing civilians.[3423] Children were given weapons, sent on patrols, took part in ambushes, or used as spies to check whether enemy forces were in the surrounding villages.[3424]

4663. para. 1463: Children were forced to carry ammunition during the movement of the armed groups[3425] and children who were captured during an attack on their village or town were often forced to carry looted goods, often on their heads.[3426]

4664. para. 1464: The Trial Chamber has also heard evidence from various witnesses about the use of children, both boys and girls, for domestic chores, such as laundering, cooking and cleaning in the households of members of the armed groups[3427] and children being forced to move with these households from location to location.

a. Kenema District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child Soldiers

i. Children used at Tongo Fields by the AFRC and RUF - Kenema District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child Soldiers

4665. para. 1465: TF1-567 testified that during the Junta period the RUF and AFRC abducted civilians, who were forced to work in the mines in Tongo Fields, and were guarded by armed soldiers, some of them as young as 14 years old.[3428] Similarly, TF1-371 testified that some of the armed guards at Tongo Fields during the Junta period were SBUs aged 13, who carried AK-47s.[3429] Augustine Mallah testified that he saw armed children, aged 10 and above, guarding civilians who were mining at Tongo Fields at that time[3430] to ensure that they worked hard and did not escape.[3431] Abdul Otonjo Conteh testified that armed RUF combatants, including both adult and child combatants aged 12 to 15, guarded the mining[3432] at Cyborg in Tongo Fields.[3433] TF1-375 testified that he was told by "Boise" after the 1997 coup that SBUs were guarding mining sites, and that Sam Bockarie ordered SBUs to shoot and kill people who tried to take "gravel" from that area without permission.[3434]

4666. para. 1466: Abdul Otonjo Conteh testified that Sam Bockarie came to Tongo Fields every day during the junta period, accompanied by a convoy of adult and child combatants, aged 12 to 14, to collect diamonds.[3435] Conteh also testified that Sam Bockarie sent child combatants to attack civilians who were mining in the fields and he reported this in his capacity as a local committee member.[3436] Three people were killed and many injured after child combatants opened fire on civilians in Tongo Fields. Two civilians were killed and many others were injured by child combatants in Sandeyeima.[3437] The witness observed the two dead bodies.[3438]

ii. Children committing crimes during the junta period - Kenema District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child Soldiers

4667. para. 1469: Alex Bao's testimony in the AFRC and RUF trials was tendered by consent[3441] and he was cross examined in this trial.[3442] He testified that from 25 May 1997 to February 1998[3443] Issa Sesay had his "fighters", "boys" including small boys aged 12, 15 to 18 with the AFRC and RUF rebel forces at the Hangh Road Secretariat, Kenema and where he lived on Hangh Road, Kenema. These "boys" used to extort money from civilians.[3444] In this trial, Bao reaffirmed his prior statement that Sesay's "boys" were armed and very dangerous and would attack civilians and rob them.[3445] The witness testified in the RUF trial that time they assaulted a woman and took her money. When Bao tried to assist her he was beaten and locked up for two hours.[3446]

b. Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. General - Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4668. para. 1473: TF1-362 and TF1-189 testified that children who were trained at Bunumbu were sent or taken to the frontlines. TF1-362 testified that during the training, SBUs were forced to participate in food-finding by the AFRC and RUF missions.[3450] They were accompanied by "securities" who carried arms, the SBUs carried knives and sticks, and that they would beat, or even kill civilians who put up any resistance.[3451] On cross-examination, the witness confirmed a previous statement in which she indicated that she sent her own SBU, aged about 10, on food finding missions and gave him her own gun.[3452]

4669. para. 1474: Dennis Koker testified that the stronger civilians captured during the retreat from Freetown,[3453] were taken for military training at Bunumbu, and after the training they were sent as reinforcements to fight in the war. Some of those sent for training told Koker they were aged 12 or 14 and he saw that they were "very small" and "not fit for military work".[3454] During the 21 months Koker spent in Buedu up to 500 children were recruited as SBUs and given guns.

They did domestic chores and fought at the war front.[3455] Koker testified that SBUs were small children aged 7 to 14.[3456]

4670. para. 1475: Albert Saidu heard that many of the abducted children trained by Monica Pearson were then sent to fight after their training. He testified that some of the children were as young as 8 years old.[3457]

ii. Use as bodyguards - Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4671. para. 1483: Samuel Kargbo testified that he was beaten in March 1998 in Buedu by Mike Lamin's and Issa Sesay's securities, who included both men and small boys called SBUs.[3460]

4672. para. 1484: Aruna Gbonda testified that from 1996 to 2000, some of the RUF rebels in Kailahun were children aged 8 to 10 years old who were abducted and then trained. They carried guns and followed commanders such as Issa Sesay, Mosquito and Augustine Gbao.[3461]

iii. Edna Bangura - Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4673. para. 1487: The Trial Chamber has found that Bangura's testimony relating to the date of her conscription into the RUF was inconsistent. Bangura gave further evidence relevant to the use of child soldiers in Buedu but given the lack of precision of Bangura's evidence about the timing of events, the Trial Chamber is unable to determine beyond reasonable doubt that these events fall within the temporal jurisdiction of the court

c. Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Children committing crimes in Kono in February/March 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4674. para. 1488: Sia Kamara's testimony in the RUF trial was tendered by consent[3463] and she was cross examined in this trial.[3464] She testified in the RUF trial that she was captured in Yegbema near Kainako and Gandorhun,[3465] and then taken to Sawoa, Kono District.[3466] She was captured shortly after the RUF and AFRC were driven out of Freetown. During the retreat she saw Johnny Paul Koroma's convoy pass through Tongo Fields, where she was living prior to her capture.[3467] At Sawoa, Kamara witnessed "a little boy" "not up to 14" use a cutlass to amputate the right hands of five men, including her brother. The women were forced to clap and laugh while this was occurring.[3468] The small boy then chopped Kamara's upper right arm.[3469]

ii. Children used for food-finding missions at Superman Ground in July 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4675. para. 1491: Perry Kamara testified that Exhibit P-051[3473] was the RUF nominal roll record for Superman Ground, Kono District.[3474] Kamara explained that the page titled "list of manpower to go for food" dated 13 July 1998[3475] lists the people who "will take over security for them to go and guard the people who went for the food".[3476] The page included three names with "SBU" written next to them. Kamara testified that the "SBU" notation indicated that they were boys aged 12 to 15.[3477] Kamara confirmed that the date written on the page coincided with his time at Superman Ground.[3478]

iii. Children used to guard mining in Tombodu in December 1999 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4676. para. 1494: The evidence of Tamba Yomba Ngekia in the RUF trial was tendered by consent in this trial.[3479] He testified that he was captured on 16 December 1999[3480] by the RUF in Koidu, Kono District.[3481] He and 50 captured civilians were taken to Tombodu, where Officer Med, Colonel Jibo and Tactical brought mining equipment and informed them that "Issa sent us to you, you the civilians".[3482] Ngekia and other captured civilians went down to the bridge in Tombodu and started mining, surrounded by boys aged 6 to 11 with guns.[3483] Ngekia testified that he was forced to mine for six months during the dry season.[3484]

iv. Children used in Koidu in 2001 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4677. para. 1496: TF1-174 testified that he assembled 150 children, aged 11 to 16, who had been with the RUF in March 2001 on the way to Koidu. These children were then brought to the Caritas interim care centre in Makeni. Some children who were assembled told the witness that they had been digging for their adult commanders, others that they did domestic chores, and some stated they manned pits while carrying guns.[3487] Some children told the witness they received new guns after trips to Liberia while accompanying their commanders.[3488]

v. Children used in Kono in March/April 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4678. para. 1498: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he and Commander Bomb Blast used SBUs in approximately March/April 1998 to amputate the limbs of civilians in Yomandu. Mohamed Savage also used SBUs to help with amputations during this time period.[3489] Between March/April and May/June 1998,[3490] Savage, Guitar Boy and some SBUs amputated the hands of approximately 15 civilians at Tombodu.[3491] Sesay testified that around the same time, "our" SBUs captured girls aged 8 to 10 years old at Masingbi Road and they lived with these girls and had sex with them.[3492]

4679. para. 1499: Alex Tamba Teh testified that after he heard that ECOMOG had taken over Kono, Rocky aka Emmanuel Williams shot and killed all the adult male captives at Igbaleh/Kamachende close to Koidu. Upon Rocky's order, SBUs decapitated the men he had just killed.[3493] At Igbaleh, he saw SBUs amputating a small boy's hands and feet before throwing him into a toilet pit.[3494] At Wondedu, SBUs set five houses on fire after Captain Banya instructed them to "go and light candles".[3495]

4680. para. 1500: Samuel Bull testified that after his capture in Tongbodu in mid-April 1998,[3496] Issa, the commander, ordered a 14 year-old boy to take off his shirt and kill him. The boy took the shirt off and told Bull to lie on the ground, but Issa then decided he should not be killed.[3497]

4681. para. 1501: In the AFRC trial, Alhaji Tejan Cole testified that on 12 April 1998, at Bombafoidu, 200 rebels, among them 6 small boys who carried guns, attacked the town.[3498] Cole was asked to undress by a small boy, aged about 12 to 14, who had a gun.[3499]

d. Port Loko District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Use of Akiatu Tholley to participate in hostilities in April/May 1999 - Port Loko District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4682. para. 1506: The Trial Chamber has recounted the evidence that Tholley was brought to Masiaka in approximately April 1999 and remained there for approximately two months.[3504] Tholley testified that when she arrived in Masiaka, Issa Sesay said it was "his town".[3505] On cross-examination Tholley stated she heard Issa Sesay receiving orders from Foday Sankoh via radio while Sankoh was incarcerated.

4683. para. 1507: Tholley testified that after James brought her to Masiaka, she tried to escape but was caught by a "rebel boy"[3506] who returned her to James. James beat her and gave her drugs which made her "brave enough to do wicked things and did not cry and did not have feelings of wanting to go home".[3507] James taught her how to use an AK-47 and a pistol. On cross-examination Tholley agreed that this was not "actual training".[3508] Two days later, she was sent by James, together with "his boys" on a food-finding mission.[3509] In a village near Masiaka, they met a woman and her adult daughters in a house and looted everything that they had. One of the boys told Tholley to kill the woman since she refused to join them. Initially, Tholley refused; however, he gave her marijuana to smoke and afterwards Tholley shot the woman in the back and killed her.[3510] They then gave the woman's children loads to carry and went back to Masiaka.[3511]

4684. para. 1508: Tholley testified that during the time she was in Masiaka, she was taken to Port Loko by "some rebels" to be trained "how to fight". Tholley did not specify the names or factions of the rebels that took her to Port Loko. She stated that she was taught how to load bullets, how to shoot a gun and how to hide. Other people, both male and female, children and adults, were being trained; however, Tholley was unable to estimate how many. Tholley testified that the boys being trained were about 8 years old and older. There was a woman in charge of the training, but Tholley did not know her name.[3512]

e. Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Use of child soldiers in Koinadugu District - Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4685. para. 1510: Sieh Mansaray testified that from February to mid-March 1998,[3514] "the People's Army" came through Kondembaia, Koinadugu District en route to Kono, and set up a checkpoint at his house as part of "Operation Pay Yourself".[3515] Mansaray witnessed children aged 10, 12 and 15 with weapons as part of the People's Army.[3516]

4686. para. 1511: Mansaray testified that on or about 20 or 21 May 1998,[3517] he was captured by the "Foday Sankoh rebels" in Kondembaia,[3518] and was present when "the boss" ordered the rebels to burn down the houses in the village.[3519] Mansaray saw boys aged 10, 13, 15 and older with guns who were following the boss's command to burn down the houses in the village. Mansaray was not certain if the boys were captured or relatives of the rebels.[3520]

ii. Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

iii. Akiatu Tholley used to participate actively in hostilities after April or May 1999 - Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4687. para. 1513: The Trial Chamber has found that Akiatu Tholley was conscripted into the AFRC/RUF in January through April or May 1999. Tholley testified that after this, "they" took her to Kurubonla, Koinadugu District to fight, although she was unable to recall when this was.[3522] On re-examination Tholley clarified that the woman who trained them was the one who sent them to fight in Kurubonla.[3523] There, Tholley fought with the rebels against Kamajors and civilians while carrying a gun. Tholley stated that the rebels she was with, "our colleagues", killed civilians and that is why "we too killed them"[3524], which, taken together with Tholley's further evidence, the Trial Chamber understands to mean that Tholley herself participated in the killing of civilians. On cross-examination, Tholley denied telling the Prosecution that she was sent to Kono to fight as recorded in a previous statement and maintained that she fought in Kurubonla.[3525] She testified that she was sent to fight, to kill civilians and loot property and agreed that he only fought in Kurubonla as a trained soldier during the war.[3526]

4688. para. 1514: After she had killed civilians during the fighting in Kurubonla, Tholley dropped the gun and ran away. She surrendered to ECOMOG at Lunsar. They thought she was a spy, beat her and took her to the police station. The police men also beat her. Tholley gave the police her address in Freetown and they contacted her family who came and collected her from the Kissy Police Station.[3527]

4689. para. 1515: On cross-examination, Tholley denied a prior statement to the Prosecution in which it was recorded that she said she was taken from Masiaka to Lunsar and that she stayed there for over a month then moved to Makeni. Tholley denied ever going to Makeni and clarified that she only went to Lunsar after she escaped from Port Loko on her way to Freetown.[3528]

iv. Use of TF1-143 to participate in hostilities in September 1998 - Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4690. para. 1517: After being assigned to Kabila outside Konkoba village, TF1-143 accompanied Kabila, other fighters and their "boys" on a food-finding mission. They arrived at a farmhouse and Kabila ordered TF1-143 to rape the old woman they found there. TF1-143 cried and refused to rape the woman, so Kabila made him lie in the sun with his eyes open the entire day as punishment.[3529]

4691. para. 1518: After his training in maintaining a weapon TF1-143 was forced to do push-ups for five hours in a house in the village. Kabila would lift TF1-143 and hit him against the wall as punishment for disobeying his orders, starting from TF1-143's refusal to rape the old woman in the farmhouse.[3530] In the evening, Kabila took TF1-143 into the bush and defecated. He ordered TF1-143 to eat the faeces, or he would kill him and tell the others that TF1-143 ran away. Again, this was punishment for TF1-143 disobeying Kabila's orders. TF1-143 complied and ate the faeces.[3531]

f. Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Children trained at Camp Rosos and used by the AFRC in July 1998 - Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldliers

4692. para. 1520: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that small boys who were captured during the SLA attack on Karina in July 1998 were assigned to the wives of SLA and RUF commanders to do "small works" before being trained. After the training SBUs were sent on food finding missions, used for ambushes and patrols, and engaged in attacks on armed forces.[3533]

4693. para. 1521: After the troops left Rosos in September/October 1998, Bobson Sesay testified that SAJ Musa sent men, led by Major O-Five, as reinforcements for the Freetown attack.[3534] O-Five's group of fighters was comprised of SBUs, aged about 8 to 10. Some carried weapons and some carried loads. According to O-Five, most of the SBUs had been captured in Koinadugu and later trained.[3535]

ii. Children committing crimes after ECOMOG Intervention 1998 / Children as bodyguards to commanders and committing crimes during Operation Pay Yourself (February 1998) - Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities –Child soldiers

4694. para. 1525: TF1-174 testified that on 17 February 1998, the start of Operation Pay Yourself, 3540 the children at Teko Barracks in Makeni with whom the witness worked began carrying guns and being with their "big ground commanders" again. They were involved in looting and made the witness and others afraid of them.[3541] The majority of the children at Teko Barracks were under the age of 14/15.[3542]

iii. Children committing crimes after ECOMOG Intervention 1998 / Children participating in burnings and amputations in Rosos between July and October 1998 - Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

iv. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Use of Komba Sumana to participate actively in hostilities from approximately August to December 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4696. para. 1530: Komba Sumana testified that after his military training was complete, Mosquito assembled the civilians into separate lines of adults and children. Sumana did not know the ages of his "colleagues", but some were the same height as him and some were taller. "Soldiers" coming from the direction of Buedu brought weapons which were distributed to the adult civilians and then to the children. Sumana received an "AK".[3546]

4697. para. 1531: On cross-examination, Sumana testified that Monica personally gave him an AK-47 and denied a prior statement given to a Prosecution investigator that he did not receive a weapon because he could not shoot, explaining that he had in fact stated he was not given a gun that was large. In the same statement, Sumana described the weapons distributed as "new" whereas in a later statement it was recorded that he stated some were new and some old. Sumana explained that there were both new and old guns.[3547]

4698. para. 1532: Mosquito sent the trainees to "clear" Kono. They were joined by a number of "rebels" he had not met before and who were under the command of a man named "Blood". They marched for three weeks back to PC Ground where they met "Issa". The trainees were told that this was Operation No Living Thing and "Issa" said they would be sent to attack Koidu Town. Sumana was scared and did not participate in this attack.[3548] Instead, he gave his gun to a rebel named "Wallace" and hid in his house in Kissi Town. From the house, Sumana observed "Issa", Morris Kallon, Augustine Gbao and Superman pass by in a vehicle and the others pass by on foot. Sumana learned from Wallace that the attack was not successful.[3549] The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that an unsuccessful attack on Koidu Town known as the Fitti-Fatta mission was launched by Superman in approximately mid-June 1998.[3550]

4699. para. 1533: Sumana remained in Kissi Town for about a week during which time Wallace returned Sumana's gun to him. Towards the end of the rainy season, Superman clashed with Mosquito and left with all of the rebels in Kissi Town for Tombodu where they met an "SLA" named "Savage". Together with Savage and his soldiers they continued on to Kurubonla, Koinadugu District.[3551]

4700. para. 1534: Sumana testified that the commanders in Kurubonla were SAJ Musa, General Bropleh, and Five-Five. Shortly after his arrival in Kurubonla, a convoy of STF, RUF and AFRC attacked the Guinean barracks at Mongor Bendugu. Sumana "fought" together with Wallace and the other fighters. Other commanders present during the attack were Superman, SAJ Musa, Savage and Komba Gbundema. Sumana testified that they successfully dislodged the Guineans and captured some large weapons including a 40 barrel and a tank which they were not able to carry away and which they burnt. They also captured a large amount of bullets including "AAs", "mortars" and "AKs" as well as AA guns which they took with them.[3552]

4701. para. 1535: Approximately a week after the attack on Mongor Bendugu, after the rainy season had ended, a group of soldiers and rebels commanded by Five-Five left Kurubonla for Freetown. Sumana and others remained in Kurubonla for approximately a month and then moved to Koinadugu Town. There SAJ Musa was the commander and was deputised by Superman.[3553] Following a meeting organised by SAJ Musa, they attacked ECOMOG and the Kamajors at Kabala. Sumana testified that he took part in this attack. Sumana testified that during this attack, some civilians were captured, including adults and some who were the same height as Sumana but whose ages he did not know. The captured people were given military training at the barracks.[3554]

4702. para. 1536: A week after the first attack, the "rebels", the "SLAs" and the STF attacked Kabala again. Sumana testified that he went on this attack with Wallace, under the command of Superman. SAJ Musa also commanded a group during this attack. Guns, bullets and civilians were captured and brought to Koinadugu where the captured civilians were trained.[3555]

4703. para. 1537: Sumana testified that after a conflict with Superman, SAJ Musa left Koinadugu Town. The Trial Chamber notes that SAJ Musa split with Superman in October 1998.[3556] Superman remained the commander and General Bropleh the deputy. Later, Superman's group joined SAJ Musa and Five-Five in Makeni, Bombali District.[3557] On the way to Makeni, they attacked Binkolo and set houses on fire. Sumana testified that "there was a house that they said we should burn down" and that Komba Gbundema "passed that order". Sumana was with an RUF rebel from Superman's group named Blood and "together with that man… we burnt it down".[3558] Sumana testified that he travelled with Blood as his bodyguard. Blood carried a communication set and was therefore unable to carry a gun.[3559] The Trial Chamber notes that on cross-examination, Sumana agreed with Defence counsel that he fought as an RUF rebel but stated that he never killed or amputated anyone, never burned a house, never looted and never raped.[3560]

4704. para. 1538: At Makeni, Sumana's group attacked ECOMOG together with SAJ Musa's group. They captured Makeni after two days. After it was captured, the RUF stayed in Teko Barracks, the STF were at Waterworks and the SLAs were in the centre of Makeni Town.[3561] Sumana testified that he subsequently overheard a communication between Five-Five and Superman at Superman's house in which Five-Five reported that SAJ Musa had been shot in Freetown.[3562] The Trial Chamber recalls that SAJ Musa was killed on 23 December 1998.[3563]

4705. para. 1539: Sumana's group was then taken to "Issa's" house and then to Lunsar where they remained for a month under the command of Superman. Sumana testified that during that time they dislodged ECOMOG from Gberi Junction together with Rambo's group which had come from Makeni[3564] but he did not specify whether he personally joined this attack. Sumana testified that he then returned to Makeni where he remained for a year, and ultimately disarmed in Port Loko.[3565]

v. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Training and Use of TF1-158 to participate actively in hostilities from approximately in 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4706. para. 1542: After TF1-158 was abducted from Bonoya, he was forced to carry rice and groundnut that the rebels had taken from civilians. They went to Ndaria village, Mamboma, Karina, Mateboi and then to Rosos. They travelled as a mixed group of RUF and AFRC, the majority were AFRC.[3568] On cross-examination, the witness denied telling the Prosecution that he was taken to Karina, Kurubonla, Serkoya, Rosos and then Lunsar stating that only after his second abduction, did he arrive at Lunsar.[3569]

4708. para. 1544: While in Rosos, the rebels took the witness and others on a food-finding mission in a village nearby. Staff Alhaji assembled those who were to go in the morning and everyone, including the witness, was given a gun. They took food items and livestock from civilians and came back to Rosos. In Rosos, Staff Alhaji reported to Five-Five and O-Five but mainly to Gullit.[3574] The witness also testified that when he was in Rosos, he observed child combatants being "marked" with "RUF" on their shoulders or marked on their faces in order to make them brave.[3575]

4709. para. 1545: Defence Counsel cross-examined TF1-158 at length on his prior statements to OTP and on the evidence he adduced during the AFRC trial. Neither the interview records nor the transcript were tendered into evidence and the Trial Chamber is unable to consider them in total. TF1-158 stated Counsel was "confusing me with questions"[3576] and denied or gave explanations for inconsistencies put to him. In particular he stated that some RUF, including Kill Man No Blood and Allusein were part of their group who came to Rosos.[3577]

vi. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Use TF1-158 to participate actively in hostilities in approximately July 1999 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4710. para. 1548: TF1-158 testified that after he was trained, some RUF and AFRC (referred to as SLAs[3579]) came from Makeni. He knew some were RUF since some of them had "RUF" tattoos on their shoulders. On cross-examination the witness stated that an order to attack Kabala came from Makeni, clarifying a prior statement in which he said Brigadier Issa was the one who ordered the mixed group to attack Kabala.[3580] The joint group went together to attack Kabala but were ambushed by Kabbah's soldiers, and shooting "all over" ensued. Since they "were not actually allowed to attack the town", the witness went into a shop and took a bicycle so he could return to Kamabai. While climbing on a hill he dodged fire, crawled into a gutter, took out his gun and put it down until he saw Savage who told him they were to go back.[3581]

4711. para. 1549: After the attack, the witness returned with Savage to Kamabai, where they rested and were further trained. During the training, the witness heard of a grudge between the RUF and the AFRC in Makeni. At this time, the witness saw Superman and General Issa, of the RUF, fighting against the AFRC. Superman and "General Issa" were in an AA van with a two-barrel gun mounted on it. "They were shooting seriously and Savage too was returning fire". Savage and the witness then went to Kabala. On the way to Kabala, Savage killed men in Fadugu.[3582] It was put to the witness that he did not mention this incident in his testimony in the AFRC Trial and the witness explained that he forgot.[3583]

4712. para. 1550: On cross-examination, the witness testified this was the first time he saw "General Issa", Issa Sesay[3584] and stated that a record of interview in 2005 when he referred to "Brigadier Issa" and that he saw Brigadier Issa once, in a vehicle, "during the time the disarmament has taken place. He used to go to Karina" was incorrectly recorded.[3585]

4714. para. 1552: On cross-examination, the witness estimated that he was 11 years old at the time he disarmed and had been with the rebels for about 10 months, inclusive of the time he escaped.[3587] After a few weeks in Kabala, UN trucks came and took child combatants to a care centre in Lunsar "under Caritas"[3588]. Then the RUF, which had not yet disarmed, came to Lunsar. Some of the "child combatants", aged 10 to 15 and above, decided to join the RUF and left with them.[3589] On cross-examination it was put to the witness that he had not previously testified to this evidence. He stated that he had given this information to the OTP just prior to his testimony and denied being prompted. He stated that he thought he should "say it".[3590]

vii. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / TF1-143 used to participate actively in hostilities from approximately September to December 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4715. para. 1554: The Trial Chamber has already found that TF1-143 was abducted in Koinadugu in September 1998.[3592] He testified that they left Koinadugu with the rest of the advance team consisting of more than 200 people. Kabila informed TF1-143 that the advance team was mostly "AFRC dominant but was mixed",[3593] and included some RUF.[3594] After leaving Koinadugu Town, the team was informed that Nigerian soldiers were stationed in Karina.[3595] TF1-143 testified that Kabila told him to stay in the bush and lie down. TF1-143 heard gunfire and after the shooting had stopped, the group went through Karina.[3596]

4716. para. 1555: In the second village after Karina,[3597] O-Five ordered that boys who had been captured and marked should be trained.[3598] Kabila and Mohamed trained the boys for two hours on how to parade with a weapon, how to escape and how to crawl. After this training Kabila gave TF1-143 two blue tablets. TF1-143 testified that after he took the tablets he "started feeling a way that [he] was not feeling before. [He] started being bold; [his] eyes going red at the time".[3599]

4717. para. 1556: TF1-143 testified that in the next village, Five-Five ordered that they should loot, kill and burn down the town.[3600] At a house in the village Kabila and TF1-143 found five people – two men, a woman, her child and another child.[3601] Kabila killed one man as a demonstration, and TF1-143 then killed the other four using a machete.[3602] TF1-143 testified that Kabila had threatened to kill him if he did not kill the four people, and that he felt bold enough to commit these acts because of the blue tablets he had ingested.[3603]

4718. para. 1557: The group reached a village called Kamalo and took boats to cross a river to Kakuna, where there were Nigerian soldiers. TF1-143 was told to stay in the forest outside Kakuna Town, where he heard heavy firing.[3604] He testified that he was carrying some of Kabila's ammunition and the machete he had used to hack the four people to death.[3605] He testified that previously Kabila had made him carry his GMG gun which was large with a round box, used large bullets and the ammunition was worn around the neck. However, the gun was too large and heavy for TF1-143, so Kabila stopped giving it to him.[3606]

4719. para. 1558: On cross-examination, TF1-143 could not explain why there was nothing in the previous statements to the Prosecution about Kabila's heavy gun stating that he remembered telling the Prosecution about the gun in his 2007 interview.[3607]

4720. para. 1559: Three villages before Colonel Eddie Town,[3608] Kabila trained TF1-143 on how to shoot a weapon. The gun had two handles and could be held "at the back and in front". They went to the riverside and TF1-143 was instructed to shoot the gun and aim into the river. He shot it once and they returned to town.[3609]

4721. para. 1560: Kabila then brought out some marijuana and told TF1-143 that he should start smoking. Kabila continued to wrap marijuana for him and he would smoke it wherever they went.[3610]

4722. para. 1561: TF1-143 testified that in the next village, Komba ordered "his boys" to capture a girl. The boys captured her at gunpoint, stripped her naked and left her in a house for Komba. TF1-143 was standing guard at the door of the house with John, one of Komba's boys, while Komba "used her" that is he raped her.[3611]

4723. para. 1562: During the march from Colonel Eddie Town to Freetown, the group stayed in the forest during the day and walked at night.[3612] TF1-143 testified that at a deserted village along the way, SAJ Musa ordered the town to be burned. Kabila sprinkled petrol around a house, and TF1-143 then struck a match and set the house on fire.[3613]

4724. para. 1563: TF1-143 testified that the group travelling from Colonel Eddie Town was comprised of SAJ Musa's group and the Red Lion group. SAJ Musa's group was AFRC mixed with RUF.[3614] The Red Lion group included Junior Lion, Gullit and Foday Pump Lock. On cross-examination, TF1-143 agreed that he had never specifically referred to the Red Lion group by name to the Prosecution in any of his five previous interviews, the latest coming three weeks before his examination-in-chief.[3615] TF1-143 explained that the Prosecution had not asked him about the two groups travelling from Colonel Eddie Town. He only told them about the commanders who were present and SAJ Musa's group since that was the group he was part of and knew.[3616] Additionally, TF1-143 explained that he had forgotten many things that happened to him in the past, but as the interviews progressed he began to recall most of the things he experienced.[3617] TF1-143 denied being asked to name the Red Lion group during his testimony,[3618] or learning of any evidence that had been given earlier in the case.[3619]

g. Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Children committing crimes in Freetown and the Western Area during and after January 1999 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Freetown and the Western Area – Child soldiers

4725. para. 1566: In Exhibit P-335, the Coalition to Stop the Use of Child Soldiers reports that 10% of the armed forces which attacked Freetown in January 1999 were children.[3621]

4726. para. 1567: Confidential Exhibit P-077 reports that during the rebels' attack on Freetown, 8 to 11 year old boys raped, killed and amputated the hands of civilians.[3622]

4727. para. 1568: In Exhibit P-310, the UN Secretary-General reports that a significant number of rebel fighters in the Freetown attack in January 1999 were children and that boys as young as 8 to 11 were killing and inflicting injuries.[3623] In Exhibit P-328, Human Rights Watch reports that RUF child combatants, armed with pistols, rifles and machetes, were seen actively participating in killings and amputations during the Freetown attack.[3624]

4728. para. 1569: TF1-174 testified that during the course of his work with children, some told him they fought in Freetown in January 1999. The witness named four of these children in a confidential exhibit.[3625]

4730. para. 1571: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that during the Freetown attack, SBUs captured young girls, about 8 years old, and brought them to the State House and "used them for sexual purposes".[3627] From February to March 1999, at Benguema, SBUs captured young girls aged 8 and had sexual intercourse with them.[3628]

4731. para. 1572: TF1-023 testified in the AFRC trial that she was captured at Consider Lane in Calaba Town on 22 January 1999 by a young rebel boy with a gun.[3629] Later that day, TF1-023 was taken to Allen Town along with other captives.[3630] At Allen Town, the captured civilians were guarded by armed SBUs aged 13 to 15.[3631]

ii. Children used by the AFRC and RUF after 6 January 1999 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Freetown and the Western Area – Child soldiers

4732. para. 1576: Osman Jalloh testified that in January 1999,[3636] he saw children who appeared to be 8 to 10 years old, who were carrying guns, and packing stones on the highway to block ECOMOG at Sanyinoh Junction, between Wellington and Calaba Town.[3637]

4733. para. 1577: Paul Nabieu Conteh testified that he saw about 25 children aged 10 to 14 wearing military uniforms at Benguema after 19 January 1999, some carrying guns. The children were attached to commanders such as Gunboot, Tina Musa and Brigadier Five-Five who had 5 to 10 children. The children were sent to flog civilians who committed crimes.[3638]

4734. para. 1578: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that from February to March 1999, Benguema was a military training centre. Every commander had a small boy, aged 8 to 12, and they were ordered to train them to help repel enemy attacks. The small boys were trained individually by the commanders on weaponry, and taken on patrols.[3639]

4735. para. 1579: Bobson Sesay also testified that around March/April 1999, the troops at Newton were joined by RUF and "SLA" under the command of KBC who came with 8 fighters, including 2 SBUs around 10 years old, from Liberia, who had "AKs". KBC said that his group was put together and sent by Charles Taylor.[3640] At Newton, children participated in ambushes and patrols until the troops left in April-May 1999.[3641]

4736. para. 1580: Exhibit P-310 reports that between 6 January and mid-February 1999 approximately 2000 children went missing in the aftermath of the Freetown attack. Escapees reported that abducted boys were either selected for training as fighters, or used as porters.[3642] Exhibit P-077 records that there were 1,192 reports of children missing between January 6 and February 4, 1999. Escapees reported that young boy abductees tended to be used as porters or were selected for training as fighters.[3643]

iii. Findings on victim witness in Freetown and the Western Area / TF1-143 used to actively participate in hostilities in January 1999 - Findings on victim witness in Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4737. para. 1583: As the group of fighters, including TF1-143, who had left Colonel Eddie Town approached Freetown, an advance team comprised of commanders and fighters was able to take over the barracks in Benguema, where the Sierra Leone soldiers were being trained.[3645] The advance team looted ammunition, and Kabila had TF1-143 and his "other boy" carry some looted ammunition.[3646]

4738. para. 1584: When they entered Freetown, the group went to Allen Town, where TF1-143 stayed behind because his feet had become swollen.[3647] TF1-143 joined Adama Cut Hand's team in Allen Town. TF1-143 testified that although he had not heard the name Adama Cut Hand[3648] nor met her before, he knew some of "her boys".

4739. para. 1585: On cross-examination, TF1-143 was questioned about prior statements he had given to the Prosecution regarding Adama Cut Hand.[3649] In his testimony, the witness denied seeing Adama at Koinadugu, Benguema or Waterloo.[3650] Yet in his first interview with the Prosecution on 7 April 2003, TF1-143 stated that Adama Cut Hand was in Koinadugu, he was part of her Cut Hand Group and Adama was his immediate boss.[3651] TF1-143 insisted that he had made corrections to these previous statements and that Kabila was his boss from the time he was captured up to Freetown.[3652] In that same interview, TF1-143 stated that a group from Makeni joined his group at Benguema, and that he saw most of the commanders together at that time, including Adama Cut Hand.[3653] TF1-143 explained that he was just listing the names of commanders he knew, but also agreed with Defence Counsel that he was listing the names of people who he had claimed to remember being at Koinadugu and Waterloo.

4740. para. 1586: On re-examination, TF1-143 confirmed that during his interview on 16-18 April 2008, he had made corrections to his previous statements to the Prosecution regarding Adama Cut Hand. TF1-143 stated that he "only met and worked with Adama Cut Hand when the group entered Freetown. Before that time he had only heard her name".[3654] The Trial Chamber notes that this correction is still inconsistent with TF1-143's examination-in-chief, in which he claimed that he had not even heard Adama Cut Hand's name before he met her in Allen Town.

4741. para. 1587: Adama Cut Hand's base was in Foamex. She informed TF1-143 that he would be part of the patrol. One of her girls, Mariama, was injured, so TF1-143 took the girl's AK-47.[3655] TF1-143 testified that at the base he saw two men being brought by Adama Cut Hand's boys. She ordered the boys to hold the men's arms, and amputated one man's arm at the wrist and the other's at the elbow.[3656]

4742. para. 1588: Adama Cut Hand ordered TF1-143 and "her boys" to loot and to bring her any person who "refused or made comments against them". The witness went with a group of eight boys to Kissy.[3657] They looted a store where two men objected to the boys' behaviour. The boys took the two men to Adama Cut Hand, and she amputated their arms.[3658] During the amputations, TF1-143 pointed his weapon at the men.[3659]

4743. para. 1589: TF1-143 and "one of Adama's boys" then went on patrol to Kissy market.[3660] They knocked on the door of a shop but no one answered. After forcing the door open, TF1-143 found two men inside.[3661] Since the men had refused to open the door, TF1-143 and the other boy agreed to amputate the men's hands. TF1-143 used a machete to amputate one man at the wrist and the other at the elbow. Afterwards the boys took what they wanted from the store and left.[3662]

4744. para. 1590: They returned to Foamex, where they heard heavy shooting, and so withdrew to Allen Town, where TF1-143 hid in a mosque.[3663] After three days in hiding, TF1-143 was arrested by Nigerian soldiers and questioned by the SSD, the Sierra Leone police. They were able to locate TF1-143's brother, who retrieved him from the police.[3664]

h. Findings in Relation to Other Districts in Sierre Leone - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Factual Findings

4745. para. 1595: The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not adduced evidence of conscription or use of child soldiers in Bonthe, Moyamba, Pujehun, Bo and Kambia Districts.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law – Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

4746. para. 575: The Accused is charged with one count of other serious violations of international humanitarian law pursuant to Article 4(c) of the Statute: conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities (Count 9).

4747. para. 576: Article 4(c) of the Statute provides:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following serious violations of international humanitarian law:
> c. Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities.

4749. para. 579: The questions of whether (i) nexus existed between the alleged violation and the armed conflict, (ii) that the victim was not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation and (iii) that the perpetrator knew or had reason to know that the victim was not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged act or omission are considered on a case by case basis in the findings on the crimes section.[1328]

(ii) Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law – Findings on general requirements

4751. para. 1606: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF.[3692] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of conscription and/or enlistment into an armed force or group and/or use for active participation in hostilities of persons under the age of 15 years in the aforementioned areas of Sierra Leone there was a nexus between the conscription, enlistment and/or use and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of conscription, enlistment and/or use and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of conscription and/or enlistment into an armed force or group and/or use for active participation in hostilities of persons under the age of 15 constitute other serious violations of international humanitarian law under Article 4 of the Statute.

(iii) Applicable Law – Conscripting, Enlisting or using Child Soldiers to participate in active hostilities

4752. para. 438: In Count 9, the Indictment charges that "[b]etween about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the Accused, routinely conscripted, enlisted and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities". The Accused is thus charged with conscripting or enlisting children under the age of

15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities ("conscripting, enlisting or using child soldiers"), an 'other serious violation of international humanitarian law', punishable under Article 4(c) of the Statute.[1052]

4753. para. 439: In addition to the chapeau requirements of other serious violations of international humanitarian law pursuant to Article 4 of the Statute, the following elements of the crime of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using children under the age of 15 years to actively participate in hostilities must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

i. The perpetrator conscripted or enlisted one or more persons into an armed force or group or used one or more persons to actively participate in hostilities;[1053]

ii. Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;[1054]

iii. The perpetrator knew or should have known that such person or persons were under the age of 15 years.[1055]

4754. para. 440: The actus reus of the crime can be satisfied by 'conscripting' or 'enlisting' children under the age of 15, or by 'using' them to participate actively in the hostilities.

4755. para. 441: 'Conscription' encompasses any acts of coercion, such as abductions[1056] and forced recruitment of children by an armed group with the purpose of using them to participate actively in hostilities.[1057]

4756. para. 442: 'Enlistment' entails accepting and enrolling individuals when they volunteer to join an armed force or group.[1058] Enlistment need not be a formal process, and may include "any conduct accepting the child as part of the [armed group]. Such conduct would include making him participate in combat operations".[1059] Conscription and enlistment are both types of recruitment,[1060] and while conscription involves an element of express compulsion[1061] or coercion, this element is absent in enlistment.[1062]

4757. para. 443: The crime of enlisting or conscripting "is an offence of a continuing character – referred to by some courts as a continuous crime and by others as a permanent crime".[1063] The crime of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 continues to be committed as long as a child remains in the armed force or group and consequently ceases to be committed when the child leaves the armed group or reaches the age of 15 years.[1064]

4758. para. 444: 'Using' children to participate actively in the hostilities encompasses putting their lives directly at risk in combat,[1065] but may also include participation in activities linked to combat such carrying loads for the fighting faction, finding and/or acquiring food, ammunition or equipment, acting as decoys, carrying messages, making trails or finding routes, manning checkpoints or acting as human shields.[1066] Whether a child is actively participating in hostilities in such situations will be assessed on a case-by-case basis.

(iv) Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Legal Findings

a. Tonkolili District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders –Child soldiers

4759. para. 1367: The time period referred to Kamara, i.e. from early 1996 to May 1997, partly falls outside the jurisdiction of the Court. However it is clear from his evidence that the abductions and training occurred continuously throughout the period. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children aged below 15 years were abducted and conscripted, i.e. forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF at Kangari Hills within the Indictment period. Given the prevalence of children in the RUF the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators, including Kamara knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of the conscription of children into an armed force have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to an unknown number of children who were abducted and trained at Kangari Hills.

b. Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

i. Children abducted and trained by the RUF and AFRC at Bunumbu after ECOMOG Intervention – Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4760. para. 1377: The Trial Chamber accepts the testimony of witnesses Koker, Gbonda, Saidu, TF1-189's and TF1-362's first-hand evidence about the training of children at Bunumbu from approximately February 1998 until the end of 1998. TF1-362's evidence was unequivocal and was corroborated by Exhibit D-013. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-189 testified that the training occurred in January 1999, while TF1-362 testified that the training at Bunumbu ended in December 1998 when the RUF was flushed out of the area, and that she then went to Yengema. Given the detailed first-hand testimony of TF1-362, the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-189 must have been mistaken about timing of these events but accepts her evidence that these abductions and trainings occurred.

4761. para. 1378: The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that an unknown number of children were conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF. Moreover, based on TF1-362's evidence that the children were screened into groups of SBUs and SGUs based on their age, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that some of these children were under the age of 15 years. Further, based on evidence of this screening process, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators, including TF1-362, knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of the conscription of children into an armed force have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to an unknown number of children who were trained at Bunumbu.

ii. Abduction and training of Komba Sumana in approximately July/August 1998 – Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4762. para. 1390: On the basis of evidence given by Sumana that he was forcibly abducted from outside of Koidu Town in approximately April or May 1998 by members of the STF under the command of Superman, that he became an SBU, that he was held by the RUF for three weeks in Kissi Town, and that he was subsequently forced to participate in two months of military training at Bunumbu, Kailahun District by members of the RUF under the command of Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie ending in approximately July or August 1998, the Trial Chamber finds that Sumana was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using him actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the RUF.

4763. para. 1391: Sumana presented the Court with two official documents which appear to incompatible with each other with regard to his exact age. The voter ID card does not state his date of birth nor indicates the time and place it was issued, nor does it show the information used to support its issue, whereas Sumana's birth certificate, which he received after his voter ID card was issued, is based on actual hospital records.

4764. para. 1392: The Trial Chamber accepts that Sumana may not himself have known his exact age at the time of his abduction, he was "very small" at the time and did not yet have facial hair. His father "used to tell him" that he was 14, whereas according to his recently acquired birth certificate he was actually only 13.

4765. para. 1393: Notwithstanding the apparent inconsistency between these two official documents both show that Sumana was 13 at the time of his abduction, the Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that he was about 13 at the time of his abduction in April/May 1998. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Sumana was under the age of 15 at the time of his capture. Given the prevalence of children under the age of 15 in the RUF,[3300] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that Sumamna was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of conscription of a child under 15 years into an armed force, the RUF/AFRC under the command of Sam Bockarie, have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to Komba Sumana.

iii. Abduction and training of Edna Bangura - Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4766. para. 1398: The Trial Chamber takes into consideration Bangura's young age at the time of the events and the fact that she stopped her education in Form 5.[3310] Bangura appeared nervous and shy during her testimony. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that her description of a training base outside of Buedu where Monica Pearson was the training commander is not inconsistent with the location of the training base at Bunumbu.

4767. para. 1399: However, other reliable evidence shows that Sam Bockarie sent Monica Pearson to establish a training camp at Bunumbu only after the ECOMOG Intervention in February, 1998[3311] and that there is no evidence to suggest that Monica Pearson was at Bunumbu prior to this time. Indeed, the evidence suggests that Pearson was in Pujehun,[3312] Bonthe (Matru Jong),[3313] and Kenema Districts (Camp Lion in Zogoda) prior to leaving Sierra Leone for Liberia in 1996[3314] and did not return to Sierra Leone until just prior to the ECOMOG Intervention.[3315]

4768. para. 1400: The Trial Chamber finds this is inconsistent with Bangura's evidence that she was trained by Pearson outside of Buedu within weeks of being captured in 1994 when she was still 10 years old. Further, if Bangura is believed about the year of her capture, her alleged conscription occurred before the indictment period.

4769. para. 1401: The Trial Chamber has considered that Bangura's detailed description of her training at Bunumbu under Monica Pearson may be more reliable than her assertion of the year in which she was captured as she is a child witness with little education recalling events which occurred more than a decade ago. She is more likely to reliably recall events rather than numeric representations of time. Trial Chamber concludes that Bangura was in fact trained after February, 1998 and not in 1994 as she stated. The Trial Chamber finds this would be inconsistent with Bangura's testimony that she was born in 1984 and was not yet 11 when she was trained.

4770. para. 1402: Based on the inconsistencies in Bangura's testimony relating to the date and age at which she was abducted, the Trial Chamber cannot be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the events described by the witness occurred within the Indictment period.

iv. Abduction and training of TF1-026 from January to November/December 1999 - Kailahun District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4771. para. 1409: On the basis of TF1-026's unchallenged testimony that she was forcibly abducted from her home in Wellington and removed from her family, that she was detained by Brigadier Issa in Makeni for three weeks while doing domestic chores, that she was taken to Buedu field in Kailahun District and was militarily trained with a gun for six months; that she tried to escape and was threatened with execution, that the letters "RUF" were carved on her chest with a knife, that she was sent back to Makeni to do house chores for Brigadier Issa and his wife, the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-026 was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using her actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the RUF/AFRC. The Trial Chamber finds this conscription was perpetrated by members of the RUF under the command of Sam Bockarie and occurred in Kailahun District from approximately February or March 1999 through approximately November or December 1999.

4772. para. 1410: On the basis of the witness's testimony that she was born in 1984, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that she was 14, and thus under the age of 15 years, during her conscription and training in 1999. Given the prevalence of children under the age of 15 in the RUF, 3328 the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that TF1-026 was under the age of 15 years. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of the conscription of a child under the age of 15 years into an armed force have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to TF1-026 and that the perpetrators knew or should have known that children under the age of 15 were conscripted into the armed force.

4773. para. 1411: The Trial Chamber, however, is not satisfied that the performance of domestic chores constitutes active participation in hostilities, as these activities are not related to the hostilities and do not directly support the military operations of the armed groups, and therefore does not made a finding that the domestic chores she performed at Issa Sesay's house in Makeni shortly after her capture in 1999 constitute use of a child to participate actively in hostilities.

c. Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders– Child soldiers

i. Children abducted and trained by the AFRC and RUF between March and December 1998 - Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders–Child soldiers

4774. para. 1416: The Trial Chamber notes that Koker did not provide any basis for his estimate that the children who were captured in Koidu and who fought for the RUF were between 12 and 14 years old but that this aspect of his evidence was not challenged and that he had experience of working with children in the RUF, and therefore accepts that these children were under the age of 15. Given the prevalence of children in the RUF/AFRC, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the perpetrators, including Koker knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that an unknown number of children were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in Koidu Town and the surrounding area after 14 February 1998 and that the Prosecution have proved beyond reasonable doubt the crime of the conscription of children under the age of 15 into the RUF in Koidu Town and the surrounding area after 14 February 1998

4775. para. 1417: The Trial Chamber notes that Alice Pyne's evidence of the age of the abducted children was not challenged and that she had children herself at that time. On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the abducted children by members of the RUF/AFRC from villages near PC Ground were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the children were trained at Superman Ground and subsequently distributed to commanders.

4776. para. 1418: Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 conscripted by the RUF 3338 the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that these children was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that an unknown number of children were conscripted, i.e. forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into the RUF/AFRC from villages near PC Ground in March 1998 and in Koidu Town and surrounding area after 14 February 1998 and that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt the crime of the conscription of an unknown number of children under the age of 15 into the RUF at PC Ground and the surrounding area in March 1998 and in Koidu Town and surrounding area after 14 February 1998.

4777. para. 1419: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified about the training of children at Masingbi Road. Given his detailed account, and his lack of any motivation to lie in relation to this evidence, the Trial Chamber considers his testimony to be reliable in relation to this incident. Bobson Sesay testified that he knew the children trained at Masingbi Road were between 8 and 12 because the children were "mustered" and information about each recruit, including their names and ages, was recorded by one of the training commanders. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that these children were under the age of 15 years. On the basis of Bobson Sesay's evidence the Trial Chamber finds that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 were conscripted, i.e. forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the RUF/AFRC between mid-March and April 1998 at Masingbi Road. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that, given this registration process, the members of the AFRC who were involved in training the children, including Bobson Sesay, knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of conscription of persons under the age of 15 years into an armed force have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to an unknown number of children who were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC at Masingbi Road from mid-March to April 1998.

4778. para. 1420: However, the Trial Chamber finds that Bobson Sesay's evidence regarding the training given by other SLA and RUF commanders in parts of Kono other than Masingbi Road is insufficiently specific as to the dates of the training and the ages of the "SBUs" that were trained.

4780. para. 1422: Based on his evidence that these children were trained on how to use weapons, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF/AFRC conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, these children into their armed force. Moreover, based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15

conscripted by the AFRC/RUF,[3340] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC and RUF knew or should have known that these children was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that an unknown number of children were conscripted into the RUF in or about April 1998 in Kono District and that the elements of the crime of the conscription of children under the age of 15 into the AFRC and RUF have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

ii. Children trained by the AFRC and RUF after December 1998 in Yengema – Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders– Child soldiers

4781. para. 1424: The Trial Chamber has previously found that TF1-362's detailed account of the training of children at various bases in Sierra Leone is credible.[3347] In this instance, the Trial Chamber finds that, based on TF1-362's direct evidence of the training of children at Yengema from approximately December 1998, that children were conscripted, i.e. forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the RUF/AFRC. Moreover, based on TF1-362's evidence that the children were screened into groups of SBUs and SGUs based on their age, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that some of these children were under the age of 15 years, and that the perpetrators, including TF1-362, knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under 15 years were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC, an armed force in December 1998 at Yengema.

iii. Abduction, training and use of TF1-143 in September 1998 – Kono District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders– Child soldiers

4782. para. 1430: On the basis of TF1-143's testimony that he was forcibly abducted from a house in Konkoba in Koinadugu District; that he was marked on the chest with the letters "RUF" by a rebel commander named Kabila, that he was assigned to Kabila and taken to Koinadugu, that he was trained by Kabila to dismantle and put together a weapon; that he later underwent a second training in the jorbush near Koinadugu in which he learned how to operate a weapon, the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-143 was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using him actively in hostilities, into an armed group the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from TF1-143's description that this occurred in approximately September 1998.

4783. para. 1431: Other than TF1-143 writing down his date of birth, no official document was introduced to corroborate this date. However, the witness was confident about his age, and about the fact that he was in Form Four at the time of his abduction, and was not challenged regarding his age during cross-examination. Moreover, he looked young at the time he gave evidence in 2008 ten years after the incidents he testified about. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the witness was 12 years old at the time of his abduction, and thus under the age of 15 years during his abduction and training. Finally, on the basis of the prevalence of the military training of children under the age of 15 years by the AFRC/RUF, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that the witness was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution have proved beyond a reasonable doubt that TF1-143, a child under 15 years was conscripted into the RUF/AFRC, an armed force in September 1998 at Konkoba

4784. para. 1432: The crime of conscription continues as long as the child remains within the armed forces or reaches the age of 15 years.[3366] TF1-143 testified that he remained with the AFRC/RUF until he was arrested by Nigerian armed forces after the Freetown attack in January 1999. The Trial Chamber finds, therefore, that TF1-143's conscription in the AFRC/RUF continued until January 1999.

d. Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

i. Children trained at Camp Rosos and used by the AFRC in July 1998 – Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4785. para. 1434: On the basis that children were abducted by SLAs during an attack on Karina in July 1998 and that they were trained militarily for three weeks at Camp Rosos by AFRC/RUF members, including the witness, the Trial Chamber finds that an unknown number of children were conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using them actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF under the command of SAJ Musa in Karina in July 1998. While Bobson Sesay provided no basis for his estimation that the SBUs who were trained at Rosos were between 8 and 12 years old. However the Trial Chamber notes that he was not challenged on this evidence and that he was involved in the training of children of similar ages recorded at Masingbi Road, and was therefore familiar with the physical appearance of children in this age range. Moreover, given that Bobson Sesay testified that the children were aged between 8 and 12, it is reasonable to infer that the children must have been very young. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that these children were under the age of 15 years, and that the perpetrators, including the witness, knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years and, accordingly, have proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were abducted and conscripted into the AFRC/RUF in July 1998 at Camp Ross, Bombali District.

ii. Children taken from care centre in Makeni in May 2000 and continued recruitment until 2001 - Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4786. para. 1438: On the basis of the witness's evidence that he witnessed the RUF fighters taking more than 100 children from the centre, which is corroborated in part by Exhibit P-334, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the RUF abducted these children. Given the RUF commanders had previously demanded that their child "fighters" be returned the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the RUF intended to use these children in combat. The Trial Chamber cannot determine, on the basis of this evidence, whether the group of over 100 children were forcibly taken or whether they rejoined the RUF voluntarily. However as it is a crime under Article 4(c) to conscript or enlist children under the age of 15 years into an armed force it is irrelevant whether the children left voluntarily or under duress. While TF1-174 did not testify about the age of the specific children who were abducted, the Trial Chamber is satisfied, based on TF1-174's testimony that 60-70% of the majority of the children at the interim care centre were below the age of 14 years, and on the basis that the centre kept records documenting the ages of these children, that some of these children were under the age of 15 years. Further, based on the prevalence of children under the age 15 who fought with the RUF, and the familiarity of the RUF commanders with these particular children, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the RUF fighters knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under 15 years were conscripted into the RUF, an armed force in May 2000 at Makeni.

4787. para. 1439: The witness did not personally observe the next 100 children being taken by RUF fighters, as he was in Freetown at the time, he only noted that there were approximately 100 fewer children at the centre upon his return. He was also told that 45 had been taken to fight in Lunsar. This evidence is hearsay but it is corroborated by TF1-174's observation that children were missing and the evidence of the RUF requiring the return of child fighters from the Centre. As it is crime under Article 4(c) to conscript or enlist children under the age of 15 years into an armed force it is irrelevant whether the 45 children were taken voluntarily or under duress. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution have proved beyond a reasonable doubt that a further unknown number of children under 15 years were conscripted into the RUF, an armed force in May 2000 at Makeni.

iii. Abduction and training of TF1-158 in 1998 - Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers 4788. para. 1445: On the basis of TF1-158's testimony that he was forcibly abducted from Bonoya, Bombali District a few months before the attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999, that he was taken to Rosos while being forced to carry items looted from civilians; the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-158 was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using him actively in hostilities, into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF under the command of SAJ Musa. The Trial Chamber finds this conscription occurred in the Bombali District for an unspecified number of months before December 1998.

4789. para. 1446: Based on the witness's testimony that he was ten years old at the time of his capture, the Trial Chamber finds that he was under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of children under the age 15 who were militarily trained by members of the AFRC/RUF at Camp Rosos, 3385 the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that TF1-158 was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution have proved beyond a reasonable doubt that TF1-158 a child under 15 years was conscripted into the AFRC/RUF, an armed force in Bonoya in late 1998.

iv. Abduction and Training of TF1-158 in approximately July 1999 – Bombali District – Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4790. para. 1449: On the basis of the testimony provided by TF1-158, that he was forcibly abducted from Kamayusufu, Bombali District after the Lomé Peace Accord and that he was militarily trained in Kamabai, Bombali District by members of the AFRC, the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-158 was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using him actively in hostilities into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber finds this conscription was perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF under the command of Savage and occurred in Bombali District from approximately July, 1999 through August, 1999.

4791. para. 1450: Based on the witness's testimony that he was 10 years old when he was captured in approximately September 1998 and that he was 10 years old during his training, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that he was under the age of 15 years during his second abduction and training in July-August 1999. On the basis of the prevalence of children under the age of 15 given military training by the AFRC,[3391] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC knew or should have known that TF1-158 was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that TF1-158 a child under the age of 15 years was conscripted into an armed force.

e. Port Loko District - Conscription and Enlistment of Child Solders – Child soldiers

4792. para. 1453: On the basis of the evidence given by Tholley that she was forcibly abducted from her home in Wellington in late January, 1999; given weapons to carry to Allen Town; detained by James in Masiaka from approximately April through May, 1999; that she unsuccessfully tried to flee and was given narcotics by James and that James taught her to use an AK-47 and a pistol; and that during this time she was given military training in Port Loko District, the Trial Chamber finds that Tholley was conscripted, i.e. abducted and forcedly recruited with the purpose of using him actively in hostilities, into an armed group. The Trial Chamber finds this conscription was perpetrated by members of the AFRC under the command of Santigie Borbor Kanu.

4793. para. 1454: Although Tholley testified that she does not know her date of birth, the Trial Chamber is satisfied from her confirmation on re-examination that she was 19 years old at the time of the interview in February/March 2005 (making her not older than 13 in February/March 1999, shortly after her abduction) and from her own description that she had not yet had her menses when she was raped, that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Tholley was less than 14 years old at the time of her conscription in January 1999.

4794. para. 1455: Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 conscripted by the AFRC/RUF, 3398 the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC knew or should have known that Tholley was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of conscription of children under 15 have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

4795. para. 1456: The crime of conscription under Art 4(c) continues as long as the child remains within the armed forces or reaches the age of 15 years.[3399] Tholley testified that she was later taken to Kurubonla in Koinadugu District to fight, although she was unable to recall when this was,[3400] and that she surrendered to ECOMOG at Lunsar shortly thereafter.[3401] The Trial Chamber is unable to determine with precision when this occurred. It accordingly finds that Tholley's conscription occurred from the time of her abduction in January, 1999 until at least April/May 1999.

(v) Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4796. para. 1459: The guarding of military objectives amounts to active participation in hostilities. 3408 This Trial Chamber has previously held that in the conflict in Sierra Leone, where diamonds were mined and sold to raise revenue to finance war efforts, the use of a child to guard a diamond mine put the child at sufficient risk to constitute illegal use of the child pursuant to Article 4(c) of the Statute.[3409] Control over the diamond mines in Kono and Kenema Districts was crucial for the war effort of all armed groups in the conflict. As the diamond mines were in highly contested and strategic locations, the Trial Chamber finds that they were potential military targets for the warring factions. The Trial Chamber finds that due to the high risk of enemy attacks, those children who were used to guard the mines were in direct danger of being caught in hostilities. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that those children who were used to guard the mines were being used to actively participate in hostilities.[3410] Based on the evidence, and on the context in which this mining occurred, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these children were used by members of the RUF and AFRC who knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years.

a. Kenema District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4797. para. 1467: TF1-567 estimated that the children who he saw guarding the mines were aged from "14 upwards", Mallah estimated the children "[t]hey were about ten years, 12 years,

15 years, you know". Witnesses TF1-567, TF1-371 and Mallah were members of the RUF, knew of the abduction of children and were aware of the ages of those targeted. Conteh indicated that the children were "12 to 15" years of age. The Trial Chamber accepts his estimate as he was the father of three children and had been a secondary school teacher for several years prior to his capture.[3439] The evidence of TF1-375 corroborates the foregoing testimony that children were used in guarding mining. Each of these witnesses gave credible evidence of the ages of the children they saw and this evidence was not challenged in cross-examination. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that children under the age of 15 years were used by the AFRC and RUF during the Junta period to guard mining sites in Tongo Fields and that the members of the AFRC and RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of using persons under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to an unknown number of children in Tongo Fields between May 1997 and February 1998.

4798. para. 1468: The Trial Chamber notes that Conteh did not give any evidence regarding the age of the specific child combatants who killed civilians in Tongo Fields and therefore finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that these killings were committed by children under the age of 15 years. However the Trial Chamber accepts his evidence that the children who accompanied Sam Bockarie were between 12 and 14 and therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the children who accompanied Sam Bockarie to collect diamonds, were under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the AFRC/RUF as bodyguards, the Trial Chamber is also satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber finds that safeguarding the physical safety of military commanders, in particular where children are used as bodyguards, constitutes using children to participate actively in hostilities.[3440] The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that children under the age of 15 years were used by the AFRC and RUF during the Junta period to guard mining sites in Tongo Fields and to collect diamonds produced by civilians working in those mining sites. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF and AFRC the Trial Chamber further finds that the members of the AFRC and RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the elements of the crime of using children to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this evidence.

4799. para. 1470: The Trial Chamber notes that Bao gave evidence that the boys at Hangh Road were aged 12 to 18. When asked how he knew the ages of the children, Bao responded, "I am a father of so many children, so I know who is 12, who is 15, who is 18".[3447] Bao testified similarly in the RUF trial, stating, "I am the father of many children, so I know when a child is 12 and above; I know".[3448] Bao was not challenged on his estimates of the children's ages in cross-examination in either trial.

4800. para. 1471: However, Bao did not give any evidence about the ages of the particular children who were involved in extorting money, nor did he give other specific examples of such incidents. With respect to the incident involving the attack of the woman, the witness did not identify the age of the assailants, nor whether it was the "small boys" with Issa Sesay who had attacked her.[3449]

4801. para. 1472: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the children involved in extorting money in Hangh Road or who attacked the woman were under the age of 15 years.

b. Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4802. para. 1476: Although TF1-362 and TF1-189 did not specify the ages of the children who were sent to the frontlines the Trial Chamber is satisfied that this evidence relates to those children who were trained and some of whom were under the age of 15. Koker also testified that SBUs were sent to the war front, and later clarified that SBUs could be defined as a unit of small boys aged 7 to 14. Koker ascertained the ages of children who were trained at Bunumbu by asking them their ages. Further, based on the prevalence of children under the age 15 who fought with the RUF, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. None of the witnesses specified the role that the children played at the front line, nor the duties they undertook while they were there, nor did they state if these children were armed. However the Trial Chamber notes that the evidence that children were sent and/or taken to the frontlines was not challenged and that "frontlines" was used in evidence to refer to the fighting area. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the lives of these children were put at risk by sending them to the fighting areas, and becoming a military target. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that children under the age of 15 years were used to actively participate in hostilities.

4803. para. 1477: Koker also testified that children trained at Bunumbu were used to do domestic chores. The Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the performance of domestic chores constitutes active participation in hostilities, as these activities are not related to the hostilities and do not directly support the military operations of the armed groups

4805. para. 1479: The Trial Chamber concurs that not every instance in which a child participated in a food-finding mission constitutes active participation in hostilities. However, to the extent that a food-finding mission may be considered "activities linked to combat", that is, where there is a clear link between the mission and the hostilities, the child's active participation in such a mission may constitute "use". In the context of food-finding missions in which children carried arms and committed crimes against civilians, the Trial Chamber finds that such activities constitute active participation in hostilities.

4806. para. 1480: TF1-362 testified that children were sent on food-finding missions with other recruits armed with knives and sticks, and that they beat and killed civilians if they met with resistance. She also sent her own 10 year old SBU, armed with a gun on one such mission.

4807. para. 1481: TF1-362 did not testify as to the exact ages of those people who were sent on such missions. The Trial Chamber has accepted her evidence that the SBUs trained at Bunumbu were as young as 7. Given her testimony that SBUs including her own 10 years old armed SBU, were sent on food finding missions the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that some of the children were under the age of 15 years. As those who were sent on such missions had already been screened by age the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrators, including TF1-362, knew or should have known that children under the age of 15 years were sent on these food-finding missions and that they armed with knives and sticks.

4808. para. 1482: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children who were sent on food-finding missions from Bunumbu between February to December 1998 were used to participate actively in hostilities.

i. Use as bodyguards - Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4809. para. 1485: The Trial Chamber notes that Kargbo did not give any evidence about the age of the children who were involved in his flogging, indicating solely that they were "SBUs". Moreover, the witness did not mention that the flogging had been perpetrated by SBUs in any previous statements, and the Trial Chamber finds that his explanation that the Prosecution forgot to record this, is unconvincing. Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that the children involved in this incident were under the age of 15 years.

4810. para. 1486: Gbonda stated in his evidence that whilst he was Deputy Chiefdom commander from 1996 – 2000 he saw children, some aged eight, nine and ten, following commanders and carrying guns. Gbonda's evidence of the age of the children was not challenged and he is the father of several children, five of whom died during the time of the hostilities.[3462] The Trial Chamber accepts his evidence and finds that the children he saw were aged less than 15 years. The Trial Chamber finds that as these children were armed with guns they were taking part in armed hostilities. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF and AFRC the Trial Chamber further finds that the members of the AFRC and RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 Years. The Trial Chamber is therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that these children were used to participate actively in hostilities between 1996 to 2000 in Kailahun.

ii. Edna Bangura - Kailahun District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

c. Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Children committing crimes in Kono in February/March 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4812. para. 1489: Although the witness was not precise as to the age of the boy and could not tell whether or not he had an Adam's apple[3470] her evidence as to his size and estimated age was not challenged. The Trial Chamber considers that, as a mother of four children,[3471] her estimation is based on experience of young children. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the child who committed these crimes was under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the AFRC/RUF to commit crimes,[3472] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that the boy was under the age of 15 years.

4813. para. 1490: The Trial Chamber finds that the use of this child to amputate the hands of five men and chop Kamara's arm constitutes active participation in hostilities and that the elements of the crime of the use of children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities by the AFRC/RUF have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the context that this event occurred in Sawoa, Kono Province in February/March 1998 after the AFRC/RUF retreat from Freetown.

ii. Children used for food-finding missions at Superman Ground in July 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4814. para. 1492: While Exhibit P-051 lists the names of three individuals who are designated as "SBUs" who were sent to get food, it does not indicate their age. While Kamara testified that SBUs were between 12 and 15 years old, he did not provide any evidence about the age of these particular SBUs. Moreover, although Kamara was at Superman Ground at the time at which this roll record was written, he does not testify that he personally witnessed these food-finding missions.

4815. para. 1493: In addition, the exhibit does not indicate whether the SBUs who went on these missions were armed. Although Kamara testifies that the list indicates those who would provide security and those who had weapons (i.e. AK-47), the names of the SBUs do not specify that they were allocated weapons. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the children sent on these missions were under the age of 15 years, nor that these food-finding missions constitute active participation in hostilities.

iii. Children used to guard mining in Tombodu in December 1999 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4816. para. 1495: Exhibit P-196 shows that Ngekia was challenged on his evidence of the ages of the children who were guarding the mining at Tombodu in December 1999. He stated "when you look at them in the face you will know that they were children" and "[i]t's easy to recognise a child. All of them were 10 years, 11 years – all of them were under 15".[3486] He also stated that he was the father of six children.[3487] Given his clear observations and his experience as the father of children the Trial Chamber accepts his evidence as to the age of the children at the mine and therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that these children were under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 being conscripted and used by the RUF the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that these children was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber has previously held that, in these circumstances, children who were used to guard the mines were being used to participate actively in hostilities. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children who were used to guard mining in Tombudu in December 1999 were used to participate actively in hostilities.

iv. Children used in Koidu in 2001 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4817. para. 1497: TF1-174's evidence is hearsay, which is uncorroborated. Moreover, the evidence is inconclusive whether the specific duties were performed by children whose ages were below 15 years. The Trial Chamber is therefore, not satisfied that the elements of the crime of the use of children to actively participate in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this evidence.

v. Children used in Kono in March/April 1998 - Kono District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4818. para. 1502: Alimamy Bobson Sesay provided evidence which the Trial Chamber has already accepted that the SBUs who were trained were between 8 to 12 years. Therefore, based on his knowledge and experience of the age of SBUs, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the children who amputated the limbs of civilians in Tombodu and Yomandu and captured girls aged 8 to 10 years of age at Masingbi Road and detained them for sexual purposes were under the age of 15 years and that they were used to participate actively in hostilities. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 being used by the RUF/AFRC to commit crimes the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF/AFRC knew or should have known that these children was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of using persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities by the AFRC/RUF have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to an unknown number of children from early to mid-1998 in Yomandu, Tombodu and Masingbi Road.

4819. para. 1503: Tamba Teh testified that the SBUs were "small boys below the ages of 16, 15, right down". He described some of the boys who Rocky ordered to decapitate civilians as so small that they "could not even lift their guns up except that they drag the guns on the ground".[3500] When asked about the age of the boy whose hands and feet were amputated, the witness responded, "[w]ell, I can't say I know exactly, but I am also a father and I know what age a child is[…]"[3501] In cross-examination, Tamba Teh was not questioned about the ages of the SBUs. The Trial Chamber accepts the witness's observation on the size and age of the children who perpetrated the crimes and his personal experience as a father in assessing a child's age and finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the children who decapitated those people killed by Rocky and the children who amputated a young boy were under the age of 15. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the RUF/AFRC to commit crimes, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF/AFRC knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that children under 15 years were used to participate actively in hostilities by members of the RUF/AFRC in relation to each of these incidents. As Tamba Teh testified that these incidents occurred after ECOMOG had driven the RUF/AFRC from Kono District, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it occurred in around April 1998.[3502]

4820. para. 1504: Samuel Bull was not challenged on his evidence that the boy who was ordered to kill him was 14. The Trial Chamber also notes that he is the father of five children,[3503] some of whom were in their teens at the time of this incident. The Trial Chamber therefore accepts his evidence and finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the child was under the age of 15. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the RUF to commit crimes, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF knew or should have known that this child was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the child who was ordered to kill Bull by Issa Sesay was used to participate actively in hostilities. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of using persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities by the AFRC/RUF have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this incident in mid-April 1998 at Tongbodu.

4821. para. 1505: Cole did not give any evidence about the ages of the boys who participated in the attack on Bombafoidu beyond saying that they were small and did not give any reason for his belief that the boy who asked him to undress was between 12 and 14 years old but he was not challenged on this evidence. The Trial Chamber accepts his evidence and therefore finds that it has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that this child was under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 being used by the AFRC/RUF the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that children who ordered to Cole to undress were used to participate actively in hostilities.

d. Port Loko District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Use of Akiatu Tholley to participate in hostilities in April/May 1999 - Port Loko District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4822. para. 1509: The Trial Chamber recalls that it has found that in the context of food-finding missions in which children carried arms and/or committed crimes against civilians, that such activities constitute active participation in hostilities.[3513] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that when Tholley was sent on a food-finding mission during which she looted civilian property, used a weapon and killed a civilian woman in April or May 1999, she was actively participating in hostilities. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF/AFRC the Trial Chamber further finds that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the elements of the crime of using children to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this evidence.

e. Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Use of child soldiers in Koinadugu District - Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4823. para. 1512: Mansaray was not challenged on his estimation of the ages of the armed children that he saw with the People's Army in February to mid-March 1998. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness was the father of eight children including a child who was 12 or 13 years at the time of the incidents.[3521] The Trial Chamber accepts his evidence and therefore finds that it has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that some of the armed children seen by Mansaray and those children burning houses were under the age of 15 years. As these children were travelling with the Peoples Army and were armed, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they were taking an active part in hostilities. Further, based on the prevalence of children under the age 15 who fought with the AFRC/RUF forces, also referred to as the People's Army, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years was used to participate actively in hostilities in Koinadugu District between March and May 1998.

ii. Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

iii. Akiatu Tholley used to participate actively in hostilities after April or May 1999 - Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4824. para. 1516: On the basis of Tholley's evidence that she fought with "the rebels" against Kamajors and civilians, that she personally killed civilians and looted property while carrying a gun, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Tholley actively participated in hostilities and was used as a child soldier by members of the AFRC/RUF. The Trial Chamber has previously found that Tholley was under the age of 15 during this time and that the perpetrators knew or should have known that she was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Akiatu Tholley, a child under the age of 15 years, was used to participate actively in hostilities in Koinadugu District after April or May 1999.

iv. Use of TF1-143 to participate in hostilities in September 1998

Findings on victim witness in Koinadugu District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4825. para. 1519: The Trial Chamber recalls that it has found that in the context of food-finding missions in which children carried arms and/or committed crimes against civilians, that such activities constitute active participation in hostilities.[3532] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that when TF1-143 went on a food-finding mission shortly after he was captured with Kabila and other fighters, during which he was ordered to rape a women, constitutes active participation in hostilities. The Trial Chamber has previously found that TF1-143 was under the age of 15 and that members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that he was under the age of 15. Trial Chamber accordingly is satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that TF1-143, child under the age of 15 years was used to participate actively in hostilities in Koinadugu District in or about September 1998.

f. Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4826. para. 1522: The Trial Chamber has already found that the children abducted and trained in Karina and Camp Rosos in July 1998 were under the age of 15 years.[3536] The Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the performance of domestic chores constitutes active participation in hostilities, as these activities were not related to the hostilities and did not directly support the military operations of the armed groups. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the use of the children to perform "small works" for the commanders' wives does not constitute active participation in hostilities.

4827. para. 1523: However, the Trial Chamber finds that given the military purpose and the presence of adult fighters, children who took part in patrols, including food-finding missions, and ambushes with the SLAs were actively participating in hostilities.[3537] Therefore, on the basis of the evidence that the SBUs trained at Camp Rosos were used to participate in ambushes, patrols, and food-finding missions, and participated in attacks on armed forces, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that these children were used to participate actively in hostilities. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that AFRC/RUF members who had trained and lived with the SBUs at Camp Rosos and who took children on these missions knew or should have that the children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber accordingly is satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years, were used to participate actively in hostilities in Bombali District in or about July 1998.

4828. para. 1524: Further, the Trial Chamber finds that carrying arms and ammunition constitutes active participation in hostilities, as this activity is related to the hostilities and directly supports the military operations of the armed group.[3538] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the children who Bobson Sesay saw with O-Five in September to October 1998, who were carrying ammunition for the rebels, were actively participating in hostilities. While Bobson Sesay provided no basis for his estimation that the SBUs who were trained at Rosos were between 8 and 10 years old, the Trial Chamber notes that he was not challenged on this evidence and that he was involved in the training of children of similar ages at Masingbi Road, and was therefore familiar with the physical appearance of children in this age range. The Trial Chamber has found that these events occurred in August/September 1998.[3539] The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years, were used to participate actively in hostilities in Bombali District on or about August/September 1998.

ii. Children committing crimes after ECOMOG Intervention 1998 / Children as bodyguards to commanders and committing crimes during Operation Pay Yourself (February 1998) - Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4829. para. 1526: The Trial Chamber finds that whilst TF1-174 did not testify about the age of the specific children who carried arms, acted as bodyguards to commanders, and who were involved in looting, the Trial Chamber is satisfied, based on TF1-174's testimony that the majority of the children at Teko Barracks were under the age of 14/15, that most of these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber has found that in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, that the use of children to commit crimes against civilians and/or safeguard the physical safety of military commanders, both constitute active participation in hostilities.[3543] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that those children from Teko Barracks who acted as bodyguards to commanders and engaged in looting were used by the RUF and AFRC to participate actively in hostilities. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF/AFRC the Trial Chamber finds that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber accordingly is satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years, were used to participate actively in hostilities at Teko Barracks in February 1998. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the elements of the crime of using children to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this evidence.

iii. Children committing crimes after ECOMOG Intervention 1998 / Children participating in burnings and amputations in Rosos between July and October 1998 - Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers 4830. para. 1528: The Trial Chamber has found that in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, that the use of children to commit crimes against civilians constitutes active participation in hostilities.[3545] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that those children from Camp Rosos who participated in burnings and amputations were used by the AFRC/RUF to actively participate in hostilities. The Trial Chamber has already found that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that children who were trained at Camp Rosos were under the age of 15 years, and that AFRC/RUF members who used them to participate in food-finding missions, and to commit crimes against civilians knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an unknown number of children under the age of 15 years, were used to participate actively in hostilities at Rosos between July and October 1998.

4831. para. 1529: The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of the use of children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt at Camp Rosos in July-October 1998.

iv. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Use of Komba Sumana to participate actively in hostilities from approximately August to December 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4832. para. 1540: Although Sumana did not testify to the exact nature of his participation in the hostilities described, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of his testimony that he was an

"SBU", that he carried a gun, that he marched together with the troops from Kailahun to Kono District; that he was present and fought during attacks carried out by RUF/AFRC rebels under the command of Superman against enemy forces at Mongo Bendugu; Kabala in Koinadugu District and at Binkolo and Makeni in Bombali District during the period of approximately August through December 1998, and that he acted as a bodyguard to a rebel named "Blood" that Sumana was used to participate actively in hostilities.

4833. para. 1541: The Trial Chamber has previously found that it was satisfied that Sumana's date of birth was 10 August 1984. It is therefore satisfied that during the period from August to December 1998, the witness was 14 years old and thus under the age of 15 years. Based on the prevalence of the use of children under the age of 15 for active participation in hostilities by the RUF/AFRC,[3567] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the RUF/AFRC knew or should have known that Sumana was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of the use of a child under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

v. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Training and Use of TF1-158 to participate actively in hostilities from approximately in 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers 4834. para. 1546: The Trial Chamber considers that the removal and carrying away of looted goods is a foreseeable and integral part of the appropriation of the private property of a civilian. The taking and resultant carrying away of the property has a direct nexus with the conflict and the use of children to carry loads constitutes active participation in hostilities, as these activities were related to the hostilities. The Trial Chamber has found that in the context of food-finding missions in which children carried arms constitutes active participation in hostilities.[3578] The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the use of the witness to go on an armed food-finding mission to loot food from civilians, in Rosos after September 1998 constituted active participation in hostilities. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF/AFRC the Trial Chamber further finds that the members of the AFRC/RUF who used the witness knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years.

4835. para. 1547: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of the use of TF1-158, a child under the age of 15 years, to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

vi. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / Use TF1-158 to participate actively in hostilities in approximately July 1999 - Findings on victim witness in Bombali District - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers 4836. para. 1553: The Trial Chamber accepts TF1-158's evidence that he went with a group to attack Kabala while he was carrying a gun; that hostilities erupted between the two sides; that he was in the line of fire and therefore had to hide in a gutter and hide his gun. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-158 actively participated in hostilities and was used as a child soldier by members of the AFRC/RUF under the command of Issa Sesay and Denis Mingo in the Bombali District after 7 July 1999. On the basis of the witness's unchallenged testimony that he was 10 years old when he was captured in approximately September 1998, and during his training in July-August 1999, and based on his testimony that he was 11 years old when he disarmed in 1999 and was acknowledged as a "child combatant" on his surrender at Kabala, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that he was under the age of 15 years at the time of this attack. Based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the AFRC/RUF in hostilities,[3591] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that TF1-158 was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of the use of TF1-158 a child under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities in Bombali District at an unknown date after 7 July 1999 have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

vii. Findings on victim witness in Bombali District / TF1-143 used to participate actively in hostilities from approximately September to December 1998 - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers 4837. para. 1564: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness omitted to mention both Kabila's heavy gun, and the Red Lion group in previous statements to the Prosecution. However, it notes that the witness was very young at the time that he gave his statements and had experienced traumatic events while given narcotics, and therefore finds that his explanation that he began to recollect more about the events that occurred as the interviews progressed to be convincing. The Trial Chamber has therefore accepted TF1-143's testimony.

evidence that he killed four civilians at a village near Karina on Kabila's orders; that he partook in the capture of a girl who was then raped by Komba at a village near Colonel Eddie Town, that he set fire to a deserted house in a village near Colonel Eddie Town; and that he carried some of Kabila's ammunition and his gun during the journey from Koinadugu to Colonel Eddie Town to be credible. Based on the prevalence of children being conscripted and used by the RUF/AFRC the Trial Chamber further finds that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years was used to participate actively in hostilities by members of the AFRC/RUF.

g. Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

i. Children committing crimes in Freetown and the Western Area during and after January 1999 - Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers

4839. para. 1573: The Trial Chamber finds that the information contained in Exhibits P-077, P-335, P-310 and P-328 on the prevalence of children used by the rebels forces during the attack on Freetown, is based on hearsay and does not give sufficient information of the locations, times and perpetrators to return a finding in relation to the crime of the use of children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities. However, this evidence may corroborate other findings on specific incidents. Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence did not provide the age range of the children used to capture young girls but the Trial Chamber notes its findings above that Alimamy Bobson Sesay trained SBUs and that these units were made up of children aged 5-17. The Trial Chamber finds that TF1-174's account, which is based on hearsay and is uncorroborated, is insufficient to make findings on any specific incident of the use of child soldiers, particularly as TF1-174 provides no information about the ages of the children to whom he spoke.

4840. para. 1574: TF1-023 did not provide any evidence about the age of the "rebel boy" with the gun who captured her in Calaba on 22 January 1999. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has not been established that this boy was under the age of 15 years. While she indicates that the children who guarded her and the other captives in Allen Town were aged 13 to 15 years old, in cross-examination in the AFRC trial, TF1-023 was questioned about the ages of the small boys and testified, "I could not tell their actual age because I didn't ask them for their ages. So I only guessed".[3632] The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that these children were under the age of 15.

4841. para. 1575: The Trial Chamber notes that Mohamed Sesay's evidence was not challenged and that he testified that he is the father of four children.[3633] The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the "boy" who assaulted Sesay was under the age of 15 years at the time of this attack and, based on the prevalence of children under the age of 15 used by the AFRC/RUF in hostilities,[3634] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC/RUF knew or should have known that the boy who assaulted Mohamed Sesay was under the age of 15 years. The Trial Chamber recalls that it has found that in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, the use of children to commit crimes against civilians constitutes active participation in hostilities.[3635] Accordingly the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that a child under the age of 15 years was used to participate actively in hostilities by members of the AFRC/RUF by assaulting and amputating the hands of Mohamed Sesay in January 1999 in Freetown.

ii. Children used by the AFRC and RUF after 6 January 1999 - Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities –Child soldiers

4842. para. 1581: The Trial Chamber finds that the information contained in Exhibits P-310 and P-077 is based on hearsay and is inconclusive whether the missing children were abducted by any of the warring factions. Bobson Sesay and Conteh's accounts corroborate each other that, in the period after the Freetown attack children were present at Benguema, carried guns, and accompanied commanders. As Conteh testifies that these children were wearing military uniforms, and were sent to flog civilians, and as Bobson Sesay testifies that they were sent on patrol, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these children were used to actively participate in hostilities. Conteh testified that the children were between 10 and 14, and Bobson Sesay testified that they were between 8 and 12, placing them in approximately the same age range. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that some of the children who were trained at Benguema and who accompanied commanders during this time were under the age of 15 years. On the basis of the prevalence of the military training of children under the age of 15 by the AFRC and RUF,[3644] the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the members of the AFRC and RUF knew or should have known that these children were under the age of 15 years. Further, based on Bobson Sesay's evidence that these children were trained militarily by their commanders, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these children were conscripted into an armed group, the AFRC/RUF.

4843. para. 1582: The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that an unknown number of children were used to participate actively in hostilities by the RUF/AFRC forces in Benguema from the end of January until March 1999. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the elements of the crime of conscripting of children under the age of 15 years into armed forces and of the crime of the use of children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

h. Findings on victim witness in Freetown and the Western Area / TF1-143 used to actively participate in hostilities in January 1999 - Findings on victim witness in Freetown and the Western Area - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Child soldiers 4844. para. 1591: The Trial Chamber notes that the witness gave prior statements to the Prosecution which are inconsistent on the material issue of whether he had met Adama Cut Hand in Koinadugu, or whether he had met her for the first time in Freetown in 1999. The witness was very young at the time that he gave his statements, and had endured traumatic events. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that the witness corrected the record of when he first met Adama Cut Hand in a subsequent interview to the Prosecution, stating that he had first met her in Freetown. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied, that despite these inconsistencies, the witness is credible, and that his detailed account of his participation in atrocities during the Freetown attack in January 1999 can be relied upon. Accordingly the Trial Chamber finds that TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years, carried looted ammunition, looted a store, held a gun to facilitate Adama Cut Hand amputating the arms of two civilian men, with another child amputated the arms of two civilian men and looted their store.

4845. para. 1592: The Trial Chamber recalls that it has found that in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, the use of children to commit crimes against civilians, and to carry arms and ammunition constitutes active participation in hostilities.[3665] Given that the Trial Chambers has found that TF1-143 has committed crimes and carried ammunition the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that TF1-143 was used to participate actively in hostilities in Freetown in January 1999.

4846. para. 1593: The Trial Chamber has previously found that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that TF1-143 was under the age of 15 at the time at which these events occurred, and that the perpetrators knew or should have known that he was under the age of 15 years.

4847. para. 1594: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of the use of a child under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities has been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this evidence.

i. Findings in Relation to Other Districts in Sierre Leone - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Legal Conclusions

4848. See above: Chapter 9 – Taylor – Trial Judgement – Factual Findings - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities - Findings in Relation to Other Districts in Sierre Leone - paras. 1595 [4745].

j. Summary of Legal Findings - Using Children to Actively Participate in Hostilities – Legal Conclusions

4849. para. 1596: Based on the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that the requirements of Count 9 have been established with respect to the following:

i. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the RUF in Kangari Hills between 30 November 1996 and May 1997;

ii. Komba Sumana, a child under the age of 15 years, was conscripted into the RUF/AFRC under the command of Superman from April/May 1998 to 10 August 1999 when he was abducted in Koidu, Kono District and trained in Kailahun District;

iii. TF1-026, a child under the age of 15 years, was conscripted into the RUF/AFRC from February/March 1999 to November/December 1999 when she was abducted in Freetown and trained in Kailahun District;

iv. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC between February 1998 and December 1998 when they were abducted and trained at Bunumbu, Kailahun District;

v. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC from December 1998 onwards in Yengema, Kono District;

vi. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in March 1998 and trained at Superman Ground, Kono District;

vii. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in February 1998 in Koidu Town;

viii. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the AFRC/RUF after April 1998 between Woama and Baima, Kono District;

ix. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were conscripted into the AFRC/RUF from mid-March 1998 to April 1998 and trained at Masingbi Road, Kono District;

x. TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years, was conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in approximately September 1998 in Koinadugu District;

xi. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were abducted at Karina and conscripted into the AFRC/RUF in July 1998 at Camp Rosos, Bombali District;

xii. Approximately 100 children were enlisted or conscripted into the RUF after being abducted from a care centre in Makeni, Bombali District in May 2000; xiii. Approximately 45 children were enlisted or conscripted into the RUF after being abducted from a care centre in Makeni, Bombali District in May 2000;

xiv. TF1-158, a child under the age of 15 years, was conscripted into the AFRC/RUF from September to late 1998 in Bombali District;

xv. TF1-158, a child under the age of 15 years, was again conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in Bombali District from July to August 1999;

xvi. Akiatu Tholley, a child under the age of 15 years, was conscripted into the AFRC/RUF from January 1999 until April/May 1999 in Port Loko District;

xvii. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC Junta to participate actively in hostilities from May 1997 until February 1998 by guarding mines in Tongo Fields, Kenema District;

xviii. An unknown number of children were used by Sam Bockarie to participate actively in hostilities from May 1997 until February 1998 by attacking civilians and by acting as bodyguards at Tongo Fields, Kenema District;

xix. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities by their presence at the frontlines between February 1998 and December 1998 from Bunumbu, Kailahun District;

xx. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities by participating in armed food-finding missions between February 1998 and December 1998 from Bunumbu, Kailahun District;

xxi. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF and RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities by their armed presence with commanders between 1996 and 2000 in Kailahun District;

xxii. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the AFRC/RUF to actively participate in hostilities by committing crimes against civilians from mid-March 1998 to April 1998 at Masingbi Road, Kono District;

xxiii. A child was used by fighters to participate actively in hostilities at sometime after February 1998 in Sawoa, Kono District by committing an amputation;

xxiv. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities in December 1999 by guarding mines in Tombodu, Kono District;

xxv. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC to actively participate in hostilities between March and June 1998 in Yomandu and Tombodu, Kono District by committing crimes;

xxvi. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities in March/April 1998 in Igbaleh and Wondedu, Kono District by committing crimes;

xxvii. A child under the age of 15 years was used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities in mid-April 1998 in Tongbodu, Kono District;

xxviii. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by RUF/AFRC members to participate actively in hostilities on April 12, 1998 in Bombafoidu, Kono District;

xxix. Akiatu Tholley, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the AFRC/RUF to participate actively in hostilities in approximately April or May 1999 in Port Loko District;

xxx. Akiatu Tholley, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the AFRC/RUF to participate actively in hostilities in Koinadugu District in late 1999;

xxxi. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the AFRC/RUF to participate actively in hostilities in Kondembaia, Koinadugu District in February to mid-March 1998;

xxxii. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the RUF to participate actively in hostilities in Kondembaia, Koinadugu District in February to mid-March 1998 by committing crimes;

xxxiii. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities by carrying arms and ammunition in approximately September to October 1998 in Koinadugu District;

xxxiv. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used by the AFRC/RUF to participate actively in hostilities in July to August 1998 in Camp Rosos, Bombali District; xxxv. An unknown number of children under the age of 15 years were used to participate actively in hostilities by looting and acting as bodyguards to commanders in Makeni, Bombali District in February 1998;

xxxvi. Komba Sumana, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the RUF/AFRC under the command of Superman to participate actively in hostilities from August to December 1998 in Koinadugu and Bombali Districts;

xxxvii. TF1-158, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the AFRC/RUF to participate actively in hostilities by carrying looted items and participating in food-finding missions from September to November 1998 in Bombali District;

xxxviii. TF1-158, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities when he took part in an attack on Kabala, Bombali District, at an unknown date after 7 July 1999;

xxxix. TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities from September to December 1998 in Bombali District;

xl. TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities in September 1998 near Konkoba Village, Koinadugu District;

xli. An unknown number of children were conscripted into the RUF/AFRC in Benguema, Western Area, from January to March 1999;

xlii. An unknown number of children were used by the RUF/AFRC to participate actively in hostilities in Benguema, Western Area, from January to March 1999.

xliii. A child under the age of 15 years, was used by the AFRC/RUF to actively participate in hostilities in approximately the third week of January in Freetown, Western Area, by attempting to amputate a civilian's hands; xliv. TF1-143, a child under the age of 15 years, was used by the RUF/AFRC to actively participate in hostilities during the Freetown attack in January 1999.

4850. para. 1597: Based on the foregoing substantial evidence relating to the prevalence of children associated with armed groups fighting in Sierra Leone.[3666] The Trial Chamber finds that there was a consistent pattern of conduct among these armed groups, including the RUF and the AFRC, of abducting children and forcing them into Small Boys Units (SBU) and Small Girls

Units (SGU).[3667] These units were made of up children generally in the range of 5 to 17 years.[3668]

4851. para. 1598: Throughout the armed conflict in Sierra Leone the RUF and AFRC forcibly abducted children of various ages from their homes or forced traditional rulers to provide recruits.[3669] Following their abduction, many children were forced to undergo military training[3670] in order for them to fight with the armed groups,[3671] or defend themselves in case of an attack.[3672]

4852. para. 1599: The training was generally comprised of instructions on the use of weaponry,[3673] at times practiced with live ammunition;[3674] how to attack a town, fight and kill,[3675] how to guard,[3676] how to set an ambush,[3677] and how to burn houses.[3678] Children sometimes died during the course of military training.[3679]

4853. para. 1600: The Trial Chamber also notes the RUF and AFRC's practice of giving children narcotics. Cocaine was sometimes administered by opening a cut on a children's body, putting cocaine on it and then covering it up with a plaster.[3680] The Trial Chamber finds that this practice exemplifies a method of coercion used to make the children fearless and carry out orders without hesitation,[3681] and shows that children would likely commit violent acts while under the influence of such substances.

4854. para. 1601: The use of narcotics caused some children to develop drug addictions.[3682]

4855. para. 1602: The foregoing evidence shows that children were of importance to the AFRC and the RUF as they carried out orders "quickly" and "they followed their bosses' way".[3683]

armed and in the company of adult fighters and commanders. In these circumstances, and given the prevailing context of guerrilla warfare, these children would constitute legitimate military targets as they would be perceived as actively participating in hostilities.[3688] Moreover, the purpose of these crimes was ultimately to damage or harm the adversary by eradicating support for opposing forces, or destroying territory.3689 The Trial Chamber therefore finds that in the context of the conflict in Sierra Leone, the use of children to commit crimes against civilians constitutes active participation in hostilities.[3690]

4858. para. 1605: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between 30 November 1996 and until 2000, in Tonkolili, Kailahun, Kono, Bombali and Port Loko Districts, as well as in Freetown and the Western Area, members of the RUF/AFRC, an armed force or group, conscripted, enlisted and/or used for active participation in hostilities an unknown number of persons under the age of 15 and that the perpetrators knew or should have known that such persons were under the age of 15, as charged in the Indictment,[3691] and as shown in the evidence above.

4859. para. 1607: Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crimes of conscription, enlistment and use of children to actively participate in armed conflict pursuant to Count 9 of the Indictment have been proved beyond reasonable doubt in the instances listed above.

3. Appeallate Judgment

(a) Factual Findings

4866. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

4867. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

4868. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

4869. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

4872. Paragraphs 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[272]

4873. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[273]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

4874. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[274]

(iii) Count 12: Use of child soldiers

4875. At all times relevant to this Indictment, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, AFRC/RUF routinely conscripted, enlisted, and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in hostile activities. Many of these children were first abducted, then trained in AFRC/RUF camps in various locations throughout the country, and thereafter used as fighters.[275]

4876. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> Count 12: Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities, an OTHER SERIOUS VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW, punishable under Article 4.c. of the Statute.[276]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-T, Judgement, 2 March 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Overview on children within the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4877. para. 1614: The Chamber heard substantial evidence of a general nature pertaining to children associated with the RUF and AFRC forces throughout the armed conflict in Sierra Leone.

[276] RUF Indictment, para. 68.

We consider the following evidence to be indicative of the large scale and organised nature of the practice of forcibly recruiting persons under the age of 15 years and using them in hostilities.

a. Importance of child fighters within the RUF - Overview on children within the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers 4878. para. 1615: The military training of children by the RUF dates from its inception as an armed movement. Between 1991 and 1992, children between the ages of eight and 15 were trained at Camp Naama in Liberia[3081] and Matru Jong[3082] and Pendembu[3083] in Sierra Leone. Prior to 1996, the RUF also trained children in military techniques at their Headquarters at Camp Zogoda.[3084] Kallon was seen there with child fighters in 1994.[3085] In the Chamber's view, this evidence demonstrates a consistent pattern of conduct by the RUF of recruiting and training children for military purposes that began as early as 1991 and continued throughout the Indictment period.

4879. para. 1616: Children were of great importance to the RUF organisation. As the RUF had no formal means of recruitment, it relied heavily on abducted children to increase the number of fighters within the RUF. Young boys were of particular value to the RUF due to their loyalty to the movement and their ability to effectively conduct espionage activities,[3086] as their small size and agility made them particularly suitable for hazardous assignments.[3087] The younger children were particularly aggressive when armed and were known to kill human beings as if they were nothing more than "chickens."[3088]

b. Pattern of Abductions, Training and Use - Overview on children within the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4880. para. 1617: Throughout the armed conflict in Sierra Leone, the RUF and AFRC/RUF forces engaged in abduction campaigns in which thousands of children of varying ages were forcibly separated from their families. Multiple witnesses testified to this general practice of abduction as well as to specific incidents of children being seized by the RUF or AFRC.[3089] A substantial percentage of AFRC/RUF fighters were young recruits.[3090] Many abducted children were as young as ten years old, and some were even younger.[3091]

4881. para. 1618: Following their abduction, children were screened to ascertain their suitability for combat operations.[3092] Children who were deemed unfit for combat were obliged to undertake tasks of logistical importance to the AFRC/RUF forces, such as cooking, conducting food foraging missions and carrying loads including weapons, looted property and food.[3093]

4882. para. 1619: Those children that were identified as capable of fighting were sent for military training. Many children perished during the training or were killed for attempting to escape or for refusing to carry out orders.[3094] Although the duration and nature of the military training was not always consistent,[3095] the training generally comprised instruction in the use of weapons, the conduct of ambushes and the tactics of advancing on and attacking enemy positions.[3096] Some children, however, only received "immediate training" where they learned "to cock and shoot."[3097]

4883. para. 1620: Children who participated in combat were therefore trained for that specific purpose.[3098] However, children were also assigned functions including gathering information from civilians and opposition camps[3099] and acting as bodyguards for higher-ranking Commanders.[3100] In addition to combat-related activities, the children were also expected to cook, undertake laundry duties, fetch water and carry goods including looted property and food for the forces.[3101]

4884. para. 1621: On completion of their military training, the young boys were assigned into units known as Small Boys Units ("SBUs").[3102] TF1-199, himself a child soldier, indicated that SBU was the name that the RUF "gave really small boys" and that the rebels told the children "you're small rebel, that's why we should call you an SBU."[3103] Children from 8 to 15 years of age were assigned by the RUF into SBUs.[3104] The Chamber notes that witnesses commonly used the term "SBU" to refer to the individual fighter as well as the organisational unit and we have adopted this usage throughout our findings. We observe that the existence of a specific combat unit for child fighters, as well as the fact that its title entered into common parlance in Sierra Leone, further demonstrates the entrenched and institutionalised nature of the practice of recruitment and use of child soldiers.

children's legs would sometimes be "cut with blades [so] cocaine [could be] rubbed in the wounds," which made them feel "like a big person" and see other people "like chickens and rats" that they could kill.[3110] Drugs were often ingested by smoke inhalation or by sniffing;[3111] or mixed into a child's food.[3112] If a child-combatant refused to take drugs he would be "beaten and, in some cases, killed."[3113] TF1-199 and other boys of SBUs were given marijuana by their Commanders before they engaged in an attack in order to help them remain at ease during combat.[3114]

4887. para. 1624: The child fighters who participated in rehabilitation programmes recounted their experiences as part of the RUF. One boy, Abu Fornah, was 11 years of age and identified himself as a fighter for the RUF.[3115] Fornah had the letters "RUF" carved into his chest and he admitted to TF1-174 that he had killed 11 people.[3116] Another boy, aged 14 at the time of his family reunification, told TF1-174 that he wanted to get married because as a member of the RUF for five years he had grown accustomed to regular sexual intercourse as he had raped many women.[3117]

c. Typical ages of child fighters - Overview on children within the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4888. para. 1625: In 1996, UNICEF established Interim Care Centres (ICCs) in various locations throughout Sierra Leone in order to house former child fighters prior to reunification with their families.[3118] In 1997, the RUF officially handed 340 children over to UNICEF,[3119] 188 of who were determined to have been child soldiers.[3120] About 400 to 450 children surrendered weapons to UNICEF at Teko Barracks in 1997, the majority of whom were between 10 and 15 years old of age.[3121] At this time, the ICC in Makeni received a record number of between 450 and 470 children, all of whom had been with the RUF. The majority of these children were between the ages of 10 and 15.[3122] Following the offensive on Freetown in January 1999, ECOMOG transferred into the care of UNICEF 139 children taken prisoner during and after the attack.[3123] UNICEF officially reported that, at that point, 773 children had been released from the AFRC/RUF and 139 children had been handed over by ECOMOG.[3124]

4890. para. 1627: While the Chamber heard testimony from child fighters who were able to identify their ages at the times of relevant events, we note that several such witnesses estimated the age of other child fighters based on comparisons between their own size and that of the other children. The Chamber also heard evidence from many other witnesses who observed children who appeared to be under the age of 15 engaged in various war-related activities. The Chamber is cognisant that these estimations of age were generally made on the basis of a child's appearance or height, rather than on objective proof of age.

4891. para. 1628: Given the inherent uncertainties in such estimations, the Chamber has exercised caution in determining the ages of children associated with the rebel factions in its findings. We nonetheless note that during the DDR process it was established through the use of verification of age methods such as the physical inspection of teeth that many of the children who had fought with the RUF and AFRC forces were under 15 at that time, which was towards the end of the Indictment period.[3127]

(ii) Abductions of Children by the AFRC/RUF forces – Child soldiers

4893. para. 1630: TF1-141 lived and attended school in Koidu Town and he was abducted during the same attack. TF1-141 was then 12 years of age.[3131] TF1-141 and eight other civilians were captured at Opera Roundabout in Koidu Town.[3132] The adult civilians were killed but the children's lives were spared.[3133] The abductees were detained at Opera Roundabout for 14 to 15 days,[3134] and Kallon, Sesay, Rambo, Colonel Banya and Superman were also present.[3135] The abductees were then handed over to an RUF Commander named Akisto, who took them to Guinea Highway.[3136] TF1-141 only learned of his age during his demobilisation in 2000,[3137] when a nurse counted his teeth and determined he was 14 years old.[3138]

who were forced to carry food for the troops or who were subsequently trained to join the movement.[3139]

4895. para. 1632: Many of those children abducted from Kono District in 1998, including male and female children between 10 and 15 years of age, were organised into SBUs or SGUs. The children were given weapons to carry in readiness for combat and were trained to act as spies and collect inside information from enemy positions.[3140] Those children not required to take part in combat performed domestic chores in the homes of their Commanders.[3141]

(iii) Military Training of Children by the RUF – Child soldiers

a. Bayama Training Base - Military Training of Children by the RUF – Child soldiers

4896. para. 1633: From 1997 to 1998, the RUF used the Bayama training base, located 23 miles from Kailahun, to train abducted boys and girls[3142] who were placed under the command of CO Jah Glory and his deputy, Morris Kakwa.[3143] The RUF decreed that all persons approaching Bayama were to be taken prisoner and transferred to the base for training.[3144] The Bayama training base was subsequently moved to Bunumbu, closer to the RUF Headquarters which at the time was located in Giema.[3145]

b. Bunumbu Training Base ("Camp Lion") - Military Training of Children by the RUF – Child soldiers

4897. para. 1634: The RUF training base at Bunumbu, which was known as "Camp Lion," operated from approximately February 1998 until December 1998,[3146] when it was moved to Yengema in Kono District.[3147]

4898. para. 1635: In February 1998,[3148] there were five platoons at Bunumbu: SBU, SGU, Adult Men, Wives, and Old Ages. The SBU and SGU comprised children between 8 and 15 years of age.[3149] In May 1998, 53 children were being trained as SBUs at Bunumbu.[3150]

4899. para. 1636: In February 1998, a number of young boys, girls and young women[3151] from Koidu and other locations in Kono District[3152] were taken to Camp Lion.[3153] Among the recruits was TF1-141, who was 12 years old and had been captured during the AFRC/RUF attack on Koidu Town.[3154] Upon their arrival at Camp Lion, the camp combat medics used belts as tourniquets which they tied around the children's arms in order to expose and inject a full syringe into their veins. TF1-141 testified that the "medicine" made him sleep for three days.[3155]

4900. para. 1637: TF1-263 was 14 at the time of his induction to Camp Lion and was trained by Monica Pearson for two months from February 1998. Trainees were split into four "platoons" of fifteen. TF1-263 and ten other 14 year olds were in one platoon.[3156] They were trained to mount attacks on urban communities, torch houses, fight and fire weapons such as AK-47s, RPGs and 2-barrel guns.[3157]

4901. para. 1638: In 1998, Dennis Koker saw Morris Kallon bring juveniles under 15 years of age[3158] to Bunumbu for training.[3159] On or about 9 June 1998, Kallon, Superman, and Sesay issued orders that "young boys" should be trained to become soldiers and handle weapons at Bunumbu. These boys were 15 years of age and above. SBUs, however, were children as young as 9 to 11 years of age who were tasked with carrying weapons for the RUF.[3160]

4902. para. 1639: The lists of recruits drawn up by adjutants at the base included their names, ages and other personal data. Reports on the trainees were compiled by the adjutant and sent to the deputy at the training base and then to the training commandant who would forward them to an advisor. The reports were given next to Sesay, and finally to Bockarie.[3161] Every such report was either hand-delivered or communicated via radio to Sesay, and delivery confirmations were communicated back to the base.[3162]

4903. para. 1640: Boys in SBUs underwent a three-part practical training at Camp Lion training base.[3163] The first part of the training involved learning how to dismantle and reassemble a gun.[3164] The second part of the training was known as the "alaka" which involved recruits, mostly SBUs and SGUs but also some adults,[3165] entering a circular structure which had a single entrance and exit. While inside, the recruits were required to cross their hands behind their backs and crawl on the ground as instructors beat them with canes.[3166] The recruits also traversed the "monkey bridge," which consisted of a layer of sticks, by walking on their hands. Alternatively, recruits were forced to cross the "monkey bridge" while holding sticks to maintain balance. Those who fell landed on barbed wire and at times were shot.[3167]

4904. para. 1641: The third and final part of the training was known as FFAP ("Firing From All Positions"). Recruits were instructed on how to discharge their weapons while in fighting positions using live ammunition.[3168] Recruits who were unable to endure the training regime would be shot and killed.[3169]

4905. para. 1642: During his training, TF1-141 was in a unit known as the "Ranger Squad" with other SBUs[3170] and Michael Loleh was his practical training instructor.[3171] Many of the recruits that trained together with TF1-141 perished during the training, either from beatings or shootings or from injuries sustained by falling off the "monkey bridge" onto barbed wire.[3172]

4906. para. 1643: On occasion RUF Commanders including CO Vandi, CO Denis and Sesay visited Camp Lion and addressed the recruits. Commanders generally identified themselves at the outset of their addresses.[3173] Sesay on one occasion informed the recruits that his security "boys" were capturing civilians and sending them to the camp. TF1-141 further recalled:

> Then he also said that if at all anyone had […] gone through the training, if you go to the front line to the battlefield, whatever you were told to do is what you will do. If you failed to do it, like, he himself, he will not accept that. He even set an example, he said he would execute you if you failed to do what you were told to do.[3174]

4907. para. 1644: At the end of training and after "graduation," the recruits were deployed throughout the country. SBUs were mixed with other fighters and accompanied them to the front lines.[3175]

4908. para. 1645: Upon "graduating" from Camp Lion, TF1-141 was sent to Baima in Kailahun District, where an RUF Commander named War Eagle headed the 1st Battalion.[3176] From there he was sent to the 4th Battalion combat camp in Benduma, along with other children who were younger than him. At Benduma, from approximately February to December 1998, TF1-141 served as a security guard for the camp. In this role, he was not required to go to the front line. Security guards patrolled the camp carrying guns and watching for enemies.[3177] TF1-141 testified that he and the other children received instructions from the platoon Commander, Lieutenant Swallow. In addition to providing security for the camp, the SBUs' tasks included fetching water and wood for the logistics staff ("S4") responsible who prepared the evening meals for the fighters.[3178] TF1-141 also testified that he took an "active part at the battlefields."[3179]

c. Yengema Training Base - Military Training of Children by the RUF – Child soldiers

4910. para. 1647: The training base at Yengema was similarly organised to its predecessor in Bunumbu. Recruits were divided into five platoons, which included one SBU and one SGU platoon.[3182] Children were subjected to the same training as adults,[3183] such as military discipline, physical endurance, armour and artillery classes, and how to mount ambushes.[3184] After "graduating," the men and SBUs were sent to the front lines and SGUs served the Commanders at base camp.[3185] The training Commander at Yengema, Monica Pearson, reported directly through Sesay to Bockarie,[3186] until Bockarie left the RUF in December 1999. She then reported to Sesay only.[3187]

4911. para. 1648: Monica Pearson also conducted advanced training courses in Yengema[3188] in 1999.[3189] The recruits were trained in the art of conducting ambushes, mounting attacks, and carrying out reconnaissance missions or "recky." The reconnaissance training involved instructing children that they must always wear civilian clothing in towns and teaching them how to carry wares on their heads to sell so that they would be able to conduct missions in towns without being identified as RUF fighters.[3190]

(iv) Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

a. The RUF in Kailahun District (November 1996 to 1998) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

i. Children in combat - The RUF in Kailahun District (November 1996 to 1998) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4912. para. 1649: TF1-093 started fighting for the RUF at 15 years of age and took part in approximately 20 battles from 1996 to 1997 in Kailahun.[3191] TF1-093 followed orders issued by Superman to fight and kill under the threat that she would lose her own life if she refused to obey.[3192] Other children between 8 and 17 years of age[3193] also fought for the RUF.[3194] Fighters were armed with sticks, knives, cutlasses, guns and RPGs,[3195] with which they would kill children, elderly men and women, and teenagers.[3196] They also engaged in beating people and raping children,[3197] and those children who were permitted to live were forced to join the movement.[3198]

4913. para. 1650: In December 1998, all of the fighters from the camp at Benduma, including TF1-141 and reinforcements from Baima, were sent to attack ECOMOG and the Kamajor forces at Daru. Bockarie supplied them with ammunition and ordered them to capture the town.[3199] After Bockarie left, Sesay and Mike Lamin arrived at the camp with "morale boosters" including jamba,[3200] Maminyini rum, cigarettes and hard tobacco known as tongoni. The "morale boosters" were distributed amongst the fighters, including TF1-141, by the Commanders in preparation for combat.[3201]

4914. para. 1651: TF1-141 participated in the attack on Daru using an ULIMO-AK gun that had been in his possession since his first day with the 4th Battalion. Guns and ammunition had been distributed at a muster parade of the 4th Battalion, and boys of his height and taller were also issued with guns.[3202] The battle against ECOMOG and the Kamajor forces at Daru was successful and after the RUF had captured the town, TF1-141 and his compeers of the SBU decided to torch a house.[3203]

4915. para. 1652: Following the attack on Daru, TF1-141 returned to Benduma combat camp, from where he travelled to Baima Town. He resided in Baima Town for some time before being given his next assignment, which was to assist in the RUF attack on Segbwema. From Baima Town, War Eagle, who was in charge of the 1st Battalion, sent a radio message to the company Commanders, ordering all companies and platoons to send fighters to take part in the attack on Segbwema.[3204] Colonel Gassimu was the Commander in charge of this mission and TF1-141 was assigned to the fighters ordered to capture the centre of the city.[3205] On the way to Segbwema, they first captured Manowa, during which attack many ECOMOG soldiers and Kamajors lost their lives.[3206] After departing Manowa, the fighters passed through smaller villages throughout the night, arriving at Segbwema at dawn.[3207]

4916. para.1653: At Segbwema the adult fighters separated from the SBUs. One of the SBUs stood on a landmine and the detonation indicated the fighters' presence to the ECOMOG forces in Segbwema.[3208] Heavy artillery fire was exchanged with ECOMOG forces and the Kamajors until the town was eventually taken. After its seizure, Segbwema was looted and TF1-141 and other SBUs looted medicine from Dixon Hospital on the road from Manowa to Bunumbu.[3209] Colonel Gassimu and his deputy, Passaway, also ordered the SBUs to loot and then torch civilian homes.[3210]

ii. Children as bodyguards for Commanders - The RUF in Kailahun District (November 1996 to 1998) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4919. para. 1656: Sesay had other SBUs working for him in 1996 and 1997, including Abdulai Musa (aka X), who was 9 or 11 years old, and Moses, who was barely 12 years of age in 1996.[3215] These boys were assigned, together with a young man named Vandi, who was between 18 and 20 years of age at the time, to guard civilians working at Sesay's farm in Kailahun.[3216] In general, these children were used in a supervisory capacity to control the farm work, and to ensure that civilians who refused to work were punished with severe beatings.[3217]

4920. para. 1657: TF1-113 observed Gbao with SBUs from 1996 to 1997 in Kailahun District.[3218] At about the time of the coup in May 1997, one of Gbao's SBUs in Kailahun District was a boy named Morie, who was younger than 10 years of age. On one occasion Morie attempted to force TF1-113's child to join him on a mission. TF1-113 refused to allow her child to go and Morie subsequently reported the incident to Gbao and claimed that TF1-113 had spoiled the mission. The next morning, Gbao ordered three SBUs to bring TF1-113 from Bunumbu to Kailahun, strip her naked and punish her with a severe beating.[3219]

4921. para. 1658: TF1-141 saw Gbao with SBUs in Kailahun Town on two occasions in February 1998. Gbao had two boys who acted as his security guards and who attended muster parade every morning.[3220] The boys were armed, and would follow Gbao walking at his back. Their exact age is uncertain, but they were older than the 12-year old witness who observed them.[3221]

iii. Children sent on food-finding missions - The RUF in Kailahun District (November 1996 to 1998) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4923. para. 1660: While she was at Buedu from 1994 to 1998, TF1-314 was an SGU and took part in two food-finding missions along with 25 other girls from SBUs whose ages ranged between 10 to 15 years. Ten of the 15-year-olds were armed with pistol grips, AK-48s and AK-58s. After entering a village that they intended to loot, they threw stones onto the roofs of the houses to intimidate civilians and force them out of their homes, which the girls then entered and looted. The loot was brought back and given to their Commander.[3223] TF1-314 testified that she was unable to escape during this time, as she was afraid for her life.[3224]

b. The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4924. para. 1661: By March 1998, citizens in Freetown regularly observed armed children among the RUF and AFRC forces.[3225] Child soldiers were so common that reports sent to the President of Sierra Leone did not differentiate between child and adult fighters.[3226] In recognition of the enormous problem it would face in dealing with ex-child combatants, the Kabbah Government arranged for a residence to be constructed in Bo to house such children.[3227]

4925. para. 1662: Kallon was seen with SBUs between the ages of 13 and 17 in Freetown in 1997.[3228]

i. Kenema District (May 1997 to February 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4926. para.1663: Between May 1997 and February 1998, young male and female soldiers armed with AK- 47's, some as young as 12 years old, were present in Kenema District.[3229]

ii. Children guarding mines in Tongo Fields - Kenema District (May 1997 to February 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4927. para. 1664: During the Junta period, the RUF and AFRC assigned child soldiers to guard mining sites in Kenema. The RUF and AFRC soldiers in Tongo included SBUs under the age of 15, with witnesses testifying that some SBUs were as young as nine.[3230] There were over 100

SBUs in Tongo Field and they were assigned to guard Cyborg Pit in groups of up to 15.[3231] These SBUs were under Bockarie's control and were accompanied by Bockarie's Junior Commanders who were 17 years of age and older.[3232] The boys were selected for this assignment because they would obey orders to beat or shoot miners at the site who breached the mining rules, whereas the older soldiers tended to speak to adult miners first.[3233] Some of the young boys were so small that they did not have the strength to carry their guns but had to drag them along.[3234]

4928. para. 1665: Child soldiers committed most of the documented killings in Tongo.[3235] On one occasion, Bockarie was present at Cyborg Pit and he ordered a group of miners to exit the pit. As the miners were climbing out of the pit, Colonel Manawa fired an RPG in the air. The SBUs opened fire and killed approximately 20 of the people in the pit.[3236]

4929. para. 1666: On another occasion in October 1997, Bockarie received a report that civilians at Cyborg Pit were mining without permission from the RUF. Bockarie dispatched SBUs to Cyborg Pit who opened fire on the civilians, killing three and injuring many.[3237] That same month, at Sandeyeima swamp, civilians were washing gravel for mining when children arrived and opened fire at them, killing two people and injuring many.[3238] SBUs would shoot at civilians who attempted to steal gravel or hide diamonds. SBUs were also instructed to beat village elders during raids carried out to abduct civilians to bolster the labour forces for the government mines.[3239]

iii. Children engaged in domestic chores in Tongo Field - Kenema District (May 1997 to February 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4930. para. 1667: In Tongo and Kenema in 1998, SBUs between the ages of 12 and 15 carried arms and performed domestic work such as pounding rice, preparing food and laundering clothes. Some engaged in combat.[3240] The majority of RUF Commanders were accompanied by SBUs.[3241] SGUs remained with the wives of senior Commanders doing their cleaning, washing and cooking.[3242] One former member of the RUF described such arrangements as a "practice which was prevalent among the Commanders."[3243]

iv. Kono District (February to April 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

their lives as they were regarded as being those who "had been responsible for killings and torture."[3245] An unknown number of children of 16 years of age and younger, many of these whom had experience in handling guns, retreated with the RUF from Freetown to Kono District.[3246]

v. Children as bodyguards - Kono District (February to April 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4932. para. 1669: TF1-263 was 14 years of age when he saw Sesay and Superman with child bodyguards in Kono in February/March 1998. These children were about the same height as him.[3247] He also observed Kallon with child bodyguards in Kono at this time. One of these children told TF1-263 that he was 15 and TF1-263 observed that the other children were about TF1-263's height.[3248] Sesay and Kallon's child bodyguards engaged in combat.[3249] TF1-141 was 12 years old when he saw Kallon, Akisto and Forty Barrel with SBUs at the Guinea Highway in February 1998. The boys in these SBUS were mostly the same height as TF1-141, although he noticed that some were taller and thus estimated that they were older than him.[3250]

4933. para. 1670: In Kono, some lower-ranking Commanders also used children as bodyguards. For instance, during 1998,[3251] Vandy, who was 14 years of age; Kefala, who was 15 years of age; and Omeh, who was 16 years of age accompanied DIS-157 on patrol from PC Ground and travelled with fighters, but they did not go to the front lines.[3252]

4934. para. 1671: During the attack on Koidu Town in December 1998, Sesay was accompanied by his security guards, which included children between the ages of 12 and 15 years. Sesay's security guards accompanied him to ensure his safety.[3253]

vi. Crimes committed by children - Kono District (February to April 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4935. para. 1672: Several weeks after the Intervention in February 1998, RUF rebels in Sawao ordered a young fighter to sever the hands of captured civilian men who were accused of being Kamajors and Kabbah supporters.[3254] The boy was younger than 14 years old.[3255] The same boy was also seen severing the arms of captured women.[3256] TF1-334 also testified that children who were assigned to various Commanders were used to carry out amputations in villages in Kono District.[3257]

4936. para. 1673: In April 1998 in Koidu, when Major Rocky killed 30 to 40 civilians, SBUs were used to behead the corpses.[3258] Furthermore, SBUs from the ages of 12 upwards executed Bockarie's orders, passed to them by Superman, to burn residences and vehicles in Koidu.[3259]

4937. para. 1674: In February/March 1998 at Tombodu, up to 20 little boys forced civilians to mine at gunpoint. Children as young as 6 years of age were armed with guns.[3260] The boys would shoot at those miners that stopped working.[3261] On one occasion, the mining Commanders Tactical, Officer Med and Gibbo brought a town Chief named S.E. Sogbeh to the mine at Tombodu but he refused their order to work, stating that he was unable to work as he had been severely flogged by some little boys.[3262] Sogbeh was shot three times by a boy named Samuel who was about 12 years old.[3263]

vii. Children sent on food-finding missions - Kono District (February to April 1998) - The AFRC/RUF forces in Kenema and Kono Districts - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4938. para. 1675: During muster parades at the Guinea Highway in February/March 1998, Kallon would instruct TF1-141, who was 12 years old at the time, and other SBUs of approximately the same age to participate in food-finding missions. During such missions, women were raped, and civilians were captured and forced to carry looted loads of food.[3264]

c. The AFRC Attack on Freetown (January 1999) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4940. para. 1677: Abducted children as young as 9 or 10 years of age, were trained as SBUs. Two such children were handed over to TF1-334.[3267] Gullit ordered that every Commander who had children between the age of 10 and 12 should train them;[3268] and subsequently boys between the ages of 10 and 12 were trained in the discharge of weapons.[3269]

4941. para. 1678: In January 1999,[3270] SBUs were present in Calaba Town as part of a mixed group of young children and older fighters. The younger fighters were around 13 to 16 years of age.[3271]

4942. para. 1679: Also, in January 1999, in Freetown near Ferry Junction, by Kissy-Road,[3272] a 14 year old boy was observed dressed in combat clothes and a red head-tie,[3273] holding a gun.[3274] He was accompanied by an older rebel. The 14 year old wanted to shoot TF1-097 but the older rebel made the boy desist from this action by threatening to kill him if he fired at TF1-097.[3275]

4943. para. 1680: At about 5:00pm on 18 January 1999, when TF1-104 arrived at the Good Shepherd Hospital in Kissy, a group of AFRC fighters entered the hospital ostensibly to search for injured ECOMOG soldiers and Kamajors and forced 200 patients and staff to leave the hospital.[3276] TF1-104 had worked previously with child soldiers and recognised three of them in the group that entered the hospital. They told him that they had rejoined the RUF in order to attack Freetown and that Captain Blood was one of the senior members of their group.[3277]

4945. para. 1682: On 22 January 1999 in Allen Town,[3280] three child soldiers, between the ages of 9 and 11 severed TF1-022's hand with an axe and placed it in a plastic bag on the orders of their Commander.[3281] The boys had an axe, a cutlass and a gun.[3282]

4946. para. 1683: In January 1999[3283] SBUs between 13 to 15 years of age in Allen Town guarded abducted civilians to ensure that none escaped.[3284] SBUs were assigned to guard various groups of civilians throughout Allen Town.[3285]

d. The RUF in Makeni and Magburaka (1999 to 2000) - Use of children by the RUF and AFRC forces – Child soldiers

4947. para. 1684: On 3 January 1999,[3286] RUF MP Commander Jalloh[3287] requested the citizens of Makeni to contribute young men to train for the RUF. Approximately 1000 youths were registered.[3288] About three weeks later, three trucks were loaded, each with about 100 men.[3289] They ranged from boys of 12 years of age to men in their early twenties.[3290] The children received military training and subsequently participated in RUF attacks as well as in looting, burning and killing. The majority of the children were between 11 and 15 years of age.[3291]

4948. para. 1685: Kallon was seen with SBUs, who were between 13 and 18 years of age, in Makeni between 1999 and 2000.[3292] Workers in the ICC also saw children among the RUF in Magburaka and Makeni.[3293]

4949. para. 1686: On 14 April 2000 UNAMSIL Commander Leonard Ngondi met Sesay at Teko Barracks, the RUF base in Makeni,[3294] to discuss Caritas's operations in Makeni. Ngondi had learned that the RUF had impeded Caritas's attempts to identify abducted child-combatants and return them to their families.[3295] In this meeting, Sesay indicated to Ngondi that he was concerned that "their" combatants were being removed from the territory by Caritas,[3296] from which Ngondi deduced that the RUF did not really understand the purpose of the Caritas programme.

4950. para. 1687: In May 2000, in a small village called Moria, near Makeni, approximately 100 RUF members mounted an ambush of UNAMSIL peacekeepers. The ambush team included fighters as young as 10 years of age who carried light weapons, rocket launchers and grenades.[3297]

4951. para. 1688: In May 2000, UNAMSIL peacekeeper Joseph Mendy observed child soldiers present at the RUF base where he was being held captive with a number of other peacekeepers, in Small Sefadu in Kono District. Some of these children visited Mendy each morning and informed him that they were "going to the mining area."[3298]

4952. para. 1689: Similarly, UNAMSIL Commander Edwin Kasoma testified that a quarter of the RUF guards at Yengema in Kono District, were he was detained in May 2000, were child soldiers between 10 and 12 years of age who had been conscripted into the RUF against their will.[3299] While he was detained at Yengema, he observed Sesay visiting on four occasions. Sesay was usually accompanied by 30 to 40 heavily armed RUF soldiers, including 10 to 12 child soldiers who were between 10 and 12 years of age.[3300]

4953. para. 1690: In early May 2000, after fighting broke out between the RUF and UNAMSIL personnel in Makeni, Caritas and UNICEF officials returned to Makeni to ensure that children were safely relocated from the Interim Care Centre there.[3301] When they reached Makeni on 14 May 2000, they discovered that the number of children residing in the ICC had reduced drastically from 320 to 150.[3302] They were told that Gbao and another RUF fighter had loaded the children onto a truck and removed them.[3303]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - Other serious violations of IHL

4957. para. 106: Article 4 of the Statute states in relevant part as follows:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following serious violations of international humanitarian law: […]
>
>
> b. Intentionally directing attacks against personnel, installations, material, units or vehicles involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as long as they are entitled to the protection given to civilians or civilian objects under the international law of armed conflict;
> c. Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities.

4958. para. 107: The Chamber reiterates its position that the general requirements which must be proved to establish the commission of an other serious violation of international humanitarian law are as follows:

(i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged offence; and

(ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged offence and the armed conflict.[224]

4959. para. 108: These two elements have already been discussed in detail above in relation to the general requirements under Article 3 of the Statute.

4960. para. 109: The Indictment charges the Accused with crimes under Article 4(c) of the Statute (Enlistment of Child Soldiers). Recognising that the prohibition against enlistment of child soldiers has its foundation in Article 4(3)(c) of Additional Protocol II, the Chamber holds that the definition of armed conflict under Additional Protocol II should be applied as outlined above.[225] Although the offence of attacking peacekeeping personnel or objects is not prohibited under either Common Article 3 or Additional Protocol II, the Chamber will apply the higher threshold that is applicable under Additional Protocol II.

(ii) Other serious violations of IHL – Findings on general requirements

4961. para. 989: The Chamber has noted that the following general requirements must be established to prove an other serious violation of international humanitarian law:

(i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged offence; and

(ii) There existed a nexus between the alleged offence and the armed conflict.

4962. para. 990: The Chamber recalls that an armed conflict existed in Sierra Leone at the time of the alleged offences.[1925] Unless otherwise stated in our Factual Findings on Counts 13 and 15 to 18, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between the acts charged and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

(iii) Applicable law - Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities

4963. para. 183: The Indictment under Count 12 charges the Accused with the offence of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities as an "other serious violation of international humanitarian law" pursuant to Article 4(c) of the Statute.[340] This Count alleges that the Accused are responsible for the AFRC/RUF having routinely conscripted, enlisted and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities at all times relevant to the Indictment.[341]

4964. para. 184: The Appeals Chamber has held that the offence of recruitment of child soldiers by way of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into an armed force or group and/or using them to participate actively in hostilities constitutes a crime under customary international law which entailed individual criminal responsibility prior to the time frame of the Indictment.[342]

4965. para. 185: The Chamber accepts that enlistment means "accepting and enrolling individuals when they volunteer to join an armed force or group."[343] Enlistment requires that the person voluntarily consented to be part of the armed force or group.[344] The Appeals Chamber has emphasised that enlistment cannot be narrowly defined as a formal process in those cases where the armed group is not a conventional military organisation and must instead be understood in the broad sense to include "any conduct accepting the child as a part of the militia. Such conduct would include making him participate in military operations."[345]

4966. para. 186: The Chamber recalls that conscription means the "compulsory enlistment of persons into military service."[346] In the context of lawful governments, conscription is generally legitimized through constitutional or legislative powers.[347] However, conscription also encompasses what is commonly known as "forced recruitment", wherein individuals are recruited through illegal means, for instance through the use of force or following abduction.[348]

> The words "using" and "participate [actively]" have been adopted in order to cover both direct participation in combat and also active participation in military activities linked to combat such as scouting, spying, sabotage and use of children as decoys, couriers or at military checkpoints. It would not cover activities clearly unrelated to the hostilities such as food deliveries to an airbase or the use of domestic staff in an officer's accommodation. However, use of children in a direct support function such as acting as bearers to take supplies to the front line, or activities at the front line itself, would be included within the terminology.[350]

4969. para. 189: The Chamber recognises that "armed forces or groups" may be either State or non-State controlled. The Chamber has already expressed its approval of the following definition of "armed groups" given in the Tadic Appeal Judgement:

> One should distinguish the situation of individuals acting on behalf of a State without specific instructions, from that of individuals making up an organised and hierarchically structured group, such as a military unit or, in case of war or civil strife, armed bands of irregulars or rebels. Plainly, an organised group differs from an individual in that the former normally has a structure, a chain of command and a set of rules as well as the outward symbols of authority. Normally a member of the group does not act on his own but conforms to the standards prevailing in the group and is subject to the authority of the head of the group.[351]

4970. para. 190: The Chamber considers that the specific elements of enlisting or conscripting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups are:

(i) One or more persons were enlisted or conscripted by the Accused into an armed force or group;

(ii) Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;

(iii) The Accused knew or had reason to know that such person or persons were under the age of 15 years and that they may be trained for or used in combat;[352] and

(iv) The Accused intended to conscript or enlist the said persons into the armed force or group.

4971. para. 191: The Appeals Chamber held that a nexus must be established between the act of the Accused and the child joining the armed force or group in order to constitute enlistment. "Whether such a nexus exists is a question of fact which must be determined on a case-by-case basis."[353]

4972. para. 192: The Appeals Chamber has stated that the mens rea requirement of the offence requires not only that the person be aware that the child is under the age of 15, but also that the child may be trained for or used in combat.[354]

4973. para. 193: This Chamber holds that the specific elements of using children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities are as follows:

(i) One or more persons were used by the Accused to actively participate in hostilities;

(ii) Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;

(iii) The Accused knew or had reason to know that such person or persons were under the age of 15 years; and

(iv) The Accused intended to use the said persons to actively participate in hostilities.[355]

4974. para. 194: It is the Chamber's view that the rules of international humanitarian law apply equally to all parties in an armed conflict, regardless of the means by which they were recruited.[356] Furthermore, the Chamber is mindful that the special protection provided by Article 4(3)(d) of Additional Protocol II remains applicable in the event that children under the age of 15 are conscripted, enlisted, or used to participate actively in the hostilities.

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

c. Timeframes – Pleading

4977. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Pleading – Timeframes – paras. 423 – 432 [616].

d. Issue of duplicity – Pleading

4978. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 29 (p.705): Count 12 also charges each Accused with three separate and distinct offences in these terms:

> Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into the armed forces or group, or using them to participate actively in hostilities an OTHER SERIOUS VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW, punishable under Article 4.c of the Statute.

4979. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 30 (p.705): Applying the "plain or literal meaning rule" and guided by the conventional lexicological sources used by courts in judicial interpretation, it seems incontrovertible, as a matter of judicial interpretation rather than of judicial pragmatism, that one can conscript a child under the age of 15 years into an armed force without enlisting that child or without using the child to participate actively in hostilities. Enlisting connotes voluntary enrolment whereas conscripting connotes forcible enrolment. Evidently, there is a world of difference between the first two acti rei and the third actus reus. These are three (3) distinct and separate acti rei. To combine or incorporate them in a single count in an Indictment patently offends the rule against duplicity.

4980. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 31 (p.705-706): In a celebrated Decision of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal, (still considered sound law) applying leading English case-law authorities on duplicity, vagueness and uncertainty as defects in the form of an indictment, it was authoritatively stated by a panel of three judges drawn from Britain, Sierra Leone, and Sri Lanka that:

> The general rule is that for each separate count there should be only one act set out which constitutes the offence. If two or three are set out in the same count, separated by the disjunctive 'or' the count is bad for duplicity and the conviction should be quashed.[12]

4981. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 32 (p.706): In my considered opinion, the crimes charged in Count 12 should have been properly laid as three (3) separate and distinct offences in three (3) separate counts. Hence, the said Count is bad for duplicity.[13] It is not necessary for me to make any further judicial pronouncement on this issue, for the purposes of this Opinion, given the analysis that appears in footnote 9 below. (Note: fn9 = See Dissenting Opinion of Hon. Justice Bankole Thompson in Prosecutor v. Brima, Kanu and Kamara, SCSL-03-16-T, Motion for Leave to Amend Indictment Against Accused Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara and Santigie Borbor Kanu, 6 May 2004, paras 5-7; See also Annex C, Separate Concurring and Partially Dissenting Opinion of Hon. (v) Child soldiers – Legal findings

were first abducted, then trained in AFRC/RUF camps in various locations throughout the country, and thereafter used as fighters."[3304] In light of the wording of the Indictment, the Chamber considers that "at all times relevant to [the] Indictment" means from 30 November 1996[3305] to 15 September 2000.[3306]

4983. para. 1692: The Chamber held in its Rule 98 Decision that the Prosecution did not adduce evidence in relation to Count 12 with respect to Bonthe, Moyamba, Pujehun, Bo and Tonkolili Districts. The Chamber finds that no evidence of child enlistment, conscription or active participation of children in hostilities has been adduced in respect of Kambia District. The Chamber recalls its finding that no liability can be attributed to the Accused in relation to crimes committed in Koinadugu, Bombali and Port Loko Districts.[3307]

4984. para. 1693: The Chamber has found that the AFRC and the RUF were armed groups.[3308] The Chamber is also satisfied that the perpetrators of the acts below acted intentionally at all times.

a. Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings

4985. para. 1694: The Prosecution has not adduced evidence to establish that the RUF and AFRC forces accepted into their ranks persons under the age of 15 who voluntarily joined these armed groups through a process of enlistment or training. Rather, the evidence adduced by the Prosecution pertains principally to children who were abducted and forcibly trained. The Chamber has accordingly restricted its findings to the conscription of persons under the age of 15 into the RUF.

i. Conscription into an Armed Group - Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings

4986. para. 1695: We observe that either the abduction of persons for specific use within an organization or the forced military training of persons is independently sufficient to constitute conscription, as both practices amount to compelling a person to join an armed group. However, given that we have found that many of the children abducted were then forcibly trained, it would be impermissible for the Chamber to treat these practices as separate bases for findings of conscription. We therefore find it appropriate to consider the evidence pertaining to the course of conduct as a whole.

4987. para. 1696: The Chamber has found that during military operations and attacks on villages and civilians, the RUF and later, the AFRC/RUF, routinely and systematically abducted children including those under the age of 15, who they deemed fit to perform specific functions within their fighting forces. We have found that such functions included forcibly subjecting them to military training with a view to using them in combat units and forces.

4988. para. 1697: In addition to the evidence of abductions throughout the armed conflict in general,3309 we find that large numbers of children, including TF1-141 and TF1-263, were abducted by the AFRC/RUF forces in Kono District between February and April 1998.[3310] The Chamber recalls that TF1-141 and TF1-263 were 12 and 14 years of age respectively at the time of their abductions. We further find, noting the evidence that children as young as eight or nine were abducted, that many of the other children abducted in Kono District and Freetown were under the age of 15.

4989. para. 1698: We find that the RUF depended on this method of conscription to maintain its operational capability. We are reinforced in this finding because the continuous recruitment of manpower by the RUF for combat was capital, vital and indispensable for the pursuit and sustenance of their war effort, in order to ensure success and to facilitate the survival of the movement and the achievement of its objectives as defined in its ideology.

4990. para. 1699: We have found that abducted children under the age of 15, including TF1-141 and TF1-263, were then sent to be trained for military purposes at RUF bases including Bayama and Camp Lion in Kailahun District and Yengema in Kono District. We recall that there were SBU and SGU platoons at Bunumbu and Yengema, which included children aged between 8 and 15 years.

4991. para.1700: The Chamber is satisfied that the children who were abducted and then forcibly trained at the RUF camps such as Bayama, Bunumbu and Yengema, were compelled to join the RUF. We therefore find that such conduct constitutes conscription. Although not all the children abducted were eventually subjected to military training, the Chamber has found that the children who were not trained were used for other purposes within the RUF.[3311] We therefore find that notwithstanding their ultimate use, these abductees were compulsorily enlisted as members of the RUF or AFRC forces and therefore conscripted.

4992. para.1701: We recall that in Makeni in 1999, hundreds of children between the ages of 11 and 15 were “registered” by the RUF and sent for military training on the request of an RUF MP Commander. The Prosecution has not adduced evidence to establish whether this practice involved voluntary or forced enlistment. Although proof of either element would suffice for the purpose of Count 12, in the absence of more detailed evidence in relation to this particular event, the Chamber relies on this evidence to corroborate our finding in relation to the scale and pattern of use of children within the RUF organisation.

ii. Actual or Imputed Knowledge - Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings

iii. Knowledge that the children were under the age of 15 - Actual or Imputed Knowledge - Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings

4993. para. 1702: The Chamber further finds that the perpetrators of these acts knew or had reason to know that the persons abducted and forced to undergo military training were under the age of 15 years at the time. We recall that children as young as eight and nine were abducted.[3312] We are therefore satisfied that many children abducted were sufficiently young that the perpetrators knew from their physical appearance that they were under the age of 15. Furthermore, we recall that records were kept of the ages of the SBUs and SGUs trained at Bunumbu and Yengema, from which it is the only reasonable inference that the fighters who conducted the training knew or had reason to know that certain trainees were under the age of 15 years.

4994. para. 1703: We are nonetheless cognisant that in a substantial number of cases, the perpetrators were unable to have had actual knowledge or estimation of the child's age at the time of the abduction and training. We are of the view, however, that the perpetrators had reason to know that children under the age of 15 were being abducted and subjected to military training. We have found that the practice of abducting and training persons under the age of 15 with a view to their ultimate use in combat was widespread among both factions throughout the Indictment period. We recall that children were especially prized as fighters due to their agility and obedience.[3313] We note the evidence that in attacks on civilians, children's lives were often spared so that they could be utilised by the fighting forces.[3314] We conclude that RUF and AFRC fighters knew of this practice.

4995. para. 1704: We find these factors cumulatively sufficient to put the fighters who perpetrated the abductions and military training on notice that the persons involved may have been under the age of 15. The Chamber is of the opinion that the perpetrators are estopped from pleading lack of knowledge, having regard to these factors. The Chamber accordingly finds that where doubt may have existed as to whether a person abducted or trained was under the age of 15, it was incumbent on the perpetrators to ascertain the person's age.

4996. para. 1705: The Chamber therefore finds that the perpetrators of these abductions and training knew or had reason to know that persons subjected to these practices were under the age of 15.

iv. Knowledge that the children may be trained in combat - Actual or Imputed Knowledge - Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings 4997. para. 1706: The Chamber finds that the RUF fighters who conducted the training of children at Bayama, Bunumbu and Yengema clearly possessed the requisite mens rea as they were actively training children for combat.

4998. para. 1707: Given the consistent pattern of conduct of abducting children for the specific purpose of subjecting them to military training and then using them in combat, combat-related activities, and the logistical imperative of this course of conduct for both factions, we find that the fighters who abducted persons under the age of 15 also knew that the children might be trained for combat. We opine in this regard that the fact that certain abductees were not ultimately subjected to military training is immaterial, as the purpose of the abductions was to ascertain the child's suitability for such training. Accordingly, the perpetrators knew at the time of the abduction that the victim may be trained for combat.

v. Findings on the Conscription of Child Soldiers - Conscription of Child soldiers – Child soldiers – Legal findings

4999. para. 1708: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it is established beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) between February and April 1998, RUF and AFRC fighters routinely abducted persons under the age of 15 in Kono District for the purpose of using them within their respective organisations; and

(ii) RUF fighters subjected persons under the age of 15 to forced military training at Bayama and Bunumbu in Kailahun District between 1997 and December 1998 and at Yengema in Kono District between December 1998 and September 2000.

5000. para. 1709: The Chamber therefore finds that the RUF routinely conscripted persons under the age of 15 into their armed group between 1997 and September 2000 in Kailahun and Kono Districts.

b. Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

i. Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

ii. Children in combat operations - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5001. para. 1710: The Chamber recalls that the SBUs were regarded as particularly useful in RUF military operations against the enemy forces and that the RUF used children under the age of 15 in combat activities at various frontlines.[3315]

5002. para. 1711: The Chamber is satisfied that children between the ages of 8 and 14 actively participated in hostilities in Kailahun after 30 November 1996 and throughout 1997, as witnessed by TF1-093.[3316] The Chamber finds that these children participated in hostilities by killing and raping civilians.

5003. para. 1712: The Chamber finds that when children burned houses and cars, on Bockarie's orders, during the retreat from Koidu in April 1998,[3317] they were participating in hostilities as the purpose of their actions was to destroy houses so that the advancing ECOMOG forces would not be able to use them.

5004. para. 1713: The Chamber finds that TF1-141, who was 12 at the time, actively participated in hostilities when he was sent to Daru in December 1998 as part of an RUF mission to recapture the town from ECOMOG and Kamajor forces. TF1-141 also participated in hostilities when he was subsequently assigned to participate in the capture of Manowa and Segbwema in 1998 and when he was ordered to burn and loot on the road from Manowa to Bunumbu.

5005. para. 1714: The Chamber finds that in May 2000, the RUF used children, some as young as ten years of age, armed with light weapons, rocket launchers and grenades, to mount an ambush against UNAMSIL peacekeepers on the road from Lunsar to Makeni. The Chamber finds that this activity constitutes active participation in hostilities, as the RUF considered UNAMSIL to be an enemy force and considered that ambushing and abducting UNAMSIL personnel directly supported the RUF war efforts. The RUF fighters who used the children to participate in this ambush acted with the requisite knowledge and intent.

5006. para. 1715: The Chamber is satisfied that the AFRC forces who invaded Freetown in January 1999 used children under the age of 15 years to actively participate in hostilities. The Chamber has found that the attack on Freetown was accompanied by fierce fighting against ECOMOG.[3318] Armed children under the age of 15 were in the midst of this military operation and were therefore directly and actively involved in the hostilities.

5007. para. 1716: More specifically, TF1-104 was present when fighters, including three who he was able to identify as child soldiers, entered the Good Shepherd Hospital in Freetown in order to search for ECOMOG or Kamajor forces. The Chamber further finds that a 14-year old boy dressed in combat clothes and a red head-tie, who was seen holding a gun in January 1999 at Kissy Road in Freetown was actively participating in hostilities.

iii. Children on armed patrols - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5009. para. 1718: Although Vandy was not sent to the front lines, the Chamber finds that the use of children to take part in armed patrols amounts to using them to actively participate in hostilities because such activities were clearly related to their military operations and objectives. This finding is based on the grounds that, given the circumstances of guerrilla war that prevailed in Sierra Leone at that time, RUF fighters on patrol were potential targets of enemy forces and that children participating in such patrols were exposed to the risk of possible surprise attacks by adverse forces. This situation predisposed them to immediately and spontaneously engage in participating actively in armed combat if and as soon as such an eventuality occurred.

iv. Children perpetrating crimes against civilians - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5010. para. 1719: The Chamber recalls that persons under the age of 15 within the RUF and the AFRC committed or were ordered to commit the following crimes against civilians:

(i) in February/March 1998, children were ordered to carry out amputations in Kono District and a boy younger than 14 years of age was ordered to amputate an arm of a civilian in Sawao;

(ii) following the killing by Rocky of 30 to 40 civilians in Koidu Town in April 1998, children beheaded their corpses;

(iii) children younger than 15 were used to intimidate and kill civilians working at the mines at Tombodu in Kono District in February/March 1998 and at the time a child called Samuel, who was about 12 years old, shot Chief Sogbeh for refusing to work;

(iv) children aged younger than 15 years of age were involved in the mass killings of civilians mining in the diamond pits in October 1997 at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field in Kenema District and to beat civilians when the AFRC/RUF raided villages in search of civilians to work in the mines in Tongo Fields; and

5011. para. 1720: The Chamber recalls the accepted view in international humanitarian law that hostilities are acts which by their nature or purpose are intended to cause damage or actual harm to the adversary party.[3320] We have endorsed the proposition that the concept of hostilities encompasses not only combat operations but also military activities linked to combat such as the use of children at military checkpoints or as spies.[3321] The types of acts that may be characterised as hostilities, in the Chamber's view, may differ depending on the particularities of each armed conflict and the modus operandi of the warring factions. During the conflict in Sierra Leone, frequent and brutal acts of violence directed against civilians were a hallmark of the operations of the RUF and AFRC forces, and persons under the age of 15 years actively participated in these campaigns of amputations, killing, rape and enslavement.

5013. para. 1722: We find, furthermore, that the purpose of the crimes was ultimately to damage or harm the adversary. Through the commission of violent crimes against civilians, the AFRC and RUF forces intended to eradicate support for ECOMOG and the Kamajors.[3322] The RUF and AFRC also committed attacks on civilians in order to capture towns and consolidate control over territory, including the diamond mines. In so doing, the RUF and the AFRC/RUF also intended to destroy territory to prevent its use by ECOMOG and Kamajors, mostly notably when the AFRC/RUF fighters burned Koidu in 1998 and burned militarily significant locations in Freetown in 1999, in each case doing so in order to deny resources to ECOMOG and Kamajor forces. By instilling fear in and committing crimes against civilians who were forced to work at the diamond mines, the AFRC/RUF also intended to retain control over this critical resource, which remained a constant military objective of both sides.

5014. para. 1723: The Chamber is mindful that an overly expansive definition of active participation in hostilities would be inappropriate as its consequence would be that children associated with armed groups lose their protected status as persons hors de combat under the law of armed conflict. Nonetheless, the Chamber finds that the nature and purpose of the crimes committed against civilians warrants their characterisation as active participation in hostilities. The Chamber considers this interpretation necessary to ensure that children are protected from any engagement in violent functions of the armed group that directly support its conflict against the adversary[3323] and in which the child combatant would be a legitimate military target for the opposing armed group or groups.

5015. para. 1724: The Chamber therefore concludes that in the context of an armed conflict where violence against civilians was an integral and defining feature of the conduct of hostilities, the concept of active participation in hostilities encompasses crimes committed against civilians. The Chamber accordingly finds that the use of children by RUF and AFRC fighters in the commission of crimes against the civilian population amounts to active participation in hostilities.

v. Children guarding military objectives - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5017. para. 1726: The Chamber recalls that in 1998, the RUF used children including TF1-141, who was 12 years of age, to guard and provide security for the RUF military camp in Benduma[3325] and children aged between ten and 12 to guard the training base at Yengema.[3326] The Chamber finds that guarding a military camp constitutes active participation in hostilities as there was a high likelihood and realistic fear of enemy attacks. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that these children actively participated in hostilities by guarding military objects.

5018. para. 1727: The Chamber further recalls that control over the diamond mines in Kono and Kenema Districts was crucial for the war effort of all armed groups in the Sierra Leone conflict, due to the potential for revenue to be raised from the sale of diamonds to finance the purchase of arms, ammunition and other logistics.[3327] As the diamond mines were highly contested and strategic locations, we find that they were potential military targets for the warring factions. The Chamber is of the view that due to the high risk of enemy attacks, armed children that had been previously trained for combat situations that were used to guard the mines were in direct danger of being caught in hostilities.[3328]

5019. para. 1728: We therefore find that the children who guarded the RUF camps at Benduma and Yengema in 1998 and the mines at Cyborg Pit in Kenema during the Junta period in 1997 and at Tombodu in Kono in February/March 1998 were actively participating in hostilities.

vi. Children as spies - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5020. para. 1729: The Chamber recalls that the AFRC/RUF used children in Kono District in 1998 to spy on enemy positions and to collect intelligence.[3329] The Chamber finds that these acts constituted active participation in the hostilities, as they were military in nature and directly supported the war efforts of the RUF.

vii. Children as domestic labour - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5021. para.1730: The Chamber recalls that children under the age of 15 were used to perform domestic chores for RUF and AFRC Commanders.[3330] The Chamber is not satisfied that such conduct constitutes active participation in hostilities, as these activities were not related to the hostilities and did not directly support the military operations of the armed groups.

viii. Children as bodyguards to Commanders - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5022. para. 1731: The Chamber has found that various RUF Commanders used children under the age of 15 as bodyguards in order to protect their own safety.[3331] The Chamber is of view that such conduct is clearly related to the conduct of hostilities as, by virtue of their position and rank, Commanders were key targets for the adversary party. We note that bodyguards accompanied Commanders at all times, including into combat.[3332] By using the children as bodyguards, Commanders placed the children into a potential combat situation. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the use of bodyguards constitutes active participation in the hostilities.

5023. para. 1732: The Chamber notes that the Indictment does not particularise the personal use of children under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities by the Accused. The Chamber has found that depending on the circumstances the use of child soldiers as bodyguards may constitute active participation in hostilities. The Chamber has found that in the case of Sesay and Kallon their bodyguards actively participated in hostilities and that some of these bodyguards were younger than 15 years of age. Therefore the personal use of children in active participation in hostilities by the Accused is a material fact that should have been particularized in the Indictment in order to put the Accused on notice. The Chamber must therefore determine whether this defect was cured by clear, timely and consistent notice of this material fact to the Accused.

5024. para. 1733: The Annexes to the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief contain information on the use of children as bodyguards by the Accused persons. The summary of TF1-330 anticipated testimony states that he saw children as young as 10 year of age carrying guns and that they were with RUF Commanders, such as Sesay.[3333] In addition, the summary of TF1-263 contained information that children below 15 years of age were under the command of Sesay and Kallon during the attacked on Koidu Town in February 1998.[3334]

5025. para. 1734: The Chamber notes that these statements were disclosed prior to the start of the Prosecution case on 5 July 2004. The Chamber, therefore, finds that the defect in the Indictment was cured by timely, clear and consistent notice to the Defence.

5026. para.1735: The Chamber therefore finds that the security guards between the ages of 12 and 15 who accompanied Sesay during the December 1998 attack on Koidu were Sesay's bodyguards, and were therefore actively participating in hostilities. The Chamber is satisfied that at least some of these bodyguards were under the age of 15.

5027. para.1736: Accordingly, the Chamber also finds that the armed boys between 10 and 12 years of age who accompanied Sesay when he visited the Zambian detainees at Yengema in May 2000 were acting as his bodyguards and were therefore actively participating in hostilities.

5028. para.1737: We find that the two boys who accompanied Gbao at muster parades in Kailahun Town in February 1998 were there to ensure his security and were therefore acting as his bodyguards. However, the Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that these bodyguards were under the age of 15, as the 12-year-old witness who observed them testified only that they appeared older than him and it would therefore be a reasonable inference that the bodyguards were aged 15 years or older.

5029. para. 1738: TF1-263 testified that Sesay and Kallon's bodyguards, who he had seen with them in Kono in February/March 1998, were used in combat. One of Kallon's bodyguards told TF1-263 that he was 15. TF1-263, who was 14 at the time, estimated that the other bodyguards were around 14 to 15 years of age, as they were similar in height to himself. On the basis of this evidence, the Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that these bodyguards were under the age of 15, as they may in fact have been 15 or older.

5031. para. 1740: The Chamber has further found that after the Intervention in 1998, rebels travelling to Kono were accompanied by children between ten and 15 years of age. The evidence does not suggest that the children were armed or trained as fighters and therefore does not imply that these children were used as bodyguards. Although the Chamber has found that there was a widespread practice of child recruitment by the RUF and AFRC, it has also heard evidence that the rebel forces, and in particular, the AFRC forces, moved around with their families at this particular time. The children who accompanied the rebels might therefore have been the family members of the fighters within that group, as acknowledged by TF1-215 himself.[3335] The Chamber therefore finds that, on the basis of the evidence, it is not the only reasonable conclusion that these children were used to actively participate in hostilities.

5032. para. 1741: Further, where witnesses testified solely that they had observed Commanders with "SBUs" comprised of boys who were under the age of 15, without any further description of the activities undertaken by these SBUSs, the Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that such SBUs were acting as bodyguards to Commanders, as they may have simply been accompanying the Commanders or being used to perform tasks such as domestic chores. On the basis of such testimony, therefore, it is not the only reasonable conclusion that such children were actively participating in hostilities.

5033. para. 1742: We are therefore not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the SBUs seen by TF1-045 with Bockarie, Sesay and Kallon in Kailahun from 1997 until disarmament, the SBUs seen by TF1-113 with Sesay and Bockarie in Kailahun from 1996 until disarmament, the SBUs, including Morie, seen by TF1-113 with Gbao in Kailahun in 1996 to 1997, the SBUs seen by TF1-036 with Bockarie, Sesay, Kallon and Gbao in Buedu from 1998 to 1998, or the SBUs seen by TF1-141 with Kallon, Akisto and Forty Barrel in Kono in February 1998 were bodyguards. Nor are we satisfied that the boys in SBUs seen by TF1-045 with Kallon in Freetown in 1997 and in Makeni in 1999 to 2000 were bodyguards. The Chamber finds that these children were not actively participating in hostilities.

ix. Children used for food finding missions - Active Participation in Hostilities - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings 5034. para. 1743: The Chamber recalls that the AFRC/RUF routinely sent persons below the age of 15 years, including TF1-141 who was 12 years of age at the time, to conduct food finding missions in Kono District between February and April 1998.[3336] The purpose of these missions was to supply the RUF and AFRC fighters and the captured civilians who accompanied them with food while they were based in the bush. Although this activity supports the armed group in a general sense, in our view it is not directly related to the conduct of hostilities, especially as the evidence does not establish that the children openly carried arms while on such missions. The Chamber therefore finds that this activity, in and of itself, does not amount to active participation in hostilities.

x. Actual or Imputed Knowledge that the children were under the age of 15 - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings 5035. para. 1744: The Chamber recalls it's finding that the practice of using of persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities was not only organised and widespread, but deliberately executed in order to support the war effort of the RUF and AFRC forces.[3337] We recall that some of the children being used were 10 years of age. In such circumstances we find that the perpetrators had reason to know, on the basis of the physical appearance of the children, that they were under the age of 15.

5036. para. 1745: In respect of cases where the age of a child is not immediately obvious, we recall that many of the children used in hostilities were in units entitled "Small Boys Units" and were colloquially referred to as SBUs. We reiterate our conclusion that the consistent pattern of conduct of using persons under the age of 15 in hostilities was sufficient to put the perpetrators on notice that there is a substantial likelihood that the persons being used by them in hostilities were under the age of 15. The fact that the perpetrators may not in all cases have had actual knowledge of the ages of the persons used is immaterial given that the perpetrators had reason to know of their ages.

5037. para. 1746: The Chamber therefore finds that the perpetrators of these acts knew or had reason to know that the persons being used were under the age of 15.

xi. Findings on the Use of Child Soldiers - Use of Child Soldiers in Hostilities - Child soldiers – Legal findings

5038. para. 1747: The Chamber finds it established beyond reasonable doubt that:

(i) the RUF routinely used persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities in Kailahun District from November 1996 to 1998 and Bombali District from 1999 to September 2000;

(ii) the AFRC/RUF routinely used persons under the age of 15 to participate in combat actively in hostilities in Kono District between February and April 1998; and

(iii) the AFRC used persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities in the attack on Freetown in January 1999.

5039. para. 1748: The Chamber therefore finds that between November 1996 and September 2000, the RUF routinely used persons under the age of 15 to actively participate in hostilities in Kailahun, Kono and Bombali Districts, as charged in Count 12 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

5043. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

5044. para. 136: Kallon argues that in light of the conduct for which he was convicted for planning the conscription and use of child soldiers within the RUF, the pleading requirements should have been consistent with those required for allegations of personal commission.[267] He argues that the Trial Chamber held that the pleading of personal commission of Count 12 was defective, but that it nonetheless erroneously found him guilty under Count 12 for planning crimes that "he [was] alleged to have personally committed."[268] Kallon submits that "[t]he Indictment provides no specific details regarding [his] role," and that this ambiguity is compounded by the expansive timeframe for the crime.[269] According to Kallon, this defect prejudiced his defence against charges under Count 12. Kallon contrasts the approach of the Trial Chamber with the ICTR Appeals Chamber's approach in Prosecutor v. Niyitegeka where it held that an indictment "must delve into particulars where possible" and required greater specificity about the time and place of alleged attacks in which the accused in that case personally participated.[270]

5045. para. 137: Kallon further argues that the defects in the Indictment in relation to Count 12 could not have been cured through the "mere service of witness statements."[271] Kallon submits that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses TF1-263, TF1-141, Dennis Koker, TF1-366, TF1-371, TF1-045, TF1-060 and Edwin Kasoma, who adduced evidence regarding incidents not pleaded in the Indictment.[272]

5048. para. 141: Kallon objects that the Indictment nonetheless provides no specific details regarding his role.[276] The Trial Chamber relied upon the following particular acts to find that Kallon planned the offence under Count 12:

(i) Kallon was a senior RUF Commander during the attack on Koidu Town in February 1998 in which children were abducted in large numbers to be sent to RUF camps;

(ii) he was the senior RUF Commander on 3 May 2000 at Moria near Makeni where child soldiers were used in the ambush of UNAMSIL forces;

(iii) he brought a group of children to Bunumbu for training in 1998; and[277]

(iv) he issued orders that "young boys" should be trained to become soldiers and handle weapons at Bunumbu on or about 9 June 1998.[278]

5049. para. 142: The Appeals Chamber must determine whether the Prosecution provided adequate notice of the "particular acts" or "the particular course of conduct" which formed the basis for Kallon's liability for planning the offence under Count 12 in relation to events in Kenema, Kailahun, Kono and Bombali Districts. The Indictment provides notice that Kallon incurred liability pursuant to each mode of liability, in part, as a result of his acts as a "senior officer and commander in the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces,"[279] his role "[b]etween about May 1996 and about April 1998, [as] a Deputy Area Commander,"[280] and that as a function of these positions "Kallon ... exercised authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces."[281] Kallon's conduct in these positions entailed the acts described in (i) and (ii) above, and thus the Indictment provided sufficient notice in respect of those acts.

5050. para. 143: In respect of (iii) and (iv) above, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a distinction is drawn between the material facts upon which the Prosecution relies and the evidence by which those material facts will be proved. Only the former must be pleaded.[282] In this case, Kallon, while acting in his capacity as a commander personally brought children to a training camp, and issued orders that children should be trained as combatants. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, these two facts constituted evidence of Kallon's conduct as an RUF Commander and his involvement in the execution of the plan to recruit and use child soldiers. The Trial Chamber did not find that this conduct amounted to planning itself, but it inferred Kallon's role in planning from this evidence. As such, these facts were evidence of his role in planning and they need not have been pleaded in the Indictment.

5051. para. 144: Kallon's submission that the Trial Chamber found that the defective pleading of Count 12 was cured through the mere service of witness statements is misconceived. Kallon was convicted of planning the use of children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities. The Trial Chamber did not find that the pleading of planning liability was defective; it needed no cure.

5052. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

(v) Kailahun District – Child soldiers

5059. para. 749: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF routinely used persons under the age of 15 to actively participate in hostilities between November 1996 and September 2000 in Kailahun, Kono, Bombali and Kenema Districts.[1948] The Trial Chamber held that the execution of this system of conscription required a substantial degree of planning, and that this planning was conducted at the highest levels of the RUF organisation.[1949]

5060. para. 750: The Trial Chamber also found that Sesay, as one of the most senior RUF Commanders, made a substantial contribution to the planning of this system of conscription.[1950] It, therefore, convicted him under Article 6(1) for planning the "use of persons under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities in Kailahun, Kenema, Kono and Bombali Districts between 1997 and September 2000, as charged in Count 12."[1951]

contends that the Trial Chamber found that these "young boys" were in fact 15 years of age and above.[1972] However, Sesay misinterprets the Trial Chamber's findings which referred to "young boys" to include persons of at least 15 years of age as well as SBUs comprising children as young as 9 to 11 years of age.[1973]

5062. para. 756: Sesay further submits that "in any event, the Trial Chamber cites only one piece of valid evidence for this finding: the evidence of Witness TF1-366," and that the testimonies of Witnesses TF1-199 and TF1-371, also cited by the Trial Chamber in further support, do not in fact support the finding.[1974] The Trial Chamber provided no citations for its finding that Sesay issued the orders in June 1998, however, it cited the testimony of TF1-366, TF1-199 and TF1-371 for its findings that SBUs were children tasked with carrying weapons for the RUF. Witness TF1-366's testimony most closely supports both findings of the Trial Chamber, including that Sesay issued orders. He testified directly that Kallon and Superman issued orders and Sesay "sent messages" that young boys should be brought to be trained at Bunumbu.[1975] He stated that some of the "young boys" were 15 years of age, but that many were SBUs comprising children ages 9 to 11 years and smaller boys.[1976] Witness TF1-199 testified that SBUs were "really small boys" and because he was a small boy of 12 years of age, he was called an SBU.[1977] However, he did not mention Sesay in his testimony or testify to anyone giving orders. Witness TF1-371 testified that children between the ages of 12 and 18 years were classified as SBUs, and that Sesay had SBUs, one of whom was around 15 years and the other around the age of 16.[1978] Importantly, of the testimony cited by the Trial Chamber, only TF1-366 supports the finding that Sesay issued orders for "young boys" to be trained at Bunumbu in June 1998.

5063. para. 757: This testimony is consistent with the testimony of TF1-362, relied on by the Trial Chamber to find that civilians captured on the highway to Freetown from 1997 onward, as well as people from Daru and the SLA, were brought to Bunumbu training base at the command of Issa Sesay.[1979] Importantly, although Sesay challenges the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-362 in other contexts, he does not impugn these findings.[1980]

5064. para. 758: Trial Chambers enjoy broad discretion in their assessment of evidence and determination of the weight to accord testimony. In general, a Trial Chamber may in the exercise of its discretion rely on a single witness for support of its factual findings. With respect to TF1-366, the Trial Chamber stated that it "has not accepted the testimony of TF1-366 as it relates to the acts and conduct of the Accused unless it was corroborated in some material aspect by a reliable witness."[1981]

5066. para. 760: Sesay contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding, on the basis of testimony of TF1-362, that he personally communicated reports to Bunumbu and ordered that the training camp be moved from Bunumbu to Yengema.[1983] Sesay, however, fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber could not reasonably rely on TF1-362 for these findings. As Sesay does not show an error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion to assess the witness's credibility or determine the weight it attached to his testimony, this part of Sesay's argument fails.

5067. para. 761: Sesay further submits that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied upon Witnesses TF1-114 and TF1-108[1984] to support its finding that children were forcibly trained,[1985] but disregarded their testimony that, Sesay contends, "contradicted TF1-362's account of Sesay's involvement in the training base." However, Sesay fails to demonstrate how the testimony of TF1-114 and TF1-108 contradicts the testimony relied upon by the Trial Chamber, and the Appeals Chamber is unable to infer his argument. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "[w]hile it is preferable for the Trial Chamber to state its reasons for accepting the evidence of one witness over that of another when they are contradictory, the Trial Chamber is not obliged to refer to every piece of evidence on the trial record."[1986] Sesay fails to show error in the Trial Chamber's finding.

via radio to Sesay."[1994] The Trial Chamber also found that the training commander at Yengema reported directly through Sesay to Bockarie, until Bockarie left the RUF in December 1999, after which she reported to Sesay only.[1995] According to the Trial Chamber, records were kept of the ages of SBUs and SGUs trained at Bunumbu and Yengema, from which it could be inferred that the fighters who conducted the training knew or had reason to know that certain trainees were under the age of 15.[1996]

5070. para. 764: The Appeals Chamber considers that Sesay's receipt of reports is relevant circumstantial evidence supporting the findings that "the execution of this system of conscription [of child soldiers] required a substantial degree of planning"[1997] and that "this planning was conducted at the highest levels of the RUF organization,"[1998] including Sesay.[1999] That reports on the training of child soldiers were transmitted to RUF headquarters signifies that the conscription of child soldiers was highly organised, and that the RUF leadership was responsible for that organisation. Moreover, the creation and transmission of training reports represents a mechanism through which the RUF headquarters could monitor the implementation of the planned conscription of child soldiers. Sesay's receipt of such reports was indicative that he had participated in that planning process. Accordingly, contrary to Sesay's contention, the Trial Chamber did not consider that he substantially contributed to the planning by merely receiving reports, but that his receipt of such reports was part of the evidence taken into consideration in coming to the conclusion that he had participated in the planning at both the preparatory and execution phases.

5071. para. 765: Sesay contends that the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-141 to find that he participated in the training bases by giving speeches at Bunumbu training camp, passing and receiving messages and threatening to execute those child soldiers who attempted to leave[2000] is "wholly unreasonable given [the witness's] frailties" and the numerous and significant contradictions in the witness's testimony.[2001]

5072. para. 766: The Trial Chamber acknowledged the "concerns" raised by the Defence,[2002] and indicated that it was "uneasy with portions of TF1-141's testimony that appear[ed] to be fanciful and thus implausible."[2003] The Trial Chamber noted that the witness was captured by the RUF in 1998 and remained with the group until 2000, when he was demobilised.[2004] The Trial Chamber considered that although the witness was diagnosed with Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder as a result of his experience as a child soldier with the RUF, he was nonetheless able to give truthful testimony.[2005] The Trial Chamber concluded that, after seeing the witness in court, hearing his testimony and observing him under cross-examination, he "came across as a candid witness." The

Trial Chamber, therefore, "generally accepted his testimony, especially as it relates to his own experiences as a child combatant."[2006]

5074. para. 768: Taking into account the foregoing discussion, the Appeals Chamber will now consider Sesay's broader claim that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him liable for planning the use of child soldiers.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5086. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[277]

5088. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [279]

5089. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [280]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

5090. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a

[277] AFRC Indictment, para. 37.
[279] AFRC Indictment, para. 39.

campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [281]

(iii) Count 12: Use of Child Soldiers

5091. At all times relevant to this Indictment, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, AFRC/RUF routinely conscripted, enlisted and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities. Many of these children were first abducted, then trained in AFRC/RUF camps in various locations throughout the country, and thereafter used as fighters. [282]

5092. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> Count 12: Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities, an OTHER SERIOUS VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW, punishable under Article 4.c. of the Statute. [283]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) The Expert Witnesses

5093. para. 1248: Both the Prosecution and the Defence introduced expert witness reports on Child Soldiers,[2242] and the Prosecution expert testified at tria1.[2243] The Prosecution expert report provides an overview on the widespread use of children under the age of 15 as combatants by the parties to the conflict in Sierra Leone during the period covered by the Special Court Statute.[2244] The Trial Chamber cannot confirm the Prosecution Expert's figures regarding the number of child soldiers because some of her sources referred to child soldiers as individuals under the age of 18,

[280] AFRC Indictment, para. 40.

rather than 15, and there is no other corroborating evidence on the issue.[2245] Nevertheless, the Prosecution expert report emphasizes that the illegal recruitment and/or use of children as combatants was not an isolated, localised, or accidental phenomenon.[2246] While "widespread or systematic use" of children is not a chapeau element for a finding of liability under Article 4 (C) of the Statute, that Trial Chamber finds that the information may be useful in assessing whether a perpetrator "knew or should have known" that persons recruited were under the age of 15.

5094. para. 1249: With regards to the forces alleged to have been associated with the Accused in this case, the Prosecution Expert Report refers to the illegal conscription and use of children by AFRC Government forces during the AFRC government period,[2247] and by armed forces during the January 1999 invasion and retreat from Freetown.[2248] She also notes that the overthrow of the AFRC government brought negotiations for the release of child combatants between child protection organisations and the rebel government to a halt. While the expert does not specifically refer to the further illegal recruitment or use of children during 1998, she does say that during that year ECOMOG turned over child Prisoners of War (POWs) to UNICEF,[2249] suggesting that these children had been associated with forces fighting the Kabbah government during this period.

5095. para. 1250: The Defence Expert Witness report affirms the widespread recruitment and use of children as combatants by all the forces involved in the conflict, including by renegade soldiers.[2250] He attributes the problem to several phenomena: that in a "traditional African setting the concept of childhood is related to the ability to perform tasks not to age[2251]; that the phenomenon was due, in part, to the partial disintegration of the state prior to the conflict[2252]; that the use of children as combatants was a practice established in Sierra Leone in the decades preceding the conflict of the latter half of the 1990s[2253]; that the Kabbah government's encouragement of child soldier recruitment into the military influenced the practice of rebel groups[2254]; and that all fighting factions resorted to the use of child soldiers.[2255] Finally, the Defence Expert report states that many of the children that followed AFRC members after they were ousted from power in February 1998 did so voluntarily, and that they joined family members or other close associates out of fear of reprisals.[2256] However, the Expert provided no research or evidence to substantiate this claim.

5096. para. 1251: The Trial Chamber stresses that both experts agree that persons under the age of 15 were used for military purposes by all factions, including the AFRC, during the conflict including the period 25 May 1997-mid 1999. As discussed in the Applicable law, the Trial

Chamber rejects any defence based on cultural distinctions regarding the definition of "childhood."[2257] The Trial Chamber infers from the Defence Expert's argument that all factions to the conflict recruited and used child soldiers that he is suggesting a Tu Quoque Defence. The Trial Chamber rejects such a defence and recalls that it has addressed the related Mistake of Law issue in the Applicable Law section of the Judgement. The Trial Chamber will not review evidence regarding the conditions of the Sierra Leonean State and army prior to 1997 as the issue has no bearing on the perpetration of international crimes by individuals within the state. Finally, it is not impossible that some persons under the age of 15 associated with the troops were family members and were present voluntarily. The Trial Chamber will address this particular defence claim in more detail below.

(ii) The Evidence of Former Child Soldiers

5098. para. 1253: TF1-157 was 20 years old when he testified before the SCSL in 2005. As will be discussed in more detail below, the Trial Chamber is able to infer beyond a reasonable doubt that he was abducted between May and August of 1998, meaning that he was approximately thirteen years old at the time of the events he described.2258 The witness testified that rebels and soldiers attacked Bonoya/Bornoya village in Bombali District, his home village, on the Islamic New year, although he did not know the year.[2259] He clarified that among the attackers were former soldiers who had "turned into rebels."[2260] Among the attackers were individuals wearing combat fatigues, and others wearing civilian clothing.[2261] During the attack, the witness watched the assailants commit a number of atrocities against his family members.[2262] Among the assailants was a man named 'Mohamed', who abducted the witness.[2263] The attackers abducted at least five other people from Bonoya/Bomoya the same day, at least three of whom were younger than the witness at the time.[2264] The witness described having gone together with his captors through the villages of Kamagbo, Daraya, Mayogbo, Karina, Mabaka, Mandaha, Mateboi, Gbomsamba, Robat Mess (Camp Rosos).[2265] While the Trial Chamber is unable to find some of these locations on the maps at its disposal, it notes that these locations are discussed by other prosecution witnesses.

5099. para. 1254: Given the precision with which the witness described his journey from Bonoya/Bomoya to Robat Mess/Camp Rosos, events at Robat Mess/Camp Rosos[2266], the journey towards Freetown, including the death of Saj Musa in Benguema,[2267] and the fact that the troops arrived in Freetown on "January 6",2268 the Trial Chamber is able to infer beyond a reasonable doubt that the witness was abducted between May and August of 1998.[2269] Along the route the child witnessed the commission of numerous crimes by his abductors,[2270] and was systematically exploited and abused. 'Mohamed' forced him to carry rice and luggage along the route from Bonoya to Camp Rosos,[2271] while other captors also used him to fetch water, and pound rice, in addition to carrying goods for the troops.[2272] Upon arrival at Camp Rosos, the witness' abductors forced the witness to undergo military training.[2273] During that training, the witness was repeatedly flogged by his captors because he "was Mandingo and belonged to Tejan Kabbah's people."[2274] As part of the military instruction the witness was given injections and tablets of drugs which he believed to be cocaine.[2275] The daily doses of narcotics were so strong that the witness did not know what he was doing, and could not tell the court whether he had killed anyone while under the influence.[2276] At one point 'Adama Cuthand', a known fighter associated with the renegade soldiers, threatened to amputate one of his limbs-- although it is not clear why-- and he only narrowly escaped that fate.[2277] The witness testified that he learned at Camp Rosos that the commanders in charge of the "rebels" who had captured him were 'Gullit', 'Five-Five' and 'Adama Cut Hand'.[2278]

5100. para. 1255: On 6 January, 1999 the witness entered Freetown with the SLA rebels.[2279] He was forced by his commander Abdul to accompany him wherever he went in Freetown. The witness gives as an example an occasion on which he was forced to accompany Abdul to Calaba Town to burn vehicles and houses and kill people.[2280] On two occasions Abdul also took the witness to fight at Eastern Police.[2281] It emerged in cross-examination that witness TF1-157 did not fight on these occasions, but that his role was to carry equipment for Abdu1.[2282] Following the retreat from Freetown, the witness managed to escape from the rebels and found his way to the protection of UNICEF.[2283] The Trial Chamber notes that the witness was not shaken on cross-examination, and therefore in spite of his youth at the time of events finds that the witness was credible and reliable with regards to the details of captivity and his treatment in captivity. However, the Trial Chamber will consider the youth of the witness at the time of events when evaluating the weight to be accorded his testimony regarding the command structure of the troops he was forced to accompany.

5101. para. 1256: Witness TF1-158, who is the younger brother of Witness TF1-157,[2284] was 18 years old when he testified before the Court. He too did not recall the precise year but remembered that he was 10 years old when armed soldiers and men wearing mixed combat and civilian witness attacked the Mosque in Bonoya/Bornoya where the witness was attending a service.[2285] The attackers wore mixed combat and civilian clothing.[2286] The witness later learned that the leaders of the group that attacked Bonoya/Bornoya were "Saj Musa. Gullit, Five-Five and O-Five."[2287] He also referred to his abductors as "SAJ Musa's group."[2288] The witness watched 'Adama' hack his father to death on the day he was abducted,[2289] was compelled by his captors to carry food for the troops,[2290] and witnessed the commission of numerous crimes by the troops who had abducted him.[2291] The witness testified that he spent a week at Rosos,[2292] where like witness TF1-157, he was forced by his captors to participate in military training. Some of those trained with him were as young as seven or eight years o1d.[2293] Soon after the military training the witness managed to escape to the village of Kamasufu, where he was arrested a second time by a different faction of renegade soldiers associated with the fighters named "Savage' and "Staff Alhaji. When asked at which time he was abducted the second time the witness answered that "it was when they said there was a ceasefire.[2294] The Trial Chamber therefore infers that the second abduction took place in 1999. The witness was again forced to carry loads for his captors,[2295] and forced to undergo further military training[2296] before being sent to participate in an attack on Kabala.[2297] The attack failed and the troops were forced to retreat to Kamabai. Five days later the witness was told there was infighting between the RUF and AFRC at Makeni. Savage then ordered that the troops disarm and the witness was turned over to the United Nations.[2298]

5103. para. 1258: The Brima Defence points out that the witness described the Accused Brima as having a stammer when he speaks.[2299] The Accused testified before the Chamber for 21 days and displayed no sign of a stammer in his speech. The Trial Chamber also observes that the witness repeatedly stated that the commanders of the first group that abducted him were "Saj Musa, Gullit, 55 and 05."[2300] However, other evidence before this Chamber indicates that SAJ Musa and 'O-Five' were not together with the Accused Brima and Kanu in Bombali District during this period. The witness also testified that 'Staff Alhaji' trained child soldiers both at Camp Rosos in Bombali District,[2301] during the witness' first abduction, and at Kamabai in Koinadugu District, during his second abduction, which the Trial Chamber believes is improbable.[2302] On cross-examination, however, the Witness was not shaken with regards to the description of his treatment in captivity. The Trial Chamber further notes that the events as described by TF1-158 are notably distinct from those related by witness TF1-157. Therefore the Trial Chamber finds that in spite of his youth, the witness was credible and reliable with regards to the details of captivity and his treatment in captivity. However, it will not rely on his testimony with regards to the command structure.

5104. para. 1259: Three other former child soldiers testified before the Chamber, TF1-199, TF1-180, TF1-085 but the Trial Chamber concludes that their testimonies were problematic. TF1-180 testified that he was abducted in Bombali District. He was then shuttled back and forth between Bombali District and Port Loko District and was eventually sent to fight ECOMOG in Koinadugu District. The only indication that the witness provides regarding the time frame is that the Commanders in charge of his captivity were "General Issa, Brigadier Five-Five and General Gullit" suggesting that his captivity took place after the retreat from Freetown to Port Loko or Bombali District in 1999.[2303] The Indictment refers to no other crimes taking place in Port Loko after April 1999, and to no crimes at all in Koinadugu and Bombali Districts during this period.

5105. para. 1260: TF1-085 testified she was abducted in Freetown in January 1999. She was then forced into a "marriage" with her captor. She spent "months" in Port Loko District where she endured a series of sexual crimes. After an attempt to escape, this witness too was shuttled back and forth between Port Loko and Makeni Districts where she was forced to undergo military training. Following a long, but imprecise, period of sexual enslavement, she was sent to participate in an attack on Kono. The Trial Chamber has no other information regarding any attacks on Kono after the spring of 1998.[2304] Thus, the Trial Chamber is unable to link the military element of the witness' experiences, directly or indirectly, to the Accused 5106. para. 1261: TF1-199 testified that he was abducted in Bombali district during the Christmas holidays of 1998. 'Lieutenant Marah' and his superior 'Savage' were the commanders of the faction that abducted the witness.[2305] The Brima Defence argues that these two men were part of Brigadier Mani's group, and that the Prosecution has not linked Brigadier Mani to the Accused during this period.[2306] The Trial Chamber recalls that it is the Prosecution's case that during this period, the Accused were in the Western Area preparing the attack on Freetown. Although this point in itself is not dispositive, the Prosecution has failed to make a case linking the accused with crimes committed in Bombali district in late 1998 or early 1999.

(iii) The Evidence of Other Witnesses

5107. para. 1262: In addition to the testimony provided by former child soldiers, the Trial Chamber heard the evidence of witnesses who said that crimes against them were committed by child soldiers, and the evidence of other witnesses who described the abduction and use of child soldiers by SLA soldiers. Witnesses TF1-023, who was 16 years old at the time of events, testified that she was captured by a "young boy" holding a gun on 22 January 1999.[2307] She was then taken to Allen Town with other abducted civilians. Once there, she and other civilians were guarded by boys her abductors referred to as 'SBUs' which she said stood for 'Small Boy Units.' The witness believed these boys to have been between 13 and 15 years o1d.[2308] TF1-024 testified that he was abducted by three "rebel boys" on 8 January 1999.[2309] However, as he did not provide an approximate age for these "boys", the Trial Chamber will not consider his testimony on this particular subject.

5108. para. 1263: On the 25th of January 1999, Witness TF1-227 was abducted by AFRC troops led by a 'Corporal Bastard' at Kola Tree in the Western Area and taken to Benguema in the Western Area.[2310] At Benguema, he saw approximately 25 combatants between the ages of 10 and 14 years o1d.[2311] They were dressed in military uniforms, carried guns and "acted like they were trained soldiers".[2312] He said that "Brigadier Five-Five" personally had five to ten child combatants with him.[2313] He described Five-Five as a "mature gentleman" wearing civilian clothes.[2314] The Witness explained that child soldiers were responsible for flogging civilians who disobeyed disciplinary rules.[2315] As the Witness' identification of 'Brigadier Five-Five' is vague, the Trial Chamber will not rely on it in making its findings on the liability of the Accused Kanu for this crime.

5111. para. 1266: Referring to the Applicable Law above, it is the Trial Chamber's view that the use of children to participate actively in hostilities is not limited to participation in combat. An armed force requires logistical support to maintain its operations. Any labour or support that gives effect to, or helps maintain, operations in a conflict constitutes active participation.

5113. para. 1268: Witness TFl-133 testified that 'Pa Mani' used children as bodyguards at his home in Kurunbola, Koinadugu in 1998.[2321] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that 'Pa Mani' is Brigadier Mani, the Director of Defence in the AFRC government. However, the Prosecution has adduced no evidence linking the crimes of Brigadier Mani with the Accused.

5115. para. 1270: The testimony of other witnesses has enabled the Trial Chamber to put the evidence provided by former child soldiers and their victims into a broader context. TF1-334 testified that following Johnny Paul Koroma's declaration of Koidu (Kono District) as a "no-go area" area for civilians in late February 1998, rebel soldiers began capturing civilians for a variety of uses, including children between the ages of 8 and 12. Young boys were assigned to Small Boy Units (SBUs) which were used in Tombodu to amputate the limbs of civilians.[2325]

into battalions. The witness himself had approximately 15 SBUs under his command.[2327] TF1-334 corroborated this evidence saying small children as young as ten years old were abducted at Karina and distributed among the military commanders,[2328] and that at Camp Rosos he personally provided military training to children abducted between Mansofinia and Rosos.[2329] Witness TF1-153 testified that he had seen many child soldiers at the base established by the AFRC soldiers at 'Colonel Eddie Town.'[2330]

5117. para. 1272: Witness TF1-334 further stated that during the 1999 invasion of Freetown, 'Gullit' ordered the capture of civilians saying that it would attract the attention of the international community.[2331] Approximately 300 abducted civilians were taken by the fighters from Freetown to Benguema.[2332] Among those captured were "many" small boys, including some as young as nine or ten years old. They were later trained as SBUs, and the witness himself had two SBUS.[2333] He added that once the retreating troops arrived at Newton in the Western Area, 'Gullit' ordered that everyone who had a young boy between the ages of ten and twelve should provide the child with basic military training.[2334]

5119. para. 1274: Finally, a UN Report released in the wake of the January 1999 invasion of Freetown stated that "a significant number of rebel combatants were children. Reports were received of death and injuries being inflicted by boys as young as eight to 11 years old."[2336]

5120. para. 1275: The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the AFRC fighting forces conscripted children under the age of 15 years old and/or used them to participate actively in hostilities during the period covered by the Indictment. The Trial Chamber is of the view that the AFRC fighting faction used children as combatants because they were easy to manipulate and program, and resilient in battle.[2337] In the instant case, the evidence is conclusive that most, if not all, of the children in question were forcibly abducted from their families or legal guardians.[2338] In addition to having been kidnapped, child soldiers described having been forced into hard labour[2339] and military training, and sent into battle, often on the frontlines.[2340] They were also beaten;[2341] forced to watch the commission of crimes against family members;[2342] injected with narcotics to make them feadess;[2343] compelled to commit crimes including rape, murder, amputation and abduction;[2344] used as human shields;[2345] and threatened with death if they tried to escape or refused to obey orders.[2346]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

5121. para 256: Article 4 of the Statute is entitled 'Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law' and provides as follows:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following serious violations of international humanitarian law:
>
> a. Intentionally directing attacks against the civilian population as such or against individual civilians not taking direct part in hostilities;
>
> b. Intentionally directing attacks against personnel, installations, materials, units or vehicles involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as long as they are entitled the protection of given to civilians or civilian objects under the international law of armed conflict;
> c. Conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities.

5122. para. 257: The crimes listed in Article 4 of the Statute possess the same chapeau requirements as those in Article 3 of the Statute.[493]

(ii) Other Serious Violations of IHL – Findings on general requirements

5123. para. 258: As stated above, the Trial Chamber finds that at all times relevant to the Indictment, there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone and that the crimes were closely related to this conflict.[494] Unless indicated otherwise in its Factual Findings, the Trial Chamber is also satisfied that all victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time the crimes occurred.

(iii) Applicable law – Conscripting, enlisting or using child soldiers

5124. para. 727: In Count 12, the Indictment alleges that the AFRC/RUF "at all times relevant to this Indictment, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone routinely conscripted, enlisted and/or used boys and girls under the age of 15 to participate in active hostilities." The Accused are thus charged with conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities ("conscripting, enlisting or using child soldiers"), an 'other serious violation of international humanitarian law', punishable under Article 4(c) of the Statute.[1414]

5125. para. 728: The question of whether this crime is recognised as a crime entailing individual criminal responsibility under customary international was examined by the Appeals Chamber,[1415] which found that, prior to November 1996, the crime had crystallised as customary law, regardless of whether committed in internal or international armed conflict,[1416] and held that

> [C]hild recruitment was criminalised before it was explicitly set out as a criminal prohibition in treaty law and certainly by November 1996, the starting point of the time frame relevant to the indictments. As set out above, the principle of legality and the principle of specificity are both upheld.[1417]

a. Elements of the Crime

5126. para. 729: Guided once more by the Rome Statute, the Trial Chamber adopts the following elements of the crime of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities:

1. The perpetrator conscripted or enlisted one or more persons into an armed force or group or used one or more persons to participate actively in hostilities;

2. Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;

3. The perpetrator knew or should have known that such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;

4. The conduct took place in the context of and was associated with an armed conflict;

5. The perpetrator was aware of factual circumstances that established the existence of an armed conflict.[1418]

b. Pleadings

5127. para. 730: The Kanu Defence submits that the age of 15 years is 'arbitrary' as "the ending of childhood [in the traditional African setting] has little to do with achieving a particular age and more to do with physical capacity to perform acts reserved for adults."[1419] Moreover, the Kanu Defence claims that the age for recruitment into the military in Sierra Leone is flexible, and that there has been a practice by various governments in Sierra Leone of recruiting persons under the age of 15 into the military prior to the Indictment period.[1420] According to the Kanu Defence, this practice impacts on the Accused Kanu's awareness as to the unlawfulness of conscripting, enlisting or using child soldiers below the age of 15. As such conduct was not, it is submitted, on its face manifestly illegal, no conviction should be entered on Count 12 on the grounds of mistake of law.[1421]

(iv) Use of Child Soldiers - Findings on general requirements

5128. para. 731: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Appeals Chamber has found that the crime charged in Count 12 of the Indictment has attained the status of customary international law. The Appeals Chamber also confirmed the customary status of the requirement that the victim must be below the age of 15.[1422] Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that the domestic law of Sierra Leone defines a 'child' as a person under 16 years of age.[1423] Therefore, the Trial Chamber dismisses what appears to be an argument by the Kanu Defence to construe the age requirement flexibly.

5129. para. 732: Furthermore, the Trial Chamber is not persuaded that the defence of mistake of law can be invoked here. The rules of customary international law are not contingent on domestic practice in one given country.[1424] Hence, it cannot be argued that a national practice creating an appearance of lawfulness can be raised as a defence of conduct violating international norms. The submission by the Kanu Defence is therefore dismissed.

5130. para. 733: The actus reus of the crime can be satisfied by 'conscripting' or 'enlisting' children under the age of 15, or by 'using' them to participate actively in the hostilities.

5131. para. 734: 'Conscription' implies compulsion, in some instances through the force of law.[1425] While the traditional meaning of the term refers to government policies requiring citizens to serve in their armed forces,[1426] the Trial Chamber observes that Article 4(c) allows for the possibility that children be conscripted into "[armed] groups". While previously wars were primarily between well established States, contemporaneous armed conflicts typically involve armed factions which may not be associated with, or acting on behalf, a State. To give the protection against crimes relating to child soldiers its intended effect, it is justified not to restrict 'conscription' to the prerogative of States and their legitimate Governments, as international humanitarian law is not grounded on formalistic postulations.[1427] Rather, the Trial Chamber adopts an interpretation of 'conscription' which encompasses acts of coercion, such as abductions[1428] and forced recruitment[1429], by an armed group against children, committed for the purpose of using them to participate actively in hostilities.

5132. para. 735: 'Enlistment' entails accepting and enrolling individuals when they volunteer to join an armed force or group.[1430] Enlistment is a voluntary act, and the child's consent is therefore not a valid defence.[1431]

5133. para. 736: 'Using' children to "participate actively in the hostilities" encompasses putting their lives directly at risk in combat.[1432] As a footnote attached to the Preparatory Conference on the establishment of the International Criminal Court states The words "using" and "participate" have been adopted in order to cover both participation in combat and also active participation in military activities linked to combat such as scouting, spying, sabotage and use of children as decoys, couriers or at military checkpoints."[1433]

5134. para. 737: It is the Trial Chamber's view that the use of children to participate actively in hostilities is not limited to participation in combat. An armed force requires logistical support to maintain its operations. Any labour or support that gives effect to, or helps maintain, operations in a conflict constitutes active participation. Hence carrying loads for the fighting faction, finding and/or acquiring food, ammunition or equipment, acting as decoys, carrying messages, making trails or finding routes, manning checkpoints or acting as human shields are some examples of active participation as much as actual fighting and combat.

5135. para. 738: The elements of 'armed forces or groups' entail that the armed forces or groups must be under responsible command, which entails a degree of organization which should be such as to enable the armed groups to plan and carry out concerted military operations and to impose discipline within the armed group.

(v) Findings – Child soldiers

5137. para. 1277: The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that AFRC and RUF forces abducted children for military purposes in Kenema District[2347] during the AFRC government period, and that the AFRC fighting forces abducted children for military purposes in Kono[2348], Koinadugu and Bombali[2349] Districts in 1998, and in Freetown and the Western area in 1999.[2350] It finds the evidence insufficient to make a finding with regards to the conscription and/or use of Child Soldiers in Port Loko District between February and April 1999.

5138. para. 1278: Although the Trial Chamber has found that the recruitment of these children for military purposes suffices for a finding of liability under Count 12, the Trial Chamber is further satisfied that children under the age of 15 were used for military purposes in Kenema District in 1997- 1998,[2351] Kono District in 1998,[2352] and Freetown and the Western Area in 1999.[2353] The Trial Chamber finds that forcing children to undergo military training in a hostile environment constitutes illegal use of children pursuant to Article 4 (C), and therefore also finds that AFRC forces illegally used children in Bombali District in 1998.[2354] The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that incidents of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities were linked to the Accused in this case in the districts of Bombali and Freetown and the Western Area.

(vi) Responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers

5139. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers - paras. 1820-1837 [8191], 1970-1972 [8208], 2089-2098 [8211].

5140. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers - paras. 1820-1834 [9075], 1838 [9076], 1973-1975 [9078], 1977 [9081].

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Findings

5141. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Mens rea for Crimes Related to Child Soldiers

5142. para. 293: In his Seventh Ground of Appeal, Kanu alleges the t the Trial Chamber erred in law in dismissing his argument that "the absence of criminal knowledge on his part vitiated the requisite mens rea to the crimes relating to child soldiers."[450] He argues that the mens rea element required for the crime was in this instance negated by a mistake of law on his part. Due to various factors, detailed in his Appeal Brief, Kanu submits that "he believed that his conduct [of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years] was legitimate."[451] He contends that at all material times, he lacked the requisite criminal intent required for the crime of "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities" punishable under Article 4.c of the Statute of the Special Court.

5143. para . 294: In the alternative, Kanu argues that conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 was not a war crime at the time alleged in the Indictment.

5144. para. 295: The Prosecution observes that the Appeals Chamber has already ruled that conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities was a crime entailing individual criminal responsibility at the time of the acts alleged in the Indictment. The Appeals Chamber refers to it dictum that:

> "The rejection of the use of child soldiers by the international community was widespread by 1994 ... Citizens of Sierra Leone, and even less, persons in leadership roles, cannot possibly argue that they did not know that recruiting children was a criminal act in violation of international humanitarian law. Child recruitment was criminalized before it was explicitly set out as a criminal prohibition in treat:' law and certainly by November 1996, the starting point of the time frame relevant to the indictments. As set out above, the principle of legality and the principle of specificity a-e both upheld."[452]

5145. para. 296: Kanu's submission that conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 was not a war crime at the time alleged in the Indictment is without merit. Furthermore it is frivolous and vexatious for Kanu to contend that the absence of criminal knowledge on his part vitiated the requisite mens rea in respect of the crimes relating to child soldiers.

5146. para. 297: Kanu's Seventh Ground of Appeal therefore fails.

D. CDF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Samuel Hinga Norman, Moinina Fofana, and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-03-14-I, Indictment, 4 February 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5147. Paragraph 4 through 21 is incorporated by reference.[284]

(ii) Count 8: Use of Child Soldiers

5148. At all times relevant to this Indictment, the Civil Defence Forces did, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, initiate or enlist children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, and in addition, or in the alternative, use them to participate actively in hostilities.[285]

5149. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crime alleged below:

> Count 8: Enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities, an OTHER SERIOUS VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONA.L HUMANITARIAN LAW, punishable under Article 4.c. of the Statute.[286]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-T, Judgement, 2 August 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Testimony of Child Soldiers

5150. para. 667: TF2-140 was born on 19 January 1983.[1431] He was abducted by the RUF in 1996. At that time, TF2-140 was 13 years old. He was forced to fight with the RUF until he was captured by the CDF in Koidu in 1997.[1432] The Kamajors held TF2-140 and five others in a cage made of palm fronds.[1433] Eventually a Kamajor named Sandi promised to free TF2-140 if agreed to help the Kamajors.[1434] TF2-140 feared for his life and felt that he had no option but to comply. He led the Kamajors to various hidden stores of ammunition and helped them to capture certain strategic points.[1435] TF2-140 spent a month assisting Kamajors in this way.[1436] At this time, TF2-140 was 14 years old.[1437]

5151. para. 668: In August or September 1997, TF2-140 was taken to Pujehun District and initiated into Kamajor society.[1438] Some of those initiated with him were adults and others were children of 10 or 11 years.[1439] Initiation fees were paid to the district initiator, Mualemu Sherrif, who sent fees to Kondewa, the Kamajor High Priest.[1440]

5152. para. 669: From Pujehun, TF2-140 travelled with Sandi to Mano Junction. On the way they encountered fighting at Kenema, TF2-140 was armed and he participated in the fighting.[1441]

5153. para. 670: After reaching Mano Junction, TF2-140 was re-initiated along with 28 other boys.[1142] By this time, TF2-140 was 15 years of age.[1443] Some of the boys who took part in this initiation were the same age as TF2-140 and others were as young as 10 or 11 years old.[1444] It was widely believed that were more effectively immunized because they had not had any time with women.[1445]

5154. para. 671: In February 1998, TF2-140 passed through Blama and Koribondo.[1446] An attack took place in Koribondo shortly before TF2-140 arrived there.[1447] As TF2-140 passed through the town he saw Joe Tamidey, a Kamajor commander, who was being guarded by four small boys. TF2-140 estimated that these boys were younger than he was.[1448]

5155. para. 672: From Koribondo, TF2-140 made his way to Pujehun and then Bo.[1449] In Bo, TF2-140 stayed in a compound adjacent to Fofana's Mohei Boima Road Residence.[1450] TF2-140 gradually became involved with the Kamajors in Fofana's compound and acted as part of the security team for the houses and its occupants. While there, he met Fofana and Norman.[1451]

5157. para. 674: TF2-021 was born in 1986.[1457] He was abducted by rebels in 1995, along with other young boys from his village in Kailehun District.[1458] At the time of his abduction, TF2-021

was approximately nine years old. TF2-021 remained with the rebels until 1997 when he was captured by Kamajors in Ngiehun, Kailahun District.[1459] Seven other little boys and three women were captured at the same time.[1460] One of the captured boys was 15; the rest were all younger.[1461] The name of the Kamajor that captured TF2-021 was German (a.k.a. Jahman).[1462]

5158. para. 675: After the attack on Ngiehun, Kamajors made the boys carry looted property.[1463] TF2-021 was then taken to Base Zero for initiation.[1464] At Base Zero TF2-021 saw many other young boys who had already been initiated.[1465] About 20 other young boys were initiated at the same time as TF2-021. They were initiated by Kondewa.[1466] As part of the initiation process, the boys were told that they would be made powerful for fighting and were given a potion to rub on their bodies before going into battle.[1467]

5161. para. 678: In addition to the fighting at Masiaka, TF2-021 participated actively in February 1998 attacks on SS Camp and Kenema.[1477] On Sunday 15 February 1998, TF2-021 was part of a group of Kamajors that searched Kenema police barracks and killed some police that were found there.[1478] TF2-021 also fought in Joru and Daru.[1479] Other boys of TF2-021's age also participated in these attacks.[1480]

5162. para. 679: In 1996, when TF2-021 was 12 years old, he was involved in screening people at checkpoints in Kenema and Joru to ensure they had Kamajor passes.[1481]

5163. para. 680: In early January 1999, Norman convened a meeting in Bo which was attended by CO Ngobeh, TF2-021's commander. After this meeting, CO Ngobeh told TF2-021 that they would participate in 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown.[1482] TF2-021 and 3 other young boys went to Freetown by helicopter with their commanders.[1483] The boys were given guns and taken to Congo Cross, where there was heavy firing between the rebels and ECOMOG. The children started fighting against the rebels.[1484] After the rebels were driven away, TF2-021 went to Brookfields Hotel to set up a check point.[1485]

5164. para. 681: When TF2-021 fought with the Kamajors he took marijuana. He was also supposed to take brown-brown which is a form of cocaine.[1486] Kondewa's boys gave them drugs at Base Zero.[1487]

5165. para. 682: In 1999, TF2-021 was initiated into Avondo Society, a group of Kamajors led by Kondewa.[1488] After the initiation, TF2-021 received a certificate bearing his photograph, to prove that he was one of Kondewa's Kamajors.[1489] TF2-021 was thirteen years old at this time.[1490]

5166. para. 683: TF2-004 testified that he was 20 years old at the time he testified and that he turned 20 in the year 2004.[1491] The Chamber therefore finds that he was born between 1 January 1984 and 9 November 1984.[1492] He was abducted by the rebels from Fyndah, his village in Pujehun District.1493 The rebels took TF2-004 to Maka. Kamajors attacked Maka and captured TF2-004 and five other boys who ranged in age from 10 to 16.[1494] The boys were taken from Maka to Liya, Kpaka Chiefdom, Pujehun District.[1495]

5167. para. 684: From Liya, TF2-004 was taken to Telu-Bongor. The rebels attacked the Kamajors there. TF2-004 was armed with a machete and participated in the fighting.[1496]

5168. para. 685: After the fighting at Telu-Bongor, TF2-004 returned to Liya where he was initiated by Muniro Sherrif.[1497] Many others were initiated at the same time, including children as young as ten years old.[1498] The purpose of initiation was to fight the war.[1499]

5169. para. 686: On the same day that he was initiated, TF2-004 left Liya to go fight in Zimmi.[1500] TF2-004 witnessed his commander, CO Small, kill an unarmed male collaborator who had warned the rebels that the Kamajors were approaching Zimmi.[1501] The Kamajors won the battle at Zimmi and then burnt the houses.[1502] TF2-004 was actively involved in fighting at Zimmi. After this battle, TF2-004 returned to Liya with the Kamajors.[1503]

5170. para. 687: TF2-004 was also involved in other battles with Kamajors.[1504] He does not know how long he remained with them.[1505]

(ii) The Use of Child Soldiers throughout Sierra Leone – Crimes

5171. para. 688: In addition to the evidence set out above, there is further evidence that during the time period relevant to the Indictment, children who appeared to be aged less than 15 were conscripted, enlisted, or used to participate actively in hostilities in the following locations:

Kenema;[1506] Base Zero;[1507] Bo;[1508] Daru;[1509] Masiaka;[1510] Port Loko;[1511] Yele;[1512] and Ngiehun.[1513]

1. Initiators including Kondewa used child soldiers as bodyguards at Base Zero;[1514]

2. There was a Kamajor named "Junior Spain" at Base Zero who was around 12-15 years of age;[1515]

3. In Ngiehun, Kamabote ordered a child soldier named Small Hunter who was about 12 years old to shoot TF2-035. There is still one bullet in TF2-035's body.[1516] The Chamber accepts the testimony of TF2-079 that the name Small Hunter was given to all of the child combatants in the CDF, and that children were called by that name instead of their own names;[1517]

4. In May 1998 in Daru, children as young as 13 were present and were armed with knives, cutlasses, and guns.[1518] At this time, Daru was active combat zone.[1519] It was the responsibility of a small boy in Kamajor clothing to carry a stick known as "the commander" and lead the Kamajors into combat.[1520] There is similar evidence that children as young as 7 years danced in front of the Kamajors as they went into battle.[1521]

5. Children were involved in monitoring checkpoints in Daru;[1522]

6. According to Colonel Abu Bakar, elders liked to use children in combat because they are obedient;[1523]

7. In July 1998, a small proportion of the 4000 registered Kapras in Massingbi were children under 15;[1524]

8. By mid-August 1998, between 315 and 350 children under the age of 15 had been registered in a demobilization and reintegration program in Bo;[1525]

9. In 1999, the CDF registered over 300 children aged less than 14 in a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration program in the southern province; [1526]

(iii) Norman's address at a Meeting at Base Zero – Crimes

5172. para. 689: In January 1998, Norman spoke at a meeting at Base Zero. He complained that the child combatants were outperforming the adult fighters. Children were present at this meeting.[1527]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Other serious violations of IHL

5173. para. 138: The general requirements which must be proved to establish the commission of an Other Serious Violation of International Humanitarian Law are as follows:

(i) An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged offence; and

(i) There existed a nexus between the alleged offence and the armed conflict.

5174. para. 139: These two elements have already been discussed in detail above in relation to the general requirements under Article 3 of the Statute.

5175. para. 140: The Indictment charges the Accused with crimes under Article 4(c) of the Statute (Enlistment of Child Soldiers). As the prohibition against enlistment of child soldiers has its foundation in Article 4(3)(c) of Additional Protocol 11,[181] the Chamber holds that the definition of armed conflict under Additional Protocol II should be applied as outlined above.

(ii) Other serious violations of IHL – Finding on general requirements

5176. para. 698: As stated in the section on Applicable Law, the general requirements that must be established to prove an "Other Serious Violation of International Humanitarian Law" are as follows:

1. An armed conflict existed at the time of the alleged offence; and

2. There existed a nexus betw'een the alleged offence and the armed conflict.

5177. para. 699: Again, the Chamber recalls that it has taken judicial notice of the fact that an armed conflict existed in all parts of the Republic of Sierra Leone throughout the period relevant to the Indictment.[1532]

5178. para. 700: Where findings have been made on the enlistment or use of children under the age of 15 to participate actively in the hostilities (Count 8), the Chamber finds that the alleged crimes were closely related to the armed conflict.

(iii) Applicable law - Enlisting Children under the Age of 15 into Armed Forces or Groups or Using Them to Participate Actively in Hostilities

a. Jurisdiction of the SCSL to try Accused under Article 4(c) – Applicable law

5179. para. 182: The Indictment unller Count 8 charges the Accused with the offence of enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities as an "other serious violation of international humanitarian law" pursuant to Article 4(c) of the Statute.[224] This Count alleges that the Accused are responsible for the initiation or enlistment of children under the age of 15 into armed forces or groups, or the use of children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, at all times relevant to the Indictment.[225]

5180. para. 183: The Chamber observes that the offences related to child soldiers, viewed against the background of the Statutes of the ICTY and the ICTR where no such provisions exist, are novel in the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone that came into force on 16 January 2002.[226]

5181. para. 184: In this regard, the Chamber recalls the preliminary motion filed by the Accused Norman, challenging the jurisdiction of the Special Court to try him for any offence under Article 4(c) of the Statute, on the basis thal it would violate the principle of nullum crimen sine lege, since it did not amount to a crime under customary international humanitarian law at the time of the alleged offence. The Chamber determined that the motion raised a serious issue relating to jurisdiction under the mandatory provisi ems of Rule 72(E) of the Rules, and referred the matter to the Appeals Chamber. The Appeals Chamber dismissed the motion, and ruled that the offence of recruitment of child soldiers below the age of 15 did in fact constitute a crime under customary international law which entailed individ lal criminal responsibility prior to the time frame of the Indictment.[227]

5183. para. 186: The Chamber note; that the Geneva Conventions do not directly address the recruitment of children for the following reason:

> Where child en had participated in hostilities [during World War II] it had been as irregulars - partisans or resisters. Such participation was consequently seen by the Allied powers as voluntary and heroic or (at best) an unfortunate necessity. It was seen as something exceptional and not, consequently, requiring legal regulation; being unlikely to be repeated.[228]

5184. para. 187: The Chamber consders that, by the time the Additional Protocols were negotiated, the need to explicitly prohibit the recruitment of children had emerged. As noted by the Appeals Chamber, both Additiond Protocol I and Additional Protocol II explicitly proscribe the recruitment of children ullder the age of 15. Article 4(3)(c) of Additional Protocol II states categorically that "children who have not attained the age of fifteen years shall neither be recruited in the armed forces or groups nor allowed to take part in hostilities".[229] Although the prohibition in Article 77(2) of Additional Protocol I is more narrowly circumscribed, it also clearly prohibits the recruitment of children: "[t]he Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities and, in particular, they shall refrain from recruiting them into their armed forces."[230]

5185. para. 188: The Appeals Chanber also derived some support for its conclusion as to the proscription of the offences in question from the Convention on the Rights of the Child which prohibits the recruitment of children under the age of 15 as soldiers.[232]

5186. para. 189: Relying on the Appeals Chamber Decision, this Chamber acknowledges, as existing law, that "child recruitment was criminalised before it was explicitly set out as a criminal prohibition in treaty law and certainly by November 1996, the starting point of the time relevant to the Indictment", the implication being that "the principle of legality and the principle of specificity are both upheld".[233]

5187. para. 190: In this Decision, the Appeals Chamber dealt specifically with the offence of "recruitment" of child soldiers. The actual language of Article 4(c) of the Statute uses the terms "conscription," "enlistment" and "using [c]hildren to participate actively in hostilities". Count 8 of the Indictment, however, makes reference to the concepts of "enlistment", "using children to participate actively in hostilities", and also "initiation" of children into the armed forces or groups. The Chamber deems it necessary to examine these terms and their relevance to this case, specifically, whether "enlistment", "using children to participate actively in hostilities", and also "initiation" of children into the armed forces or groups, are prohibited under customary international law.

5188. para. 191: The Chamber notes that "recruitment" is the subject of the proscription under the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols of 1977 rather than "enlistment",

"conscription" or "use" of child soldiers, the terms used in the Statute. However, it is pertinent that the notion of "recruitment", is interpreted in the ICRC Commentary to Article 4(3)(c) of Additional Protocol II compendiously to encompass "conscription", "enlistment" and the "use of children to participate actively in hostilities". To this effect, paragraph 4557 of the Commentary states:

> The principle of non-recruitment also prohibits accepting voluntary enlistment. Not only can a child not be recruited, or enlist himself, but furthermore be will not be 'allowed to take part in hostilities', i.e. to participate in military operations such as gathering information, transmitting orders, transporting ammunition and foodstuffs, or acts of sabotage.[234]

> The words 'using" and "participate [actively]" have been adopted in order to cover both direct participation in combat and also active participation in military activities linked to combat such as scouting, spying, sabotage and use of children as decoys, couriers or at military checkpoints. It would not cover ac tivities clearly unrelated to the hostilities such as food deliveries to an airbase or the use of domestic staff in an officer's accommodation. However, use of children in a direct support function such as acting as bearers to take supplies to the front line, or activities at the front line itself, would be included within the terminology.[236]

5191. para. 194: The Chamber recognises that the phrase "armed forces or groups" has been the subject of a variety of legal interpretations. Noting some treaty variations in the use of this phrase, as is the case with the reference in the Brussels Declaration of 1874 of "militia and volunteer corps" and levees en masse as loyal combatants, and similar usages in the Hague Convention II of 1899, the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Conventions of 1949, the Chamber deems it appropriate to adopt the definition of "armed groups" given in the Tadic Appeal Judgement to the effect that:

> One shoulc distinguish the situation of individuals acting on behalf of a State without specific instructions, from that of individuals making up an organised and hierarchically structured group, such as a military unit or, in case of war or civil strife, armed bands of irregulars or rebels. Plainly, an organised group differs from an individual in that the former normally has a structure, a chain of command and a set of rules as well as the outward symbols of authority. Normally a member of the group does not act on his own but conforms to the standards prevailing in the group and is subject to the authority of the head of the group.[237]

In the Chamber's view, such a group may be either State or Non-State controlled.

b. Specific elements – Applicable law

5192. para. 195: The Chamber condudes that the specific elements of enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups are:

> (i) One or more persons were enlisted, either voluntarily or compulsorily, into an armed force or group by the Accused;
> (ii) Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;
>
> (iv) The Accused intended to enlist the said persons into the armed force or group.

5193. para. 196: The specific elements of using children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities are as follows:

> (i) One or more persons were used by the Accused to actively participate in hostilities;
> (ii) Such person or persons were under the age of 15 years;
>

5194. para. 197: The Appeals Chamber ruled that the offence of recruitment of child soldiers had crystallised under customary international humanitarian law prior to the events alleged in the Indictment. In so finding, it dismissed the applicant's argument that the offences listed under Article 4(c) of the Statute did not constitute crimes during the time of the events. Enlistment is clearly a form of recruitment However, the "use" of child soldiers, in ordinary language, could not be said to be a form of recruitment. Whilst the Appeals Chamber did not enunciate specifically on "using child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities" the Chamber, having considered the dismissal by the Appeals Chamber of the whole Motion relating to Article 4(c) in its totality, and having considered the available authorities, considers that "using child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities" was also proscribed under customary international humanitarian law prior to the events charged in the Indictment.[238] Indeed, this is the only logical conclusion. For it would make no sense to say that recruiting children under 15 years of age for the armed forces was prohibited, but using them to fight was not.

5195. para. 198: The Indictment also charges the Accused with "initiation" of child soldiers, which is not listed as an offence in the Statute. However, it is the opinion of the Chamber that evidence of "initiation" may be of relevance in establishing liability under Article 4(c) of the Statute.

5196. para. 199: It is the Chamber's view that the rules of international humanitarian law apply equally to all parties in an armed conflict, regardless of the means by which they were recruited.[239] Furthermore, the Chambel is mindful that the special protection provided by Article 4(3)(d) of Additional Protocol II remains applicable in the event that children under the age of 15 are conscripted, enlisted, or used to participate actively in the hostilities.

(iv) Pleading – Dissent

5197. Separate and partially dissenting opinion only on Count 8- Justice Itoe, See CDF Judgment, Annex A, pgs. A-1 – A-34.

(v) Child soldiers – Legal Findings

5198. para. 958: In addition to the facts, listed in paragraph 721 (i) to (viii) and 809(i) (iii) above, the Chamber outlines below the facts as found in Sections V.2.2 and V.2.10 of the Factual Findings, upon which it will rely to make its legal findings on the individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) and 6(3) of Fofana and Kondewa with respect to Count 8.

> (i) A commanders' meeting was held by Norman after the passing out parade at Base Zero in early January 1998, which had in attendance, among others, Fofana, Kondewa and commanders for the Bo attack. Norman added that the adult fighters were doing less than the children, and just eating and looting.
> (ii) Child fighters were present at various times at Base Zero.

a. Responsibility of Fofana – Article 6.1 Liability - Child Soldiers

5199. para. 959: The Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not provided beyond a reasonable doubt that Fofana planned, ordered, or committed the crime of enlisting child soldiers into an armed group or using them to participate actively in hostilities.

5200. para. 960: Specifically regarding the commander's meeting, the Chamber finds that Fofana's mere presence does not demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt that he encouraged anyone to make use of child soldiers. Neither does it demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt that he aided and abetted in the planning, preparation, or execution of either the enlistment of child soldiers into the armed forces, or the use of child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities anywhere in the Republic of Sierra Leone during the time frame specified in the Indictment.

5201. para. 961: The Chamber further finds that the presence of Fofana at Base Zero where child soldiers were also seen is not sufficient by itself to establish beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana had any involvement in the commission of these criminal acts under any of the modes of liability charged in the Indictment.

5202. para. 962: The trial record contains ample evidence that the CDF as an organisation was involved in the recruitment of children under the age of 15 to an armed group, and used them to participate actively in hostilities, however, this does not demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana was personally involved in such crimes.

5203. para. 963: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for planning instigating ordering committing (including through joint criminal enterprise) or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning preparation or execution of enlistment of child soldiers into armed forces or groups or use of child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities.

b. Responsibility of Fofana – Article 6.3 Liability – Child Soldiers

5204. para. 964: In addition to the facts listed above, in paragraph 958, the Chamber outlines the fact below which it will rely on to make its legal findings on the individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of Fofana with respect to Count 8:

1. In February 1998, TF2-140 passed through Koribondo, he saw Joe Tamidey, a Kamajor commander (under the command of Fofana) being guarded by four small boys. The Witness estimated the boys to be younger than he was.

5205. para. 965: TF2-140 was 15 years old at the time he witnessed this event. The Chamber has accepted the credibility of TF2-140's statement on this event, however, there is room for doubt that the boys referred to were actually younger than 15 years of age. It is conceivable that the boys were younger than the witness but still older than 15 years of age. It is also conceivable that TF2-140 may have been incorrect in his estimation that the boys were younger than he was. Aside from that, the evidence does not establish that Fofana was aware of the situation regarding his subordinate Joe Tamidey. In conclusion, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced does not prove beyond reasonable doubt the criminal liability of the accused.

5206. para. 966: The Chamber finds that the evidence adduced does not prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) as a superior for the enlistment or use of child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities anywhere in the Republic of Sierra Leone during the time frame specified in the Indictment. Proof of knowledge alone is insufficient to establish the individual criminal responsibility of an Accused, and the Chamber is unable to conclude that Fofana's presence alone at this or other such meetings has either a condoning or encouraging effect upon the commission of any crimes by his subordinates relating to the enlistment or use of child soldiers.

c. Fofana - Conclusion – Article 6.1 and 6.3 – Child Soldiers

d. Responsibility of Kondewa – Article 6.1 and 6.3 Liability – Child soldiers 5208. para. 968: In addition to the facts, listed in paragraph 958 above, the Chamber outlines below the fact upon which it will rely to make its legal findings on the individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) of Kondewa with respect to Count 8:

(i) TF2-021 was nine years old when he was abducted by rebels. In 1997, when the witness was eleven years old he was captured by Kamajors and forced to carry looted property. The Kamajors subsequently took him to Base Zero for initiation.

(ii) At Base Zero, the witness was initiated along with around 20 other young boys. Kondewa performed the initiation and told the boys that they would be made powerful for fighting. He gave them a potion to rub on their bodies before going into battle.

(iii) After receiving training, TF2-021 was sent on his first mission to Masiaka, where he shot a woman in the stomach and left her there on the ground. On subsequent missions, he fought with the Kamajors at Kenema, SS Camp, Joru and Daru. In 1999 TF2-021 was flown by helicopter into Freetown with three other small boys and their commanders where they were given guns and sent to support ECOMOG who were fighting the rebels at Congo Cross.

(iv) In 1999, when TF2-021 was thirteen years old, he was initiated into the Avondo Society, a group of Kamajors led by Kondewa. He received a certificate (Exhibit 18) which proved his membership in this group. The certificate bears details showing the place of initiation (Bumpeh), the initiate's name, photograph and age. It also bears Kondewa's name, signature and stamp.

5209. para. 969: The Chamber understands from the evidence that initiation into the Kamajor Society does not necessarily amount to enlistment in an armed force or group.[1576] Some parents put their children through initiation for other reasons. Thus, the Chamber has looked at the details of the actual initiation ceremony, the circumstances surrounding initiation, as well as the subsequent events, to determine whether in fact a child could be said to have been enlisted in an armed force or group.

5210. para. 970: Having considered the evidence outlined above, that during the first initiation of TF2-021 initiates were given potions to rub on their bodies before going into battle, they were told that they would be strong for fighting, were subsequently given military training and soon afterwards were sent into battle, the evidence is absolutely clear that on this occasion, the initiates had taken the first step in becoming fighters. It is beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa, in these circumstances, when initiating boys, was also performing an act analogous to enlisting them for active military service. TF2-021 was eleven years old when Kondewa enlisted him. In the Chamber's view, there can be no mistaking a boy of eleven years old for a boy of 15 years old or older, especially for a man such as Kondewa who regularly performed initiation ceremonies. Kondewa knew or had reason to know that the boy was under fifteen years of age, and too young to be enlisted for military service. Although the Chamber found this evidence entirely sufficient to establish enlistment beyond a reasonable doubt, TF2-021 was given a second initiation, into the Avondo Society, headed by Kondewa himself, when he was thirteen years old. Exhibit 18 dated 10 June 1999 bears Kondewa's signature and stamp of approval and lists the boy's age (incorrectly) as twelve.

5211. para. 971: Thus, the Chamber concludes that this evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa committed the crime of enlisting a child under the age of 15 into an armed force group.

5212. para. 972: The Indictment charges use of child soldiers as an alternative to enlistment. Therefore, having found that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible for enlisting child soldiers, the Chamber need not consider the evidence in relation to their use actively participating in armed hostilities.

5213. para. 973: Having found the Accused liable under Article 6(1) of the Statute, the Chamber need not consider the Accused's liability under Article 6(3) of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-A, Judgment, 28 May 2008

(a) Factual Findings

5214. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Responsibility of Kondewa – Child soldiers

5215. para. 124: The Prosecution submits that although the Trial Chamber found Kondewa responsible for enlisting Witness TF2-021, it was in error in not finding him responsible for enlisting and/or using other children.

5216. para. 125: The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the crime of enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups and of using them to participate actively in hostilities may be committed irrespective of the number of children enlisted by the accused person.

5217. para. 129: In the absence of evidence concerning the ages of the other boys, the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the testimony of Witness TF2-021 sufficiently establishes the age of the 20 young boys who were initiated with him.

5218. para. 132: In view of the lack of evidence of the ages of the boys who were initiated along with Witness TF2-021, as well as the absence of evidence indicating that Kondewa was involved in the initiations of Witness TF2-140 and Witness TF2-004, the Appeals Chamber finds, Justice

Winter dissenting, that the Trial Chamber was correct in not finding Kondewa liable for committing or aiding and abetting the crime of enlistment of children other than Witness TF2-021. The Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal therefore fails in this respect.

5219. para. 133: Although the Prosecution has charged Kondewa in Count 8 with the use of children below the age of 15 years in hostilities, as an alternative to the charge of enlisting them as child soldiers, the Trial Chamber held that having found him individually criminally responsible for enlisting children as child soldiers, it did not need to consider the evidence in relation to the alternative charge. The Appeals Chamber holds, in the circumstances, that it cannot consider any evidence or pronounce a verdict on the alternative charge. Even if the Appeals Chamber were to consider the evidence, it would still have come to the conclusion as it earlier did that there was absence of evidence concerning the ages of the alleged children.

5221. para. 135: The Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal therefore fails in this respect.

5222. para. 139: The Appeals Chamber affirms that the crime of recruitment by way of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into an armed force or group and/or using them to participate actively in hostilities constitutes a crime under customary international law entailing individual criminal responsibility. Pursuant to Article 4.c. of the Statute, the crime of conscripting or enlisting children or using them to participate actively in hostilities, constitutes an other serious violation of international humanitarian law. The actus reus requires that the accused recruited children by way of conscripting or enlisting them or that the accused used children to participate actively in hostilities. These modes of recruiting children are distinct from each other and liability for one form does not necessarily preclude liability for the other.

5223. para. 140: According to the Trial Chamber in the AFRC Trial Judgment, enlistment means "accepting and enrolling individuals when they volunteer to join an armed force or group." The act of enlisting presupposes that the individual in question voluntarily consented to be part of the armed force or group. However, where a child under the age of 15 years is allowed to voluntarily join an armed force or group, his or her consent is not a valid defence.

5224. para. 141: It is apparent to the Appeals Chamber that there is a paucity of jurisprudence on the question of how direct an act must be to constitute "enlistment" under Article 4.c., as well as the possible modes of enlistment. The Appeals Chamber holds that for enlistment there must be a nexus between the act of the accused and the child joining the armed force or group. There must also be knowledge on the part of the accused that the child is under the age of 15 years and that he or she may be trained for combat. Whether such a nexus exists is a question of fact which must be determined on a case-by-case basis.

5225. para. 142: On the particular facts of this case, it is clear that the enlistment of Witness TF2-021 had taken place before he was initiated by Kondewa. The evidence shows that the Witness had first been captured by the rebels in 1995 and was later captured by the CDF in 1997. Upon his capture by the CDF, Witness TF2-021 was forced to carry looted property by the CDF. This act, in the opinion of the Appeals Chamber constituted enlistment. For this conclusion, the Appeals Chamber draws support from paragraph 4557 of the ICRC Commentary to Article 4(3)(c) of Additional Protocol II referred to by the Trial Chamber itself.

5226. para. 144: In the context of this case, in which the armed group is not a conventional military organisation, "enlistment" cannot narrowly be defined as a formal process. The Appeals Chamber regards "enlistment" in the broad sense as including any conduct accepting the child as a part of the militia. Such conduct would include making him participate in military operations.

5227. para. 145: In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber, Justice Winter dissenting, holds the view that Witness TF2-021 had already been enlisted before Kondewa initiated him into the Kamajors.

5228. para. 146: For the above reasons, the Appeals Chamber, Justice Winter dissenting, grants Kondewa's Fifth Ground of Appeal and reverses the verdict of guilt and substitutes a verdict of not guilty on Count 8.

(ii) Responsibility of Fofana – Child Soldiers

5229. para. 152: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber accepted and considered the foregoing evidence in determining Fofana's criminal responsibility, but found that it did not establish beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is responsible for child enlistment or use pursuant to any of the modes of liability under Article 6(1), including aiding and abetting. The Prosecution merely proffers arguments based on evidence which the Trial Chamber considered and rejected, but does not point to any error in the reasoning of the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber emphases that on appeal, a party cannot merely repeat arguments which did not succeed at trial in the hope that the Appeals Chamber will consider them afresh, unless that party can demonstrate that rejecting them constituted an error which warrants the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

5230. para. 153: The Appeals Chamber finds, Justice Winter dissenting, that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Fofana was not responsible for aiding and abetting child enlistment and their use to participate actively in hostilities.

5231. para. 154: For the reasons stated, the Appeals Chamber, Justice Winter dissenting, dismisses the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal in its entirety, grants Kondewa's Fifth Ground of Appeal, reverses the verdict of guilt on Count 8 and substitutes the verdict of not guilty.

(iii) Child soldiers - Dissent

a. Justice Winter

i. Kondewa's Fifth Ground of Appeal: Enlistment of Witness TF2-021

5232. para. 7 (p.2): I do not agree with the Majority's decisions first, to acquit Kondewa for liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute for "committing" the crime of enlisting Witness TF2-021, a child under the age of 15 into an armed force or group;[1203] second, in finding that "it cannot consider any evidence or pronounce a verdict on whether Kondewa aided and abetted the 'use' of child solders;" and third, in finding Fofana not guilty of aiding and abetting the use and enlistment of child soldiers.

5233. para. 8 (p.2): In this Judgment, the Majority overturns the Trial Chamber's finding that Kondewa was guilty of enlisting Witness TF2-021 into the CDF. In overturning the Trial Chamber's decision, the Majority finds that:

> "[I]t is clear that the enlistment of Witness TF2-021 had taken place before he was initiated by Kondewa. The evidence shows that the Witness had first been captured by the rebels in 1995 and was later captured by the CDF in 1997. Upon his capture by the CDF, Witness TF2-021 was forced to carry looted property by the CDF."[1204]

5235. para. 10 (p.4): Article 4.c. of the Statute punishes "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups or using them to participate actively in hostilities" (emphasis added). Our earlier interlocutory decision in this case held that conscripting and enlisting children under the age of fifteen into an armed force or group and/or using children to participate actively in hostilities is prohibited under customary international law.[1206]

5237. para. 12 (p.5): In finding that Kondewa's initiation of Witness TF2-021 did not constitute enlistment, the Majority implicitly considers that only one act could constitute enlistment. I disagree with this proposition and find that enlistment may in some circumstances be a process involving several acts which may substantially further the enrolment and acceptance of a child under the age of fifteen into an armed force or group. Religious initiation, military training and the signing of a certificate declaring a child fit for combat may all be acts that substantially further a child's enlistment. In other circumstances, enlistment may be a very short process and may constitute a single act, such as abducting a child and giving him/her a gun. In certain armed forces or groups there may be no clear record of a child's enlistment, but there may be several instances of the "use" of a child.

5238. para. 13 (p.4): In the situation where there are no formal or informal processes for enlisting individuals, especially children, the "use" of a child to participate actively hostilities may amount to enlistment. However, where the evidence demonstrates the existence of a process that contributes to the enrolment and acceptance of a child into an armed force or group, logic dictates that "use" of a child cannot constitute enlistment. Accordingly, the types of acts which constitute the crime of enlistment must necessarily depend on the particular circumstances of each case.

5239. para. 14 (p.4): In the CDF, as opposed to AFRC, the Trial Chamber findings demonstrate a clearly defined enlistment process which consisted of a child receiving ritualized initiation and military training. Although the purpose of this procedure changed as the war evolved, initiation and military training remained the cornerstones of enlistment in the CDF at all times during the conflict.[1208]

5240. para. 15 (p.4-5): The Trial Chamber's findings and the evidence in the trial record reveal that the initiation of Witness TF2-021 and the other twenty boys was a major part of the process of enrolling them and accepting them into the CDF. Witness TF2-014 testified that Kamajors went to war at an early age provided that they had been initiated.[1209] Expert Witness TF2-EW2 testified that initiation was a stepping stone to recruitment as a soldier because it was used as a means to prepare men and young boys to participate in the fighting groups.[1210] The Trial Chamber, nonetheless, acknowledged that initiation into the Kamajor society alone did not always amount to enlistment,[1211] and therefore, was very careful to evaluate whether a particular instance of initiation amounted to enlistment.[1212]

5241. para. 16 (p.5): In the circumstances of Kondewa's initiation of Witness TF2-021 and the twenty boys around his age, the Trial Chamber considered the following evidence:

> In 1997, when the witness was eleven years old he was captured by Kamajors and forced to carry looted property. The Kamajors subsequently took him to Base Zero for initiation.
> At Base Zero, the witness was initiated along with around 20 other young boys. Kondewa performed the initiation and told the boys that they would be made powerful for fighting. He gave them a potion to rub on their bodies before going into battle.
> After receiving training, TF2-021 was sent on his first mission to Masiaka, where he shot a woman in the stomach and left her there on the ground. On subsequent missions, he fought with the Kamajors at Kenema, SS Camp, Joru and Daru. In 1999 TF2-021 was flown by helicopter into Freetown with three other small boys and their commanders where they were given guns and sent to support ECOMOG who were fighting the rebels at Congo Cross.[1213]

5242. para. 17 (p.5): The Trial Chamber concluded that the evidence clearly showed that on this occasion, the initiates had become fighters."[1214] The Trial Chamber also found Witness TF2-021 was eleven years old when he was initiated by Kondewa.

5243. para. 18 (p.5-6): The Trial Chamber also found that Kondewa knew or had reason to know he was initiating an eleven year old boy into the CDF because Kondewa regularly performed initiation ceremonies, issued certificates confirming e.g. the age of eleven[1215] and would have known the difference between an eleven year old boy and a fifteen year old boy.[1216] On the basis of these findings, it is clear that Kondewa's initiation of Witness TF2-021 in 1997 was the condition sine qua non for Witness TF2-021's enrolment and acceptance into the CDF. Therefore, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that given these circumstances, when Kondewa was initiating the boys "he was also performing an act analogous to enlisting them for active military service."[1217]

5244. para. 19 (p.6): Furthermore, the act of carrying looted property that the Majority of the Appeals Chamber finds constituted enlistment, cannot be deemed as conduct accepting a child into an armed group or force. When Witness TF2-021, upon his capture in 1997, was forced to carry looted property by the CDF, he was not participating in active hostilities or in any activity that involves the CDF as a military organization, but was instead being forced to assist CDF soldiers in the illegal appropriation of property for the soldiers' private use. Nothing in the evidence indicates he (or the soldiers for whom he was carrying looted property) was participating actively in hostilities. Looting is a term of art used by international courts to denote the appropriation of property for private purposes rather than military necessity.[1218] The Trial Chamber understood looting to refer to the appropriation of property for private purposes.[1219] This act of carrying loot, therefore, could not have constituted enlistment into an armed force or group or the use of a child to participate actively in hostilities because it was done for private purposes.

5245. para. 20 (p.6): I, therefore, dismiss Kondewa's Fifth Ground of Appeal and affirm the Trial Chamber's conviction of Kondewa for committing the crime of enlistment of Witness TF2-021 into the CDF, punishable under Articles 4.c. and 6(1) of the Statute.

ii. Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal: Kondewa's Responsibility For Enlisting Children (More Than One) Under Age of Fifteen Years into an Armed Force Or Group

5246. para. 21 (p.6-7): Having concluded that the evidence established beyond a reasonable doubt that Kondewa committed the crime of enlisting a child under the age of 15 into an armed force or group,[1220] I am of the opinion that the Trial Chamber should also have found Kondewa guilty of committing the crime of enlisting more than one child. The Trial Chamber found that Kondewa initiated Witness TF2-021 along with around twenty other young boys. Witness TF2-021 testified that he estimated the boys to be in almost the same age group as him, that means slightly younger than him.[1221] The Trial Chamber also found "beyond a reasonable doubt that Kondewa, in these circumstances, when initiating the boys, was also performing an act analogous to enlisting them for active military service."[1222]

5247. para. 22 (p.7): On the basis of these findings alone, the Trial Chamber was required to enter a conviction against Kondewa for enlisting children rather than only Witness TF2-021.

5248. para. 23 (p.7): The Majority of the Appeals Chamber concluded as well that in the absence of evidence concerning the age of the other boys, no reasonable trier of fact could have found the testimony of Witness TF2-021 sufficient to establish the age of the twenty young boys. However, as mentioned before, Witness TF2-021 testified that he estimated the boys to be in almost the same age group as him.[1223] Given that Witness TF2-021 was eleven when Kondewa initiated him, it is therefore logical and reasonable to conclude that the other twenty boys were younger than fifteen. The Trial Chamber found no reason to doubt his testimony. On the contrary, the Trial Chamber found that his testimony was "highly credible and largely reliable," and that the "intensity of his experience has left him with an indelible recollection of the events in question."[1224] In light of the fundamental principle that a Trial Chamber is in the best position to evaluate and assess the evidence, I find that the Majority's conclusion is without merit.

5249. para. 24 (p.7-8): Other Trial Chamber findings circumstantially show that Kondewa initiated many more than 20 boys under the age of 15 and that these initiations qualified as enlistments into armed forces. In addition to the testimony given by Witness TF2-021, the Trial Chamber also accepted the evidence provided by two other former child soldiers who underwent initiation before participating in active military service.[1225] The Trial Chamber found that Witness TF2-140 was initiated into the Kamajor society at the age of 14 along with adults as well as other children who were 10 or 11 years old.[1226] Initiation fees were paid to the district initiator who then sent the fees to Kondewa, the High Priest of the Kamajors who was responsible for all of the initiators.[1227] The Trial Chamber also found that Witness TF2-004 was initiated at Liya by Muniro Sherif along with many others, including children as young as 10 years old.[1228] On the same day that he was initiated, TF2-004 left Liya to go fight in Zimmi.[1229] The purpose of the initiation was to fight the war.[1230]

5250. para. 25 (p.8): Furthermore, the Trial Chamber found that the CDF as an organization was involved in the recruitment of children under the age of 15 into an armed force or group.[1231] In particular, in 1999, the CDF registered over 300 children under the age of 14 in a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration program in the Southern Province in Sierra Leone.[1232]

5251. para. 26 (p.8): The Trial Chamber found that Kondewa performed initiations at Base Zero where he was present during its entire existence and where numerous child soldiers were also present.[1233] The Trial Chamber also found that Kondewa used child soldiers as body guards at Base Zero.[1234]

5252. para. 27 (p.8): Given that Kondewa, as the High Priest of the entire CDF organisation, accepted initiation fees of children under the age of 15 years,[1235] was the head of all CDF initiators, performed initiations at Base Zero and the fact that no Kamajor would go to war without his blessings,[1236] Kondewa must have either personally, or through an initiator subordinate to him, enlisted many children under the age of 15 years into the CDF. In light of this evidence, I find that no reasonable trier of fact could have failed to conclude that the only reasonable inference from the evidence was that Kondewa enlisted many children under the age of 15 years into the armed forces.

5253. para. 28 (p. 8): I, therefore, hold that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that Kondewa enlisted children into the CDF and grant the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal in this respect and enter a conviction for Kondewa for enlisting many children into the CDF.

iii. Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal: Kondewa's Liability for Aiding and Abetting the Use of Child Soldiers

5254. para. 29 (p. 9): In relation to Kondewa's liability for aiding and abetting the "use" of child soldiers, the Majority finds that it cannot consider any evidence or pronounce a verdict on whether Kondewa was liable for the "use" of child soldiers because the Trial Chamber declined to examine this issue. The Appeals Chamber corrected the Trial Chamber's error of law in considering that the Trial Chamber should have considered the evidence on the alternative charge. In light of the standard of appellate review, the Appeals Chamber was in a position to consider existing evidence concerning Kondewa's "use" of child soldiers, especially where the Trial Chamber had made findings demonstrating Kondewa's aiding and abetting the "use" of child soldiers.[1237] Therefore, I find the Majority's statement misplaced. I now turn to the merits of the Prosecution's appeal.

5255. para. 30 (p. 9): As demonstrated above, Kondewa initiated many children under the age of fifteen into the CDF. The Trial Chamber findings show that Kondewa was aware in performing these initiations for children that the purpose of initiation of many of the children was to prepare them to become fighters. Initiations were of paramount importance in Kamajor society as a prerequisite to participation in active military service. No Kamajor would go to war without Kondewa's blessings.[1238] Moreover, Kondewa's job included the preparation of herbs which the initiates smeared onto their bodies to protect themselves from bullets.[1239] He himself told initiates that the initiation would make them powerful for fighting.[1240] Furthermore, he also knew or had reason to know as demonstrated already that the children were under the age of fifteen years.[1241] On the basis of this evidence, I am also satisfied that Kondewa's initiation of these children offered practical assistance to the CDF's "use" of children under the age of fifteen to participate in active hostilities and that it had a substantial effect on the commission of this crime.

5256. para. 31 (p.10): Therefore, I find that the Trial Chamber and the Majority of the Appeals Chamber erred in failing to find Kondewa liable for aiding and abetting the use of children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities. I grant the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal in this respect and I enter a conviction accordingly.

iv. Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal: Fofana's Liability for Enlistment and Use of Child Soldiers

5257. para. 32 (p.10): The Majority declines to address the merits of the Prosecution's argument under this sub-ground of appeal because the Prosecution "merely proffers arguments based on evidence which the Trial Chamber considered and rejected, but does not point to any error in the reasoning of the Trial Chamber."[1242] I cannot agree with the Majority's position.

5259. para. 34 (p.10-11): Based on the Trial Chamber's findings, in my opinion, no reasonable trier of fact could have come to any conclusion other than that Fofana was aware that children were both enlisted in the CDF and "used" to participate actively in hostilities. Fofana was present at the passing out parade in early January 1998, where children involved in operations were present.[1244] At a subsequent commander's meeting held on the same day, where Fofana was present,[1245] Norman commented that "adult fighters were doing less than children, just eating and looting."[1246] Children were present at this meeting.[1247] Fofana also was one of the architects of the Black December Operation,[1248] an operation where children were present everywhere on the frontlines and in support roles.[1249] The Trial Chamber also found that Fofana was present at Base Zero for its entire existence, and was the overall boss of Base Zero and that child soldiers were present at various times at Base Zero.[1250] At Base Zero, Kondewa also initiated children into the CDF, and the child initiates were trained for war there.[1251]

5260. para. 35 (p.11): Moreover, child soldiers were present throughout CDF operations. Children who appeared to be under the age of fifteen years were conscripted, enlisted, or used to participate actively in hostilities in the following locations: Kenema, Base Zero, Bo, Daru, Masiaka, Port Loko, Yele, and Ngiehun.[1252] They participated directly in combat, often leading the Kamajors into combat, and they served at monitoring checkpoints.[1253] Thus, the only conclusion available to any reasonable Trial Chamber is that Fofana knew that children under the age of fifteen were being enlisted and used to participate actively in hostilities because Fofana, was the 'Director of War' for the CDF. He was part of the High Command and actually made many decisions along with Norman and Kondewa and was the overall boss of the Commanders at Base

Zero.[1254] Significantly, he was also the one responsible for the receipt and provision of logistics to the frontline, including the provision of manpower.[1255] Given that he had to have known that the CDF was enlisting and "using" children in active military service, his provision of logistics, manpower, and strategic directions provided practical assistance and had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime of enlisting and using children under the age of fifteen to participate actively hostilities.

5262. para. 37 (p.12): Furthermore, there is ample evidence in the trial record that Fofana, as a leader in the High Command of the CDF, did not take a stand in public or at any of the commanders' meetings against the enlistment or use of children under the age of 15 in military activities. Although Fofana did not enlist or use child soldiers personally, I am satisfied that his high position within the CDF command structure and his physical presence at meetings where child soldiers were either present or were discussed, constituted tacit approval, encouragement and moral support to the commanders and Kamajors to continue to enlist and use children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities.[1256] Fofana's tacit approval served to leave no doubt in the minds of the Kamajors that they enjoyed his full support in their enlistment and use of child soldiers. I am thus satisfied that Fofana's conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of this crime.

5263. para. 38 (p.12): I, therefore, grant the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal in this respect as well and find Fofana responsible under Article 6(1) for aiding and abetting the crimes of enlistment of children under the age of 15 into armed forces or groups and the use of children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities, crimes punishable under Article 4.c. of the Statute.

5264. para. 39 (p.12): For the foregoing reasons I dismiss Kondewa's Fifth Ground of Appeal and grant the Prosecution's Fifth Ground of Appeal in its entirety.

CHAPTER 10 – ENSLAVEMENT

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5265. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[287]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

5266. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[288]

(iii) Count 10: Abductions and Forced Labour

Count 10: Enslavement, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.c. of the Statute

5267. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, throughout the Republic of Sierra Leone, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour, including the following:[289]

[289] Taylor Indictment, para. 23.

i. Kenema District: Between about 1 July 1997 and about 28 February 1998, used an unknown number of civilians living in the District as forced labour in various locations such as Tongo Fields area;[290]

ii. Kono District: Between about 1 February 1998 and 18 January 2002, abducted an unknown number of civilians, and took them to various locations outside the district or to locations within the district such as AFRC and/or RUF camps, Tombodu or Tumbodu, Koidu and Wondedu, and used them as forced labour;[291]

iii. Kailahun District: Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, brought abducted civilian, men, women and children to various locations within the District and used them and residents of the District as forced labour;[292]

iv. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, abducted an unknown number of civilians, including a large number of children, from various locations throughout Freetown and the Western Area, and used them as forced labour.[293]

2. Trial Judgement

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual findings

(i) General –Crimes

5268. para. 1611: Defence witness DCT-068 agreed in cross-examination that civilians in Sierra Leone were forced to carry ammunition boxes on footpaths.[3696] Defence witness Isatu Kallon agreed in cross-examination that the RUF forced civilians in Sierra Leone to cultivate farms, to give their harvests to the RUF, and to carry produce to the riverside with Guinea to trade. This witness also agreed that the civilians had no choice but to do these things and that it was the rebels who would actually sell or trade the produce and would keep the money or goods received in exchange.[3697] The evidence of these two witnesses establishes that in none of the incidents described by them were the civilians acting of their own free will. Thus on evidence provided by the Defence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over civilians in Sierra Leone by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to do work under the control of the RUF.

[292] Taylor Indictment, para. 26.
[293] Taylor Indictment, para. 27.

5269. para. 1612: However, such Defence evidence does not specifically identify any particular district as the place where these crimes occurred. What follows is a consideration of evidence of enslavement in the specific districts of Sierra Leone alleged in the Indictment.

5270. para. 1613: The Trial Chamber has held that as enslavement is a crime of a continuous nature, it is permissible for the Prosecution not to have pleaded specific locations within districts in which it alleges instances of enslavement occurred.[3698] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber has considered evidence of enslavement in all locations within the districts, whether or not they were specifically pleaded in the Indictment.

(ii) Kenema District – Crimes

a. Tongo Fields – Kenema District –Crimes

5271. para. 1615: In relation to enslavement alleged to have taken place in Tongo Fields the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses TF1-371, TF1-567, TF1-062, TF1-590, DCT-068, Augustine Mallah, Issa Sesay, Dauda Aruna Fornie, Alex Bao, Karmoh Kanneh, Abdul Conteh, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Charles Ngebeh and Exhibits P-173 and P-278.[3700]

5272. para. 1616: TF1-062 confirmed evidence he had given in the AFRC Trial and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence.[3701] TF1-062 was a miner who was living and working in Tongo Field in 1997, and had six men employed to mine for him.[3702] His evidence in the AFRC Trial was that he heard on the radio on 25 May 1997 that the government in Freetown had been overthrown. At the time, CDF Kamajors were in control of the Tongo area.[3703] Sometime in August 1997, he heard gunfire and, soon after, observed soldiers entering Tongo Field, some of whom he recognized as members of the SLA. [3704] The witness identified Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) as the commander of the men.[3705]

5273. para. 1617: Approximately three days after capturing Tongo, Bockarie gathered the civilians of Tongo Field in a public meeting at Tongo Park attended by TF1-062.[3706] Bockarie told the civilians that the AFRC/RUF government, formed in Freetown, was now in control of Tongo[3707]. Bockarie also told the civilians that they would be asked to mine for diamonds.[3708] Soon after this meeting, Bockarie left Tongo Field, leaving other SLA commanders in charge of the mining. However, 'Mosquito' would continue to visit Tongo Field more or less at weekly intervals.[3709]

5274. para. 1618: TF1-062 stated that the civilians of Tongo Field were subsequently required to elect a civilian chairman, named Mopleh,[3710] who was responsible for organising the civilian mining. Commander Pa Seth Marrah informed the civilians, through Mopleh, that Bockarie had ordered that they should mine for "the Government" two days a week.[3711] Thereafter, the AFRC/RUF would designate certain days as 'government days'.[3712] On 'government days', the civilians of Tongo Field were forced to go and work in the mines in an area known as Cyborg Pit.[3713]

5275. para. 1619: TF1-062 worked for the AFRC/RUF government at Cyborg Pit for about four months, from August 1997 until they were ousted from Tongo Field by the CDF during the Muslim month of Ramadan.[3714]

5277. para. 1621: On 'government days', civilians were compelled to hand over any diamonds found to the AFRC/RUF fighters supervising the mining.[3719] The fighters at Cyborg Pit were armed with guns, such as RPGs, LMGs, G3s, and AK-47s, and would watch the civilian miners to ensure that all diamonds found were surrendered.[3720] Civilians who attempted to keep diamonds found on a government mining day would be flogged almost to death.[3721] On two occasions, TF1-062 watched AFRC/RUF soldiers shoot and kill civilian miners who were alleged to have disobeyed orders.[3722] In addition, the witness regularly saw corpses being brought out of Cyborg Pit, and he was informed by his workers at the pit that these civilians had been shot by AFRC/RUF soldiers. To TF1-062's knowledge, no civilians in or around the pit were in possession of guns.[3723]

5278. para. 1622: On non-government days, AFRC/RUF soldiers would also be present at Cyborg Pit. The civilians were permitted to mine their own diamonds which they could sell[3724] but the AFRC/RUF would still ask them to wash gravel for them and would take some diamonds found by civilians.[3725]

5279. para. 1623: The Trial Chamber also heard evidence from Augustine Mallah, a security commander to Mike Lamin[3726] who initially spent one to two months mining in Tongo Field, from approximately June to August 1997.[3727] He went to Tongo with Captain Gweh, a junior commando, to undertake some mining because 'Mosquito' had just recaptured the Tongo area from the Kamajors.[3728] He carried out both his own private and government mining but prioritised the latter.[3729]

5280. para. 1624: Mallah estimated that between 600 and 700 civilians laboured in the Tongo mines.[3730] He testified hearing from the "OC Secretariat" about procedures the AFRC/RUF had put in place in Tongo. First, any diamond weighing above five carats was designated a government diamond.[3731] If it was less than five carats then it belonged to the 'officer or RUF soldier who took it'.[3732] Second, there was a civilian overseeing committee which would ensure the provision of civilian manpower required for 'government' mining for the AFRC/RUF junta. Third, the committee would also give guidance regarding where the most productive mining could be found. Finally, the committee would 'evaluate' the diamonds obtained from the mining.[3733]

5281. para. 1625: The witness personally visited government mining sites in Tongo and saw civilians mining there.[3734] Unless they were too sick or old to do so, civilians were forced to mine and were not permitted to refuse. Mallah himself forced civilians to mine for him.[3735] AFRC and RUF armed guards prevented civilians from escaping and forced them to carry out the tasks required of them.[3736] Anyone found escaping would be shot. The civilians were deprived of food and rest and flogged if their work was not up to the standard expected. The witness testified that he saw civilians flogged and killed and that he flogged civilians himself if they refused to mine for him.[3737]

5282. para. 1626: Mallah testified that any diamonds found at the mines were collected by the AFRC/RUF and evaluated at the OC Secretariat, who would then pass them on to PLO 2. Members of the AFRC/RUF and PLO 2 told him that the diamonds were sent to Eddie Kanneh, the resident Minister at the time who would take them straight to AFRC Johnny Paul Koroma in Freetown. The witness was also present at a meeting in February 1998 on Bockarie's veranda in Buedu when Johnny Paul Koroma referred to receiving diamonds that the AFRC and RUF had mined in Tongo and Kono.[3738]

5283. para. 1627: The witness was sent back to Tongo in November 1997 to mine for Mike Lamin and remained there for two months before returning to Kenema in January 1998.[3739] He witnessed that the conditions for the civilians in the mines had deteriorated.[3740] He described the procedure by which civilians were gathered to work in the mines: at daybreak, the OC Secretariat, Captain Jalloh, would assemble a group of armed AFRC and RUF troops, split them into subgroups and allocate them to areas in the town of Tongo, where they would conduct house-to-house searches to capture civilians. The fighters stripped the captured civilians naked, tied them together with their shirts and marched them to the Secretariat where they were assigned to the various commanders for government mining.[3741] During his visits to Cyborg Pit, the witness saw the civilians working under 'stricter' conditions. As an example, he described how civilians mining outside hours designated by the AFRC/RUF, would be flogged by guards and if they tried to escape, they would be shot and possibly killed.[3742]

5284. para. 1628: The Trial Chamber also heard evidence from Dauda Aruna Fornie ("DAF"), who testified about organised diamond mining operations in Tongo for the combined RUF/AFRC government. Fornie stated that he worked as a radio operator for the RUF/AFRC at the battalion headquarters radio station in Tongo[3743] for approximately three months from the rainy season[3744] until November or December 1997,[3745] during which time he conducted mining for himself.[3746] Fornie testified that Bockarie organised the mining in Tongo although he was based in Kenema. The witness personally saw him in Tongo on three occasions[3747].

5285. para. 1629: Fornie described the system of 'organised mining' in which the RUF/AFRC would forcibly assemble civilians and take them to mine, particularly at Cyborg Pit. He witnessed checkpoints set up along the roads by military police officers to whom commanders would send requests for a particular number of civilians required for mining at Cyborg. At Cyborg, the AFRC/RUF would put 150 to 200 civilians to work daily extracting gravel and washing it. Some civilians were also appointed as supervisors but these supervisors were always themselves supervised by soldiers, such as Major Gweh. A man named Mopleh would collect all the diamonds at the end of the day and hand them to the commander in charge of Tongo.[3748]

5286. para. 1630: Karmoh Kanneh, (a.k.a Eagle)[3749], an RUF captain[3750], testified that he headed the successful mission to 'clear' the enemy from Tongo Field.[3751] The witness confirmed that the attack took place in 1997 but could not remember the precise date.[3752] After completion of the mission, he remained in Tongo Fields for one month to 'defend the area and put [diamond] mining activities in place'. He also undertook some personal mining.[3753] The witness stated that Sam Bockarie was the senior commander in charge of Tongo Field and Mopleh was in charge of the mining until he escaped with over a thousand diamonds.[3754]

5287. para. 1631: Karmoh Kanneh testified that the civilians did not mine willingly but were forced to 'dance to [the] tunes' of the soldiers with guns. Civilians who refused to mine would be forced to work by being flogged and beaten. The witness saw such floggings on two occasions. 3755 On the first occasion, soldiers arrested a civilian for refusing to carry out diamond mining work. One of them beat the civilian on the buttocks and took him to work.3756 On the second occasion, a civilian tried to hide to avoid work but was discovered by soldiers, who beat him on his back and buttocks with a cane and took him back to work.[3757]

5288. para. 1632: Karmoh Kanneh testified to the imposition of two 'government days' per week when the civilians had to mine for the AFRC/RUF government.[3758] Four days were 'free' mining for soldiers and civilians and the seventh day was a rest day when no mining took place. The witness stated that any diamond found on a government day belonged to the government and was handed over to either a government committee, the AFRC, Mompleh or Sam Bockarie personally.[3759] Even on a non-government day, big diamonds were taken from the civilians.[3760]

5289. para. 1633: Alex Bao, a civil police officer based in Kenema Town in the relevant period, testified that the AFRC/RUF in Kenema Town, commanded by Issa Sesay and Akim, formed a strong force and left for Tongo Fields.[3761] Several days later, he spoke with many displaced civilians arriving in Kenema from Tongo, who told him that the AFRC/RUF had captured many able-bodied men and forced them to mine diamonds for them.[3762] The witness later heard that RUF Banya was in charge of the RUF in Tongo Field.[3763]

5290. para. 1634: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that during the AFRC government period both the AFRC and RUF were mining in Tongo under the control of the AFRC Secretariat led by Staff Sergeant 'Junior Sherrif'. The witness learned from a report by Sherrif that it was the civilians who were doing the mining under the orders of the RUF and AFRC. The witness knew the circumstances under which the civilians were mining in Tongo because he had experienced the same thing in Kono, where the civilians were forced to mine under gunpoint.[3764] The witness testified that "what I knew was that they had what they called two pile – two pile system. And they also used another way whereby civilians would excavate the gravel and share it between the RUF and the civilians. There were areas where they actually used force that you never had anything".[3765]

5291. para. 1635: TF1-567 testified that he was one of the fighters who attacked and captured Tongo Fields together with 'Mosquito' in 1997. He remained there until the Junta was dislodged from Freetown and the Kamajors had dislodged the AFRC/RUF from Tongo.[3766] Mosquito and Eddie Kanneh then organised mining in Tongo under the auspices of a civilian chairman. After this Chairman escaped with some of the diamonds, Sam Bockarie appointed one of his bodyguards, Mohamed Kanneh, to channel diamonds through to him. Eddie Kanneh appointed Junior Sherrif to do the same.[3767]

5292. para. 1636: TF1-567 testified that fighters and civilians carried out 'government' mining in Tongo Fields, and specifically at Sand Sand and Cyborg Ground.[3768] Civilians were 'collected' by soldiers to do so.[3769] Civilians who were mining were watched by soldiers with guns. If a soldier suspected that a civilian had stolen a diamond, he would demand that the civilian present the diamond and if the civilian did not, the fighter would kill him. Any civilians who refused to work would be beaten up and forced to work.[3770] Any diamonds found during 'government' mining were given directly to Sam Bockarie. The witness understood that Mohamed Kanneh also channelled diamonds to Eddie Kanneh but never personally saw such diamonds being handed over.[3771]

5293. para. 1637: Abdul Conteh was a secondary school teacher who was carrying out diamond mining in 1996 and 1997 on land he had inherited in the village of Sandeyeima, Tongo Fields. In the relevant period, he was in Tongo Fields between 11 August 1997 and 10 November 1997.[3772]

5295. para. 1639: Conteh testified that he was aware that the AFRC conducted surface diamond mining during the relevant period in the Tongo Fields area, predominantly at Cyborg Pit, which he estimated to be 400 yards from the township of Tongo.[3774] The witness estimated that at least 300 people worked there every day under the control of Sam Bockarie and his RUF soldiers. The witness's office was located on the main road and he could see civilians being marched to the township of Tongo. The wives of the captured civilians told him that their villages had been raided by the RUF soldiers. He described how the civilians were tied together in 'twos' by their shirts 'like slaves'.[3775]

5296. para. 1640: Conteh was forced to stop mining his land completely because it was requisitioned by the AFRC for their mining.[3776] After the AFRC took over, there was no further civilian mining undertaken because all mining was then done for the government.[3777] He testified to 'government' mining being carried out at Cyborg, Wuima, Bomi, Pandembu and his own area, Sandeyiema.[3778]

5297. para. 1641: The witness described three occasions in which he heard that the AFRC/RUF had sought to prevent private civilian mining continuing in Tongo Fields. First, he heard that Sam Bockarie sent child soldiers to Pandembu, a village in the Tongo Fields area,[3779] to kill civilians who were mining for themselves instead of for the AFRC/RUF government.[3780] Three civilians were killed by the child soldiers.[3781] Conteh and the other Caretaker Committee members went to investigate, and saw the three corpses with bullet wounds.[3782] He also heard reports through the Caretaker Committee at Tongo that child combatants had killed two civilians who were washing gravel and that several more had been wounded at his former mine at Sandeyeima. He also heard that three civilians were killed and two were wounded at Wuima.[3783]

5298. para. 1642: The witness saw armed RUF combatants guarding workers at Cyborg Pit.[3784] He stated that the civilians were mining in 'very rough conditions' and were fed 'two cups of garri' after a day's mining. The civilian miners were not otherwise paid for their work. The AFRC/RUF held the civilians in the 'headquarters campus' overnight and gave each group rest after three-day work cycles during which time the civilians remained 'under command'.[3785]

5299. para. 1643: Abdul Conteh was introduced to Sam Bockarie on 16 August 1997 at the OC Secretariat, Sekou Kunateh's office. He testified that Sam Bockarie did not stay in Tongo Fields permanently but came each day with rebels to collect diamonds from Sekou Kunateh, arriving every morning before 8am and leaving at 6pm for Kenema Town.[3786] He also testified to seeing AFRC soldiers in Tongo Fields during the relevant period but could not estimate the exact number, except that it was less than the number of RUF rebels.[3787] Conteh testified that he saw diamonds being counted and weighed in the office of Sekou Kunateh, the OC Secretariat. He said Kunateh told him that the diamonds were being forwarded to Sam Bockarie.[3788]

5300. para. 1644: Charles Ngebeh, was one of the RUF rebels who took part in the attack on Tongo Fields in 1997 and remained there to mine until the 'AFRC left power'.[3789] He stated that the attack took place during the rainy season of June/July 1997. He testified that the AFRC and RUF mined in Tongo using the labour of civilians forced from their homes to carry gravel and sand. If someone refused to mine he would either be killed or beaten up. Civilians were sometimes allowed to take a portion of the gravel for themselves.[3790]

5301. para. 1645: TF1-590 testified that during the relevant period he lived in Kenema for 10 months. In cross-examination, he testified to hearing about the RUF forcing people to mine diamonds in Tongo. He saw civilians being harassed by the RUF and AFRC to undertake 'government mining' and saw people who had their implements and money confiscated. The witness's extended family members, including cousins and nephews, were forced to mine.

However, the witness was never personally prevented from mining in his village or from keeping the diamonds he found.[3791]

5302. para. 1646: According to DCT-068, a member of the RUF[3792] and former miner, who visited Tongo Fields at some point in 1998 during the Junta period, the miners were guarded by men with guns at the Tongo Fields mines for 'security reason' to protect them against enemy attack, not to forcibly take the diamonds from them or for any other sort of 'coercion'.[3793] He agreed that there were incidents in which miners had been shot in the pits but played down any suggestion that this was widespread, stating that the main cause of the shootings of civilians were civilians crossing without permission into the AFRC/RUF-designated "no-go" areas.[3794]

5303. para. 1647: The Trial Chamber heard evidence from another Defence witness, Issa Sesay, that the RUF mined in Tongo Fields, in joint control with the AFRC, from August 1997 when Sam Bockarie captured the area from the Kamajors until the Kamajors pushed them out again in January 1998.[3795] He corroborated Karmoh Kanneh's evidence that he, Kanneh, took part in the attack on Tongo in 1997. Sesay stated that Bockarie then promoted Kanneh to the rank of Captain and appointed him commander of the RUF in Tongo.[3796] Issa Sesay could not give detailed evidence about the conditions for civilians in Tongo during the Junta period as he was not there on a daily basis. He testified however to having heard about forced mining there and that civilians were allowed to wash gravel for themselves on some days.[3797]

5304. para. 1648: TF1-371, an RUF commander, testified that during the Junta administration, he visited Tongo Fields, which was being run by the RUF through their mining commanders, and SLA with an SLA Secretariat. He saw 'hundreds of civilians in open fields mining diamonds' and digging for gravel, watched over by armed guards holding AK-47s.[3798] He was told by a commander there, Major Gweh, that the civilians were locals of the area who had been captured during the fighting. Others were former CDF Kamajors or their sympathisers[3799]. He testified that workers in Tongo Fields were not paid.[3800] Diamonds mined in Tongo Fields during the Junta period were handed over to Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay.[3801]

(iii) Kono District – Crimes

a. Kono District in general - Kono District – Crimes

5305. para. 1662: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that when he arrived in Kono around mid-March 1998, he brought with him some civilians that he had captured in Makeni and used them to carry loads.[3806] Johnny Paul Koroma held a meeting in Koidu Town in which he declared Kono a no-go zone for civilians and ordered the troops "to get some able bodied civilians who will assist us and they will serve as recruits".[3807] Koroma ordered that only captured civilians who were able-bodied were to be spared, the rest were to be executed.[3808] Soon after this meeting the witness and other members of his squad, including the RUF, started executing Koroma's orders and shot to death an unknown number of civilians in Koidu Town.[3809] The witness gave further evidence about organising food-finding patrols in the Kono forest, capturing unarmed civilians, taking their food and using them to carry food they had just stolen. They sometimes also took along civilians to carry the food they had taken from other civilians.[3810]

b. Koidu - Kono District – Crimes

i. Carrying of Loads - Koidu - Kono District – Crimes

5306. para. 1665: Tamba Yomba Ngekia confirmed evidence he had given in the RUF Trial 3813 and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence.[3814] He testified in the RUF Trial that on 16 or 17 December 1999[3815] he was asleep in his house in Koidu Town when he heard heavy gun fire. At dawn he went outside and saw many corpses. He was captured by armed RUF men – "they all had guns"[3816] – along with almost 50 other civilians and forced to carry looted goods such as household equipment, clothes and radios to Tombodu. The men told him: "We are RUF. You are now in our control. You are no longer in ECOMOG control".[3817]

5307. para. 1666: Dennis Koker, who was in Koidu in early 1998 after the ECOMOG Intervention,[3818] testified that he saw RUF and 'juntas' capture civilians at gunpoint in Kono and use them to carry looted property. If a civilian refused, he would be shot.[3819] The rebels would fire warning shots to frighten civilians and 'put them under their control'.[3820] Koker personally used civilians to carry loads to Gandorhun.[3821] Women were also taken as 'wives'.[3822]

5308. para. 1667: Koker also testified that RUF and 'juntas' captured civilians, including many women and children, at gunpoint to provide 'reinforcement to fight for them' and forcibly 'initiated' them. Some were taken to the training base in Bunumbu.[3823] Anyone who refused was shot. He said that none of the top commanders tried to stop the practice because 'they wanted the civilians to work for them because it was for free. It was slavery'.[3824]

5309. para. 1668: Sheku Bah Kuyateh testified that he was captured in Koidu Town by an armed man and taken to work at Kainkordu Road as a mechanic for the RUF commander CO Matthew, who was a Liberian, between February and April 1998. The witness was placed under armed guards so that he would not move without their knowledge and described himself as a 'slave'. There was 'nowhere for [him] to go away from them'. The witness met another boy, a Fullah, who told him that he had also been captured by CO Matthew and worked for him as a mechanic. The witness did not know whether the Fullah was free to leave or not.[3825] On cross-examination, he clarified a prior statement to the Prosecution in which he stated that he had remained 'over a month' with CO Matthew, confirming that he had remained between February and April. On re-examination, the witness testified that he knew that the rebels were looking for mechanics at the time so, despite his modest training, he deliberately told the Fullah boy that he was a mechanic so that the boy would not kill him.[3826]

5310. para. 1669: Komba Sumana testified that in approximately March/April 1998 he was hiding in the bush and saw his parents and siblings captured by armed "rebels" in his father's hut outside of Pakidu village.[3827] Some of the rebels "had combats, full combats on. Some others had combat trousers and civilian clothes".[3828] The witness saw the rebels ask one man for rice and when he replied that he did not have any they tipped the hot water heated for the rice over his head. The witness saw a rebel tie a rope around his father's throat and ask him for rice. When his father started crying they removed the rope and tied it around his brother's throat and asked him for rice.[3829] The man who had hot water tipped over his head had wounds all over his head and he carries the scars to this day.[3830] The witness saw that his father, mother, elder brothers and six other people had all been captured and he saw the rebels put rice and other belongings they had looted onto the heads of these people and "ask" them to carry the loads to Koidu Town.[3831] As these civilians carried the loads "there were some rebels at their back and some in front and they were in the middle".[3832] Sumana further testified that his brother Kai was being held in a house in Koidu Town by "rebels" called Killer and Peleto where he was tasked with domestic chores including doing laundry, fetching water and pounding rice.[3833]

5311. para. 1670: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he took civilians on food-finding patrols in Koidu in May/June 1998 and forced them to carry loads.[3834] Bobson Sesay said that food finding was "a continuous process": "From our entry into Koidu Town right to our withdrawal it continued to happen".[3835] (The circumstances under which these civilians were forced to carry loads is more fully discussed under the heading "Kono District in general" above.)

around 18 August 1998 as well as the release by rebels of 250 captured civilians from Koidu around 15 August 1998.[3836]

5313. Forced military training - Koidu - Kono District – Crimes para. 1680: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that when he arrived in Kono around mid-March 1998, he brought with him some civilians that he had captured in Makeni and used them to carry loads. Some of the able-bodied ones, including women, were trained and used for military purposes.[3841] Johnny Paul Koroma held a meeting in Koidu Town in which he declared Kono a no-go zone for civilians and ordered the troops "to get some able bodied civilians who will assist us and they will serve as recruits".[3842] Koroma ordered that only the captured civilians who were able-bodied were to be spared, the rest were to be executed.[3843] The witness testified that he and other commanders gave civilians basic weapons training at Masingbi Road in Koidu Town from mid-March to April 1998. Training was going on in two areas: "the RUF side and the SLA side".[844] Some of the civilians who were trained were small boys (SBUs) around the ages of eight, ten and twelve; some were adults between the ages of 25 to 30.[3845] Some SBUs were issued with machetes and taken to Yomandu to carry out amputations on civilians.[3846]

c. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Carrying of Loads / Forced Labour - Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

5314. para. 1683: Samuel Komba[3850] confirmed evidence he had given in the AFRC Trial that in March 1998,[3851] soldiers dressed in uniform took him and his wife to Giema, told them to lie down and gave orders for them to be shot if they tried to escape.[3852] They then carried luggage towards Tombodu. The soldiers also gave two other people loads to carry saying that the people should come with them because the soldiers were going to save them. The witness stated that on arrival at Tombodu, the soldiers put the loads of the civilians on the ground and "we sat down on the ground and they stood on top of us. They were our bosses".[3853] The soldiers also referred to the civilians as slaves.[3854]

5315. para. 1684: Ibrahim Fofana described being tied up while a house containing his family members was burnt. He and five other civilians were then given heavy loads of looted goods and made to carry them to Tombodu at gunpoint by soldiers in military uniform.[3855] Fofana testified that this occurred before 5 April 1998[3856] and after the three men were killed by the soldiers in February 1998 (as described earlier in his evidence).[3857]

5316. para. 1685: Sahr Charles[3858] confirmed evidence he had given in the RUF case that in Tombodu around February/March 1999,[3859] rebels "asked" civilians "with guns over [their] heads" to bring old vehicles from the bush 3 miles away, which they did.[3860] The rebels also placed packets of rice, looted goods and coffee on the heads of civilians at gunpoint and arrested civilians to make them carry the goods from the looted homes back to Tombodu.[3861]

d. Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

i. Food finding missions / Domestic Chores - Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

5317. para. 1690: Alex Tamba Teh testified that after he was captured in approximately April 1998, 3865 an RUF 3866 commander named Rocky took Teh to his base in Wondedu.[3867] Upon his arrival, Teh saw other captured civilians there whom he described as being 'under captivity' and who were used as 'manpower' to go food-finding for the rebels up to 50 miles away in Koronko, Koinadugu District.[3868] Any food that was found was called 'government property' and civilians who touched it would be shot to death. They were also used to cut palm nuts and palm fruits.[3869] All the captured civilians apart from Teh had "RUF" carved on their fronts and "AFRC" on their backs to prevent them from escaping and going to ECOMOG.[3870] Teh also testified that civilians were sent from Wondedu on food-finding missions, inter alia, to Guinea under the command of AFRC Captain KS Banya.[3871]

e. Yengema - Kono District – Crimes

5318. Forced Military Training - Yengema - Kono District – Crimes para. 1692: The Prosecution alleges that more than 100 captured civilians were forcibly trained at Yengema training base, located at Koidu Highway, from the end of 1998 until 2000. [3872]

5319. para. 1693: TF1-362 gave evidence that a training base operated at Yengema, near Koidu Highway from December 1998 until disarmament in 2000. Over a hundred civilians were forcibly trained to fight there. Some of these civilians had been transferred from the previous training camp in Bunumbu while others had been captured by the RUF in Koidu Town. The witness testified that these civilians underwent physical and practical training, were trained to use live weapons and that many died during 'crawling' training.[3873] The witness testified that recruits who attempted to escape from Yengema were killed, and that Sesay's bodyguards, instructors and other recruits killed 5 civilians.[3874] After the training, the "recruits" were assigned to the frontline commanders including Morris Kallon, Denis Mingo and Rambo.[3875]

i. AFRC / RUF Camps (Domestic Chores / Forced Labour / Food-finding Missions) - Kono District – Crimes

5320. para. 1697: Finda Gbamanja testified that she was a young girl living in Koidu Town with her family when the rebels attacked. She was unable to say what month or year this was, but remembers that prior to this she had heard on the radio that Johnny Paul Koroma had been removed from power.[3878] She and her family fled to Baima. They stayed there "for a long period" but fled to the bush when the rebels came. She and her family left the bush during the rainy season because of the rain and went back to Baima.[3879] She spent two days there but on the third day she was captured by rebels. She saw the rebels club her mother with a gun and shoot her father to death.[3880]

5321. para. 1698: Gbamanja testified that the rebels took her to Koidu Town, where she stayed with a female rebel named Hawa and was forced to launder and cook. One day she was sent in search of vegetables and encountered Sergeant Foday, who said to her: "Madam, which of the two do you prefer, your life or going to my house?" The witness was then taken to Sergeant Foday's house, where she was forced to have sex with him every night and was forced to launder, cook and fetch water for him. She stated that she could not run away because 'they were all over the place'.[3881]

5322. para. 1699: The witness testified that when ECOMOG attacked Koidu Town she left with Sergeant Foday and went to Superman Ground. At that location she was also forced to cook, launder and have sex with him.[3882] Eventually Sgt. Foday's wife came to stay with him, so the witness was sent to Mamie's house. Mamie was the wife of a friend of Sergeant Foday, and Mamie was also a rebel. While staying with Mamie, the witness was forced to pound rice, launder and harvest palm oil.[3883] The witness said that she saw how one civilian at Superman Ground who attempted to escape was recaptured, forced to parade and then had his testicles lacerated. Rebels then forced other civilians to kill him.[3884]

5323. para. 1700: Perry Kamara identified Exhibit P-051 as a record of various lists that were normally kept by Superman and the Joint Security at Superman Ground.[3885] The witness recognised his own name amongst a list of soldiers at Superman Ground, which listed their names and ranks.[3886] The document includes another hand-written list entitled "Name of Civilians from Banya Ground and Their Care Taker", which is undated.[3887] Kamara testified that the document coincides with the time he was at Superman Ground[3888] and that the civilian women named on the list lived with the commanders against whom their names were listed. He stated that some of the women were "wives" to the commanders with whom they stayed and could be used as labourers with the permission of their caretaker.[3889]

5324. para. 1701: Perry Kamara explained that in Exhibit P-051 under the heading 'List of manpower to go for food – SLPA[3890]/RUF'[3891] the names listed on the left of the page are civilians who went for food and the names listed on the right are the armed guards who would accompany them.[3892] Exhibit P-051 has other lists entitled 'Names of Civilians from Banya Ground' and 'Names of New Captives along Guinea/Sierra Leone highway'.[3893] Kamara also stated that the part of Exhibit P-051 entitled 'Civilian Women and Officers in Charge'[3894] indicates the RUF/AFRC fighters for whom civilians could be required to perform hard labour, domestic work or enter into a forced marriage.[3895]

5325. para. 1702: Perry Kamara testified that when the RUF went on food-finding missions from the camps around Koidu Town, including Superman Ground, Gandorhun Highway, Banya Ground, Tombodu, Sewafe pass and Yomandu, they would abduct civilians who would then be forced to carry loads, mine diamonds, and carry out domestic chores in the camps. These civilians were also used to build the Buedu airstrip and to collect arms and ammunition and food and drugs from Sam Bockarie in Buedu, Kailahun.[3896] In order to get food, the RUF rebels would go to a civilian zone, attack the civilians and force them to carry food from their homes back to the RUF bases.[3897]

5326. para. 1703: Komba Sumana, who the Trial Chamber has found was captured in April/May 1998,[3898] was taken shortly thereafter to a camp in Kissi Town. The witness said that he was captured by men wearing "uniform trousers and civilian clothes" who were speaking Liberian English[3899]. In the camp in Kissi Town he was taken to the boss of the rebels, a Major Wallace, a Liberian.[3900] The witness said he wanted to leave but was told he had to stay as he was going to become an SBU. On hearing this, the witness started crying. He wanted to go and find his family but "they didn't allow me".[3901] One evening someone came from PC Ground with a message from Issa that all those who had been captured had to assemble at PC Ground the next morning. The witness was told that "if anybody did not go, if it was found out later you, whom they would find out, if you are a civilian they will kill you".[3902] At PC Ground, Issa Sesay assembled the captured civilians and stated that Mosquito had requested that the civilians be sent to Kailahun for training. The selection process then took place at gunpoint and then they walked for 3 weeks with rebels to Buedu.[3903] The witness specifically recalled civilians being present at

Kissi Town, Banya Ground and PC Ground who had to carry out domestic chores. He testified that he personally went on food-finding missions, pounded husk rice and fetched water accompanied by an armed fighter.[3904]

5327. para. 1704: Alice Pyne, who arrived at PC Ground in February 1998,[3905] testified that the RUF rebels used to go out into the villages around PC Ground and capture civilian men, women and children. The women were taken as 'wives' of the RUF rebels to 'work for him just like a woman would work for her husband in the home'. Sometimes they were beaten but some were cared for by their 'husband' who brought them clothes and food.[3906] She testified that the civilians were forced to carry loads of property from the places where they were captured by RUF fighters. They could not refuse because the rebels had guns and if they did refuse, they would be beaten or shot.[3907]

f. Other Locations - Kono District – Crimes

5328. para. 1711: Emmanuel Bull testified that he was living with his family in Mortema, Kono, in February 1998. ECOMOG had ousted the AFRC government and the AFRC/RUF forces had fled from Mortema.[3913] However, one day Bull and his family heard approaching gunfire and feared the return of the AFRC/RUF forces, so they decided to flee to another village called Fakoyia. In all, about 21 family members fled, including Bull, his father and his elder brother Samuel. Rather than go to Fakoyia itself they decided that it was safer to hide in a cave near there. They lived in the cave for more than a month; Bull spent his birthday there on 2 March.[3914] One day Bull returned to the cave from gathering bush yams and learned that AFRC/RUF fighters had been there and had raped two girls, "A" and "B" (the girls' real names were suppressed to protect their privacy) and had taken A away with them. Bull was shocked. His love for A made him want to follow the fighters to rescue her.[3915] He planned to befriend the fighters if he could, in order to find A.[3916]

5329. para. 1712: Six or seven men, including Bull, his father and brother Samuel, set out to follow the fighters in the direction of Mortema. On the way, they encountered five well-armed AFRC/RUF fighters who warned them not to run away. Bull and his group all ran away to the bush. Some escaped but Bull was captured, along with his father and brother. The fighters took away their personal belongings and then threatened to kill them for running away. The three men begged the fighters not to kill them.[3917] They were then forced to walk at gun point towards Fakoyia. On the way, the fighters found some people hiding in the bush. The people fled but the fighters captured one of them, a woman, and took her along with them. The fighters made Bull and the others carry the belongings of the people who had fled. Bull carried on his head a fowl coop and a gallon of palm oil. He had no choice as he believed he would be killed if he refused. His father was driven away by the fighters, who did not want old people walking with them.[3918]

5331. para. 1714: Bull testified that in April 1998 he was walking near Mamboma, Kono, when he was ambushed at gunpoint and captured by 11 to 15 AFRC/RUF men. Later in the day, the same men gave him a bag and a two-gallon rubber container of palm oil and told him to follow them 'the few yards' to Mamboma.[3924] When Bull entered Mamboma he saw dead bodies and "a head cut off and placed on a stick". One of the fighters said to him: "You, that's the way we are going to cut your head".[3925] Bull then described how he, his father and brother were instructed by AFRC/RUF men to carry loads of stolen property from Mamboma to Njaiama Nimikoro. Bull said that the man in charge was called Cobra, an RUF Liberian man, who was "the number 1 violence man, because he will go there threaten people, hit people".[3926] Everybody was heavily laden. His brother, who is handicapped, was still made to walk. Everybody was tired and Bull was walking bare foot on thorns; "it was a really, really, really, really, sad experience". The AFRC/RUF fighters kept going up and down urging the civilians to keep walking.[3927] Cobra told them "if anybody close [sic] your eyes on us…we are going to close our eyes on you". Bull understood this to mean that if anybody said they were tired they would be executed.[3928] A suckling mother who became tired was shot and somebody took her baby.[3929] About an hour away from Njaiama Nimikoro, a quarrel broke out between the RUF and AFRC and Bull remembered one of them saying: "Okay, let's put all the civilians on one side. We will kill all of them".[3930] However, the situation was calmed and the civilians were told to remove the items they were carrying and Bull testified to walking this last stretch without load.[3931] In Njaiama Nimikoro, individual AFRC/RUF men selected civilians from the group whom they wanted to take away with them. For example, one woman later told Bull that the AFRC/RUF man who had selected her had taken her virginity and used her as his wife. A lot of women were in the group, so that one AFRC/RUF man would have four or five women. Children were also selected and taken away by AFRC/RUF men.[3932]

5332. para. 1715: Finally, Bull testified that at a location between Woama and Baima, the AFRC/RUF rebels, acting on orders from Bai Bureh, forced around 16-20 civilians, including the witness, to train for two weeks in weaponry and military manoeuvres. In relation to the training, an AFRC rebel told him 'if you don't do it, you are dead'.[3933] He testified to being forced to do hard exercise during training while sick with malaria and malnourished. If the trainees were perceived to be underperforming they would be hit on the back with a machete.[3934] The civilians were also sent on food-finding missions with armed fighters.[3935]

g. Mining - Kono District – Crimes

i. General – Mining - Kono District – Crimes

5333. para. 1720: The Trial Chamber heard evidence from TF1-367, who was a mining commander in Kono from 1998 to 2000,[3938] that civilians were captured either in the bush or by Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay in towns such as Makeni and Magburaka and forced to work in the Kono mines. The civilians worked because they 'wanted to save their lives' and those who refused were beaten. They worked without pay and any diamonds found were ultimately handed over to the witness. The civilian miners were guarded by armed 'securities' and Black Guards who protected them from harassment or molestation by other people and prevented the civilians from stealing the diamonds. The witness testified that there were rules in place that if someone lost or stole a diamond, he would be killed or seriously beaten. TF1-367 personally witnessed such a beating at Kokuima. TF1-367 estimated that on an average day, 200-300 civilians would be mining in government mines in the Kono District.[3939]

5334. para. 1721: TF1-371 who was in Kono in 1997[3940] testified that the AFRC and RUF were engaged in mining in Kono, including Koidu and 'the township'. This mining was organised and overseen by the AFRC Secretariat and representatives of the Supreme Council including Gullit and SLA Cobra, the mining commander. Morris Kallon and Bockarie also visited occasionally.[3941]

5335. para. 1722: TF1-371 witnessed more than 500 civilians working under the supervision of RUF and SLA guards armed with AK-47s. These were local civilians who had been 'taken' by the AFRC/RUF and ordered to mine. He observed that they were dishevelled and worked 'grudgingly' and without pay, and were not allowed to take diamonds for themselves.[3942] The mined diamonds were given to the AFRC mining commander and transported to Johnny Paul Koroma in Freetown.[3943] TF1-371 testified that mining was still going on in Kono during 1998.[3944]

5336. para. 1723: TF1-371 testified that when he went back to Kono in December 1999, he again witnessed local civilians mining under armed guard in a similar way to what he had seen in 1997. The witness was unable to conclude whether the civilians were mining voluntarily because the roads had been opened up by then and it was therefore possible for the civilians to move to Freetown, Kenema or Makeni. TF1-371 stated that he knew that the armed guards were present to prevent the civilians stealing the diamonds but he did not ask Issa Sesay whether there was any other purpose for them.[3945]

5337. para. 1724: Albert Saidu, in cross-examination and re-examination, confirmed the substance of a prior statement that he gave to the Prosecution in October/November 2007 in which he stated that the RUF forced civilians to mine for them in Kono 'after the first Intervention'[3946] until disarmament. He said that some civilians also mined voluntarily for individual commanders. All civilians were watched by RUF armed guards to prevent them from stealing diamonds.[3947]

5339. para. 1726: The witness also testified that after the ECOMOG intervention, everyone pulled out of Kono and the mining stopped until it was re-instated in late 1998 under the control of the mining commander.[3950] The witness was no longer in Kono but heard about the mining there on the radio.[3951] He heard from 'Augustine' that, since there were no civilians left in Kono when it was re-captured, a mining unit comprising both RUF soldiers and civilians was sent from Kailahun to mine in Kono.[3952]

5340. para. 1727: TF1-516 testified that when Issa Sesay took over the mining in Koidu at the end of 1999, he was told by "Elevation", Sesay's radio operator, that mining had intensified in Kono. He heard from people in Kono that Sesay had installed a 'two-pile' system whereby one pile was reserved for the government and the other for the labourer. However, in practice, if there was 'something attractive' in a pile belonging to a labourer, that pile was also confiscated by the RUF. He was told that the mining was 'open' and that authority was given to anyone who had the ability to mine. However, 'government pits' also remained in which civilians were still forced to mine.[3953] The witness confirmed, however, that no radio messages were sent through him at that time to his commander, Benjamin Yeaten about civilians being forced to mine, even though Yeaten had requested reports on this mining situation in Kono.[3954]

5341. para. 1728: Perry Kamara testified on diamond mining in Kono after the Freetown invasion in early 1999.[3955] He gave evidence that when the mining in Kono came under the control of Issa Sesay, the RUF continued to use civilians to mine, including some who worked permanently for the government without pay.[3956]

5342. para. 1729: Mustapha Mansaray, who was appointed mining commander in Ngaiya, Kono District on 14 January 2001,[3957] testified that he was in control of the villages of Ngaiya, Yengema, Tongoma, Bandafay, and Small Ngaiya containing over 200 mining pits.[3958] He testified that he instructed AFRC/RUF fighters to gather civilians to wash gravel, which the fighters would do 'forcefully' at gunpoint. If anyone resisted, he would be beaten or killed. The witness observed civilians being beaten but could not provide a first-hand account of how many civilians had died in this way.[3959] However, he stated that he had heard from his staff that some civilians had been killed by AFRC/RUF fighters during shooting that broke out after the civilians had refused to wash gravel.[3960]

5343. para. 1730: Mansaray testified that a two-pile system was in operation in Kono while he was commander. Under that system, the gravel containing diamonds was split between the RUF/AFRC administration and the civilians. The civilians were guarded even when washing their own gravel and if a big diamond was found in a civilian's pile, the mining unit would seize it and take it to the mining office. If the office had anything to give the civilian in return, they would do so. If the civilian refused to hand such a diamond over, it would be taken from him. Mansaray was under orders from his overall commander to beat or kill civilians who refused to hand over big diamonds to the RUF/AFRC. He gave evidence that only beatings, not killings happened in his own area.[3961] Mansaray stated that Issa Sesay's bodyguards used to capture civilians at Number 11 mine and take them to mine for the RUF.[3962]

5344. para. 1731: TF1-338 testified that a two-pile system was in operation in RUF-controlled mines between 2000 and 2002 whereby the gravel was shared between the RUF Commanders and the "government"; and the civilians were not given anything.[3963] He testified that Issa Sesay forced civilians to mine in the government pits at this time.[3964]

5345. para. 1732: Issa Sesay gave evidence for the Defence that he took over control of the mining in Kono in February 2000.[3965] He testified that from July to December 1998 there was low-key mining in the jungles around Koidu, but that there was no mining in Koidu Town itself in that period because ECOMOG was in control there. The RUF maintained a mining unit in Kono from 1998 to August 2001 when they disarmed in Kono. Effective mining recommenced in December 1998 when the RUF recaptured Kono and lasted until disarmament in July/August 2001.[3966] He testified that in 1999, mining under the RUF commander was purely for the RUF and nothing was shared. Civilians received food, medicines and sometimes clothing, but never received money.[3967]

5346. para. 1733: Issa Sesay testified that when he was in command of mining in Kono from February 2000, civilians were not forced to mine in Kono. The RUF operated a two-pile system, whereby the mined diamonds would be divided into two piles—one pile for the civilian miners and one pile for the RUF. The RUF only had rights over the RUF pile.[3968] Sesay denies that the two-pile system was mere propaganda or that from February 2000 the RUF forced any civilian from Makeni or Magburaka to go to mine in Kono. Everyone went of their own volition.[3969]

5347. para. 1734: Exhibit P-382, a document dated 21 January 2001 issued by Issa Sesay's office, grants safe passage for the bearer who is in search of 'manpower for government mining'.[3970]

ii. Tombodu – Mining - Kono District – Crimes

5348. para. 1740: Alimamy Bobson Sesay, who was in Koidu Town in June 1998,[3973] visited the Tombodu mining area when on patrol and testified to seeing an unknown number of civilians working there who had been captured by the SLA and RUF.[3974]

5349. para. 1741: TF1-567 moved to Koidu Town during 1999.[3975] The witness testified that after the RUF recaptured Koidu Town,[3976] they began mining operations in the Tombodu area under mining commander CO Lion. He described seeing civilians in the township and surrounding area 'captured forcefully' to carry out the mining.[3977]

5350. para. 1742: Tamba Yomba Ngekia testified that shortly after 16 December 1999, three RUF soldiers, who introduced themselves as Officer Med, Colonel Gibbo and Major Tactical told the witness and a group of around 50 civilians that they had been sent by Colonel Issa to take the group to mine at Tombodu Bridge. At Tombodu, the civilians were forced to dig and mine at gunpoint and could not refuse. Ngekia described seeing a town chief, Major S. E. Sogbeh, who refused to mine, shot and killed as an example to the other workers. He also heard Officer Med command the boys guarding the miners to shoot anyone who refused to work.[3978] He testified that there were 'many' civilians on his shift and that 70 new miners were delivered in chains and tied with rope around their waists. The miners were forced to work naked and at gunpoint so they would not escape. There was no medication and miners were given only one plantain a day to eat.[3979] Any diamonds they found were taken away by Officer Med.[3980]

5351. para. 1743: Sahr Charles confirmed testimony he had given in the RUF Trial[3981] and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence.3982 He testified in the RUF Trial that he was living in Tombodu in 1999 when forced mining occurred in Benditu, Tombodu. Such mining went on for two years. RUF Officer Med came to Benditu, Tombodu in April 1999[3983] and told the witness and other civilians that they would be forced to mine, despite their refusal to do so. The rebels also collected civilians from other villages against their will and brought them tied in ropes to mine in Tombodu.[3984] The rebels guarded the miners with guns to prevent them running away. If miners became tired, they recovered in sheds at the mines but were not permitted to leave the pit. They could not refuse to mine because they had 'a gun over their head' and if they stopped working, the rebels would throw stones at them to force them to start again. The miners were not paid and were fed only gari.[3985] During the time the witness spent mining there, the number of civilians involved rose from 150 on the first day (the witness counted them) to 500. Any diamonds uncovered by the miners were immediately taken by the rebels.[3986] If the civilians failed to find diamonds they were assembled and accused of witchcraft, taken to a cell called the guard room, stripped naked and were flogged, stabbed in the head and rubbed with mud.[3987] The witness denied that there was any two-pile system in Tombodu in 2000.[3988]

iii. Koidu Town – Mining - Kono District – Crimes

5352. para. 1749: Alimamy Bobson Sesay who was in Koidu Town in June 1998[3991] testified that civilians captured by the AFRC/RUF were forced to mine at gunpoint at Five-Five Spot, Masingbi Road, and Koidu Town. These civilians were also engaged in 'secret' night-time mining for Hassan Papa Bangura and 'Bazzy'.[3992] The diamonds that were mined were "government property", that is, they belonged to the RUF organisation and Superman, who was in control of the mining, had orders from 'Mosquito' to take them.[3993]

5353. para. 1750: Perry Kamara testified that mining took place throughout 1998 at Superman Ground, which was two miles from Koidu, under the direction of Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon and mining commanders such as CO Kennedy, Mr Abdul and Mr Coomber. Captured civilians mined during the day under armed guard to prevent them escaping. They were then locked in a house or shipping containers guarded by gunmen. Kamara gave evidence that all the civilians had the letters "RUF" carved into their chests and foreheads to prevent them from escaping and that anyone caught trying to escape was killed.[3994]

5354. para. 1751: Foday Lansana, who was in Kono from January 1998 to September 1998 testified that civilians and Internal Defence Units filed many reports that Morris Kallon was killing civilians who refused to mine for him in Koidu Town.[3995]

(iv) Kailahun District – Crimes

a. Buedu - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Carrying Loads / Domestic Chores - Buedu - Kailahun District – Crimes

5355. para. 1760: Augustine Mallah was in Buedu for two months in around February-May 1998.[4002] Mallah testified that not long after the ECOMOG intervention in February 1998, the AFRC and RUF captured civilians mostly from Kenema[4003] and brought them to Buedu where they joined other civilians. The civilians performed domestic duties, and those who were neither sick nor old were beaten if they refused to do the work assigned. Mallah personally witnessed civilians being beaten for refusing to work. Chores included cultivating small farms, laundering, cooking, cleaning and clearing roads.[4004]

5356. para. 1761: Dennis Koker, who was in Buedu between early 1998 and 16 December 1999,[4005] testified that civilians who had been captured in Masiaka, Makeni and Koidu were taken to Buedu. The civilians worked for RUF commanders without pay, taking loads from one town to another. Those who refused to do so were beaten. Children were required to do household chores for the fighter's wives.[4006]

5357. para. 1762: TF1-371, who was in Buedu from March 1998 to April 1999, witnessed civilians being used to work for commanders. The civilians were used to do farm work, and to carry loads for combatants across the Moa River. He testified that the civilians were not paid for their work, and that they were forced to do it. They were also ordered to contribute cocoa and coffee that they had harvested to the commanders, including Sam Bockarie, in Buedu. The witness said that the RUF would go to their farms, "use them to harvest their coffee and their cocoa, and use them to bring the produce to Buedu, and Sam Bockarie take what they are producing and sell it to other businessmen who pay for it and they were not the recipient of whatever revenue was generated from the product". TF1-371 added that the locals who had cocoa and coffee farms were ordered by the RUF High Command to harvest that produce, which was then sold by the RUF High Command to generate revenue to buy other items for the fighters.[4007] Captured girls were part of the "works committee", and were used to do domestic chores such as cooking and laundry.[4008]

5358. para. 1763: Edna Bangura testified that she was captured in Masingbi in 1994 when she was 10 years of age. After being raped by three RUF rebels she was forced to carry a load on her head and walk to Buedu with other captured civilians. She said that she had no option but to carry the load and would have been killed had she refused.[4009] Shortly after arriving in Buedu, she was assigned to stay with a rebel commander named CO Scorpion and his wife, Hawa.[4010] Bangura testified that while she was in Buedu, she and other SGUs had to perform domestic chores, including laundry, cooking and pounding rice. She and other civilians were also sent by CO Scorpion on "food finding missions", which involved entering civilians' houses, threatening them with guns, then taking their food. The witness testified that they also made the captured civilians carry the looted items back to Buedu on their heads.[4011] The witness stated that she was based in Buedu from 1994 until November or December 1998 and that these food finding missions occurred throughout the time she was living in Buedu.

ii. Carrying Arms and Ammunition - Buedu - Kailahun District – Crimes

5359. para. 1767: Alex Tamba Teh testified that he was taken from Superman Ground in Kono with many other civilians under an RUF escort to Buedu. There he met other civilians who had been "taken" from all different areas. The civilians were told by their captors that they had been brought there to collect arms and ammunition from Dawa.[4013] Approximately 150 civilians from Buedu were ordered to go to Dawa and to carry arms and ammunition that had arrived on a helicopter back to Bockarie's house at Buedu. The witness and other civilians were then "asked" by Issa Sesay to carry some of this materiel on their heads to Superman Ground in Kono.[4014]

5360. para. 1768: TF1-371 testified that Augustine Gbao assembled 200 civilians from Kailahun who were ordered to carry arms and ammunition from Buedu across the Moa River towards Koidu, for an attack on Koidu, in December 1998. He personally witnessed the civilians carrying the loads to the crossing point of the Moa River. He testified that they did not carry these loads voluntarily, but were ordered to do so.[4015]

iii. Forced Military Training - Buedu - Kailahun District –Crimes

5361. para. 1770: TF1-026 testified that she was captured by RUF rebels at her home in Wellington, Freetown on 6 January 1999. The rebels shot and killed her sister and told the witness that if she did not stop crying or tried to escape she would also be killed.[4017] The RUF rebels took her and other captured civilians on a journey through Calaba Town, Waterloo and Makeni[4018] until ultimately, after about a month, she was taken to Buedu along with 19 other civilian female captives.[4019] The civilians spent six months being forcibly trained in Buedu.[4020] They were told that anyone trying to escape would be killed. The witness stated that "they will tell us to crawl using our arms and we will crawl and they will tell us to roll from one point to the other. They also taught us how to shoot a gun".[4021] When two of the civilians were caught attempting to escape, they were publicly shot and killed in order to deter others from escaping.[4022] This incident also resulted in Bockarie passing an order that all detainees have "RUF" carved into their chests with a knife in order to prevent their escape.[4023]

iv. Construction of Buedu Airstrip - Buedu - Kailahun District – Crimes

5362. para. 1773: Mohamed Kabbah testified that in April 1998, Sam Bockarie arranged a meeting in Buedu of over 100 persons, including AFRC representatives, at which he stated that an airstrip was to be constructed in Buedu.[4025] Kabbah testified that the airfield was constructed by civilians and soldiers but was subsequently not used. Kabbah stated: "We constructed the airfield for a plane but we never saw a plane land there".[4026]

5363. para. 1774: Perry Kamara testified that pursuant to Bockarie's order, 200 to 300 civilians were sent by the RUF to Kailahun to work on the airstrip project. Kamara testified that civilians were forced to work both day and night on the project and at all times were accompanied by RUF security escorts.[4027] Some civilians had "RUF" carved into their chests or foreheads in order to prevent their escape.[4028]

5364. para. 1775: Isaac Mongor testified that civilians worked on the airstrip in Buedu which was being prepared by Sam Bockarie. Mongor testified that civilians had no option not to work, and were not paid for their work, although they were fed by the RUF.[4029]

5365. para. 1776: Abu Keita testified that he was shown the site of the airstrip by Issa Sesay in late September 1998. The MP commander Kaisoko and the G5 collected civilians from the various towns to work on the airstrip. Keita testified that civilians were not paid for their work.[4030]

5366. para. 1777: Dennis Koker told the Trial Chamber that the RUF captured civilians, who were stripped naked and tied together with a rope in order to prevent their escape. They were taken to Buedu to work on the airstrip.[4031]

b. Bunumbu / Camp Lion - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Forced Military Training - Bunumbu / Camp Lion - Kailahun District – Crimes

5367. para. 1782: Dennis Koker was in Buedu from February 1998 to December 1999, during which time he served as the RUF Military Police (MP) Guard Commander and, later, as MP Adjutant.[4034] Koker testified that civilians captured by the RUF from different villages were brought to Buedu to the MP office. All captured civilians had been given a pass by the commanders who had captured them and at the MP office their passes were checked against a list to make sure that no one had escaped. Anyone without a pass would either be shot or put into a dungeon.[4035] Koker said that "the stronger ones were taken to the training bases – Bunumbu".[4036] Koker testified that the captured civilians in Buedu were not in good condition. They were worn out, malnourished and worked without pay. Children were taken away from their parents and sent for military training, some as young as 12 or 14 years of age. Once trained, the civilians were sent to the front lines as reinforcements.[4037] Koker estimated that during his time in Buedu 1,300 captured civilians – 500 children and 800 men and women – went through the MP office.[4038]

5368. para. 1783: TF1-362 testified that an RUF training base named Camp Lion was established in Bunumbu in February 1998 on the orders of Sam Bockarie, and operated until the end of 1998. 4039 She testified that there were approximately 200 recruits, who were captured civilians from Freetown, Quiva and Daru, and included young boys, young girls, women and old persons.[4040] Some civilian "recruits" died during military training exercises and the High Command was informed.[4041] Recruits who tried to escape had "RUF" carved into their foreheads and chest.[4042] The trainees were also sent on food-finding missions, assisted the commanders' wives, performed domestic chores and cultivated farms.[4043]

5369. para. 1784: TF1-189 testified that she had been captured and raped in March 1998 by rebels whom she described in various parts of her evidence as "RUF rebels and the junta SLA",[4044] "RUF rebels" and "juntas",[4045] "Sankoh rebels", "Charles Taylor rebels",[4046] "RUF rebels" and "junta fighters".[4047] She was held captive in a location in Kailahun District when she heard about the attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999. Some time after that the rebels took away 20 captives, aged 12 to 18, both male and female, and she learned that they had been taken to "the training base" at which CO Monica was the commander, where they were taught "how to use guns, how to fire them, and they have to crawl under a barbed wire". She learned that if CO Monica "ordered you to do something and you refused, she will beat you up". After the training, the trainees were sent to the front lines.[4048]

5370. para. 1785: Komba Sumana, who the Trial Chamber has found was trained at Bunumbu from April/May 1998 to approximately August 1998,[4049] testified that civilians were taught how to handle weapons, and how to attack towns and houses.[4050] He said that civilians were beaten during their training, and sometimes were not provided with food.[4051]

5371. para. 1786: TF1-371 heard that throughout 1998, Bunumbu training base in Kailahun was used for training civilians who had been captured in Kono.[4052]

5372. para. 1787: Exhibit D-013, a report by a Training Commander at Camp Lion, Bunumbu from 21 May 1998, indicates that there were 603 recruits at Bunumbu training base in May 1998.[4053]

c. Locations in Luawa Chiefdom - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Mining - Locations in Luawa Chiefdom - Kailahun District – Crimes

5373. para. 1791: Aruna Gbonda testified that diamond expert Patrick Bangula, who was appointed by Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie to look for diamonds, gathered and directed the civilians of Yandohun in mining activities. When asked to give a date, Gbonda replied: "It looks like it was in '97 or '98, in between. That was the time that happened. I think so".[4055] Gbonda also told the Trial Chamber that he heard that there was mining by civilians at a location by the Moa River between Monfidor and Sahbahun.[4056] When asked about the treatment of civilians in these locations, the witness stated that "they were capturing forcefully. If you were a civilian and they told you to do something, you had to do it".[4057]

d. Talia - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Farming and fishing - Talia - Kailahun District –Crimes

5374. para. 1796: Aruna Gbonda, a rice farmer and Deputy Chiefdom Commander, testified that he worked for the rebels near Talia village from 1996.[4062] In Talia, the RUF would tell the civilians to farm for them, and the civilians would clear the bush, farm the land, harvest the rice and give it to the rebels. Up to 50 people farmed in Talia between 1996 and 2000. Civilians were not paid for their work and were beaten for failing to perform the labour assigned to them. The witness himself was beaten by a rebel for refusing to work.[4063]

5375. para. 1797: The witness said that in 1997, 1998 and 1999, civilians were also asked to contribute cacao that they had harvested in Talia. They would then transport the cacao to the rebels at the riverside near Kailahun Town, who would ultimately turn it over to Augustine Gbao.[4064]

5376. para. 1798: Gbonda testified that from 1997 to 1999, Gbao told civilians to contribute palm oil. The civilians harvested the palm oil and gave it to the rebels on three different occasions in Giema or near the riverside near Kailahun Town. The rebels would then trade the palm oil for rice, Maggi, salt and cigarettes and the civilians then carried these items to a store in Kailahun Town.[4065]

5377. para. 1799: In addition, female civilians were forced to fish for the RUF in February and March, between 1994 and 2000, and the witness saw one woman who refused to fish beaten by the rebels.[4066] Male civilians were also forced to give game that they had hunted to Sam Bockarie.[4067]

e. Giema - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Farming - Giema - Kailahun District –Crimes

5378. para. 1805: Aruna Gbonda testified that he and approximately 150 other civilians were told by rebels, including Issa Sesay, to cultivate a big farm in Kambama, just outside Giema in 1997 in order to supply the rebels with rice. According to the witness, "every village people [sic] would have to cultivate a farm for rebels".[4069] Gbonda also testified that between 1996 and 2000 he and other civilians cultivated a swamp farm right outside Giema growing rice for Issa Sesay.[4070]

5379. para. 1806: Dennis Koker, who was in Buedu between early 1998 and 16 December 1999,[4071] testified that civilians were forced to work on "Mosquito's farms. Morris Kallon's farm [. . .] Issa's farms". If civilians refused to work on the farms, their property would be burned or they would be detained in military cells.[4072] He testified that civilians worked on farms without pay.[4073]

ii. Domestic Chores / Cultivation of Rice - Giema - Kailahun District – Crimes

5380. para. 1810: Finda Gbamanja testified that while she was staying with Sergeant Foday's mother in Giema, she performed domestic chores such as pounding rice, cooking, laundering, and fishing. She was also forced to do "government work" for the RUF consisted of planting seeds and weeding while she was in Giema and Ngeigor.[4075] On one occasion, when she was very tired and refused to do the government work, she was put in "the dungeon" for a day as punishment. She spent one Christmas in Giema.[4076]

5381. para. 1811: TF1-189 testified that while she and other captives were at Mamboma, from September 1998 to July 1999, they performed domestic tasks such as cooking, cleaning, washing clothes and cultivating a farm for RUF rebels. She indicated that when they were taken from Kailahun Town to Mamboma, she did not try to escape as she had been warned not to.[4077]

iii. Mining - Giema - Kailahun District –Crimes

5382. para. 1814: Aruna Gbonda testified that he personally saw a mine at Giema, where the mining workforce comprised "many" civilians.[4081] He testified that civilians who refused to work were seriously beaten.[4082]

f. Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Carrying Loads / Arms and Ammunition - Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Crimes

5383. para. 1817: Augustine Mallah testified that when the AFRC and RUF forces retreated from Kenema in February 1998, they captured over 400 civilians along the way, and took them to Kailahun Town.[4085]

5384. para. 1818: In Exhibit D-060, notes of an interview given by Sheku Alex Bao to the Prosecution, Bao stated that he personally witnessed "soldiers/rebels" abducting civilians to carry their loot when they left Kenema.[4086]

5385. para. 1819: Dennis Koker testified that the RUF captured civilians in Kono, including women and children. They were given loads to carry and those civilians who refused were shot. 4087 These civilians were brought to Kailahun Town with the fighters[4088], and they were given arms and ammunition to carry on their heads from Kailahun Town to Jokibu on the frontlines at some point after March 1998.[4089]

5386. para. 1820: TF1-189 testified that after ECOMOG attacked Koidu Town in August 1998, she and hundreds of other civilians left and travelled with the rebels to Kailahun. The civilians carried loads or boxes of ammunition on their heads, or carried wounded rebels. TF1-189 witnessed the rebels kill a 12-year old boy who had stopped because the box of ammunition that he was carrying was too heavy. The rebels and SLAs were carrying guns during this march.[4090]

ii. Manual Labour / Domestic Chores - Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Crimes

5387. para. 1825: TF1-189 testified that once the captured civilians from Koidu reached Kailahun she was forced to stay with a commander named Gogomeh, together with five other female captives and four rebels.[4093] TF1-189 testified that during this time, she and the other captured women and girls were made to cook, wash the rebel's clothes and were "wives".[4094]

5388. para. 1826: TF1-189 said that she left Gogomeh's place only twice, on both occasions to accompany a female rebel to shop for food items.[4095] She did not try to escape again because she was warned that if she tried to do so "it would not be good for [her]". None of the other captive women and girls escaped.[4096] The witness was in Kailahun Town from August to September 1998.[4097]

5389. para. 1827: Aruna Gbonda testified that when he was deputy chiefdom commander in Kailahun Town from 1996-2000, a rebel called Morrie Fekai would relay messages to him via another rebel called Sellu to gather civilians to weed the grass in Kailahun Town. He estimated that around 400-800 civilians were used to weed.[4098]

g. Pendembu - Kailahun District – Crimes

i. Domestic chores - Pendembu - Kailahun District –Crimes

5390. para. 1832: Mustapha Mansaray testified that between May 1999 and July 2000 he was in charge of the screening in Pendembu, under the overall command of IDU commander Augustine Gbao.[4102] The witness testified that during this time period, the RUF screened up to 500 civilians in Pendembu. Some women who were captured by the fighters were not brought to the screening process but were kept by the fighters, and the witness never knew what happened to them.[4103] Some of these civilians were assigned to fighters' homes, where they performed domestic duties. Women were also screened as part of this process and assigned to fighters' homes where they were forced to have sexual intercourse and to perform domestic duties.[4104] When asked if they went with the fighters voluntarily, the witness replied with an unequivocal "no".[4105] When asked the same question later in his testimony he stated that he did not know what was in the women's minds and did not know whether they were willing or not.[4106] However, the witness stated that there were many complaints from captured women that they had lost their property and had been forced to come with the fighters.[4107]

(v) Other Locations – Crimes

a. Carrying Loads / Arms and Ammunition - Other Locations – Crimes

5391. para. 1836: Mustapha Mansaray testified that civilians captured by the RUF and AFRC in Daru and Segbwema were brought to Pendembu for screening at some point after May/June 1999 when the witness was posted to Pendembu.[4111] In Exhibit D-060, notes of an interview given by Sheku Alex Bao to the Prosecution, Bao states that when the rebels captured Segbwema, they abducted many civilians to carry their things.[4112]

5392. para. 1837: Albert Saidu testified that in 2000, strong civilians were used by rebels to carry ammunition, which had come from Vahun, from Bomaru to Pendembu, then to Manowa Ferry and further into Kailahun.[4113]

b. Farming - Other Locations – Crimes

5393. para. 1841: Aruna Gbonda testified that civilians in Sandialu contributed coffee which they had harvested to the rebels, which was ultimately given to Augustine Gbao.[4116]

(vi) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

i. General - Freetown and the Western Area –Crimes

5395. para. 1847: Another report, Exhibit P-077 (Confidential), states that rebels advancing into the city on January 6-7 forced civilians into the streets to act as human shields,[4124] that during the attack, rebels abducted a large but unverifiable number of people,[4125] and that thousands of children were abducted by rebels.[4126] Exhibit P-328, a Human Rights Watch report, states that a central feature of the Freetown attack was the use of civilians as human shields, and that rebels marched in or behind thousands of civilians making up the human shield.[4127] Human Rights Watch also reported that thousands of civilians were abducted as rebels retreated from the city, and family members were often beaten or killed if they attempted to resist the abductions.[4128]

5396. para. 1848: What follows is a consideration of the sworn evidence of enslavement alleged to have been perpetrated in specific locations in Freetown and the Western Area.

ii. Carrying Loads - Freetown and the Western Area –Crimes

5397. para. 1849: Ibrahim Wai testified that on 23 December 1998, "SLA/RUF" soldiers entered Tombo and looted his goods. A commander named "Mohammed" then ordered the witness to carry these goods to the "station" in Tombo. He was told that if he attempted to turn back, he would be shot.[4129]

5398. para. 1850: Perry Kamara testified that by the time his convoy reached Benguema around 25 December 1998, the RUF/AFRC had more than 1,000 civilians carrying loads for them. He stated that "the father who was among us was full of admiration saying that we were able to control the civilians who were carrying loads for us".[4130]

5400. para. 1852: Abu Bakarr Mansaray confirmed evidence he had given in the AFRC Trial that he was captured in Freetown on 8 January 1999 by three rebels armed with AK-47s, who were under the command of Gullit. They forced him to go to State House where he was locked in the kitchen with approximately 50 other civilians for four days without food or water. He testified that civilians who attempted to escape were stopped by rebels who pointed guns at them.[4132] He was then chained and forced to carry a heavy bomb for the 45 minute trek to Calaba Town.[4133] On cross-examination (in the AFRC Trial), it was suggested to him that it would have been impossible for him to get from Freetown to Calaba Town in 45 minutes while carrying a heavy bomb after not having eaten for four days.[4134] Mansaray was also cross-examined on this aspect of his evidence in the present trial and he explained that the reason he stated a time of 45 minutes was because the rebels told him it had taken them 45 minutes to reach Calaba Town.[4135]

5401. para. 1853: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that in about the third week of January 1999, the civilians who had been captured in Freetown moved with the RUF/AFRC rebels, including the witness, through Kissy. The civilians, including women, were all given loads to carry of goods that had been looted from Freetown including rice, clothing and jeans. He testified that they were guarded so that they would not escape.[4136]

5402. para. 1854: TF1-023 confirmed testimony she had given in the AFRC Trial[4137] and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence.[4138] The witness testified in the AFRC Trial that she was abducted by rebels from Calaba Town on 22 January 1999 along with four men, three women and a young child. They joined a group of other captured civilians and moved with the rebels to Allen Town, where they joined another group of captured civilians (totalling 100 in all). During the journey, TF1-023 was given a small bag to carry. The civilians stayed at Allen Town for three days and were guarded by SBUs with guns to prevent them escaping.[4139]

5403. para. 1855: Paul Conteh confirmed testimony he had given in the AFRC Trial[4140] and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence[4141]. Conteh testified that on 23 January 1999, during the retreat from Freetown, the AFRC looted his house and forced him to carry the looted goods to a camp at Kola Tree, where approximately 200 civilians were also being held captive. During the journey, they beat him so that he would walk more quickly, and after showing him the corpse of a civilian who had been shot, told him that this is what would happen to him if he tried to escape.[4142] After staying at Kola Tree, the civilians were then forced to carry loads as they moved with the rebels towards Regent on approximately 28 January 1999.[4143]

5404. para. 1856: Akiatu Tholley testified that she was captured in the RUF/AFRC rebel attack on Wellington on 5 January 1999[4144] and was beaten up. She and other civilians were then forced to carry heavy boxes of ammunition in a convoy to Allen Town. She testified that if civilians refused to carry the ammunition, they would be killed. The witness personally saw some civilians killed for refusing to carry these boxes.[4145] When the civilians reached Allen Town, they refused to carry the ammunition any further, and the rebels ordered them to strip naked and told them they would be killed. The civilians escaped when jets flew overhead and the rebels took shelter.[4146]

b. Domestic Chores and other tasks - Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5405. para. 1865: Patrick Sheriff testified that he and three other civilians were captured in the bush by an armed AFRC member in Mabureh Town in the Western Area, on 30 December 1998. They were forced to process palm fruits in order obtain palm oil, even though the witness was injured. The witness stated that he did the job "to save his life". He also saw approximately 30 captured civilians in the town, who were used by the rebels to cook, pound rice and collect water.[4148]

5406. para. 1866: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that when the AFRC fighters were at PWD and Ferry Junction towards the third week of January, they would use civilians to look for tyres and burn them in order to light up the area.[4149]

5407. para. 1867: Alimamy Bobson Sesay also testified that 400 civilians[4150] were "placed under strict monitoring" and forced by fighters based in Benguema in February-March 1999 to do various tasks including pounding rice, cooking, laundering, going on patrols and ambushes, going on food finding missions and carrying loads.[4151]

5408. para. 1868: Paul Conteh's testimony in the AFRC Trial, a transcript of which was admitted into evidence, was that on around 22 January 1999, at the camp in Kola Tree, civilians were forced to work for AFRC commanders by cooking or doing domestic chores. One of the AFRC fighters showed him a corpse and told him that this might happen to him if he tried to escape.[4152]

5409. para. 1869: Conteh gave further evidence in the AFRC Trial that a few days later, he went with a group of captured civilians and rebels to Benguema, where there were already 200 civilians. He testified that civilians were forced by AFRC fighters to destroy a bridge under the supervision of armed fighters and to perform domestic duties, including cooking, laundry and pounding rice.[4153]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable Law - Crimes Against Humanity ("CAH")

5410. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – paras. 504 – 515 [1383].

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

5411. See above: Chapter 2 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 547 – 559 [1395].

5412. para. 1659: The Trial Chamber has already found that the chapeau requirements in relation to the crime of enslavement have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Trial Chamber further finds in relation to Kenema District that the acts of the perpetrators in each of the above crimes of enslavement formed part of the attack directed against the civilian population and that the perpetrators knew that the abductions of civilians and their use as forced labour formed a part of that attack. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of enslavement as a crime against humanity (Count 10) have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

5413. para. 1754: The Trial Chamber has already found that the chapeau requirements in relation to the crime of enslavement have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.[3997] The Trial Chamber further finds in relation to Kono District that the acts of the perpetrators in each of the above crimes of enslavement formed part of the attack directed against the civilian population and that the perpetrators knew that the abductions of civilians and their use as forced labour formed part of that attack. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of enslavement as a crime against humanity (Count 10) have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

5414. para. 1844: The Trial Chamber has already found that the chapeau requirements in relation to the crime of enslavement have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.[4118] The Trial Chamber further finds in relation to Kailahun District that the acts of the perpetrators in each of the above crimes of enslavement formed part of the attack directed against the civilian population and that the perpetrators knew that the abductions of civilians and their use as forced labour formed part of that attack. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of enslavement as a crime against humanity (Count 10) have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

5415. para. 1876: The Trial Chamber has already found that the chapeau requirements in relation to the crime of enslavement have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.[4155] The Trial Chamber further finds in relation to Freetown and the Western Area that the acts of the perpetrators in each of the above crimes of enslavement formed part of the attack directed against the civilian population and that the perpetrators knew that the abductions of civilians and their use as forced labour formed part of that attack. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of enslavement as a crime against humanity (Count 10) have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

(iii) Applicable Law – Enslavement

5416. para. 445: The Accused is charged under Count 10 with enslavement, a crime against humanity, punishable under Article 2(c) of the Statute.[1067]

5417. para. 446: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the following specific elements of the crime of enslavement must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

i. The perpetrator exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such a person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty;

ii. The perpetrator exercised these powers intentionally.[1068]

5418. para. 447: Indicia of enslavement include "control of someone's movement, control of physical environment, psychological control, measures taken to prevent or deter escape, force, threat of force or coercion, duration, assertion of exclusivity, subjection to cruel treatment and abuse, control of sexuality and forced labour".[1069] "Lack of consent" is not an element of the crime of enslavement, but may be relevant from an evidentiary perspective.[1070] There is no requisite duration of the relationship between the Accused and the victim which must exist in order to establish enslavement, but duration may be relevant in determining the quality of the relationship.[1071]

5419. para. 448: In order to establish forced labour as enslavement, the relevant consideration is whether "the relevant persons had no choice as to whether they would work",[1072] which is a factual determination that must be made in light of the indicia of enslavement identified. However, the subjective belief of labourers that they were forced to work is not sufficient to establish forced labour, but must be supported by objective evidence.[1073]

5420. para. 449: The Prosecution submits that in relation to the mental elements for this offence, it must be established that the perpetrator "either intended enslavement or acted in the reasonable knowledge that it was likely to occur", as this approach would be consistent with the mental elements of other crimes in the Statute, the approach of Trial Chamber I, and the ICC Statute.[1074]

5421. para. 450: However, the Trial Chamber notes that this requirement is not supported by the AFRC Trial Judgement, which was not overturned on appeal on this point, nor by the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY.[1075] Such an expansion of the mental elements requirement/mens rea is unwarranted, as it is difficult to envisage what the requirement of "acting in the reasonable knowledge that enslavement was likely to occur" would entail in the context of enslavement where the actus reus requires exercising the powers of ownership.

(iv) Kenema District - Enslavement

5422. Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Enslavement para. 1649: The Trial Chamber has already determined that the AFRC and RUF attacked Tongo Fields in August 1997 and conducted mining operations there under the command and control of Sam Bockarie. The AFRC and RUF left Tongo Fields in January 1998 when attacked by the CDF and Kamajor fighters.[3802]

5423. para. 1650: On the basis of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the AFRC and RUF abducted and forced a large but unknown number of civilians to engage in mining in Tongo Fields during the relevant period. With the exception of Defence witness DCT-068, all the witnesses testified to civilians being forced to mine in Tongo Fields, predominantly at Cyborg Pit. Further, Augustine Mallah, Dauda Aruna Fornie, Alex Bao, TF1-567, Abdul Conteh, Charles Ngebeh and TF1-371 provided testimony that civilians were 'collected' or 'captured' and forced to go to the mines to work. Augustine Mallah is the only witness to suggest that civilians were initially gathered for work by a committee of civilian elders, with forcible abductions from civilians' homes only occurring in late 1997. The Trial Chamber notes however that Mallah's evidence pertaining to the earlier civilian involvement in the collecting of civilians to work in the mines is based on hearsay as Mallah testified to hearing this from the OC Secretariat, whereas the later evidence of worsened conditions, including the abductions of civilians, is an eye-witness account. The evidence of the other witnesses points overwhelmingly to a systematic practice of civilian abductions as a precursor to the enforced mining in the Tongo Fields.

5424. para. 1651: The evidence shows that those civilians who refused to work met with violence. For example, Augustine Mallah testified to witnessing civilians both flogged and killed and to flogging civilians himself if they refused to mine for him, while TF1-062 described how one of the men working with him was beaten for seeking to avoid work. Karmoh Kanneh also described two occasions when civilians were flogged or beaten for refusing to work.

5425. para. 1652: On the basis of the testimony of TF1-062, Augustine Mallah, Karmoh Kanneh, TF1-567, Abdul Conteh, DCT-068 and TF1-371, the Trial Chamber finds that civilians were forced to labour in the presence of armed guards, who beat or killed those who attempted to escape or committed other perceived breaches of the mining rules. The AFRC/RUF thereby controlled the civilians' physical environment and took measures to prevent their escape. For example, TF1-062 testified to watching, on two occasions, AFRC/RUF soldiers shoot and kill civilian miners who were alleged to have disobeyed orders.

5427. para. 1654: The Trial Chamber further finds that such work was undertaken either entirely without substantive pay or that civilians were given wholly insufficient compensation in the form of meagre food items. Civilians were forced to deliver diamonds they found to members of the AFRC or RUF and any attempt by a civilian to keep a mined diamond was met with violence. For example, TF1-062 testified that civilians received no food, mining equipment or payment from the AFRC/RUF administration. Augustine Mallah described how civilians were deprived of food and any diamonds found would be confiscated by the AFRC/RUF, a fact corroborated by Dauda Aruna Fornie, Karmoh Kanneh and TF1-567. Abdul Conteh testified to witnessing miners being given only 'two cups of garri' for their work.

5428. para. 1655: Although the Trial Chamber heard evidence from TF1-062, Karmoh Kanneh and Issa Sesay that civilians were permitted to keep and sell diamonds collected on some days of the week and may have worked voluntarily on 'non-government days', this does not alter its finding that, at least on 'government days' civilians were forced to mine without pay and without their consent.

5430. para. 1657: The Trial Chamber finds that the conditions in which civilians worked at the mines cumulatively created an atmosphere of terror in which genuine consent was not possible. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that through abductions, deprivation of liberty and forced mining without pay in 1997 and 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally asserted and exercised powers of ownership over civilians in Kenema District.

5431. para. 1658: The evidence adduced by the Prosecution proves beyond reasonable doubt that in Kenema District during the Indictment period, members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3803] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over a large but unknown number of civilians by depriving them of their freedom and forcing them to mine for diamonds in various locations in the Tongo Fields area.

(v) Kono District - Enslavement

a. Kono District in general - Kono District - Enslavement

5432. para. 1663: Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence establishes that civilians captured by the RUF and AFRC in Kono District were forced to carry loads, go on food-finding missions and carry the looted food back, in circumstances in which they had no freedom of choice or movement in that they were kept in captivity in a very vulnerable position by armed men. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that by depriving the civilians of their liberty and forcing them to work, members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3811] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians from around mid-March 1998.

b. Koidu - Kono District - Enslavement

5433. Carrying of Loads - Koidu - Kono District - Enslavement para. 1672: Exhibit P-078 provides corroborative evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3837] abducted civilians in and around Koidu in August 1998.

5434. para. 1673: Considering the circumstances of Ngekia's capture in Koidu Town in December 1999, with many corpses lying around and men armed with guns telling the civilians that they were now in RUF control, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the civilians were forced to carry the looted goods to Tombodu. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF/AFRC, by depriving the civilians of their liberty and forcing them to carry loads, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over the civilians.

5435. para. 1674: Dennis Koker's first-hand evidence that civilians were captured at gunpoint and forced to carry loads under threat of being shot if they refused, establishes that civilians were deprived of their liberty and forced to carry loads against their will. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces thereby intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them in early 1998. (Koker also testified that other civilians were captured and recruited into their forces, and that some civilians were brought to Bunumbu. His evidence in relation to the training of these civilians at Bunumbu has been considered in the section on Bunumbu/Camp Lion in Kailahun District.[3838])

5436. para. 1675: Kuyateh gave first-hand evidence that when he was initially captured he was told by his captor he would not be released and that he was put under armed guard while under RUF CO Matthew's control. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Kuyateh was deprived of his liberty and forced to work as a mechanic and that members of the RUF/AFRC thereby intentionally exercised powers of ownership over him between February and April 1998.

5437. para. 1676: In relation to the carrying of loads by Komba Sumana's parents, brothers and other civilians, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the evidence that they were forced to do so. The presence of armed men and the earlier demonstrations of violence by the rebels created circumstances in which it was not possible that these civilians acted under their own free will. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the rebels, who were members of the AFRC/RUF forces,[3839] by depriving these civilians of their liberty and forcing them to carry loads, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them in around March/April 1998.

5439. para. 1678: In relation to Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence that civilians carried loads on food-finding missions, the Trial Chamber has found that these civilians were deprived of their liberty and forced to carry loads by members of the AFRC/RUF who intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them (See under heading "Kono District in general" above).

i. Forced military training - Koidu - Kono District - Enslavement

5440. para. 1681: The Trial Chamber finds on this evidence that it was not possible that these civilians, in particular the small boys, were receiving military training of their own free will. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces, by depriving these civilians of their freedom and forcing them to undergo military training, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them at Masingbi Road in Koidu Town from mid-March until April 1998.

c. Tombodu – Kono District - Enslavement

i. Carrying of Loads / Forced Labour - Tombodu – Kono District - Enslavement

5441. para. 1686: Samuel Komba's evidence establishes that he and three other persons, including his wife, were forced to carry baggage from Giema to Tombodu in March 1998. As the fighters gave orders that the civilians should be killed if they escaped, and stood on top of the civilians claiming that they were the "boss", the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the fighters exercised physical control over the movements of the civilians, and that the civilians had no choice but to carry these loads. As the fighters referred to the civilians as slaves, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they acted intentionally in forcing the civilians to carry these loads. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3862] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

5442. para. 1687: The Trial Chamber accepts Fofana's evidence of being forced to carry loads by the soldiers. His evidence is corroborated to a certain extent by Exhibit P-014, which is a video clip concerning the rebel attack on Fofana's village and the subsequent atrocities committed by them. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Fofana and four other civilians were forced to carry heavy loads of looted goods to Tombodu. That they were forced to carry these goods at gunpoint guarded by armed fighters indicates that the rebels exerted physical control over their movement and that they had no choice but to perform this work. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the ARFC/RUF forces[3863] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Fofana and the other civilians sometime between February and April 1998.

5443. para. 1688: Sahr Charles' evidence establishes that in February/March 1999 civilians were forced to carry old vehicles from the bush to Tombodu and that they were also forced to carry loads of food and looted items. As the civilians had been arrested and forced to carry these goods at gunpoint, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the rebels exerted physical control over their movements and that they had no choice but to perform this work. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

d. Wondedu – Kono District - Enslavement

i. Food finding missions / Domestic Chores - Wondedu – Kono District - Enslavement

5444. para. 1691: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on the evidence of Alex Tamba Teh that in about April 1998 civilians in Wondedu were forced to go on food-finding missions and carry out domestic chores. It is further satisfied that all the civilians had "AFRC" and "RUF" carved into their bodies to prevent them from escaping. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the civilians were deprived of their liberty and had no choice but to undertake the food-finding missions and domestic chores. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

e. Yengema - Kono District - Enslavement

i. Forced Military Training - Yengema - Kono District - Enslavement

5445. para. 1694: TF1-362's evidence establishes that civilians died on the training base due to the harshness of the training, and that those who attempted to escape were killed. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the RUF/AFRC deprived these civilians of their liberty, exercised control over their movements, and forced them to undergo military training under the threat of physical violence. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that from approximately December 1998 onwards, members of the RUF/AFRC, including TF1-362, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of civilians at Yengema.

f. AFRC / RUF Camps (Domestic Chores / Forced Labour / Food-finding Missions) - Kono District - Enslavement

5446. para. 1705: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on Gbamanja's evidence that she was forced to perform domestic chores for Hawa and Sergeant Foday in Koidu Town, for Sergeant Foday and Mamie at Superman Ground and for Sergeant Foday's mother and the RUF at Giema. The Trial Chamber accepts her evidence that in none of the circumstances described in her evidence was she able to run away, that attempting to escape would be met by extreme violence and that refusing to do work would also lead to punishment. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that none of the domestic duties she performed was done of her own free will. (The Trial Chamber has previously found that she was also held in captivity by Sergeant Foday and used as a sex slave[3908]. Evidence on this aspect of her captivity is considered in the section dealing with the crime of sexual slavery.)

5447. para. 1706: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3909] perpetrated the crime of enslavement in relation to Gbamanja in the following instances:

i. The female rebel Hawa intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Gbamanja by depriving her of her liberty and forcing her to perform domestic duties.

ii. Mamie, a female rebel, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Gbamanja by depriving her of her liberty and forcing her to perform domestic duties.

5448. para. 1707: The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the context that these incidences of enslavement in relation to Gbamanja occurred from around April until at least December 1998.

5449. para. 1708: Perry Kamara's evidence is consistent with the evidence given by Alimamy Bobson Sesay that the RUF captured civilians and forced them to go on food finding missions and to carry looted food back to RUF bases. Kamara's evidence also corroborates the evidence of Finda Gbamanja that captured civilians were used by the RUF to perform domestic chores at Superman Ground. The Trial Chamber finds that Kamara's evidence is further proof to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the RUF captured civilians and intentionally exercised rights of ownership over them by depriving them of their liberty and using them as forced labour. (Kamara's evidence regarding the use of civilians to build the airstrip at Buedu has been considered in the section on Kailahun.[3910])

5450. para. 1709: Sumana's evidence establishes that he and other civilians at Kissi Town, Banya Ground and PC Ground carried out domestic chores such as pounding rice, fetching water and went on food-finding missions. Sumana testified that he was captured by armed rebels, that he wanted to leave Kissi Town but was told he could not, that he was told that any civilian who did not assemble at PC Ground would be killed. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that he was deprived of his liberty and forced to perform these tasks and that members of the RUF thereby intentionally exercised powers of ownership over him from around April/May 1998. (The Trial Chamber has considered Sumana's evidence regarding military training in Bunumbu in the section on Kailahun.[3911])

5451. para. 1710: In relation to Alice Pyne's evidence regarding the use of civilian women as wives at PC Ground, the Trial Chamber has previously found on this evidence that these civilians were used as sex slaves.[3912] The Trial Chamber is further satisfied on her previously considered evidence that civilians in PC Ground were forced carry loads of looted property under threat of being beaten or shot if they refused. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that RUF fighters intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians from around February 1998.

g. Other Locations - Kono District - Enslavement

5452. para. 1716: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, based on Bull's evidence, that he and other civilians were forced to carry loads from Mortema to an unidentified location. After being captured by well-armed AFRC/RUF rebels, Bull and the other civilians were threatened that they were going to be killed, were forced to walk at the point of a gun, saw a palm wine tapper viciously beaten, and were forced to carry very heavy loads. The evidence very clearly establishes that these civilians were deprived of their liberty and did not carry loads for the rebels of their own free will. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3936] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

5453. para. 1717: Furthermore, Bull's evidence concerning the march from Mamboma to Njaiama Nimikoro establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the witness and other civilians were forced to carry their loads under threat of death. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised rights of ownership over these civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to carry loads.

5454. para. 1718: Furthermore, in relation to the training that Bull and 16 to 20 other civilians underwent at a location between Woama and Baima, Bull's evidence establishes that he was threatened with death if he refused to undergo the training, that he was required to perform training exercises while he was sick, and that trainees who were perceived to be underperforming were hit on the back with machetes. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the perpetrators deprived the civilians of their liberty, exercised control over their movement and took measures to prevent their escape. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians at a location between Woama and Baima.

h. Mining - Kono District - Enslavement

i. General – Mining - Kono District - Enslavement

5455. para. 1735: TF1-367 testified that civilians were captured either in the bush or in other towns such as Makeni and Magburaka and forced to work in the mines. Mustapha Mansaray also testified that AFRC/RUF fighters would forcefully "gather" civilians to wash gravel for the AFRC/RUF fighters and that Issa Sesay's bodyguards used to capture civilians at Number 11 mine and take them to mine for the RUF. TF1-371 testified that civilians living locally were taken by the AFRC/RUF and ordered to mine. Exhibit P-382 provides corroborative evidence that the AFRC/RUF forces needed manpower to carry out their mining operations. The Trial Chamber is satisfied on this evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces abducted a large but unknown number of civilians from locations within and outside of Kono District to labour in the mines.

5456. para. 1736: TF1-367 testified that the civilians worked in the mines under armed guards in order to save their lives. TF1-371 testified that civilians working in the minds did so grudgingly and without pay. Albert Saidu testified that the RUF forced civilians to mine for them under armed guards. TF1-516 testified that civilians were forced at gunpoint to mine and would be flogged if they refused. Perry Kamara testified that the RUF used civilians to mine, including some who worked permanently for the government without pay. Mustapha Mansaray testified that civilians worked in the mines under armed guards and that he had heard of some civilians being killed by AFRC/RUF fighters for refusing to work. TF1-338 testified that civilians were not given anything from the two-pile system that was in operation and that Issa Sesay forced civilians to mine in the government pits.

5457. para. 1737: All of such evidence contradicts Issa Sesay's testimony that civilians were not forced to mine during this period. The Trial Chamber accordingly does not accept the testimony of Issa Sesay. Not only is his testimony outweighed by the overwhelming evidence, but he also has a motivation to downplay civilian mistreatment while he was in command of mining.

5458. para. 1738: The Trial Chamber finds that the overwhelming evidence led by the Prosecution establishes that the civilians working in the mines were not doing so of their own free will. Such evidence proves beyond reasonable doubt that from at least January 1998 through the remainder of the Indictment period members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3971] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over a large but unknown number of civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to work in the diamond mines in many locations in Kono District.

5459. Tombodu – Mining - Kono District - Enslavement para. 1744: The evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, TF1-567, Ngekia and Sahr Charles establishes that the AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians to engage in mining in various locations in Tombodu. The Trial Chamber is satisfied on such evidence that the AFRC/RUF forces systematically captured civilians from villages around Tombodu and forced them to labour in the mines in Tombodu. Ngekia testified that new miners were brought to the mines in chains, and Charles testified that civilians were gathered in villages against their will and tied together with ropes to be brought to the mines.

5460. para. 1745: The Trial Chamber is also satisfied from the evidence of Ngekia and Charles, that civilians were guarded by armed fighters to prevent them from escaping and that, as Ngekia testified, the miners were forced to work naked to prevent escape. Both witnesses described how civilians were punished if they refused to work, or if they did not find diamonds. Ngekia described how the town chief who refused to mine was killed to set an example for the other miners, while Charles testified that civilians were stripped naked and flogged if they failed to find diamonds. The evidence of Ngekia and Charles also establishes that the miners worked without pay and were fed only subsistence rations.

5461. para. 1746: Ngekia testified that there were 50 civilians in his group that were taken to Tombodu Bridge and that they were later joined by 70 other civilians. Charles testified that there were initially 150 civilians mining at Bintuma but that this number grew to 500. As Ngekia was mining at Tombodu Bridge, and Charles at Bintuma, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that up to 620 civilians were forced to mine in Tombodu during this period.

5462. para. 1747: Accordingly, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence adduced by the Prosecution that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised power of ownership over a large but unknown number of civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to work in mines in Tombodu, at around June 1998 and throughout 1999-2000.

5463. Koidu Town – Mining - Kono District - Enslavement para. 1752: The Trial Chamber accepts the first-hand accounts of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara, as corroborated by Foday Lansana, that civilians were forced by AFRC/RUF commanders to mine at various locations in and around Koidu Town, including Masingbi Road, Five-Five Spot and Superman

Ground. On the basis of their evidence that such civilians were under armed guards, had "RUF" carved into their bodies to prevent them escaping, and that anyone who tried to escape would be killed, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that from February 1998 onwards, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to labour in the mines.

i. Conclusion – Kono District – Enslavement

5464. para. 1753: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[3996] engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians in Kono District and used them as forced labour to carry loads, perform domestic chores, go on food-finding missions, undergo military training, and work in diamond mines as detailed in the various crimes discussed above.

(vi) Kailahun District – Enslavement

a. Buedu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

i. Carrying Loads / Domestic Chores - Buedu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5465. para. 1764: Based on the testimonies of Mallah, Koker and TF1-371, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that civilians were used to do domestic chores, such as laundry, cooking, cultivating small farms and carrying loads. Given the testimonies of Mallah and Koker that they witnessed civilians being beaten for refusing to work, and TF1-371's testimony that the civilians were forced to work and were not paid for their labour, the Trial Chamber is further satisfied that the civilians had no option but to work, and that this constituted forced labour. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians. Although the witnesses testified about slightly different time periods during which this forced labour occurred, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that this labour began after the Intervention in around February 1998 and continued until some point in 1999.

5466. para. 1765: The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of TF1-371 that civilians who owned cocoa and coffee farms were forced to farm by the RUF and that the RUF took the produce and kept the proceeds of its sale. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the civilians were not farming of their own free will. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, by forcing these civilians to farm and to hand over the produce, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over them from March 1998 to April 1999.

5467. para. 1766: Edna Bangura's evidence relating to domestic chores is vague as to the time period in which she was forced to perform these chores. The Trial Chamber cannot therefore be satisfied that such crimes occurred during the Indictment period. However, she testified that the food-finding missions continued until she left Buedu at the end of 1998. The Trial Chamber accepts her evidence and is satisfied that during the Indictment period she and other civilians were forced to go on food-finding missions. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4012] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Bangura and other civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to go on food-finding missions.

ii. Carrying Arms and Ammunition - Buedu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5468. para. 1769: Alex Tamba Teh's evidence establishes that approximately 150 civilians carried loads of arms and ammunition from Dawa to Sam Bockarie's house in Buedu. His evidence that Issa Sesay then ordered an unknown number of civilians to carry some of these arms and ammunition to Superman Ground in Kono is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-371, who testified that approximately 200 civilians were forced to carry arms and ammunition from Buedu across the Moa River to Superman Ground in December 1998 and that they did not do so voluntarily. The context indicates that this occurred at around November/December 1998.[4016] In the circumstances described by the witnesses, and given that the AFRC/RUF forces were engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians in Kailahun District for use as forced labour, the Trial Chamber draws the conclusion that these civilians carried arms and ammunition for their captors because they were forced to do so. The Trial Chamber thus finds it proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over the civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to carry arms and ammunition.

iii. Forced Military Training - Buedu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5469. para. 1771: Based on TF1-026's first-hand evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that at least 19 civilians were forcibly trained in Buedu from approximately February to July 1999. The evidence that recruits who attempted to escape were publicly shot, and that "RUF" was carved into the chests of the other recruits to prevent them escaping, establishes that the rebels deprived these civilians of their liberty and exercised control over them, so that the civilians had no choice but to undergo this training. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces, including Bockarie, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

iv. Construction of Buedu Airstrip - Buedu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5470. para. 1778: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that under orders from Sam Bockarie, at least 200 civilians were forced to provide their labour, both day and night, without pay, for the purposes of constructing the RUF airfield outside Buedu at some point in 1998.

5471. para. 1779: Given evidence that the civilians worked on the airstrip without pay, that they were forced to work both day and night, that they had "RUF" carved on their chests to prevent them escaping and that they were accompanied by security escorts, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the movement of the civilians was controlled. It further finds that the use of violence and threats of violence by the perpetrators to deter escape indicates that the civilians were deprived of their liberty and did not work of their own free will. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces exercised the powers of ownership over at least 200 civilians who worked on the airstrip at some point in 1998, and that they exercised these powers intentionally.

5472. para. 1780: The issue of whether the Accused gave the order to Bockarie to build the airstrip has been addressed in the section on the responsibility of the Accused.[4032]

b. Bunumbu / Camp Lion - Kailahun District – Enslavement

i. Forced Military Training - Bunumbu / Camp Lion - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5473. para. 1788: The Trial Chamber accepts the first-hand evidence of witnesses Koker, Sumana and TF1-362 regarding the military training of civilians at Bunumbu from approximately February 1998 until the end of 1998, as corroborated by Exhibit D-013 and the evidence of TF1-371 and TF1-189.

5474. para. 1789: Given the evidence that the recruits were beaten and sometimes deprived of food, that some had "RUF" carved into their chests to prevent their escape, and given that they were on the base in the presence of many armed fighters, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the RUF exercised control over the trainees' movements, and that the civilians were forced to undergo military training under the threat of physical violence. Koker, TF1-362 and TF1-189 testified that civilians who were trained at Bunumbu were later sent to the frontlines. The Trial Chamber finds that this military training, which was a preparatory step to sending these civilians to the frontlines as fighters, constituted forced labour. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that from approximately February to December 1998, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of civilians at Bunumbu.

c. Locations in Luawa Chiefdom - Kailahun District – Enslavement

i. Mining - Locations in Luawa Chiefdom - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5475. para. 1792: The Trial Chamber notes that Gbonda did not visit the mine in Yandohun or the location between Monfidor and Sahbahun personally. He was told about the mining in Yandorhun by civilians who had worked there, whom he spoke to in Buedu.[4058] There is no indication from his evidence of how he knew about the mining at the other location.

5476. para. 1793: Gbonda's evidence did not indicate whether or not the civilians who worked in the mines were forced to do so, or did so voluntarily. He did state that civilians had been captured forcefully, but since he was not at either location mentioned above it is not clear how he knew this. The Prosecution alleges that at the location between Monfidor and Sahbahun, "civilians were beaten if they delayed the work; the witness himself was beaten many times".[4059]

However, the witness did not state that civilians were beaten at these locations, but at a location in Giema.[4060]

5477. para. 1794: There was no other evidence of mining in Kailahun District, or that civilians were forced to mine in these regions or in any other part of Kailahun District. Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that Gbonda's uncorroborated hearsay evidence fails to prove beyond reasonable doubt that civilians were enslaved and forced to mine at these locations.

d. Talia - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5478. Farming and fishing - Talia - Kailahun District – Enslavement para. 1800: The Trial Chamber is satisfied on Gbonda's testimony that at least 50 civilians were forced to farm near Talia from 1996 to 2000. While some of the time period during which this farming occurred may fall outside of the Indictment period, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that such farming also occurred from 30 November 1996 until 2000. As the civilians were not paid for their work and were beaten if they refused to work, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they were forced to work against their will and that this farming constituted forced labour. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over at least 50 civilians in Talia from 30 November 1996 to some point in 2000.

5479. para. 1801: Gbonda testified that from 1997 to 1999, civilians were told to contribute cacao and palm oil to RUF rebels which was ultimately given to Augustine Gbao. Civilian men were also told to contribute game that they had hunted to Sam Bockarie. However, there was no evidence that the civilians were forced to grow cacao or palm oil or forced to hunt, or that they were guarded or deprived of their liberty while doing so. While the evidence indicates that the contributions were not voluntary, this does not constitute forced labour. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of enslavement have not been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to these incidents.

5480. para. 1802: Gbonda also testified that civilians had to carry items that had been traded for the palm oil to a store in Kailahun. However, he provided no evidence about whether these civilians did so voluntarily or whether they were forced to do so. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of the crime of enslavement have not been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this incident.

5481. para. 1803: The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Gbonda's evidence does establish that RUF members ordered women to fish, and that women who refused to fish would be beaten. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the rebels exercised control over their movement, and that the women had no choice but to fish for the rebels. While some of this time period during which the fishing occurred falls outside of the Indictment, there is evidence that this fishing also occurred from 30 November 1996 until 2000. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that from 30 November 1996 to 2000, members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of women who were forced to fish.

e. Giema - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5482. Farming - Giema - Kailahun District – Enslavement para. 1807: The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the evidence of Koker and Gbonda that civilians worked on swamp farms outside Giema belonging to RUF commanders. Gbonda testified that this farming occurred from 1996 until 2000, while Koker, who was in Buedu from early 1998 to December 1999, does not give a precise time during which this farming occurred. As the civilians worked on these farms without pay, and were threatened with detention or having their property burned if they refused to work, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that they were deprived of their liberty and had no choice but to work. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF, including Issa Sesay, intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of citizens who worked on swamp farms from 30 November 1996 to 2000.

5483. para. 1808: The evidence also establishes that civilians cultivated a large farm outside Giema in 1997 for Issa Sesay. Given Koker's evidence as to the fate of civilians who refused to work on farms for the rebels, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the civilians did not cultivate this large farm of their own free will, but did so in fear of what would happen to them if they refused to do so. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that those civilians were forced to work on the big farm and that members of the RUF thereby intentionally exercised the powers of ownership over them.

i. Domestic Chores / Cultivation of Rice - Giema - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5484. para. 1812: Based on Gbamanja's first-hand evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that she performed domestic chores for Sergeant Foday's mother in Giema, and did other work, such as weeding, in Giema and Ngeigor. Given that she was punished when she refused to do this work, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that she had no choice but to do so. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4078] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Gbamanja. The Trial Chamber is satisfied from the context that this occurred at some point in late 1998.[4079]

5485. para. 1813: Gbamanja also testified that civilians were sent to other towns such as Dodo, Balahun and Mamboma, but her evidence did not indicate what they did in these locations.[4080] However, TF1-189 gave evidence of what the captive civilians were forced to do in Mamboma. The Trial Chamber is satisfied on her evidence that civilians were used to perform domestic and other duties in Mamboma, and that they did so against their will. The Trial Chamber therefore finds it proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over TF1-189 and other captive civilians by depriving them of their liberty in Mamboma from September 1998 to July 1999.

ii. Mining - Giema - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5486. para. 1815: The witness did not give any evidence capable of proving that the mining occurred during the Indictment period. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that civilians were enslaved at this location at a time relevant to the Indictment.

f. Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Enslavement

i. Carrying Loads / Arms and Ammunition - Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5487. para. 1821: The allegation by the Prosecution that captured civilians were used to carry loads from Kenema to Kailahun Town is not supported by the evidence. Mallah did not testify that the civilians carried anything. The only mention Bao makes of civilians being forced to carry looted goods was in an interview with the Prosecution on 25 November 2004 (Exhibit D-060), but Bao did not mention any such fact in any of his sworn evidence in the AFRC Trial, the RUF Trial or the present trial.[4091] The Trial Chamber therefore finds that is has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that civilians were forced to carry loads from Kenema District to Kailahun Town during the retreat in February 1998.

5488. para. 1822: However, Koker's testimony leaves no doubt that the civilians carrying arms and ammunition from Kailahun Town to Jokibu were forced to do so under fear of death. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the RUF intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians by depriving them of their liberty and forcing them to carry arms and ammunition some point after March 1998.

5489. para. 1823: Furthermore, TF1-189 gave first-hand evidence that civilians were made to carry loads of ammunition on their heads or carry wounded rebels on the way from Koidu to Kailahun in August 1998, and that she witnessed a civilian being killed for refusing to do this work. The Trial Chamber is satisfied on this evidence that the civilians had no choice but to carry these loads. It therefore finds that it has been established beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over these civilians.

ii. Manual Labour / Domestic Chores - Kailahun Town - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5490. para. 1828: The evidence that TF1-189 was forced to have sexual intercourse has already been considered in the context of sexual slavery, and the Trial Chamber has found that TF1-189 was used as a sexual slave in Kailahun Town between August and September 2009.[4099] Such evidence will therefore not be considered in this section.

5491. para. 1829: TF1-189's evidence that she and other captured civilians were used to do domestic chores and that they were threatened with the consequences should they try to escape, establishes that they were forced to labour in the commanders' homes against their will. Consequently, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4100] the rebels intentionally exercised powers of ownership over her and the other civilians from August until September 1998 in Kailahun Town.

5492. para. 1830: In relation to Gbonda's evidence that civilians were used to weed the grass in Kailahun District, Gbonda stated that the civilians who did the weeding were gathered by himself (not by the AFRC/RUF forces) and there was nothing in his evidence to indicate that these civilians were forced to work against their will. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that, in this instance, forced labour has not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

g. Pendembu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

i. Domestic chores - Pendembu - Kailahun District – Enslavement

5493. para. 1833: The Trial Chamber is satisfied from Mansaray's testimony that between May 1999 and July 2000 in Pendembu, civilians who had been abducted by the RUF were assigned to fighters, and made to perform domestic duties. Based on his evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that these civilians did not do so of their own free will. Some women were also used as sexual slaves (this aspect of their captivity is considered in the section dealing with sexual slavery[4108]). Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that, by depriving the civilians of their liberty and forcing them to work, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised rights of ownership over them.

h. Conclusion – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5494. para. 1843: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4117] engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians in Kailahun District and used them as forced labour to carry loads, farm, fish, carry out domestic chores, go on food-finding missions, undergo military training and construct an airfield as detailed in the various crimes discussed above.

(vii) Other Locations – Enslavement

a. Carrying Loads / Arms and Ammunition - Other Locations – Enslavement

5495. para. 1838: Although Mustapha Mansaray stated that civilians were captured in Daru and Segbwema by the RUF and AFRC in January 1999, there is no mention in his evidence of civilians being forced to carry loads while travelling to Pendembu. Exhibit D-060 contains notes of an interview given by Sheku Alex Bao to the Prosecution on 25 November 2004, in which he stated that when rebels captured Segbwema, they abducted civilians to carry their things. No indication is given in the document of when this occurred. Moreover, Bao did not mention any such incident in his sworn evidence in this trial, nor in the evidence he gave in the AFRC or RUF trials. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of enslavement have not been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this incident.

5496. para. 1839: Albert Saidu's evidence is that civilians assisted the soldiers to transport the ammunition, but there is no mention of the civilians having been forced to do so. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the civilians were used as forced labour.[4114]

b. Farming - Other Locations – Enslavement

5497. para. 1842: Gbonda gives the only evidence of coffee harvesting in this particular location, and his evidence is not strong. He did not make it clear whether he personally witnessed civilians in Sandialu harvesting coffee or contributing it to the rebels, nor did he provide any specific dates during which the harvesting of coffee at this location occurred. Further, his evidence does not indicate whether the civilians contributed this produce voluntarily, or whether they were forced to do so. The mere contribution of coffee does not of itself constitute forced labour. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of enslavement have been not been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this incident.

(viii) Freetown and the Western Area – Enslavement

5498. Carrying Loads - Freetown and the Western Area – Enslavement para. 1857: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, based on Ibrahim Wai's first-hand evidence that he was forced by RUF/AFRC soldiers to carry goods looted from his house to the station in Tumbo, and that he was told that he would be shot if he turned back. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4147] intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Wai on 23 December 1998 in Tumbo, Western Area.

5499. para. 1858: The Trial Chamber finds that Perry Kamara's detailed first-hand account of how the RUF/AFRC fighters controlled the civilians, and how the civilians were forced to carry loads against their will, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over approximately 1000 civilians on the way to Benguema on 25 December 1998.

5500. para. 1859: On the basis of TF1-026's first-hand testimony, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that she and over 50 other civilians carried bags of looted property from Calaba Town to Waterloo. As the RUF rebels threatened the civilians with death if they tried to escape, and as the witness personally saw them kill one civilian who had tried to run away, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these civilians had no choice but to carry these loads. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over at least 50 civilians from Calaba Town to Waterloo on 6 January 1999.

5501. para. 1860: Mansaray's first-hand testimony establishes that he and approximately 50 other captured civilians were locked in a kitchen at State House under armed guards for approximately 4 days without food and water. The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the physical movement of the civilians was controlled. The Trial Chamber accepts Mansaray's testimony of being forced to carry a bomb from there to Calaba Town in January 1999. He has sworn this evidence on oath in both the AFRC Trial and the present trial and although his estimate of 45 minutes may not be accurate, the Trial Chamber has no doubt that he was telling the truth about being forced to carry a bomb. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over him.

5502. para. 1861: Alimamy Bobson Sesay gave a detailed first-hand account about civilians carrying loads through Kissy. As the civilians had been previously abducted, and were guarded by armed fighters as they moved through Kissy, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the AFRC/RUF fighters exercised physical control over the movement of the civilians, who had no choice but to carry the loads. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over an unknown number of civilians in Kissy in the third week of January 1999.

5503. para. 1862: On the basis of TF1-023's first-hand evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that she was abducted with eight other people in Calaba Town, was told by the rebels to carry a bag, and that she was taken to Allen Town where she was held for three days with 100 other civilians. Given that the civilians were guarded by armed SBUs to prevent them escaping, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the rebels exercised control over the physical movement of the civilians. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces exercised powers of ownership over TF1-023 for approximately 3 days from 22 January 1999.

5504. para. 1863: On the basis of Conteh's first-hand testimony, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that AFRC/RUF fighters forced him to carry goods they had looted from his home to a camp in Kola Tree on 23 January 1999, and that he and other civilians were then forced to carry loads to Regent approximately 28 January 1999. As the witness was abducted, beaten, and threatened with death if he attempted to escape, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that he had no choice but to carry the loads. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised the powers of ownership over Conteh and other civilians on 23 and approximately 28 January 1999.

5505. para. 1864: Akiatu Tholley's evidence proves beyond reasonable doubt that she and other civilians were forced by RUF/AFRC rebels to carry heavy boxes of ammunition from Wellington to Allen Town. Considering her evidence that they were threatened with death if they refused to work, that she personally witnessed civilians being killed, and that they were ordered to strip naked and threatened with death when they refused to carry the ammunition any further, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over Tholley and an unknown number of civilians from Wellington to Allen Town in late January 1999. (Although the witness testified that this incident occurred on 5 January 1999, her subsequent movement with her captors from Wellington to Allen Town to Waterloo to Masiaka indicates that this occurred as the rebels withdrew from Freetown through Wellington later in January 1999.)

a. Domestic Chores and other tasks - Freetown and the Western Area – Enslavement

5506. para. 1870: Sheriff's evidence establishes that he and three other captured civilians were ordered to process palm fruits, despite the fact that he was injured, and that he did the job to "save his life". The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that these civilians did not do the work of their own free will. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over four civilians in Mabureh Town around 30 December 1998.

5507. para. 1871: Sheriff also testified that he saw in Mabureh about 30 civilians carrying out domestic chores, but did not state whether they were doing so voluntarily or not. The Trial Chamber therefore cannot establish that the elements of enslavement are proved in this instance.

5508. para. 1872: Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence that civilians were used to look for tyres to burn does not go so far as to give any indication of whether the civilians were forced to carry these tyres or whether they did so voluntarily, nor of how long the civilians were occupied in doing this.[4154] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the elements of the crime of enslavement have not been proved beyond reasonable doubt in relation to this incident.

5509. para. 1873: As regards the Kola Tree incident, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the first-hand evidence of Paul Conteh that AFRC commanders used civilians to cook and perform domestic chores around 22 January 1999. As the civilians had been abducted and brought to Kola Tree against their will, and as one of the fighters threatened Conteh with death if he attempted to escape, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the civilians had no choice but to do this work. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over civilians at Kola Tree in Freetown around 22 January 1999.

5510. para. 1874: As regards the Benguema incident, Paul Conteh's and Alimamy Bobson Sesay's first-hand evidence establishes that in approximately February-March 1999, civilians were used by AFRC/RUF fighters to perform various duties, including domestic chores such as cooking, laundry and pounding rice, as well as destroying a bridge. As one of the rebels threatened Conteh that he might be killed if he attempted to escape, as the civilians were supervised by armed fighters, and "under strict monitoring", the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the physical movement of the civilians was restricted and that there were means taken to deter their escape. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that between February and March 1999, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers of ownership over a group of approximately 400 civilians in Benguema, Western Area.

b. Conclusion - Freetown and the Western Area – Enslavement /

5511. para. 1875: The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians in Freetown and the Western Area and used them as forced labour to carry loads, perform domestic chores and destroy a bridge, as detailed in the various crimes discussed above.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Factual Findings

5517. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

5518. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

5519. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

5520. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

5521. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

(b) Legal Conclusions

5522. See below: Annex B encompasses the discussion of the evaluation of evidence relating to all the crimes [Annex B].

5523. Regarding Taylor's Criminal Liability, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Criminal Liability - paras. 497-595 [6630].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5524. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[294]

5525. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[295]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

5526. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[296]

(iii) Count 13: Abductions and Forced Labour:

5527. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour. Forced labour included domestic labour and use of diamond miners. The abductions and forced labour included the following:[297]

> i. Kenema District: Between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians living in the district to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field;[298]
> ii. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilian men, women, and children, and took them to various locations outside the District, or within the District such as AFRC/RUF camps, Tombodu, Koidu, Wondedu, and Tomendeh. At these locations the civilians were used as forced labour, including domestic labor, and as diamond miners in the Tombodu area;[299]
> iii. Koinadugu District: Between 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, at various locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumala, (or Kamalu), Koinadugu, Kamadugu, and Fadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of men, women, and children and used them as forced labour;[300]

iv. Bombali District: Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, in Bombali District, members of AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of civilians and used them as forced labour;[301]

v. Kailahun District: At all times relevant to this indictment, captured men, women, and children were brought to various locations within the district and used as forced labour;[302]

vi. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, in particular as the AFRC/RUF were being driven out of Freetown and the Western Area, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted hundreds of civilians including a large number of children, from various areas in Freetown and Western Area, including Peacock Farm, Kissy, and Calaba Town. These abducted civilians were used as forced labour;[303]

vii. Port Loko: About the month of February 1999, the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in Port Loko District. Members of the AFRC/RUF used civilians, including those that had been abducted from Freetown and the Western Area, as forced labour in various locations throughout Port Loko District including Port Loko, lunsar, and Masiaka. AFRC/RUF forces also abducted and used as forced labour civilians from various locations in the Port Loko District including Tendakum and Nonkoba;[304]

5528. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 13: Enslavement, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.c. of the Statute.[305]

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

5559. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – CAH – Findings on general requirements – paras. 942 – 943 [1598].

(iii) Applicable law – Enslavement

5560. para. 195: The Indictment under Count 13 charges the Accused with enslavement as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 2(c) of the Statute. The Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for widespread abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour in Kenema District, Kono District, Koinadugu District, Bombali District, Kailahun District, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko District in different time periods relevant to the Indictment.[357]

5561. para. 196: This Chamber agrees with the ICTY Trial Chamber in Krnojelac that the "prohibition against slavery in situations of armed conflict is an inalienable, non-derogable and fundamental right, one of the core rules of general customary and conventional international law."[358] The Chamber considers that the offence of enslavement exists at customary international law and entails individual criminal responsibility.[359]

5562. para. 197: In the Chamber's Rule 98 Decision in this case, the Chamber held that the elements of the crime of enslavement are as follows:

> (i) The Accused exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty; and
> (ii) The Accused intended to exercise the act of enslavement or acted in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur.

5564. para. 199: In determining whether or not enslavement has occurred, the Chamber is mindful of the following indicia of enslavement that have been identified by the ICTY in the Kunarac et al. case: "control of someone's movement, control of physical environment, psychological control, measures taken to prevent or deter escape, force, threat of force or coercion, duration, assertion of exclusivity, subjection to cruel treatment and abuse, control of sexuality and forced labour."[361]

5565. para. 200: The Chamber observes that the lack of consent of the victim is not an element to be proved by the Prosecution; although whether or not there was consent may be relevant from an evidentiary perspective.[362] The Chamber considers that "circumstances which render it impossible to express consent may be sufficient to presume the absence of consent."[363] Similarly, there is no requisite duration of the relationship between the Accused and the victim that must exist in order to establish enslavement. The duration may, however, be relevant in determining the quality of the relationship.[364]

5566. para. 201: We hold that the mens rea of the crime of enslavement consists of the intention to exercise the act of enslavement or to act in the reasonable knowledge that this was likely to occur. As the absence of consent is not an element of the offence, the knowledge on the part of the Accused of this absence of consent is not an element of the offence either.

5567. para. 202: Given the references to forced labour in the Indictment, the Chamber notes that not all labour by civilians during an armed conflict is prohibited – the prohibition is only against forced or involuntary labour. "What must be established is that the relevant persons had no real choice as to whether they would work."[365] Whether the labour was forced and constituted enslavement is a factual determination that must be made in light of the indicia of enslavement outlined above. However, the subjective belief of labourers that they were forced to work is not sufficient to establish lack of consent, but must be supported by objective evidence.[366]

5568. para. 203: The Chamber, like the ICTY Appeals Chamber before it, considers it relevant to quote from the Pohl case on the nature of enslavement:

> Slavery may exist even without torture. Slaves may be well fed, well clothed, and comfortably housed, but they are still slaves if without lawful process they are deprived of their freedom by forceful restraint. We might eliminate all proof of illtreatment, overlook the starvation, beatings, and other barbarous acts, but the admitted fact of slavery - compulsory uncompensated labour - would still remain. There is no such thing as benevolent slavery. Involuntary servitude, even if tempered by humane treatment, is still slavery.[367]

(iv) Pleading

a. Criminal acts and events - Pleading

d. CAH – Pleading

5572. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Pleading – CAH – paras. 448 - 449 [1628].

(v) Kono District – Enslavement

5574. para. 1321: The Prosecution alleges that "between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilian men, women and children, and took them to various locations outside the District, or to locations within the District such as AFRC/RUF camps, Tombodu, Koidu, Wondedu, Tomendeh. At these locations the civilians were used as forced labour, including domestic labour and as diamond miners in the Tombodu area."[2483]

a. Use of civilians for forced labour by AFRC/RUF forces – Kono District – Enslavement 5575. para. 1322: The Chamber recalls that in the period following the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998 and until March 1998, AFRC/RUF fighters, following daily orders, abducted civilians from several villages in Kono District with the intent to use them for forced labour, including the carrying of loads to and from locations, food-finding missions, and domestic labour.[2484] These civilians worked under coercion and fear that if they did not carry out their tasks, they would be killed. The civilians were not compensated for their work and did so against their will. The Chamber finds that the physical movement of civilians was controlled, that the use of violence and the threat of violence by armed AFRC/RUF fighters monitoring their labour amounts to a deprivation of liberty.

5576. para. 1323: The Chamber is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between February 1998 and March 1998 civilians were forced to work by AFRC/RUF fighters and to carry loads to and from different areas of Kono District. Consequently, the Chamber finds with respect to the forceful use of civilians to carry loads and perform other types of labour that all the essential elements of enslavement, a crime against humanity, have been established as charged in Count 13 of the Indictment.

b. Forced labour in RUF Camps – Kono District – Enslavement

5577. para. 1324: The Chamber has found that hundreds of civilians were detained in RUF camps throughout Kono District between February and December 1998.[2485] The Chamber concludes that the RUF had a planned and organised system in which civilians were intentionally forced to engage in various forms of forced labour throughout the District. Civilians were confined in 'camps' and used to mobilise arms, ammunition, food or any other loads according to the necessities and orders of the RUF, both within Kono District and between Kono and Kailahun Districts. The civilians were also forced into domestic labour or any work that was required by the rebels at their behest. Any produce from that labour would, in turn, become the property of the RUF and for their exclusive use.

5578. para. 1325: The RUF camps shifted location according to the front lines of the armed conflict and included Superman Ground, Wendedu and Kunduma. Those interned at these camps were not able to freely move outside the confines of the camp and were often told that this was for their own "protection". While some civilians did seek the camps for their own safety, the system of "protection" set up by the RUF and implemented by the G5 was intended to control the population, deny civilians of any freedom of movement, confine them to the RUF camps and use them as forced labour in furtherance of the RUF war efforts. The Chamber recalls the testimony of TF-071, who explained that the RUF's motivation to "protect" the civilians was based on keeping the civilians under RUF supervision so that their position was not revealed, and that the RUF would have the civilians believe that if they escaped they would meet certain death at the hands of the enemy. The Chamber is of the view that this fear-based manipulation was in furtherance of the RUF system of forced labour.

5579. para. 1326: The Chamber finds that the perpetrators intentionally exercised power over the civilians, who were guarded and supervised by armed fighters. The civilians were deprived of their liberty and forced to work under coercion and threat. Further, the Chamber finds that the civilians worked under oppressive conditions – they were treated as slaves, forced to work without proper compensation or food and, in the event that civilians refused or were unable to work, they were beaten or executed. The Chamber is thus satisfied that RUF rebels exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over these civilians.

5580. para. 1327: Consequently, the Chamber finds, with respect to forced labour in RUF camps, that all the elements of enslavement have been met, as charged under Count 13 of the Indictment.

c. Forced mining in Tombodu and throughout Kono District – Kono District – Enslavement

5581. para. 1328: The Chamber recalls its Factual Findings that from December 1998 until January 2000, which marks the end of the Indictment period for Count 13 in Kono District, hundreds of civilians were abducted and forced to work in mining sites in Tombodu and throughout Kono District.[2486] Civilians were guarded by armed fighters, who flogged or killed civilians for disobeying orders. The mistreatment of civilians ranged from transporting them in physical restraints such as ropes or chains to providing them with little or no food and forcing them to work naked. Diamonds were confiscated by the rebels and civilians were not compensated.

5582. para. 1329: The Chamber does not find credible the testimony of witnesses that no civilians were forced to mine in Kono District.[2487] Such assertions are inconsistent with the evidence, which we accept as reliable, that some civilians complained or attempted to hide; but civilians were not free to leave and checkpoints surrounded mining sites. Moreover, the Chamber is satisfied that for hundreds of civilians, genuine consent was not possible in the environment of violence and degradation existing in the Tombodu mining fields at the time.

5583. para. 1330: The Chamber finds that AFRC/RUF forces intentionally exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over these abductees. Accordingly, we find that the Prosecution has established beyond reasonable doubt that hundreds of civilians were enslaved in Tombodu, therefore constituting enslavement as charged in Count 13.

(vi) Kenema District – Enslavement

5584. para. 1096: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and physical violence (Counts 10 to 11) between about 25 May 1997 and about 19 February 1998, and the crime of enslavement (Count 13) between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, in various locations throughout Kenema District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).[2136]

5585. para. 1097: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraphs were committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Kenema District at the relevant time.[2137] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

5586. para. 1118: The Indictment alleges that between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, the AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field.[2155]

5587. para. 1119: The Chamber's Factual Findings concerning mining in Tongo Field contain ample evidence that the AFRC/RUF troops intentionally exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over civilians.[2156] Specifically, civilians were assembled and given orders to mine by AFRC/RUF Commanders, including by Bockarie. Civilians were forcibly captured from surrounding villages and brought to the mines, often in physical restraints such as ropes. Civilians were forced to labour in the presence of armed guards, who frequently beat or killed those who attempted to escape or committed other perceived breaches of the mining rules. Civilians were either not compensated at all for their work or given woefully insufficient compensation in the form of meagre food items. Civilians were treated cruelly through deprivation of food and medical assistance. Civilians were forced to work naked, enabling the guards to exercise psychological control over them. Civilians were not permitted to move freely on the mining sites, but rather were required to obtain permission.

5588. para. 1120: Although the absence of consent is not an element of the crime of enslavement, the Chamber finds that the conditions in which civilians worked at the mines cumulatively created an atmosphere of terror in which genuine consent was not possible. While the Chamber does not discount the possibility raised by the Sesay Defence that there may have been civilians who mined voluntarily, the Chamber does not accept as credible evidence that no civilians were forced to mine in Kenema District.[2157]

5589. para. 1121: Rather, the Chamber is satisfied from the totality of the evidence that AFRC/RUF forces intentionally deprived hundreds of civilians of their liberty in an environment characterised by systematic violence and coercion. The AFRC/RUF fighters in Tongo Field, through the conduct recounted in the Factual Findings, exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over civilians. The Chamber thus finds that these acts of forced mining by civilians constitute enslavement as charged in Count 13 in respect of Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field.

(vii) Kailahun District – Enslavement

5590. para. 1444: The Indictment charges the Accused in Kailahun District with Unlawful Killings (Counts 3 to 5) between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998 and with Sexual Violence (Counts 6 to 9) and Enslavement (Count 13) "[at] all times relevant to the Indictment."[2747] The Accused are also charged with Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) and Collective Punishments (Count 2).

5591. para. 1445: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the following acts was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[2748] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

5592. para. 1476: The Prosecution alleges that "[at] all times relevant to this Indictment captured civilian men, women and children were brought to various locations within the District and used as forced labour."[2768] The Prosecution defines 'forced labour' to include "domestic labour and use as diamond miners."[2769]

5593. para. 1477: In light of the wording of the Indictment, we consider that "at all times relevant to [the] Indictment" means from 30 November 1996[2770] to about 15 September 2000.[2771] As set out above in the Factual Findings for Kailahun District, the Chamber found that the acts described in the following paragraphs have been committed and are relevant for the determination of Legal Findings for Count 13 of the Indictment.[2772]

a. Forced farming – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5595. para. 1479: The Chamber finds that as of 30 November 1996 and to at least September 2000 the RUF had a planned and organised system in which civilians were intentionally forced to engage in various forms of forced farming throughout Kailahun District. This system operated in such a way that once civilians were abducted and brought to Kailahun District, they were screened by the G5 unit and organised by the Agricultural unit to work on the "government" farms established by the RUF. The Chamber is satisfied that in 1996 and 1998, two large "government" farms operated in Giema on which approximately 300 civilians were forced to work; that after the Junta period (February 1998) civilians were forced to work on a RUF "government" farms located in Benduma and Buedu; that, from 1998 to 1999, more civilians were abducted from various locations and forced to work on farms that were located in a forest called Togbabeni near Pendembu; that from 1997 to 2000 many women were intentionally forced by the G5 to engage in fishing and hunting in Talia;[2774] and that, from December 1999 to 2001, the RUF operated a farm in Pendembu under the supervision of the local G5. The Chamber also finds that the produce from the farms was taken by the G5 or S4 unit and handed to Gbao and other senior RUF officials, or taken as part of a forced subscription system, or simply confiscated from the civilians.

5596. para. 1480: The Chamber finds that the perpetrators intentionally exercised power over the civilians who were guarded and supervised by armed men. The civilians were deprived of their liberty, as evinced by the use of the 'pass' system, and held under coercion and threat. Further, the Chamber finds that the civilians at these farms worked under oppressive conditions – they were treated as slaves, forced to work without compensation or food, and, in the event that civilians refused to work, they were beaten or their property was confiscated. The Chamber also finds that from 1996 onwards, including the period covered by the Court's temporal jurisdiction, senior RUF officials including Gbao, Sesay and Bockarie also owned farms on which civilians were forced to work at gunpoint.

5597. para. 1481: The Chamber is of the view, in light of the above findings, that the Defence position that people volunteered to work at these farms, did so happily and were fed when they worked is untenable in the circumstances that we have found existed.

5598. para. 1482: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that at the relevant times, namely from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000, civilians were forced to work at farms situated in various locations around Kailahun District. The Chamber concludes that those civilians were equally deprived of their liberty and were forced to work against their will. Consequently, the Chamber finds with respect to forced farming crimesof enslavement, a crime against humanity, as charged in Count 13.

b. Enslavement of civilians to carry loads – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5599. para. 1483: The Chamber finds that at the relevant times, namely from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000, civilians under escort of RUF fighters were intentionally forced to carry loads such as palm oil, cocoa, coffee to and from different trading sites in Kailahun District.[2775] Similarly, civilians were forced to carry their produce, harvest or subscription to specified destinations, without compensation or payment. The Chamber is also satisfied that during that period of time the RUF intentionally forced civilians in Kailahun District to carry logistical materials, including ammunition, from Kailahun to Pendembu, a stretch of 17 miles, and across the Moa River to the front lines in Kono. The Chamber finds that the physical movement of the civilians was controlled, that the use of violence and the threat of violence by armed RUF fighters monitoring their labour amounts to a deprivation of liberty.

5600. para. 1484: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that at the relevant times, from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000, civilians were forced to work and carry loads to and from different areas of Kailahun District. The Chamber concludes that those civilians were equally deprived of their liberty and were forced to work against their will. Consequently, the Chamber finds with respect to the forceful use of civilians to carry loads that all the elements of enslavement, a crime against humanity, have been established for Kailahun District as charged in Count 13 of the Indictment.

c. Civilians forced to mine for diamonds – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5601. para. 1485: The Chamber finds that as of 30 November 1996 and to about 15 September 2000, the AFRC/RUF forced civilians to engage in diamond mining under the armed supervision of their fighters in various locations in Kailahun District.[2776] The Chamber recalls its finding that the mining and trading of diamonds was a vital source of revenue for the AFRC/RUF.[2777] The Chamber finds that the physical movement of the civilians was controlled, that the use of violence and the threat of violence by the RUF fighters monitoring their mining for diamonds amounts to a deprivation of liberty.

5602. para. 1486: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that at the relevant times, namely from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000, civilians were forced to mine for diamonds in different areas of Kailahun District. The Chamber concludes that those civilians were equally deprived of their liberty and were forced to work against their will. Consequently, the Chamber finds with respect to the forceful use of civilians to mine for diamonds that all the elements of enslavement, a crime against humanity, have been established for Kailahun District as charged in Count 13 of the Indictment.

d. Forced military training – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5603. para. 1487: The Chamber finds that between 30 November 1996 and 1998, captured civilians, including men, women and children, were forced by the RUF to engage in military training by the RUF at various training bases such as Bayama and Bunumbu.[2778] The Chamber is of the view that trainees could not escape from the training camps, and that, during the training process, many trainees died because they were subjected to beatings, or shot or died as a result of a fall from a "monkey bridge" onto barbed wire during training. Similarly, the Chamber concludes that the trainees were forced to undergo military training under the threat of physical violence, including death, and finds that it was a deprivation of liberty. The Chamber finds that the military training constitutes forced labour as it was a preparatory step to forcing these civilians to the front lines of the RUF's military efforts or to becoming the bodyguards of the RUF Commanders.

5604. para. 1488: The Chamber is therefore satisfied that from 30 November 1996 to 1998, civilians were forcibly trained for military purposes at Kailahun District. The Chamber concludes that those civilians were deprived of their liberty and is of the view that military training in these circumstances constitutes forced labour. Consequently, the Chamber finds with respect to forceful military training of civilians that all the elements of enslavement, a crime against humanity, have been established for Kailahun District as charged in Count 13 of the Indictment.

e. Other forms of Forced Labour – Kailahun District – Enslavement

5605. para. 1489: The Chamber is satisfied that in 1996 Bockarie ordered the construction of an airfield in Buedu, for which civilian labour was used. The Chamber finds, however, that it was not shown beyond reasonable doubt that the construction of this airstrip did in fact occur to completion and that, if so, it happened within the temporal jurisdiction of the Court; that is, after 30 November 1996.[2779] As a result, the Chamber declines to make a finding on this act.

(viii) Freetown and the Western Area – Enslavement

5607. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

5608. para. 1588: The Prosecution alleges that "between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, in particular as the AFRC were being driven out of Freetown and the Western Area, members of the AFRC abducted hundreds of civilians, including a large number of children, from various areas of Freetown and the Western Area, including Peacock Farm, Kissy and Calaba Town. These abducted civilians were used for forced labour."[3031] The Chamber recalls its finding in the Rule 98 Decision that the Prosecution did not adduce any evidence on the location of Peacock Farm.[3032]

of the expert testimony of TF1-296 regarding the rehabilitation of 90 children abducted during the Freetown attack, and that of TF1-081 who reported that 99% of the 1,168 patients he saw had been abducted, the "vast majority" from Freetown after the 6 January 1999 attack.[3034]

5610. para. 1590: The Chamber recalls the evidence of TF1-022 who on 22 January 1999 saw the rebels take with them many children and women.[3035] The Chamber has found that on 22 January 1999, TF1-023 and approximately 100 other civilians were abducted by rebels who sought to use them as human shields and restricted the civilians' movements.[3036] The Chamber has further found that TF1-029 and approximately 50 other civilians were abducted on 22 January 1999 by AFRC fighters and taken to Calaba Town for two weeks before being taken to Benguema, at which time the fighters abducted another 100 civilians.[3037] We have found that at least 300 civilians were taken to Benguema and ordered to carry looted items and perform household chores.[3038]

5611. para. 1591: The Chamber finds that through the abduction of civilians and their use as human shields, porters to carry looted items and captives to perform domestic chores, the rebels deprived the civilians of their liberty and exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over them. The Chamber therefore finds that the AFRC forces enslaved hundreds of civilians in Freetown and the Western Area, and these acts constitute enslavement as charged under Count 13 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kenema District

5615. para. 77: Sesay's contention that the failure of notice caused the Trial Chamber to commit an "error of law" such that it found, allegedly inconsistently, "that recruits [who] had been captured in Kono District were trained at [Yengema] base" and "that recruits from Kono and Bunumbu base were trained at Yengema"[162] appears to be an alleged error of fact rather than of law. Even so, his argument is misplaced. The Trial Chamber found that the RUF training base was moved in December 1998 from Bunumbu, Kailahun District to Yengema, Kono District and that civilians from both Bunumbu in Kailahun and from Kono were trained at Yengema.[163]

(ii) Kono District

5616. para. 67: In relation to enslavement at Yengema in Kono District, the Trial Chamber found that "Sesay had actual knowledge of the enslavement of civilians at Yengema due to his visits to the base and the fact that he received reports pertaining to its operation. The Chamber therefore [found] that Sesay knew that an unknown number of civilians were enslaved there between December 1998 and January 2000."[146]

5617. para. 77: Sesay's contention that the failure of notice caused the Trial Chamber to commit an "error of law" such that it found, allegedly inconsistently, "that recruits [who] had been captured in Kono District were trained at [Yengema] base" and "that recruits from Kono and Bunumbu base were trained at Yengema"[162] appears to be an alleged error of fact rather than of law. Even so, his argument is misplaced. The Trial Chamber found that the RUF training base was moved in December 1998 from Bunumbu, Kailahun District to Yengema, Kono District and that civilians from both Bunumbu in Kailahun and from Kono were trained at Yengema.[163]

5618. para. 146: Kallon argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously found that he abducted approximately 400 civilians in Makeni in Bombali District in 1999-2000 and sent them to Kono. He argues this event is outside the scope of the Indictment because (i) Makeni is in Bombali District, not Kono District; (ii) the Indictment limits the time-frame for abductions in Bombali District to "[b]etween about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998"; and (iii) the dates of abduction are after the time-frame provided in the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief for enslavement in Kono District.[283]

5619. para. 149: Kallon submits, in part, that his convictions for enslavement in Kono District fall outside the timeframe for which he was provided notice in the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 481 of the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief states that AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilians and took them to various locations, both within and outside Kono District, where they were used as forced labour "[b]etween 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998," whereas paragraph 71 of the Indictment, to which paragraph 481 of the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief expressly refers, alleges the crimes took place "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 to January 2000." The Appeals Chamber recalls that the "primary accusatory instrument" is the Indictment[285] and the crimes for which Kallon was convicted fall within the period alleged therein. The pre-trial brief serves the purpose of addressing the relevant factual and legal issues by developing the Prosecution strategy at trial. The pre-trial brief is relevant to the case only insofar as it develops such strategy in accordance with the Indictment.[286]

5622. para. 428: As an introductory remark, the Appeals Chamber notes that the crimes in Kono District were found to have been committed after the ECOMOG intervention on 14 February 1998 ousted the AFRC/RUF Junta from Freetown. The Trial Chamber found that AFRC/RUF troops launched a failed attack on Kono District in the second half of February, but that around 1 March 1998 they get to capture Koidu Town.[1066] After this successful attack, the AFRC and RUF were found to have organised an integrated command structure in Koidu Town, which included the JCE members Johnny Paul Koroma, Sesay, Superman and Bazzy.[1067] The Trial Chamber found that in early April 1998 ECOMOG troops forced the AFRC/RUF to retreat from Koidu Town.[1068]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

5623. para. 67: In relation to enslavement at Yengema in Kono District, the Trial Chamber found that "Sesay had actual knowledge of the enslavement of civilians at Yengema due to his visits to the base and the fact that he received reports pertaining to its operation. The Chamber therefore [found] that Sesay knew that an unknown number of civilians were enslaved there between December 1998 and January 2000."[146]

5624. para. 69: The Trial Chamber found that Sesay's mens rea as a superior with respect to these crimes was "pleaded explicitly in paragraph 39 of the Indictment and incorporated into each Count by paragraph 40 [and therefore Sesay's] knowledge of the crimes and his failure to prevent or punish those crimes ... is adequately pleaded in the Indictment."[151] Paragraph 39 of the Indictment states:

> In addition, or alternatively, pursuant to Article 6.3. of the Statute, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, while holding positions of superior responsibility and exercising effective control over their subordinates, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes referred to in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute. Each Accused is responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates in that he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and each Accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[152]

5625. para. 70: The case law of the ICTY Appeals Chamber suggests that there are at least two ways in which the mens rea for superior responsibility can be adequately pleaded in an indictment.[153] In the Blaškić Appeal Judgment, the ICTY Appeals Chamber summarized these possible approaches as follows:

> With respect to the mens rea, there are two ways in which the relevant state of mind may be pleaded: (i) either the specific state of mind itself should be pleaded as a material fact, in which case, the facts by which that material fact is to be established are ordinarily matters of evidence, and need not be pleaded; or (ii) the evidentiary facts from which the state of mind is to be inferred, should be pleaded.[154]

5626. para. 71: The Appeals Chamber notes that the form of pleading in the Indictment is consistent with the first formulation, and endorses the view that this is sufficient in the circumstances of some cases. Sesay has not offered any argument that specific acts or conduct relied upon by the Trial Chamber to infer his mens rea constituted material facts that should have been pleaded in the Indictment. The facts relied upon by the Trial Chamber are related to the functions of the RUF command, the nature of which was sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment.[155] The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this part of Sesay's submissions.

5627. para. 72: In relation to enslavement of civilians at the military base at Yengema, Sesay argues that he lacked notice of the identity of his alleged subordinates and what measures he was alleged to have failed to take to prevent or punish them.156 The Trial Chamber found that (i) "RUF rebels enslaved an unknown number of civilians at the military training base at Yengema between December 1998 and January 2000";[157] (ii) Sesay was a RUF superior Commander during this period, and that he exercised effective control over RUF subordinates at Yengema;[158] (iii) the training Commander at Yengema reported to Sesay;[159] (iv) Sesay "had actual knowledge of the enslavement of civilians at Yengema due to his visits to the base and the fact that he received reports pertaining to its operation;"[160] (v) Sesay actively monitored the prolongation of the commission of enslavement; and (vi) there was no evidence that he attempted to prevent or punish it.[161]

> 21. Between early 1993 and early 1997, ISSA HASSAN SESAY occupied the position of RUF Area Commander. Between about April 1997 and December 1999, ISSA HASSAN SESAY held the position of the Battle Group Commander of the RUF, subordinate only to the RUF Battle Field Commander, SAM BOCKARIE aka MOSQUITO aka MASKITA, the leader of the RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH and the leader of the AFRC, JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA.
>
> 22. During the Junta regime, ISSA HASSAN SESAY was a member of the Junta governing body. From early 2000 to about August 2000, ISSA HASSAN SESAY served as the Battle Field Commander of the RUF, subordinate only to the leader of the RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH, and the leader of the AFRC, JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA.
> 23. FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH has been incarcerated in the Republic of Sierra Leone from about May 2000 until about 29 July 2003. From about May 2000 until about 10 March 2003, by order of FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH, > ISSA HASSAN SESAY directed all RUF activities in the Republic of Sierra Leone.

5629. para. 74: The above paragraphs, in addition to paragraphs 34, 39 and 44 of the Indictment indicate the subordinates subject to Sesay's command were fighters of the RUF and AFRC/RUF forces. Paragraph 34 provides that Sesay "exercised authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces." Paragraph 39 alleges that "while holding positions of superior responsibility and exercising effective control over [his] subordinates," Sesay is "individually criminally responsible for the crimes referred to in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute." It further alleges that he "is responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates in that he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and each Accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof." Paragraph 44 provides that "[m]embers of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82 and charged in Counts 3 through 14."

5630. para. 75: In relation to the specific crimes at the military training camp at Yengema, paragraph 40 incorporates the previous paragraphs. Paragraph 71 particularises the charge of enslavement in relation to Kono District, and states:

> 71. Between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilian men, women and children, and took them to various locations outside the District, or to locations within the District such as AFRC/RUF camps, Tombodu, Koidu, Wondedu, Tomendeh. At these locations the civilians were used as forced labour, including domestic labour and as diamond miners in the Tombodu area;
> By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below: Count 13: Enslavement, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.c. of the Statute.

5631. para. 76: These paragraphs demonstrate that Sesay's command position and his relationship with his subordinates were pleaded at all the relevant times. They further show that he was alleged not to have taken the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or to punish the crimes alleged. The manner in which these material facts were to be proven was a matter of evidence and thus not for pleading. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, dismisses Sesay's sub-ground of appeal concerning the pleading of his relationship to his subordinates.

5633. para. 91: Sesay argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in concluding that he was given adequate notice that he was charged for acts of enslavement other than "domestic labour and use as diamond miners" under Count 13 of the Indictment.[175] For relief, Sesay requests the Appeals Chamber to dismiss the charges under Count 13 concerning acts of forced military training, forced farming and forced carrying of loads.[176]

5634. para. 92: Given the vagueness of Sesay's complaint, the Appeals Chamber will only answer the general question of whether Sesay lacked notice of the criminal acts that form the basis of his conviction for enslavement when it was only pleaded that he used forced labour as enslavement. The question on appeal is whether the particular acts of forced labour amount to "criminal acts which form the basis for a conviction" such that they are material facts and should have been pleaded in the Indictment, or if they are part of the evidence by which the Prosecution intended to prove the material fact of forced labour as enslavement. The Appeals Chamber notes that the offence charged under Count 13 is enslavement, not forced labour. In the present case, forced labour is the criminal act which the Prosecution alleges constituted enslavement. This pleading provided the particularisation that the forms of enslavement were limited to acts of forced labour amounting to the exercise of a power attaching to the right of ownership over a person. The Appeals Chamber holds that this pleading of the underlying acts of enslavement provided Sesay sufficient notice of the charge.

5635. para. 93: Our holding is supported by the fact that enslavement is not an umbrella crime, such as the broadly defined crimes of persecution or other inhumane acts, for which the Prosecution is required to specify the conduct it will rely upon to prove the offence.[178] Forced labour is also not charged here as a violation of the law of armed conflict, in relation to which the ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that "the military character or purpose of the alleged incidents of forced labour also needed to be pleaded as a material fact."[179] In this case, as noted above, the charge is for enslavement as a crime against humanity, and the acts of forced labour must indicate the exercise of a power attaching to the right of ownership over a person. The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that the pleading of acts of forced labour as enslavement provided notice of the underlying criminal acts with sufficient specificity to enable Sesay to prepare his defence.

5636. para. 132: Kallon challenges the pleading of his liability as a superior for crimes in Kono District. The Appeals Chamber notes that he was convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute of the following crimes in Kono District:

> (...) (v) Enslavement (Count 13) in relation to events in unspecified locations in Kono District;

5637. para. 133: Kallon makes general submissions that he lacked notice that he was alleged to have superior responsibility for crimes committed in Kono District, but he fails to provide substantiating arguments.[257] His submissions are at odds with a plain reading of the Indictment. It charges that Kallon "was a senior officer and Commander in the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces,"[258] and that when he was a "Battle Field Inspector, … he was subordinate only to the RUF Battle Group Commander, the Battlefield Commander, the leader of the RUF … and the leader of the AFRC."[259] Kallon was BFI at the times relevant to his convictions for crimes in Kono.[260] The Indictment further charges that in his position, Kallon "exercised authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces"[261] and that he "is responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates in that he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and … failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof."[262] The Indictment expressly lists locations in Kono District as those at which the crimes charged under Counts 6-9 and 13 were committed[263] and states that by his "acts or omissions in relation to these events, … MORRIS KALLON …, pursuant to … Article 6.3. of the Statute, [is] individually criminally responsible for" the crimes charged under Counts 6-9 and 13.[264]

5638. para.134: In relation to sexual violence, forced marriages and acts of terrorism at Kissi Town in Kono District, Kallon additionally argues that his subordinates at Kissi Town "were never sufficiently or at all particularized."[265] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that in addition to the pleading of Kallon's superior position, discussed above, the Indictment states that the crimes were committed by "members of AFRC/RUF" at "Kissi-town (or Kissi Town)… and AFRC/RUF camps such as … Kissi-town (or Kissi Town) camp."[266] The Indictment, therefore, puts Kallon on notice of the charge that ARFC/RUF members who were his subordinates at Kissi Town committed the crimes charged in Counts 6-9. Kallon fails to argue how this pleading did not sufficiently identify his subordinates.

5639. para. 149: Kallon submits, in part, that his convictions for enslavement in Kono District fall outside the timeframe for which he was provided notice in the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 481 of the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief states that AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilians and took them to various locations, both within and outside Kono District, where they were used as forced labour "[b]etween 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998," whereas paragraph 71 of the Indictment, to which paragraph 481 of the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief expressly refers, alleges the crimes took place "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 to January 2000." The Appeals Chamber recalls that the "primary accusatory instrument" is the Indictment[285] and the crimes for which Kallon was convicted fall within the period alleged therein. The pre-trial brief serves the purpose of addressing the relevant factual and legal issues by developing the Prosecution strategy at trial. The pre-trial brief is relevant to the case only insofar as it develops such strategy in accordance with the Indictment.[286]

5640. para. 150: In light of the fact that the timeframe alleged in the Indictment includes the period of time during which the acts for which he was convicted were perpetrated, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Indictment was not defective in this regard and Kallon did not suffer prejudice.

5642. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

(iii) Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose - Enslavement

5645. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose – paras. 377 -378 [754].

5646. para. 361: The Trial Chamber found that the Common Criminal Purpose of the JCE was furthered in Bo District through (i) forced mining activity; (ii) the use by the AFRC and RUF of the levers of State power in an attempt to destroy any support within the civilian population for the Kamajors; and (iii) attacks in June 1997 on Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun.[871]

5647. para. 364: The forced mining found by the Trial Chamber to have furthered the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo District consisted of the alluvial diamond mining in Kenema and Kono Districts.[879] Sesay does not dispute that this activity, once it commenced, did further the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo. His position is that it could not have done so before August 1997. However, the Trial Chamber did not find otherwise. In particular, no conviction was entered against Sesay based on these forced mining activities before August 1997.[880] On its own, the finding that diamond mining in Tongo Field in Kenema District did not commence until August 1997 does not render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the JCE included Kenema District from the inception of the JCE.[881] Sesay thus fails to show an error.

5648. para. 365: The Trial Chamber did not expressly link its finding regarding the AFRC/RUF's use of "the levers of State power" to any particular attempt to destroy civilian support for the Kamajors in Bo District.[882] Yet Sesay's present argument neither disputes the veracity of this finding nor does he explain how the alleged fact that it is "meaningless" constitutes an error leading to a miscarriage of justice.[883] His argument is therefore rejected.

5649. para. 366: Turning to the attacks on Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun in June 1997, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not explicitly find that they were planned by members of the JCE. However, the basis on which the Trial Chamber found that crimes committed during these attacks were committed in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose is clear from other parts of the Trial Judgment, for instance, the following finding:

> The temporal and geographic proximity of the various attacks [including those on Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun], and their similar modus operandi, with civilians raped and killed, houses razed to the ground and property looted, establishes that these were not isolated incidents but rather a central feature of a concerted campaign against civilians.[884]

5650. para. 367: Although made in relation to the chapeau requirements of crimes against humanity, these findings are equally important to the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the JCE. Indeed, in those latter findings, it held that "the conduct of [AFRC/RUF joint] operations demonstrates that the Junta intended, through wholly disproportionate means, to suppress all opposition to their regime"[885] and that the "widespread and systematic nature of the crimes, in particular the attacks on Bo and the forced labour in Kenema District, in which the RUF was engaged indicate that such conduct was a deliberate policy of the AFRC/RUF."[886] Moreover, "the AFRC/RUF alliance intended through the spread of extreme fear … to dominate and subdue the civilian population in order to exercise power and control over captured territory."[887] The attacks on Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun in June 1997, all of which included acts intended to spread extreme fear among the civilian population,[888] fall squarely within this finding. The parts of Witness TF1-054's testimony Sesay invokes for his claim to the contrary neither support his allegation that a delegation was sent to Gerihun before the attack,[889] nor render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's reliance on other parts of TF1-054's testimony for its findings on this attack.[890]

5651. para. 368: In addition, the Trial Chamber found that Bockarie, himself a JCE member,[891] led the attack on Sembehun.[892] Sesay's assertion that Bockarie acted on his own volition in this regard is unpersuasive.[893] First, while claiming an absence of findings on Bockarie's interaction with other JCE members at this time, Sesay fails to account for the Trial Chamber's holdings that it was Bockarie who instructed Superman to move with his troops to Freetown after Sankoh's public order to unite with the AFRC after the coup[894] and that Bockarie became a member of the Supreme Council, the highest decision-making body in the Junta regime.[895] Second, Sesay refers to TF1-008's testimony that Bockarie "said that he was the one who has captured this place, that this place was under his control."[896] Simply citing this evidence, Sesay fails to show how the Trial Chamber's assessment thereof was erroneous,[897] in particular given that Bockarie when entering Sembehun "identified himself as a member of the RUF."[898] Third, the fact that Bockarie pillaged

Le 800,000 in Sembehun[899] supports rather than refutes that such conduct was contemplated as a means by the JCE members to further the Common Criminal Purpose.[900] Bockarie himself being a JCE member, it is not determinative whether the money stayed with him. Lastly, because pillage (Count 14) constituted a means to further the Common Criminal Purpose notwithstanding whether it amounted to terrorism, Sesay's argument that this incident fell beyond the Common Criminal Purpose fails.

5652. para. 369: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Sesay's Ground 26 fails to demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's findings on the means employed to achieve the objective of the JCE in Bo District. Sesay's Ground 26 is dismissed in its entirety.

(vii) Kenema District - Enslavement

5656. para. 355: Sesay also disputes that the Supreme Council itself was involved in crime. The Appeals Chamber notes that, while the Supreme Council "discussed … the security of the Junta; revenue generation; the resolution of conflicts between the AFRC and the RUF; and harassment of civilians,"[848] the Trial Chamber also inferred from the "widespread and systematic nature of the crimes, in particular the attacks on Bo and the forced labour in Kenema District" that such conduct

"was a deliberate policy of the ARFC/RUF" that must have been "initiated by the Supreme Council."[849] Contrary to Sesay's claim,[850] the basis for that inference was sufficiently supported by evidence.[851]

5657. para. 356: Indeed, Sesay himself recognises the finding that the Supreme Council was involved in the planning and organisation of the enslavement at Tongo Fields in Kenema from August 1997. However, he argues, the only crimes committed before that point in time were the terror attacks in Bo in June 1997, and so there were no crimes on the basis of which the Trial Chamber could infer the existence of a JCE.[852] However, although the enslavement at Tongo Fields commenced in August 1997,[853] it is evident from the Trial Chamber's findings that the "planned and … systematic policy of the Junta" which devised the large scale enslavement and implemented it "pursuant to a centralised system" must have started much earlier.[854] Indeed, "[w]ithin a week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of" Kenema Town.[855] Moreover, whether or not it amounted to acts of terrorism,[856] sexual violence in Kailahun was a means to achieve the AFRC/RUF objective throughout the Junta period.[857] The fact that the victims of the forced marriages were initially captured before the Indictment period does not detract from the finding that these crimes were "for the benefit … of the Junta" throughout their continuous commission.[858]

5658. para. 364: The forced mining found by the Trial Chamber to have furthered the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo District consisted of the alluvial diamond mining in Kenema and Kono Districts.[879] Sesay does not dispute that this activity, once it commenced, did further the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo. His position is that it could not have done so before August 1997. However, the Trial Chamber did not find otherwise. In particular, no conviction was entered against Sesay based on these forced mining activities before August 1997.[880] On its own, the finding that diamond mining in Tongo Field in Kenema District did not commence until August 1997 does not render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the JCE included Kenema District from the inception of the JCE.[881] Sesay thus fails to show an error.

5659. para. 367: Although made in relation to the chapeau requirements of crimes against humanity, these findings are equally important to the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the JCE. Indeed, in those latter findings, it held that "the conduct of [AFRC/RUF joint] operations demonstrates that the Junta intended, through wholly disproportionate means, to suppress all opposition to their regime"[885] and that the "widespread and systematic nature of the crimes, in particular the attacks on Bo and the forced labour in Kenema District, in which the RUF was engaged indicate that such conduct was a deliberate policy of the AFRC/RUF."[886] Moreover, "the AFRC/RUF alliance intended through the spread of extreme fear … to dominate and subdue the civilian population in order to exercise power and control over captured territory."[887] The attacks on Tikonko, Sembehun and Gerihun in June 1997, all of which included acts intended to spread extreme fear among the civilian population,[888] fall squarely within this finding. The parts of Witness TF1-054's testimony Sesay invokes for his claim to the contrary neither support his allegation that a delegation was sent to Gerihun before the attack,[889] nor render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's reliance on other parts of TF1-054's testimony for its findings on this attack.[890]

5660. para. 370: The Trial Chamber found that acts of unlawful killings, physical violence and enslavement were committed in Kenema District, some of which amounted to terror and collective punishment.[901] It found that these crimes fell within time period of the Junta and that the common plan and plurality of person remained the same.[902]

5661. para. 374: In his first argument, Sesay essentially submits that the low number of crimes committed in furtherance of the Common Criminal Purpose in Kenema District between 25 May 1997 and 11 August 1997 and in Kenema Town between 25 May 1997 and late January 1998 negates the existence of a JCE covering these areas.[909]

5662. para. 375: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber could not determine the specific dates of each crime committed in Kenema Town during the Junta period.[910] It therefore remains unclear whether Sesay is correct that a low number of crimes were committed in Kenema from the onset of the Junta on 25 May 1997 until the commencement of the forced mining activities in August 1997. However, even assuming that Sesay is correct in that regard, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this renders unreasonable the Trial Chamber's finding that a JCE existed which encompassed "the territory of Sierra Leone", i.e. also Kenema District.[911] While evidence of the number of crimes committed in a certain area may be relevant to the assessment of whether a JCE existed, it is not determinative thereof. The Trial Chamber was entitled to consider, as it did, factors such as the geographic proximity of various crimes, including those in Kenema, their similar modus operandi[912] and their widespread and systematic nature[913] in its assessment of that question. Sesay's present submission does not challenge this assessment. In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls that although the forced mining in Tongo Fields did not commence until August 1997,[914] it is clear from the Trial Chamber's findings that the planned and systematic policy of the Junta and the centralised system pursuant to which this large scale enslavement was implemented must have been devised much earlier.[915] Indeed, "[w]ithin a week of the coup of 25 May 1997, RUF rebels and the military Junta were in full control of" Kenema Town.[916]

5663. para. 376: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Sesay fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the JCE extended to Kenema District from the onset of the Junta.

5664. para. 379: This evidence therefore does not render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's balanced conclusion that, even though Bockarie was "disillusioned with the RUF's limited role in the AFRC government" and left for Kenema, and even though "this strained the relationship between the two factions," the cooperation between the ARFC and RUF leadership continued.[927] As to Bockarie's own continued cooperation with members of the JCE, the Trial Chamber found that he was involved in the diamond mining in Tongo Field in Kenema, where the AFRC/RUF Secretariat, headed by Gullit and Sergeant Junior, reported directly to him.[928] Gullit was SAJ Musa's representative at the mines.[929] The proceeds from the diamonds, one of the AFRC/RUF regime's major sources of income, were delivered to Bockarie.[930] Sesay's challenges to these findings have been dismissed elsewhere.[931] His additional reference to temporally unspecific and vague evidence that "things were going beyond control" as a result of unequal weapons distribution between the AFRC and RUF fails to support his claim that Bockarie withdrew cooperation with the AFRC for that reason.[932]

5665. para. 380: Sesay refers to evidence that the AFRC and RUF kept separate command structures in Kenema.[933] This evidence, which was cited by the Trial Chamber in its analysis of the AFRC/RUF organisation in Kenema,[934] does not detract from the finding that the two groups collaborated in Kenema.[935] Moreover, in none of these arguments does Sesay juxtapose the evidence he invokes with the evidence the Trial Chamber relied on, or otherwise attempt to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber could not reasonably have preferred the latter evidence over that which he proffers.

5667. para. 383: Sesay submits that the AFRC and RUF operated separate forced mining operations in Tongo Field and therefore that these operations do not evidence a common criminal purpose between the two groups.[942] In support of this submission Sesay relies on the evidence given by TF1-045 and TF1-371, but, save for one exception, he either merely offers an alternative reading of this evidence without explaining why the Trial Chamber's assessment thereof was unreasonable, or ignores other evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber.

5668. para. 384: The one exception concerns the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-371's testimony to find that the Supreme Council decided to appoint senior members to supervise alluvial mining in Kono and Kenema.[943] Sesay argues that TF1-371 testified that Koroma, and not the Supreme Council, took this decision.[944] The Appeals Chamber notes that, while TF1-371 did testify as argued,[945] this evidence is not necessarily inconsistent with the impugned finding, because Koroma was the Chairman of the Supreme Council and significant decisions were made by himself, SAJ Musa and certain "other Honourables."[946] More importantly, the fact that Koroma made the decision in question does not detract from other evidence, for example, that the forced mining in Kenema was planned and organised in the Supreme Council,[947] on which the Trial Chamber relied to find that the RUF and the AFRC cooperated in respect of Tongo Fields.[948] Because Sesay's present argument does not address this evidence he fails to demonstrate an error.

5669. para. 385: The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Sesay does not show an error in the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the criminal means employed to achieve the objective in Kenema District.

5670. para. 490: In respect of the crimes committed in Kenema District, the Trial Chamber found in paragraph 2060 of the Trial Judgment that

> [T]he Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved under Counts 3 to 5 (unlawful killings), Count 11 (physical violence) and Count 13 (enslavement) which he did not intend as a means of achieving the common purpose, might be committed by other members of joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control.

5672. See above: Chapter 2 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Existence of a widespread and systematic attack – Kenema District – paras. 637, 642 – 644 [1711].

5673. para. 671: The Trial Chamber found that AFRC/RUF rebels forced an unknown number of civilians to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field, Kenema District between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, and found that this constituted enslavement and an act of terrorism.[1707] It held that Sesay incurred JCE liability for these crimes.[1708]

5674. para. 674: Sesay submits that the Trial Chamber erred in disregarding certain exculpatory evidence.[1720] He essentially argues that this evidence was exculpatory because it demonstrated that the mining in Tongo Field was not forced. This is a mere reiteration of Sesay's position at trial, which the Trial Chamber, contrary to his assertion, expressly considered. In fact, the Trial Chamber "[did] not discount the possibility raised by the Sesay Defence that there may have been civilians who mined voluntarily."[1721] However, the Trial Chamber did "not accept as credible evidence that no civilians were forced to mine in Kenema District."[1722] That finding was underpinned by numerous findings of fact.[1723]

5675. para. 675: In his Appeal, Sesay he argues that "every" civilian went on strike following a shooting at Cyborg Pit, and not merely "a group" of them, as found by the Trial Chamber, adding that Bockarie "requested forgiveness" and "begged" that the mining continue.[1724] This argument, even if true, does not by itself exclude a finding of enslavement or account for the Trial Chamber's finding that the civilians were detained and beaten during the strike and that another massacre followed some days later, and therefore fails to show that the labour was not forced.[1725]

5677. para. 677: Turning to Sesay's challenge to the number of victims,[1730] the Appeals Chamber notes that, although the Trial Chamber found that "up to 500 civilians in Tongo Field" worked in the mining sites between August and December 1997, it actually convicted him for the enslavement of "an unknown number of civilians" forced to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field.[1731] Sesay fails to allege how an error in finding that "500 civilians," as opposed to 200, 300 or 400 as allegedly testified by the witnesses he refers to, were enslaved in Tongo Fields invalidates this conviction. This submission is dismissed.

(viii) Kono District - Enslavement

5684. para. 364: The forced mining found by the Trial Chamber to have furthered the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo District consisted of the alluvial diamond mining in Kenema and Kono Districts.[879] Sesay does not dispute that this activity, once it commenced, did further the Common Criminal Purpose in Bo. His position is that it could not have done so before August 1997. However, the Trial Chamber did not find otherwise. In particular, no conviction was entered against Sesay based on these forced mining activities before August 1997.[880] On its own, the finding that diamond mining in Tongo Field in Kenema District did not commence until August 1997 does not render unreasonable the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the JCE included Kenema District from the inception of the JCE.[881] Sesay thus fails to show an error.

5685. para. 384: The one exception concerns the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-371's testimony to find that the Supreme Council decided to appoint senior members to supervise alluvial mining in Kono and Kenema.[943] Sesay argues that TF1-371 testified that Koroma, and not the Supreme Council, took this decision.[944] The Appeals Chamber notes that, while TF1-371 did testify as argued,[945] this evidence is not necessarily inconsistent with the impugned finding, because Koroma was the Chairman of the Supreme Council and significant decisions were made by himself, SAJ Musa and certain "other Honourables."[946] More importantly, the fact that Koroma made the decision in question does not detract from other evidence, for example, that the forced mining in Kenema was planned and organised in the Supreme Council,[947] on which the Trial Chamber relied to find that the RUF and the AFRC cooperated in respect of Tongo Fields.[948] Because Sesay's present argument does not address this evidence he fails to demonstrate an error.

5687. Regarding Sesay's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kono District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Sesay – paras.624, 627 – 634 [7658].

5689. para. 691: Sesay's first argues that the Trial Chamber disregarded TF1-304's evidence that the mining in Tombodu did not start in 1999, but instead, that it started between March and April 2000.[1775] He specifically impugns the findings at paragraph 1255 of the Trial Judgment, which concern events relating to mining in Tombodu that, the Trial Chamber found, took place "in April 1999." The Trial Chamber relied on TF1-304's testimony-in-chief for these findings.[1776] Sesay correctly notes that, when cross-examined on when the mining commenced, the witness repeatedly stated it started in 2000.[1777] The latter evidence, if accepted, would place the mining in Tombodu largely outside the timeframe pleaded for the relevant charges in the Indictment.[1778]

5690. para. 692: The Appeals Chamber, however, is not satisfied that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on TF1-304's testimony-in-chief to find that the mining activities described in paragraph 1255 of the Trial Judgment took place in April 1999. The reason is that a comparison of other parts of TF1-304's testimony with key events in the case demonstrates that TF1-304's chronological description of events corresponds with other findings of the Trial Chamber. TF1-304 testified that Junta forces attacked Tombodu in March 1998,[1779] which is consistent with the finding that the AFRC/RUF attacked Kono on or about March 1998.[1780] After the RUF attack on Tombodu, TF1-304 fled for Guinea and returned to Tombodu in February 1999, at which point in time the RUF was in Tombodu.[1781] This evidence corresponds with the Trial Chamber's finding that, after the RUF re-captured Koidu Town on 16 December 1998,[1782] Kono District remained largely under RUF control throughout the Indictment period.[1783] While in Tombodu, TF1-304 continued, around March 1999 he was forced by the rebels to retrieve vehicles from the bush,[1784] and carried luggage for them and performed other tasks.[1785] TF1-304 testified that "when we ceased carrying the luggages [sic]" diamond mining began when Officer Med came in April 1999.[1786] Sesay's reference to the testimony of TF1-071 does not support his contention that Officer Med first arrived in Tombodu in 2000; at most, this evidence merely places Officer Med in Tombodu at that time, but it is silent on when he arrived.[1787] His additional reference to the testimony of TF1-012 is equally unpersuasive.[1788] Sesay's challenge to the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-304 in paragraph 1255 is therefore rejected.

5691. para. 693: Next, Sesay challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of TF1-077. The Trial Chamber found that TF1-077 was "mistaken about the year" when testifying to being captured in Koidu Town in December 1999 and then sent to Tombodu to mine, since the witness testified that this incident occurred during the recapture of Koidu, which took place in December 1998.[1789] Sesay essentially argues that the Trial Chamber's interpretation is contrary to TF1-077's pre-trial statement, that the witness testified that Officer Med, who allegedly arrived in Tombodu in 2000, was among his capturers, and that the witness mined until disarmament, which did not occur in Kono during 1999.[1790] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Sesay's arguments. First, Sesay does not address why the Trial Chamber was unreasonable to rely on the witness's reference to the recapture of Koidu, as opposed to other events, to find that the witness was mistaken about the year. Second, as already noted, TF1-071 did not testify when Officer Med arrived in Tombodu in 2000. In fact, TF1-071 indicated that diamond mining by hand occurred in Tombodu from 1998.[1791] Third, the Trial Chamber's interpretation that TF1-077 was mistaken about the year is consistent with TF1-304's testimony in examination-in-chief that the mining in Tombodu began in 1999. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied on this basis that the Trial Chamber's impugned finding was reasonable. Sesay's argument is rejected.

5692. para. 694: Sesay correctly notes that while the Trial Chamber limited its legal findings on Count 13 in Kono District between December 1998 and January 2000 to holding that enslavement was committed in Tombodu,[1792] it nonetheless held him responsible for planning enslavement in mines in "Tombodu and throughout Kono District."[1793] It provided no reasons for this addition to the scope of Sesay's liability. The Appeals Chamber finds that this constitutes an error of law. The error invalidates the verdict insofar as Sesay was convicted for planning enslavement between December 1998 and January 2000 in parts of Kono District other than Tombodu. This part of Sesay's appeal is granted. The Appeals Chamber will consider any implications of this finding on sentence.

5693. para. 695: In remaining parts, Sesay's complaint about a lack of reasoned opinion is confined to the Trial Chamber's introductory findings providing an "overview" of the mining process in Kono District between December 1998 and January 2000 and its findings on "government" mining sites in Kono.[1794] He does not, however, address the Trial Chamber's findings on the mining in Tombodu, which he was convicted for having planned and which is challenged under his present ground of appeal.[1795] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber was required only to make findings on those facts which were essential to the determination of Sesay's guilt on Count 13.[1796]

5694. para. 696: Moreover, Sesay attempts to support his position by an incomplete and selective reading of the findings and alleges contradictions therein where there are none. For instance, he avers that the Trial Chamber failed to address his "real defence" that there was no organised system of enslavement in Kono, but ignores its findings showing precisely such a system.[1797] That the Trial Chamber found there was such a system in spite of his position that there was none, does not establish that the Trial Chamber failed to address his "real defence." He also argues without support that the Trial Chamber's finding that "[c]ivilians would go to the surrounding villages on the weekends to find food and would then return to work" contradicts the findings that "[c]ivilians who refused to mine were beaten" and "were constantly supervised by armed men [and so] there was no possibility of escape."[1798] Similarly, he fails to explain how the finding indicating that some civilians may have been "willing volunteers" detracts from the findings that other civilians were "captured and brought forcefully to mining sites … and forced to work at gunpoint."[1799] The findings that Sesay points to are neither legally contradictory in view of the law of enslavement nor factually contradictory in the context of the Trial Chamber's findings as a whole. Contrary to Sesay's contention, then, the Trial Chamber did not err in failing to explain these "contradictions." In this regard, Sesay alleges an error of fact, arguing that TF1-367 testified that some of the 200 to 300 civilians captured and forced to work at Kaisambo volunteered and that the civilians were not forced to return, but fails to avert to the evidence supporting the finding that civilians who refused to mine were beaten.[1800] Further relevant indicia of enslavement is found in the holdings that the "conditions for the hundreds of civilians forced to mine were poor; they were neither paid nor given adequate housing, food or medical treatment" and "they were constantly supervised by armed men."[1801]

5695. para. 698: The Appeals Chamber notes that Sesay's claims regarding TF1-367's "lies" are in effect submissions that TF1-367's testimony contradicts other evidence.[1802] Sesay does not explain how, or in what respects, these contradictions caused the Trial Chamber to err. As to TF1-367's alleged motives to implicate Sesay, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the evidence Sesay invokes[1803] precluded a reasonable trier of fact from finding, as the Trial Chamber did, that the witness was "generally credible."[1804] Sesay's submission is dismissed.

5696. Regarding Sesay's responsibility for planning in relation to enslavement in Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kono District – Planning – Sesay - paras. 681 - 704 [7695].

5697. para. 706: The Trial Chamber found Sesay liable under superior responsibility for the enslavement of an unknown number of civilians at Yengema training base in Kono District between December 1998 and about 30 January 2000.[1823]

5698. para. 709: Sesay complains about a lack of sufficiently specific findings.[1832] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber was required only to make findings on those facts which were essential to the determination of guilt on a particular count.[1833] In the present instance, Sesay does not explain how the Trial Chamber's identification of his culpable subordinates as "RUF rebels" at the Yengema base,[1834] the victims as "[c]ivilians who had been captured in Kono,"[1835] or the duration of their captivity as "from 1998 until disarmament"[1836] were insufficiently reasoned so as to undermine the Trial Chamber's determination of Sesay's guilt under superior responsibility.

5699. para. 710: However, the Appeals Chamber notes proprio motu that the Trial Chamber's findings are insufficient in another respect, namely, in that the Trial Chamber never made a legal finding on whether the forced military training at the Yengema base between December 1998 and

January 2000 met the legal elements of enslavement. Whereas the Trial Chamber made factual findings on the events at the Yengema base,[1837] the Trial Judgment is silent on whether these events amounted to the crime of enslavement.[1838] The forced military training at the Yengema base is not mentioned among the underlying acts that the Trial Chamber found constituted enslavement in Kono District. Rather, those underlying acts are limited to: (i) forced labour of civilians, including carrying loads, food-finding missions and domestic labour;[1839] (ii) various forms of forced labour of civilians detained in RUF camps (as distinct from camps for forced military training);[1840] and (iii) forced mining.[1841]

5700. para. 711: The Trial Chamber's failure to make a finding on the fundamental issue whether the events at the Yengema base fulfill the legal elements of the crime charged cannot reasonably be deemed to have resulted from mere oversight. This is buttressed by the fact that, when considering whether the enslavement in Kono District amounted to acts of terrorism, the Trial Chamber recalled its prior legal findings on which acts constituted enslavement, without making any reference to forced military training.[1842] 5701. para. 712: In the absence of a finding as to whether the forced military training at the Yengema base amounted to the crime of enslavement, there was no legal basis on which the Trial Chamber could find that Sesay incurred superior responsibility for this crime at the Yengema base. The Trial Chamber therefore erred in law in so finding.[1843] This error invalidates Sesay's conviction under Article 6.3 of the Statute insofar as it relates to enslavement at the Yengema training base between December 1998 and about 30 January 2000.[1844] Any implications of this finding will be considered in sentence. Having thus found, the Appeals Chamber need not consider the remainder of Sesay's present ground of appeal.

5711. para. 742: The Trial Chamber found that an unknown number of civilians were forced to work on RUF "government" farms and farms owned by Commanders in Kailahun District from 30 November 1996 to about 15 September 2000, and that this constituted enslavement.[1921] It held that Sesay incurred JCE liability for this crime.[1922]

5712. para. 745: Sesay's arguments that TF1-330's testimony was limited as to the geographical scope of the enslavement and the number of victims, and that Exhibits 81 to 84 showed cooperation and food in exchange for work,[1929] fail to address the other evidence the Trial Chamber relied on to arrive at its findings on the geographical scope[1930] and the number of victims[1931] of the enslavement, the forced nature of the work,[1932] and the lack of food provided.[1933] Sesay's additional argument that TF1-330 was motivated to give "partisan testimony" is not borne out by the cited testimony.[1934] These allegations are therefore dismissed. His additional challenges to Witness TF1-108 have been addressed elsewhere.[1935]

5713. para. 746: Sesay contends that the Trial Chamber contradicted itself by finding that the civilians received no rewards, and at the same time recognising that the "government" farms were "organised to support the fighters and civilians."[1936] The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the finding that the "RUF established 'government' farms which were organised to support the fighters and civilians"[1937] detracts from all the other findings showing that the civilian labour on the RUF farms, both of the "government" and private commanders, was forced.[1938] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the finding that members of the RUF might have acted legally in some respects does not necessarily render unreasonable the finding that they acted illegally in others. Sesay's argument in this regard is dismissed.

5714. para. 747: Sesay further misrepresents the Trial Chamber's findings in arguing that it placed undue emphasis on financial remuneration as opposed to payment in kind.[1939] First, the Trial Chamber found that the workers were not given adequate food.[1940] Sesay ignores the evidence in support of this finding. Second, it found that medical and other services provided to some part of the population "cannot be exculpatory or excusatory for the forced labour and coercive conditions that the civilian population endured."[1941] Sesay's challenge to this finding is both unsupported and undeveloped.[1942] Third, the Trial Chamber considered several other indicia of enslavement,[1943] such as control of movement,[1944] abuse,[1945] and forced labour.[1946] Ignoring the evidence the Trial Chamber relied on for these findings and instead simply proffering other evidence he argues supports his position that the civilians and RUF cooperated or that the former were remunerated in kind, Sesay fails to show an error in these findings.[1947] His argument is therefore untenable.

5715. Regarding Kallon's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Kallon – paras. 817, 820 – 824, 928, 931 – 933 [7759].

5716. Regarding Gbao's participation in and shared intent of the JCE in relation to Kailahun District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Findings and Conclusions – Kailahun District – JCE – Participation in and shared intent – Gbao – paras. 998, 1004 – 1022 [7820], 1054 – 1055 [7838], 1062 [7846], 1094 – 1098 [7849].

5717. para. 1071: The Trial Chamber found that Gbao incurred JCE liability for the crime of enslavement in Kailahun District.[2949] Among the underlying acts constituting enslavement in Kailahun District were forced farming on RUF "government" farms and farms owned by Commanders, including Gbao,[2950] and forced mining.[2951] It concluded that "Gbao was directly involved in the planning and maintaining of a system of enslavement" in Kailahun District.[2952]

5718. para. 1072: Gbao submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that enslavement existed in Kailahun District during the Indictment period and that he played a role therein.[2953]

5719. para. 1082: As a preliminary legal matter, the Appeals Chamber observes that lack of remuneration is not an element of the crime against humanity of enslavement under Article 2.c of the Statute. Rather, absence of remuneration for labour allegedly underlying the offence may constitute a relevant evidentiary factor in determining whether the labour was forced, which in turn may be an indicia of whether enslavement has been committed.[2988] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber endorses the Trial Chamber's reference to the Kunarac et al. Appeal Judgment, which quoted the following passage from the Pohl case:

> Slavery may exist even without torture. Slaves may be well fed, well clothed, and comfortably housed, but they are still slaves if without lawful process they are deprived of their freedom by forceful restraint. We might eliminate all proof of ill-treatment, overlook the starvation, beatings, and other barbarous acts, but the admitted fact of slavery – compulsory uncompensated labour – would still remain. There is no such thing as benevolent slavery. Involuntary servitude, even if tempered by humane treatment, is still slavery.[2989]

5720. para. 1083: Turning to the present case, Gbao argues that the civilians who farmed and mined for the RUF in Kailahun were remunerated "in kind," primarily by receiving free education and medical care. However, even assuming that Gbao is correct, this does not evince an error because such remuneration was not a determinative factor for the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the labour was forced. It found that > while it may have been the case that free medical services were provided to some part of the population of Kailahun District at various times during the armed conflict, the provision of such services cannot be exculpatory or excusatory for the forced labour and coercive conditions that the civilian population endured.[2990]

5721. para. 1084: Gbao does not challenge this finding, and the Appeals Chamber notes that it accords with the law as set out above that "there is no such thing as benevolent slavery." Moreover, this finding is not in contradiction with the Trial Chamber's findings that the RUF opened schools in Kailahun and provided non-discriminatory medical services in Giema, while continuing to commit crimes against civilians in Kailahun throughout the Indictment period.[2991]

Gbao's challenge to the finding that the civilian miners in Giema "worked without food," fails as it simply offers an alternative interpretation of TF1-330's testimony.[2992]

5722. para. 1085: For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber need not address the remainder of Gbao's argument, which centres on showing that the labour was remunerated "in kind." Gbao's argument is rejected. The Appeals Chamber now turns to Gbao's other submissions on why the labour in his view was not forced.

5723. para. 1086: Gbao first argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously disregarded a number of Defence witnesses' testimonies.[2993] Yet Gbao himself acknowledges that some of these witnesses testified that armed men oversaw the workers on the farms, albeit stating they did so to protect the civilians.[2994] Moreover, merely referring to a select number of witnesses and asking the Appeals Chamber to "accept their evidence" based on an unsubstantiated assertion of bias by the Trial Chamber, as Gbao does here,[2995] is insufficient to show an error. This prong of Gbao's appeal therefore fails.

5724. para. 1087: With regard to the remaining submissions, the Appeals Chamber notes, by way of introduction, that Gbao omits to address the evidence for certain important findings regarding the forced nature of and his role in the labour. For example, he does not address the testimony of TF1-330 that refusing to farm was not an option for the civilians:

> [N]ow, I am free. Whatever I want to do for myself, I will do. But at that time, we wouldn't do anything by ourselves, apart from working for them. Except that one day they would just say "Work for us" […] You wouldn't do it, they would beat you. They would continue beating you; if you are going to die, you die. No, you wouldn't deny doing it.[2996]

5725. para. 1088: Gbao similarly omits to mention TF1-330's testimony that the RUF had a "subscription" system in Kailahun, whereby civilians were required to surrender produce to the G5, that Gbao instructed the G5 Commander on the farming products to demand from the civilians, which instructions were conveyed to civilians,[2997] and that the produce subscribed to the G5 or S4 were to be transmitted to Gbao.[2998]

5726. para. 1089: Turning to the findings that Gbao challenges, he first argues that the finding that "[c]ivilians were also forced to work in Gbao's farm in Giema" is erroneous because the parts of TF1-330's testimony relied on do not corroborate TF1-108's testimony.[2999] This is incorrect. TF1-330 testified that he worked on Gbao's farm in the general context of describing the forced nature of the labour to which he was subjected in the different locations where he worked.[3000] This was sufficient corroboration to accept TF1-108's evidence in the present regard. TF1-330's testimony also corroborated TF1-108's evidence for the finding, impugned by Gbao on the same basis, that "Gbao had a bodyguard on his farm called Korpomeh who 'guarded' the civilians who worked there."[3001] Presented with the reliable evidence of TF1-330 on the matter, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on TF1-366 and TF1-108 to find that "civilians were required to work on [the] farm[] owned by … Gbao" and that the civilians working there "were treated badly, forced to work at gun point and sometimes beaten."[3002]

5727. para. 1090: Second, Gbao submits, without support, that mining only occurred after the 6 to 14 February 1998 ECOMOG intervention, and he further ignores the Trial Chamber's reference to TF1-371's testimony for its finding that the "work in the mines was carried out by civilians who were forced to work under the supervision of AFRC/RUF fighters."[3003]

5728. para. 1091: Third, Gbao challenges the Trial Chamber's reliance on TF1-367's testimony, arguing that the witness testified about Kono and not Kailahun.[3004] This challenge relates to the finding that "[m]any of the civilians were forced to live in 'zoo bushes', which were mining or farming communities guarded by RUF fighters for 'protection.'"[3005] Gbao's submission is without merit because he fails to address the additional evidence relied on for the impugned finding, namely TF1-113, and does not explain why TF1-113 in this instance required corroboration.

5729. para. 1092: Fourth, Gbao's argument that the Trial Chamber relied on evidence of TF1-108 and DIS-157 which is not on the record, relates to the finding that "civilians carried … palm oil, cocoa and coffee" to trading places "to exchange it for items such as rice, salt, Maggi and sometimes clothes."[3006] Gbao's challenge fails because it was not unreasonable to infer that the civilians were forced from DIS-157's testimony that they were escorted by armed men,[3007] and Gbao omits to mention the testimonies of TF1-330 and DAG-110, both cited by the Trial Chamber,[3008] corroborating that inference.[3009]

5730. para. 1093: For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber rejects Gbao's challenge to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the farming and mining in Kailahun District was forced. That conclusion was open to a reasonable trier of fact on the totality of the evidence.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5732. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[306]

5733. At all times relevant to this Indictment, members of the RUF, AFRC, Junta and/or AFRC/RUF forces (AFRC/RUF), subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, conducted armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [307]

5734. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [308]

5735. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [309]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

5736. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [310]

(iii) Count 10: Abductions and Forced Labour (Enslavement)

5737. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour. Forced labour included domestic labour and use as diamond miners. The abductions and forced labour included the following:[311]

i. Kenema District - Between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians living in the District to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field; [312]

ii. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilian men, women and children, and took them to various locations outside the District, or to locations within the District such as AFRC/RUF camps, Tombodu, Koidu, Wondedu, Tomendeh. At these locations the civilians were used as forced labour, including domestic labour and as diamond miners in the Tombodu area; [313]

iii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, at various locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumala (or Kamalu), Koinadugu, Kamadugu and Fadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of men, women and children and used them as forced labour; [314]

iv. Bombali District - Between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998, in Bombali District, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of civilians and used them as forced labour; [315]

v. Kailahun District - At all times relevant to this Indictment, captured civilian men, women and children were brought to various locations within the District and used as forced labour; [316]

vii. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, in particular as the AFRC/RUF were being driven out of Freetown and the Western Area, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted hundreds of civilians, including a large number of children, from various areas in Freetown and the Western Area, including Peacock Farm, Kissy, and Calaba Town. These abducted civilians were used as forced labour; [317]

viii. Port Loko - About the month of February 1999, the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Members of the AFRC/RUF used civilians, including those that had been abducted from Freetown and the Western Area, as forced labour in various locations throughout the Port Loko District including Port Loko, Lunsar and Masiaka. AFRC/RUF forces also abducted and used as forced labour civilians from various locations the Port Loko District, including Tendakum and Nonkoba; [318]

5738. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 13: Enslavement, a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, punishable under Article 2.c. of the Statute.[319]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(c) Factual Findings

(i) Preliminary Remarks – Crimes

5739. para. 1279: The Indictment alleges that "[a]t all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour. Forced labour included domestic labour and use of diamond miners."[2355] The Indictment specifies that such acts allegedly occurred in various locations in the territory of Sierra Leone, including Kenema District between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998; Kono District between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000; Koinadugu District between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998; Bombali District between about 1 May 1998 and 31 November 1998; Kailahun District at all times relevant to the Indictment; Freetown and the Western Area between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999; and Port Loko District about February 1999.[2356] The Accused are thus charged with enslavement, a crime against humanity, punishable under Article 2(c) of the Statute.

5740. para. 1280: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has pleaded specific locations at which abductions and forced labour are alleged to have occurred in Kenema, Kono, Koinadugu, Freetown and Western Area and Port Loko, but has not provided such particulars in respect of Bombali and Kailahun Districts. Given the continuous nature of the offence, and in the interests of justice, the Trial Chamber has considered all the evidence of enslavement adduced in relation to each District, provided that it falls within the timeframe specified in the Indictment.[2357]

5741. para. 1281: Submissions by the Parties in respect of particular incidents or witnesses have been discussed as they arise on the evidence below. In addition, however, the Parties made several general submissions on the evidence with respect to enslavement.

5743. para. 2: The Brima Defence submits that there is no evidence before the Trial Chamber capable of supporting a charge of enslavement.[2360] [320]

5744. para. 1283: The Kanu Defence also submits that the evidence presented during the trial does not support a conviction on enslavement.[2361] The Kanu Defence submits in relation to forced labour that the evidence must prove objectively that the witness was forced to work. The Kanu Defence argues that some of the evidence adduced by the Prosecution fails to fulfil this requirement as it was subjective, meaning that the evidence proved only the witness's personal conviction that she or he was compelled to work.[2362] The Trial Chamber emphasises that the legal definition of enslavement is framed objectively.[2363] When considering the evidence below, the Trial Chamber has looked for objective indications that civilians were forced to work, such as threats or use of violence by the perpetrators and lack of compensation. Findings are made only where the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the civilians were forced to work by AFRC/RUF soldiers

5745. para. 1284: The Kanu Defence further submits that evidence of abduction does not suffice for a finding of enslavement and rather, the Prosecution must prove that victims were abducted and then subjected to enslavement. The Kanu Defence argues that much of the Prosecution evidence deals only with abducted civilians and it cannot be inferred that these abducted civilians were used as forced labour on the basis of evidence of different incidents in which abducted civilians were so used.[2364]

5746. para. 1285: The Trial Chamber accepts the submission that evidence that civilians were abducted, in the absence of proof of what subsequently occurred to them, is not sufficient per se to prove that these civilians were enslaved. However, the Trial Chamber relies on evidence of abductions insofar as it corroborates the evidence of witnesses who were abducted and then enslaved by AFRC/RUF troops.

5747. para. 1286: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence adduced below to determine whether the actus reus of enslavement is proved beyond reasonable doubt in respect of the locations and time frames pleaded in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber finds that where the actus reus of the crime has been established, the only reasonable inference on the evidence is that the perpetrators intentionally exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over the abductees. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that each of the perpetrators was aware that their acts formed part of the widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population which was taking place at the time the crime was committed. In such circumstances the requisite mens rea element of the offence is established.

[320] This paragraph does not have a correct paragraph number in the Judgment and is paragraph numbered as "2".

(ii) Kenema District – Crimes

5748. para. 1287: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 1 August 1997 and 31 January 1998, AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians living in the District to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field".[2365]

5749. para. 1288: In arriving at the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has considered the available evidence, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-062, TFl-122, TFl-334 and TF1-045 and Defence witnesses DAB-147, DAB-033 and DBK-063.

a. Tongo Field – Kenema District – Crimes

5750. para. 1289: Witness TF1-062 is a miner who was living and working in Tongo Field in 1997, with six men employed to mine for him.[2366] On an unspecified date in August 1997, witness TF1-062 heard gunfire and soon after observed soldiers entering Tongo Field. Some of these soldiers wore combat and others were in civilian clothing. The witness recognised the soldiers in combat as members of the SLA.[2367] The witness identified Sam Bockarie ('Mosquito') as the commander of the men, since he entered in a jeep and spoke to the civilians.[2368]

5751. para. 1290: Approximately three days later, 'Mosquito' gathered the civilians of Tongo Field in a public meeting at Tongo Park attended by witness TF1-062.[2369] He informed the civilians that the AFRC/RUF government, formed in Freetown, was now in control of Tongo. The civilians were told that 'Mosquito' had set up a secretariat, under Lieutenant Dennis, to handle any of their complaints. In addition, 'Mosquito' told the civilians that they were going to mine for diamonds.[2370] Witness TF1-062 testified that soon after this meeting, 'Mosquito' left Tongo Field, leaving SLA commander Jamayo Kati in charge of the mining. Kati was subsequently killed and replaced by SLA soldier Set Marrah.[2371] However, 'Mosquito' would visit Tongo Field more or less at weekly intervals.[2372]

5752. para. 1291: Witness TF1-062 stated that the civilians of Tongo Field were subsequently required to elect from their number a chairman, named Mompleh, who would be responsible for organising the civilian mining. Commander Pa Set Marrah informed the civilians, through Mompleh, that 'Mosquito' had ordered that they should mine for "the Government" two days a week.[2373] Witness TF1-062 testified that thereafter the AFRC/RUF would designate certain days as 'government days'.[2374] On 'government days', the civilians of Tongo Field were forced to go and work in the mines in an area known as Cyborg Pit.[2375]

5753. para. 1292: Witness TF1-062 estimated that over a thousand civilians worked in the mines on 'government days'.[2376] The AFRC/RUF government did not provide the civilians with food or mining equipment.[2377] Witness TF1-062 testified that civilians would not refuse to work on 'government days' since they knew that if they did so, the AFRC/RUF would mete out "discipline"[2378] The witness stated, as an example, that one of his workers hid in an attempt to avoid work, but was found and beaten.[2379]

5754. para. 1293: On 'government days', civilians were compelled to hand over any diamonds found to the AFRC/RUF soldiers supervising the mine work.[2380] The supervising soldiers at Cyborg Pit were armed with guns, such as RPGs, LMGs, G-3s, and AK-47s, and would watch the civilian miners to ensure that all diamonds found were surrendered[2381] Civilians who attempted to keep diamonds found during a government mining day would be flogged almost to death.[2382] Witness TF1-062 watched AFRC/RUF soldiers shoot and kill civilian miners that disobeyed orders on two occasions.[2383] In addition, the witness regularly saw corpses being brought out of the Cyborg pit, and he was informed by his workers that these civilians had been shot by AFRC/RUF soldiers.[2384] Even on non-government days, AFRC/RUF soldiers would be present at Cyborg Pit and would take diamonds found by civilians.[2385]

5757. para. 1296: Witness TF1-045 was an RUF Major who spent two to three months in Tongo Field, from approximately July to September 1997.[2389] He was sent there by his RUF commanding officer to mine diamonds and he did so using captured civilians given to him by the AFRC/RUF. The witness stated that the civilians he used did not mine for him voluntarily, although he gave them some food and money.[2390]

5758. para. 1297: Witness TF1-045 was unable to give an estimate of the number of civilians labouring in the mines, but stated that it could have been than 300 or 500.[2391] He described the process by which civilians were collected for work. The AFRC oversaw the formation of civilian committees that were in charge of organising their civilian colleagues for government work, in return for which they reputedly earned a commission from the diamonds found.[2392] The witness observed civilians being rounded up. He stated that armed men accompanied the committees to search for civilians and collected them at gunpoint.[2393] Once captured, the armed men tied the civilians together with their shirts and brought them to the mine where they were forced to work at gunpoint.[2394] When asked what happened to civilians who resisted, the witness replied that, from his observations, "If [you] refused to mine and you are captured, you will be beaten. You will undergo serious torture, if –and if you are not lucky you will die. They will shoot you with a gun."[2395] The witness clarified in cross-examination that he saw civilians shot and killed on two occasions.[2396]

5759. para. 1298: Witness TF1-045 testified that upon his arrival in Tongo Field, Captain Kati was the AFRC commander in charge of a company consisting of both RUF and AFRC troops.[2397] Kati reported to 'Mosquito', who was the overall commander of Tongo Field at this time.[2398] The witness testified that there were several other AFRC/RUF commanders involved in the mining operation in Tongo Field in this period, including Kati's deputy, RUF Major 'Eagle'; the OC Secretariat, AFRC Sergeant 'Junior'; and the AFRC PLO 2, whose name the witness did not recall.[2399]

5760. para. 1299: Witness TF1-045 testified that any diamonds found at the mines were handed over to the armed guards, who would then pass them on to the PLO 2. The witness was present at the AFRC Secretariat on occasions when the PLO 2 would weigh the diamonds. The PLO 2 told him that the diamonds were to be sent to Eddie Kanneh, the resident Minister at the time. However, on one occasion the witness observed the PLO 2 giving diamonds to 'Mosquito'.[2400]

5761. para. 1300: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the Accused Brima was the PLO 2 during the AFRC period, but that in this position he was involved in mining in Kono District and not Kenema.[2401] Although the witness was clearly mistaken in his recollection that the 'PLO 2' was in Tongo Field, the Trial Chamber accepts the remainder of his evidence in relation to the use of forced labour as it was detailed and consistent in all material respects and the witness remained unshaken on cross-examination.

5762. para. 1301: The Brima Defence submits that witness TF1-045 did not describe any actual events which led him to conclude that the labour at the mines was forced.[2402] The Trial Chamber considers that a reasonable inference may be drawn from the evidence of witness TF1-045 that civilians were collected and taken to the mines at gunpoint, with resistance being met by violence, that their labour was extracted by force and without consent. While the witness does not give particulars of specific incidents in which he saw violence being inflicted on civilians, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that his evidence on this point is reliable, given that he personally used forced civilian labour in Tongo Field for a substantial period of time.

5764. para. 1303: The Trial Chamber notes that Defence witnesses DAB-147, DAB-033 and DAB-063 gave evidence to the effect that the RUF were solely responsible for forced mining at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field.

5765. para. 1304: Witness DAB-147 visited Kenema on two occasions in the period May 1997 through February 1998. He testified that both AFRC and RUF troops were stationed there. The witness stated that the RUF were mining at Cyborg Pit and they would kill civilians that went there to mine. The RUF commanders in Tongo, according to witness DAB-147, were named Manawa and Mopleh and they reported to Bockarie.[2404] However, he also stated at one point that the OC Secretariat Sergeant-Major 'Junior' was in charge of Tongo in this period. Witness DAB-047 testified that while he was in Tongo, he did not see AFRC soldiers forcing civilians to work in the mines.[2405] However, in cross-examination he agreed with the proposition that the AFRC government in Kenema forced civilians to mine for diamonds, before stating repeatedly that he had no knowledge of any AFRC mining operations and he could only testify to RUF mining in Tongo Field.[2406]

5766. para. 1305: Witness DAB-033, a member of the SLA, was posted to Tongo in July 1997 and remained there until January 1998. He gave evidence that Tongo was under RUF command.[2407] Witness DAB-033 agreed that civilians were forced to mine at Cyborg Pit, but testified that the RUF was in control of all mining operations there.[2408] Although there were SLAs in Tongo, led by Captain Kati and Seth Marrah, they were under RUF control and did not force civilians to mine.[2409] Under cross-examination, witness DAB-033 agreed that there was an AFRC secretariat in Tongo that monitored the mining operations. He also agreed that SLAs and RUF worked together at the secretariat, and SLA 'Junior Sheriff was one of the commanders.[2410] Further, the witness's evidence discloses that the SLAs conducted mining in Tongo, since he states that good mining sites were taken from them by the RUF.[2411]

5767. para. 1306: Witness DBK-063, a member of the SLA, was posted in Tongo for six months commencing soon after June 1997.[2412] He testified that both RUF and SLA members were stationed in Tongo in this period. The RUF were commanded by 'Mosquito' and Eddie Kanneh, who was the SLA Secretary of State for Kenema.[2413] However, he gave evidence that the RUF and the SLA did not work together in Kenema District because they did not take commands from each other.[2414] According to Witness DBK-063, he was sent to Tongo along with other SLAs because the RUF were "not under control" and 'Mosquito' was stealing diamonds.[2415] He testified that Captain Kati, an SLA officer was killed when he went to Cyborg Pit to try and stop the mining, although this occurred prior to the witness's arrival in Tongo Field.[2416]

5768. para. 1307: Having considered the cross-examination of Defence witnesses DAB-033 and DAB-147, the Trial Chamber finds their testimony unreliable insofar as they both assert that the SLA had no involvement in the forced mining that occurred at Cyborg Pit. Witness DBK-063 did not state whether or not the AFRC were involved in mining operations. The Trial Chamber considers that the fact that these witnesses could testify only to RUF involvement in forced mining does not necessarily mean that the AFRC were not also engaging in the practice. Witness DAB-147 visited Tongo Field only twice and never went to Cyborg Pit.[2417] There is no evidence that witness DAB-033 or DBK-063 ever visited Cyborg Pit. The Trial Chamber prefers the more detailed evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-062 and TF1-045 in relation to the involvement of the AFRC in forced labour at Cyborg Pit, as both these witnesses were involved in mining operations there for a significant period of time.

5769. para. 1308: The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of Witness DBK-063 that the two factions worked separately in Tongo Field and also that of DAB-033 that the SLAs were under RUF control. Having accepted that the evidence above establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the AFRC were involved in mining operations using forced civilian labour at Cyborg Pit, the Trial Chamber finds it unnecessary to determine conclusively the working dynamic between the two factions, which was often frictional.

(iii) Kono District – Crimes

5770. para. 1310: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, AFRC/RUF forces abducted hundreds of civilian men, women and children, and took them to various locations outside the District, or to locations within the District such as AFRC/RUF camps, Tombodu, Koidu, Wondedu, Tomendeh. At these locations the civilians were used as forced labour, including domestic labour and as diamond miners in the Tombodu area".[2418]

5771. para. 1311: No evidence of enslavement has been adduced with respect to Tomendeh.[2419]

5772. para. 1312: In arriving at the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has considered the available evidence, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-072, TF1-216, TF1-334, TF1-198 and TF1-033 and Defence witnesses DAB-098, DAB-042 and DAB-131.

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Crimes

5773. para. 1313: Witness TFl-334 arrived in Koidu Town in Kono District in early March 1998.[2420] He testified that several days after his arrival, the AFRC/RUF began capturing civilians on the order of Johnny Paul Koroma, especially the strong men and the young women, from Tombodu, Yamadu and other surrounding villages in Kono District. Civilians who tried to escape were executed.[2421] The AFRC/RUF used the civilians to carry their food, and trained some of them as soldiers for the movement.[2422]

5774. para. 1314: In March 1998, witness TF1-072 and his friend encountered seven soldiers in uniform near Gbaima while looking for food. Accompanying the soldiers was a civilian, tied with rope.[2423] The soldiers tied up witness TF1-072 and his friend and forced them to walk to Gbaima. The witness states that he and his friend could not refuse the soldiers as they were 'big men'. On arrival at Gbaima, the two men were made to lie down. They overheard the armed soldier left to guard them being instructed to shoot them if they tried to escape.[2424]

5775. para. 1315: Witness TF1-072, his friend, and the other civilian who had been with the soldiers were then taken, still tied, into Gbaima. Witness TF1-072 observed many "bags and bundles" lying around the town. The men were untied and forced by the soldiers to carry these loads on their heads towards Tombodu.[2425] Along the way, the soldiers encountered other civilians, whom they forced to join them, also making them carry loads on their heads.[2426] In Tombodu the civilians, of whom by now there were fourteen, were taken to a compound where they were beaten.[2427] The leader of the soldiers in the compound was called 'Savage.'[2428] 'Savage' mutilated Witness TF1-072' s right hand before he managed to escape.[2429]

5776. para. 1316: On 14 April 1998, witness TFl-216 and his three children were captured by a group of soldiers near Paema.[2430] The soldiers tied up the witness and forced him and six other civilians to carry loads to Tombodu at gunpoint.[2431] Upon arrival, the seven were tied together outside a house.[2432] At that point, a group of soldiers arrived with some other civilians. 'Staff Alhaji' whom the soldiers had identified as their leader, ordered the soldiers to put the civilians in the house. Witness TF1-216 overheard one of the soldiers reporting to 'Staff Alhaji' that there were 53 people in the house.[2433] 'Staff Alhaji' told Witness TF1-216 and four of the other civilians that they were to be used to take a message to President Kabbah. All five then had their hands amputated before being released.[2434]

5777. para. 1317: At an unspecified time after March 1998, witness DAB-098 and five others were captured by "rebels" near Gbongbor Junction while looking for food. Witness DAB-098 states that the "rebels" shot around them and there was no way for them to escape.[2435] The "rebels" took the group of civilians to Tombodu, where they were kept in a house for six months and subjected to regular beatings.[2436] Whilst in captivity, witness DAB-098 and the other civilians were required to go fishing, clean, carry goods, and collect food for the "rebels".[2437] He stated that while under their command, he felt that he had to accept anything they did to him or otherwise they would kill him.[2438] During his captivity, witness DAB-098 learnt that the leader of the "rebels" was named 'Savage'.[2439]

5779. para. 1319: Witness TF1-033 testified that in March 1998, he was abducted in Tombodu, along with many other civilians, by AFRC fighters under the command of 'Gullit', whose subordinate was 'Savage'. He stated that he both saw and heard 'Gullit' issue the command to abduct the civilians, and that the AFRC fighters told him that if he tried to escape they would kill him.[2440] In April 1998, when 'Gullit' ordered the AFRC fighters to retreat to Yaya due to the advance of ECOMOG witness TF1-033 was forced to accompany them.[2441] The witness remained with the AFRC until the retreat from Freetown in 1999.[2442]

5780. para. 1320: Under cross-examination, witness TF1-033 gave only very general information in relation to his abduction. He repeated his assertion that upon arrival in Tombodu, he encountered 'Gullit' and AFRC fighters and simultaneously overheard 'Gullit' ordering the fighters to abduct him.[2443] He stated that there were many other abducted civilians in Tombodu, and they stayed in houses under the strict supervision of AFRC fighters.[2444] Witness TF1-033 lived in the house of Staff Alhaji.[2445] He did not specify what, if anything, the civilians did in this period or describe any incidents that occurred involving himself or other abductees.

5781. para. 1321: The Kanu and Brima Defence submit that witness TF1-033' s testimony in relation to his abduction is unreliable as the witness was not an abducted civilian, but rather an active AFRC supporter.[2446] The Brima Defence further submits that the evidence of witness TF1-033 is unreliable as he was a former AFRC member who stood to gain from embellishing his testimony to the detriment of the three Accused.[2447]

5782. para. 1322: Witness TF1-033's evidence that abductions of civilians were taking place in Tombodu in the period after February 1998 is corroborated by witnesses TF1-072, TFl-216 and TF1-334. However, the Trial Chamber is of the view that the evidence that the witness himself was forcibly captured in Tombodu is not probative, for several reasons. First, in a prior statement to the Prosecution, the witness stated that he decided to flee from Freetown with the AFRC troops in February 1998.[2448] Secondly, the Trial Chamber has found, on the basis of reliable evidence from other witnesses, that the Accused Brima was not in Kono in this period.[2449] Thirdly, the witness's account of his own abduction and captivity lacked the detail contained in the testimony of witnesses TF1-072, TF1-216 and DAB-098. The Trial Chamber therefore does not rely on the evidence of witness TF1-033 in making findings on enslavement in Kono District.

5783. para. 1323: The Trial Chamber notes that witnesses TF1-334 and DAB-098 gave evidence of diamond mining in the Tombodu area, however their evidence concerned the AFRC government period and therefore falls outside the Indictment period for Kono District for Count 13.[2450] No other evidence was adduced of diamond mining in the Tombodu area.

b. Koidu – Kono District – Crimes

5784. para. 1324: In July 1998, witness DAB-131 and his family were captured, along with an unspecified number of other civilians, in the bush around Tuyor, near Koidu.[2451] Their captors identified themselves as RUF soldiers.[2452] After they were captured, they pounded husk rice for the RUF and were forced to carry it into Koidu Town on their heads.[2453]

5785. para. 1325: Upon arrival in Koidu, witness DAB-131 and his group of civilians were sent by an RUF commander to a mining unit in an unspecified location in Kono District and told that they would work for the RUF.[2454] Witness DAB-131 testified that there were 240 civilians mining diamonds for the rebels, guarded by RUF soldiers. He knew the number of civilians since they were counted every morning. The commander of the soldiers introduced himself to the civilians as RUF Major Kumba. Any diamonds found were handed over to him.[2455]

5786. para. 1326: The civilians mined for the RUF for three months, until ECOMOG displaced the RUF from Kono. At this point, witness DAB-131 and an unspecified number of other civilians were forced to carry loads on their heads for the RUF from Koidu Town to Burkina (also known as Buedu) in Kailahun District.[2456] The civilians walked for two days and two nights, accompanied by the RUF, before arriving in Burkina.[2457] He observed the RUF soldiers killing civilians who were unable to carry their loads. Their loads were then transferred on to the heads of others. In addition, the soldiers would confiscate clothing and footwear that was in good condition from the civilians.[2458] The witness testified that by the time the group arrived in Kailahun, it included over 500 civilians.[2459]

5787. para. 1327: After an unspecified time in Burkina, witness DAB-131 and some 230 other civilians were forced to carry loads for the rebels back to Kono, to a location that the witness refers to as 'Joe Bush'.[2460] At 'Joe Bush' the civilians were forced to mine diamonds, supervised by armed RUF guards.2461 The witness stated that diamonds found at the mine were taken by escort to Sam Bockarie, since the civilians were told that everything they recovered was for the RUF movement.[2462] Witness DAB-131 and the other civilians mined at Joe Bush for three to four months, until December 1998 when the rebels moved them to Koidu Town.[2463] The witness remained a captive of the RUF until "the ceasefire".[2464]

c. Wondedu – Kono District – Crimes

5788. para. 1328: At an unspecified time after February 1998, witness TFl-217 observed that RUF rebels brought around ten girls to Wondedu in open vehicles.[2465] He saw one of the girls crying. At that same time, the witness's sister was forcefully captured by RUF Captain Bai Bureh, who said that she was his wife. Witness TF1-217 testified that his sister did not want to go with Bureh, but the witness did not dare to intervene because Bureh threatened that he would take either his life or his sister.[2466] The witness did not know the fate of his sister or the ten girls.

5789. para. 1329: The Trial Chamber recalls that evidence of abductions alone IS insufficient to prove enslavement.[2467] In the absence of other evidence of enslavement in W Wondedu, the Trial Chamber makes no finding of enslavement in respect of this location.

d. Other locations in Kono District – Crimes

5790. para. 1330: In late 1999, witness DAB-042 was captured by RUF rebels in Yengema.[2468] The witness, along with many other civilians, was taken to Kailahun and forced to carry loads, consisting of objects such as beds, baling machines, rice and beans, to the Mende land area.[2469] The witness remained with the rebels for three months.[2470]

5791. para. 1331: Around mid-1998, witness TF1-198 and her family met a group of around seven armed "soldiers" in Koiduwar, who tied up her husband and forced him, along with five other men, to carry loads on their heads to Yardu Gbensa.[2471]

5792. para. 1332: Witness DAB-025 was captured by RUF rebels in Mortema in an unspecified year and forced to undergo military training and work at an RUF checkpoint near Yengema.[2472] As the Trial Chamber was unable to ascertain the time period in which these events occurred, the Trial Chamber does not rely on this evidence.

(iv) Koinadugu District – Crimes

5793. para. 1334: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, at various locations including Heremakono, Kabala, Kumala (or Kamalu), Koinadugu, Kamadugu and Fadugu, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of men, women and children and used them as forced labour".[2473]

5794. para. 1335: No evidence of enslavement was led in respect of Kamadugu and Heremakono.[2474]

5795. para. 1336: In arriving at the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has taken into consideration the available evidence, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-153, TF1-094, TFl-209 and TFl-133 and Defence witnesses DAB-089, DAB-081, DAB-082, DAB-078, DAB-088, DAB-090 and DAB-085.

5796. para. 1337: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses TF1-209 and TF1-094 in its findings under Count 9.[2475] The evidence contained therein establishes beyond reasonable doubt that these witnesses were also enslaved by AFRC troops in Koinadugu District. Their evidence is discussed below insofar as it relates to the abduction and forced labour of other civilians in Koinadugu District.

a. Kabala – Koinadugu District – Crimes

5797. para. 1338: Witness TFl-209 testified that during the rainy season in 1998, a number of other civilians were captured by 'juntas" along with herself, near Kabala.[2476] The 'juntas' took rice and ground nuts from the civilians and forced them to carry these items into Kabala town.[2477] En route, other civilians were captured and made to carry loads.[2478] Upon arriving in Kabala town, the civilians were taken to a man named 'Mongo' who was dressed in combat uniform. 'Mongo' wrote down their names so that none of them could go missing.[2479] Witness TFl-209 was taken to Koinadugu Town and 'married' to a man named Jabie. She gave no further evidence regarding the other civilians.

b. Kumala – Koinadugu District – Crimes

5798. para. 1339: The available evidence of abductions and forced labour in Kumala consisted of the testimony of Prosecution witness TF1-133. The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of this witness in its findings under Count 9.[2480] The evidence contained therein establishes beyond reasonable doubt that she was also enslaved by AFRC troops in Koinadugu District.

c. Koinadugu – Koinadugu District – Crimes

5799. para. 1340: At an unspecified time in 1998, DAB-089 was abducted at gun point near Koinadugu by persons he identified only as 'gunmen' and forced to join a group of other civilians carrying loads to Koinadugu Town.[2481] Upon arrival in Koinadugu, the witness was handed over to a man named Albert, who threatened that he would kill him if he escaped and marked his forehead and chest with 'RUF'.[2482] Witness DAB-089 remained with Albert for eight days, in which time he followed orders to carry loads of food and communications equipment and logged wood.[2483] He overheard conversations in which Albert referred to his leaders as 'Superman' and SAJ Musa.[2484] Witness DAB-089 then managed to escape.[2485]

5800. para. 1341: In about August 1998, witness DAB-081 was captured by RUF rebels near Koinadugu.[2486] The rebels made the witness take them at gunpoint to Dankawalli village and then the following day to Koinadugu.[2487] In Koinadugu, the witness was housed with 50 other abductees and kept captive for several months.[2488] He testified that while he worked for the RUF, both RUF and SLA fighters used civilians for labour.[2489] The captives were forced to search for food for the RUF and SLA troops in Koinadugu. Abductees also had to build over 20 huts and guard posts along the road to Koinadugu for the RUF fighters.[2490] The RUF flogged their civilian workers, including witness DAB-081, with sticks.[2491]

5801. para. 1342: At an unspecified time after February 1998, witness TF1-153 and other civilians of Yirayie Town were captured by RUF commander Komba Gbundema and his men in the bush near Yirayie.[2492] The men ordered the civilians to hand over all their food and property.[2493] The men carried guns and the civilians were told that anyone who ran away would be killed. Gbundema ordered witness TFl-153 and the other civilians to carry the property which had been taken from them to Yirayie Town.[2494]

5802. para. 1343: Upon arrival in Yirayie, witness TFl-153 observed women pounding rice, children carrying loads on their heads and other commanders arriving from the bush with civilians.[2495] Witness TF1-153 states that the commanders and soldiers in Yirayie were from both the AFRC and the RUF. The Trial Chamber accepts that the witness was able to distinguish between the two factions as he came from a family background of affiliation with the military.[2496] That night, Witness TF1-153 was forced by Gbundema's men to carry one bag of rice on his head to Koinadugu.[2497] He was released upon his arrival because by chance one of the soldiers there was his cousin.[2498]

d. Other locations in Koinadugu District - Crimes

5803. para. 1344: On 22 May 1998, witness DAB-078 was captured during an attack on his town in Koinadugu District by three armed men, one wearing a soldier's uniform and the other two wearing civilian clothing.[2499] He was forced to carry loads, along with about 15 other captured civilians, on the road to Makeni.[2500] He overheard his captors saying that their leaders were 'Captain Ishmael' and 'Colonel Born Trouble'.[2501] 'Captain Ishmael' was a deputy to 'Savage'.[2502] Witness DAB-078 overheard in discussion that both 'Ishmael' and 'Savage' were SLA soldiers.[2503] When the group reached Kanikay that same night, the witness managed to escape.[2504]

5806. para. 1347: While the Trial Chamber found the witness credible, his evidence lacked detail. It is unclear whether the civilians were forced to obey the instructions given to them by the rebels or whether their autonomy was restricted in any other aspect. The witness did not explain what he and other civilians did at "Joe Bush", and therefore there is no evidence that the rebels accrued any gain from the civilians' activities. In the absence of such indicia, the Trial Chamber finds that it is not established beyond reasonable doubt that witness DAB-082 or other civilians in his company were used as forced labour.

5807. para. 1348: Witness DAB-090 testified that at an unspecified time after April 1998, rebels attacked Yifin. They remained in Yifin until the end of the year when they were disarmed.[2510] Throughout this period, the rebels used the children of Yifin to carry rice and other looted goods in loads on their heads to Kayima. The children told the witness that if they did not walk very fast on these trips they were seriously beaten.[2511] The rebels also forced the civilians of Yifin to cultivate a rice farm for them. The civilians were made to harvest the rice and then hand it over to the rebels.[2512]

5808. para. 1349: Witnesses TF1-094 and DAB-088 testified that in Yomadugu in around August 1998, there were many civilian men, women and children captured from surrounding villages. The civilians were forced to work for the rebels and SLAs, performing tasks such as harvesting rice in the bush, pounding rice, laundering and cooking. If civilians refused to work, they would be beaten or killed, and many such punishments were meted out.[2513]

(v) Bombali District – Crimes

5809. para. 1351: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween about 1 May 1998 and 31 November [sic] 1998, in Bombali District, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted an unknown number of civilians and used them as forced labour".[2514]

5810. para. 1352: The evidence adduced on Bombali District concerns the alleged enslavement of civilians by AFRC troops between approximately April and July 1998 during their movement from Mansofinia (Koinadugu District) to Rosos (Bombali District) under the command of the Accused Brima, accompanied by the Accused Kamara and Kanu.[2515] The Trial Chamber will consider first the evidence pertaining to incidents which took place during the journey to Rosos and then the evidence regarding events that occurred while the troops were at Rosos.

5811. para. 1353: In arriving at the following findings, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence adduced, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses George Johnson, TF1-334, TF1-184, TF1-157, TF1-158, TF1-055 and TF1-058 and Defence witnesses DBK-101, DBK-100, DBK-089 and DBK-094.

5812. para. 1354: The Trial Chamber recalls that Prosecution witnesses TF1-157 and TF1-158 were abducted from Bornoya in 1998 by AFRC troops en route to Rosos and used as child soldiers. Their evidence, considered in the Trial Chamber's findings on Count 12, establishes beyond reasonable doubt that these witnesses were enslaved in Bombali District.[2516] Their testimony is considered below insofar as it demonstrates that an unknown number of other civilians were abducted and used as forced labour in Bombali District.

a. Journey to Rosos – Bombali District – Crimes

5813. para. 1355: Witness TFl-334 testified that 'Gullit' ordered at Mansofinia that any strong civilian encountered on the journey north should be captured and made part of the troop.[2517]

5814. para. 1356: Witnesses DBK-l0l and DBK-l00 testified that fighters abducted a number of civilians in the attack on Kamagbengbeh in May 1998. When some of the abductees subsequently escaped and returned to the village, they told the other civilians that the attackers had forced them, under threat of violence, to carry loads to Kamabai.[2518]

5815. para. 1357: Witnesses living in Karina at the time of the AFRC forces' attack testified that the troops abducted a number of civilians, some of whom were personally known to the civilians.[2519] Witness TF1-058 was captured during the attack on Karina and ordered to sit with a group of other civilians being guarded by armed 'juntas".[2520] The "juntas" instructed some of the civilians to stand up and form two lines. The men were forced to carry goods and the women to follow behind. All of the women were naked, except for one who was wearing a loincloth. Armed men accompanied the civilians.[2521]

women were abducted in Karina and placed under the command of one Woyoh, who stripped the women naked.[2523] Small children were also abducted. Woyoh then handed control of the women to the Chief of Staff 'FiveFive'.[2524] 'Gullit' subsequently ordered, in the presence of the witness, that the children be distributed among the various commanders.[2525] After the attack on Karina, the soldiers arrived in Gbendembu, where they captured several young men and women.[2526]

5817. para. 1359: While the evidence above relates primarily to abductions, witnesses George Johnson and TF1-157, who were travelling with the troops, testified that the abducted civilians were used as forced labour. Johnson stated that hundreds of civilians were forcefully captured in the villages on the journey and the women were used as cooks, while the men were either used to carry arms, ammunition and food, or trained as fighters.[2527] Witness TF1-157 stated that civilians were forcefully abducted in Bornoya, Daraya, Mayogbo, Kagbemneh, Kamanameh, Kamatelun, Kamabai and Karina in Bombali District and compelled to carry looted goods for the rebels to Rosos.[2528]

b. Rosos – Bombali District - Crimes

5818. para. 1360: While at Rosos, the troops staged an operation to nearby village of Gbendembu, where additional civilians were abducted.[2529] The troops remained at Rosos for three months.[2530] Civilian abductees were used in this period to perform domestic labour, including food finding, fetching water and cleaning dishes.[2531]

5819. para. 1361: Abductees were also forced to undergo military training.2532 Trainees that attempted to escape were killed.[2533] The duration of the training program at Rosos was three weeks.[2534] The exercises encompassed weapon handling, tactics, firing and maneuvering.[2535] Witness George Johnson estimated that approximately 520 civilians, including both adults and children, were trained in this manner at Rosos.[2536] At the completion of the training program, the civilians were integrated into the battalions by FAT Sesay.[2537]

5820. para. 1362: The Trial Chamber notes that witness TF1-184, who travelled with SAJ Musa's group of troops to meet the Accused Brima's group at 'Colonel Eddie Town', testified that SAJ Musa's group was accompanied by civilians who were free to leave at any time without fear of reprisal.[2538] The Kanu Defence submits that these civilians were not subjected to enslavement.[2539] Given that the AFRC faction led by the Accused Brima was not with SAJ Musa's group or subject to SAJ Musa's command until after they departed from Rosos, this evidence is not material to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the above evidence on Bombali District.

(vi) Kailahun District - Crimes

5821. para 1364: The Indictment alleges that "[a]t all times relevant to the Indictment, captured men, women and children were brought to various locations within the District and used as forced labour".[2540]

5822. para. 1365: In reaching the following factual findings, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence adduced, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-113 and TF1-114 and Defence witnesses DAB-135, DAB-140 and DAB-027.

5823. para. 1366: The Trial Chamber has divided the evidence on Kailahun District into two periods, the first being the AFRC government period from May 1997 to February 1998, and the second the period from February 1998 until January 2000.

a. May 1997 - February 1998 – Kailahun District – Crimes

5824. para. 1367: The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of witness TF1-113 that 67 persons accused by AFRC/RUF soldiers of being Kamajors were detained and used as forced labour in Kailahun Town for approximately two or three months during this period. As it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that these persons were in fact civilians, the Trial Chamber makes no finding of enslavement on this evidence.[2541]

5825. para. 1368: Around May 1997, witness DAB-135 was captured with 19 other civilians in the fields near Jagbwema Town by armed RUF rebels wearing mixed combat and civilian clothing.[2542] The rebels took thirteen of the civilians to Jagbwema Town where they met other civilians that had been captured. Witness DAB-135 was taken before the rebel leader Major Kangoma, who questioned him, kicked him and hit him with a gun butt.[2543] A rebel named 'Captain Death Squad' then took witness DAB-135 and two of his sisters and ordered them to pound a drum of husk rice and launder clothes for him.[2544]

5826. para. 1369: The following day the civilians were taken to Tueyor, where they were again forced to pound rice and launder clothes, without being fed.[2545] Three days later, witness DAB-135 was ordered to go to Buedu in Kailahun Chiefdom with the rebels, carrying loads for them.[2546] The witness spent about two days in Kailahun Chiefdom, working for the rebels while being given very little food.[2547] The rebels then took witness DAB-135 back to Kono District, stopping along the way in a village called Manjama where the rebels forced the witness to pound

rice and they captured other civilians.[2548] Upon returning to Kono, the witness spent two years and six months with the rebels before being reunited with his family.[2549]

5827. para. 1370: In approximately May 1997, Witness DAB-140 was captured by rebels in the bush near Buedu and brought into Buedu Town. The rebels, whose commander was Sam Bockarie, required the witness, along with other civilians in Buedu, to "report for duty" every morning to a rebel leader.[2550] One of the tasks that the witness was regularly forced to undertake was carrying heavy loads.[2551] Specifically, the witness stated that the rebels used to take corrugated iron and doors from people's houses in Buedu and force civilians, under threat of violence, to carry the iron to Liberia and the doors to Guinea.[2552] Civilians who refused to take loads were beaten or killed.[2553]

b. February 1998 - January 2000 – Kaliahun District – Crimes

5828. para. 1371: Witness TF1-114, a military police adjutant in Buedu, testified that the RUF engaged in forced labour after February 1998.[2554] One of his duties was to take the names of civilians reporting for 'government work'. 'Government work' typically included working on commanders' farms, constructing roads and carrying loads for commanders and was carried out involuntarily by civilians who received no remuneration.[2555]

5830. para. 1373: At an unspecified time in 1998, witness DAB-027 and a group of other civilians were captured in the bush near Bendu by RUF rebels and taken to Jagbema village.[2558] After several days, the civilians were taken to Tueyor, from where they were divided into two groups.[2559] The younger ones, including the witness, were taken to Bunumbu Camp Lion Training Base, in Kailahun District.[2560] Witness DAB-027 and many other captive civilians were given military training at Bunumbu.[2561] Over a month later, the witness was then sent to Gandorhun, in Kono District, and some time later to Sengema. Throughout this time he was required to work for RUF rebels.[2562]

5831. Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes para. 1375: The Indictment alleges that "[b]etween 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, in particular as the AFRC/RUF were being driven out of Freetown and the Western Area, members of the AFRC/RUF abducted hundreds of civilians, including a large number of children, from various areas in Freetown and the Western Area, including Peacock Farm, Kissy, and Calaba Town. These abducted civilians were used as forced labour."[2563]

5832. para. 1376: No evidence of enslavement was led in relation to Peacock Farm.[2564]

5833. para. 1377: In reaching the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has taken into account the evidence adduced, in particular the testimony of Prosecution witnesses TF1-024, TF1-227, TF1-084, TF1-023, TF1-085, George Johnson and TF1-334.

5834. para. 1378: The Trial Chamber has considered the evidence of Prosecution witnesses TF1-023 and TF1-085 in its findings under Count 9[2565] and TF1-157 under Count 12.[2566] The evidence therein establishes beyond reasonable doubt that these witnesses were enslaved in Freetown and the Western Area. Their testimony is considered below insofar as it demonstrates that an unknown number of other civilians were abducted and used as forced labour.

c. Freetown – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5835. para. 1379: Prosecution witness George Johnson testified that as the AFRC faction advanced on Freetown on 6 January 1999, they were accompanied by a large number of abductees who carried arms, ammunition and foodstuffs.[2567]

5836. para. 1380: Approximately three weeks later, at a meeting of senior commanders in the Upgun area during the retreat from Freetown, 'Gullit' ordered that troops should begin abducting civilians, saying that this would attract the attention of the international community.[2568] Witness TF1-334 subsequently observed troops breaking into houses and capturing civilians, especially young girls, and taking them to headquarters at the PWD.[2569] The witness stated that at this time 'almost everybody had civilians,' including the commanders.[2570] It was the responsibility of the abducting commander to ensure that the civilians were 'well-secured', which the witness explained meant that they could not escape.[2571]

d. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5837. para. 1381: While the troop was based at Ferry Junction, during the retreat from Freetown, 'Gullit' issued a further order for abductions to start again.[2572] As ECOMOG advanced towards Ferry Junction, the AFRC withdrew towards Kissy. In accordance with the Accused Brima's orders, the troops captured civilians as they withdrew. These civilians were taken to Kissy Mental Home.[2573]

5838. para. 1382: This evidence is corroborated by Witness TF1-084, who was in Kissy, Freetown, during the January 1999 retreat. He observed 'rebels' in military dress capturing people, putting them in vehicles and driving them away. The witness testified that among those captured he recognised a 14 year old girl. He did not see any of the people captured again.[2574]

e. Calaba Town – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5839. para. 1383: Witness TF1-024 testified that on 8 January 1999, he was captured in Freetown by three armed rebel boys who were dressed in ECOMOG uniforms and taken to State House.[2575] The rebel boys who had captured the witness beat him and then locked him inside the kitchen at State House.[2576] The witness stated that there were 50 other civilians in the kitchen and they remained locked there for four days without food or water.[2577] After four days, as ECOMOG approached State House, the rebels forced witness TF1-024 and the other civilians to accompany them on their flight out of Freetown. The rebels made the witness carry a heavy bomb to Calaba Town.[2578] At Calaba Town, the rebels took the bomb from witness TF1-024 and he escaped.[2579]

5840. para. 1384: On the afternoon of 22 January 1999, witness TF1-023 and ten other civilians were captured by an armed young boy in Calaba Town. The boy was with a group of about 200 people, consisting of rebels and civilians whom the rebels had just captured.[2580] The rebels took the civilians to a location that the witness was unable to identify. The civilians were told that they had been captured to use as human shields, but that they would not be harmed and so they should not be scared. The rebels gave the civilians food and the boy that had captured Witness TF1-023 gave her a small bag to carry. The following day, the civilians were taken to Allen Town, where they met around 300-400 armed rebels and around 100 other civilians.[2581] The civilians were guarded by armed boys that prevented them from moving around freely.[2582]

f. Other locations in Freetown and Western Area – Crimes

5841. para. 1385: In late January 1999, witness TF1-227 was captured in Kola Tree by soldiers who accused him of being a Kamajor.[2583] Witness TF1-227 remained in captivity for 10 months. At Kola Tree, there were about 200 civilians who were forced by the AFRC to join them in the retreat to Benguema.[2584]

5842. para. 1386: While the above evidence relates primarily to abductions, the Trial Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the following evidence that AFRC soldiers used the civilians abducted during the retreat from Freetown as forced labour.

5843. para. 1387: Witness TF1-227 testified that during the retreat to Benguema, AFRC soldiers used civilians to carry loads, perform domestic tasks or act as guards.[2585] Witnesses TF1-334 and TF1-227 testified that when the troops arrived at Benguema, they were accompanied by several hundred civilians who had been abducted in Freetown. During the month in which the troops were based there, the civilians went on food finding missions, pounded rice, carried looted items and participated in cooking.[2586] Witness TF1-334 stated that the civilians were obliged to perform these tasks because there was no way that they could escape.[2587]

5844. para. 1388: From Benguema, the troops retreated to Newton, where they remained about a month, performing similar tasks.[2588] At Newton, 'Five-Five' was responsible for all the young girls at the camp. Witness TF1-334 observed problems with the girls being reported to him.[2589]

(vii) Port Loko District – Crimes

5845. para. 1390: The Indictment alleges that "[a]bout the month of February 1999, the AFRC/RUF fled from Freetown to various locations in the Port Loko District. Members of the AFRC/RUF used civilians, including those that had been abducted from Freetown and the Western Area, as forced labour in various locations throughout the Port Loko District including Port Loko, Lunsar and Masiaka. AFRC/RUF forces also abducted and used as forced labour civilians from various locations in the Port Loko District, including Tendakum and Nonkoba".[2590]

5846. para. 1391: In arriving at the following findings, the Trial Chamber has examined the entire evidence in relation to enslavement in Port Loko District, in particular the testimony of witnesses TF1-334 and George Johnson. No evidence was adduced of enslavement in February 1999 in Port Loko, Lunsar, Tendakum and Nonkoba.

a. Other locations in Port Loko District – Crimes

5847. para. 1392: In Mammah Town, the troops were ordered by the Accused Kamara to use civilians to dig a large ditch in the road to create an obstacle for ECOMOG forces. Civilians did so, using pick axes, under the supervision of the Accused Kamara.[2591] The Trial Chamber is of the view that this isolated incident of forced labour of short duration does not involve the exercise of powers attaching to the right of ownership over the victims. It is therefore of an insufficient gravity to prove the actus reus of enslavement.

5848. para. 1393: Witnesses testified that about 700 people, including abducted civilians, were at the AFRC base in Gberi Bana under the command of the Accused Kamara[2592] However, in the absence of further evidence as to whether the abductees were used as forced labour, and in light of the evidence of witness TFl-334 that civilians joined the AFRC troops retreating from Benguema did so since they feared for their lives,[2593] the Trial Chamber finds that there is reasonable doubt as to whether these civilians were enslaved.

(d) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – Crimes against humanity ("CAH")

a. The Law

5849. See above: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – The Law - paras. 211 – 213 [1941].

b. There must be an attack

5850. See above: Chapter 2– AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – The Law - There must be an attack - para. 214 [1944].

c. The attack must be widespread or systematic

5851. See above: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – The Law - The attack must be widespread or systematic - para. 215 [1945].

d. The attack must be directed against any civilian population

e. The acts of the perpetrator must be part of the attack

5853. See above: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – The Law - The attack must be directed against any civilian population - para. 220 [1950].

f. The perpetrator must have knowledge that his acts constitute part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against a civilian population

5854. See above: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – The Law - The perpetrator must have knowledge that his acts constitute part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against a civilian population - paras. 220 – 222 [1950].

(ii) CAH – Findings on general requirements

5855. See above: Chapter 2 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law – Crimes against humanity – CAH – Findings on general requirements - para. 224 – 226 [1954].

(iii) Applicable law – Enslavement

5856. para. 739: Count 12 alleges the crime of enslavement by abductions and forced labour, not sexual slavery. Although sexual slavery can lead to a conviction for enslavement, the Trial Chamber has considered the crime of sexual slavery under Count 9 (Outrages upon Personal Dignity).

5857. para. 740: The Accused are charged under Count 13 with enslavement, a crime against humanity, punishable under Article 2(c) of the Statute, in that "[at] all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread and large scale abductions of civilians and use of civilians as forced labour. Forced labour included domestic labour and use as diamond miners."

5858. para. 741: The Indictment alleges that the abductions and forced labour included the districts of Kenema, Kono, Koinadugu, Bombali, Kailahun, Freetown and the Western Area and Port Loko. It is alleged that the Accused, by their acts or omissions in relation to these events, pursuant to Article. 6(1) and, or alternatively, Article 6(3) of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the said crimes.

5859. para. 742: The crime of 'enslavement' has long been criminalised under customary international law. 1434 The Slavery Convention of 1926 defined slavery as "the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised."1435 Being an indication of 'enslavement',[1436] forced labour has been defined as "all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily."[1437]

5860. para. 743: 'Enslavement' was listed both as a war crime and a crime against humanity in the Nuremberg Charter,[1438] with convictions entered on this count in a number of cases.[1439] The International Law Commission consistently included 'enslavement' as a crime against humanity in its Draft Codes of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind.[1440] The ICTY Trial Chamber in the Krnojelac case held that the express prohibition of slavery in Additional Protocol II of 1977, which relates to internal armed conflicts, confirms the conclusion that slavery is prohibited by customary international humanitarian law outside the context of a crime against humanity. The Trial Chamber considers that the prohibition against slavery in situations of armed conflict is an inalienable, non-derogable (sic) and fundamental right, one of the core rules of general customary and conventional international law.[1441]

a. Elements of the crime – Enslavement

5861. para. 744: In Kunarac, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that "enslavement as a crime against humanity in customary international law consisted of the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person"[1442] (actus reus), while the mens rea of the violation consists in the intentional exercise of such powers".[1443]

5862. para. 745: The Kunarac Trial Chamber held that "[u]nder this definition, indications of enslavement include elements of control and ownership; the restriction or control of an individual's autonomy, freedom of choice or freedom of movement; and, often, the accruing of some gain to the perpetrator. The consent or free will of the victim is absent. It is often rendered impossible or irrelevant by, for example, the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion; the fear of violence, deception or false promises; the abuse of power; the victim's position of vulnerability; detention or captivity, psychological oppression or socio-economic conditions. Further indications of enslavement include exploitation; the exaction of forced or compulsory labour or service, often without remuneration and often, though not necessarily, involving physical hardship; sex; prostitution; and human trafficking."[1444]

5863. para. 746: The ICTY Appeals Chamber further clarified this definition by finding that "lack of consent" is not an element of the crime of enslavement, although it may be a significant issue in terms of evidence of the status of the alleged victim.[1445]

5864. para. 747: The definition set forth in Kunarac was later reiterated in Krnojelac, in which it was stated that enslavement as a crime against humanity was the "exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person. The actus reus of enslavement is the exercise of those powers, and the mens rea is the intentional exercise of such powers."[1446]

5865. para. 748: In Krnojelac, the allegations concerned enslavement for the purpose of forced labour.[1447] It was held by the Chamber that to establish forced labour constituting enslavement, the Prosecutor must demonstrate that "the Accused (or persons for whose actions he is criminally responsible) forced the detainees to work, that he (or they) exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over them, and that he (or they) exercised those powers intentionally."[1448]

5866. para. 749: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Crimes against Humanity pursuant to Article 2 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber therefore adopts the following elements of the crime of enslavement:

1. The perpetrator exercised any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over one or more persons, such as by purchasing, selling, lending or bartering such a person or persons, or by imposing on them a similar deprivation of liberty;

2. the intentional exercise of such powers.[1449]

(iv) Kenema District– Enslavement

a. Tongo Fields – Kenema District – Enslavement

5867. para. 1309: On the basis of the preceding evidence, and without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 1 August 1997 and about 31 January 1998, the AFRC/RUF forced an unknown number of civilians to mine for diamonds at Cyborg Pit in Tongo Field in Kenema

District. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of enslavement, as charged in Count 13, are established.

(v) Kono District– Enslavement

a. Tombodu, Koidu and Wondedu – Enslavement

5868. para. 1333: In light of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 to January 2000, an unknown number of civilians were abducted and used as forced labour in various locations in Kono District, including Tombodu, by AFRC/RUF forces under the command of 'Savage'. The Trial Chamber is further satisfied that in this same period, RUF forces abducted an unknown number of civilians and used them as forced labour at various locations in Kono District, including the RUF camp known as 'Joe Bush', Koidu Town and Yengema. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds, without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, that the elements in relation to Count 13 have been established.

(vi) Koinadugu District– Enslavement

a. Kabala, Kumala, Koinadugu and 'Other locations' in Koinadugu District – Enslavement

5869. para. 1350: In light of the preceding evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, an unknown number of civilians were abducted and used as forced labour by AFRC/RUF forces in various locations in Koinadugu District, including Kabala, Kumala, Koinadugu, Yifin and Yomadugu. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds, without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, that the elements in relation to Count 13 have been established.

(vii) Bombali District– Enslavement

a. Journey to Rosos and Rosos - Enslavement

5870. para. 1363: In light of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 1 May 1998 and 30 November 1998, an unknown number of civilians were abducted and used as forced labour, as well as being forced to undergo military training, by AFRC troops in various locations in Bombali District including Bomoya, Kamagbengbeh, Karina, Daraya, Mayogbo, Kagbemneh, Kamanameh, Kamatelun, Kamabai, Rosos and Gbendembu. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds, without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, that the elements in relation to Count 13 have been established in Bombali District.

(viii) Kailahun – Enslavement

5871. para. 1374: In light of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that during the Indictment period, RUF troops abducted an unknown number of civilians and used them as forced labour, including military training, in various locations in Kailahun District, including Jagbwema Town, Buedu and Bunumbu. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the elements of enslavement, as charged in Count 13, are established. However, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not established beyond reasonable doubt that AFRC troops were involved in the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District.

(ix) Freetown and Western Area – Enslavement

a. Freetown, Kissy, Calaba Town and 'Other locations' in Freetown and Western Area – Enslavement

5872. para. 1389: On the basis of the evidence above, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, members of the AFRC abducted large numbers of civilians from locations including Freetown, Kissy, Calaba Town and Kola Tree and used these civilians as forced labour in locations including Benguema and Newton in the Western Area. The Trial Chamber accordingly finds, without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, that the elements in relation to Count 13 have been established.

(x) Port Loko District – Enslavement

5873. para. 1394: The Trial Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has failed to establish that civilians were enslaved in February 1999 in Port Loko District.

(xi) Responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers

5874. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Responsibility for Crimes of Enslavement, Sexual Slavery and Child Soldiers - paras. 1820-1837 [8191], 1970-1972 [8208], 2089-2098 [8211].

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-A, Judgement, 22 February 2008

(a) Factual Findings

5876. Not applicable.

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

a. Prosecution's Second Ground of Appeal: Locations Not Pleaded in the Indictment

i. Trial Chamber's Findings

5877. para. 46: The substance of the Prosecution's Second Ground of Appeal is that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in failing to make findings on the responsibility of each Appellant in respect of crimes committed in several locations in Koindugu and Bombali Districts, Freetown and other parts of the Western Area and in Port Loko District including other locations enumerated in the Ground of Appeal, in respect of which evidence had been led.

5878. para. 47: The Trial Chamber in ruling on the submission of Brima complaining among other things, that the Indictment was impermissibly vague, because particulars of where the crimes occurred were not given, stated that:

> "the Prosecution has led a considerable amount of evidence with respect to killings, sexual violence, physical violence, enslavement and pillage which occurred in locations not charged in the indictment [and that] while such evidence > may support proof of the existence of an armed conflict or a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population, no finding of guilt for those crimes may be made in respect of such locations not mentioned in the indictment."[91]

5879. para. 48: It had been pleaded in several paragraphs of the Indictment that particular acts took place in several named locations in named Districts. It was made clear that the named locations were not exhaustive of the locations where the acts took place. An example is paragraph 45 of the Indictment where it was alleged that "members of AFRC/RUF unlawfully killed several hundred civilians in various locations in Kono District, including Koidu, Tombodu, Foindu, Willifeh, Mortema and Biaya." Commenting on this manner of pleading the Trial Chamber stated:

> "Moreover, the jurisprudence of international criminal tribunals makes it clear that an accused is entitled to know the case against him and is entitled to assume that any list of alleged acts contained in an indictment is exhaustive, regardless of the inclusion of words such as "including", which may imply that other unidentified crimes in other locations are being charged as well."[92]

5880. para. 49: The Trial Chamber found that with respect to crimes alleged in the Indictment, the Prosecution led evidence of offences which occurred in locations not specifically pleaded. As a consequence, it held that with the exception of Counts 9, 12 and 13 the crimes of recruitment of child soldiers, abductions and forced labour and sexual slavery (the three "enslavement crimes"), the Indictment was defective and that it would not make any findings on crimes perpetrated in locations not specifically pleaded. It is to be noted that the exception made by the Trial Chamber was because the Accused had "not specifically objected to lack of specificity with respect to locations [in] relation to enslavement, sexual slavery and child soldier recruitment in Counts 9,[93] 12 and 13," and that in the interest of justice they would treat pleading of those counts as permissible. The Trial Chamber held that evidence of crimes perpetrated in locations not specifically pleaded would only be considered "for proof of the chapeau requirements of Articles 2, 3 and 4 where appropriate, that is the widespread or systematic nature of the crimes and an armed conflict."[94]

ii. Prosecution's Submissions

5881. para. 50: The Prosecution submits that contrary to the Trial Chamber's findings, "locations" were properly pleaded in the Indictment and that in the alternative any defects in the Indictment were cured by providing timely, clear and consistent information to the Accused.[95]

5882. para. 51: It submits that the Indictment is not defective with respect to the pleading of locations and that whilst certain locations may not have been listed exhaustively, they were nonetheless correctly pleaded. The Indictment uses the terms "various" and 'including" to demonstrate clearly that named locations within districts of Sierra Leone were not an exhaustive list of locations where alleged crimes occurred. This it is argued is sufficient for an Indictment to be properly pleaded and satisfies the requirement that material facts must be pleaded with sufficient specificity in an indictment.

5883. para. 52: In support of its argument, the Prosecution submitted that Kamara had filed a preliminary motion at the pre-trial stage alleging just such a lack of specificity in the pleading of locations in the Indictment.[96] Kamara's argument, however, was expressly rejected by Trial Chamber I[97] which had at the time dealt with the preliminary motion. Consequently, the Prosecution contends that Trial Chamber II's finding in its Judgment that locations were not properly pleaded, amounted to a "[reversal of] previous interlocutory decisions in the case .. or [a decision] proprio motu that the Indictment was defective."[98] It further argues that in so doing, Trial Chamber II committed an error of law or procedure in that it reversed a previous interlocutory decision "without first giving the parties the opportunity to argue the point."[99]

5884. para. 53: The Prosecution further asserts that apart from Kamara's preliminary motion, the Accused never raised an objection with respect to the pleading of locations in the Indictment. In particular, the Accused did not raise the issue in motions for acquittal pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules, nor did the Trial Chamber in its Rule 98 Decision give notice to the: Parties that it "had taken a decision not to consider evidence relating to locations not specifically pleaded ... otherwise than for the purpose of establishing whether there was a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population."[100]

5885. para. 54: The Prosecution submits, that as it was not aware that the Trial Chamber would not consider evidence relating to locations not specifically pleaded in the Indictment, and was never afforded an opportunity to make representations on the issue,[101] it was "entitled to proceed at trial on the basis that the Indictment was not defective in pleading the locations in the way that it did ...."[102]

5886. para. 55: The Prosecution further submits that as a general principle of law, locations of crimes should be pleaded in an indictment but that the degree of specificity depends on the nature of the Prosecution's case. In circumstances where crimes are alleged on a large scale, details of precise locations of events need not be pleaded.[103] It further submits that the Trial Chamber recognised these principles and the large scale and prolonged nature of the conflict in Sierra Leone. Notwithstanding this recognition, it argues that the Trial Chamber failed to apply the law with respect to the pleading of locations.[104]

5887. para. 56: Finally, the Prosecution submits that the Appellant" made no motions during the trial ... in respect of Prosecution evidence of crimes in locations not specifically pleaded ... [and that therefore, the Appellant] waived their right to now claim [they were] prejudiced."[105] This failure to object, it argued, requires the Appellant to bear the burden of establishing that the pleading of locations in the Indictment was defective, and of establishing that their ability to prepare a defence was materially impaired by that defect.[106]

5888. para. 57: As a consequence of its submissions, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber to revise the Trial Chamber's finding or remit matters back to the Trial Chamber for further "findings of fact on whether each of the Accused is individually responsible for these crimes."[107]

iii. Response of the Accused

5889. para. 58: In response, Brima and Kamara contend that Trial. Chamber I's "Decision and Order on Defence Preliminary Motion for Defects in the Form of 1he Indictment" suggests that words as: "such as", "various locations"', or "various areas ... including" are contextual and that in context, that Decision supports the use of such terms only to demonstrate the widespread and systematic nature of an attack.[108] They argue that the Prosecution's contention that it was not put on notice of defects in the Indictment so far as the pleading of locations is concerned is without merit and that the Trial Chamber's "Decision on Defence Motions for Judgement of Acquittal Pursuant to Rule 98" was unambiguous in its meaning and effect.[109]

5890. para. 59: The Appellant Kanu submits that the Indictment failed to specify adequately locations in which certain crimes were committed and was therefore defective.[110] According to Kanu, where an Indictment is found to be defective, consideration must also be given to whether the Appellant was accorded a fair trial. In this instance, Kanu insists that he was entitled to assume that the list of alleged locations in the Indictment was exhaustive. He contends that "the word 'including' in the Indictment, in so far as it left the list of places open, did not make it clear that the crimes in question were also committed in locations ... other than those expressly mentioned."[111] According to Kanu, this defect materially affected his ability to prepare his defence and is contrary to the general principle of law requiring that "the location of crimes alleged to have been committed be specified in the Indictment with as much clarity as possible so that the Accused is not materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence."[112]

5891. para. 60: All the Appellants therefore submit that the Trial Chamber correctly arrived at its conclusion and in so doing protected the fair trial rights of the Appellant.

iv. Discussion: Reversal of a Previous Interlocutory Decision

5892. para. 61: We find that Trial Chamber II reconsidered the decision reached by Trial Chamber I and came to a different conclusion with respect to the pleading of locations in the Indictment.

5893. para. 62: It seems to us that the following questions arise for determination:

> (i) Whether Trial Chamber II properly reconsidered issues relating to the alleged defects in the Indictment;
> (ii) If Trial Chamber II had such power, whether it ought not to have given the parties an opportunity to be heard on the matter.

5894. para. 63: In the Ntagerura et al. case, the ICTR Appeals Chamber held that it falls within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to reconsider a previous decision is a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to prevent an injustice. We endorse that opinion. Consequently, whether or not an issue relating to the form of an indictment should be reconsidered should be determined on a case-by-case basis having regard to the state of proceedings, the issues raised by the earlier decision and the effect of reconsideration or reversal on the rights of the Parties.

5895. para. 64: With regard to question (ii) the Parties ought to have been given an opportunity to be heard on the matter as natural justice demands. However, even if they failed to accord the Parties that opportunity, this Chamber has the power to review the situation and come to its own conclusion in the interest of justice. In all the circumstances of the case, we opine that the Trial Chamber's error in not expressly giving notice to the Parties of its intention to reconsider the pre-trial decision, and its failure to re-open the hearings did not invalidate the decision. The Trial Chamber's limited treatment of the evidence of crimes committed in such locations was a proper exercise of its discretion in the interest of justice, taking into account that it .s the Prosecution's obligation to plead clearly material facts it intends to prove, so as to afford the Appellants a fair trial.

5896. para. 65: The Prosecution's Second Ground of Appeal therefore fails.

CHAPTER 11 – PILLAGE

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

5902. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:[321]

(ii) Count 1: Terrorizing the civilian population

5903. Members of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, including members and ex-members of the NPFL (Liberian fighters), assisted or encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, burned civilian property, and committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 6 through 31 and charged in Counts 2 through 11, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.[322]

(iii) Count 11: Looting

> Count 11: Pillage, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute

5904. Between about 30 November 1996 and about 18 January 2002, members of RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and/or Liberian fighters, assisted and encouraged by, acting in concert with, under the direction and/or control of, and/or subordinate to the ACCUSED, engaged in widespread unlawful taking of civilian property, including the following:[323]

[323] Taylor Indictment, para. 28.

i. Kono District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, in various locations including Koidu, Tombodu or Tumbodu, and Bumpe;[324]

ii. Bombali District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 April 1998, in various locations, including Makeni;[325]

iii. Port Loko District: Between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 April 1998, in various locations, including Masiaka;[326]

iv. Freetown and Western Area: Between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, throughout Freetown and the Western Area.[327]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District – Crimes

5905. para. 1879: The Prosecution submits that the looting which occurred in Kono District "marked the culmination of Operation Pay Yourself and, thereafter, the settlement of the District by AFRC/RUF forces. Looting also took place during the Indictment timeframe in the context of Kono being declared a 'No Go Zone for Civilians'".[4164]

5906. para. 1880: Several witnesses testified to various acts of looting in areas of Kono District outside of Koidu and Tombodu[4165] or to looting in the District generally, without specifying a more precise location.[4166] Such evidence does not fall within the scope of the Indictment, and is relevant only insofar as it demonstrates that the activity was widespread, and therefore assists in establishing the chapeau requirements. Evidence of looting in Kono District prior to the Indictment period[4167] and after the Indictment period[4168] has not been considered.

a. Koidu Town – Kono District – Crimes

5907. para. 1881: The Trial Chamber relies on the evidence of Sheku Bah Kuyateh, Samuel Bull, Perry Kamara, TF1-371, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, TF1-367, Dennis Koker and Issa Sesay in relation to these allegations.

5908. para. 1882: Sheku Bah Kuyateh, who was in Koidu Town in mid-February 1998,[4169] testified that "[t]he very day that we heard that ECOMOG had dislodged the juntas from Freetown, on that same day the juntas [both AFRC and RUF troops][4170] started looting right from the first day and the following day they continued their looting spree".[4171] Although the civilian population of Koidu Town temporarily "dislodged" the "juntas"[4172] and invited the Kamajors in to defend the town,[4173] the town came under attack two weeks later and the witness fled along with much of the civilian population.[4174] Upon returning to Koidu Town a couple of days later, Kuyateh observed that those who had perpetrated the attack on Koidu, were led by a member of the RUF[4175] and "were looting and they were on an operation that they referred to as Operation Pay Yourself".[4176] This looting spree continued for two days.[4177] Kutateh further testified that later, in April 1998,[4178] there was "rampant looting"[4179] in Koidu Town.

5909. para. 1883: TF1-375 gave evidence that approximately a month after the ECOMOG Intervention "[w]e attacked Kono and we took over the town. We started looting".[4180] Kuyateh and TF1-375 described this as the first attack on Koidu following the ECOMOG intervention.[4181]

5910. para. 1884: Samuel Bull testified that in February 1998, Koidu Town was subject to "a lot of looting […] done by the AFRC and the People's Army. They broke into shops using guns and they took everything from the shops".[4182] The witness did not see the property taken away but he saw the empty shops and other consequences of the alleged attack.[4183]

5911. para. 1885: Witness Alice Pyne testified that she was in Gaya, in Kono District, when she heard from civilians and members of the RUF and AFRC coming from Koidu Town that looting took place in Koidu Town as part of "Operation Pay Yourself".[4184]

5912. para. 1886: There is also evidence of the looting of a bank in Koidu Town. In this regard, the Prosecution asserts that before AFRC and RUF forces "burned Koidu Town to the ground", the Commercial Bank in Koidu Town was looted. The Prosecution submits that the "[w]hile the details vary as to whether the raid was carried out on the orders of Superman, the evidence is consistent that it was members of the AFRC/RUF who carried out the raid and that the money and diamonds taken were later taken to Sam Bockarie in Buedu".[4185]

5913. para. 1887: TF1-367 stated that upon the arrival of in Koidu Town of the RUF/AFRC and STF fighters that had left Freetown following the February 1998 ECOMOG Intervention,[4186] a group of SLAs and STF organised to break into a bank in Koidu.[4187] The break-in occurred at night and was the first joint operation of the SLAs and the STF.[4188] TF1-367 testified that when Superman learned of the break-in from his bodyguards,[4189] Superman ordered Ray, Peleto and others to go and find the perpetrators.[4190] Some escaped, but others were arrested and the money seized.[4191] The money was in Superman's possession when Sam Bockarie sent a message for Superman to give the money to TF1-367 to take to Bockarie in Kailahun.[4192] Superman then gave 56 million leones to TF1-367 in a travelling bag to deliver to Sam Bockarie.[4193]

5914. para. 1888: Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a member of the AFRC, testified that he participated in the looting of the bank just prior to the ECOMOG bombardment of Koidu Town which occurred in the post-Intervention period.[4194] The witness stated that he, Superman and Bomb Blast broke into the bank and took six bags of money.[4195] The money was in Superman's possession until it was given to Eldred Collins in Koidu Gieya to bring to Kailahun.[4196] The witness said that Superman told him and the other looters that Mosquito had called and told them that the money should be taken to Kailahun.[4197]

5915. para. 1889: TF1-371 was in Kailahun Town when he learned about the robbery of the Commercial Bank in Koidu Town, which happened during the post-ECOMOG Intervention period.[4198] TF1-371 testified that when Sam Bockarie heard about the looting, he instructed Denis Mingo, aka Superman, to take the looted money from the bank and to bring it to him in Buedu.[4199]

5916. para. 1890: Witness Dennis Koker testified that during the attack on Koidu Town in the post- ECOMOG Intervention period, RUF and AFRC fighters broke into the bank and stole money and diamonds.[4200] Koker stated that he saw the fighters break into the bank and saw 18 bags of money taken from the premises.[4201] Koker testified that he was there and "saw it all".[4202] After the bank was robbed, he left for Gandorhun with Johnny Paul Koroma, Morris Kallon and others.[4203]

5917. para. 1891: Defence witness Issa Sesay testified that in early April 1998, AFRC, RUF and STF fighters broke into a bank in Kono.[4204] Issa Sesay heard that Superman arrested the perpetrators when he found out about the break-in.[4205]

5918. para. 1892: Witness Perry Kamara, a radio operator, was in Koidu Town at the time the Commercial Bank was looted during the post ECOMOG Intervention period.[4206] Kamara

testified that Superman implemented the orders of Sam Bockarie to "destroy" the bank.[4207] Kamara stated that the bank was "destroyed" and that he saw leones, sterling pounds, US dollars and a cup half filled with diamonds in Superman's house.[4208] The proceeds were recorded and the information sent to Sam Bockarie.[4209]

5919. para. 1893: Prosecution witnesses and Defence witness Issa Sesay all testified that the bank in Koidu Town was looted by AFRC, RUF and STF fighters in February or March or April 1998. The evidence also establishes that cash was taken from the bank.

5920. para. 1894: In another incidence of looting, witness Gibril Sesay testified that in Koidu in February 1998[4210] a group of armed "juntas and RUF rebels"[4211] "went around midnight knocking at doors, raping women, looting people's property"[4212] and that "[a]fter looting people's property they took away those property".[4213] The witness went on to say that this group looted his baling machine and some of his furniture.[4214] The witness estimated that the baling machine had a market value of 500,000 leones but was unsure as to the value of the furniture.[4215]

b. Tombodu - Kono District – Crimes

5921. para. 1895: Witness Sahr Bindi testified that members of the RUF and AFRC violently looted his and his family's property[4216] in the "bush" around Tombodu.[4217] A group of AFRC and RUF troops approached the hut in which Bindi was living, ordered the inhabitants to leave the hut and demanded that they hand over food and valuable property, including diamonds, or face death.[4218] Bindi stated that "they blindfolded us, they beat us up and they asked us to take out the money and the diamonds, the palm oil, the rice and we said we did not have and they tripped us and we fell into the ants, and they pointed a gun in my stomach and they said if I did not take out the money and the diamonds they would kill me".[4219] The witness was beaten and stabbed in the head during this incident, leaving a scar that he showed to the Trial Chamber during his testimony.[4220] Fearing that "death was near" Bindi provided the fighters with money, a bike and food.[4221]

5922. para. 1896: Bindi estimated that the attack on Tombodu had occurred in February 1998[4222] during the dry season.[4223] He stated that he had moved to Tombodu from Koidu because of an AFRC/RUF attack on Koidu Town. He was unable to remember the date of the attack on Koidu Town, but it had occurred after the re-instatement of President Kabbah.[4224] President Kabbah was re-instated in March 1998.[4225] Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the looting described by the witness took place during the Indictment period.

c. Bumpe – Kono District – Crimes

5923. para. 1897: The Trial Chamber relies on the evidence of Perry Kamara and Ruko Turay in relation to allegations of looting in Bumpe.

5924. para. 1898: Perry Kamara testified that RUF and AFRC forces retreated from Freetown in February 1998,[4226] passing through Bumpe, amongst other towns and villages, and that, as they went along, they looted civilian goods and abducted school children and women from their husbands "and they killed the husbands".[4227]

5925. para. 1899: Ruko Turay confirmed testimony she had given in the RUF Case, a transcript of which was admitted into evidence.[4228] Turay testified in the RUF Case that, while in her home in Bumpe in the rainy season of 1998, a young man in combat uniform – a rebel[4229] - took "the better articles" from her bag. "The ones he didn't want he threw away. The others he went away with them".[4230] The witness testified that later the rebels removed all her clothes and left her naked and she was then raped. She heard one of the rebels say: "We have got clothes. We have got rice. We have got everything".[4231] The rebel who had taken her things came back with them and placed them down near her while he raped her.[4232] The witness stated that the rebels declared that they were going to kill her and the other women held captive so, when she got the chance, she fled naked into the bush. As she fled, a rebel shot at her, hitting her in the hand.[4233]

(ii) Bombali District – Crimes

a. Makeni – Bombali District – Crimes

5926. para. 1901: Witnesses TF1-367, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Dennis Koker, Alice Pyne and TF1-174 provided first-hand accounts of looting by RUF and AFRC forces in Makeni from February to March 1998 during the looting spree referred to as 'Operation Pay Yourself'.[4235] Their evidence is corroborated by the evidence of Issa Sesay, who arrived in Makeni after the looting had occurred,[4236] Charles Ngebeh[4237] and Exhibit P-303, a "Humanitarian Situation Report for Sierra Leone" from the Office of the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator, covering the period 21 January to 12 February 1998, which refers to the "abduction" of vehicles in Makeni.

5927. para. 1902: TF1-367, a member of the RUF, testified that he participated in looting in Makeni, and that he and members of the AFRC/RUF and STF forces, shouting "Operation Pay Yourself", looted civilian property such as food, clothing, vehicles and "whatever you came across that could be moved".[4238]

5928. para. 1903: The looting is corroborated by Alimamy Bobson Sesay, who saw RUF members and others break into shops and loot food and other items during this time period.[4239]

5929. para. 1904: Alimamy Bobson Sesay also testified that he was in Makeni for two days during Operation Pay Yourself[4240] and that during this time, he, Ibrahim Bazzy Kamara and Hassan Papa Bangura (also known as "Bomb Blast") broke into a bank and took money from a safe.[4241]

5930. para. 1905: Dennis Koker testified that he saw RUF rebels looting clothing and household property from civilians in Makeni during this time period.[4242]

5931. para. 1906: Alice Pyne testified that she saw Operation Pay Yourself taking place in Makeni, where AFRC/RUF forces were looting civilians' property from their houses.[4243]

5932. para. 1907: TF1-174 testified that looting in Makeni began on 17 February 1998 and continued until 2 or 3 March 1998.[4244] The witness gave evidence that, during this period, combined RUF and AFRC forces engaged in Operation Pay Yourself, in which they looted the seminary, the schools, civilian houses, including his own, and the bishop's vehicles at the mission.[4245]

5933. para. 1908: Defence witness Issay Sesay testified that AFRC/RUF forces carried out Operation Pay Yourself in Makeni by taking people's property and cars forcefully from them. Shops, houses and even a Catholic hospital were looted.[4246]

5934. para. 1909: Defence witness Charles Ngebeh admitted in cross-examination that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in looting from the time they retreated from Freetown until they reached Kono, including looting in Masiaka, Makeni, the Peninsula Road route, Fogbo and Koidu. Ngebeh agreed that the looting was called "Operation Pay Yourself".[4247]

(iii) Port Loko District – Crimes

a. Masiaka – Port Loko District – Crimes

5935. para. 1912: Witnesses TF1-371, Dennis Koker, Charles Ngebeh and Issa Sesay gave evidence of looting in Masiaka by the AFRC/RUF forces in the period from 1 February 1998 to 30 April 1998.

5936. para. 1913: Prosecution witness TF1-371 testified that during this time period in Masiaka he observed that civilians were forced out of their houses by the combatants, who looted whatever civilian property they could lay their hands on.[4250]

5937. para. 1914: Prosecution witness Dennis Koker testified that he travelled through Masiaka during the retreat from Freetown after the February 1998 ECOMOG Intervention, and that his "colleagues" entered into civilians' houses and took property from them, including food, motorcycles, and bicycles.[4251] Koker testified that the perpetrators were "[t]he group in which I was, RUF, the juntas, we were all one group now".[4252]

5938. para. 1915: Defence witness Charles Ngebeh testified in cross-examination that AFRC/RUF forces engaged in looting from the time they retreated from Freetown until they reached Kono, including looting in Masiaka, Makeni, the Peninsula Road route, Fogbo and Koidu. Ngebeh agreed that the looting was called "Operation Pay Yourself".[4253]

5939. para. 1916: Defence witness Issa Sesay testified that when the AFRC/RUF forces reached Masiaka they entered civilian homes and took people's property from them. Sesay said that "that was what they called Operation Pay Yourself, because if you saw someone's vehicle and you commandeered it, when the person was not willing to hand it over to you, that was paying yourself".[4254]

(iv) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5940. para. 1919: The Prosecution submits that the looting in Freetown and the Western Area from 21 December 1998 to 28 February 1999 occurred in the context of the Freetown attack, and that it was widespread and committed in conjunction with other crimes.[4257]

5941. para. 1920: In considering these allegations, the Trial Chamber relies on the evidence of TF1-143, Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Perry Kamara, Abu Bakarr Mansaray, Paul Nabieu Conteh, Allusein Conteh, Mohammed Sampson Bah, Samuel Radder John, TF1-021, TF1-083, TF1-026, Ibrahim Wai, Akiatu Tholley, Sarah Koroma and Exhibits P-077 and P-328.

a. Freetown and the Western Area in general – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5942. para. 1921: TF1-143 testified that he was a small boy when he was abducted by an RUF commander named Kabila[4258] and taken to SAJ Musa's group, which was a mix of AFRC and RUF fighters.[4259] "It was AFRC who made up – who was dominant, but they were mixed. Some of them wore black and they had red bandanas on their heads. Kabila told us that we were mixed in the group. That is SAJ Musa's group. We were mixed with RUF and AFRC".[4260]

5943. para. 1922: TF1-143 testified that on the evening of SAJ Musa's burial,[4261] he and the mixed group of RUF and AFRC he was with came to Waterloo Junction and headed towards Freetown.[4262] He testified that his group broke into and looted shops on the way to Freetown.[4263]

5945. para. 1924: Perry Kamara testified that he heard that, while Rambo's forces and the Red Lion Battalion retreated from Freetown after the January 1999 invasion, the civilians who were with them carried "loads of properties that had been looted from civilians in Freetown".[4268]

5946. para. 1925: Exhibit P-328, a Human Rights Watch Report from July 1999, stated that, in conjunction with the January 1999 Freetown attack, "the rebels went on systematic looting raids in which families were hit by wave after wave of rebels demanding money and valuables".[4269] Confidential Exhibit P-077 also indicated that during the first days of the January 1999 rebel offensive in Freetown and in the subsequent period, rebels engaged in "widespread theft of money and looting of residences and business properties".[4270]

5947. para. 1926: Based on the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4271] intentionally appropriated property without the consent of the owners throughout Freetown and the Western Area during the Indictment period.

5948. para. 1927: The Prosecution also adduced the following specific incidences of looting at places within Freetown and the Western Area.

5949. State House and Berry Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes para. 1928: Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that on 6 January 1999, he and other members of the AFRC/RUF forces broke into the UN House and "commandeered" vehicles, which they took to State House.[4272] These vehicles were later used by Gullit and other senior commanders.[4273]

5950. para. 1929: Witness Abu Bakarr Mansaray[4274] confirmed testimony he had given in the AFRC Case, a transcript of which was admitted into evidence.[4275] In that case, he testified that he was abducted by Gullit's forces as they retreated from Freetown following the attack on the capitol in January 1999.[4276] During this retreat, the witness observed rebels looting properties.[4277] He testified that he saw the retreating rebels loot from the Vice President's office, loot a car on Berry Street and also loot the car of the witness's father.[4278] He also testified that the rebels looted his shirt, trousers and shoes.[4279]

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5951. para. 1931: TF1-143 testified that following SAJ Musa's burial[4280] he and seven other boys working under the command of Adama Cut Hand looted things from a shop and loaded them into a vehicle.[4281] While the boys were looting the shop, two men present in the shop protested against the looting.[4282] As Adama Cut Hand had instructed the boys to bring any civilians to her who objected to having their possessions taken, the witness and the other boys took the two men to Adama Cut Hand. She then amputated an arm from each man.[4283]

5952. para. 1932: Following this incident, TF1-143 went with another of Adama Cut Hand's boys, to Kissy Market where the boys attempted to enter another shop with two men inside.[4284] When the two men would not open the door, they forcibly entered the shop and amputated a hand from each man.[4285] TF1-143 further recalled that, after the amputations, "[w]hilst they were crying we just took what we wanted from the shop and we went".[4286]

c. Falcon Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5953. para. 1934: Allusein Conteh testified that a "gang" arrived on Falcon Street in Kissy sometime around 8 January 1999 and demanded to stay at his house.[4288] The apparent leader of the gang, as well as the women and children in the gang, wore civilian clothes, and there were other men and boys in the gang also wearing civilian clothes.[4289] The witness recalled that they called each other "junta"[4290] and he concluded that they belonged to the RUF because they were not wearing uniforms; they came in plain clothes and had young girls with them.[4291]

5954. para. 1935: During their stay in the area, the witness testified that this gang took and slaughtered a sheep and was "going around taking people's chickens and asking the boys around to take people's chickens around and they killed them".[4292]

5955. para. 1936: Allusein Conteh testified further that two or three days after the departure of this gang, two or three other men, whom he described as "combatants" because they were wearing military uniforms,[4293] came to his house on Falcon Street.[4294] After searching the house, the combatants threatened him and demanded money.[4295] They then cocked a gun at his back.[4296] The witness gave the combatants 50,000 Leones and they went away.[4297]

d. Rowe Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5956. para. 1938: Mohammed Sampson Bah confirmed testimony he had given in the AFRC Trial,[4298] a transcript of which was admitted into evidence.[4299] In the AFRC case he testified that on or about 6 January 1999 "rebels" dressed in military clothing arrived in Kissy and "raided the area".[4300] The witness also testified that later in the month of January the rebels began "taking people's properties".[4301] The "rebels" entered people's houses and took their "televisions, radios, whatever is [a] valuable thing, they will take it, put it in a vehicle and go with it".[4302] Bah also testified that a rebel named Akim threatened to turn Kissy into a desert.[4303]

5957. para. 1939: The witness further testified that in January 1999 he, along with some other civilians who were attempting to hide from the rebels, were arrested by the rebels on Rowe Street.[4304] Upon their arrest, "[the rebels] took all we had with us".[4305] After the civilians were placed in a queue, the rebels searched the witness and the others and took what they had, including money.[4306] Bah testified that the rebels took his watch and 200 dollars from his pocket.[4307] The rebel who took his wristwatch placed it on his own wrist.[4308] Shortly thereafter, the witness's hand was amputated.[4309]

e. Congress Road – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5958. para. 1941: Samuel Radder John testified that when the rebels entered Freetown in January 1999 he met some RUF fighters that he had known some years earlier[4311] and also met someone he had been to school with who was now an RUF rebel.[4312] The witness also confirmed testimony he had given in the AFRC Trial, a transcript of which was admitted into evidence.[4313] In the AFRC Trial, the witness testified that on 18 January 1999 a group of military men entered the establishment in Kissy where the witness was employed.[4314] The witness described the men

as a mix of "junta" and RUF because of their "ordinary and haphazard military attire".[4315] These men used sticks to beat the witness and other civilians.[4316] Later that day he was shot and wounded by these men, but was able to run away.[4317]

5959. para. 1942: The witness collected his family and hid in the hills for about two days. He and his family then returned to his home on Congress Road to collect food and other belongings before fleeing again.[4318] While there, three of these men came back.[4319] The witness testified that two of the men were wearing plain clothes and military trousers and the third man wore a full military uniform and carried a gun.[4320] The witness stated that these were the same men he had encountered earlier at his place of employment.[4321] While the witness was arguing with one of the men, the other two took money and food from his bags, and left.[4322]

f. Rogbalan Mosque – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5960. para. 1944: TF1-021, who is now deceased, testified in the AFRC Trial and a transcript of that testimony was admitted into evidence pursuant to Rule 92quater.[4323] TF1-021 testified in the AFRC Trial that he was present at Rogbalan Mosque on a Friday in January of 1999, between noon and 1 p.m., when a group of men in "mixed up dressings" with charcoal covering their skin entered the mosque.[4324] The group consisted of at least 15 men, some of whom were armed with guns while others were armed with machetes.[4325] The armed men stated "…We are going to kill all of you…"[4326] TF1-021 begged the men to accept money and leave the civilians in peace, but the men refused the money.[4327] TF1-021 then collected a sum of 80,000 Leones from the congregation and offered it to the men "so we [the civilians] could live".[4328] The armed men then told him and the others that "[e]ven if you give us all the money that's in your pocket, we must kill all of you".[4329] The men then accepted the 80,000 leones from the witness, and began firing indiscriminately in the mosque, killing most of the people there.[4330]

5961. para. 1945: TF1-021 testified that he fell to the floor during this shooting, and that after the men stopped shooting, they stood on his stomach.[4331] While he was still on the ground, the men reached into his pocket and took 15,000 Leones.[4332]

g. Kola Tree – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5962. para. 1947: Paul Nabieu Conteh confirmed testimony he had given in the AFRC Trial,[4334] a transcript of which was admitted into evidence.[4335] In that trial, he testified that on 19 January 1999, he and his family left Calaba Town in order to escape hostilities involving an exchange of fire between ECOMOG and the AFRC and RUF.[4336] From Calaba Town, the witness proceeded towards Allen Town, with Jui as his final destination.[4337] Because of ECOMOG barriers, the witness was unable to make it to Jui, so he went to Kola Tree where he stayed at an unfinished house for three days.[4338] While he was there, three soldiers, who the witness identified as members of the AFRC, entered the house.[4339] The apparent leader of these soldiers, who the witness referred to as Corporal Bastard, took the witness's wedding ring and an unspecified amount of money from his pocket.[4340] The other two soldiers went inside the other rooms and "started taking things".[4341] They then made a big bundle out of the items and left.[4342]

h. Thunder Hill and Samuels Area – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5964. para. 1950: TF1-083 testified that a second set of three rebels came to the same house later and "[. .] asked for money, they asked for change. They asked for valuable things. They asked for things to wear".[4347] TF1-083 and the others in the house gave the rebels money and other items.[4348]

5965. para. 1951: TF1-083 testified further that a third set of rebels arrived at the house after the second set had left. This third set of rebels also asked for money, which was handed over by the people inside the house.[4349] This group of rebels then instructed the witness and other civilians to leave the house because more rebels were coming who might kill them.[4350] The witness, along with other civilians, left Thunder Hill and headed to New Road.[4351] When he arrived at the Samuels area, he encountered more rebels who were wearing caps that covered most of their faces and carried guns and machetes.[4352] One of these rebels took the witness's shirt and put it on. The rebels then ordered him and the other civilians to remove their clothes, and as he was removing his trousers, one of the rebels struck him on the waist with a knife and took an unspecified amount of money from his trousers.[4353]

i. Calaba Town – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5966. para. 1953: TF1-026 testified that sometime after 6 January 1999 she and other captured civilians were forced to carry bags filled with things the RUF rebels had taken from the homes of civilians in Calaba Town and along the way to Waterloo.[4355]

j. Tombo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5967. para. 1955: Ibrahim Wai testified that on 23 December 1998 he was told by civilians in the area that rebels had moved from Waterloo to attack Tombo.[4357] That same night "SLA/RUF soldiers" attacked his house in Tombo.[4358] The witness recalled that he awoke in the night and noticed that his neighbour's house was on fire.[4359] The witness took a bag with some belongings and tried to escape his home, but met a rebel named Mohamed at his door. Mohamed pushed him back inside and "[Mohamed] said I should gather all of my things. He took my tape and my bag and he even had the money with him - a tape recorder, my money, my bag".[4360]

k. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5968. para. 1957: Akiatu Tholley testified that her family home was looted on two separate occasions in Wellington in January 1999.[4361] She recalled that on the first occasion, on 5 January 1999, "[t]hey asked my mother to give them money and my mother responded that she hadn't any money. They beat us up and they forced my mother to show them where she had the money and she did and they took the money and returned".[4362] The witness testified that she did not know how much money the rebels took on that occasion.[4363]

5969. para. 1958: Tholley testified that rebels wearing black pants, black shirts and headbands returned to her home the following day.[4364] During this visit, the rebels "took the food that we had and they took it away".[4365] She was unable to identify which specific groups were involved in these attacks, defining them only as "rebels" armed with pistols and machetes.[4366]

5970. para. 1959: Sarah Koroma, as mentioned previously in the section on physical violence, testified that on 6 January 1999 she was at her home in Wellington when rebels wearing "combat"[4367] arrived and she ran into the bush.[4368] She came out of the bush about one week later and she and her husband were captured by rebels who killed her husband and amputated her arm.[4369] After her arm was amputated, the witness was then captured by another set of rebels near the Brewery "around Calaba Town".[4370] (TF1-169, in his statement dated 11 December 2008, places the Brewery in Wellington.[4371]) These rebels, who were armed with a knife and gun, threw beer bottles at her, cut her, and while she lay in a ditch, they reached inside her dress and took 50,000 leones that she had sewn into her underwear.[4372] One of the rebels then returned 5,000 leones to her so that she could seek medical treatment for her amputation wound.[4373]

l. Benguema and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

5971. para. 1961: TF1-143 testified that the mixed group of AFRC and RUF[4375] that he was with looted shops at Benguema "after they had buried SAJ", which was in late December 1998,[4376] and that they then took the highway up to Waterloo and did the same there.[4377]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

5972. See above: Chapter 1 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – paras. 561-565, 567 – 568 [111].

(ii) Applicable law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

5973. See above: Chapter 1 – Taylor – Trial Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Applicable Law – War Crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 571 – 574 [119].

(iii) Applicable law – Pillage

5974. para. 451: The Accused is charged under Count 11 with pillage, a violation of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3(f) of the Statute.[1076]

5975. para. 452: In addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the following specific elements of the crime of pillage must be proved beyond reasonable doubt:

(i) The perpetrator appropriated property;

(ii) The appropriation was without the consent of the owner;

(iii) The perpetrator intended to deprive the owner of the property.[1077]

5976. para. 453: Article 3(f) of the Statute contains a general prohibition against pillage which covers both organised or systematic appropriation and the isolated acts of individuals,[1078] and extends to all types of property, including both public and private property.[1079]

(iv) Kono District – Pillage

5977. para. 1900: Based on the evidence above, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF and STF forces[4234] intentionally appropriated property without the consent of the owners in Koidu Town, Tombodu and Bumpe in Kono District.

(v) Bombali District – Pillage

a. Makeni – Bombali District – Pillage

5978. para. 1910: On the basis of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 April 1998, AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated property without the consent of the owners in Makeni in Bombali District.

5979. para. 1911: The Prosecution also led evidence of looting in Karina Town in Bombali District, which was not pleaded in the Indictment.[4248] As the Trial Chamber has held above,[4249] such evidence does not fall within the scope of the Indictment but is relevant to proof of the chapeau requirements.

(vi) Port Loko District – Pillage

a. Masiaka – Port Loko District – Pillage

5980. para. 1917: On the basis of this evidence the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that between about 1 February 1998 and 30 April 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated property without the consent of the owners in Masiaka in Port Loko District.

5981. para. 1918: The Prosecution also led evidence of pillage in Lunsar in Port Loko District, which was not pleaded in the Indictment.[4255] As the Trial Chamber has held above,[4256] such evidence does not fall within the scope of the Indictment but is relevant to proof of the chapeau requirements.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

a. State House and Berry Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5982. para. 1930: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that during the Indictment period, members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated vehicles without the consent of the owners, which they brought back to State House, and also intentionally appropriated other civilian property without the consent of the owners including a car from Berry Street, items from the Vice President's office, and clothing from the witness.

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5983. para. 1933: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that TF1-143 and his companions, who were members of the AFRC/RUF forces,[4287] intentionally appropriated civilian property from two stores in Kissy without the consent of the owners during the Indictment period.

c. Falcon Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5984. para. 1937: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated a sheep and chickens from civilians in the area of Falcon Street, and also looted 50,000 leones without the consent of the owners.

d. Rowe Street – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5985. para. 1940: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that on or about 6 January 1999 in Kissy members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4310] intentionally appropriated a watch and 200 dollars from Mohammed Sampson Bah without his consent, and in January 1999 on Rowe Street intentionally appropriated other items, including televisions and radios from civilians without their consent.

e. Congress Road – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5986. para. 1943: The Trial Chamber finds that this evidence proves beyond a reasonable doubt that on Congress Road in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated Samuel Radder John's money and food without his consent.

f. Rogbalan Mosque – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5987. para. 1946: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt on this evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4333] intentionally appropriated money from the witness Due to the coercive circumstances that surrounded this event, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the money was taken from the witness without his consent.

g. Kola Tree – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5988. para. 1948: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt on this evidence that at Kola Tree in approximately the end of January 1999 members of the AFRC forces intentionally appropriated various items of civilian property from a house in Kola Tree, as well as Paul Nabieu Conteh's wedding ring and an unspecified amount of his money, without the owners' consent.

h. Thunder Hill and Samuels Area – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5989. para. 1952: The Trial Chamber finds that given the violence shown by the AFRC/RUF forces during the Freetown invasion, and given that the civilians in these incidents were confronted by armed rebels, it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt[4354] that members of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated the money and other possessions taken from the civilians without their consent, and intentionally appropriated TF1-083's clothing and money without TF1-083's consent.

i. Calaba Town – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5990. para. 1954: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on this evidence that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4356] intentionally appropriated property from the homes of civilians without their consent in Calaba Town during the Indictment period.

j. Tombo – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5991. para. 1956: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that on the night of 23 December 1998 a member of the AFRC/RUF forces intentionally appropriated the witness's personal property in Tombo without his consent.

k. Wellington – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

5992. para. 1960: The Trial Chamber finds that the foregoing evidence proves beyond a reasonable doubt that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4374] intentionally appropriated food and money from civilians in Wellington without their consent.

l. Benguema and Waterloo – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

(viii) Conclusion – Pillage

5993. para. 1962: The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt on the evidence of TF1-143 that in approximately late December 1998 members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4378] intentionally appropriated property from shops in Benguema and Waterloo without the consent of the owners.

The Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces[4379] committed the crime of pillage in the following places in Sierra Leone:

(i) Kono District, between about 1 February 1998 and about 31 December 1998, in Koidu Town, Tombodu and Bumpe;

(ii) Bombali District, between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 April 1998, in Makeni;

(iii) Port Loko District, between about 1 February 1998 and about 30 April 1998, in Masiaka;

(iv) Freetown and the Western Area, between about 21 December 1998 and about 28 February 1999, throughout Freetown and the Western Area and specifically in State House and Berry Street, Kissy, Falcon Street, Rowe Street, Congress Road, Rogbalan Mosque, Kola Tree, Thunder Hill and Samuels Area, Calaba Town, Tombo, Wellington, Benguema and Waterloo.

5994. para. 1963: The Trial Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving among others, members of the RUF, AFRC and CDF. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that for all of the aforementioned acts of looting in Kono, Bombali, and Port Loko Districts and Freetown and the Western Area there was a nexus between the acts of physical violence and the armed conflict, that each of the victims was not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time of physical violence, and that the perpetrators knew this fact. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the aforementioned acts of looting in Kono, Bombali, and Port Loko Districts and Freetown and the Western Area constitute pillage as a war crime under Article 3 of the Statute.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Factual Findings

6000. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

6001. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

6002. Regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1. Liability) -Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy - paras. 257-302 [6411].

6003. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

6004. Regarding Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - Taylor - Appellate Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State - paras. 303 - 343 [6457].

B. RUF

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-2004-15-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

6007. Paragraph 19 through 39 are incorporated by reference.[328]

6008. These attacks [para.41: armed attacks throughout the territory of the Republic of Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kono, Kenema, Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area] were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property.[329]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

6009. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, committed crimes set forth below in paragraphs 45 through 82, and charged in counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population or allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF.[330]

[328] RUF Indictment, para. 40.
[329] RUF Indictment, para. 42.
[330] RUF Indictment, para. 44.

(iii) Count 14: Looting and Burning

6010. At all times relevant to this indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread burning of civilian property. This looting and burning included the following:[331]

i. Bo District: Between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces looted and burned an unknown number of civilian houses in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma, and Tikonko;[332]

ii. Koinadugu District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian homes in various locations in the District including Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu, and Fadugu;[333]

iii. Kono District: Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu, Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned;[334]

iv. Bombali District: Between about 1 March 1998 and 31 November 1998, AFRC/RUF forces burnt an unknown number of civilian buildings in Bombali District, such as Karina and Mateboi;[335]

v. Freetown and Western Area: Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning throughout Freetown and Western Area. The majority of houses that were destroyed were in the areas of Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town, other locations included Fourah Bay, Upgun, State House and Pademba Road areas of the city;[336]

6011. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, pursuant to Article 6.1 and, or alternatively, Article 6.3 of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

Count 14: Pillage, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute.[337]

(iii) Applicable law – Pillage

6043. para. 204: The Indictment under Count 14 charges the Accused with pillage as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(f) of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the widespread unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian property in Bo District, Koinadugu District, Kono District, Bombali District and Freetown and the Western Area between about June 1997 and February 1999.[368]

6044. para. 205: As previously observed by the Chamber, the terms "pillage", "plunder" and "spoliation" have been varyingly used to describe the unlawful appropriation of private or public property during armed conflict.[369] The Chamber notes that the ICTR and SCSL Statutes include the crime of pillage, which is prohibited under Article 4(2) of Additional Protocol II, while the ICTY Statute lists the crime of plunder.[370]

6045. para. 206: The Chamber is satisfied that Article 3(f) of the Statute contains a general prohibition against pillage which covers both organised pillage and isolated acts of individuals. Further, the prohibition extends to all types of property, including State-owned and private property.[371]

6046. para. 207: The Chamber considers that the elements of pillage are as follows:

(i) The Accused unlawfully appropriated the property;[372]

(ii) The appropriation was without the consent of the owner; and

(iii) The Accused intended to unlawfully appropriate the property.[373]

6047. para. 208: The Chamber notes that the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Celebici case found that this prohibition "extends both to acts of looting committed by individual soldiers for their private gain, and to the organised seizure of property undertaken within the framework of a systematic economic exploitation of occupied territory."[374] In light of the foregoing, the Chamber confirms that "the inclusion of the requirement that the appropriation be for private or personal use is an unwarranted restriction on the application of the offence of pillage."[375]

6048. para. 209: Furthermore, under international law, pillage "does not require the appropriation to be extensive or to involve a large economic value."[376] Whether pillage committed on a small scale fulfils the jurisdictional requirement of the Special Court that the violation be serious, is, however, a different question.[377]

6049. para. 210: This Chamber has emphasised that the seriousness of the violation must be ascertained on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration the specific circumstances in each instance.[378] Pillage "may be a serious violation not only when one victim suffers severe economic consequences because of the appropriation, but also, for example, when property is appropriated from a large number of people."[379] The Chamber concurs with the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kordic and Cerkez that:

> [A] serious violation could be assumed in circumstances where appropriations take place vis-à-vis a large number of people, even though there are no grave consequences for each individual. In this case it would be the overall effect on the civilian population and the multitude of offences committed that would make the violation serious.[380]

6050. para. 211: The mens rea for pillage is satisfied where it is established that the Accused intended to appropriate the property by depriving the owner of it.[381]

6051. para. 212: The Appeals Chamber has ruled that a necessary element of the crime of pillage is the unlawful appropriation of property. As a result, acts of destruction such as burning cannot constitute pillage under international criminal law.[382] The Chamber will not, therefore, take into account acts of destruction by burning for the purposes of determining the individual criminal responsibility of the Accused under Count 14. For the reasons outlined in paragraph 115 and 128, however, such evidence may be considered under Counts 1 and 2 of the Indictment.

d. Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – Pleading

6055. See above: Chapter 1– RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Pleading - Conduct charged under Common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II – paras. 436 – 447 [626].

(v) Kono District – Pillage

6057. para. 1331: The Prosecution alleges that "between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned."[2488]

6058. para. 1332: No evidence was adduced with respect to Foindu and Yardu Sando, despite the allegations in the Indictment, as this Chamber previously found in its Rule 98 Decision.[2489]

6059. para. 1333: The Chamber recalls that the burning of property does not satisfy the underlying elements of pillage. Therefore, the Chamber, to determine the commission of the crime of pillage, will only examine the evidence relating to the acts of looting.

6060. para. 1334: Although proof of pillage under international law does not require that the items appropriated to be of significant value, we recall that the jurisdiction of the Special Court is only to be exercised in respect of serious violations. As we have stated, whether a violation is serious may be determined by reference to the collective scale of the looting, for instance by considering the number of people from whom property is appropriated.[2490] The Chamber is satisfied that the appropriation of property of low monetary value by AFRC/RUF rebels was widespread in Kono District during the Indictment period and therefore finds such acts to be sufficiently serious to constitute pillage, as charged in Count 14 of the Indictment.

a. Tombodu – Kono District – Pillage

6061. para. 1335: The Chamber is satisfied that the appropriation by rebels of a bicycle, about Le 500.000 and other items including cigarettes from TF1-197 occurred without his consent and would have resulted in serious economic detriment to him.[2491] The Chamber finds this act to constitute an act of pillage as charged in Count 14.

b. Koidu Town – Kono District – Pillage

i. Looting during February/March attack on Koidu – Koidu Town – Kono District – Pillage

6062. para. 1336: The Chamber has found that AFRC/RUF fighters engaged in a systematic campaign of looting upon their arrival in Koidu, marking the continuation of Operation Pay Yourself.[2492] The evidence demonstrates that rebels appropriated many items of significant value, such as vehicles, but also that the appropriation of minor items such as foodstuffs occurred on a sufficiently large scale to cumulatively constitute a serious violation.

6063. para. 1337: The Chamber is satisfied that a significant proportion of the items appropriated belonged to civilians, and that the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that the owners did not consent to the appropriation by the rebels. The Chamber accordingly finds that AFRC/RUF rebels committed an unknown number of acts of pillage in Koidu as charged in Count 14.

ii. Looting of Tankoro Bank – Koidu Town – Kono District – Pillage

6064. para. 1338: The Chamber finds that the theft of funds from the Tankoro Bank by a group of AFRC and RUF fighters constitutes an unlawful appropriation of civilian property without the consent of the owner and that sufficient funds were taken to constitute a serious violation.[2493] The Chamber accordingly finds this constitutes an act of pillage as charged in Count 14.

c. Pillaging of diamonds – Kono District – Pillage

6065. para. 1339: The Chamber notes the Prosecution's submission that AFRC/RUF rebels systematically and unlawfully appropriated diamonds by mining throughout Kono District, but declines to consider such submissions as this conduct was not particularised in Count 14 of the Indictment.[2494] The Indictment clearly charges the pillage of civilian property and does not allege that this included the diamond resources of Sierra Leone. The Chamber therefore declines to consider the criminality of such acts in Kono District.

(vi) Bo District – Pillage

6066. para. 1015: The Prosecution alleges that the AFRC/RUF committed the crimes of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14) between about 1 June 1997 and about 30 June 1997 in various locations throughout Bo District. The Prosecution further alleges that these crimes constitute acts of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 to 2).

6067. para. 1016: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the following paragraph was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict and a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone existed in Bo District at the time.[1980] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber concludes that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

6068. para. 1026: The Prosecution alleges that between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian property in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko.[1995] No evidence of pillage was adduced with respect to Telu and Mamboma.[1996]

6069. para. 1027: The Chamber recalls that the burning of property does not satisfy the essential elements of pillage.[1997] Therefore, the Chamber will only make findings on the evidence relating to looting. Although proof of pillage under international law does not require the items appropriated to be of significant value, we recall that the jurisdiction of the Court may only be exercised in respect of serious violations. We are of the opinion that to determine the seriousness of the violation, reference may be made to the nature, scope, dimension, or the collective scale of the looting, for instance by considering the number of people from whom property is appropriated.[1998]

a. Tikonko – Bo District - Pillage

6070. para. 1028: The Chamber heard evidence from TF1-004 that upon his return to Tikonko, some of his belongings such as his clothes were missing from his house and others had been scattered on the street.[1999] TF1-004 further observed many other items of property, including bags of rice, on the street.[2000] The Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt based on this evidence that civilian property was appropriated by fighters, as opposed to being destroyed or displaced in the chaos. The Chamber thus finds that this evidence is not sufficient to prove the crime of pillage.

b. Sembehun – Bo District - Pillage

6071. para. 1029: The Chamber recalls that Bockarie unlawfully appropriated Le 800,000 from Ibrahim Kamara, without Kamara's consent, in Sembehun in June 1997.[2001] We are satisfied that, in the context of Sierra Leone, this is a serious violation, as Le 800,000 is a significant sum of money and its loss would detrimentally impact on the victim. We thus find that this act constitutes pillage, as charged in Count 14 of the Indictment.

c. Gerihun – Bo District - Pillage

6072. para. 1030: The Chamber also heard evidence from Hassan Deko Salu that there was looting in Gerihun during the attack.[2002] However, the Prosecution did not adduce evidence pertaining to the scale of the looting, the nature of the property appropriated or the persons from whom it was appropriated. In the absence of such evidence to establish that the violation was sufficiently serious, the Chamber finds that the crime of pillage was not established with respect of this incident.

(vii) Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

6074. para. 1567: The Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in the paragraphs hereafter was committed intentionally by the perpetrators. The Chamber also recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that an armed conflict existed and that there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at the time.[2987] Unless otherwise stated below, the Chamber finds that the perpetrators' acts formed part of the widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population, and that the perpetrators were aware of this. In addition, unless otherwise stated, the Chamber is satisfied that a nexus existed between these acts and the armed conflict and that the perpetrators knew that the victims were not taking a direct part in hostilities.

6075. para. 1592: The Prosecution alleges that "between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning throughout Freetown and the Western Area."[3039] The Chamber recalls that the burning of property does not satisfy the essential elements of pillage.[3040] Therefore, the Chamber will only examine the evidence relating to the underlying acts of looting as they relate to the crime of pillage.

6076. para. 1593: Although proof of pillage under international law does not require the items appropriated to be of significant value, we recall that the jurisdiction of the Court can only be exercised in respect of serious violations. We are of the opinion that to determine the seriousness of the violence reference can be made to the nature, scope, dimension, or the collective scale of the looting, for instance by considering the number of people from whom property is appropriated.[3041] The Chamber finds that the looting throughout Freetown and the Western Area was so widespread that these violations are sufficiently serious to enliven the Court's jurisdiction.

6077. para. 1594: The Chamber has found that:

(i) rebels appropriated Le 200.000, Le 9.000 and a wrist watch from TF1-235 on 6 January 1999;[3042]

(ii) on 6 January 1999 armed rebels appropriated Le 80.000 from TF1-021 at the Rogbalan Mosque in Kissy;[3043]

(iii) on 10 January 1999 rebels entered a clinic in Wellington and appropriated Over Le 300.000, a 50kg bag of rice, jewellery, food and medical and other supplies;[3044]

(iv) rebels looted property of an undisclosed nature from the house in which TF1-235 was hiding after 10 January 1999;[3045]

(v) on 22 February 1999 a group of rebels attacked the house of TF1-235 and took money and property from those hiding there;[3046]

(vi) on about 13 January 1999 armed rebels appropriated Le 50.000 from TF1-331;[3047]

(vii) on about 20 January 1999 rebels accused TF1-104 of being a soldier and appropriated money from him;[3048] and

(viii) rebels near Connaught Hospital in Kissy forced TF1-022 to undress and appropriated Le 5.000 from him.[3049]

6078. para. 1595: Noting the prevailing environment of violence and chaos, the Chamber finds that the victims did not consent to the appropriation of their property. Consequently, the Chamber finds that these acts constitute pillage as charged under Count 14 of the Indictment.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-A, Judgment, 26 October 2009

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Kono District

6082. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Factual Findings – Kono District – para. 428 [712].

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Pleading

6083. para. 153: Kallon argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously convicted him for the looting 800,000 Leones from Ibrahim Kamara in June 1997 in Bo District. He argues this crime was not specifically pleaded in the Indictment and therefore Kallon did not have adequate notice of the charges against him.[290] Kallon further submits that this defect was not cured.[291]

6084. para. 155: Kallon was convicted, pursuant to his participation in a JCE 1, for pillage in relation to the unlawful appropriation of 800,000 Leones by Bockarie from Ibrahim Kamara. The Trial Chamber found that Bockarie, who was also found to be a member of the JCE,[293] and his subordinates were the principal perpetrators of the crime. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Indictment pleaded that "Kallon and … Bockarie[, among others,] in concert with each other, … exercised command and control over subordinate members of the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces,"[294] pursuant to a "joint criminal enterprise … to gain and exercise political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas,[295] through criminal means that included[296] "unlawful taking … of civilian property … include[ing]"[297] in Bo District, "[b]etween 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces [who] looted and burned an unknown number of civilian houses in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko."[298] Thus, the act of pillage, a pleaded crime within the JCE, occurred in a named location, during the month pleaded in the Indictment, by a member of the JCE. This is adequate notice of Kallon's liability for the crime.

6085. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber holds that so long as Gbao agreed to the Common Criminal Purpose and was, therefore, a member of the JCE as the Trial Chamber found,[1256] he is responsible for all crimes that he either intended, or were naturally foreseeable would be committed by members of the JCE or persons under their control. This is consistent with the pleading of the crimes in the Indictment (which must be read in its entirety) and which pleaded each of the crimes in Count 1 to 14 as either within the JCE or as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the JCE.[1257]

6086. para. 935: The Trial Chamber found that Kallon incurred JCE liability for the following instances of pillage: (i) the looting of Le 800,000 by Bockarie from Ibrahim Kamara in June 1997 in Sembehun in Bo District;[2447] (ii) the appropriation of a bicycle, Le 500,000 and other items from TF1-197 near Tombodu in Kono District;[2448] (iii) an unknown number of acts of pillage during the February/March 1998 attack on Koidu Town;[2449] and (iv) the looting of funds from

Tankoro Bank in Koidu Town.[2450] The Trial Chamber found that Kallon was present at a meeting when Johnny Paul Koroma ordered that all houses in Koidu Town should be burned to the ground, which message Sesay reiterated.[2451] Looting of civilian property was committed during the execution of the order.[2452] Civilians complained to Kallon and Superman, who were Commanders on the ground, about the burning, harassment and looting, but they took no action in response.[2453]

6087. para. 938: Concerning Kallon's notice of his alleged liability for the looting of a bank in Koidu Town, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the specificity required for the pleading of locations will depend on factors including those previously listed.[2461] The Trial Chamber found that Kallon significantly contributed to the looting from Ibrahim Kamara by his participation in the JCE,[2462] and that his liability derives from his conduct in relation to other events and crimes,[2463] and in particular, his participation in unlawful killings in Koidu Town, which were pleaded.[2464]

6088. para. 939: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that nonexhaustive pleading of locations may be adequate in light of the "sheer scale" of the alleged crimes.[2465] The Appeals Chamber has not found error in the Trial Chamber's general approach to applying the exception,[2466] and Kallon has not offered any argument as to why this exception to the requirements for pleading specificity should not apply to pillage in Koidu Town. Accordingly, this submission is rejected.

6089. Justice Fisher, para. 63 (p.528-529) – Concurring part: In Ground 22, Kallon objects to the pleading of looting of the Tankoro Bank in Koidu Town. The Appeals Chamber finds that Kallon did not need the location to be pleaded with greater specificity in order to prepare his defence, because the conduct giving rise to Kallon's JCE liability for the looting included his participation in killings in Koidu Town, which were specifically pleaded.

6090. Justice Fisher, para. 64 (p.529) – Concurring part: I concur that Kallon was given adequate notice of the location of the charged conduct, but because the looting was part of a massive and "systematic campaign,"[87] called "Operation Pay Yourself", which started in Bombali District and spread to numerous locations including Koidu Town.[88] As a consequence of "Operation Pay Yourself", looting civilian property became a "key component"[89] and systemic feature of AFRC/RUF operations.[90] In light of the pervasiveness of this crime and that it was happening simultaneously in many locations in the larger area (Kono District) in which Koidu Town is situated, it was sufficient and accurate for the Indictment to plead that there was "widespread looting … in various locations in [Kono] District."[91]

(ii) Pleading – Dissents

a. Justice Fisher:

(iii) Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose - Pillage

6093. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged as criminal means of furthering Common Criminal Purpose – paras. 377 - 378 [754].

6094. para. 368: In addition, the Trial Chamber found that Bockarie, himself a JCE member,[891] led the attack on Sembehun.[892] Sesay's assertion that Bockarie acted on his own volition in this regard is unpersuasive.[893] First, while claiming an absence of findings on Bockarie's interaction with other JCE members at this time, Sesay fails to account for the Trial Chamber's holdings that it was Bockarie who instructed Superman to move with his troops to Freetown after Sankoh's public order to unite with the AFRC after the coup[894] and that Bockarie became a member of the Supreme Council, the highest decision-making body in the Junta regime.[895] Second, Sesay refers to TF1-008's testimony that Bockarie "said that he was the one who has captured this place, that this place was under his control."[896] Simply citing this evidence, Sesay fails to show how the Trial Chamber's assessment thereof was erroneous,[897] in particular given that Bockarie when entering Sembehun "identified himself as a member of the RUF."[898] Third, the fact that Bockarie pillaged Le 800,000 in Sembehun[899] supports rather than refutes that such conduct was contemplated as a means by the JCE members to further the Common Criminal Purpose.[900] Bockarie himself being a JCE member, it is not determinative whether the money stayed with him. Lastly, because pillage (Count 14) constituted a means to further the Common Criminal Purpose notwithstanding whether it amounted to terrorism, Sesay's argument that this incident fell beyond the Common Criminal Purpose fails.

(iv) Crimes charged and JCE mens rea (short review) - Pillage

6095. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Appellate Judgment – Legal Conclusions – Crimes charged and JCE mens rea (short review) – paras. 467, 468, 482, 492, 493 [756] and see, also, Justice Fisher's and Justice Winter's Dissenting Opinions in that regard.

(v) Kono District - Pillage

6096. para. 451: Sesay argues that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient reasoning for imputing the following crimes in Kono District to members of the JCE:[1147] (i) the enslavement, by using civilians for forced labour, between February and April 1998 (Count 13);[1148] (ii) the acts of pillage during the February/March 1998 attack on Koidu;[1149] and (iii) the looting of funds from the Tankoro bank in Koidu on or about March 1998.[1150] This submission is dismissed on the basis that Sesay fails to address any of the numerous findings on which the Trial Chamber relied to impute these crimes of enslavement[1151] and pillage[1152] to the JCE members.

C. AFRC

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-PT, Indictment, 13 May 2004

(a) Particulars

(i) Charges

6111. Paragraphs 21 through 36 are incorporated by reference.[338]

[338] AFRC Indictment, para. 37.

Koinadugu, Bombali and Kailahun and Port Loko Districts and the city of Freetown and the Western Area. Targets of the armed attacks included civilians. [339]

6113. These attacks were carried out primarily to terrorize the civilian population, but also were used to punish the population for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF, or for allegedly providing support to the Kabbah government or to pro-government forces. The attacks included unlawful killings, physical and sexual violence against civilian men, women and children, abductions and looting and destruction of civilian property. Many civilians saw these crimes committed; others returned to their homes or places of refuge to find the results of these crimes - dead bodies, mutilated victims and looted and burnt property. [340]

6114. As part of the campaign of terror and punishment the AFRC/RUF routinely captured and abducted members of the civilian population. Captured women and girls were raped; many of them were abducted and used as sex slaves and as forced labour. Some of these women and girls were held captive for years. Men and boys who were abducted were also used as forced labour; some of them were also held captive for years. Many abducted boys and girls were given combat training and used in active fighting. AFRC/RUF also physically mutilated men, women and children, including amputating their hands or feet and carving "AFRC" and "RUF" on their bodies. [341]

(ii) Counts 1-2: Terrorizing civilian population and collective punishments

6115. Members of the AFRC/RUF subordinate to and/or acting in concert with ALEX TAMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, committed the crimes set forth below in paragraphs 42 through 79 and charged in Counts 3 through 14, as part of a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and did terrorize that population. The AFRC/RUF also committed the crimes to punish the civilian population for allegedly supporting the elected government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and factions aligned with that government, or for failing to provide sufficient support to the AFRC/RUF. [342]

[339] AFRC Indictment, para. 38.
[340] AFRC Indictment, para. 39.
[341] AFRC Indictment, para. 40.
[342] AFRC Indictment, para. 41.

(iii) Count 14: Looting and Burning (Pillage)

6116. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian property. This looting and burning included the following: [343]

> i. Bo District - Between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces looted and burned an unknown number of civilian houses in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko; [344]
>
> ii. Koinadugu District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning of civilian homes in various locations in the District, including Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu and Fadugu; [345]
>
> iii. Kono District - Between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread looting and burning in various locations in the District, including Tombodu, Foindu and Yardu Sando, where virtually every home in the village was looted and burned; [346]
> iv. Bombali District - Between about 1 March 1998 and 31 November 1998, AFRC/RUF forces burnt an unknown number of civilian buildings in locations in Bombali District, such as Karina and Mateboi; [347]
> v. Freetown and the Western Area - Between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting and burning throughout Freetown and the Western Area. The majority of houses that were destroyed were in the areas of Kissy, Wellington and Calaba town; other locations included the Fourah Bay, Upgun, State House and Pademba Road areas of the city; [348]

6117. By their acts or omissions in relation to these events, ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below:

> Count 14: Pillage, a Violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute. [349]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu, SCSL-2004-16-T, Judgement, 20 June 2007

(a) Factual Findings

6118. para. 1397: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the burning of property does not satisfy the legal elements of pillage.[2596] Therefore, the Trial Chamber will only examine the evidence relating to the underlying acts of looting.

6119. para. 1398: The Trial Chamber recalls that on several occasions, senior AFRC and RUF commanders declared operations that authorised their forces to plunder civilian property. Following the retreat from Freetown in February 1998, Johnny Paul Koroma declared "Operation Pay Yourself' over BBC Radio.[2597] Witness TF1-334 testified that Koroma announced this operation, which encouraged the troops to loot property, since without access to state revenue he could no longer pay them.[2598] Sam Bockarie declared a similar operation to his soldiers in Kenema District in February 1998.[2599] Looting with reference to 'Operation Pay Yourself' continued long after their announcement.[2600]

6120. para. 1399: Given this context, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the looting described below was directly linked to the war efforts of the AFRC and RUF and that the perpetrators were aware of the existence of an armed conflict and of the protected status of the owner of the property.

6121. para. 1400: The Trial Chamber is satisfied, in respect of each incident of looting described below, that the perpetrators intended to deprive the civilians of their property, without their consent, and appropriate it for their personal use.

(i) Bo District – Crimes

6122. para. 1401: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997, AFRC/RUF forces looted [...] in Telu, Sembehun, Mamboma and Tikonko".[2601]

6123. para. 1402: The Trial Chamber has previously found that no evidence on pillage was adduced with respect to Telu, Sembehun and Mamboma.[2602] The Trial Chamber finds that no evidence has been adduced of acts of looting with respect to Tikonko.

(ii) Koinadugu District – Crimes

6124. para. 1403: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting [...] in the District, including Heremakono, Kabala, Kamadugu and Fadugu".[2603]

6125. para. 1404: The Trial Chamber has previously held that the Prosecution has not led evidence on pillage with respect to Heremakono and Kamadugu.[2604] No evidence was adduced of looting within the Indictment period in Fadugu.

6126. para. 1405: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on Prosecution witnesses TF1-147, TF1-153 and TF1-199, Defence witness DAB-078 and Exhibit P-57.

a. Kabala – Koinadugu District - Crimes

6127. para. 1406: Witness TF1-147 testified that following a "rebel" attack on Kabala on 27 July 1998, property of civilians, including his personal belongings, were looted.[2605] The witness did not see the perpetrators, but concluded that the "rebels" who attacked the town were responsible.[2606] In a second attack on 17 September 1998, fighters again looted civilian property from houses.[2607] The witness believed that the attack was conducted by the same "rebels" who had staged the July attack.[2608]

6128. para. 1407: Witness TF1-147 was not able to identify the faction that attacked Kabala town on those two occasions. However, witness DAB-078 stated that around September 1998 he heard that troops under the command of 'Savage' had looted a house in Kabala.[2609]

6129. para. 1408: Form the date given of the attacks and the overall evidence adduced, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the attacks on Kabala were conducted by troops associated with SAJ Musa and/or Dennis Mingo.

(iii) Kono District – Crimes

6131. para. 1411: The Trial Chamber has previously found that no evidence on pillage was led with respect to Foindu.[2611]

6132. para. 1412: In reaching its factual findings and having examined the entire evidence, the Trial Chamber relies on Prosecution witnesses TF1-0 19 and TF1-072.

a. Tombudu – Kono District – Crimes

6133. para. 1413: Witness TF1-072 testified that in March 1998, soldiers under the command of 'Savage,[2612] on the way to Tombodu forcefully appropriated five gallons of palm wine from a civilian and consumed the palm wine.[2613]

b. Yardu Sando – Kono District – Crimes

6134. para. 1414: Witness TF1-0 19 testified that on 16 April 1998, AFRC soldiers and RUF rebels attacked Yardu Sando[2614] and took boxes and other valuable property from civilian houses.[2615] The fighters were singing enjoy about the property they looted.[2616]

(iv) Bombali District – Crimes

6135. para. 1416: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween about 1 March 1998 and 31 November 1998, AFRC/RUF forces burnt an unknown number of civilian buildings in locations in Bombali District, such as Karina and Mateboi".[2617]

6136. para. 1417: Although the Prosecution adduced evidence with respect to looting in Karina, Makeni and Camp Rosos, acts of looting are not alleged in the Indictment with regard to Bombali District. The Trial Chamber accordingly makes no findings on this evidence.

(v) Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

6137. para. 1418: The Prosecution alleges that "[b]etween 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in widespread looting [...] throughout Freetown and the Western Area" [2618]

6138. para. 1419: Given that burning does not constitute an act of pillage, the Trial Chamber has not made findings on the destruction of civilian houses in Kissy, Wellington and Calaba Town, as pleaded in the Indictment.[2619] The Trial Chamber makes findings only on incidents of looting which occurred within Freetown and not the greater Western Area.

6139. para. 1420: In arriving at the following findings of fact, the Trial Chamber has considered the available evidence and relies on the testimony of Prosecution witnesses Gibril Massaquoi, TFl-334, and TF1-083.

a. State House – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

6140. para. 1421: On 6 January 1999 at State House, witness TFl-334 was present when the Accused Brima ordered the Operation Commander to collect the vehicles parked at UN House and bring them to State House, since the commanders needed vehicles for transportation within the city. Following the order, the Operation Commander moved towards 'UN House' and subsequently returned to State House with jeeps and Toyota Land Cruisers.[2620]

6141. para. 1422: Moreover, Gibril Massaquoi testified that whilst present at State House during the January 1999 invasion of Freetown, he observed that "almost all" AFRC faction commanders had vehicles. He stated that he saw the Accused Brima entering State House with a jeep and the Accused Kanu with a white 'Hilux' with an 'UNDP' logo, while other vehicles being used had the 'UNWFP' logo.[2621] Accordingly, the witness understood that these vehicles had been looted.[2622]

6142. para. 1423: Witness TFl-334 testified that on 6 January 1999 he observed extensive looting within State House. He stated that the Presidential Office and all other offices were completely vandalised.[2623] The Trial Chamber is satisfied that this looting was carried out by AFRC troops, as State House was the headquarters of the AFRC troops during the Freetown invasion.

b. Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Crimes

6143. para. 1424: On 6 January 1999, two men wearing plain clothes and military trousers and one other man wearing full military uniform and carrying a gun took away money and food from witness TF1-1 04 and his family.[2624]

6144. para. 1425: One Friday at about 12:30 p.m. during the January 1999 invasion of Freetown, a congregation of people were gathered inside Rogbalan mosque to attend Juma prayers when "armed men" with carrying guns, cutlasses and axes attacked the people. Witness TF1-021 testified that these armed men took 15,000 Leones from his pocket.[2625]

6145. para. 1426: During the January 1999 invasion of Freetown, "rebels" wearing military uniforms raided Kissy area and stole civilian property.[2626] Witness TF1-084 was present in Kissy area and saw the looting taking place. He stated that the "rebels" led by 'Akim' entered civilian houses, loaded televisions, radios and other goods onto their vehicles and drove off.[2627] The rebels also attacked houses on Rowe Street where they captured eight civilians, including witness TF1-084, and took away all their money.[2628] Shortly thereafter, Commander 'Tafaiko' removed the witness' gold plated wrist watch and took it from him. 'Tafaiko' also took an amount of $200 which he had removed from the witness's pocket.[2629]

6146. para. 1427: On 22 January 1999, "rebels" wearing combat and armed with guns and machetes broke into a house on Old Road. Witness TF1-083 stated that the "rebels" demanded money and other valuables, including clothes, which they took from him and other civilians in the house.[2630]

6147. para. 1428: On the same day, Witness TF1-083 also encountered several "rebels" armed with guns, machetes, knives and axes at Locust and Samuel's area at Old Road. One of the "rebels" took the witness's shirt and wore it. Another "rebel" took money from the witness's pockets. [2631]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

6148. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 - paras. 241 – 242 [1023].

a. There must have been an armed conflict whether non-international or international in character at the time the offences were allegedly committed

6149. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – There must have been an armed conflict whether non-international or international in character at the time the offences were allegedly committed - paras. 243 – 245 [1025].

b. There must be a nexus between the armed conflict and the alleged offence

6150. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – There must be a nexus between the armed conflict and the alleged offence - paras. 246 – 247 [1028].

c. The victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation

6151. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – The victims were not directly taking part in the hostilities at the time of the alleged violation - para. 248 [1030].

(ii) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements

6152. See above: Chapter 1 – AFRC – Legal Conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements - paras. 249 – 254 [1031].

(iii) Applicable law – Pillage

6153. para. 750: In Count 14 of the Indictment, the Prosecution alleges that "[a]t all times relevant to this Indictment, AFRC/RUF engaged in widespread unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian property." The Accused are thus charged with pillage, a violation of Common Article 3, punishable under Article 3(f) of the Statute.[1450]

6154. para. 751: The prohibition of the unlawful appropriation of public and private property in armed conflict is well-established in customary international law where it has been variously referred to as "pillage", "plunder" and "looting".[1453]. It was charged both as a war crime and as a crime against humanity in many of the trials based on the Nuremberg Charter and Control Council Law No. 10, including the trial of the major war criminals in Nuremberg.[1454] Pillage has been adjudicated in a number of cases before the ICTY.[1455]

a. Elements of the Crime

6155. para. 752: Trial Chamber I was of the opinion that the crime of pillage included the following constitutive elements in addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute:

(1) The perpetrator appropriated private or public property;

(2) The perpetrator intended to deprive the owner of the property and' to appropriate it for private or personal use;

(3) The appropriation was without the consent of the owner.[1456]

6156. para. 753: That definition of the crime of pillage is apparently based on the Rome Statute, Elements of Crimes, Article 8(2)(b)(xvi). The inclusion of the words "private or personal use" excludes the possibility that appropriations justified by military necessity might fall within the definition. Nevertheless, the definition is framed to apply to a broad range of situations. As was stated by Trial Chamber I, "the ICTY in the case of Celebici noted that 'plunder' should be understood as encompassing acts traditionally described as 'pillage', and that pillage extends to cases of 'organised' and 'systematic' seizure of property from protected persons as well as to 'acts of looting committed by individual soldiers for their private gain'".[1457]

6157. para. 754: Inclusion of the element of "private or personal use" in the definition appears to be at variance with Celebici, since it may not include 'organized' and 'systematic' seizure of property. The Trial Chamber is therefore of the view that the requirement of "private or personal use" is unduly restrictive and ought not to be an element of the crime of pillage.

6158. para. 755: Accordingly and in addition to the chapeau requirements of Violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, the Trial Chamber concludes that the crime of pillage within the meaning of Article 3(t) of the Statute is comprised of the following specific elements:

1. The perpetrator appropriated property.

2. The appropriation was without the consent of the owner.

3. The perpetrator intended to deprive the owner of the property.

6159. para. 756: The Prosecution submits that "destroying property by burning, as part of a series of acts involving ruthless plundering to remove anything of value followed by the total removal of the value of the buildings themselves, falls within the concept of 'wilful and unlawful appropriation of property' ."[1458] All three Accused contend that 'burning' does not fall under the definition of 'pillage'.[1459]

6160. para. 757: In its Rule 98 Decision, the Trial Chamber deferred a final decision on this issue until the end of the tria1.[1460] Having carefully examined all relevant sources, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the inclusion of 'burning' in the crime of 'pillage', as suggested by the Prosecution, is untenable. First, a review of military manuals shows that most countries do not regard the destruction of enemy property as pillage.[1461] Second, the jurisprudence is unambiguous in requiring that the property be appropriated,[1462] an element which is not satisfied in the event that property is burned and destroyed. The Rome Statute also makes a distinction between appropriation and destruction of property.[1463]

6161. para. 758: Moreover, the destruction of civilian property may be brought and adjudged under a number of other provisions, 1464 which the Prosecution has not done in this case.

(iv) Bo District – Pillage

6162. para. 1402: The Trial Chamber has previously found that no evidence on pillage was adduced with respect to Telu, Sembehun and Mamboma.[2602] The Trial Chamber finds that no evidence has been adduced of acts of looting with respect to Tikonko.

(v) Koinadugu District – Pillage

6163. para. 1409: On the basis on the foregoing evidence and without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 September 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in looting in Kabala in Koinadugu District.

6164. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Koinadugu District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions – Koinadugu District - paras. 1686-1696 [8045], 1904-1906 [8056], 2015-2018 [8060].

6165. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Koinadugu District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Koinadugu District - paras. 1686 [8933], 1697-1699 [8934], 1904 [8937], 1907-1910 [8938], 2015 [8942], 2019-2024 [8943].

(vi) Kono District – Pillage

a. Tombodu and Yardu Sando – Kono District - Pillage

6166. para. 1415: On the basis on the foregoing evidence and without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that between about 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998, AFRC/RUF forces engaged in looting in Tombodu and Yardu Sando in Kono District.

6167. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Kono District - paras. 1665-1668 [8017], 1856-1861 [8021], 1997-2000 [8027].

6168. Regardings Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Kono District, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Kono District - paras. 1665 [8868], 1669-1673 [8869], 1856 [8874], 1862-1893 [8875], 1997 [8907], 2001-2005 [8908].

(vii) Bombali District – Pillage

6169. para. 1417: Although the Prosecution adduced evidence with respect to looting in Karina, Makeni and Camp Rosos, acts of looting are not alleged in the Indictment with regard to Bombali District. The Trial Chamber accordingly makes no findings on this evidence.

(viii) Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

a. State House and Kissy – Freetown and the Western Area – Pillage

6170. para. 1429: On the basis on the foregoing evidence and without predetermining the individual responsibility of the three Accused, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that between 6 January 1999 and 28 February 1999, AFRC forces engaged in looting in State House in Freetown and Kissy in the Western Area.

6171. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's individual criminal responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 12 (Article 6.1 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment -Findings and Conclusions - Freetown and Western Area - paras. 1745-1786 [8102], 1929-1941 [8144], 2045-2064 [8157].

6172. Regarding Brima's, Kamara's, and Kanu's superior responsibility in relation to Freetown and Western Area, see below: Chapter 13 (Article 6.3 Liability) - AFRC - Trial Judgment - Findings and Conclusions - Freetown and Western Area - paras. 1745 [8997], 1787-1810 [8998], 1929 [9022], 1942-1950 [9023], 2045 [9032], 2065-2080 [9033].

[352] CDF Indictment, para. 28.

(iii) Count 5: Looting and Buring

6178. Looting and burning included, between about 1 November 1997 and about 1 April 1998, at various locations including in Kenema District, the towns of Kenema, Tongo Field and surrounding areas, in Bo District, the towns of Bo, Koribondo, and the surrounding areas, in Moyamba district, the towns of Sembehun, Gbangbatoke and surrounding areas, and in Bonthe District, the towns of Talia (Base Zero), Bonthe Town, Mobayeh, and surrounding areas, the unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian owned property.[353]

6179. By their acts or ommissions in relation to these events, SAMUEL HINGA NORMAN, MOININA FOFANA and ALLIEU KONDEWA, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3.ofthe Statute, are individually criminally responsible for the crime alleged below:

> Count 5: Pillage, a VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 COMMON TO THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS AND OF ADDITIONAL PROTOCOL II, punishable under Article 3.f of the Statute.[354]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-T, Judgement, 2 August 2007

(a) Factual Findings

(i) Tongo Field – Crimes

a. Lalehun – Tongo Field – Crimes

6180. para. 410: From mid-February to at least mid-March, Kamajors looted in Lalehun: they took doors, roofs and zinc from houses. They also burnt nine houses, including TF2-016's father's house.775 Kamajors were told to take what they wanted.[776] There was an organized operation whereby the town was divided into different areas and civilians were woken every morning at 6:00am to gather at the town harri, where they were ordered to carry loads for the Kamajors. If the civilians refused, they would be threatened or kept in the guard room.[777]

[353] CDF Indictment, para. 27.
[354] CDF Indictment, para. 27.

(ii) Bo District – Crimes

a. Koribondo – Bo District – Crimes

i. Burning of Houses – Koribondo – Bo District – Crimes

6181. para. 427: Bombs were launched during the Kamajor attack on Koribondo on 13 February 1998; as a result some houses were destroyed or burnt.[824] The nine-room house of TF2-032 was partially destroyed.[825] The consequences of this continue to upset TF2-032 as since the destruction of his home, his children are scattered and, despite his advanced age, he now sleeps in a kitchen.[826]

6182. para. 428: Between 13 and 15 February 1998,[827] after the capture of Koribondo, Kamajors went on a rampage in Koribondo and burnt down 25 houses. Dry grass was used to set the houses ablaze.[828] Houses belonging to Daniel Habib, Saidu Bah, Pa Musa and others were burnt.[829] Some of those whose houses were burnt were discouraged others feared for their lives.[830]

6183. para. 429: Albert J Nallo burnt the compound of Shekou Gbaoj he had been ordered to do so by Norman at a private meeting at Base Zero. Albert J Nallo had also been ordered to kill Shekou Gbao but could not find him.[831] Albert] Nallo also burnt the house of Father Mike Lamin[832] and the compound of Mr. Biyo on the order of Norman.[833]

ii. Looting in Koribondo – Bo District – Crimes

6184. para. 430: After the capture of Koribondo, the Kamajors looted property from houses, including videos, tape-recorders, money and generators.[834] Kamajors took about 20 bushels of rice from TF2- 162 and also confiscated his household property.[835] Bob Tucker looted fifty-six bundles of eightfoot zinc.[836] Most of the looted properties were taken at Jimmi Highway on Jimmi Road.[837]

b. Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

i. Mistreatment of TF2-00 1 and Looting of his Property – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6185. para. 454: After witnessing [the beating of OC Bundu], TF2-001 returned to his house where he found Kamajors looting his property. Property worth 3,500,000 leones including a bed, a mattress and his children's property were bundled up by the Kamajors. When TF2-001 objected, the Kamajors threatened to kill him.[886] TF2-001was distressed by this situation.[887]

ii. Kamajors Looted TF2-119's Property – Bo Town – Bo District - Crimes

6186. para. 456: On 15 February 1998, a group of Kamajors entered TF2-119's house and threatened him. They searched his house for ammunition and soldiers. While searching the Kamajors broke suitcases and took valuables from the property belonging to TF2-119's family.[888]

iii. Kamajors Arrest TF2-00l and Loot His Property - Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6187. para. 460: After witnessing the death of James Vandy, TF2-001 attempted to flee but was chased by Kamajors because he had been identified as a policeman. The Kamajors were armed with cutlasses and guns but they retreated after hearing heavy gunfire from the direction of Freetown.[894] TF2-001 followed a large crowd of civilians in the direction of Kenema until they reached Kandeyama,[895] where under orders of Kamajor leaders including Agbamu Murray, the Kamajors separated civilians from police. TF2-001 was identified as a policeman and was arrested along with other policemen. The Kamajors searched TF2-001 and took from him 15,000 leones and his watch.[896]

iv. Looting and Burning of MB Sesay's House – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6188. para. 463: Upon their arrival in Bo on 15 February 1998, the Kamajors under TF2-017's command went to MB Sesay's hotel on Sewa Road. They looted property belonging to civilians including womens' dresses, mens' clothes, and fans.[900] The Kamajors then set the hotel on fire.[901] Norman had ordered Albert J Nallo to loot and burn MB Sesay's property because he was considered a junta collaborator for manufacturing Kamajor ronkos which the juntas wore to disguise themselves as Kamajors.[902] This order was given at Base Zero.[903]

v. Other Burning – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6189. para. 464: Albert J Nallo and other Kamajors burned the houses and properties of junta collaborators that they could not find.[904] The house of TF2-058 was burnt by Kamajors.[905] When TF2-056 arrived at the police barracks, he saw four houses that had been burned by the Kamajors.[906]

6190. para. 465: On 15 February 1998, Kamajors under command of TF2-017 raided and destroyed two pharmacies situated at Tinkonko Road and Bojon Street. The Kamajors broke the padlocks looted all the medicine from these pharmacies. The Kamajors looted these pharmacies because there was a need for medicine at Base Zero; they were implementing a direct order from Norman to loot pharmacies.[907]

vi. Other Looting – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6191. para. 466: On 15 February 1998, Kamajors looted TF2-156's property including clothes, shoes, utensils, other household property and his business, which was worth 800,000 leones.[908]

6192. para. 467: Two days after the arrival of the Kamajors in Bo, the Kamajors went into people's houses and looted their property. The property of TF2-030 was looted and her landlady's shop was broken into by the Kamajors.[909] When Bobor Tucker arrived in Bo on Monday, 16 February 1998, he saw Kamajors all over Bo Town looting shops.[910]

vii. Looting ofTF2-056's House – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6193. para. 483: Sometime after the arrival of ECOMOG in Bo, Kamajors came to TF2-056's house and frightened him. The Kamajors took TF2-056's television, freezer, water filter, and some other items.[943] They accused TF2-056 of being a junta soldier and said they were taking the items because they had belonged to the junta.[944] TF2-056 was not a junta; the items taken by the Kamajors were his personal property.[945]

viii. Looting by Kamajors at TF2-067's House – Bo Town – Bo District – Crimes

6194. para. 485: A group of Kamajors came to TF2-067's house and took items which belonged to people that lived with him. The Kamajors took a freezer, a tape recorder, a radio and a video. They tried to take a double bed but it was too large for them to carry.[948]

6195. para. 486: The actions of these Kamajors were reported to ECOMOG who came immediately to the house. The Kamajors ran away. ECOMOG told the inhabitants of the house to make a list of looted property taken by the Kamajors.[949]

6197. para. 488: TF2-067 observed Kamajors breaking into people's shops and houses to loot property.[951]

(iii) Bonthe District – Crimes

a. 15 February 1998 – Looting – Bonthe District – Crimes

6198. para. 540: On February 15 1998, Kamajor commander Lamina Gbokambama and his men looted household items and equipment from the Bonthe Technical College, the Bonthe Holiday Complex, the government building, the police station, the state prison, the district office, the elections office, the Ministry of Works and the Fisheries Department, the Post Office, and the telecommunications department.[1048] After they finished looting, Lamina Gbokambama announced that he was now the Chief of Bonthe.[1049] At the Fisheries Department Building, Father Garrick pleaded with a young Kamajor called Commander Rambo Conteh to have his Kamajors leave things intact. Rambo answered that they only wanted to take the fuel and then they would leave.[1050]

b. February 16, 1998 - Looting in Bonthe – Crimes

6199. para. 543: On 16 February 1998, a house in Bonthe was looted and vandalized by commander Julius Squire of Bendu Cha and his troops. These Kamajors took 17,900,000 leones from TF2-116's house.[1055] Commander Julius Squire directed his men to transport the looted items to his house a few yards away on Nathan street.[1056]

6200. para. 544: On the same day the Kamajors looted materials and drugs from the government hospital and the household materials from the doctor's quarters.[1057]

6201. para. 550: District Commander Mori Jusu said that no one else would be killed but that the civilians had to pay 100,000 leones for each of the 14 people at the meeting. Father Garrick paid the sum and guaranteed that the rest would be paid.[1068]

c. Mosandi, Molakaika, Bembay, Bolloh around 15 September 1997 – Bonthe District – Crimes

6202. para. 560: On the same day, the Kamajors burnt 27 houses in Bembay, a village of about 30 houses. Six of the houses belonged to Lahai Koroma. Sei Mani, who sent the Kamajors, came and apologized to TF2-071 for burning the houses. The Kamajors then left for Mobayeh Village.[1099]

(iv) Kenema District – Crimes

a. Looting of TF2-033' s House – Kenema Town – Kenema District – Crimes

6203. para. 594: Armed Kamajors came to TF2-033's house in the police barracks and threatened his life.[1190] The Kamajors grabbed his property and said they would return to collect the things that they had grabbed.[1191]

b. Looting in Kenema – Kenema District – Crimes

6204. para. 600: In February 1998, Kamajors looted the property of Mr. Samai from his house on the outskirts of Kenema.[1205]

6205. para. 601: One day in late February 1998,[1206] armed Kamajors arrived at TF2-144's house on Kahunla Street in Kenema. TF2-144 and his family were told to vacate their house, as the Kamajors had come from Kailahun and planned to worship there. Through CO Foday, TF2-144 managed to secure the intervention of Kamoh Brima and the Kamajors left.[1207] Five days later, a different group of Kamajors entered TF2-144's house and started removing his belongings, including a mattress in which TF2-144 stored his money. TF2-144 offered to pay the Kamajors to bring back the mattress, but they refused and threatened to kill him if he didn't leave.[1208] The Kamajors left with TF2-144's property.[1209]

(v) Talia/Base Zero – Crimes

a. Capture of TF -109 and Looting – Talia/Base Zero – Crimes

6206. para. 621: TF2-109 was captured by Kamajors along with other women and three men in her village of Mattru Jong and was taken to Talia. A Kamajor named Komoh Bonnie told TF2-109 that they were taking her to Talia to save her from the rebels. The Kamajors also took their property, including furniture, household items, and clothing. TF2-109 was held in Talia for three days.[1266] During that time she met TF2-108.[1267]

b. Arrival of a Truck in Talia – Talia/Base Zero – Crimes

6207. para. 635: A truck carrying cocoa and coffee arrived in Talia. It was unloaded and the contents were given to the Director of War, Fofana and the High Priest, Kondewa. The truck was detained in Talia. [l302]

(vi) Moyamba District – Crimes

a. Sembehun and Surroundings – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Arrival of Kamajors and Setting up of Checkpoints – Sembehun and Surroundings – Moyamba District – Crimes

6208. para. 641: In November 1997, Kamajors came to Sembehun, Bagruwa Chiefdom, Moyamba District[1329] and took control of security there.[1330] They wore Kamajor attire and were armed with guns.[1331] These Kamajors took control of the exit and entry checkpoints that had been manned by local Kamajors.[1332] The newly arrived Kamajors waited at the checkpoints and pounced on villagers returning from their farms and looted food and other properties from the villagers. [1333] The Kamajors also went to the surrounding villages and looted food and other goods.[1334] The newly arrived Kamajors were based with the head of the local Kamajors, a Ground Commander named Teacher Edward Challe.[1335]

6209. para. 642: On the evening the Kamajors arrived, Mr. Nbada Fofana was harassed at the Sembehun entry check point by the visiting Kamajors.[1336] He was stopped, forced our of his Mercedes Benz car and stripped of his money and his clothes. Nbada Fofana's car was taken from him by the Kamajors.[1337] Nbada Fofana managed to get the local Kamajors to return the vehicle to him, but when he attempted to leave Sembehun, the Kamajors at the exit checkpoint refused to allow him to leave. They said, "[nlo, you can't get this vehicle out of this place." Nbada Fofana went to TF2- 073 and they decided to drive the vehicle to Shenge. They drove the vehicle 36 miles to Shenge and left the car there in the hands of the Shenge Kamajors.[1338]

6210. para. 643: The same evening, Mrs. Gorvie was stopped by Kamajors at the same checkpoint. Although she was sick, Mrs. Gorvie was forced out of her car and left on the ground.[1339] Her car was taken from her.[1340]

ii. Looting in the Villages Surrounding Sembehun - Moyamba District – Crimes

6211. para. 644: The day after the Kamajors arrived in Sembehun, they went to the surrounding villages and looted livestock, food and clothing.[1341]

iii. Threatening of the Witness TF2-073 's Children and Pillage - Sembehun and Surroundings – Moyamba District – Crimes

6212. para. 645: The second day after the Kamajors arrival, six Kamajors came to TF2-073's house in the evening. The Kamajors led TF2-073 out to the veranda at gunpoint and surrounded him.[1342] They said that they were Kondewa's Kamajors and that they had come from Talia, Tihun, Gbangbatoke and other surrounding villages. Three of them introduced themselves as Steven Sowa, Moses Mbalacolor and Mohamed Sankoh. Mohamed Sankoh said he was Deputy Director of War under Norman.[1343] The Kamajors wanted to inspect TF2-073's garage for arms and ammunition but he did not have the keys. The Kamajors then went to his garage anyway and saw TF2-073's Mercedes Benz car through a hole in the garage wall. The Kamajors told TF2-073 that they wanted to run a few errands with the car.[1344] The Kamajors sent for six more Kamajors to reinforce their group.[1345] They then broke into TF2-073's house, beat his children with gun butts and ransacked the house.

iv. Looting and Murder in Yakarji - Sembehun and Surroundings – Moyamba District – Crimes

6213. para. 649: On the morning of the third day after the Kamajors arrived in Sembehun, they travelled two miles to a village called Yakarji.[1355] In Yakarji the Kamajors looted a Mazda van which had been in the care of TF2-073's brother-in-law.[1356] The Kamajors beat TF2-073's brother-in-law severely and forced him to show them where the van was located.[1357] They looted the vehicle and brought it back to their base in Sembehun. TF2-073's brother-in-law died from the beatings a few weeks after this event.[1358]

b. Looting in Shenge. Kagboro Chiefdom – Moyamba District – Crimes

6214. para. 650: The same morning the Kamajors went to Shenge,[1359] 36 miles from Sembehun, in the three cars they looted.[1360] They returned from Shenge in the evening with goods, livestock, food, and a drum of petrol.[1361]

c. CDF Control of Rokonta and Surrounding Areas – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Looting by Kamajors and CDF Meeting on 23 December 1997 – Moyabma District - Crimes

6215. para. 652: On 23 December 1997, nearly 20 CDF militants1364 came to Rokonta and attacked the house of TF2-166' s father under the guise of looking for him. 1365 They took all of her father's property.[1366] TF2-166 reported the incident to the Honourable Minister Alex Koroma, who called a CDF meeting in Waterloo Town.[1367] At a meeting in the last week of December 1997, which was chaired by Alex Koroma and Paramount Chief Charles Caulker, Kamajor Obai told TF2-166: "You [.. .] tell your father that we suspect that he's a junta or he's a collaborator, and we must make sure that we kill him.."[1368] Paramount Chief Caulker then added: "The Pa, if it is true that he is a junta or a collaborator, we'll make sure that these people see him again."[1369]

d. Bradford – Moyamba District – Crimes

i. Pillage in Bradford on 19 March 1998 (Second Arrival) – Bradford – Moyamba District – Crimes

6216. para. 657: During the night of 19 March 1998, Kamajors came to Bradford and raided the entire town.[1396] The Kamajors were armed with guns, machetes, axes and knives.[1397] They entered civilian homes and forcefully looted clothing and food.[1398] The Kamajors entered TF2-16 7' s house and looted 63 bags of husk rice.[1399]

ii. Third Arrival at Bradford on 23 March 1998 – Moyamba District – Crimes

6217. para. 659: TF2-167's son Ibrahim was shot in the head by Kamajors while he was trying to escape. TF2-167 found Ibrahim alive and although his son survived, Ibrahim no longer behaves normally all the time. During this attack, Kamajors looted from TF2-167.[1403]

(b) Legal Conclusions

(i) Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3

6218. See above: Chapter 1 – CDF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – Applicable law - War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – paras. 122 – 137 [1115].

(ii) War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 - Findings on general requirements

6219. See above: Chapter 1 – RUF – Trial Judgment – Legal conclusions – War crimes / Violations of Common Article 3 – Findings on general requirements – paras. 695 – 697 [1131].

(iii) Applicable law – Pillage

6220. para. 157: The Chamber notes that the Indictment under Count 5 charges the Accused with pillage as a serious violation of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 3(f) of the Statute. This Count relates to the Accused's alleged responsibility for the unlawful taking and destruction by burning of civilian owned property between about 1 November 1997 and 1 April 1998 at a series of locations in Kenema District, Bo District, Moyamba District and Bonthe District.

6222. para. 159: The Chamber is satisfied that Article 3(0 of the Statute contains a general prohibition against pillage which covers both organised pillage and isolated acts of individuals. Further, the prohibition extends to all types of property, including State-owned and private property.[203]

private gain, and to the organized seizure of property undertaken within the framework of a systematic economic exploitation of occupied territory".[204] In light of the foregoing, the Chamber is of the view that the inclusion of the requirement that the appropriation be for private or personal use is an unwarranted restriction on the application of the offence of pillage.[205]

6224. para. 161: In addition, under international law, pillage does not require the appropriation to be extensive or to involve a large economic value.[206] Whether pillage committed on a small scale fulfils the jurisdictional requirement of the Special Court that the violation be serious, is, however, a different question.[207]

6225. para. 162: The seriousness of the violation must be ascertained on a case by case basis, taking into consideration the specific circumstances in each instance.[208] Thus, the Chamber concurs with the ICTY Trial Chamber in Naletilic and Martinovic that pillage:

> may be a serious violation not only when one Victim suffers severe economic consequences because of the appropriation, but also, for example, when property is appropriated from a large number of people. In the latter case, the gravity of the crime stems from the reiteration of the acts and from their overall impact.[209]

6226. para. 163: The mens rea for pillage is satisfied where it is established that the Accused intended to appropriate the property by depriving the owner of it.[210]

6227. para. 164: The Chamber has already noted that the offence of pillage is provided for in Article 4(2) of Additional Protocol II.

6228. para. 165: The Chamber finds that the elements of pillage are as follows:

(i) The Accused unlawfully appropriated the property;[211]

(ii) The appropriation was without the consent of the owner; and

(iii) The Accused intended to unlawfully appropriate the property.

6229. para. 166: Although Count 5 of the Indictment is entitled: "Looting and burning," the offence charged under this count is pillage, a violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3(t) of the Statute. The acts of burning, as charged in some paragraphs in Count 5 of the Indictment, will not be considered for the purposes of the offence of pillage as charged under Count 5. According to the definition of pillage as stated above, an essential element of pillage is the unlawful appropriation of property. Black's Law Dictionary defines appropriation as "the exercise of control over property; a taking or possession."[212] In the act oflooting, the offender unlawfully appropriates the property. Destruction of property by burning, however, does not, by itself, necessarily involve any unlawful appropriation. Thus, while both looting and burning deprive the owner of their property, the two actions are distinct since the latter crime may be committed without appropriation per se. As a result, the Chamber is of the view that the destruction by burning of property does not constitute pillage. The Chamber will not, therefore, take into account acts of destruction by burning for the purposes of determining the individual criminal responsibility of the Accused under Count 5.

(iv) Tongo Field – Pillage

6230. para. 729: The Chamber recognizes that other criminal acts alleged in the Indictment were in fact committed in the towns of Tongo Field. However, the Chamber finds that such acts were not included in Norman's order. Therefore, the Chamber finds that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana aided and abetted in the perpetration of all the other criminal acts, such as infliction of mental harm or suffering and looting, which we found were committed by the Kamajors in the towns of Tongo Field during the second and third attacks.

(v) Bo District – Pillage

a. Responsibility of Fofana – Bo District - Pillage

6231. para. 838: The Prosecution alleges that Fofana is individually criminally responsible, pursuant to Article 6(3), for the unlawful taking of civilian-owned property between about 1 November 1997 and 1 April 1998.[1561] These crimes are alleged to have occurred at various locations in Bo District, including the towns of Bo and the surrounding areas.[1562]

6232. para. 839: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 5, Pillage:

a. On 15 February 1998, OC Bundu was forced to go to his house by Kamajors under the leadership of Nallo, Agbamu Murray, and John Ngombeh. The Kamajors took ammunition which they found in OC Bundu's house;

b. On 15 February 1998, Kamajors under control of TF2-017 looted MB Sesay's hotel on Sewa Road;

c. On 15 February 1998, Kamajors under control of TF2-017 looted medicine from two pharmacies in Bo;

d. On 16 February 1998, on the order of Kamajor leaders including Agbamu Murray, TF2-001 was searched; the Kamajors took his watch and 15,000 leones;

6234. para. 841: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes and the specific elements of pillage as a war crime have been established with respect to the looting of ammunition from OC Bundu's house, the looting of various objects at MB Sesay's hotel; the looting of medicine from two pharmacies; and the looting of TF2-001's watch and money.

6235. para. 846: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible as a superior, pursuant to Article 6(3) for the crimes committed in Bo District as found under Counts 2, 4, 5, and 7.

b. Responbility of Kondewa – Bo District - Pillage

6236. para. 855: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Bo District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

(vi) Bonthe District – Pillage

a. Responsibility of Fofana – Bonthe District - Pillage

6237. para. 863: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Bonthe District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

b. Responsibility of Kondewa – Bonthe District - Pillage

6239. para. 895: The Prosecution alleges that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible, pursuant to Article 6(3), for the unlawful taking of civilian-owned property between about 1 November 1997 and 1 April 1998.[1567] These crimes are alleged to have occurred at various locations in Bo District, including the towns of Talia (Base Zero), Bonthe Town, Mobayeh and the surrounding areas.[1568]

6240. para. 896: As set out above in Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following acts have been committed which are relevant for Count 5, Pillage:

a. On 15 February 1998, Lamina Gbokambama and his men looted household items and equipment from a number of locations in Bonthe Town;

b. On 16 February 1998, Julius Squire and his troops looted a house in Bonthe and took 17,900,000 leones from TF2-116's house;

c. In early March 1998, a group of Kamajors including Baigeh took 140,000 leones from TF2-086 and her business partner Jitta on the road between Sebongie and Bonthe.

6241. para. 897: The Chamber has examined the facts and circumstances surrounding each incident set out above in points (i) through (iii) and concludes that all of the perpetrators were Kamajors under the effective control of Kondewa. The Chamber reiterates that the Kamajors entered Bonthe on 15 February 1998. Having considered the evidence in the context of the armed conflict that was then taking place in Sierra Leone, and having regard to all evidence adduced, the Chamber is satisfied that each of the acts described in paragraph 896(i)-(iii) was sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. Having considered the particular facts and circumstances of each of the incidents referred to above in paragraph 896, the Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims were persons not taking an active part in the hostilities at the time the incidents, furthermore, that the perpetrator knew that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

6242. para. 898: In light of the findings set out above, the Chamber is satisfied that the general requirements of war crimes have been established and the specific elements of pillage as a war crime have been established with respect to each incident described in paragraph 896 (ii)-(iii).

6243. para. 903: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible as a superior, pursuant to Article 6(3), for the crimes committed by the Kamajors in Bonthe Town and the surrounding areas as found under Counts 2,4,5, and 7 above.

(vii) Kenema District – Pillage

a. Responsibilty of Fofana – Kenema District - Pillage

6244. para. 911: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Kenema District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

b. Responsibility of Kondewa – Kenema District - Pillage

6245. para. 918: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible pursuant to either Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Kenema District during the time frame charged in the indictment.

(viii) Talia/Base Zero – Pillage

6246. para. 921: As set out above in the Factual Findings, the Chamber found that the following criminal acts have been committed in Talia / Base Zero, which the Chamber will consider for the purposes of making its legal findings on the individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6(0 and 6(3) of Fofana and Kondewa in this area:

>
> (ii) TF2-109 was captured by Kamajors along with other women and three men in her village of Mattru Jong and was taken to Talia by Kamajor Kamoh Bonnie. She was held in Talia for three days. The Kamajors also looted her property in Mattru, including furniture, household items and clothing.
>
>
> (xii) A truck carrying cocoa and coffee arrived in T alia. It was unloaded and the contents were given to the Director of War, Fofana and the High Priest, Kondewa. The truck was detained in Talia.

a. Responsibilty of Fofana – Talia/Base Zero - Pillage

6247. para. 929: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, (including through Joint criminal enterprise) or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning preparation or execution of any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Talia/Base Zero during the time frame charged.

6248. para. 930: Likewise, the Chamber concludes that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) as a superior for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Talia/Base Zero during the time frame charged.

b. Responsibility of Kondewa – Talia/Base Zero - Pillage

6249. para. 932: In relation to the incidents described under paragraph 921 (ii) and (vii) above the Chamber finds that the presence of Kondewa at Base Zero when these incidents took place is not in itself sufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa had any involvement in the commission of these criminal acts under any of the modes of liability charged in the Indictment. On the basis of the evidence adduced it cannot be established beyond reasonale doubt that there existed a superior-subordinate relationship between Kondewa as High Priest and the said Bonnie who was said to be a "Kondewa's priest".[1573]

6250. para. 933: In relation to the incident described under paragraph 921 (xii) the Chamber finds that the fact that a truck was brought to Talia and the contents of it was given to Kondewa is not sufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that either the truck might have been looted or that Fofana knew or had reasons to know that the truck might have been looted.

(ix) Moyamba District – Pillage

a. Responsibility of Fofana – Moyamba District - Pillage

6251. para. 948: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that the evidence adduced has not established beyond reasonable doubt that Fofana is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) or 6(3) for any of the criminal acts which the Chamber found were committed in Moyamba District during the time frame charged in the Indictment.

b. Responsibility of Kondewa – Moyamba District - Pillage

6252. para. 951: The Chamber reiterates its earlier finding that although Kondewa had a de jure status as a High Priest in the CDF, and as such possessed command over all the Kamajors in the country, this was limited to Kamajors belief in mystical powers which Kondewa allegedly possessed. This evidence is inconclusive to establish beyond reasonable doubt that Kondewa had an effective control over the Kamajors in the sense that he had the material ability to prevent or punish them for their criminal acts in Moyamba District. The only incident in the Factual findings made by the Chamber in Moyamba District and which could be attributable to Kondewa for Count 5, Pillage is set out below as follows:

a. In November 1997, Kamajors under the control of Kondewa took TF2-073's mercedes benz from his home in Sembehun. The Kamajors said that they were Kondewa's Kamajors and that they had come from Talia, Tihun, Gbangbatoke, and other surrounding villages. Three of them introduced themselves as Steven Sowa, Moses Mbalacolor, and Mohamed Sankoh. Mohamed Sankoh said he was deputy Director of war under Norman. The car was eventually given to Kondewa, who kept the car and used it without permission;

b. on the same occasion, these Kamajors also took a generator, car tires, and other gadgets from TF2-073.

6253. para. 952: The Chamber has examined the facts surrounding each incident set out in both points above and is satisfied that, having regard to all evidence adduced, each incidence of pillage is sufficiently related to the armed conflict to satisfy the nexus requirement for war crimes. The Chamber further finds, given the circumstances surrounding the occurrence of pillage as set out above, that the victims were persons not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the commission of the crimes. The Chamber is additionally satisfied that the perpetrator knew of that the victims were not taking an active part in the hostilities.

6254. para. 953: In light of the above, the Chamber is satisfied that both the general requirements of war crimes and the specific elements of pillage have been met with respect to each incident described in paragraph 951.

6255. para. 954: This incident demonstrates that the looting was done by Kamajors who operated under the direct orders of Kondewa. Kondewa's knowledge that his subordinates committed crimes of pillage can be established on the basis that the looted car was then given to him to be driven around. The Chamber finds that Kondewa not only failed to exercise his duties to punish his subordinates for looting but chose to support their actions by using the looted vehicle himself.

6256. para. 955: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber finds that it has been established beyond a reasonable doubt that Kondewa is individually criminally responsible as a superior, pursuant to Article 6(3) for pillage as charged under Count 5 of the Indictment and as found by the Chamber above.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa, SCSL-04-14-A, Judgment, 28 May 2008

(a) Factual Findings

6257. Not applicable.

(i) Bonthe District - Pillage

a. Responsibility of Kondewa – Bonthe District – Pillage

6258. para. 155: The Trial Chamber found that the Kamajors committed the following crimes during the attack on Bonthe on 15 February 1998:

> (i) violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, namely: murder and cruel treatment, punishable under Article 3.a. of the Statute, charged in Counts 2 and 4, respectively;

(ii) violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, namely:

(a) pillage, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute;

(b) collective punishments, punishable under Article 3.b. of the Statute, charged in Counts 5 and 7 respectively.[315]

The Trial Chamber found Kondewa responsible for these crimes as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[316] However, he was not found responsible pursuant to Article 6(1).[317]

6259. para. 171: Kondewa alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in both law and fact in finding that he was responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) for the crimes committed in Bonthe District. It is evident, however, from the submissions that he does not challenge the Trial Chamber's articulation of the legal requirements for the establishment of superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute. Kondewa, therefore, does not allege an error of law, but is instead concerned with the way in which the Trial Chamber applied the law to the particular facts of his case. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that this submission, in essence, questions the inferences drawn from facts found by the Trial Chamber and is therefore factual in nature. Kondewa must therefore satisfy the standard of review for alleged errors of fact.

6261. para. 173: In order for the Appeals Chamber to assess a party's arguments on appeal, the party must set out its grounds of appeal clearly, logically and exhaustively and must support allegations of error with precise references to the trial judgment or other material that supports his appeal. The Appeals Chamber will not consider submissions which are obscure, contradictory, vague or suffer from formal or other deficiencies. The Appeals Chamber will, therefore, only consider the Trial Chamber's application of the effective control test, and determine whether based on the findings of fact, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that a superior subordinate relationship existed between Kondewa and these Kamajors.

6262. para. 175: As has been noted, the position taken by the Prosecution is that there is no distinction between the legal standards required for proof of a superior-subordinate relationship in the case of "civilian" as opposed to "military" superior. The Appeals Chamber holds that the test for establishing the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship is effective control for both military and civilian superiors.

6263. para. 176: The Appeals Chamber will now determine whether it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Kondewa exercised the requisite degree of "effective control" over his alleged subordinates.

6264. para. 178: In finding that a superior-subordinate relationship existed between Kondewa and the Kamajor commanders responsible for the Bonthe attack, the Trial Chamber relied on what it describes as his de jure status as High Priest of Kamajors in Sierra Leone and particularly so in Bonthe District. Kondewa submits that because the Trial Chamber found elsewhere in the Judgment that the command he had over the Kamajors by virtue of his position as High Priest did not amount to a relationship of effective control, it was "unclear how the Trial Chamber determined that [his] status as High Priest gave him any higher degree of authority in Bonthe." The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber indeed found that Kondewa's status as High Priest did not amount to effective control over the Kamajors.

6265. para. 179: The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the Trial Chamber did not base its findings on the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship for Bonthe District on Kondewa's de jure position as High Priest alone. In addition to Kondewa's de jure status, the Trial Chamber relied on his de facto status as a superior to his alleged subordinates, as disclosed by evidence of his actual exercise of effective control over Kamajors who committed crimes in Bonthe District. Although his position as High Priest was one of several factors considered by the Trial Chamber in determining the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that this is not a material factor in view of the overwhelming evidence of his actual exercise of effective control. Such include evidence of the relationship with his alleged subordinates in Bonthe, including an incident occurring in August 1997, events occurring during the 15 February 1998 attack on Bonthe, and a reaction to a letter sent from the Attorney-General to Kamajors in Bonthe in March 1998.

(ii) Moyamba District – Pillage

a. Responsibility of Kondewa – Moyamba District – Pillage

i. Introduction and Trial Chamber's finding of facts

6272. para. 205: Kondewa alleges an error in law and in fact by the majority of the Trial Chamber, Justice Thompson dissenting, in finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that he was individually criminally responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) for pillage, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute (Count 5), in Moyamba District.[398] Similar to his First Ground of Appeal, Kondewa in essence challenges the Trial Chamber's application of the "effective control" test to establish that a superior-subordinate relationship existed between him and his alleged subordinates.

6273. para. 206: The Trial Chamber found that even though evidence of Kondewa's de jure status as High Priest was inconclusive to establish beyond reasonable doubt that he had effective control over Kamajors in Moyamba District, he was nevertheless responsible as a superior for one particular incident of pillage, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute, committed in Moyamba District.[399] The incident involved the looting of a Mercedes Benz car, a generator, car tires and other gadgets by Kondewa's alleged subordinates ("Moyamba looting incident").[400]

6274. para. 207: The Trial Chamber found that:

> [i]n November 1997, Kamajors under the control of Kondewa took TF2-073's Mercedes Benz from his home in Sembehun. The Kamajors said that they were Kondewa's Kamajors and that they had come from Talia, Tihun, Gbangbatoke and other surrounding villages. Three of them introduced themselves as Steven Sowa, Moses Mbalacolor and Mohamed Sankoh. Mohamed Sankoh said he was Deputy Director of War under Norman. The car was eventually given to Kondewa, who kept the car and used it without permission.
> On the same occasion these Kamajors also took a generator, car tires and other gadgets from TF2-073."[401]

6275. para. 208: The Trial Chamber found that both the general requirements of war crimes and the specific elements of pillage, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute, had been met, and that the incident demonstrated that the looting was done by Kamajors who operated under the direct orders of Kondewa.[402] Furthermore, Kondewa's knowledge that his subordinates committed this crime was established on the basis that the looted car was then given to him to drive around.[403] The Trial Chamber further found that Kondewa not only failed in the exercise of his duties to punish his subordinates, but chose instead to support their actions by using the looted vehicle himself.[404]

ii. Discussion

6276. para. 212: The issue raised in this ground is whether, based on the evidence as a whole, a reasonable tribunal of fact could conclude that a superior-subordinate relationship existed between Kondewa and his alleged subordinates. In reaching its findings on the superior responsibility of Kondewa in respect of this incident, the Trial Chamber relied on the following evidence:

> "(i) that at the time the crime was committed, the Kamajors said they were "Kondewa's Kamajors";
>
> (ii) that they also said they had come from villages including Talia and Tihun both of which are in Bonthe District;
>
> (iii) that the vehicle was taken to Talia and given to Norman then to Kondewa; and
> (iv) that Kondewa was subsequently seen driving the car around in Bo."[411]

6277. para. 213: Based on this evidence the Trial Chamber concluded that this particular crime in Moyamba District was carried out by Kamajors operating under the direct orders of Kondewa.[412]

6278. para. 214: It is evident that apart from Kondewa's de jure status as High Priest of all the Kamajors in the country, a status which the Trial Chamber found did not by itself give Kondewa effective control over the Kamajors, the only other evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber consisted of statements made by the alleged perpetrators and the use of the vehicle by Kondewa after it had first been given to Norman. The Appeals Chamber finds that the fact that the Kamajors in question identified themselves as "Kondewa's Kamajors" is insufficient to establish the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship beyond reasonable doubt, the statement having been made in the absence of Kondewa. Furthermore, the fact that they also stated that they had come from Talia and Tihun, among other villages, was insufficient. The Trial Chamber, in its findings on the responsibility of Kondewa in Bonthe District, found that apart from the Kamajors who carried out the 15 February 1998 attack on Bonthe, there was no evidence on which it could conclude beyond reasonable doubt that "Kondewa did exercise the same degree of control over other Kamajor commanders and fighters who operated in the surrounding areas of Bonthe Town, prior to the attack or subsequently."

6279. para. 215: There was thus, insufficient evidence linking Kondewa to these particular Kamajors that could establish beyond reasonable doubt that he had a superior-subordinate relationship with them. The Appeal Chamber finds, therefore, that on the evidence it was not open to a reasonable tribunal of fact to conclude that Kondewa was individually criminally responsible as a superior for this particular act of pillage, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute in Moyamba District.

iii. Dispositon

6280. para. 216: For the reasons set out above, the Appeals Chamber grants Kondewa's Third Ground of Appeal and reverses the verdict of guilt on Count 5 and substitutes a verdict of not guilty.

(iii) Burning as Pillage

6281. para. 389: The Appeals Chamber notes that the relevant question in this ground of appeal is whether the crime of pillage, a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, punishable under Article 3.f. of the Statute[355] can, as a matter of law, include acts of burning. For the purpose of this discussion, the Appeals Chamber considers the acts of burning relevant to this case to be acts of destruction not justified by military necessity. Therefore, the question here is whether the prohibition against pillage in common Article 3 and Additional Protocol II and as reflected in customary international law can include a prohibition against destruction not justified by military necessity.

6282. para. 390: The prohibition against pillage and the prohibition against destruction not justified by military necessity are long-standing rules in international humanitarian law. Both prohibitions exist in customary international law applicable to non-international armed conflict at the times relevant to this case.[766] However, they have been more substantially elaborated upon in the conventional international law applicable to international armed conflict and occupied territories, specifically.

6283. para. 391: An analysis of conventional international law and State practice indicates that the prohibition against pillage and the prohibition against destruction not justified by military necessity have been maintained as separate prohibitions. For example, the Lieber Code of 1863 qualifies the prohibition against "destruction of property" as conduct "not commanded by the authorized officer" whereas the prohibition against "pillage and sacking" is absolute.[767] The distinction is more pronounced in the contemporaneous Project of an International Declaration concerning the Laws and Customs of War, Brussels, 27 August 1874, which provided for protections against pillage and destruction or seizure in separate articles.[768] Similarly, Article 32 of the Laws of War on Land, Oxford, 9 September 1880, separately forbids combatants "(a) To pillage, even towns taken by assault; [and] (b) To destroy public or private property, if this destruction is not demanded by an imperative necessity of war . . . ."

6284. para. 392: The 1907 Hague Regulations[769] and 1949 Geneva Conventions similarly provide separate prohibitions against pillage and destruction not justified by military necessity. Article 28 of the Hague Regulations of 1907 prohibits "pillage of a town or place, even when taken by assault" and Article 47 provides that "pillage is formally prohibited." Article 23(g) forbids a State "[t]o destroy or seize the enemy's property, unless such destruction or seizure be imperatively demanded by the necessities of war."[770]

6285. para. 393: Geneva Convention IV provides that "[p]illage is prohibited" in Article 33, paragraph 2 and that "extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly" are grave breaches in Article 147.[771] Geneva Convention IV, Article 53 states:

> "Any destruction by the Occupying Power of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, or to the State, or to other public authorities, or to social or cooperative organizations, is prohibited, except where such destruction is rendered absolutely necessary by military operations."

6286. para. 394: Additional Protocol II expressly prohibits pillage whereas there are no provisions explicitly prohibiting destruction not justified by military necessity or unlawful attack on civilian property.

6287. para. 395: Article 13, paragraph 1, of Additional Protocol II states that the civilian population and individual civilians enjoy general protection against the dangers arising from military operations. The ICRC Commentary on Article 13 states that securing general protection of the civilian population in conformity with this Article is "based on the general principles relating to the protection of the civilian population which apply irrespective of whether the conflict is an international or an internal one."[772] In particular, the principles of distinction and proportionality indicate that attacks against dwellings, schools and other buildings occupied by civilians are prohibited unless the buildings have become legitimate military objectives.[773]

6288. para. 396: Although the prohibition against pillage and the prohibition against destruction of property not justified by military necessity are distinct in the principal conventional international law instruments, an examination of relevant ICRC Commentaries on the Geneva Conventions and the additional protocols to the Geneva Conventions suggests that the prohibitions are related. According to the ICRC Commentary, the prohibition against pillage in Article 4(2)(g) of the Additional Protocol II:

> "is based on Article 33, paragraph 2 of □Geneva Convention IV□. It covers both organized pillage and pillage resulting from isolated acts of indiscipline. It is prohibited to issue order whereby pillage is authorized. The prohibition has a general tenor and applies to all categories of property, both State-owned and private."[774]

> "The purpose of this Convention is to protect human beings, but it also contains certain provisions concerning property, designed to spare people the suffering resulting from the destruction of their real and personal property (houses, deeds, bonds, etc., furniture, clothing, provisions, tools, etc.).
> This prohibition is an old principle of international law, already stated in the Hague Regulations in two provisions: Article 28, which says: 'The pillage of a town or place, even when taken by assault, is prohibited', and Article 47, which reads: 'Pillage is formally forbidden'. The Geneva Convention of 1949 omitted the Word 'formally' in order not to risk reducing, through a comparison of the texts, the scope of other provisions which embody prohibitions, and which, while they contain no adverb, are nevertheless just as absolute in character. This prohibition is general in scope. It concerns not only pillage through individual acts without the consent of the military authorities, but also organized pillage, the effects of which are recounted in the histories of former wars, when the booty allocated to each soldier was considered as part of his pay. Paragraph 2 of Article 33 is extremely concise and clear; it leaves no loophole. The High Contracting Parties prohibit the ordering as well as the authorization of pillage. They pledge themselves furthermore to prevent or, if it has commenced, to stop individual pillage. Consequently, they must take all the necessary legislative steps. The prohibition of pillage is applicable to the territory of a Party to the conflict as well as to occupied territories. It guarantees all types of property, whether they belong to private persons or to communities or the State. On the other hand, it leaves intact the right of requisition or seizure."[775]

6290. para. 398: Thus, this commentary notably suggests that the Geneva Convention IV is "designed to spare people the suffering resulting from the destruction of their real and personal property"[776] and appears to relate the prohibition against pillage to that objective.

6292. para. 400: The preceding discussion demonstrates that the prohibitions against pillage and wanton destruction have been considered distinct in the conventional law prior to time relevant to this case. The Appeals Chamber notes that the interpretation of pillage at other international courts and State practice also demonstrate that pillage relates specifically to unlawful appropriation and therefore could not include acts of destruction.

6293. para. 401: The ICTY's interpretation and application of the prohibitions against pillage and wanton destruction is consistent with the distinction between the two crimes. Only one case at the ad hoc tribunals listed acts of destruction as pillage,[777] and there it was said obiter dicta and has not been followed in any subsequent cases.[778] The ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kordić and Čerkez defined the "crime of plunder" as:

> "all forms of unlawful appropriation of property in armed conflict for which individual criminal responsibility attaches under international criminal law, including those acts traditionally described as 'pillage'."[779]

6294. para. 402: ICTY chambers consider the terms "pillage," "plunder" and "spoliation" to describe the unlawful appropriation of public and private property during armed conflicts,[780] and that "plunder" should be understood as encompassing acts traditionally described as "pillage."[781]

6295. para. 403: The Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court defined the elements of the "war crime of pillage" as including the requirement that the "perpetrator appropriated certain property," "for private or personal use,"[782] "without the consent of the owner."[783] International tribunals give consideration to the work done in producing the Rome Statute on the establishment of an international criminal court, and, specifically, the finalized draft text of the elements of crimes completed by the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court in July 2000.[784] Although that document post-dates the acts involved here, it is nonetheless helpful in assessing the state of customary international law. In this regard, it should be noted that all the States attending the conference, whether signatories of the Rome Statute or not, were eligible to be represented on the Preparatory Commission. From this perspective, the document is a useful indication of the opinio juris of States.

6296. para. 404: The ICRC compendium on Customary International Humanitarian Law, published in 2005, surveyed State practice and concluded that pillage is the "specific application of the general principle of law prohibiting theft" thereby involving the "appropriation" of property "for private or personal use."[785]

6297. para. 405: The Prosecution's argument that Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom consider pillage to include the destruction of property is unavailing. The Prosecution appears to suggest that these three military manuals demonstrate State practice and therefore are indicative of the rule in customary international law. In determining customary international law with reference to State practice, the International Court of Justice in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases stated that the "State practice … [should be] both extensive and virtually uniform in the sense of the provision invoked; and should moreover have occurred in such a way as to show a general recognition that a rule of law or legal obligation is involved."[786] Here, no such uniform practice is indicated by an isolated examination of the military manuals of three States. Notably, the Prosecution provides no submissions regarding the practice of the remaining States.

6299. para. 407: Finally, evidence that the prohibition against pillage does not include the prohibition against destruction or seizure of property can be found in the drafting history of the Statute of the Special Court. Article 3 of the Statute provides jurisdiction over serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, including "pillage." According to the Report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the drafters had recourse to Sierra Leonean law:

> "in cases where a specific situation or an aspect of it was considered to be either unregulated or inadequately regulated under international law. The crimes considered to be relevant for this purpose and included in the Statute are: offences relating to . . . wanton destruction of property, and in particular arson, under the 1861 Malicious Damage Act."[790]

6300. para. 408: If pillage included wanton destruction, there would have been no reason to include the provision of the 1861 Malicious Damage Act.

a. Disposition

6301. para. 409: Taking into consideration the definition of pillage applied by the ICTY and ICTR which logically excludes acts of destruction, the distinction between the prohibitions against pillage and destruction not justified by military necessity, which is preserved throughout applicable conventional international law and the drafting history of the Statute of the Special Court, the Appeals Chamber finds that a necessary element of the crime of pillage is the unlawful appropriation of property. Consequently, burning and other acts of destruction of property not amounting to appropriation as a matter of law, cannot constitute pillage under international criminal law. This Ground of Appeal therefore fails.

CHAPTER 12 - ARTICLE 6.1 LIABILITY

A. CHARLES TAYLOR

1. Indictment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-I, Indictment, 16 March 2006

(a) Individual Criminal Responsibility

(i) The Accused

6302. CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR aka DANKPANNAH CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR aka GHANKAY TAYLOR aka DANKPANNAH CHARLES GHANKAY MACARTHUR TAYLOR (the ACCUSED) was born on 27 or 28 January 1948 at Arthington in the Republic of Liberia.[356]

6303. From the late 1980's the ACCUSED was the Leader or Head of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL), an organized armed group.[357]

6304. From 2 August 1997 until about 11 August 2003, the ACCUSED was the President of the Republic of Liberia.[358]

6305. Paragraphs 1 through 3 are incorporated by reference in CHARGES below.[359]

(ii) Charges

6306. By his acts or omissions in relation to the below described events, the ACCUSED, pursuant to Article 6.1. and, or alternatively, Article 6.3. of the Statute, is individually criminally responsible for the crimes alleged below.[360]

6307. The ACCUSED, by his acts or omissions, is individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6.1. of the Statute for the crimes referred to in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute as alleged in this Amended Indictment, which crimes the ACCUSED planned, instigated, ordered, committed, or in whose planning, preparation or execution the ACCUSED otherwise aided and abetted, or which crimes amounted to or were involved within a common plan, design or purpose in which the ACCUSED participated, or were a reasonably foreseeable consequence of such common plan, design or purpose.[361]

2. Trial Judgement

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, 18 May 2012

(a) Findings and Conclusions

(i) Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

a. General - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute 6308. para. 454: Article 6(1) of the Statute provides:

> A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute shall be individually responsible for the crime.

b. Committing - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6309. para. 456: The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not allege that the Accused physically or directly committed any charged crime as a principal perpetrator. [1081]

c. Committing through Participation in a Joint Criminal Enterprise - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6310. para. 457: The Indictment charges the Accused with the basic ("within") and extended ("foreseeable") forms of JCE.[1082] The following common elements have to be established:

i. A plurality of persons;

ii. The existence of a common plan, design or purpose which amounts to or involves the commission of a crime provided for in the Statute;

iii. Participation of the accused in the common plan, design or purpose.[1083]

6311. para. 458: The principle that an individual may be held responsible based on participation in a joint criminal enterprise is established in customary international law.[1084]

[361] Taylor Indictment, para. 33.

6312. para. 459: The plurality of persons need not be "organised in a military, political or administrative structure"[1085] but it needs to be demonstrated that the plurality of persons acted in concert with each other. While the plurality of persons must be identified, it is not necessary to identify by name each of the persons involved, and depending on the circumstances of the case, it can be sufficient to refer to categories or groups of persons.[1086]

6313. para. 460: With respect to the requirement of the existence of a common purpose, the Appeals Chamber has held that "the requirement that the common plan, design or purpose of a joint criminal enterprise is inherently criminal means that it must either have as its objective a crime within the Statute, or contemplate crimes within the Statute as the means of achieving its objective".[1087] The plan need not have been previously arranged or formulated, but may materialize contemporaneously and be inferred from the facts.[1088]

6314. para. 461: The Accused's participation in the common plan need not involve the commission of a specific crime, but may take the form of assistance in or contribution to the common plan.[1089]

6315. para. 462: The Prosecution submits that the "law may or may not require that the Accused's contribution be significant", referring to ICTY jurisprudence as authority for the position that the contribution need not be significant.[1090] The Defence, on the other hand, submits that the contribution must have "substantially assisted or significantly affected" the enterprise's goals, and that the Accused's participation must be "indispensable for the achievement of the final result".[1091]

6316. para. 463: The Trial Chamber notes, however, that contrary to the parties' submissions, it is established law that it is not required that the Accused's participation in the common plan is necessary or substantial, but he must have made at least a "significant" contribution to the common purpose.[1092]

6317. para. 464: It is also possible for an Accused to withdraw from the joint criminal enterprise after which point, he will not bear responsibility for the acts of the other members of the group.[1093] The identity of the other person or persons making up the plurality may change over the course of the existence of the joint criminal enterprise as participants enter or withdraw from it.[1094] The principal perpetrator need not be a member of the joint criminal enterprise, but may be used as a tool by one of the members of the joint criminal enterprise.[1095]

6318. para. 465: The following mental elements are required for the first form of JCE in order for the Accused to be held liable for crimes falling within the common purpose of the JCE:

i. The Accused intended to commit the crime or underlying offence, and this intent must be shared with the other members of the joint criminal enterprise.[1096]

6319. para. 466: The following mental elements are required for the third form of JCE, in order for the Accused to be held liable for a crime that falls outside of the common purpose of the JCE, but is a natural and foreseeable consequence of the common purpose:

i. The Accused intended to take part in and contribute to the common plan;[1097]

ii. The Accused had sufficient knowledge that the additional crime might be perpetrated by a member of the group, or a person used by a member of the group, and willingly took the risk by continuing to participate in the common plan.[1098]

6321. para. 468: The Trial Chamber notes that the jurisprudence of the ICTY allows for convictions under JCE III for genocide and persecution as a crime against humanity even though those crimes require specific intent.[1100] However, the Appeals Chamber of the STL has diverged from this jurisprudence, on the basis that it results in the legal anomaly that "a person could be convicted as a (co)perpetrator for a dolus specialis crime without possessing the requisite dolus specialis".[1101] It held that "the better approach under international criminal law is not to allow convictions under JCE III for special intent crimes like terrorism", [1102] and to instead treat such an offender as an aider and abettor.[1103] The Trial Chamber concurs with the reasoning of the STL Appeals Chamber and accordingly finds that the Accused may not be held liable under the third form of JCE for specific intent crimes such as terrorism.

d. Planning - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6322. para. 469: Planning consists of the following physical and mental elements:[1104]

i. The accused, alone or with others, intentionally designed an act or omission constituting the crimes charged;[1105]

ii. With the intent that a crime or underlying offence be committed in the execution of that design, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime or underlying offence would be committed in the execution of that design.[1106]

6323. para. 470: While the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence with which the accused is charged would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's plan, the plan must have been a factor "substantially contributing to […] criminal conduct constituting one or more statutory crimes that are later perpetrated".[1107]

e. Instigating- Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6324. para. 471: Instigating consists of the following physical and mental elements:[1108]

i. The accused, through either an act or an omission, prompted another to act in a particular way,[1109]

ii. With the intent that a crime or underlying offence be committed as a result of such prompting, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime or underlying offence would be committed as the result of such prompting.[1110]

6325. para. 472: The Accused's prompting may be implicit, written or otherwise non-verbal,[1111] and does not require that the accused have "effective control" over the perpetrator or perpetrators.[1112] The Accused's prompting may consist of a positive act, but may also be accomplished by omission.[1113]

6326. para. 473: While the Accused's prompting must have been a factor "substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime", the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence would not have been perpetrated but for the prompting of the Accused.[1114]

f. Ordering - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6327. para. 474: Ordering consists of the following physical and mental elements:[1115]

i. The Accused intentionally instructed another to carry out an act or engage in an omission,[1116]

ii. With the intent that a crime or underlying offence be committed in the execution of those instructions, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime or underlying offence would be committed in the execution of those instructions.[1117]

6328. para. 475: While the Prosecution need not prove that there existed a formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and perpetrator,[1118] it must provide "proof of some position of authority on the part of the Accused that would compel another to commit a crime in following the Accused's order".[1119] Such authority may be informal and of a temporary nature,[1120] and consequently, the order issued by the Accused need not be legally binding upon the physical perpetrator or intermediary perpetrator.

6329. para. 476: The order need not take any particular form.[1121] However, ordering requires a positive act and cannot be committed by omission.[1122] Because the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that the Accused need merely "instruct another person to commit an offence",[1123] it is clear that liability for ordering may ensue where the Accused issues, passes down, or otherwise transmits the order, and that he need not use his position of authority to "convince" the perpetrator to commit the crime or underlying offence.[1124] Furthermore, the Accused need not give the order directly to the physical perpetrator,[1125] and an intermediary lower in the chain of command who passes the order on to the perpetrator may also be held responsible for ordering the underlying offence as long as he has the requisite state of mind.[1126]

6330. para. 477: While the issuance of the order must have been a factor substantially contributing to the physical perpetration of a crime or underlying offence,[1127] the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's order.[1128]

6331. para. 478: The Defence submits that while Trial Chambers in the AFRC, RUF and CDF cases have held that the Accused's position of authority can be inferred or implied, these legal findings are based on a misreading of the cited authorities, which instead provide only that the existence of an order may be proved through circumstantial evidence.[1129] Further, it argues that the Appeals Chamber in the RUF case failed to make any distinction between an inference of authority and an inference of an order in finding that "ordering can be established by direct or circumstantial evidence".[1130]

6332. para. 479: The Defence therefore submits that while the existence of an order may be proved through circumstantial evidence, where this is the only reasonable inference, the Prosecution must furnish direct evidence establishing that, at the material time, the Accused held the required position of authority.[1131] It submits that, even if the Trial Chamber finds that circumstantial evidence can establish the Accused's position of authority, it should "in the interests of justice demand independent evidence proving the separate elements of the actus reus of ordering".[1132] It submits that the Trial Chamber should not follow recent jurisprudence which "compounds the elements to the extent that the existence of an Accused's position of authority has been derived from evidence that the Accused issued orders".[1133]

6333. para. 480: In Section IV(2), "Considerations Regarding the Evaluation of Evidence", the Trial Chamber holds that it is entitled to rely on circumstantial evidence in cases in which the only reasonable inference to be drawn from such evidence leads to proof of the guilt of the Accused.[1134] Moreover, the Trial Chamber finds that the Appeals Chamber's statement that "ordering can be established by direct or circumstantial evidence" implies that each element of the actus reus of ordering can be proved by means of either type of evidence.

6334. para. 481: The Trial Chamber finds accordingly that, as with all other elements of crimes or modes of liability, the authority of the Accused may be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence. The Trial Chamber further finds that evidence that the Accused has issued orders may be considered as circumstantial evidence that, inter alia, establishes that the Accused was in a position of authority.

g. Aiding and abetting - Law on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

i. The Accused provided practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support to the perpetration of a crime or underlying offence[1136] and

ii. Such practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support had a substantial effect upon the commission of a crime or underlying offence.[1137]

6336. para. 483: An Accused may aid and abet not only by means of positive action, but also through omission.[1138]

6337. para. 484: The Accused may aid and abet at one or more of the "planning, preparation or execution" stages of the crime or underlying offence.[1139] The lending of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support may occur before, during, or after the crime or underlying offence occurs.[1140] The actus reus of aiding and abetting does not require "specific direction".[1141] No evidence of a plan or agreement between the aider and abettor and the perpetrator is required,[1142] except in cases of ex post facto aiding and abetting where "at the time of the planning, preparation or execution of the crime, a prior agreement exists between the principal and the person who subsequently aids and abets the commission of the crime".[1143]

6338. para. 485: Although the practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support provided by the Accused must have a substantial effect upon the commission of the crime or underlying offence,[1144] the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's contribution.[1145]

6339. para. 486: The mental elements of aiding and abetting require that:

i. The Accused performed an act with the knowledge that such act would assist the commission of a crime or underlying offence, or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of underlying offence;[1146] and

ii. The Accused is aware of the essential elements of the crime committed by the principal offender, including the state of mind of the principal offender.[1147]

6340. para. 487: Although the lending of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support must itself be intentional, the intent to commit the crime or underlying offence is not required.[1148] Instead, the Accused must have knowledge that his acts or omissions assist the perpetrator in the commission of the crime or underlying offence.[1149] Such knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances.[1150] The Accused must be aware, at a minimum, of the essential elements of the substantive crime or underlying offence for which he is charged with responsibility as an aider and abettor.[1151] The requirement that the aider and abettor need merely know of the perpetrator's intent — and need not share it — applies equally to specific-intent crimes or underlying offences such as persecution as a crime against humanity.[1152]

(ii) Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

a. Joint Criminal Enterprise - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6341. para. 6891: In order to find the Accused guilty of committing the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment through participation in a Joint Criminal Enterprise, the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused participated in a common plan, design or purpose with others, which amounts to or involves the commissions of the crimes charged. The Accused's participation in the common plan must have made at least a "significant" contribution to the common purpose.[15495] Furthermore, for liability under the first form of JCE the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused both intended the commission of the crime and intended to participate in a common plan aimed at its commission. For liability under the third form of JCE the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused both intended to take part in and contribute to the common plan and had sufficient knowledge that the additional crime might be perpetrated by a member of the group, or a person used by a member of the group, and willingly took the risk by continuing to participate in the common plan.[15496]

6342. para. 6892: The Trial Chamber recalls its Decision that "[t]he Prosecution has adequately fulfilled the pleading requirements of the alleged Joint Criminal Enterprise in the Second Amended Indictment, and has provided sufficient detail to put the Accused on notice of the case against him". The Trial Chamber identified the "common purpose" of the alleged Joint Criminal Enterprise (JCE), as "a campaign to terrorize the civilian population of the Republic of Sierra Leone, of which the crimes charged in Counts 2-11 of the Indictment were either an integral part, or a foreseeable consequence thereof".[15497] This decision was upheld by the Appeals Chamber.[15498]

6343. para. 6893: The Trial Chamber notes, however, that the Prosecution's theory of JCE has evolved and shifted over the course of the proceedings. In its Final Trial Brief, the Prosecution alleges that the use of criminal means, a campaign of terror, encompassed the Indictment Crimes, "in order to achieve the ultimate objective of the JCE, to forcibly control the population and territory of Sierra Leone and to pillage its resources, in particular diamonds".[15499] The Prosecution further contends that thereafter the joint actions of the Accused and other participants of the JCE were geared toward those dual objectives.[15500]

6344. para. 6894: The Trial Chamber has found that the Prosecution failed to prove that prior to 1996 the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Kukoi Samba Sanyang (a.k.a. Dr Manneh), participated in any common plan involving the commission of the crimes alleged in the Indictment, nor that the alleged meetings in Libya, Burkina Faso and Voinjama, where the common plan is alleged to have been established, ever took place.[15501] Furthermore, while the Trial Chamber found that the Accused provided significant operational and military support to the RUF during its 1991 invasion of Sierra Leone, the evidence does not indicate that this support was provided pursuant to a common plan within the context of a joint criminal enterprise.

6345. para. 6895: Subsequently, the nature of the relationship between the Accused and the RUF, and later the RUF/AFRC, evolved over time. While the relationship was a mutually beneficial one, the Trial Chamber is of the view that it was the expression of converging and synergistic interests, rather than "a common plan to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone". As these interests evolved, the relationship evolved accordingly.

6346. para. 6896: The Trial Chamber has found that although the Accused supported the creation of the RUF, providing training camps and other forms of support in the early 1990s, and that

Taylor's NPFL forces participated in the invasion of Sierra Leone in March 1991, the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Taylor's support for the 1991 invasion of Sierra Leone was undertaken pursuant to "a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone". The evidence instead shows that the Accused and the RUF had common enemies, namely, ULIMO, a Liberian insurgency group in Sierra Leone and the Sierra Leone Government forces which supported ULIMO, and it was in the interest of the Accused and the RUF both to join forces against their common enemies.[15502]

6347. para. 6897: The Trial Chamber has also found that the Prosecution failed to prove its allegation that during this period the NPFL trained the RUF recruits in terror tactics in accordance with the JCE.[15503] In fact, Prosecution witnesses testified to the contrary, that training included the Geneva Convention protections for civilians in armed conflict.[15504] Moreover, it is clear that the RUF strongly opposed some of the crimes committed by NPFL soldiers against the Sierra Leonean civilian population leading to Top 20 and Top 40.[15505] For this reason, the Trial Chamber considers that even if there were joint military operations between the NPFL and RUF in the early 1990s, which the evidence indicates there was, the Prosecution failed to establish they were undertaken pursuant to a joint criminal enterprise. Cooperation between the NPFL and RUF was limited in its purpose and it was military, not criminal, in its nature. Moreover, it continued only until Top Final in 1992, at which point, because of the criminal activities of the NPFL troops towards the Sierra Leonean citizens, and due to intensified attacks from ULIMO and the SLA, the cooperation ended with the withdrawal of the NPFL troops from Sierra Leone by the Accused. The Trial Chamber has found that the relationship between Taylor and the RUF significantly waned after Top Final but that the Accused provided low-level support to the RUF as it continued fighting in Sierra Leone, while the Accused was himself fighting in Liberia.[15506]

6348. para. 6898: The Trial Chamber observes that the relationship between the RUF and the Accused resumed a higher level of activity following the election of the Accused as President of Liberia in 1997. At this point, the Accused was in a position to play a significantly expanded role in Sierra Leone, both in terms of political and military support to the RUF. However, in the Trial Chamber's view the Prosecution failed to prove that this support was provided pursuant to "a common plan to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone". Rather, the evidence relating to the support provided indicates that there was a quid pro quo in the relations between the RUF and the Accused. The trading of diamonds for arms is the clearest example of this quid pro quo, and a number of statements attributed to the Accused indicate the interest he had in providing weapons or facilitating the provision of weapons to the RUF in exchange for diamonds.[15507]

6349. para. 6899: In the Trial Chamber's view, this evidence clearly shows that the Accused and the RUF were military allies and trading partners, but it is an insufficient basis to find beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused was part of any JCE.

6350. para. 6900: The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused participated in a common plan, design or purpose which amounted to or involved the commission of a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court. For this reason the Trial Chamber finds the Accused not criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute for the Indictment crimes by virtue of having participated in a Joint Criminal Enterprise.

b. Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

i. General - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6351. para. 6904: In order to find the Accused criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute for aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment, the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which had a substantial effect upon the commission of the crimes (actus reus).[15513] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused knew that his acts or omissions would assist the commission of the crime, or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of the crime, and that the Accused was aware of the "essential elements" of the crime committed by the principal offender, including the state of mind of the principal offender (mens rea).[15514]

6352. para. 6905: Before turning to the various forms of assistance provided by the Accused to the RUF/AFRC, the Trial Chamber recalls its findings regarding the RUF/AFRC's war strategy. Throughout the Indictment period, the operational strategy of the RUF and AFRC was characterized by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean civilian population, including murders, rapes, sexual slavery, looting, abductions, forced labour, conscription of child soldiers, amputations and other forms of physical violence and acts of terror.[15515] These crimes were inextricably linked to the strategy and objectives of the military operations themselves.[15516] The RUF/AFRC pursued a policy and strategy of committing crimes against the civilian population in order to achieve military gains, and also politically in order to attract the attention of the international community and to heighten their negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean Government. This strategy entailing a campaign of terror against the civilian population is explicitly demonstrated by the overt names of their military campaigns, such as "Operation Pay Yourself", "Operation No Living Thing" and "Operation Spare No Soul". The Trial Chamber therefore considers that any assistance towards these military operations of the RUF and RUF/AFRC constitutes direct assistance to the commission of crimes by these groups.

6353. para. 6906: The Trial Chamber will now consider the various forms of assistance provided by the Accused to the AFRC/RUF and whether his conduct satisfies the actus reus and mens rea of aiding and abetting the crimes charged in the Indictment.

ii. Findings on the Physical Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

iii. Arms and Ammunition - Findings on the Physical Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6354. para. 6910: The Trial Chamber has found that during the Indictment period, the Accused directly or through intermediaries supplied or facilitated the supply of arms and ammunition to the RUF/AFRC. The Accused sent small but regular supplies of arms and ammunition and other supplies to the RUF from late 1997 to 1998 via his subordinates, and substantial amounts of arms and ammunition to the AFRC/RUF from 1998 to 2001.[15522] The Accused facilitated much larger shipments of arms and ammunition from third party states to the AFRC/RUF, including the Magburaka shipment of October 1997 and the Burkina Faso shipment of November/December 1998.[15523]

6355. para. 6911: The Trial Chamber has found that the arms and ammunition provided by the Accused were used by the RUF, AFRC, AFRC/RUF Junta or alliance, and Liberian fighters during various military offensives in which crimes were committed, including the Junta mining operations at Tongo Fields prior to the ECOMOG Intervention, "Operation Pay Yourself" and subsequent offensives in Kono District in 1998, and in the Freetown invasion in January 1999, and attacks on the outskirts of Freetown and the Western Area in late January to early February 1999.[15524] The Trial Chamber has found that arms and ammunition provided by the Accused were used by SAJ Musa and Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) in attacks on Mongor Bendugu and Kabala shortly after Operation Fitti-Fatta in mid-1998, as well as by the AFRC group led by Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit), Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast), and Ibrahim Kamara (a.k.a. Bazzy) in their activities in the Koinadugu and Bombali Districts from June to October 1998.[15525] These operations involved widespread or systematic attacks on the civilian population and the commission of crimes, specifically acts of terrorism (Count 1); murder (Counts 2 and 3); rape (Count 4); sexual slavery (Count 5); outrages upon personal dignity (Count 6); cruel treatment (Count 7), other inhumane acts (Count 8); conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities (Count 9); enslavement (Count 10); and pillage (Count 11).

6356. para. 6912: The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the provision and facilitation of these arms and ammunition by the Accused constituted practical assistance to the commission of crimes by the RUF and RUF/AFRC during the Indictment period. The Trial Chamber will now consider whether this assistance had a substantial effect on the commission of the Indictment crimes.

6357. para. 6913: The Trial Chamber has considered the Defence submission that any assistance provided by sources in Liberia made no substantial contribution to the commission of the crimes pleaded in the Indictment because the RUF and RUF/AFRC's primary sources of military equipment were in fact weapons captured from ECOMOG, from government stores when the groups acted as the Junta government and from arms trading with Guinea and former ULIMO combatants. The Trial Chamber is also mindful that the applicable law for aiding and abetting does not require that the Accused be the only source of assistance in order for his contribution to be substantial.[15526] The Chamber has found that in addition to receiving arms and ammunition from the Accused, the RUF, AFRC/RUF also obtained supplies from the existing stockpiles of the Kabbah Government when they took over power in May 1997, by capturing them from ECOMOG and UN peacekeepers, and through trade with ULIMO, AFL and ECOMOG commanders. However, these sources of materiel were of minor importance in comparison to that supplied or facilitated by the Accused.[15527] The Trial Chamber has found that the additional sources of supply which the RUF/AFRC had could not provide sufficient quantities of materiel to sustain the existence and military operations of the rebels.[15528]

6358. para. 6914: The Trial Chamber has also found that the RUF/AFRC in fact heavily and frequently relied on the materiel supplied and facilitated by the Accused. The depletion of RUF arms and ammunition was a problem which often prompted Bockarie and Sesay to turn to the Accused, and the Magburaka shipment is but one example of this.[15529] The Trial Chamber further recalls its finding that the materiel supplied by or facilitated by the Accused often contributed to and was causally linked to the capture of more supplies by the RUF and AFRC.[15530] The Trial Chamber has found that although there were instances in which the materiel that the Accused gave to the RUF/AFRC was more limited in quantity,[15531] on a number of occasions the arms and ammunitions which he supplied or facilitated were in fact indispensable for the RUF/AFRC military offensives. The materiel provided or facilitated by the Accused was critical in enabling the operational strategy of the RUF and the AFRC during the Indictment period.[15532]

6359. para. 6915: Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the provision and facilitation of the supply of arms and ammunition to the RUF/AFRC had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes charged in the Indictment.

iv. Military Personnel - Findings on the Physical Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6360. para. 6918: The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused sent a group of approximately 20 ex-NPFL fighters who had been integrated into the Armed Forces of Liberia ("AFL") to Sierra Leone. These 20 fighters fought in Karina and Kamalo in Bombali District in August/September 1998 as part of a group of 200 AFRC/RUF fighters. The 20 fighters were later on incorporated into the Red Lion Battalion, which was comprised of 200 fighters. The Red Lion Battalion formed part of a group of 1,000 AFRC/RUF fighters who participated in the invasion of Freetown and committed crimes during the course of military operations in December 1998/January 1999.[15536]

6361. para. 6919: The Trial Chamber further found that the Accused sent Abu Keita and 150 fighters known as the Scorpion Unit, to serve as a standby force in Sierra Leone, ready to protect Liberia from attacks coming from Guinea. Bockarie integrated the Scorpion Unit into the RUF, a decision approved by Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) on behalf of the Accused,[15537] and the reinforcements subsequently participated in the attack on Kono and Freetown, including the attack on Kenema. During this attack, crimes charged in Count 1 to 11 of the Indictment took place.

6362. para. 6920: The Trial Chamber further found that the Accused reorganized, armed and sent former SLA fighters who had retreated to Liberia back to Sierra Leone to fight in the Kono and Freetown operations, and these men participated in the attack on Kono in December 1998.[15538] The Trial Chamber has found that Liberian authorities and RUF/AFRC members recruited and forced Sierra Leonean refugees residing in Liberia to return to Sierra Leone to fight. However, the evidence did not establish that these civilians participated in attacks in Sierra Leone.

6363. para. 6921: The Trial Chamber finds that the provision of military personnel by the Accused constitutes practical assistance to the commission of crimes by the RUF/AFRC during the Indictment period. The Trial Chamber will now consider whether this assistance was substantial.

6364. para. 6922: The Trial Chamber notes that Abu Keita was a former ULIMO general and therefore a person with high-level military expertise. He was sent by the Accused with approximately 150 fighters, who were tasked with the important mission of defending Liberia in case of an incursion from Guinea.[15539] The Trial Chamber therefore considers that this was a relatively experienced military force, and that its subsequent inclusion within the ranks of the RUF and its deployment in the December 1998 attack on Kenema substantially contributed to the commission of crimes during the Freetown invasion.

6366. para. 6924: The Trial Chamber finds that taken cumulatively, and in addition to the arms and ammunition provided by the Accused, the military personnel provided by the Accused constituted practical assistance which had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes by the RUF and RUF/AFRC.

v. Operational Support - Findings on the Physical Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6367. para. 6927: The Trial Chamber has found that during the pre-Indictment period, NPFL radio operators and equipment were sent to Sierra Leone, and RUF fighters were trained by the NPFL radio operators in radio communications, with the knowledge of the Accused. The RUF continued to benefit into the Indictment period from the enhanced communications capacity that resulted from this assistance. However, as the acts of the Accused took place prior to the Indictment period, the Trial Chamber has not taken them into account in determining criminal responsibility.

6368. para. 6928: The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused also provided operational support to the RUF/AFRC during the Indictment period. The Accused provided satellite phones to Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay and thus enhanced their capacity to plan, facilitate or order RUF military operations during which crimes were committed. The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused and Sam Bockarie communicated by a satellite phone in furtherance of the Freetown Invasion and other RUF/AFRC military activities during which crimes were committed.[15552]

6369. para. 6929: The Trial Chamber has found that on different occasions RUF members, including Foday Sankoh, Eddie Kanneh, Memunatu Deen and Dauda Aruna Fornie, used Liberian radio communication equipment in Monrovia to communicate with the RUF in Sierra Leone regarding arms shipments, diamond transactions and military operations.[15553] In addition to the equipment at the RUF Guesthouse, there is evidence that Base 1, the radio station at Benjamin Yeaten's home, was used for communications with Bockarie and later Sesay.[15554] The Trial Chamber notes its findings that these communications happened with the knowledge and approval of the Accused.[15555]

6370. para. 6930: The Trial Chamber has also found that "448 messages" were sent by subordinates of the Accused in Liberia, with his knowledge, to warn the RUF of impending ECOMOG jet attacks on AFRC/RUF forces in Sierra Leone.[15556]

6371. para. 6931: The Trial Chamber finds that the communications support provided by the Accused to the RUF/AFRC constitutes practical assistance to the RUF/AFRC for the crimes committed during the course of their military operations throughout the Indictment period.

6372. para. 6932: The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused provided financial support to the RUF/AFRC. In most instances, these funds were given to individual RUF members for unspecified or personal use. After February 1998, the Accused gave funds to Bockarie of $10,000 to $20,000 at a time, on multiple occasions for the purchase of arms from ULIMO.[15557] The Accused also kept diamonds and money in "safekeeping" for the RUF/AFRC.[15558]

6373. para. 6933: The Trial Chamber found that the Accused also provided a Guesthouse to the RUF in Monrovia, which was used by the RUF to facilitate the transfer of arms and funds from the Accused to the RUF and the delivery of diamonds from the RUF to the Accused.[15559]

6374. para. 6934: The Trial Chamber also found that during the Indictment period, the Accused provided the RUF/AFRC with security escorts, facilitation of access through checkpoints, and much needed assistance with transport of arms and ammunition by road and by air. This facilitation of road and air transportation of materiel, as well as security escorts, played a vital role in the operations of the RUF/AFRC during a period when an international arms embargo was in force.[15560]

6375. para. 6935: The Trial Chamber further found that throughout the Indictment period the Accused provided the RUF and RUF/AFRC with other forms of assistance which supported the well-functioning and continued existence of these groups. The Accused provided safe haven for RUF fighters during their retreat from Zogoda[15561] and medical support in Liberia for treatment of wounded RUF fighters,[15562] as well as provision of goods such as food, clothing, cigarettes, alcohol and other supplies to the RUF. The Accused also sent "herbalists" who marked fighters in Buedu and Kono to "protect" them against bullets and bolster their confidence.[15563] Liberian forces also assisted the RUF/AFRC with the capture and return of deserters to Sierra Leone.[15564]

6376. para. 6936: The Trial Chamber notes that a common feature of all of the aforementioned forms of assistance is that they supported, sustained and enhanced the functioning of the RUF and its capacity to undertake military operations in the course of which crimes were committed. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the RUF and RUF/AFRC military campaign was inextricably linked to the commission of the crimes charged in the Indictment. Therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that these forms of operational support, including communications, logistics, and the RUF Guesthouse, which improved coordination and facilitated the trade for and vital flow of arms and ammunition to the RUF/AFRC, constitute practical assistance for the commission of crimes charged in Count 1 to 11 of the Indictment.

6377. para. 6937: Taken cumulatively, and having regard to the military support provided by the Accused to the AFRC/RUF, the Trial Chamber finds that the operational support provided by the Accused to the AFRC/RUF had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes charged in Count 1 to 11 of the Indictment.

vi. Encouragement and Moral Support - Findings on the Physical Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6378. para. 6940: The Trial Chamber has considered the ongoing communication and consultation between the Accused and the RUF/AFRC leadership, and the ongoing advice and encouragement that the Accused provided to the RUF/AFRC.

6379. para. 6941: The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused advised Sankoh to participate in the Abidjan peace talks in 1996 in order to obtain arms and ammunition for the RUF, and that the RUF did obtain arms and ammunition in Abidjan. While pre-Indictment, the Trial Chamber considers this incident to show a pattern of conduct by the Accused that continued into and during the Indictment period.

6380. para. 6942: The Trial Chamber also found that in February 1998 the Accused told Johnny Paul Koroma to capture Kono and, after RUF/AFRC forces carried out two consecutive attacks on Koidu Town, subsequently told Bockarie that the RUF should keep control over this area for the purpose of maintaining the trade of diamonds for arms and ammunition.[15570] The Trial Chamber further found that the Accused advised Bockarie to recapture Kono in mid-June 1998 in order to mine diamonds which would be used to purchase arms and ammunition, following which the RUF carried out Operation Fitti-Fatta.[15571]

6381. para. 6943: The Trial Chamber also found that after the Intervention in 1998, the Accused told Bockarie that the RUF should construct or re-prepare the airfield in Buedu, so that arms and ammunitions can be shipped to RUF/AFRC controlled territory.[15572] The Trial Chamber has also found that in 1998, the Accused advised Sam Bockarie to open an RUF training base in Bunumbu, Kailahun District, known as "Camp Lion".[15573]

6382. para. 6944: The Trial Chamber finds that by giving advice and direction to the RUF and RUF/AFRC on matters concerning or directly affecting their military strategy, the Accused encouraged and morally supported the commission of the crimes charged in the Indictment.

6383. para. 6945: The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused held a position of authority as an elder statesman and as President of Liberia. As such, he was accorded deference by the RUF and RUF/AFRC and, as demonstrated by the evidence, his advice was generally heeded by them. The Trial Chamber is therefore convinced that the approval, support and encouragement which the RUF and RUF/AFRC troops received from the Accused greatly boosted their confidence and morale when conducting military operations.

6384. para. 6946: Taken cumulatively, and considering the other forms of practical assistance which the Accused provided, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused substantially contributed to the commission of the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment by rendering encouragement and moral support to the RUF and RUF/AFRC.

vii. Findings on the Mental Elements of Aiding and Abetting - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6385. para. 6947: The Trial Chamber recalls that as early as August 1997, the Accused knew of the atrocities being committed against civilians in Sierra Leone by the RUF and RUF/AFRC forces and of their propensity to commit crimes. The Accused acknowledged that when he became the President of Liberia, he started receiving daily briefings from his national security advisor which would include press and intelligence reports regarding the situation in Sierra Leone.[15574] In addition to this, as a member of ECOWAS, the Accused was also privy to numerous reports which described the "massive looting of property, murder and rapes"[15575] that were being committed on the territory of Sierra Leone.[15576]

6386. para. 6948: The Trial Chamber further recalls that the Accused testified that at that time there were news reports of a "horrific campaign being waged against the civilian population in Sierra Leone".[15577] In a statement dated July 1998, Taylor "strongly condemned the continuing rebel activities in Sierra Leone, as well as the horrendous atrocities that had been committed there".[15578]

6388. para. 6950: The Trial Chamber also finds that the Accused was aware of the "essential elements" of the crimes he was contributing to, including the state of mind of the perpetrators. The Trial Chamber recalls the numerous contemporary public reports which described in detail and over a large period of time each of the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment.[15579] The Trial Chamber also notes that after 1997 there was increased media coverage on the RUF/AFRC terror campaign in Sierra Leone.[15580] Such reports on the crimes taking place in Sierra Leone were at the core of discussions during meetings of the ECOWAS Committee of Five (later Committee of Six), of which the Accused was a member.

6389. para. 6951: In light of the above, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused was also aware of the "essential elements" of the crimes committed by RUF and RUF/AFRC troops, including the state of mind of the perpetrators.

6390. para. 6952: In conclusion, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused possessed the necessary mens rea for aiding and abetting in relation to the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment.

viii. Finding on the Accused's Criminal Responsibility for Aiding and Abetting the Crimes Charged in the Indictment - Aiding and Abetting - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6391. para. 6953: For the foregoing reasons, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused is criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the commission of crimes set forth in Counts 1 through 11 of the Indictment.

c. Planning - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

i. General - Planning - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6392. para. 6957: In order to find the Accused guilty of planning the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment, the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused, alone or with others, intentionally planned the criminal conduct constituting the crimes charged. While it is not a requirement that the crimes charged would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's plan, it is necessary to demonstrate that the plan was a factor which substantially contributed to the commission of these crimes or underlying offences.[15584] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused intended that a crime or underlying offence be committed in the execution of that plan, or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that a crime or underlying offence would be committed in the execution of that plan.[15585]

ii. Findings on the Physical Elements of Planning - Planning - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6393. para. 6958: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that in November 1998, Sam Bockarie met with the Accused in Monrovia, where the two of them designed a plan for the RUF/AFRC forces to carry out a two-pronged attack on Kono and Kenema with the ultimate objective of reaching Freetown, releasing Foday Sankoh from prison and regaining control.[15586] The Accused emphasised to Bockarie that this military operation should be "fearful" in order to pressure the Government into negotiations for the release of Foday Sankoh.[15587] Upon returning to Sierra Leone in December 1998, Bockarie convened a meeting at Waterworks, in Kailahun District, where he conveyed this plan to RUF and AFRC commanders. At the end of the meeting Bockarie contacted the Accused via satellite phone. During the conversation, the Accused told Bockarie to use "all means" to capture Freetown.[15588]

6394. para. 6959: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Bockarie had the idea to attack Freetown even before meeting with the Accused in Monrovia in November 1998. This is evident from Bockarie's prior request to the Accused to assist him in obtaining a large amount of arms and ammunition from Burkina Faso.[15589] However, the Trial Chamber notes that the actual plan which established the various military targets and the modus operandi of the attack was designed during the November 1998 meeting between Bockarie and the Accused.[15590] The objective to capture Kono prior to moving to Freetown was integrated in the plan upon advice from the Accused and the aim to make the operation "fearful" was articulated.[15591] The Trial Chamber notes that the RUF and AFRC attacks which ensued on 17 December 1998 were directed towards the locations prescribed in the plan made by Bockarie and the Accused.[15592]

6395. para. 6960: The Trial Chamber further recalls that in December 1998 and January 1999, Bockarie was in frequent contact via radio or satellite phone with the Accused, either directly or through Yeaten, to update him on the execution of the plan and the progress of the Kono and Freetown operations.[15593]

6396. para. 6961: In light of the above, the Trial Chamber finds that in November 1998, the Accused, in concert with Bockarie, intentionally designed a plan for the RUF/AFRC Freetown Invasion. The Trial Chamber will now consider whether this plan substantially contributed to the crimes committed by RUF/AFRC fighters.

6397. para. 6962: The plan designed by Bockarie and the Accused led directly to the attacks on Kono and Makeni. In the course of the implementation of this plan, a small contingent of troops led by Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat) reached Freetown and Bockarie's forces got to the outskirts of Freetown, where they met up with the forces led by Gullit. During the course of the implementation of this plan, these forces committed crimes charged in the Indictment. These crimes resulted directly from the plan made by Bockarie and the Accused in Monrovia.

6398. para. 6963: The Defence submits that the actual attack on Freetown in January 1999 was planned and executed by a group of AFRC soldiers who acted on their own and had no contact with the RUF.[15594] According to the Defence, this shows that the Accused was not involved in any way with the crimes that took place during this attack.

6399. para. 6964: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that in June/July 1998, before the plan for the two-pronged attack leading to Freetown was made by Bockarie and the Accused, a group of disgruntled AFRC soldiers led by SAJ Musa, who refused to take orders from Bockarie, devised their own plan to attack Freetown in order to "restore the Sierra Leone Army".[15595] In mid-December 1998, these AFRC fighters started the execution of that plan and, independently of the RUF, moved towards Freetown.

6400. para. 6965: The Trial Chamber found that following the Waterworks meeting Bockarie told SAJ Musa to attack Freetown but SAJ Musa refused and continued on his own advance, pursuant to his separate plan. The Trial Chamber found that following the death of SAJ Musa on 23 December 1998, during an attack in Benguema, Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) took over the leadership of the troops at Benguema.[15596] Gullit then resumed contact with Bockarie and the two of them coordinated efforts to capture Freetown. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Bockarie then assumed effective control over Gullit's actions and SAJ Musa's plan was abandoned for the plan that had been made by Bockarie and the Accused in November 1998.[15597] The troops commanded by Gullit in Freetown were subordinated to and used by Bockarie in furtherance of this plan, and further execution of the plan was carried out with close coordination between Bockarie and Gullit, with Gullit in frequent communication with Bockarie and with Gullit taking orders from Bockarie. In these circumstances the Trial Chamber finds that the plan made by Bockarie and the Accused substantially contributed to the commission of crimes committed by Gullit's forces while Gullit was operating under Bockarie's command.

6401. para. 6966: The Accused, having drawn up the plan with Bockarie, and having followed its implementation closely via daily communication with Bockarie, either directly or through Yeaten, was aware of its continuing evolution.

6402. para. 6967: The Trial Chamber notes that the RUF/AFRC military campaign to recapture Freetown was marked by extreme violence and involved the commission of crimes, specifically acts of terrorism (Count 1); murder (Counts 2 and 3); rape (Count 4); sexual slavery (Count 5); outrages upon personal dignity (Count 6); cruel treatment (Count 7); other inhumane acts (Count 8); conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups, or using them to participate actively in hostilities (Count 9); enslavement (Count 10); and pillage (Count 11).[15598]

6403. para. 6968: In light of the above, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the plan, devised by Bockarie and the Accused in Monrovia in November 1998, substantially contributed to the RUF/AFRC military attacks leading to and involving the Freetown Invasion, during which these groups committed the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment.

iii. Findings on the Mental Elements of Planning – Planning - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6404. para. 6969: The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that as President of Liberia and a member of the ECOWAS Committee of Five, the Accused was continuously receiving detailed reports of the atrocities committed by RUF/AFRC troops in Sierra Leone. The Accused was well aware of the crimes committed by the AFRC/RUF forces in the course of their military operations, and that their war strategy was explicitly based on a widespread or systematic campaign of crimes against civilians.[15599] The Accused admitted that by April 1998 he was aware that the RUF was "a group engaged in a campaign of atrocities against the civilian population of Sierra Leone".[15600] The Accused also stated that there were news reports in May 1998 which made him aware that the RUF was engaged in a "horrific campaign […] against the civilian population in Sierra Leone".[15601] The Accused testified that he accepted the information in these reports and condemned the "gross atrocities".[15602] Moreover, by his instruction to make the operation "fearful", which was repeated many times by Bockarie during the course of the Freetown invasion, and by his instruction to use "all means", the Accused demonstrated his awareness of the substantial likelihood that crimes would be committed during the execution of the plan.

6405. para. 6970: In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused intended that the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment be committed or was aware of the substantial likelihood that RUF/AFRC forces would commit such crimes as a result of executing the plan which he and Bockarie designed.

iv. Finding on the Accused's Criminal Responsibility for Planning the Crimes Charged in the Indictment - Planning - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6406. para. 6971: For the foregoing reasons, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused is criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for planning the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 11 of the Indictment, committed by members of the RUF/AFRC and Liberian fighters in the attacks on Kono and Makeni, in the invasion of Freetown and during the retreat from Freetown, between December 1998 and February 1999.

d. Instigating - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6407. para. 6972: The Trial Chamber, having already found that the Accused is criminally responsible for aiding and abetting the commission of the crimes in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment, does not find that the Accused also instigated those crimes.

e. Ordering - Legal Findings on Responsibility Pursuant to Article 6.1 of the Statute

6408. para. 6973: The Trial Chamber has found that while the Accused held a position of authority amongst the RUF and RUF/AFRC, the instructions and guidance which he gave to the RUF and RUF/AFRC were generally of an advisory nature and at times were in fact not followed by the RUF/AFRC leadership. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused cannot be held responsible for ordering the commission of crimes.

3. Appellate Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Charles Ghankay Taylor, SCSL-03-01-A, Judgment, 26 September 2013

(a) Findings and Conclusions

(i) The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6409. para. 253: The Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC's operational strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population, including the crimes charged in all 11 Counts of the Indictment,[578] which were inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. This strategy entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi, to achieve military gains at any civilian cost and political gains in order to attract the attention of the international community and improve the RUF/AFRC's negotiating stance with the Sierra Leonean government (the "Operational Strategy").[579]

6410. para. 254: In assessing Taylor's alleged criminal liability, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor, by his acts and conduct, was "critical in enabling" the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, "supported, sustained and enhanced" the functioning of the RUF/AFRC and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy, planned an attack of terror as the modus operandi of the attack on Freetown and had a substantial effect on the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC.[580] It further found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew that his acts and conduct assisted the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy and knew the essential elements of the crimes in which he was participating.[581]

6411. para. 257: Under this Court's jurisprudence, the Trial Chamber was not legally required to make findings on the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy in order to establish the crimes that were committed and Taylor's criminal responsibility.[598] However, an organisation's policy, plan or strategy may, of course, be relevant in determining criminal liability for crimes under the Statute.[599] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber used the terms "operational" and "strategy" according to their plain meaning: "operational" relates to operations or activities, in this case the activities of the RUF/AFRC, while a "strategy" is a plan or policy to achieve an aim, in this case the RUF/AFRC's strategy to achieve its military and political goals.

6412. para. 258: In reaching its finding on the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, the Trial Chamber explicitly considered the pattern of crimes against civilians that were committed,[600] the involvement of leaders and commanders in ordering, directing or organising the commission of crimes[601] and the purpose or ends of the crimes.[602] The Defence does not challenge this approach, and similarly addresses its submissions to the pattern of crimes and the involvement of the RUF/AFRC leadership. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's approach was appropriate.

6413. para. 259: In reviewing the Trial Chamber's finding, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether the Trial Chamber's findings reasonably demonstrate: first, a consistent pattern of crimes against civilians, as opposed to the opportunistic and sporadic commission of crimes; second, the RUF/AFRC leadership's involvement in organising, directing and perpetrating crimes; and third, that the commission of crimes was directed to achieve the RUF/AFRC's political and military goals. As the Trial Chamber found that the primary - although not exclusive – criminal modus operandi of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy was the use of terror against the civilian population, the Appeals Chamber will particularly review the Trial Chamber's findings in that light. Finally, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether these factors are demonstrated throughout the Indictment Period, as the Defence submits that any Operational Strategy was not continuous.

a. Enslavement, Sexual Slavery, Sexual Violence and Child Soldiers - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6414. para. 260: The Trial Chamber found that the commission of crimes charged in all Counts of the Indictment, including rapes, sexual slavery, abductions, forced labour and conscription of child soldiers, was part of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[603] It made numerous findings linking the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy to crimes committed to support and sustain the RUF/AFRC's activities. It found that the RUF/AFRC established a criminal system of abducting and controlling civilians in the forms of sexual slavery, forced marriage, forced mining, forced farming, domestic labour, forced recruitment and other forced labour.[604] It further found that these crimes against civilians formed part of a continuous campaign directed against civilians in communities that the RUF/AFRC controlled,[605] and that civilians continued to be intentionally targeted as sources of labour and fighters.[606] Likewise, as a specific subset of such crimes against civilians, the Trial Chamber found a consistent, institutionalised pattern of the RUF/AFRC abducting children, conscripting them into the RUF/AFRC and using them to actively participate in hostilities.[607] The Trial Chamber concluded that the commission of these crimes was part of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[608]

6415. para. 261: The Trial Chamber found that throughout the Indictment Period and in the areas they controlled, the RUF/AFRC enslaved large numbers of civilians.[609] Civilians were captured, controlled and forced to work in diamond mines in territories under the RUF/AFRC's control, including Kenema District from August 1997 until February 1998 and Kono District from January 1998 until the end of the Indictment Period.[610] The RUF/AFRC also forced captured civilians to perform a variety of other labour and tasks, including farming, fishing, food-finding, carrying loads, undergoing military training and domestic duties.[611] Such work was undertaken either entirely without substantive pay, or civilians were given wholly insufficient compensation in the form of meagre food items.[612] Throughout the Freetown Invasion, from the initial movement towards Benguema in December 1998 to the RUF/AFRC's eventual retreat from Freetown in January/February 1999, civilians were captured and forced to labour, including carrying weapons, materiel, food and looted goods for the RUF/AFRC forces.[613]

6416. para. 262: Physical violence against enslaved civilians was endemic. Civilians who refused to work faced beatings, detention or the RUF/AFRC would appropriate their goods.[614] Civilians forced to mine had to deliver diamonds they found to members of the RUF/AFRC and any attempt by a civilian to keep a mined diamond was met with violence.[615] Civilians who attempted to escape from the camps or committed other perceived breaches of the mining rules were beaten or killed by armed guards.[616] The conditions in which civilians worked at the mines cumulatively created an atmosphere of terror.[617] "Civilians died" on the training base due to the harshness of the military training they were forced to undergo.[618]

6417. para. 263: The use of forced civilian labour and attendant physical violence was well-organised, and RUF/AFRC commanders directed and participated in these crimes.[619] The pattern of mistreatment showed that crimes formed part of a continuous campaign directed against civilians in communities that the RUF/AFRC controlled.[620] The RUF/AFRC leadership, notably Sam Bockarie[621] and Issa Sesay,[622] created and directly participated in an organised system of forced farming in Kailahun District between 1996 and 2000, where civilians were forced to farm, to fish and were subjected to physical violence from RUF/AFRC forces.[623] When labour was requested by RUF/AFRC commanders, chiefdom and deputy chiefdom commanders were enlisted to bring civilians to farms to work without pay or benefit.[624] Mining activities were structured and regulated, with civilians captured, abducted and then taken to mining sites, while mining activities were overseen by RUF/AFRC mining commanders.[625] In 1998, Bockarie forced at least 200 civilians to labour, day and night without pay, to build an airfield in Buedu.[626] From February 1998 until the end of that year, at the direction of the RUF/AFRC leadership, an unknown number of civilians, including children, were abducted and forced to undergo military training at Bunumbu Training Camp (Camp Lion).[627] The same occurred at Yengema Training Base from about December 1998 until disarmament in 2000.[628]

6418. para. 264: The Trial Chamber found that throughout the Indictment Period and in the areas they controlled, the RUF/AFRC committed sexual violence against women and girls[629] and forced them into sexual slavery.[630] Women were also forced to perform domestic labour for the rebels, and were deprived of all rights.[631] The crime of sexual slavery was committed throughout Kailahun District;[632] women captured during rebel attacks on towns or villages were forced to be the "wives" of rebels,[633] and girls as young as 7-15 years old were used as sex slaves.[634] Between 1 February 1998 and 31 December 1998 in Koidu Town and RUF/AFRC camps, the RUF/AFRC abducted an unknown number of women and girls, and forcefully detained and raped them.[635] Throughout Kono District, an unknown number of women were abducted, held in captivity and forced to have sexual intercourse with their rebel captors.[636] Women and girls were also captured

6419. para. 265: Victims of sexual violence suffered from sexually transmitted diseases, exhibited signs of post-traumatic stress disorder, and were often socially isolated, stigmatised and rejected by their families.[638] Refugees from Kono and Kailahun Districts all described witnessing public rape.[639] Not only were victims publicly undressed and violated, but some were subjected to perverse methods of sexual violence.[640] This sexual violence was deliberately aimed at destroying the traditional family nucleus, thus undermining the cultural values and relationships which held society together.[641] Victims of sexual slavery were further humiliated and degraded,[642] and the widespread and systematic use of women as sex slaves instilled fear and a sense of insecurity among the civilian population.[643] The public nature of these crimes of sexual violence was a deliberate tactic to "send a message" to the enemy and to instil fear and terror among civilians.[644] The RUF/AFRC committed a campaign of sexual violence and sexual slavery against the women of Sierra Leone in order to spread terror among the civilian population.[645]

6420. para. 266: The RUF/AFRC leadership not only endorsed and perpetrated sexual violence and slavery, but also set up an organised system for the commission of these crimes.[646] The RUF/AFRC leadership promoted sexual violence and slavery by promulgating "Operation Pay Yourself,"[647] where fighters were encouraged to take anything they wanted from the civilians, including wives, who were perceived as chattel.[648] Many captured young women lived with RUF/AFRC commanders, in conjugal servitude, and commanders perpetrated rapes.[649] There was a recognised system of ownership and hierarchy among captured women in the rebel forces, demonstrated by the fact that commanders' "wives" were accorded "special" treatment.[650] RUF/AFRC commanders also screened civilians captured by fighters,[651] after which women and girls were allowed to be taken by fighters, who then said they had "married" the women.[652]

6421. para. 267: The Trial Chamber found that throughout the Indictment Period and in the areas they controlled, the RUF/AFRC abducted and forcibly conscripted children under the age of 15 in Tonkolili, Kailahun, Kono, Bombali, and Port Loko Districts, as well as in Freetown and the Western Area, and used them to participate in hostilities.[653] Children were trained at Masingbi Road, Superman Ground and Yengema in Kono District, Rosos in Bombali District, Port Loko and Bunumbu in Kailahun District.[654]

6422. para. 268: Children were of importance to the RUF/AFRC as they carried out orders quickly and followed their bosses' way.[655] The RUF/AFRC gave children narcotics in order to make them fearless and to make them carry out orders without hesitation, and the children were likely to commit violent acts while under the influence of such substances.[656] Cocaine was sometimes administered by opening a cut on a child's body, putting cocaine in it and then covering it up with a plaster.[657] Some children developed drug addiction from the use of narcotics.[658] Children were used to guard mining sites and to collect diamonds produced by civilians working in the mines.[659] They were also used as personal bodyguards and domestic labour by the RUF/AFRC commanders.[660] The leadership sent these children to fight on the front lines, and they were used by RUF/AFRC commanders to commit crimes, particularly acts of terror, against the civilian population.[661]

6423. para. 269: Children were also victims of physical violence. Following their abduction, many children were forced to undergo military training in order for them to fight with the armed groups, or defend themselves in case of an attack.[662] Recruits who tried to escape were publicly marked with the letters "RUF" by instructors during formation so that the other recruits would see and be afraid.[663] If the children and other civilians refused to undergo the military training the rebels would kill them.[664] The practice of physically disciplining recruits was well known to the RUF/AFRC High Command and instructions to beat, kill or mark recruits were passed from high command and carried out.[665] The training was generally comprised of instructions on the use of weaponry, at times practiced with live ammunition, how to attack a town, fight and kill, how to guard, how to set an ambush, and how to burn houses.[666] Children sometimes died during the course of military training, and the RUF/AFRC leadership was made aware of this.[667]

6424. para. 270: The RUF/AFRC leadership instituted an organised system for the abduction, conscription, training and use of child soldiers, and further engaged in the abduction, military training, and use of children.[668] There was a consistent pattern of abducting children and forcing them into Small Boys Units ("SBU") and Small Girls Units ("SGU"), which were made up of children generally in the range of 5 to 17 years.[669] The existence of specific combat units designated for children demonstrates the institutionalised nature of conscription and use of children by the RUF/AFRC.[670]

6425. para. 271: The Appeals Chamber has carefully reviewed those findings and concludes that the Trial Chamber reasonably found that the crimes of enslavement, sexual violence and conscription and use of child soldiers, and the attending crimes of physical violence and acts of terror, were committed pursuant to the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy. First, the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate a consistent pattern of crimes against civilians, which were all committed in a widespread and systematic manner against the civilian population in territories under the RUF/AFRC's control, and the RUF/AFRC consistently used physical violence to maintain ownership over civilians and control over child soldiers. Second, the Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC leadership organised, ordered, directed and perpetrated these crimes against civilians. Third, these crimes were committed against the civilian population to achieve the RUF/AFRC's military and political goals, specifically in order to support and sustain the RUF/AFRC and enhance its military capacity and operations.[671] Enslaved civilians were forced to perform tasks such as farming, food finding and domestic chores, and forced to support the RUF/AFRC's military operations by mining for diamonds, which were later exchanged for arms and ammunition,[672] by undergoing military training and by carrying loads for the fighters during military operations. Women and girls were sexually enslaved and subjected to sexual violence for the gratification of RUF/AFRC commanders and soldiers, to undermine social structures and to spread terror. Child soldiers were used to enhance the RUF/AFRC's military capacity and functions, participating in hostilities, guarding diamond mines and carrying out orders to commit crimes against civilians.

6426. para. 272: Consistent with the Trial Chamber's finding that the primary modus operandi of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy was the use of terror against the civilian population, rapes and sexual slavery were committed in public as a deliberate tactic with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.[673] While the Trial Chamber did not consider that the primary purpose of enslavement and conscripting and enlisting child soldiers was to terrorise the civilian population,[674] child soldiers were used to terrorise free and enslaved civilians.[675]

6427. para. 273: Finally, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate a consistent and continuous pattern of crimes throughout the Indictment Period directed against civilians in communities that the RUF/AFRC controlled. Throughout the Indictment Period, the RUF/AFRC leadership used forced farming for its sustenance, forced labour for its logistics, children for its soldiers and sexual violence and slavery for its morale. To obtain the weapons it needed, the RUF/AFRC leadership enslaved civilians to mine for diamonds, used children to guard them and terror to dominate them. These crimes, committed systematically on a widespread scale in the territories it controlled, gave the RUF/AFRC leadership the means to undertake its further military operations. When the RUF/AFRC seized and maintained new territory, the same consistent pattern of crimes was repeated. The pattern of crimes only ended when the RUF/AFRC disarmed and hostilities ceased.

b. Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6428. para. 274: In assessing the widespread and systematic nature of the attacks against the civilian population of Sierra Leone during the Indictment Period, the Trial Chamber noted that the Indictment Period spans more than five years, and that over that period, "there were many changes in the alliances between the warring factions, the membership and leadership structure of such factions, and their position in the conflict."[676] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber noted that because "the conflict evolved over time," it considered each phase of the conflict in turn, to which the Appeals Chamber now turns.[677]

6429. para. 275: The Trial Chamber found as background that the RUF began to deliberately use terror as a primary modus operandi of their political and military strategy[678] during "Operation Stop Election," launched on Election Day in March 1996,[679] when RUF forces attacked areas including Bo, Kenema, Magburaka, Matotoka and Masingbi.[680] Foday Sankoh[681] and the RUF leadership wanted to stop the election,[682] and to achieve this goal, Sankoh ordered RUF forces to commit murder and physical violence against civilians in order to instil terror in the population so that they would not vote and the elections would fail.[683] The RUF committed numerous atrocities against civilians, including carving "RUF" on the chests of civilians and the amputation of the fingers and/or hands of those who attempted to vote[684] in compliance with Sankoh's instruction to shoot and kill or to amputate the hands or fingers of any civilian believed to have participated in the elections.[685] In Kenema Town, under the command of Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay, RUF soldiers cut off the hands of civilians, and fired on those found in the street.[686] In Kenema National Hospital, RUF soldiers cut off civilians' fingers and sent them with a message to the Government soldiers that the RUF did not want an election.[687] In Magburaka, RUF commanders captured civilians, amputated their hands and carved "RUF" on their chests with razor blades.[688] RUF forces amputated civilians who had ink on their thumbs from polling day.[689]

i. Beginning of Indictment Period (30 November 1996) to Intervention (February 1998) - Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6430. para. 276: On 25 May 1997, a group of SLA soldiers overthrew the government of President Kabbah in a coup d'état.[690] On 28 May 1997, the group announced that they had formed the AFRC and taken over power in Sierra Leone.[691] Within days of the coup, Johnny Paul Koroma became the leader and chairman of the AFRC.[692] The coup was widely condemned by the international community.[693] Shortly after the AFRC seized power, Johnny Paul Koroma invited Foday Sankoh and the RUF[694] to join the AFRC in Government,[695] and the RUF accepted the invitation.[696] In June 1997, the RUF issued a public apology for the crimes they had committed in Sierra Leone, including killings and rapes.[697]

6431. para. 277: The Trial Chamber found that during the Junta Period, from 25 May 1997 to about 14 February 1998, there were large numbers of civilian victims, and attacks were widespread and occurred in the areas that were under control of RUF/AFRC forces.[698] The pattern of crimes by the RUF/AFRC which was directed against civilians persisted and intensified during this period.[699] The Junta Period was characterised by a shift in the dynamics of the conflict as the RUF/AFRC, former adversaries, were now in a position of power in Sierra Leone.[700] The campaigns of the Junta government were aimed at the preservation of governmental authority,[701] and the number of civilians subjected to severe mistreatment increased as the conflict spread throughout the territory of Sierra Leone.[702] Civilians were the victims of killings, physical violence, rape, sexual slavery, torture and arbitrary detention perpetrated by RUF/AFRC fighters.[703] The violence and mistreatment of civilians by the RUF/AFRC was directed at perceived political opponents, journalists, students and human rights activists, but these attacks were not limited to such selected civilians and any perceived collaborator was targeted by the Junta.[704]

6432. para. 278: Under the leadership of RUF/AFRC commanders, most notably Sam Bockarie, many civilians were murdered in Kenema District.[705] As ECOMOG advanced towards Kenema, Bockarie said that if the situation went out of control prisoners would not be spared.[706] Civilians were killed in revenge or reprisal for perceived support of the Junta's enemies.[707] Civilians were also killed to underline RUF/AFRC authority and minimise resistance.[708] Afterwards, the RUF/AFRC displayed the bodies in public.[709] The RUF/AFRC openly killed civilian miners in the Tongo Fields area in order to ensure the servitude of other miners.[710] These killings in Kenema District were all committed in order to instil terror in the civilian population.[711] The RUF/AFRC specifically targeted the civilian population with the purpose of terrorising the population in order to minimise any resistance or opposition to the regime.[712]

ii. Intervention (February 1998) to Freetown Invasion (December 1998) - Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6433. para. 279: On 5 February 1998, ECOMOG commenced a major offensive against the RUF/AFRC, commonly known as the Intervention.[713] The RUF/AFRC was unable to halt

ECOMOG's offensive, and by 14 February 1998, ECOMOG had succeeded in expelling the Junta regime from Freetown.[714] Sam Bockarie's RUF/AFRC forces retreated from Kenema to Kailahun Town and then to Buedu,[715] while the RUF/AFRC fighters who had been based in Freetown retreated to Masiaka under the leadership of Johnny Paul Koroma.[716] The RUF/AFRC was forced to leave the bulk of its supplies in Freetown and retreat with little more than the weapons and ammunition the soldiers were able to carry.[717] After the retreat from Freetown, JPK's forces captured Koidu Town in Kono District[718] in late February/early March 1998.[719] On 10 March 1998, the Kabbah Government was restored to power in Sierra Leone.[720] By mid-March 1998, ECOMOG, acting in concert with the CDF, extended its control to Bo, Kenema and Zimmi in the south of the country; Lunsar, Makeni and Kabala in the north; and Daru in the east.[721] A few weeks later, in April 1998, ECOMOG and the CDF regained control of Koidu Town and RUF/AFRC forces retreated to other locations in Kono District.[722]

6434. para. 280: The Trial Chamber found that following the Intervention, from February 1998 to December 1998, violence against civilians by the RUF/AFRC was frequent in RUF/AFRC-held territory and intensified in the north and east of Sierra Leone as the RUF/AFRC attacked those areas.[723] Several thousand civilians were killed or mutilated, hundreds more were abducted, and other crimes, such as rape, the burning of houses, killings and looting, continued.[724] Mass internal displacement also occurred during this period.[725] Many acts of terror and crimes were committed against the civilians in Kono District,[726] including killings, amputations and mutilations and burnings,[727] as well as against the civilians in Kailahun District.[728]

6435. para. 281: Between February and December 1998, the RUF/AFRC launched several operations, such as "Operation No Living Thing", "Operation Spare No Soul" and "Operation Pay Yourself", during which the fighters killed, mutilated, raped, looted and abducted civilians throughout Sierra Leone in compliance with explicit orders issued by the RUF/AFRC leadership.[729] Throughout this period RUF/AFRC commanders continued to give explicit orders for the fighters to kill civilians, burn their settlements and take their property.[730]

6436. para. 282: Sam Bockarie sent messages to all RUF/AFRC bases to make Kono District "fearful."[731] To make an area "fearful," the fighters would destroy life and property by killings, amputations, burning of houses, destruction of bridges and setting up road blocks.[732] The purpose was to make sure the local civilian population and the RUF/AFRC's enemies would be afraid.[733] Johnny Paul Koroma told the RUF/AFRC fighters to capture the able-bodied civilians in Kono and to execute the rest.[734] While in Koidu, JPK reiterated his orders to burn down any civilian homes so as to discourage civilians returning to live there, and to kill any civilian that attempted to return to the area, accusing them of being Kamajor supporters.[735] Issa Sesay endorsed Johnny Paul Koroma's orders, stating that civilians were very dangerous to the Junta forces, and the only way to ensure that the civilians did not stay in Kono was to burn down their houses and execute them.[736] In Kailahun District, Bockarie issued orders to senior RUF/AFRC commanders to defend Kailahun District against their perceived enemies, and then ordered the massacre of civilians who he suspected of being Kamajors or Kamajor supporters.[737] These orders demonstrated a clear intention to direct attacks against and terrorise the civilian population.[738]

6437. para. 283: In Kono District, fighters acting in accordance with orders given by their commanders deliberately targeted civilians in order to prevent them from staying in or returning to Koidu Town and in order to maintain the diamond-rich Kono District as a strong Junta base from which the RUF/AFRC fighters would finance and mount further attacks upon their enemies.[739] Civilian houses were burned down with the primary purpose of terrorising the civilian population by demonstrating the repercussions of collaborating with the enemies of the RUF/AFRC.[740] On arrival in Kono District around early March 1998, RUF/AFRC forces captured Sewafe and burnt down all civilian houses on the orders of Johnny Paul Koroma, who called Sewafe "a Kamajor stronghold."[741] In Kailahun Town, 60 to 65 civilians suspected of being Kamajors or Kamajor supporters were murdered on Sam Bockarie's orders as reprisal killings.[742] The campaign of reprisal against the civilian population was underlined by the deliberate tricking of civilians into showing their support for ECOMOG, followed by mass executions by RUF/AFRC forces.[743]

6438. para. 284: The RUF/AFRC also displayed the corpses of the civilians in order to frighten away civilians and prevent them from remaining in town.[744] In Bumpe between March and June 1998, RUF/AFRC forces acting under the orders of commanders including Kallay, Bomb Blast, Superman, Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon, CO Rocky and others committed murders, the burning down of homes and mass amputations, and then displayed human heads on sticks at various checkpoints in order to instil terror in the civilian population.[745] During an attack on Koidu Buma, in May/June 1998, and with the approval of Commanders Bomb Blast, Bazzy and Superman, RUF Rambo killed 15 civilians and displayed their corpses in the street to create fear so no civilian would come to that area.[746] The amputations and mutilations practised by the RUF/AFRC were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the RUF/AFRC, or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG.[747]

iii. Freetown Invasion (December 1998 to February 1999) - Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6439. para. 285: Throughout 1998, the RUF/AFRC struggled to combat ECOMOG forces and was repeatedly thwarted in its attempts to capture and hold areas in Kono District.[748] Disputes and divisions arose among the RUF/AFRC forces, with troops under the commands of SAJ Musa,[749] Gullit[750] and Superman[751] departing for the north of Sierra Leone and disputing Sam Bockarie's overall command of the RUF/AFRC.[752]

6440. para. 286: In October 1998, Sankoh was sentenced to death for treason by the High Court of Sierra Leone.[753] The announcement that Sankoh had been sentenced to death, and that 24 AFRC soldiers had been executed, provoked a rallying cry from the RUF/AFRC commanders, especially Sam Bockarie, who wanted to go to Freetown to free Sankoh.[754] Bockarie then went to Monrovia, where he met with Taylor and designed a plan for RUF/AFRC forces to carry out the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, a two-pronged attack on Kono and Kenema with the ultimate objective of reaching Freetown.[755] Upon Bockarie's return to Sierra Leone from Monrovia, he convened a meeting at Waterworks where he outlined the plan to his commanders,[756] armed them with ammunition and assigned them to two brigades for the two-pronged attack on Kono and Kenema.[757]

6441. para. 287: In the last days of 1998 and into January 1999, rebels went on the offensive in several areas of Sierra Leone, including Makeni, Lunsar and Port Loko, where civilians were killed, property looted and homes destroyed during these attacks.[758] Issa Sesay captured Kono in mid- December, with ECOMOG forces sustaining heavy casualties during their retreat.[759] RUF/AFRC troops captured Masingbi, Magburaka and Makeni by 23 December 1998, while unsuccessful attacks were mounted on the Segbwema-Daru axis towards Kenema.[760] Following the capture of Makeni, RUF/AFRC forces moved towards Freetown, attacking Lunsar, Port Loko, Masiaka and Waterloo.[761] At the same time, in mid-December 1998 the group led by SAJ Musa and Gullit independently commenced its advance on Freetown and by the end of December 1998 had reached Benguema on the outskirts of Freetown.[762] Following SAJ Musa's death on 23 December 1998, Gullit assumed command and resumed contact with Sam Bockarie, and his forces continued their advance towards Freetown, attacking Hastings on 3 January 1999.[763] On 6 January 1999 Gullit's forces commenced their attack on Freetown[764] and captured the State House.[765] Gullit's fighters were joined by a small contingent of troops sent by Bockarie under the leadership of Rambo Red Goat.[766]

6442. para. 288: As Gullit was facing increasing pressure from ECOMOG only days after entering Freetown, Sam Bockarie ordered him to make the area "fearful"[767] and use terror tactics against the civilian population.[768] Bockarie gave Gullit direct instructions to cause mayhem, to destroy government buildings and amputate the limbs of civilians, in order to raise alarm in the international community.[769] Bockarie told the forces that if they made Freetown "fearful", the international body would intervene and ECOMOG would stop, and that maybe they would start calling for peace talks.[770] Bockarie also emphasised that Freetown had to be "fearful" in order to improve their negotiating position in relation to any future peace talks and the release of Sankoh.[771]

6443. para. 289: In compliance with Bockarie's instructions,[772] Gullit then ordered and incited RUF/AFRC rebels to wage a campaign of terror against the civilian population of Freetown.[773] Gullit issued orders to the fighters to burn as many buildings and capture as many civilians as possible along the way in order to force the Government to recognise them.[774] The "fearful" order was passed by the top commanders to the fighters,[775] and Gullit's forces carried out indiscriminate killings, mass abductions, raping of civilians, and burning and destruction of civilian and public property in Freetown.[776] There was widespread rape and sexual abuse of girls and women,[777] including rapes by commanders.[778] Women were captured during the Freetown retreat and used as domestic and sexual slaves.[779] A message was sent back to Bockarie informing him that the men had gone on a rampage and that they were killing people, wounding civilians and that the area had become "fearful."[780]

6444. para. 290: The rebels held central Freetown for four days, until a counter-attack by ECOMOG forces weakened their position.[781] While Gullit's forces managed a controlled retreat from Freetown, making Freetown "fearful" as they retreated, RUF/AFRC reinforcements sent by Sam Bockarie arrived in Waterloo.[782] The RUF/AFRC then made collaborative efforts to re-attack Freetown.[783] On 24 February 1999, ECOMOG forces finally succeeded in expelling the rebels from Waterloo.[784]

6445. para. 291: The Trial Chamber found that during the Freetown Invasion, rebels killed thousands of civilians and thousands more were abducted, burnt, beaten, mutilated, raped and/or sexually abused throughout Freetown and its surroundings, including the State House area, Kissy, Upgun, Calaba Town, Allen Town, and in the nearby towns of Hastings, Wellington, Waterloo and Benguema.[785]

6446. para. 292: Sam Bockarie, Gullit and other RUF/AFRC commanders ordered the widespread and systematic commission of acts of terror against the civilian population of

Freetown and its surrounds to achieve their political and military goals. The acts of terror committed against the civilian population were used to: punish the civilian population of Freetown for perceived collaboration with ECOMOG and the Kamajors;[786] undermine confidence in the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone;[787] minimise resistance and dissent;[788] force the Government of President Kabbah to negotiate with the RUF/AFRC;[789] and generally destroy Freetown as the capital of Sierra Leone so that it and the country would be ungovernable.[790]

iv. Post-Freetown Invasion (March 1999) to End of Indictment Period (18 January 2002) - Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6447. para. 293: On 7 July 1999, the Lomé Peace Accord was signed by President Kabbah and Foday Sankoh.[791] The Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF/AFRC agreed to the immediate release of Sankoh, the transformation of the RUF into a political party that would become part of the Government of Sierra Leone and amnesty for all warring factions, including RUF members.[792] Sankoh received a formal position within the Sierra Leonean Government as Chairman of the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development, a position with the status of Vice-President of Sierra Leone.[793] This position gave Sankoh control over the natural resources, including diamonds, of Sierra Leone.[794]

6448. para. 294: The Lomé Peace Accord did not end hostilities in Sierra Leone,[795] and the disarmament process took time to eventuate.[796] On 10 November 2000, a peace agreement known as the "Abuja I Peace Agreement‖ was signed.[797] With the exception of skirmishes with the CDF in Kono District, the ceasefire generally held.[798] A ceasefire review conference was held in Abuja in May 2001, in what became known as the ―Abuja II Peace Agreement.[799] From mid-2001, significant progress was made in the disarmament process.[800] By the end of 2001, disarmament was complete and hostilities had ceased in all areas of Sierra Leone, with the exception of Kono District.[801] On or about 18 January 2002, President Kabbah announced the end of hostilities in Sierra Leone, signalling the end of the war.[802]

large-scale property destruction and the contamination of fresh water sources.[805] In August 1999, the villages of Landomah, Bonkoleke, Roists, Tenkabereh and Wonfinfer in Port Loko District were looted and civilians displaced.[806] From September until the end of the year, attacks upon civilians increased, particularly along the Lungi-Port Loko axis where summary executions, instances of physical violence, looting, mutilations, sexual abuse, abductions and harassment were reported.[807] In May 2000, approximately 40 civilians had the letters "RUF" carved into their bodies in Kabala.[808]

6450. para. 296: The RUF/AFRC continued to enslave civilians and force them to farm and fish form commanders up until 2000.[809] Civilians were abducted and forced to undergo military training at Yengema Training Base until 2000.[810] Forced mining continued until the end of the Indictment Period.[811] Civilians continued to be abducted in Makeni and Kambia Districts, and a large number of civilians continued to be captured and brought to mining sites in Kono District.[812] Between December 1999 and mid-2001, civilians were killed around Koidu Town for refusing to mine.[813] Captured civilians continued to be used as sexual slaves.[814] The RUF/AFRC continued to abduct, train and use child soldiers after the signing of the Lomé Peace Accord.[815] Children continued to be used to guard mining sites.[816] In Makeni in May 2001, RUF/AFRC forces took an unknown number of children from a child care centre and conscripted them.[817]

v. Conclusion - Other Crimes during the Indictment Period - The RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy

6451. para. 297: First, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber reasonably found a consistent pattern of crimes against civilians in each of the periods reviewed above. In each period, the RUF/AFRC directed a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone[818] through the commission of crimes including killings, enslavement, physical violence, rape, sexual slavery, and looting[819] against large numbers of civilian victims.[820] Each and all of these crimes were horrific and shocked the conscience of mankind.

6452. para. 298: Second, in the Appeals Chamber's view, the Trial Chamber's findings fully support the conclusion that in each period, this pattern of crimes against civilians was organised, ordered, directed and committed by the RUF/AFRC leadership. The Trial Chamber's findings document in detail the personal and direct involvement of the RUF/AFRC leadership in the commission of crimes against civilians, including: Sam Bockarie's personal attacks against civilians in Kenema; the repeated instructions by Bockarie, JPK, Issa Sesay, Gullit and others to kill, mutilate, rape, burn and make areas "fearful"; the organised and systematic abduction and enslavement of men, women and children; and the direct involvement of many commanders in many crimes.

6453. para. 299: Third, the Appeals Chamber concludes that in each period, the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate that crimes against civilians were directed to the achievement of the RUF/AFRC's political and military goals. The Appeals Chamber notes that crimes against civilians continued to be used to achieve political and military goals even as those goals changed during the course of the conflict. Crimes of enslavement, sexual violence and conscription and use of child soldiers, as well as attending physical violence and acts of terror, were committed throughout the Indictment Period to support and sustain the RUF/AFRC and enhance its military capacity and operations. During the Junta Period, faced with a need to maintain its new-found authority, the RUF/AFRC committed crimes against civilians to minimise dissent and resistance and punish any support for President Kabbah, the CDF or ECOMOG. Following the Intervention and their defeat by ECOMOG, struggling to regroup and regain lost territory, the RUF/AFRC committed crimes against civilians to sustain itself, clear and hold territory, control the population, eradicate support for its opponents and attract the attention of the international community. During the Freetown Invasion, the RUF/AFRC devastated Freetown to secure the release of Sankoh and force the Government to the negotiating table. After the Freetown Invasion and Lomé Peace Accord, having achieved Sankoh's freedom and a place in government through the commission of crimes against civilians, the RUF/AFRC committed further crimes against civilians to maintain itself as a fighting force and to ensure the continued supply of diamonds.

6454. para. 300: The Appeals Chamber is further satisfied that the Trial Chamber's findings show that the RUF/AFRC used acts of terror as its primary modus operandi throughout the Indictment Period. The RUF/AFRC pursued a strategy to achieve its goals through extreme fear by making Sierra Leone "fearful." The primary purpose was to spread terror, but it was not aimless terror. Barbaric, brutal violence was purposefully unleashed against civilians because it made them afraid – afraid that there would only be more unspeakable violence if they continued to resist in any way, continued to stay in their communities or dared to return to their homes. It also made governments and the international community afraid – afraid that unless the RUF/AFRC's demands were met, thousands more killings, mutilations, abductions and rapes of innocent civilians would follow. The conflict in Sierra Leone was bloody because the RUF/AFRC leadership deliberately made it bloody.

6455. para. 301: Having reviewed each of the periods discussed above individually, and satisfied itself regarding the Trial Chamber's finding of a consistent pattern of crimes organised, directed and committed by the RUF/AFRC leadership to achieve their political and military goals, the Appeals Chamber affirms that the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy was continuous throughout the Indictment Period.

6456. para. 302: In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy was to achieve its political and military goals through a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean civilian population, using terror as its primary modus operandi. Ground 17 is accordingly dismissed in present parts.

(ii) Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State

6457. para. 303: The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence and affirmed the findings in the Judgment.[821] It has further affirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the RUF/AFRC leadership pursued an Operational Strategy to commit the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[822]

6458. para. 304: The following is a summary of the Trial Chamber's affirmed findings regarding Taylor's acts, conduct and mental state.

a. Beginning of Indictment Period (30 November 1996) to Intervention (February 1998) – Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State

6459. para. 305: The Trial Chamber found that by the beginning of the Indictment Period, Taylor knew of the RUF and of the crimes it had previously committed.[823] In March 1991, Taylor stated publicly on the radio that "Sierra Leone would taste the bitterness of war"[824] because it was supporting ECOMOG operations in Liberia.[825] Taylor knew that in 1991 and 1992, during the early war of Sierra Leone, RUF soldiers, under the command of Taylor's NPFL officers, abducted civilians including children, forcing them to fight within the NPFL/RUF forces against the Sierra Leonean forces and ULIMO.[826] Taylor further knew[827] that in 1994, the RUF attacked the international mining company Sierra Rutile, in Bonthe District,[828] looted the facility and captured hostages,[829] in order to gain the international community's attention.[830] Taylor advised Foday Sankoh, leader of the RUF, on the use of the money and the hostages,[831] telling Sankoh to buy ammunitions, food and drugs with the money that had been looted, and to use the money and the hostages to establish diplomatic relations with other countries.[832] Finally, Taylor knew[833] that in early 1996, disgruntled by the decision to hold elections before a peace agreement was signed,[834] Sankoh ordered "Operation Stop Election,"[835] during which RUF forces attacked areas including Bo, Kenema, Magburaka, Matotoka and Msingbi[836] on Election Day.[837] They "committed numerous atrocities against civilians, including carving 'RUF' on the chests of civilians and the amputation of the fingers and/or hands of those who attempted to vote."[838]

6460. para. 306: During the Junta Period, the RUF/AFRC deliberately used terror against the Sierra Leonean population as a primary modus operandi of their Operational Strategy.[839] The crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC Junta were significantly reported by international organisations as early as May 1997.[840] The UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs on 4/5 June 1997 reported killings of civilians, amputations and looting in Sierra Leone.[841] In a meeting held on 26 June 1997 in Conakry, the Foreign Ministers of ECOWAS reviewed the situation in Sierra Leone and "deplored the bloodletting and other human losses that occurred during the coup d'état of 25 May 1997. They warned the illegal regime against all acts of atrocities against Sierra Leonean citizens, foreign nationals living in Sierra Leone and personnel of ECOMOG.[842] In a Statement dated 11 July 1997, the President of the UN Security Council expressed concern with the situation in Sierra Leone and "the atrocities committed against Sierra Leone's citizens."[843] On 6 August 1997, the President of the UN Security Council reiterated the Security Council's concerns over "the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone, and at the continued looting and commandeering of relief supplies of international agencies.… The Council condemns the continuing violence and threats of violence by the junta towards the civilian population, foreign nationals and personnel of the ECOWAS monitoring group, and calls for an end to such acts of violence."[844] The violence in Sierra Leone was thus in the public domain.

6461. para. 307: Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and intent to commit crimes, as well as the ongoing crimes committed by the Junta, as early as August 1997 following his election as President of Liberia.[845] His national security adviser provided him with daily briefings, including press and intelligence reports regarding the situation in Sierra Leone.[846] As President of Liberia, Taylor was a member of the ECOWAS Committee of Five[847] on the situation in Sierra Leone and would have received and read ECOWAS reports on Sierra Leone.[848] Reports on the crimes taking place in Sierra Leone were "at the core" of discussions by the ECOWAS Committee of Five.[849] Following meetings held on 26 and 27 August 1997, the ECOWAS Chiefs of States condemned the violent overthrow of the legitimate government of Sierra Leone and described it as "a very bloody coup, followed by massive looting and vandalisation of public and private properties and the opening of the prisons by the junta.[850] The fifth meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the ECOWAS Committee of Five on 10 to 11 October 1997 noted the gross violations of human rights committed by the Junta regime.[851] On 23 October 1997, the Committee of Five met in Conakry and agreed to a peace plan for Sierra Leone, calling for the cessation of hostilities and the reinstatement of President Kabbah by 22 April 1998.[852]

6462. para. 308: On 29 August 1997, ECOWAS decided to place a total embargo on all supplies of petroleum products, arms and equipment to Sierra Leone.[853] On 8 October 1997, the UN Security Council determined that the situation in Sierra Leone constituted a threat to international peace and security in the region and decided to impose an embargo on Sierra Leone.[854] As these embargos demonstrate, the Junta was perceived by the international community as a threat to peace, and it was recognised that any military support could facilitate the commission of crimes by the RUF/AFRC.[855] Following his election, at the same time that ECOWAS and the UN were condemning the activities of the RUF/AFRC, Taylor's support for the RUF/AFRC reached a higher level of activity, as "at this point, [Taylor] was in a position to play a significantly expanded role in Sierra Leone, both in terms of political and military support."[856]

6463. para. 309: At the same time, Taylor accepted and supported the Junta, and told the RUF/AFRC that he would encourage ECOWAS members to do so as well.[857] He also encouraged Johnny Paul Koroma, as head of the AFRC, and Sam Bockarie, as leader of the RUF in Sankoh's absence, to work together.[858] Taylor held a position of authority as an elder statesman, and as President of Liberia, he was accorded deference by the RUF/AFRC and his advice was generally heeded by them.[859] Following his arrest in March 1997, Foday Sankoh instructed Sam Bockarie to take instructions from Taylor.[860] "[T]he role that Sankoh envisioned for [Taylor] while he was in detention was that [Taylor] would guide Bockarie, and that Bockarie should look to his guidance, not that [Taylor] should take over Sankoh's role as the leader of the RUF with effective control over its actions." Taylor gave instructions to Bockarie with his inherent authority by virtue of his position, and Bockarie was deferential to Taylor, generally following his instructions.[861]

6464. para. 310: There was a general and complete embargo placed by the UN Security Council on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia from November 1992 that remained in place throughout the Indictment Period.[862] Notwithstanding the arms embargo on Liberia, "Taylor was able to obtain arms and had the capacity to supply arms and ammunition to the rebel groups in Sierra Leone, and had the capacity to facilitate larger arms shipments through third countries."[863] While ECOMOG forces were stationed at the Liberia/Sierra Leone border, tasked with establishing a buffer zone in an attempt at implementing successive peace agreements in Liberia,[864] their presence was not sufficient to prevent the cross-border movement of arms and ammunition.[865] Taylor utilised intermediaries[866] including Yeaten,[867] Tamba,[868] Ibrahim Bah,[869] Marzah[870] and Weah[871] to conduct the supply of diamonds mined by enslaved civilians from the RUF/AFRC leadership to himself, and the supply of arms and ammunition from him to the RUF/AFRC leadership.[872] These individuals also passed along advice and instructions from Taylor to the RUF/AFRC leadership.[873]

6465. para. 311: During the Junta Period, diamonds mined in Kono and Tongo Fields were delivered from the RUF/AFRC[874] to Taylor[875] by Daniel Tamba in exchange for arms and ammunition.[876] The RUF/AFRC were mining at different sites in Kono and in Tongo, where they forced civilians to mine under slave-like conditions and committed acts of violence against civilians to guarantee their servitude and control the mining activities.[877] Tamba acted as a liaison between the RUF/AFRC leadership and Taylor by bringing arms and ammunition to Sierra Leone in exchange for the diamonds that he delivered to Taylor.[878] Following the Intervention,[879] from February 1998 to July 1999, diamonds were delivered to Taylor by Sam Bockarie directly,[880] as well as indirectly through intermediaries including Eddie Kanneh[881] and Tamba,[882] in order to get arms and ammunition from him.[883] Taylor had responsibility for the movement of diamonds through Liberia.[884]

6466. para. 312: While the Junta regime obtained a significant amount of materiel from the existing military stores in Freetown,[885] at some point in or after August 1997, it had depleted the available sources of supplies in Freetown or was not obtaining from them satisfactory amounts of materiel.[886] In the face of the arms embargo imposed on Sierra Leone, the RUF/AFRC needed to obtain more supplies in order to sustain its activities. Taylor sent Ibrahim Bah on his behalf to Freetown to meet with Sam Bockarie and Johnny Paul Koroma to make arrangements for the procurement of arms and ammunition.[887] The RUF/AFRC Supreme Council agreed to pay 90 carats of diamonds and $USD 90,000 for the shipment,[888] which was delivered by plane to Magburaka in Sierra Leone sometime between September and December 1997.[889] RUF/AFRC members were present for the delivery, and the material was then distributed to locations including JPK's residence, Cockerill Military Headquarters, Makeni, Magburaka and Kenema.[890]

6467. para. 313: This shipment comprised a large quantity of arms and ammunition.8[9]1 The delivery was "huge, including 200 AK-47 rifles, two 75 calibre machine guns, rocket propelled grenades and 80 boxes of AK-47 ammunition,"[892] and "there was a 'large quantity' of ammunition comprising AK rounds, G3 rounds, mortar bombs, RPG bombs and stinger missile bombs…."[893] The materiel from this shipment was used by the RUF/AFRC forces in the Junta mining operations at Tongo Fields prior to the Intervention, in fighting ECOMOG and SLPP forces in Freetown before, during and after the Intervention, in "Operation Pay Yourself" and subsequent offensives on Kono, as well as in the commission of crimes during those operations.[894]

6468. para. 314: Taylor also sent ammunition to Sam Bockarie in Sierra Leone via Daniel Tamba,[895] and made available the vehicles in which the materiel was transported.[896] Bockarie stored this materiel sent by Taylor in Kenema, and it was used in the course of RUF/AFRC activities in Kenema District, which included the commission of crimes in that area.[897] Taylor received diamonds mined in Kono and Tongo Fields by the RUF/AFRC as payment for the arms provided by Tamba.[898]

6469. para. 315: The needs of the RUF/AFRC during the Junta Period were not fulfilled in any significant proportion by materiel obtained from other sources.[899] The existing military stores in Freetown captured by the RUF/AFRC following the 25 May 1997 coup were not sufficient to sustain the RUF/AFRC forces beyond August 1997.[900] Trade between the RUF/AFRC and ULIMO was minor at the time[901] and only involved a relatively small quantity, insufficient to sustain operations.[902] Issa Sesay testified that "trade on the border with Guinea was irregular and not dependable"[903] and that it "resulted only in small amounts of ammunition."[904]

b. Intervention (February 1998) to Freetown Invasion (December 1998) – Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State

6470. para. 316: The period following the Intervention was marked by the widespread and systematic commission of acts of terror against the civilian population of Sierra Leone by RUF/AFRC forces.[905] From February 1998 to December 1998, human rights abuses intensified, leaving thousands of civilians killed or mutilated by RUF/AFRC fighters, hundreds of civilians were abducted and raped and the burning of houses and looting continued.[906]

6471. para. 317: Media coverage of the RUF/AFRC's crimes and terror campaign against the Sierra Leonean population increased.[907] It was a matter of public knowledge that RUF/AFRC forces were committing unlawful killings, sexual violence, physical violence, conscription and use of child soldiers, abduction and forced labour, looting and terrorism.[908] Systematic and widespread rebel attacks against the civilian population were reported by the UN throughout 1998.[909] Amnesty International reported:

> During 1998, the scale of atrocities against civilians in Sierra Leone has reached unprecedented levels. Several thousand unarmed civilians, including many women and children, have been deliberately and arbitrarily killed and mutilated by forces of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and the armed opposition Revolutionary Front (RUF) since February 1998. …[T]he scale of human rights abuses committed by AFRC and RUF forces in the north and east of the country has escalated and taken on grotesque forms. From April 1998 reports emerged of civilians suffering mutilations such as crude amputations of their feet, hands, arms, lips or ears. Women and girls have been systematically raped. Hundreds of civilians, in particular children and young men and women, have been abducted by rebel forces.[910]

> AFRC and RUF forces in the east and north of Sierra Leone are deliberately and arbitrarily killing and torturing unarmed civilians. A deliberate and systematic campaign of killing, rape and mutilation, - called by the AFRC and RUF "Operation No Living Thing" – has emerged since April 1998.[911]

6472. para. 318: In June 1998, the UN Security Council reiterated its condemnation for the continued resistance to the authority of the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone and urged all rebels to put an end to the atrocities, cease their resistance and lay down their arms.[912] At a joint meeting between President Taylor and President Kabbah held on 2 July 1998, the two Heads of State "strongly condemned the continued rebel activities in Sierra Leone as well as the horrendous atrocities committed there."[913] At his trial, Taylor testified that if "someone was providing support to the AFRC/RUF [by April 1998] … they would be supporting a group engaged in a campaign of atrocities against the civilian population of Sierra Leone."[914] He further testified that in May 1998 there were news reports of a "horrific campaign being waged against the civilian population in Sierra Leone,"[915] and that by August 1998, the RUF/AFRC's crimes were notorious.[916] The Trial Chamber accepted his testimony, and further accepted that Taylor knew that crimes were committed in Sierra Leone while Sam Bockarie was in charge of the rebels including looting in February 1998 and that the Sierra Leonean population was terrorised in May 1998.[917]

6473. para. 319: Control over the diamond mines in Kono and Kenema Districts was crucial for the war effort of the RUF/AFRC.[918] After the RUF/AFRC lost control of mines in Kono and Kenema following the Intervention, Taylor consistently advised the RUF/AFRC leadership to seize and maintain control of the diamondiferous area of Kono in order to ensure the continuation of the trade of diamonds in exchange for arms and ammunition.[919] When the RUF/AFRC forces were pulling out of Kono during the Intervention, Benjamin Yeaten's radio station in Monrovia intervened to ask why the forces were withdrawing.[920] After the retreat from Freetown, Taylor instructed Johnny Paul Koroma to capture Kono, and after a first failed attempt, Taylor gave JPK instructions for a second attack, which led to the ultimate recapture of Koidu Town in Kono District by the RUF/AFRC[921] in late February/early March 1998.[922] After Sam Bockarie assumed control of the RUF/AFRC forces,[923] in February 1998 he travelled to Monrovia to meet Taylor.[924] Taylor told Bockarie to be sure to maintain control of Kono for the purpose of trading diamonds with him for arms and ammunition.[925] Following the RUF/AFRC's defeat in Kono in April 1998,[926] Taylor advised Bockarie to recapture Kono so that the diamonds there would be used to purchase arms and ammunition.[927] He also provided ammunition to the RUF/AFRC to be used in the recapture of Kono.[928] Taylor and Bockarie discussed plans for the Fitti-Fatta attack, and Taylor sent "herbalists" who marked the fighters to bolster their confidence in preparation for the attack.[929]

6474. para. 320: Throughout 1998, the RUF/AFRC relied frequently and heavily on arms and ammunition provided by Taylor to carry out its operations and maintain territories, which involved the commission of crimes against the civilian population.[930] The Magburaka Shipment was relied on in "Operation Pay Yourself" and subsequent offensives until 24 June 1998, and was used to commit crimes during those operations.[931] Additional materiel provided by Taylor was used in: operations in Kono District in early 1998, and the commission of crimes during those operations;[932] Operation Fitti-Fatta in Kono in mid-1998;[933] operations in Koinadugu and Bombali Districts from June to October 1998, which included the commission of crimes;[934] and attacks on Mongor Bendugu and Kabala, shortly after Operation Fitti-Fatta in mid-1998, which included the commission of crimes.[935] In all these operations the RUF/AFRC was heavily reliant on the supplies of materiel provided by Taylor.[936]

6476. para. 322: In turn, diamonds were delivered to Taylor by Sam Bockarie directly, as well as indirectly through intermediaries, including Eddie Kanneh and Daniel Tamba from February 1998 to July 1999, for the purpose of obtaining arms and ammunition from Taylor.[942]

6477. para. 323: Taylor provided the vehicles in which the materiel was transported to Sierra Leone and security escorts who facilitated the crossing of border checkpoints into or from Liberia.[943] The sustained and significant facilitation of road and air transportation of materiel, as well as security escorts, played a vital role in the operations of the RUF/AFRC during a period when an international arms embargo was in force.[944] In addition, Taylor's NPFL communications system was used to report the movements of Eddie Kanneh between Liberia and Sierra Leone with diamonds, and information on diamond mining in Sierra Leone.[945] Taylor also advised Sam Bockarie that the RUF/AFRC should construct or re-prepare the airfield in Buedu, so that arms and ammunitions could be shipped to RUF/AFRC-controlled territory.[946]

6478. para. 324: Other sources of materiel were of minor importance in comparison to that supplied or facilitated by Taylor.[947] The RUF/AFRC did not obtain further materiel after the Magburaka Shipment in late 1997, and was not able to capture a significant amount of supplies in the retreat from Freetown.[948] The needs of the RUF/AFRC during 1998 were not fulfilled in any significant proportion by materiel obtained from ULIMO, Guinea or other private sources.[949] Moreover, Taylor played a key role in facilitating the trade with ULIMO, and thus this trade was not an "alternative" source of arms and ammunition.[950] While the groups led by Gullit, Superman and SAJ Musa later captured materiel during attacks carried out during the latter half of 1998,[951] they relied on materiel provided by Taylor to carry out these attacks and capture the additional materiel.[952]

6479. para. 325: Immediately after the Intervention, Taylor met Sam Bockarie in Monrovia and said that he would help the RUF/AFRC and provide support.[953] On Taylor's advice, Bockarie opened Camp Lion, an RUF/AFRC training camp, at Bunumbu in 1998,[954] where crimes were committed,[955] including the training of children under the age of 15 years.[956] Taylor sent former SLA soldiers to Camp Lion to be re-trained soon after the Intervention.[957]

6480. para. 326: Taylor also provided the RUF/AFRC leadership with sustained and significant communications support.[958] He provided Sam Bockarie with a satellite phone to enhance his communications capability.[959] He also provided his communications network to facilitate communications regarding arms shipments, diamond transactions and military operations.[960] For example, on one of Bockarie's first trips to Monrovia after the Intervention, radio operator Dauda Aruna Fornie, who accompanied Bockarie on this trip, kept Bockarie appraised of events in Sierra Leone by using Base 1, a radio station at Benjamin Yeaten's home in Monrovia.[961] "448 messages" were sent by Taylor's subordinates in Liberia, with Taylor's knowledge, alerting the RUF/AFRC when ECOMOG jets left Monrovia to attack RUF/AFRC forces in Sierra Leone.[962] The radio station in Buedu would then pass on the message to all RUF/AFRC stations on the frontlines so that the RUF/AFRC forces could take cover.[963]

c. Freetown Invasion (December 1998 to February 1999) – Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State

6481. para. 327: In early November 1998, Sam Bockarie requested arms and ammunition from Taylor to support a major attack.[964] Bockarie and an RUF/AFRC delegation then went to Monrovia to secure the arms and ammunition, as well as advice, needed for the attack.[965] Bockarie met with Taylor in Monrovia, where they designed a plan for the RUF/AFRC forces to carry out a two-pronged attack on Kono and Kenema with the ultimate objective of reaching Freetown (the "Bockarie/Taylor Plan").[966] Taylor instructed Bockarie to make the operation "fearful" in order to force the Government into negotiation and free Sankoh from prison.[967] He also emphasised to

Bockarie the need to first capture Kono due to its diamond wealth.[968] Taylor was further instrumental in procuring a large quantity of arms and ammunition, which was "unprecedented in its volume," for the RUF/AFRC to use in the attack on Freetown.[969] Taylor was paid for the shipment with diamonds. He sent Musa Cissé, his Chief of Protocol with the delegation to Burkina Faso, and directed the distribution of the shipment. He kept some of it for his own purposes.[970] Upon his return and following discussions with his commanders, Bockarie briefed Taylor using the satellite phone that Taylor had provided him.[971] During this call, Taylor told Bockarie to "use all means" to get to Freetown.[972] Subsequently, Bockarie named the operation "Operation No Living Thing," implying that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated.[973]

6482. para. 328: Taylor further assisted the operation by providing military personnel. He sent 20 former NPFL soldiers from Liberia to Sierra Leone to join the RUF/AFRC forces. The NPFL soldiers were incorporated into a formation known as the Red Lion Battalion and participated in the Freetown Invasion.[974] Taylor also reorganised, armed and sent a group of at least four former SLA soldiers who had fled to Liberia back to Sierra Leone to support the attack on Freetown.[975] In addition, Taylor sent Abu Keita[976] and 150 men to Sierra Leone, where they were later incorporated into Sam Bockarie's command with Taylor's approval.[977] Keita participated in the attack on Kenema, and participated in the commission of crimes during this attack.[978]

6483. para. 329: In mid-December 1998, armed with the materiel from the Burkina Faso Shipment,[979] RUF/AFRC forces under the command of Issa Sesay successfully commenced their attack on Kono District in accordance with the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[980] ECOMOG forces sustained heavy casualties during their retreat from Kono, and the RUF/AFRC was able to capture a significant quantity of arms, ammunition and other supplies from ECOMOG.[981] RUF/AFRC forces continued moving west towards Freetown as planned, capturing Masingbi, Magburaka and Makeni by 24 December 1998[982] and then attacking Lunsar, Port Loko, Masiaka and Waterloo.[983] At the same time, in mid-December 1998, SAJ Musa's group independently commenced its advance on Freetown, and by the end of December 1998 had reached Benguema on the outskirts of Freetown.[984] Following the capture of Benguema, SAJ Musa was killed on 23 December 1998 and Gullit took over as commander.[985]

6484. para. 330: Gullit then contacted Sam Bockarie.[986] Bockarie took the opportunity presented by SAJ Musa's death and the concomitant resumption of cooperation to attempt a coordinated effort to capture Freetown as he and Taylor had planned.[987] After communicating with Gullit, Bockarie ordered his troops to advance towards Freetown, with the aim of joining forces with Gullit in Freetown, and Bockarie, Gullit, Issa Sesay and the RUF/AFRC commanders coordinated in order to achieve that aim.[988] Bockarie instructed Issa Sesay to reinforce the troops in Freetown,[989] and Issa Sesay then sent RUF/AFRC forces under the command of Rambo Red Goat into Freetown, where they were able to join up with Gullit's forces.[990] Throughout the attack on Freetown, Gullit maintained frequent and daily contact with Bockarie to discuss the ongoing military situation.[991] Bockarie gave instructions to Gullit regarding strategy and tactics,[992] and Gullit complied.[993]

6485. para. 331: On 6 January 1999, the attack on Freetown itself began.[994] After the capture of the State House, Gullit contacted Sam Bockarie to inform him of the capture of the city and to ask for reinforcements.[995] Gullit's forces held central Freetown for four days, until a counter-attack by ECOMOG forces weakened their position.[996] As Gullit's forces were facing increasing pressure from ECOMOG, Bockarie, in accordance with Taylor's instructions to "make the operation fearful,‖ ordered Gullit to use terror tactics against the civilian population on the retreat from Freetown.[997] When Gullit's forces withdrew from Freetown, Bockarie instructed his forces on the outskirts of the city to ensure a secure line of retreat for the withdrawing troops.[998] The RUF/AFRC then made collaborative efforts to re-attack Freetown.[999]

6486. para. 332: Throughout the Freetown Invasion, Taylor and Sam Bockarie communicated by satellite phone in furtherance of the attack,[1000] enhancing Bockarie's capacity to plan, facilitate and order RUF/AFRC military operations during which crimes were committed.[1001] Bockarie was in frequent and even daily contact via radio or satellite phone with Taylor in December 1998 and January 1999, either directly or through Benjamin Yeaten.[1002] In these communications Taylor and Yeaten gave advice to Bockarie and received updates in relation to the progress of the operations in Kono and Freetown in the implementation of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1003] Taylor passed along instructions to Bockarie, directing him to send prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to RUF/AFRC controlled areas.[1004] Yeaten also travelled to Sierra Leone to meet with Bockarie in Buedu,[1005] and Bockarie frequently consulted Yeaten on operational and military decisions.[1006] Taylor also provided communications support during the Freetown Invasion, as his subordinates transmitted "448 messages" to the RUF/AFRC radio station in Buedu, which then transmitted the message to the fighters in the capital, allowing the troops to change their location and avoid attacks by ECOMOG airplanes.[1007] While Gullit's forces occupied State House, they were under air attack by ECOMOG and would receive a "448 message" from Buedu about every two hours.[1008]

together with materiel from the Burkina Faso Shipment and the materiel captured from ECOMOG in Kono, was used by the RUF/AFRC in the Freetown Invasion and the commission of crimes in Kono, Makeni, Freetown and the Western Area.[1010] The Trial Chamber found, based on Issa Sesay's testimony, that without the Burkina Faso Shipment, the RUF/AFRC would not have launched the initial operations on Kono, and without taking Kono, the RUF/AFRC would not have had the materiel necessary to attack other areas.[1011] The Burkina Faso Shipment was thus causally critical to the capture of the ECOMOG materiel in the operations in Kono.[1012] The RUF/AFRC had no other significant sources of materiel at this time.[1013]

6488. para. 334: The RUF/AFRC military campaign to capture Freetown was marked by extreme violence and involved the commission of crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment.[1014] Thousands of civilians were killed during the attack on Freetown and the subsequent retreat through Kissy, Upgun, Calaba Town, Allen Town, Hastings, Wellington, Waterloo and Benguema.[1015] The crimes committed during the Freetown Invasion were widely reported by international media and international organisations.[1016]

d. Post-Freetown Invasion (March 1999) to End of Indictment Period (18 January 2002) – Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State

6489. para. 335: In March 1999, Taylor supplied Sam Bockarie with a large shipment of materiel,[1017] which was part of a shipment of "tons of weapons and ammunition originating in Ukraine [that] were shipped to Burkina Faso from where most, but not necessarily all, were transferred in six flights in a BAC-111 aircraft owned by Leonid Minin [to Monrovia, Liberia]."[1018] In June 1999, the UN Secretary-General reported a resurgence in rebel atrocities against civilians, including executions, mutilations, amputations, abductions, sexual abuse and the large-scale destruction of property.[1019]

6490. para. 336: On 7 July 1999, the Lomé Peace Accord was signed by President Kabbah and Foday Sankoh.[1020] Taylor received praise from world leaders for his involvement in the peace negotiations. However, while he was involved in the peace negotiations, he was at the same time assisting the RUF/AFRC with further preparations for war.[1021] Taylor was privately engaged in arms transactions at the same time that he was publicly promoting peace.[1022]

and Taylor continued to directly and intimately participate in ECOWAS peace efforts to address the situation in Sierra Leone.[1026]

6493. para. 339: From mid-2000 fighting between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF ceased almost entirely, and the RUF began to take their commitment to disarm more seriously.[1036] At this time Issa Sesay was enthusiastic about carrying out disarmament.[1037] However, from July 2000 Taylor began advising Issa Sesay not to disarm.[1038] At a meeting in Monrovia while participating in ECOWAS efforts to promote peace in Sierra Leone, Taylor told Issa Sesay to say he would disarm but then "not do it in reality," saying one thing to Sesay in front of the ECOWAS Heads of State and another to him in private.[1039] Taylor urged Issa Sesay not to listen to the Sierra Leonean Government and promised the RUF his continuing assistance, for which he gave Issa Sesay $USD 15,000.[1040] Again in mid-2001, Taylor asked Issa Sesay whether it would be safe for the RUF to disarm and advised Issa Sesay not to disarm at all.[1041] Taylor advised Sesay to not disarm in part so that RUF/AFRC fighters could participate in combat operations in Guinea and Liberia against Taylor's enemies.[1042] As he had with Sam Bockarie, in 2000 and 2001 Taylor instructed Issa Sesay to send RUF forces to fight in Liberia and Guinea against LURD forces and their allies, and Issa Sesay complied.[1043] While fighting LURD and Guinean forces in Liberia and Guinea, the RUF forces were fighting under the command of Benjamin Yeaten alongside Liberian troops.[1044] The RUF and Taylor had an interest in fighting and repelling a common enemy that was cutting the supply line between Liberia and Sierra Leone.[1045]

6494. para. 340: While participating in ECOWAS efforts to promote peace in Sierra Leone, Taylor continued to provide arms and ammunition to the RUF in exchange for diamonds. Sam Bockarie travelled to Monrovia as part of the Lomé delegation and returned to Sierra Leone in or around late September to October 1999 with a helicopter of materiel supplied by Taylor.[1046] Taylor sent small supplies of arms and ammunitions to the RUF/AFRC until December 1999, through, inter alia, Daniel Tamba, Sampson Weah and Joseph Marzah.[1047] In May 2000, Issa Sesay travelled to Liberia and obtained arms and ammunitions from Taylor.[1048] He also made at least two trips to Liberia in the second half of 2000 and in early 2001 during which he obtained small quantities of arms and ammunition supplied by Taylor.[1049] In 2000, Albert Saidu brought back two vehicles of ammunition and medicine from Benjamin Yeaten in response to a request from Issa Sesay.[1050] Between 2000 and 2001, TF1-567 was frequently involved in the transportation of materiel provided by Taylor to the RUF.[1051] Taylor also continued to provide small quantities of arms and ammunition to the RUF in 2000 and 2001 via, inter alia, Marzah, Tamba, Weah, Menkarzon, Duoh and Varmoh.[1052] Taylor also made available the vehicles in which the materiel was transported and the security personnel that escorted Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay when they picked up materiel from Monrovia and took diamonds to Taylor.[1053] Where necessary, these security escorts also facilitated the crossing of border checkpoints into or from Liberia.[1054] In addition, from at least 1999, Taylor used Liberian Government helicopters for the purposes of delivering arms and/or ammunition to the RUF/AFRC,[1055] and he sent helicopters to transport Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay to Liberia on their trips to obtain materiel.[1056]

6495. para. 341: From February 1999 to January 2002 the RUF/AFRC would turn to Taylor for assistance whenever it needed materiel,[1057] and the alternative sources of materiel available were of minor importance in comparison to that supplied or facilitated by Taylor.[1058] During this period, the RUF/AFRC continued to commit crimes, even though it was not necessarily engaged in military operations.[1059] The materiel sent by Taylor to the RUF/AFRC in 1999 to 2001 was used in fighting in Sierra Leone, against Kamajors throughout 1999 and against ECOMOG and the "West Side Boys"[1060] in March to April 1999, and was part of the overall supply of materiel used by the RUF/AFRC in the commission of crimes.[1061] In the course of military engagements with Kamajors the RUF/AFRC was able to capture materiel,[1062] but not a significant amount.[1063]

6496. para. 342: Taylor also assisted the RUF/AFRC by providing it with a Guesthouse in Monrovia, equipped with a long-range radio and telephone, RUF radio operators, SSS security supervised by Benjamin Yeaten, cooks and a caretaker.[1064] Although the Guesthouse was used by RUF/AFRC members partly for matters relevant to the peace process or for diplomatic purposes, it was also used to facilitate the transfer of arms, ammunition and funds directly from Taylor to the

RUF/AFRC, and the delivery of diamonds from the RUF/AFRC directly to Taylor, thus providing a base for the RUF/AFRC in Monrovia.[1065] After Issa Sesay assumed interim command of the RUF, Taylor also provided him with a satellite phone so that they could be in communication.[1066] This satellite phone facilitated Issa Sesay's communications capability, and enhanced Sesay's capacity to further RUF/AFRC's military operations during which crimes were committed.[1067]

6497. para. 343: During 1999 until his departure from Sierra Leone, Sam Bockarie made a number of trips to Monrovia to deliver diamonds to Taylor, and Eddie Kanneh and Daniel Tamba also delivered diamonds to Taylor from the RUF/AFRC.[1068] After Foday Sankoh's release and appointment as Chairman of the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development, the exchange of diamonds for arms and ammunition between Sankoh and Taylor continued until Sankoh was arrested in May 2000.[1069] During Issa Sesay's leadership of the RUF, from June 2000 until the end of hostilities in 2002, Issa Sesay delivered diamonds to Taylor,[1070] and Eddie Kanneh[1071] delivered diamonds to Taylor on Issa Sesay's behalf.[1072] Diamonds were delivered both in exchange for supplies and/or arms and ammunition and for "safekeeping" until Sankoh's release.[1073] In addition, Taylor facilitated a relationship between Issa Sesay and a diamond dealer known as Alpha Bravo in 2001 for the purpose of diamond transactions.[1074] Taylor also provided fuel and mining equipment to the RUF/AFRC,[1075] and he sent two men to visit and assess the mining operations.[1076] In 2001 Taylor gave Issa Sesay $USD 50,000 related to the diamond trade, and in 2002 Issa Sesay sent Mike Lamin and then a second delegation to retrieve a further $USD 50,000 Taylor held for the RUF/AFRC related to the diamond trade.[1077]

(iii) The Law of Individual Criminal Liability

6498. para. 344: In Grounds 11, 16, 19, 21 and 34, the Defence submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in its articulation and/or application of the elements of individual criminal liability, specifically as to the elements of aiding and abetting liability and planning liability.

6499. para. 345: In this section of the Judgment, the Appeals Chamber addresses four challenges to the law articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber for aiding and abetting and planning liability.

6500. para. 346: First, the Appeals Chamber examines the Defence claim that the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in its articulation and application of the actus reus elements for aiding and abetting, by finding that Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, rather than assisted the crimes "as such".[1078] The Defence further asserts that the law articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber violates the principle of personal culpability by: (i) criminalising any contribution made to a party to an armed conflict;[1079] (ii) failing to distinguish between "neutral" and "intrinsically criminal" assistance;[1080] and (iii) improperly characterising the RUF/AFRC as a criminal organisation.[1081]

6501. para. 347: Second, the Appeals Chamber considers the Defence contention that the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in its articulation and application of the mens rea elements for aiding and abetting, by applying a "knowledge" standard rather than a "purpose" standard in its assessment of Taylor's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts and conduct.[1082]

6502. para. 348: Third, for the reasons set out below,[1083] the Appeals Chamber considers whether the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law when it held that "specific direction" was not an element of the actus reus for aiding and abetting liability.

6503. para. 349: Fourth, the Appeals Chamber addresses the Defence submission that the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in its articulation and application of the actus reus for planning by failing to require and find that Taylor planned particular "concrete crimes".[1084]

6504. para. 350: As with all issues of law, the Appeals Chamber looks first to the constitutive documents of the Special Court: the Agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations, the treaty which established the Court and which incorporates the Statute annexed thereto.[1085] The Appeals Chamber has held that the object and purpose of the Statute is that "all those who have engaged in serious violations of international humanitarian law, whatever the manner in which they may have perpetrated, or participated in the perpetration of those violations, must be brought to justice"[1086] and thereby end "the prevailing situation of impunity."[1087] The Parties to the Agreement recognised that the serious violations of international humanitarian law that took place in Sierra Leone during the conflict victimised the civilian population.[1088] In furtherance of its object and purpose, the Agreement expressly mandated the Special Court to bring to justice those who bear the greatest responsibility for the serious violations of international humanitarian law committed against the people of Sierra Leone.[1089] In his report on the establishment of the Special Court, the Secretary-General of the United Nations noted:

> The prohibition on attacks against civilians is based on the most fundamental distinction drawn in international humanitarian law between the civilian and the military and the absolute prohibition on directing attacks against the former. Its customary international law nature is, therefore, firmly established.[1090]

The prohibition and criminalisation of attacks against civilians is one of the essential principles of international humanitarian law,[1091] and this principle is firmly established in the Statute.

6505. para. 351: In furtherance of the express mandate of the Court, interpreted in light of the object and purpose of the Statute, Article 6(1) establishes personal culpability for participation in the commission of crimes against humanity, violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law.[1092] Article 6(1) of the Statute provides:

> A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute shall be individually responsible for the crime.

The Article establishes five ways in which individual criminal liability, consistent with the principle of personal culpability, attaches for participation in the commission of international crimes during each and every phase of the crime. Article 6(1) therefore imposes individual criminal responsibility "for acts or transactions in which a person has been personally engaged or in some other way participated in one or more of the five ways stated in the Article:"[1093] in the commission of a crime prohibited by the Statute.[1094]

6506. para. 352: Article 6(1) of the Statute does not expressly establish the actus reus and mens rea elements of any of the five forms of criminal participation. In accordance with Rule 72bis, the "principles and rules of international customary law" are applicable laws that the Appeals Chamber has resort to in applying Article 6(1) of the Statute and giving effect to the object and purpose of the Statute.[1095] The Appeals Chamber identifies the actus reus and mens rea elements for the forms of individual criminal liability set out in Article 6(1) by ascertaining customary international law applicable at the time the crimes were committed.[1096] In this regard, it examines its own jurisprudence, the post-Second World War jurisprudence and the other authorities of international law set out in Rule 72*bis*. In addition, the Chamber looks to the jurisprudence of the ICTY and ICTR, where persuasive, for guidance.[1097]

(iv) Aiding and Abetting – Actus Reus

6507. para. 353: The Trial Chamber articulated the actus reus (objective/material/physical) elements of aiding and abetting liability as follows:

> i. The Accused provided practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support to the perpetration of a crime or underlying offence and
> ii. Such practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support had a substantial effect upon the commission of a crime or underlying offence.

The Trial Chamber further explained:

> An Accused may aid and abet not only by means of positive action, but also through omission.
>
> The Accused may aid and abet at one or more of the ―planning, preparation or execution‖ stages of the crime or underlying offence. The lending of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support may occur, before, during, or after the crime or underlying offence occurs. The actus reus of aiding and abetting does not require specific direction. …
> Although the practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support provided by the Accused must have a substantial effect upon the commission of the crime or underlying offence, the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's contribution.[1098]

6508. para. 354: In Grounds 21 and 34, the Defence alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in law in articulating and applying the actus reus elements of aiding and abetting liability. It presents two principal lines of argument in support. First, it argues that the Trial Chamber failed to require that Taylor's assistance was to "the crime as such", by which it means that the Trial Chamber was required to find that Taylor provided assistance to the person who committed the actus reus of the crime, and that the assistance was used in the commission of the crime.[1099] Second, it argues that the law articulated by the Trial Chamber violates principles of personal culpability, as it criminalises any assistance provided to a party to an armed conflict,[1100] fails to take into account the facially "neutral" character of assistance[1101] and improperly imposes individual criminal liability for membership in a criminal organisation.[1102]

6509. para. 355: In the Notice of Appeal, Ground 34 states that "[t]he Trial Chamber erred in law and fact in failing to require a showing that the assistance was to the crimes as such, and that it was substantial."[1103] However, in the Appeal Brief, no arguments are provided in support of this Ground of Appeal, and the Defence submits that "[n]o separate arguments are presented in respect of Ground 34, as those arguments are sufficiently expressed in the other Grounds concerning actus reus," presumably referring to Grounds 21-32.[1104] The Prosecution requests that the Appeals Chamber summarily dismiss Ground 34 for failure to comply with the Practice Direction on Structure of Grounds of Appeal.[1105]

6510. para. 356: The Appeals Chamber accepts the Prosecution submission that Ground 34 does not comply with the Practice Direction on Structure of Grounds of Appeal. The Appeals Chamber further notes that in Grounds 21-32, the Defence does not present a complete and coherent submission clearly setting out the alleged error of law referred to in Ground 34. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber requested the Parties to address in their oral submissions the Defence's complaint that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to require a showing that Taylor assisted the commission of the crimes "as such."[1106] The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Parties were able to provide their views on this issue in their written and oral submissions. Further, as the Appeals Chamber considers that the issue raised by the Defence in Ground 34 concerns an important issue of law, the Appeals Chamber does not consider it appropriate to summarily dismiss Ground 34 and/or the incomplete submissions made in Grounds 21-32. Accordingly, in the exercise of its discretion, the Appeals Chamber will consider under the heading of Grounds 21 and 34 the submissions disparately made in Grounds 21- 32 and during the oral hearing.

a. The Actus Reus Elements – Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6511. para. 362: The Appeals Chamber recalls its prior holding that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law is that an accused's acts and conduct[1128] of assistance, encouragement and/or moral support had a substantial effect on the commission of each charged crime for which he is to be held responsible.[1129] The Trial Chamber properly articulated the actus reus elements of aiding and abetting liability in light of the Appeals Chamber's previous holdings.[1130]

6512. para. 363: The Defence position is that a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes is insufficient as a matter of law to establish the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability. The Defence submits that there is an additional actus reus element, namely it must also be proved that the aider and abettor provided assistance to the physical actor, and that the assistance was used in the commission of a specific crime by the physical actor. Indeed, it avers that when assessing the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability, the focus of the inquiry must be on the relationship between the physical actor and the accused, that is whether the alleged aider and abettor provides the physical actor of each specific crime with assistance that the physical actor used in the commission of each specific crime.[1131]

6513. para. 364: The Trial Chamber held that the actus reus is established where the accused provided assistance, encouragement or moral support at one or more of the "planning, preparation or execution" stages of the crime and thereby had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime.[1132] It accordingly considered whether it was proved that Taylor, by his acts of assistance, encouragement and moral support, had a substantial effect on the commission of each of the crimes with which he was charged.[1133]

6514. para. 365: As the issue presented concerns the elements of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber must look to the Statute and customary international law.

6515. para. 366: Interpreting the Statute in accordance with its plain meaning in context, in light of its object and purpose, the Appeals Chamber finds that Article 6(1) establishes individual criminal liability in terms of the accused's relationship to the crime, not to the physical actor. The five forms of criminal participation in Article 6(1) – including commission – are set forth independently and defined in relation to the crime. As the plain language of Article 6(1) provides, those who plan, instigate, order, commit or otherwise aid and abet the crime are equally liable for the crime on the basis of their own acts. While the Defence submits that the inquiry is whether the aider and abettor assisted the particular physical actor who committed the crime, Article 6(1) does not refer to or in any way describe personal culpability for "planning, instigating, ordering, committing or otherwise aiding and abetting" in relation to another person, whether the "principal", "perpetrator" or "physical actor". In contrast, Article 6(3) clearly establishes individual liability deriving from the criminal acts of another person, the subordinate, under certain circumstances.[1134] The differences between these statutory provisions, which effectively place Article 6(1) in context, confirm the plain language of Article 6(1).

6516. para. 367: In addition, Article 6(1) establishes individual criminal liability for those who otherwise aid and abet in the "planning, preparation or execution of a crime." In accordance with its plain language, aiding and abetting liability may thus be established where the accused participates in any or all stages of the crime. This is consistent with the object and purpose of Article 6(1), as it ensures personal culpability for all those who plan, instigate, order, commit or otherwise aid and abet crimes, whatever the particular manner and stage in which they participate in the crime. The Defence submission that an aider and abettor's assistance must be used by the physical actor in the commission of the specific crime is thus contrary to the Statute. The plain language of Article 6(1) and the object and purpose of the Statute ensure accountability for those who participate in the commission of crimes, in whatever manner and at whatever stage.[1135]

6517. para. 368: The Appeals Chamber has also reviewed customary international law as recognised in the jurisprudence of this Court and other international tribunals. The Appeals Chamber does not accept the Defence submission that the principle to be derived from the jurisprudence is that an aider and abettor must provide assistance to the physical actor and that the assistance must be used in the commission of the specific crime. To the contrary, the Appeals Chamber has held that in respect of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability, the essential question is whether the acts and conduct of an accused can be said to have had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime charged.[1136] This applies equally to personal culpability for ordering,[1137] planning[1138] and instigating[1139] the commission of crimes. Accordingly, the principle articulated by this and other Appeals Chambers is that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is established by assistance, encouragement or moral support that has a substantial effect on the crimes, not the particular manner in which such assistance is provided. This principle is in recognition of the variety of fact patterns which confront triers of fact.

6518. para. 369: Aiding and abetting liability has attached to those who have provided assistance, encouragement or moral support to a variety of different crimes in a variety of contexts. Confirmed convictions for aiding and abetting liability have been entered for: the rape of a single victim;[1140] attacks on peacekeepers;[1141] detention, ill-treatment and forcible transfer throughout a municipality;[1142] killings, torture, destruction of homes and religious institutions and persecution in a region;[1143] persecution throughout a State;[1144] a genocide.[1145] The acts and conduct of those convicted had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes in an infinite variety of ways. An accused's acts and conduct can have a substantial effect by providing weapons and ammunition, vehicles and fuel or personnel,[1146] or by standing guard, transporting perpetrators to the crime site, establishing roadblocks, escorting victims to crime sites or falsely encouraging victims to seek refuge at an execution site.[1147] Such variety also includes providing financial support to an organisation committing crimes, expelling tenants, dismissing employees, denying victims refuge or identifying a victim as a member of the targeted group.[1148] Senior officials' acts and conduct can have a substantial effect on the commission of crimes by signing decrees, attending meetings and issuing reports, allowing troops to be used to assist and commit crimes, demanding slave labour to satisfy the needs of industries, issuing directives and drafting laws, endorsing official decisions to disarm victim groups, working together with the police, army and paramilitaries to maintain a system of unlawful arrests and detention, or deliberately not providing adequate medical care to detention facilities.[1149] In other cases, the acts or conduct of accused persons found to have had a substantial effect on crimes include making a speech to a crowd of listeners encouraging them to commit crimes, implementing a media campaign to arouse hatred against a group or being an approving spectator at the scene of a crime,[1150] or by burying bodies, cremating bodies or conserving looted property.[1151] The acts and conduct of an accountant, architect or dentist in their respective professional roles can have a substantial effect on the commission of crimes,[1152] as can those of prosecutors, judges[1153] and religious officials.[1154]

6519. para. 370: In submitting that certain specific cases[1155] support the proposition that the aider and abettor must provide assistance to the physical actor and that this assistance must be used in the commission of the crime, the Defence has mistaken issues of fact for issues of law.[1156] The findings in the cases on which the Defence relies demonstrate the manner in which those accused had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes; they support the proposition that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is only established where another accused assisted the crimes in that same manner. For example, the Appeals Chamber has held that "acts of aiding and abetting can be made at a time and place removed from the actual crime" if the acts have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime.[1157] This Appeals Chamber also held that, for those alleged to have encouraged or provided moral support to the commission of the crime by being an "approving spectator" at the scene of the crime, "[i]t may be that, in practice, the aider and abettor will be superior to, or have control over, the principal perpetrator; however, this is not a condition required by law."[1158] The Appeals Chamber agrees with the ICTY Appeals Chambers that "a defendant may be convicted for having aided and abetted a crime even if the principal perpetrators have not been tried or identified,"[1159] and that "it is not required as an element of aiding and abetting liability that the principal perpetrators know of the aider and abettor's existence or of his assistance to them."[1160] The Appeals Chamber further agrees that for aiding and abetting liability, "it is not necessary as a matter of law to establish whether [the accused] had any power to control those who committed the offences."[1161] As the Appeals Chamber, as well as the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, have consistently emphasised, whether an accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime "is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis in light of the evidence as a whole."[1162] The manner in which an accused may aid and abet crimes can vary, and the trier of fact must consider the specific facts of the case to determine whether an accused's acts and conduct assisted, encouraged or provided moral support to and had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes. The Defence submission that the Trial Chamber erred in law by failing to make "any specific findings as to the perpetrator of whom [Taylor] was allegedly an aider and abettor"[1163] is contrary to these consistent holdings, and must accordingly be rejected.

6520. para. 371: A thorough review of the caselaw, which is now examined, demonstrates that applying customary international law to the specific facts of individual cases, this Court and other international tribunals have consistently required, when considering a variety of fact patterns, that an accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes for which he is to be held individually criminally liable. International tribunals have never required that, as a matter of law, an aider and abettor must provide assistance to the crime in a particular manner, such as providing assistance to the physical actor that is then used in the commission of the crime. The Appeals Chamber recalls that as illustration of the Trial Chamber's alleged error of law, the Defence highlighted the Trial Chamber's conclusions that Taylor's assistance supported, sustained and enhanced the RUF/AFRC's capacity to undertake its Operational Strategy,[1164] and that his assistance was critical in enabling the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[1165] The Appeals Chamber notes that based on similar findings, the Chambers and Tribunals in the cases discussed below found that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability was established. In addition, these cases involve convictions for a range of crimes and criminal activity, including specific crimes, such as murders, as well as acts of persecution and genocide.

6521. para. 372: In Brima et al., this Chamber found that one of the accused, Kanu, was responsible for aiding and abetting a system of sexual slavery and forced labour.[1166] The Chamber held that his acts and conduct satisfied the actus reus of aiding and abetting because he supported and sustained the organised commission of crimes and thereby provided practical assistance to the crimes.[1167] The Appeals Chamber did not require that Kanu provided assistance in a particular manner.

6522. para. 373: In the Brđanin case, the ICTY Trial Chamber found that the Bosnian Serb leadership adopted a Strategic Plan to gain control over territories,[1168] and that the crimes committed by Bosnian Serb forces during the indictment period "occurred as a direct result of the over-arching Strategic Plan."[1169] It convicted Brđanin[1170] for aiding and abetting the crimes committed in context of the armed attacks by the Bosnian Serb forces on non-Serb towns, villages and neighbourhoods,[1171] including killings, torture, destruction of homes and religious buildings, appropriation of property and humiliation and degradation. It found that as President of the ARK Crisis Staff, Brđanin issued "governmental" decisions that non-Serbs should disarm,[1172] which made non-Serb civilians more vulnerable and less able to defend themselves from attacks by Bosnian Serb forces implementing the Strategic Plan[1173] and also provided a pretext for attacks.[1174] The Trial Chamber concluded that the decisions for non-Serbs to disarm had a substantial effect on the crimes committed in the course of such attacks.[1175] It further concluded that Brđanin aided and abetted crimes of persecution committed on a widespread and systematic scale, finding that he "aided and abetted the maintenance of a system in which Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats were unable to seek legal redress" for their illegal detention and the appropriation of their property[1176] and "actively aided and abetted the setting up of impediments for Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats to move around freely."[1177] The ICTY Appeals Chamber affirmed the convictions and the Trial Chamber's findings that Brđanin's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes for which he was convicted.[1178]

6523. para. 374: Brđanin was convicted of aiding and abetting crimes because he supported and enabled attacks by Bosnian Serb forces in the implementation of the Strategic Plan. By issuing governmental decisions impacting the victim population of the crimes, Brđanin had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, establishing the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability. The ICTY Trial Chamber did not find that each victim of these crimes disarmed as a result of

Brđanin's acts or that Brđanin's acts played a direct role in each crime.[1179] Rather, it considered the cumulative effect of his acts on the ability of the Bosnian Serb forces to commit the crimes, and he was held liable for having an indirect, but substantial effect on the crimes.[1180] This is further underscored by the findings that Brđanin "aid[ed] and abet[ed] the maintenance of a system" of persecution and thereby supported and sustained the functioning of the organised commission of crimes.[1181]

6524. para. 375: While the Defence cites the ICTY case of Blagojević and Jokić, this case is in fact contrary to the Defence position.[1182] The Trial Chamber found Blagojević liable for aiding and abetting crimes where he "permitted the use of personnel or resources to facilitate the commission of these crimes."[1183] The personnel attributable to Blagojević did not perpetrate the crimes themselves. Blagojević's acts and conduct assisted and had a substantial effect on the crimes because the personnel attributable to him participated in guarding and detaining the eventual victims.[1184] The ICTY Appeals Chamber's reasoning in Krstić, where it convicted the accused of aiding and abetting crimes of genocide, is also instructive in this respect:

> As has been found above, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that, at least from 15 July 1995, Radislav Krstić had knowledge of the genocidal intent of some of the Members of the VRS Main Staff. Radislav Krstić was aware that the Main Staff had insufficient resources of its own to carry out the executions and that, without the use of Drina Corps resources, the Main Staff would not have been able to implement its genocidal plan. Krstić knew that by allowing Drina Corps resources to be used he was making a substantial contribution to the execution of the Bosnian Muslim prisoners. Although the evidence suggests that Radislav Krstić was not a supporter of that plan, as Commander of the Drina Corps he permitted the Main Staff to call upon Drina Corps resources and to employ those resources.[1185]

The acts and conduct of Krstić and Blagojević were found to have assisted and had a substantial effect on the crimes for which they were convicted because they supported and enhanced the capacity of the VRS Main Staff – with whom they did not share a common purpose[1186] – to carry out its plan to commit crimes against the civilian population of Srebrenica. The Chambers in both Blagojević and Jokić and Krstić thus found that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability was established where the accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, and did not require that the accused provided assistance in a particular manner, such as t the physical actor who then uses the assistance in the commission of the specific crime.

6525. para. 376: In Simić et al., the ICTY Appeals Chamber convicted Simić of aiding and abetting persecution in respect of unlawful arrests and the detention of non-Serb civilians.[1187] The Trial Chamber found that Simić worked together with the police, paramilitaries and JNA to maintain a system of crimes in the form of unlawful arrests and detention of non-Serb civilians.[1188] On appeal, Simić argued that ―accepting the Trial Chamber's findings as they stand, they do not disclose any sufficient basis of evidence for (sic) linking him with the acts in any way."[1189] The ICTY Appeals Chamber rejected this submission, concluding that the findings that there was a system of arrests and detention and that Simić had strong influence demonstrate "that he lent positive assistance to [the crimes]"[1190] and further "lent substantial assistance to the perpetration of these underlying acts of persecutions."[1191] The actus reus of aiding and abetting liability was thus established because Simić participated in, supported and sustained "the system of arrests and detention", and thereby his acts and conduct had a substantial effect on those crimes.[1192]

6526. para. 377: The post-Second World War caselaw is also instructive on the application of the principle that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is established by assistance that has a substantial effect on the crimes, not the particular manner in which such assistance is provided. As these courts were confronted with the organised commission of crimes on a large-scale, this caselaw is replete with examples demonstrating the variety of ways in which persons can be found to have culpably assisted the commission of crimes.[1193]

6527. para. 378: In Becker, Weber and 18 Others, tried before the French Permanent Military Tribunal, the accused, present in France, were convicted as accomplices of killings that took place in Germany in which they had no direct role.[1194] In Roechling, the French Superior Military Government Court found:

> Hermann Roechling and the other accused members of the Directorate of the Voelklingen works are not accused of having ordered this horrible treatment, but of having permitted it; and indeed supported it, and in addition, of not having done their utmost to put an end > to these abuses. In adopting this attitude they permitted the continued existence and further development of this inhuman situation and thus, particularly through this tolerance, participated in the maltreatment within the meaning of Law No. 10.[1195]

In Ministries, Tribunal IV found:

> Nor are we impressed with [Berger's] defense that these recruits were used for exterior guard duty only, and therefore were not responsible for the atrocities committed within the camps. …If we are to assume that his statements were true, nevertheless he is not thereby relieved of responsibility. …The defendant furnished the exterior guards and if, as we find to be the fact, these camps were of the character just described and the defendant knew of it, which we also find to be the fact, he participated in the crime. The fact, if it be a fact, that neither he nor the guards participated in shootings, beatings, starvations, and other maltreatment can only be considered, if at all, in mitigation of the offense.[1196]

In Flick, Tribunal IV found:

> An organization which on a large scale is responsible for such crimes can be nothing else than criminal. One who knowingly by his influence and money contributes to the support thereof must, under settled legal principles, be deemed to be, if not a principal, certainly an accessory to such crimes.[1197]

> It remains clear from the evidence that [the accused] gave to Himmler, the Reich Leader SS, a blank check. His criminal organization was maintained and we have no doubt that some of this money went to its maintenance. It seems to be immaterial whether it was spent on salaries or for lethal gas. So we are compelled to find from the evidence that both defendants are guilty on count four.[1198]

6528. para. 379: As Tribunal III held in the Justice Case:

> The material facts which must be proved in [this] case are (1) the fact of the great pattern or plan of racial persecution and extermination; and (2) specific conduct of the individual defendant in furtherance of the plan. This is but an application of general concepts of criminal law. The person who persuades another to commit murder, the person who furnishes the lethal weapon for the purpose of its commission, and the person who pulls the trigger are all principals or accessories to the crime.[1199]

In the Justice Case, the accused were charged and found guilty for their knowing participation in the organised commission of crimes in the implementation of different policies and programs.[1200] The Tribunal assessed the accused's participation in each of the programs, which was as a matter of fact that demonstrated the culpable effect of their acts or conduct on the relevant crimes.[1201] The Tribunal described their participation as, inter alia, aiding, abetting and being connected with plan or enterprises involving the commission of crimes.[1202]

6529. para. 380: As these Judgments, as well as those such as Farben,[1203] demonstrate, the post-Second World War tribunals recognised that the essential question when determining whether an accused culpably assisted the commission of the crimes is the effect of the accused's assistance on the commission of the crimes, not the manner in which such assistance was provided.

6530. para. 381: Notwithstanding the jurisprudence discussed above, the Defence submits, in effect, that the manner in which an accused can assist the commission of crimes in order to establish the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability must be limited as a matter of law to distinguish aiding and abetting from joint criminal enterprise liability. It submits that "organisational liability" is addressed exclusively through joint criminal enterprise, not aiding and abetting,[1204] and that the Trial Chamber improperly considered the effect of Taylor's acts and conduct in the context of the activities of an organisation, the RUF/AFRC.

6532. para. 383: The Appeals Chamber further notes that individual criminal responsibility for aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of a crime, as expressly provided for in Article 6(1), is unquestionably well-established and fundamental in customary international law.[1208] Article 6(1) applies to the crimes provided in Articles 2-4 of the Statute. In this respect, Article 2 of the Statute, crimes against humanity, specifically defines crimes committed either on a large-scale or in an organised manner. The essence of crimes against humanity is a systematic policy of a certain scale and gravity directed against the civilian population,[1209] and in practice, these crimes are often committed by organised groups.[1210] Articles 1 of the Agreement and Statute, respectively, further recognise the multiplicity of actors in the commission of crimes over which this Court has jurisdiction: the Prosecutor has the responsibility to prosecute those who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law in Sierra Leone.[1211] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, aiding and abetting liability, specifically provided for in Article 6(1) of the Statute, was understood by the Parties to the Agreement to appropriately apply to those most responsible for the large-scale and organised commission of crimes against the civilian population of Sierra Leone.

6533. para. 384: This conclusion is confirmed by the jurisprudence. The cases, especially Brđanin, Krstić and Blagojević and Jokić, discussed above have applied aiding and abetting liability to large-scale crimes committed by organised groups of individuals.[1212] The Appeals Chamber also notes that the jurisprudence demonstrates that accused can be found liable for aiding and abetting crimes that other accused are found liable for under joint criminal enterprise. As a matter of law and fact, aiding and abetting convictions can co-exist with findings that a plurality of persons shared a common criminal purpose that embraced the same crimes that an accused aided and abetted.[1213] In cases such as Krstić, Blagojević and Jokić and Simić et al., the accused were specifically found not to share the common criminal purpose and not to be "members" of the joint criminal enterprise, but were still convicted of aiding and abetting crimes that were committed in furtherance of the joint criminal enterprise. In the Ministries Case, the accused were acquitted, on the merits, of common purpose liability for the commission of crimes against humanity and war crimes.[1214] The accused in the Hostage Case were also found on the merits not to have participated in a preconceived plan.[1215] In the Justice Case, the Tribunal did not find that the accused shared a common purpose with one another or with the originators of the program of racial persecution.[1216] The accused were only convicted for the crimes on which their acts and conduct had a substantial effect, not simply all crimes committed pursuant to the common purpose.[1217] In comparison, common purpose liability was clearly charged and found in other cases.[1218]

6534. para. 385: Where the evidence establishes that the crimes were committed in the implementation of a plan, program, policy or strategy to commit such crimes, the crimes were committed, as a matter of fact, not by the physical actors alone, but by the organised participation and contributions of many persons. In accordance with the Statute and customary international law, triers of fact are required to consider whether, by assisting, encouraging or supporting the planning, preparation or execution of the plan, program, policy or strategy, an accused's acts and conduct thereby had a substantial effect on some or all of the crimes committed in furtherance of the plan, program, policy or strategy. That an accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes establishes the requisite actus reus for aiding and abetting liability, not the manner in which an accused assisted the commission of the crimes. In the Appeals Chamber's view, this was the assessment performed in the cases discussed and by the Trial Chamber here.

b. Alleged Violations of the Principle of Personal Culpability – Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6535. para. 386: In Ground 21, the Defence submits that the law as articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber with respect to the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability violates the principle of personal culpability.[1219] The Defence puts forward the following three complaints, which will be addressed in turn below: the Trial Chamber's approach (i) criminalised any contribution to a party to an armed conflict;[1220] (ii) failed to distinguish between "neutral" and "intrinsically criminal" assistance;[1221] and (iii) characterised the RUF/AFRC as a criminal organisation.[1222]

6536. para. 387: The Appeals Chamber has previously held that "the foundation of criminal responsibility is the principle of personal culpability: nobody may be held criminally responsible for acts or transactions in which he has not personally engaged or in some other way participated."[1223] The Appeals Chamber understands the Defence submissions as contending that the law as articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber fails to establish personal culpability.[1224]

i. Whether the Trial Chamber's Approach Criminalises Any Contribution to a Party to an Armed Conflict – Alleged Violations of the Principle of Personal Culpability – Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6537. para. 390: It is fundamental in international criminal law that an accused may only be punished for his criminal conduct.[1229] As articulated by the Trial Chamber and affirmed above, the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under customary international law requires that an accused's acts and conduct have a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1230] This requirement ensures that there is a sufficient causal link – a criminal link – between the accused and the commission of the crime before an accused's conduct may be adjudged criminal. The jurisprudence is replete with examples of acts that may have had some effect on the commission of the crime, but which were found not to have a sufficient effect on the crime for individual criminal liability to attach.[1231]

6538. para. 391: The Appeals Chamber further observes that the causal link between the accused's acts and conduct and the commission of the crime is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis: this case-by-case assessment ensures both that the culpable are properly held responsible for their acts and that the innocent are not unjustly held liable for the acts of others. Merely providing the means to commit a crime is not sufficient to establish that an accused's conduct was criminal.[1232] Where the crime is an isolated act, the very fungibility of the means may establish that the accused is not sufficiently connected to the commission of the crime. Similarly, on the facts of a case, an accused's contribution to the causal stream leading to the commission of the crime may be insignificant or insubstantial, precluding a finding that his acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the crimes.[1233] In terms of the effect of an accused's acts and conduct on the commission of the crime through his assistance to a group or organisation, there is a readily apparent difference between an isolated crime and a crime committed in furtherance of a widespread and systematic attack on the civilian population. The jurisprudence provides further guidance, but it is the differences between the facts of given cases that are decisive.

6539. para. 392: The Appeals Chamber concludes that the requirement that an accused's acts and conduct must have a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes to be held criminally responsible for those crimes, as articulated by the Trial Chamber, is in accordance with principles of personal culpability. The Appeals Chamber further holds that this requirement is sufficient to ensure distinctions between those who may have had an effect on non-criminal activity and those who had a substantial effect on crimes, when applied to the facts of a given case.

ii. Whether the Trial Chamber's Approach Failed to Distinguish between "Neutral" and "Intrinsically Criminal" Assistance - Alleged Violations of the Principle of Personal Culpability - Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6540. para. 395: The law articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber requires that the assistance provided has a substantial effect on the commission of a crime. How any assistance could be used is a speculative question: perfectly innocuous items, such as satellite phones, could be used to assist the commission of crimes, while instruments of violence could be used lawfully. The distinction between criminal and non-criminal acts of assistance is not drawn on the basis of the act in the abstract, but on its effect in fact.[1238] Applying the law, the Trial Chamber inquired whether the evidence demonstrated that the assistance and support Taylor provided had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes. On the facts, the Trial Chamber found that the arms and ammunition, military personnel, operational support and advice and encouragement Taylor provided had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1239]

iii. Whether the Trial Chamber's Approach Characterised the RUF/AFRC as a Criminal Organisation - Alleged Violations of the Principle of Personal Culpability - Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6541. para. 398: "Criminal organization" liability is a term of art in international criminal law. Articles 9 and 10 of the IMT Charter provided that the International Military Tribunal could declare a group or organisation a "criminal organisation," and that individuals could then be brought to trial for the substantive crime of membership in that criminal organisation. Article II(1)(d) of Control Council Law No. 10 established that membership in a criminal organisation was a crime, and Article II(2)(e) further established individual criminal liability for crimes where the accused "was a member of any organization or group connected with the commission of any such crime." However, this is not the law of the Special Court.

6542. para. 399: The Appeals Chamber has examined the Trial Judgment and concludes that the Trial Chamber did not find that the RUF/AFRC was a "criminal organization" or characterise it as such. The Trial Chamber specifically recalled that "war is not per se a crime under the Special Court Statute."[1245] It did find that at all times relevant to the Indictment, the Prosecution had proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the RUF/AFRC directed a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, based on the large number of victims, the geographic scope of the crimes, the pattern of violence and the organisation of violence.[1246] It further found that the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy involved a campaign of crimes against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, using terror as the primary modus operandi, in order to achieve the RUF/AFRC's political and military goals at any civilian cost.[1247] The Appeals Chamber has affirmed these findings.[1248]

6543. para. 400: Personal culpability requires that an accused can only be held liable for his own conduct and only when the actus reus and mens rea elements of participation in the commission of the crimes are proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The Appeals Chamber holds without hesitation that the convictions entered by the Trial Chamber are fully in accordance with those strict requirements.

iv. Conclusion - Alleged Violations of the Principle of Personal Culpability - Aiding and Abetting - Actus Reus

6544. para. 401: Having considered the Statute and customary international law, the Appeals Chamber finds that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is established by assistance that has a substantial effect on the crime, not by the particular manner in which such assistance is provided. The Appeals Chamber does not accept the Defence submission that the Trial Chamber was required to find that Taylor provided assistance to the physical actor who committed the actus reus of each specific underlying crime or that such assistance was used by the physical actor in the commission of each specific crime. The Appeals Chamber accordingly affirms its prior holding that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law is that an accused's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement and/or moral support had a substantial effect on the commission of each crime charged for which he is to be held responsible.

6545. para. 402: The Appeals Chamber concludes that the law articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber is in accordance with the principle of personal culpability.

(v) Aiding and Abetting – Mens Rea

6546. para. 403: The Trial Chamber articulated the mens rea (mental) elements of aiding and abetting liability as follows:

> i. The Accused performed an act with the knowledge that such act would assist the commission of a crime or underlying offence, or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of underlying offence; and
> ii. The Accused is aware of the essential elements of the crime committed by the principal offender, including the state of mind of the principal offender.[1249]

The Trial Chamber further explained that:

> Although the lending of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support must itself be intentional, the intent to commit the crime or underlying offence is not required. Instead, the Accused must have knowledge that his acts or omissions assist the perpetrator in the commission of the crime or underlying offence. Such knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances. The Accused must be aware, at a minimum, of the essential elements of the substantive crime or underlying offence for which he is charged with responsibility as an aider and abettor. The requirement that the aider and abettor need merely know of the perpetrator's intent — and need not share it — applies equally to specific-intent crimes or underlying offences such as persecution as a crime against humanity.[1250]

6547. para. 404: The two elements articulated by the Trial Chamber relate to, first, an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct (―knowledge, or awareness of the substantial likelihood, that such act or conduct would assist the commission of a crime‖) and, second, an accused's mental state regarding the factual circumstances of the underlying crime ("aware of the essential elements of the crime").

6548. para. 405: In Grounds 16, 19 and 21, the Defence alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in law in articulating the mens rea elements of aiding and abetting liability. It presents two principal lines of argument in support. First, it argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law by adopting and applying a "knowledge" standard for an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct, as a component of mens rea. Second, it argues that the law articulated by the Trial Chamber violates the principle of personal culpability.

6549. para. 406: Ground 18 states as follows: "The Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in inferring that assistance provided to the RUF or AFRC, with an awareness of crimes that were committed in the past by some RUF or AFRC soldiers, constituted aiding and abetting of any and all subsequent crimes committed by a soldier affiliated, or in alliance, with the RUF or AFRC."[1251] In its Appeal Brief, the Defence did not present separate arguments in relation to Ground 18, submitting that "those arguments are sufficiently expressed in the other Grounds concerning mens rea. The ground of appeal is nevertheless maintained on the basis of those arguments."[1252] The Ground does not comply with the Practice Direction on the Structure of Grounds of Appeal, and further, it is vague and does not identify specifically the challenged finding. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the submissions referred to are fully presented and argued in the Defence's other Grounds, and that Ground 18 does not supplement those submissions in any way. Ground 18 is accordingly summarily dismissed.

a. Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6550. para. 413: The Defence argues that the caselaw of the Special Court and the ICTY jurisprudence relied upon by the Trial Chamber in applying a "knowledge" standard to an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct is manifestly incorrect and that Article 25(3) of the Rome Statute was not addressed in that caselaw.[1279] It further states that the Appeals Chamber has never been directly confronted with a challenge to its articulation of the mens rea elements of aiding and abetting, and that the issue now raised is "therefore a matter of first impression for this Court."[1280]

6551. para. 414: The Appeals Chamber does not accept that the mens rea of aiding and abetting liability is a matter of first impression for this Court.[1281] The Appeals Chamber, guided by the caselaw of the ICTY[1282] and ICTR[1283] Appeals Chambers, has consistently held that for aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law, the requisite standard for an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct is as follows:

> the accused knew that his acts would assist the commission of the crime by the perpetrator or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of a crime by the perpetrator.[1284]

6552. para. 415: In broad terms, mens rea (subjective element) describes an accused's mental state at the time he performs the actus reus (objective element). While mens rea properly covers different elements,[1285] the only issue presented here concerns an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct.[1286] In this case, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor provided assistance, encouragement and moral support to the RUF/AFRC knowing that his acts and conduct would assist the commission of the crimes, that is, that he knew the consequence of his acts and conduct would be to have an effect on the commission of the crimes.[1287] The Defence contests this finding, arguing that the Trial Chamber was required to find that Taylor willed, desired or had the conscious object that his acts and conduct would assist the commission of the crime,[1288] that is, that he willed or had the conscious object that the consequence of his acts and conduct would be to have an effect on the commission of the crime. The specific question raised by the Defence here, then, is whether, in accordance with Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law, an accused can be held criminally liable if he volitionally (or willingly) performs the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability (providing assistance, encouragement or moral support) knowing (or being aware of the substantial likelihood) that his acts or conduct will have an effect on the commission of the crimes.[1289]

6553. para. 416: The Appeals Chamber will now address the Defence's contention that volitionally or willingly performing the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability with "knowledge" of the consequence of one's acts or conduct is not a culpable mental state for aiding and abetting liability under customary international law.

i. "Knowledge" – Post-Second World War Jurisprudence - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6554. para. 417: Like other international criminal tribunals[1290] as well as domestic courts[1291] ascertaining international law, this Appeals Chamber looks to the caselaw of post-Second World War tribunals as indicative of customary international law.

6555. para. 418: Article 6 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal (IMT) established individual criminal liability for "[l]eaders, organizers, instigators, and accomplices participating in the formulation or execution of a Common Plan or Conspiracy to commit [the crimes]."[1292] The IMT found:

> Hitler could not make aggressive war by himself. He had to have the co-operation of statesmen, military leaders, diplomats, and business men. When they, with knowledge of his aims, gave him their co-operation, they made themselves parties to the plan he had initiated. They are not to be deemed innocent because Hitler made use of them, if they knew what they were doing.[1293]

The IMT held accused personally liable for their knowing participation in the crimes. Von Schirach was found guilty in that "while he did not originate the policy of deporting Jews from Vienna, [he] participated in this deportation after he had become Gauleiter of Vienna. He knew that the best the Jews could hope for was a miserable existence in the ghettos of the East. Bulletins describing the Jewish extermination were in his office."[1294] Seyss-Inquart was held responsible for being "a knowing and voluntary participant in War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity which were committed in the occupation of the Netherlands."[1295] In relation to Speer, the IMT found that "[t]he system of blocked industries played only a small part in the over-all slave labour program, although Speer urged its cooperation with the slave labour program, knowing the way in which it was actually being administered. In an official sense, he was its principal beneficiary and he constantly urged its extension."[1296] Other convictions relied on similar findings.[1297]

6556. para. 419: Control Council Law No. 10,[1298] the legal basis for further prosecution of crimes against peace, crimes against humanity and war crimes, established individual criminal liability in Article II(2).[1299] Applying that law,[1300] the Nuremberg Military Tribunals[1301] (NMTs) consistently held that an accused's knowledge that he was participating in the commission of the crime – that is, an accused's knowledge of the consequence of his acts or conduct – established the mens rea for personal liability. The NMTs did not require that an accused directly intended that the consequence of his acts or conduct were to contribute to the commission of the crimes.[1302]

> the essential elements to prove a defendant guilty under the indictment in this case are that a defendant had knowledge of an offense charged in the indictment and established by the evidence, and that he was connected with the commission of that offense.[1303]

Applying this holding, the Tribunal entered convictions where it was satisfied that an accused had knowledge of the crime and of his participation in its commission.[1304] It found Rothaug guilty because he "was the knowing and willing instrument in that program of persecution and extermination."[1305] Klemm was convicted because, among other facts, he "knew of abuses in concentration camps. He knew of the practice of severe interrogations. He knew of the persecution and oppression of the Jews and Poles and gypsies. He must be assumed to have known, from the evidence, the general basis of Nacht und Nebel procedure under the Department of Justice."[1306] The Tribunal convicted Joel because he was "chargeable with knowledge that the Night and Fog program from its inception to its final conclusion constituted a violation of the laws and customs of war."[1307] The United Nations War Crimes Commission (UNWCC) Commentary to the Justice Case noted:

> The question of knowledge was treated by the Tribunal as one of the highest importance, and repeated reference was made in the Judgment to the fact that various accused had knowledge, or must be assumed to have had knowledge, of the use made of the German legal system by Hitler and his associates, of the Nacht und Nebel plan and of the schemes for racial persecution.[1308]

6558. para. 421: Tribunal IV convicted Flick, a businessman who became a member of Himmler's Circle of Friends and contributed money to Himmler, for being an accessory to crimes against humanity and war crimes perpetrated by the SS.[1309] In assessing his mens rea, the Tribunal considered decisive the fact that Flick supported Himmler at a time when the criminal activities of the SS were common knowledge.[1310] The Tribunal held:

> One who knowingly by his influence and money contributes to the support thereof must, under settled legal principles, be deemed to be, if not a principal, certainly an accessory to such crimes.[1311]

6559. para. 422: Tribunal VI held in the Farben Case:

> no individual defendant may be held guilty of the war crimes, or any aspect thereof, charged under count two, unless the competent proof establishes beyond reasonable doubt that he knowingly participated in an act of plunder or spoliation….[1312]

The defendants in that case were charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity through participation in the plunder of public and private property in countries and territories which came under the belligerent occupation of Germany.[1313] The Tribunal held that "[r]esponsibility does not automatically attach to an act proved to be criminal merely by virtue of a defendant's membership in the Vorstand. …[T]he evidence must establish action of the character we have indicated, with knowledge of the essential elements of the crime."[1314] In respect of Schmitz, chairman of the Vorstand and the chief financial officer of Farben, the Tribunal found:

> The information coming to his attention in this manner was sufficient to apprise him of the pressure tactics being employed to force the French to consent to Farben's majority participation in the French dyestuffs industry. He was in a position to influence policy and effectively to alter the course of events. We, therefore, find that Schmitz bore a responsibility for, and knew of, Farben's program to take part in the spoliation of the French dyestuffs industry and, with this knowledge, expressly and impliedly authorized and approved it. Schmitz must be held Guilty on this aspect of count two of the indictment.[1315]

6560. para. 423: The Ministries Case, involving senior government and business officials, is particularly instructive. Tribunal IV found the requisite mens rea where an accused had knowledge that his acts had an effect on the crimes and thus he knowingly participated in the commission of crimes. Under Count Five, charging crimes against humanity, the Tribunal found that Keppler "knew the [agency's] functions and he knew what part it played in the general scheme of resettlement. If the [agency] had an important part in a crime cognizable by this Tribunal, he bears a part in the criminal responsibility thereto."[1316] Likewise, Kehrl was found guilty because "he was thoroughly aware of what the [agency] was expected to do, what its policies were, and what it in fact did."[1317] While Puhl, a Reichsbank senior official, "had no part in the actual extermination of Jews and other concentration camp inmates,"[1318] he was found guilty because he "knew that what was to be received and disposed of was stolen property and loot taken from the inmates of concentration camps,"[1319] although "[i]t is to be said in his favor that he neither originated the matter and that it was probably repugnant to him."[1320] Stuckart[1321] and Schellenberg,[1322] among others, were likewise convicted of crimes against humanity because they had knowledge of the criminal consequence of their acts. Similarly, Koerner[1323] and Pleiger[1324] were found guilty of the crime of slave labour charged in Count Seven because they had knowledge of their participation in the crime. Rasche was convicted on Count Six for participating in the spoliation and plunder in Czechoslovakia, and in relation to his mens rea the Tribunal found:

> The fact remains that it is credible evidence of the extent of the Dresdner Bank participation in the Aryanization program during the period mentioned. …There can be little question but that defendant, as active head of the Vorstand of the BEB, was conversant with such an extensive activity of such bank.[1325]

6561. para. 424: The Tribunal in the Ministries Case was further clear that it did not require as a matter of law that an accused must have willed or desired the consequence of his acts or conduct, and that an accused's knowledge of the criminal consequence was sufficient to establish the mens rea for personal culpability. Von Weizsaecker and Woermann, senior officials in the Foreign Ministry, were convicted for crimes against humanity under Count Five. The Tribunal found that even though they neither willed nor desired the commission of the crimes, their knowledge that they were participating in the crimes was sufficient to establish the requisite mens rea:

> The mass deportation of Jews to the East which resulted in the extermination of many millions of them found its expression in the celebrated Wannsee conference of 20 January 1942. The Foreign Office played an important part in these negotiations and in the actions thereafter taken to implement and assist the program. Von Weizsaecker or Woermann neither originated it, gave it enthusiastic support, nor in their hearts approved of it. The question is whether they knew of the program and whether in any substantial manner they aided, abetted, or implemented it.[1326]

It is valuable to further quote at length the Tribunal's findings regarding Schwerin von Krosigk's guilt for crimes against humanity under Count Five:

> The evidence clearly shows that he was not a member of Hitler's inner circle, that he was not one of his confidants, and that he came in touch with him but seldom before the war, and even less often afterward. During the course of the years he suffered many conflicts of conscience and was fully aware that measures to which he put his name and programs in which he played a part were contrary and abhorrent to what he believed and knew to be right. It is difficult to understand > what motives or what weaknesses impelled or permitted him to remain and play a part, in many respects an important one, in the Hitler regime. It is one of the human tragedies which are so often found in life.[1327] …

> It is clear, however, that notwithstanding the conflicts of conscience which he suffered, and of them we have no doubt, he actively and consciously participated in the crimes charged in count five. Neither the desire to be of service nor the desire to help individuals nor the demands of patriotism constitute a justification or an excuse for that which the evidence clearly establishes he did, although they may be considered in mitigation of punishment. We find the defendant Schwerin von Krosigk guilty under count five in the particulars set forth.[1328]

6562. para. 425: In the Pohl Case, Tribunal II found the requisite mens rea where an accused had knowledge of his participation in the commission of the crimes.[1329] In assessing the responsibility of Max Kiefer, an architect in charge of planning and constructing concentration camps,[1330] the Tribunal concluded that "the very nature of such installations and their continued maintenance constituted knowledge of the purposes for which they were to be used."[1331] Tribunal II in the Einsatzgruppen Case found that an accused's knowledge of the crimes and his participation therein established the mens rea for culpability. The Tribunal held that Klingelhoefer's role as an interpreter did "not exonerate him from guilt because in locating, evaluating and turning over lists of Communist party functionaries to the executive department of his organization he was aware that the people listed would be executed when found. In this function, therefore, he served as a accessory to the crime."[1332]

6563. para. 426: Like the NMTs, British tribunals found that knowledge of the crimes and the accused's participation therein established personal responsibility. The three accused in Zyklon B were charged with knowingly supplying poison gas used for the extermination of allied nationals interned in concentration camps.[1333] The Judge Advocate emphasised the Prosecution's contention that the accused must have known that the large deliveries of Zyklon B could not have been made for the purpose of disinfecting buildings.[1334] In the Rhode Case, the Judge Advocate explained that:

> if he was taking part with the other man with the knowledge that that other man was going to put the killing into effect then he was just as guilty as the person who fired the shot or delivered the blow.[1335]

6564. para. 427: In Roechling, the French Superior Military Government Court, applying C.C. Law No. 10, convicted Ernest Roechling for war crimes of spoliation because "[h]e was fully aware of the significance of his own role" in the commission of the crimes.[1336] In the Holstein case[1337] and Wagner case[1338] before French military tribunals applying French military and domestic law, the accused were found guilty as accomplices under Article 60 of the French Criminal Code:

> any person who has supplied the arms, tools or any other means that have been used in the commission of the crime or offence, knowing that they would be so used; or who has wittingly aided or assisted the author or authors of the crime or offence in any acts preparatory to, or facilitating its perpetration, or in its execution....[1339]

United States military tribunals in the Far East also found mens rea established by an accused's knowledge of his participation in the crime.[1340]

ii. "Knowledge" – The 1996 ILC Draft Code - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6565. para. 428: The Appeals Chamber accepts that the International Law Commission's[1341] 1996 Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind is generally regarded as an authoritative international legal instrument that, although non-binding, may "(i) constitute evidence of customary law, or (ii) shed light on customary rules which are of uncertain contents or are in the process of formation, or, at the very least, (iii) be indicative of the legal views of eminently qualified publicists representing the major legal systems of the world."[1342] Article 2(3)(d) of the 1996 Draft Code provides:

> 3. An individual shall be responsible for a crime set out in article 17, 18, 19 or 20 if that individual:
> (d) knowingly aids, abets or otherwise assists, directly and substantially,[1343] in the commission of such a crime, including providing the means for its commission.

The Commentary states that "[t]he accomplice must knowingly provide assistance to the perpetrator of the crime. Thus, an individual who provides some type of assistance to another individual without knowing that this assistance will facilitate the commission of a crime would not be held accountable under subparagraph (d)."[1344]

iii. "Knowledge" – Domestic jurisdictions - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6566. para. 429: Domestic law, even if consistent and continuous in all States, is not necessarily indicative of customary international law. This is particularly true in defining legal elements and determining forms of criminal participation in domestic jurisdictions, which may base their concepts of criminality on differing values and principles. Therefore, the reliance by the Defence on examples of domestic jurisdictions requiring or applying a "purpose" standard to an accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct[1345] is misplaced.

6567. para. 430: Nor is such practice consistent among all States. The Appeals Chamber equally identifies a number of States that explicitly provide that an accused's knowledge of the consequence of his acts or conduct is culpable mens rea for aiding and abetting liability. In South Africa "[a]n accomplice is someone who knowingly associates himself or herself with the commission of the crime by the perpetrator and furthers the commission of the crime."[1346] Article 121-7 of the French Penal Code establishes individual criminal liability for "the person who knowingly, by aiding and abetting, facilitates its preparation or commission."[1347] Under the United States Military Regulations, the elements of aiding and abetting are defined as:

> (A) The accused committed an act that aided or abetted another person or entity in the commission of a substantive offense triable by military commission;
> (B) Such other person or entity committed or attempted to commit the substantive offense; and
> (C) The accused intended to or knew that the act would aid or abet such other person or entity in the commission of the substantive offense or an associated criminal purpose or enterprise.[1348]

iv. "Knowledge" – The Jurisprudence of International Criminal Tribunals - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6568. para. 431: In its review of the relevant jurisprudence, the Appeals Chamber has found the reasoning and holdings of the following ICTY Trial Chambers persuasive and consistent with its conclusions. While the Defence challenges the analysis performed by the ICTY Trial Chamber in Furundžija, these Trial Chambers independently assessed customary international law as established in the post-Second World War jurisprudence and their holdings are unchallenged by the Defence.

6569. para. 432: Having reviewed post-Second World War cases,[1349] the Tadić Trial Chamber concluded that the Nuremberg war crimes trials showed a clear pattern in requiring what it termed "intent", by which, in this Chamber's view, it meant knowledge, not direct intent, as its description makes clear: "there is a requirement of intent, which involves awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate by planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the commission of a crime."[1350] The Tadić Trial

Chamber thus established that "aiding and abetting includes all acts of assistance by words or acts that lend encouragement or support, as long as the requisite intent is present,"[1351] and concluded that > the accused will be found criminally culpable for any conduct where it is determined that he knowingly participated in the commission of an offence that violates international humanitarian law and his participation directly and substantially affected the commission of that offence through supporting the actual commission before, during, or after the incident. He will also be responsible for all that naturally results from the commission of the act in question.[1352]

6570. para. 433: The Čelebići Trial Chamber adopted the Tadić formulation as sound,[1353] holding that under Article 7(1) of the ICTY Statute:

> [t]he corresponding intent, or mens rea, is indicated by the requirement that the act of participation be performed with knowledge that it will assist the principal in the commission of the criminal act. Thus, there must be "awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate by planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the commission of a crime."[1354]

6571. para. 434: The Trial Chamber in Aleksovski also approvingly relied on the Tadić Trial Chamber's articulation when analyzing individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the ICTY Statute for "having contributed to the perpetration of the crime without, however, having … committed the unlawful act."[1355] As to the accused's mental state regarding the consequence of his acts or conduct, the Trial Chamber held:

> The accused must also have participated in the illegal act in full knowledge of what he was doing. This intent was defined by Trial Chamber II as "awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate."[1356]

v. Article 25(3) of the Rome Statute 1357 - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6572. para. 435: The Appeals Chamber holds that Article 6(1) of the Special Court Statute has no direct equivalent in the Rome Statute.[1358] The Appeals Chamber is also of the view that Article 25(3) does not represent or purport to represent a complete statement of personal culpability under customary international law.[1359] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Rome Statute has no bearing on the mens rea elements of aiding and abetting liability under customary international law applicable during the Indictment Period.[1360]

vi. Conclusion - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6573. para. 436: The Appeals Chamber's review of the post-Second World War jurisprudence demonstrates that under customary international law, an accused's knowledge of the consequence of his acts or conduct – that is, an accused's "knowing participation" in the crimes – is a culpable mens rea standard for individual criminal liability. Similarly, the post-Second World War jurisprudence was found in early ICTY Judgments other than Furundžija[1361] to establish that under customary international law, "awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate" in the commission of a crime entails individual criminal responsibility.[1362] The 1996 ILC Draft Code supports this conclusion, and Article 25(3)(c) of the Rome Statute is not evidence of state practice to the contrary. Whether this standard is termed "knowledge", "general intent", "dol special", "dolo diretto" or "dolus directus in the second degree", the concept is the same.

6574. para. 437: In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber reaffirms that knowledge is a culpable mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law.

vii. "Awareness of the Substantial Likelihood" – Mental State Regarding Consequence – Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6575. para. 438: This Appeals Chamber and the Special Court Trial Chambers have consistently held that "awareness of the substantial likelihood"[1363] is a culpable mental state for aiding and abetting under customary international law.[1364] The Defence has not provided cogent reasons to depart from this jurisprudence, which is consistent with the principle that awareness and acceptance of the substantially likely consequence of one's acts and conduct constitutes culpability.[1365] In finding Taylor criminally responsible for aiding and abetting, the Trial Chamber found beyond a reasonable doubt that Taylor knew that his acts assisted the commission of the crimes.[1366] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Defence has not shown an error that would occasion a miscarriage of justice and finds it unnecessary to further consider the Defence submissions.

viii. Knowledge of a "Substantial" Effect - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6576. para. 439: The Defence argues that the Trial Chamber erred in not requiring proof that Taylor knew that the effect his acts would have on the commission of the crimes would be "substantial".[1367] The consistent jurisprudence of this Court does not require such proof. Whether an accused's acts and conduct have a "substantial" effect on the commission of the crime is an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact in light of the law and the facts established. It is not a requisite element of the accused's mens rea because as a general principle of criminal law, it is the task of judges, not an accused, to determine the correct legal characterisation of an accused's conduct (iura novit curia).[1368] In light of these considerations, the Defence submission is dismissed.

ix. Conclusion - Mental State Regarding Consequence - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6577. para. 440: The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's articulation of the law.

b. Alleged Violation of the Principle of Personal Culpability - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6578. para. 445: There is, of course, always a possibility that serious violations of international humanitarian law will occur in an armed conflict. Mere awareness of this possibility does not, however, suffice for the imposition of criminal responsibility.[1377] The crux of the Defence submission is that in an armed conflict, the commission of crimes is not simply a probability, but a virtual certainty.[1378] Whether, in the abstract, the commission of crimes in armed conflicts is possible, probable or certain is not relevant to and does not establish individual criminal liability under the law. The Defence submission fails to address the mens rea requirements as established in the law. The law requires that an accused must be aware, inter alia, of the consequence of his conduct, the essential elements of the crime, the concrete factual circumstances and the criminal intent, and it requires concrete knowledge or awareness on the part of the accused, not just an abstract awareness that crimes will be committed in the course of any armed conflict.[1379] The specifics of this awareness will depend on the factual circumstances of each particular case. The Trial Chamber did not rely on abstract awareness, either in its articulation or its application of the law. It applied the law in keeping with the specific facts that it found.[1380] As its reasoning and conclusions demonstrate, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, knew of its intent to commit crimes and was aware of the essential elements of the crimes in light of specific and concrete information of which Taylor was aware.[1381] The Defence fails to show any error. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the mens rea standard articulated by the Trial Chamber is in accordance with principles of personal culpability.

c. "Purpose" - Aiding and Abetting - Mens Rea

6579. para. 446: For the reasons previously stated, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, contrary to the Defence submission, the mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability under customary international law is not limited to "direct intent" or "purpose".[1382] Having considered the issue in detail in the course of assessing the Defence submissions, the Appeals Chamber makes the following observations.

6580. para. 447: The Defence submits that it is well-known that the "purpose" standard as used in Article 25(3)(c) of the Rome Statute is taken from the United States Model Penal Code.[1383] Even if this were to be accepted, the dangers of transplanting municipal law from its complete domestic framework are apparent in this situation. The Model Penal Code reflects a particular construction of the actus reus and mens rea elements for aiding and abetting liability. Under the Model Penal Code, the actus reus for personal culpability is established through any act of facilitating the crime; there is no requirement that the act must "substantially" assist the crime, as under customary international law.[1384] The drafters of the Model Penal Code specifically considered but ultimately did not adopt such a requirement, favouring the use of the "purpose" standard alone to distinguish culpable and innocent conduct.[1385] Finally, many jurisdictions utilizing the Model Penal Code have created "criminal facilitation" offenses to address the gap created by the Model Penal Code's limitation of aiding and abetting liability to those who act with "purpose".[1386] In light of these considerations, and particularly as customary international law requires that an accused's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement or moral support have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime, the liability schemes under the United States Model Penal Code and customary international law are fundamentally distinct.

6581. para. 448: This conclusion is strengthened by the overlap between customary international law and the decisions of Courts applying a "purpose" standard. The Defence highlights the decisions in R. v. Lam Kit, R. v. Leung Tak-yin and R. v. Clarkson, arguing that these suggest State practice in support of the "purpose" standard articulated in Article 25(3)(c) of the Rome Statute.[1387] These decisions concern the culpability of bystanders to the crime, and all apply a

"purpose" standard in order to distinguish between culpable and innocent bystanders. Customary international law draws the same distinction between innocent and culpable presence at the scene of the crime, but by directing the attention of the trier of fact to the substantiality of the contribution and the accused's awareness of the circumstances and consequence of his "approving" presence.[1388]

6582. para. 449: Further, while the Defence submits that the "purpose" standard is distinct from the "knowledge" standard in this Court's jurisprudence, it cites the Canadian Criminal Code in support,[1389] which in fact does not support that proposition. Under Section 21(1)(b) of the Canadian Criminal Code, a party to the offence includes any person who "does or omits to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit" the offence. The Canadian Supreme Court in R. v. Briscoe held:

> The mens rea requirement reflected in the word "purpose" under s. 21(1)(b) has two components: intent and knowledge. For the intent component, it was settled in R. v. Hibbert, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 973, that "purpose" in s. 21(1)(b) should be understood as essentially synonymous with "intention". The Crown must prove that the accused intended to assist the principal in the commission of the offence. The Court emphasized that "purpose" should not be interpreted as incorporating the notion of "desire" into the fault requirement for party liability. It is therefore not required that the accused desired that the offence be successfully committed (Hibbert, at para. 35). The Court held, at para. 32, that the perverse consequences … would flow from a "purpose equals desire" interpretation of s. 21(1)(b)….[1390]

This definition of "purpose", provided by the Supreme Court of Canada interpreting its Criminal Code, comports with the knowledge standard as defined in this Court's jurisprudence and discussed above.

6583. para. 450: The Appeals Chamber notes that much of the Defence's discussion in this case about Article 25(3)(c) has proceeded on unsupported assumptions. The Defence case was that aiding and abetting liability as established in this Court's and the ad hoc Tribunals' jurisprudence is not in accordance with customary international law and the principle of personal culpability. On that basis it argued that the Appeals Chamber should reject the established caselaw and find that the mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability is direct intent. However, the Appeals Chamber has found that these submissions are without foundation.

6584. para. 451: The final responsibility to interpret the Rome Statute rests with the ICC Appeals Chamber. As noted, in this Appeals Chamber's view, the individual criminal liability scheme under Article 25(3) of the Rome Statute differs in significant measure from Article 6(1) of the Special Court Statute. Interpreting its own constitutive documents and considering the plain language in context, and in light of the object and purpose of the Rome Statute, the ICC Appeals Chamber may conclude that "purpose" as used in Article 25(3)(c) has the same meaning as "purpose" under Section 21(1)(b) of the Canadian Criminal Code, ensuring that Article 25(3)(c) liability is aligned with Article 30 of the Rome Statute. It may conclude that "perverse consequences" would follow from importing the United States Model Penal Code's definition of "purpose" into the liability scheme in the Rome Statute, such as requiring a higher mens rea standard for Article 25(3)(c) than for Article 25(3)(a), (b) and (d). It may adopt the position put forward by the Defence here. Until it has made its views known, speculative exercises do not assist in the identification of the law, and established customary international law, as consistently articulated and applied in the jurisprudence of international criminal tribunals from the Second World War to today, must bear more weight than suppositions as to what Article 25(3)(c) does or does not mean.

(vi) Alleged Contrary State Practice

6585. para. 456: The "examples" offered by the Defence remain at the level of mere assertion, and the "law" on which the Defence relies does not bear any resemblance to the law as actually articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber. It is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to determine the obligations of States and characterise State action as "criminal". This Chamber leaves those bodies and tribunals which properly have authority over States to interpret the law on state responsibility.[1400]

6586. para. 457: States have consistently and repeatedly undertaken obligations to prevent and punish individuals for serious violations of international humanitarian law through treaties that have ripened into customary law establishing individual criminal liability for such violations. Customary international law is clear as to the actus reus and mens rea elements of aiding and abetting liability for such crimes. Although existing customary international law can be modified if the combination of opinio juris and state practice show a continuing and consistent adherence to the new custom by the international community, the Defence has failed to identify any examples of such opinio juris and state practice, much less a continuing and consistent adherence.

6587. para. 458: The examples offered concern activities by persons in official positions that are alleged to violate international criminal law. Article 6(2) of the Statute makes it clear that the official position of an accused or the fact that an accused acted pursuant to orders of a Government shall not relieve him of criminal responsibility. The doctrine of "act of State" is no defence under international criminal law, and individuals are bound to abide by the law regardless of possible authorisation by a State. As the IMT long ago held, "individuals have international duties which transcend the national obligations of obedience imposed by the individual State."[1401]

6588. para. 459: Further, the examples offered do not indicate the attitudes of States. They are not evidence of a State's claim that it has the right to engage in conduct found to be criminal by an impartial tribunal applying customary international law. No statement by a State that it has the right to assist the commission of widespread and systematic crimes against a civilian population has ever been offered.

6589. para. 460: Finally, the submission is that the examples represent state practice, yet only a few are offered. As the ICTY Appeals Chamber held, "[n]o matter how powerful or influential a country is, its practice does not automatically become customary international law."[1402] This is even more true where fundamental principles such as the prohibitions on participation in the commission of serious violations of international law and attacks on civilians are at stake.

6590. para. 461: The Appeals Chamber accepts the Prosecution's submission that some States have expressly indicated in their domestic legislation that they do not consider it lawful to assist those engaged in serious violations of international humanitarian law.[1403] The "Leahy Law" in the United States prohibits funding to governments and foreign military units if they are "engaged in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognised human rights" or have "committed a gross violation of human rights, unless all necessary corrective steps have been taken."[1404] The European Union Common Position on Exports of Military Technology and Equipment provides that Member States shall "deny an export licence if there is a clear risk that the military technology or equipment to be exported might be used in the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law."[1405] These are concrete indications of States''attitudes contrary to the Defence's assertions.

6591. para. 462: Similarly, the Appeals Chamber also notes the recent adoption by the United Nations General Assembly of the Arms Trade Treaty.[1406] This treaty has not yet entered into force nor been widely ratified, but its adoption and provisions do not support the claimed opinio juris and state practice modifying existing customary law. Article 6(3) provides:

> A State Party shall not authorize any transfer of conventional arms covered under Article 2(1) or of items covered under Article 3 or Article 4, if it has knowledge at the time of authorization that the arms or items would be used in the commission of genocide, crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, attacks directed against civilian objects or civilians protected as such, or other war crimes as defined by international agreements to which it is a Party.

Contrary to the Defence claim that there is significant State practice that is contrary to existing customary international law, the Appeals Chamber notes that there are indications of developing attitudes among some States that the international community has an obligation to ensure that civilian populations are protected from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity.[1407]

6592. para. 463: In the Appeals Chamber's view, international tribunals, in prosecuting those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law, act as the instruments of States. States have created international tribunals to prosecute war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide. This Court is a demonstrable example, created by the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations to prosecute serious violations of international humanitarian law in the territory of Sierra Leone. Similarly, the ICTY and ICTR were created by the United Nations Security Council to prosecute such violations in the territories of the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, respectively. In discharging their mandates, international tribunals carry out the will of the community of States and indeed humanity as a whole.

6593. para. 464: States have further mandated international criminal tribunals to perform their mandates impartially and apply customary international law as it stands. States, acting as "legislator", provide international courts with Statutes, and mandate judges, as impartial adjudicators, to apply those Statutes and customary international law to the cases before them. Performing this role, the Appeals Chamber has duly identified customary international law as it is mandated to do. The issue having been raised that contrary state practice exists, the Appeals Chamber has considered the submissions and found no evidence of state practice indicating a change in customary international law from the existing parameters of personal culpability for aiding and abetting the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law. The Appeals Chamber is accordingly obliged to apply existing customary international law. As Judge Shahabuddeen aptly noted, "[t]he danger of legislating arises not only where a court essays to make law where there is none, but also where it fails to apply such law as exists; the failure may well be regarded as amounting to judicial legislation directed to repealing the existing law."[1408]

6594. para. 465: As the Special Court Agreement is a treaty to which the Statute is annexed and incorporated, the Parties are at any time free to amend Article 6 of the Statute to expressly define aiding and abetting liability in a different way than under customary international law or to redefine individual criminal liability on account of policy considerations. The United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone have not done so. This Chamber declines to usurp that role.

(vii) Specific Direction

6595. para. 466: The Trial Chamber, in articulating the actus reus elements of aiding and abetting liability, held that "[t]he actus reus of aiding and abetting does not require 'specific direction.'"[1409]

6596. para. 471: The Defence did not argue on appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that "[t]he actus reus of aiding and abetting does not require 'specific direction,'"[1420] although it made a number of submissions regarding the notion in Ground 16 (alleged error in mens rea standard).[1421] After the pronouncement of the ICTY Appeals Chamber's Judgment in Perišić, which followed completion of the pre-appeal proceedings in this case, the Defence sought leave to amend its Notice of Appeal to add that complaint.[1422] The Prosecution also sought leave to file further submissions on the Perišić Appeal Judgment,[1423] but for reasons conveyed to both Parties, those motions were denied.[1424] Nonetheless, as the Appeals Chamber noted in its orders denying the motions, it is aware of and considers current relevant jurisprudence.[1425]

6597. para. 472: In applying the Statute and customary international law, the Appeals Chamber is guided by the decisions of the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chamber.[1426] The Chamber looks as well to the decisions of the Appeals Chamber of the ECCC and STL and other sources of authority.[1427] The Appeals Chamber, however, is the final arbiter of the law for this Court, and the decisions of other courts are only persuasive, not binding, authority. The Appeals Chamber recognises and respects that the ICTY Appeals Chamber is the final arbiter of the law for that Court.

6598. para. 473: There is nothing in the Statute to indicate that "specific direction" is an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability.[1428] In the Perišić Appeal Judgment, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that "specific direction" must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt in order to establish the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability.[1429] The issue raised in respect of "specific direction" then is whether it is an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under customary international law prevailing during the Indictment Period in this case.

6599. para. 474: The Appeals Chamber has independently reviewed the post-Second World War jurisprudence, and is satisfied that those cases did not require an actus reus element of "specific direction" in addition to proof that the accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1430] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber has examined the ILC Draft Code of Crimes[1431] and state practice,[1432] and is satisfied that they do not require such an element.

6600. para. 475: For the reasons discussed above, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law is that an accused's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement and/or moral support had a substantial effect on the commission of each charged crime for which he is to be held responsible.[1433] This requirement ensures that there is a sufficient causal, a "culpable",[1434] link between the accused and the commission of the crime before an accused's acts and conduct may be adjudged criminal.[1435] The principle articulated by this and other Appeals Chambers is that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is established by assistance that has a substantial effect on the crimes, not the particular manner in which such assistance is provided.[1436] As the Appeals Chamber, as well as the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, have consistently emphasised, whether the accused's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime "is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis in light of the evidence as a whole."[1437]

6601. para. 476: The Perišić Appeals Chamber did not assert that "specific direction" is an element under customary international law.[1438] Its analysis was limited to its prior holdings and the holdings of the ICTR Appeals Chamber, which is the same body.[1439] Rather than determining whether "specific direction" is an element under customary international law, the Perišić Appeals Chamber specifically and only inquired whether the ICTY Appeals Chamber had previously departed from its prior holding that "specific direction" is an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability.[1440] In the absence of any discussion of customary international law, it is presumed that the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Perišić was only identifying and applying internally binding precedent.

6602. para. 477: In holding that the ICTY Appeals Chamber had not departed from its prior precedent, the Perišić Appeals Chamber stated that "[h]ad the Appeals Chamber [in Blagojević and Jokić, Mrkšić and Sljivančanin and Lukić and Lukić] found cogent reasons to depart from its relevant precedent, and intended to do so, it would have performed a clear, detailed analysis of the issue, discussing both past jurisprudence and the authorities supporting an alternative approach."[1441] In examining this reasoning in terms of its persuasive value, however, this Appeals Chamber notes that the ICTY Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence does not contain a clear, detailed analysis of the authorities supporting the conclusion that "specific direction" is an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under customary international law.[1442]

6603. para. 478: The ultimate precedent identified by the Perišić Appeals Chamber was the Tadić Appeal Judgment.[1443] That Judgment did not, however, canvas customary international law regarding the elements for aiding and abetting liability, and its discussion of aiding and abetting was limited to explaining the differences between aiding and abetting liability and joint criminal enterprise liability.[1444] The Appeals Chamber is further not persuaded by the Perišić Appeal

Chamber's analysis of the ICTY Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence on "specific direction".[1445] The Mrkšić and Sljivančanin Appeals Chamber held that "the Appeals Chamber has confirmed that "'specific direction' is not an essential ingredient of the actus reus of aiding and abetting."[1446] The Lukić and Lukić Appeals Chamber then held that there were no cogent reasons to deviate from the holding of the Mrkšić and Sljivančanin Appeal Judgement that specific direction is not essential to the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability.[1447]

6604. para. 479: The Appeals Chamber is further not persuaded by the Perišić Appeals Chamber's holding that "no conviction for aiding and abetting may be entered if the element of specific direction is not established beyond reasonable doubt, either explicitly or implicitly."[1448] That a finding necessary to a conviction and one that must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt can be "implicit"[1449] or "self-evident",[1450] would appear to be inconsistent with the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt[1451] and the presumption of innocence.[1452]

6605. para. 480: Although the Perišić Appeal Judgment introduces novel elements in its articulation of "specific direction", which may perhaps be developed in time, this Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that there is good reason to depart from settled principles of law at this time.[1453] As the Appeals Chamber has concluded, the requirement that the accused's acts and conduct have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime ensures that there is a sufficient causal link between the accused and the commission of the crime.[1454] The Appeals Chamber has further concluded that this requirement is sufficient to ensure that the innocent are not unjustly held liable for the acts of others.[1455] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber does not agree with the Perišić Appeals Chamber's treatment of the accused's physical proximity to the crime as a decisive consideration distinguishing between culpable and innocent conduct.[1456] This Appeals Chamber has previously held, consistent with the holdings of all other appellate chambers, that "acts of aiding and abetting can be made at a time and place removed from the actual crime."[1457] Whether the accused is geographically close to the scene of the crime may be relevant depending on the facts of the case, particularly where that presence is alleged to have contributed to the commission of the crime,[1458] but it is not a legal requirement. While an accused may be physically distant from the commission of the crime, he may in fact be in proximity to and interact with those ordering and directing the commission of crimes.

a. Conclusion

6606. para. 481: The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that there are cogent reasons to depart from its holding that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law is that the accused's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement and/or moral support had a substantial effect on the commission of each charged crime for which he is to be held responsible. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that "specific direction" is not an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute or customary international law.

(viii) Conclusion on the Law of Aiding and Abetting

6607. para. 482: Having considered the Statute and customary international law, the Appeals Chamber finds that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability is established by assistance that has a substantial effect on the crime, not by the particular manner in which such assistance is provided. The Appeals Chamber rejects the Defence submission that the Trial Chamber was required to find that Taylor provided assistance to the specific physical actor who committed the actus reus of each underlying crime. The Appeals Chamber accordingly affirms its prior holding that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law is that an accused's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement and/or moral support had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes charged for which he is to be held responsible.

6608. para. 483: The Appeals Chamber's review of the post-Second World War jurisprudence and subsequent caselaw demonstrates that under customary international law, an accused's knowledge of the consequence of his acts or conduct – that is, an accused's "knowing participation" in the crimes – is a culpable mens rea standard for individual criminal liability. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber reaffirms that knowledge is a culpable mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law.

6609. para. 484: Although existing customary international law can be modified if the combination of opinion juris and state practice show a continuing and consistent adherence to the new custom by the international community, the Defence has failed to identify any examples of such opinio juris and state practice, much less a continuing and consistent adherence. The issue having been raised that contrary state practice exists, the Appeals Chamber has considered the submissions and found no evidence of state practice indicating a change in customary international law from the existing parameters of personal culpability for aiding and abetting the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law.

6610. para. 485: The Appeals Chamber further concludes that the law articulated and applied by the Trial Chamber is in accordance with the principle of personal culpability.

6611. para. 486: Finally, the Appeals Chamber concludes that "specific direction" is not an element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute or customary international law. Although the Perišić Appeal Judgment introduces novel elements in its articulation of "specific direction", which may perhaps be developed in time, this Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that there are cogent reasons to depart from its holding regarding the actus reus and mens rea of aiding and abetting liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law.

(ix) Aiding and Abetting Liability - Concurring Opinion

6612. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 709: I fully agree with the Appeals Chamber's reasoning and conclusion as to the law of aiding and abetting liability. However, I consider it necessary to further address two of the Defense's arguments in support of its position that the elements of aiding and abetting liability under customary international law as interpreted and applied in this case, are impermissibly broad.

6613. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 710: The Appeals Chamber, in affirming the Trial Chamber, has unanimously concluded that under customary international law, substantially assisting the commission of crimes knowing the consequence of one's acts incurs individual criminal liability for those crimes. I am firmly of the view that this law is in accordance with accepted principles of criminal law[2063] and that the customary status of this law is not in doubt.

6614. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 711: The Defense argues that the application of the law of aiding and abetting as interpreted by the Trial Chamber is overbroad in the context of crimes committed in armed conflicts, and poses the question, "how do we define the limits where there is nothing whatsoever intrinsic in the nature of assistance which tells us what is aiding and abetting," and warns that "the actus reus [of aiding and abetting liability] can actually be quite easily fulfilled quite unconsciously by the alleged aider and abetter."[2064] The Appeals Chamber seriously considered this question and responds in its holding that the law of individual criminal responsibility does not criminalise just any act of assistance to a party to an armed conflict, nor does it criminalise all acts or conduct that may result in assistance to the commission of a crime. Stated simply, the law does not impose strict liability.

6615. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 712: The law on aiding and abetting criminalises knowing participation in the commission of a crime where an accused's willing act or conduct had a substantial effect on the crime. I would add, by way of further explanation, that the customary elements for aiding and abetting liability contain express limitations to protect the innocent, regardless of the context in which the crimes are committed: the accused's acts or conduct must have a substantial effect on the crime; the accused must commit the acts with the knowledge that the acts will assist in the commission of the crime OR with awareness of the substantial likelihood that they will; and the accused must be aware of the essential elements of the crime which his or her acts or conduct assist. Every case is fact specific, and in all cases the accused may challenge the factual predicates of the essential elements, raise affirmative defenses recognized by law, and argue mitigating circumstances.

6616. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 713: It is true of course that an accused may provide assistance to both lawful and unlawful activities. However, no system of criminal law excuses unlawful conduct because the accused also engages in lawful conduct. The law presumes that all of an accused's conduct is lawful – the Prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that some of the accused's conduct was unlawful. If the Prosecution proves beyond a reasonable doubt that: (i) a crime was committed; and (ii) the accused knowingly assisted the commission of the crime, or was aware that there was a substantial likelihood that his acts would assist in the commission of the crime; and (iii) his acts or conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime; and (iv) the accused had an awareness of the essential elements of the underlying crime his acts or conduct assisted; then criminal liability for aiding and abetting that crime is established. If any of these four elements is not proved beyond a reasonable doubt, then the accused will not be found guilty of aiding and abetting a crime.

6617. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 714: It is likewise true that liability for aiding and abetting is not restricted to those who want the crimes to be committed. Criminal law legitimately punishes those who know what they are doing and proceed to act regardless of whether they desire or are merely indifferent to the pain and suffering to which they contribute.

6618. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 715: The essential elements of aiding and abetting liability as properly applied in this case establish the boundaries which protect against over-criminalization. As with all forms of criminal participation, it is up to the Trial Chamber to test the facts it finds against the essential elements, mindful of the limitations, the burden of proof, and the presumption of innocence. This is the routine task of judges, and there is nothing different in the way judges interpret and apply the elements of aiding and abetting from the way they interpret and apply the elements of any other mode of liability or substantive crime. The Appeals Chamber unanimously determined that the Trial Chamber committed no error in performing this task in the present case.

6619. Concuring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 716: I comment on the Defense's additional argument in support of its overbreadth contention because I consider it very troublesome. The Defense argues that the essential elements of aiding and abetting as applied and relied on by the Trial Chamber are insufficient and require additional or different elements or analysis because the concept of aiding and abetting is "so broad that it would in fact encompass actions that are today carried out by a great many States in relation to their assistance to rebel groups or to governments that are well known to be engaging in crimes of varying degrees of frequency…."[2065] Such assistance, the Defense argues, "is going on in many other countries that are supported in some cases by the very sponsors of this Court."[2066] By this argument, the Defense purposely confuses customary law-making with international law-breaking.

6620. Concurring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 717: Furthermore, suggesting that the Judges of this Court would be open to the argument that we should change the law or fashion our decisions in the interests of officials of States that provide support for this or any international criminal court is an affront to international criminal law and the judges who serve it. The Defense has interjected a political and highly inappropriate conceit into these proceedings, which has no place in courts of law and which has found no place in the Judgment of this Court. The Judges of this Court, like our colleagues in our sister Tribunals, are sworn to act independently "without fear or favour, affection or ill-will" and to serve "honestly, faithfully, impartially and conscientiously."[2067] To suggest otherwise wrongfully casts a cloud on the integrity of judges in international criminal courts generally and the rule of law which we are sworn to uphold, and encourages unfounded speculation and loss of confidence in the decisionmaking process as well as in the decisions themselves. I wish to make clear that this line of argument is absolutely repudiated.[2068]

6621. Concurring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 718: Judges do not decide hypothetical cases. They look to the individual case before them and apply the law as they are convinced it exists to the facts that have been reasonably found. Reasonable minds may differ on the law. I am convinced that the customary law on the elements of aiding and abetting are as stated by the Trial Chamber and that application of the law to the facts in this particular case was properly and fairly calculated. As with all areas of the law, international criminal law is founded on fact and experience. "[I]t cannot be dealt with as if it contained only the axioms and corollaries of a book of mathematics."[2069] Judicial decisions require the exercise of human judgment. Like the presumption of innocence, the presumption that judges are acting independently in the exercise of their best judgment in the case before them is fundamental to the rule of law. Judges privileged to sit on international criminal courts regard the duty underlying both of these presumptions as inviolable.

6622. Concurring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 719: At the Special Court, the law is transparent, public and faithful to the principle that one is only held accountable for his or her own acts. The Prosecutor independently investigates and brings indictments against those suspected of criminal violations, without regard to status or official position, holding all equally accountable before the law. The accused is guaranteed the confidential assistance of professional and independent counsel, who are bound to serve their client's interest in accordance with their ethical responsibilities as officers of the court. The Statute and Rules ensure the accused's right to a fair and public trial, so that the public may see the evidence laid against the accused and his defense against the charges during transparent adversarial proceedings. Finally, an independent and impartial judiciary, having ensured the fairness of the proceedings and applying the presumption of innocence and the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, deliberates in secret and announces its reasoned judgment in public. That judgment is subject to appeal and reviewed by five other independent judges. These are the essential safeguards for the rights of the accused and the interests of justice.

6623. Concurring Opinion – Justice Fisher, Justice Winter joining, para. 720: If the presumption of innocence outweighs the evidence of personal culpability, courts of law will acquit the accused. The rule of law requires respect for such decisions, even by those who disagree with them. In this case, the confirmed findings overwhelmingly establish that Mr. Taylor, over a five year period, individually, and knowingly, and secretly, and substantially assisted the perpetration of horrific crimes against countless civilians in return for diamonds and power, while publicly pretending that he was working for peace. In the unanimous, independent judgment of the three Trial Judges that composed the Trial Chamber and the five Appellate Justices that compose the Appeals Chamber,[2070] the presumption of innocence has been overcome beyond a reasonable doubt both as to the substantive crimes charged in the Indictment and Mr. Taylor's participation in those crimes.

(x) Planning – Actus Reus

6625. para. 487: The Trial Chamber articulated the actus reus (objective) and mens rea (mental) elements of planning liability as follows:

> i. The accused, alone or with others, intentionally designed an act or omission constituting the crimes charged;
>
> ii. With the intent that a crime or underlying offence be committed in the execution of that design, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime or underlying offence would be committed in the execution of that design.

The Trial Chamber further explained:

> While the Prosecution need not prove that the crime or underlying offence with which the accused is charged would not have been perpetrated but for the Accused's plan, the plan must have been a factor ―substantially contributing to criminal conduct constituting one or more statutory crimes that are later perpetrated.[1459]

6626. para. 491: The Appeals Chamber, in several cases, has upheld planning convictions for enslavement committed over more than one year and involving a large number of victims,[1467] the use of child soldiers committed in Kailahun, Kenema, Kono and Bombali Districts between 1997 and September 2000,[1468] a system of sexual slavery in Bombali District and the Western Area[1469] and the conscription and use of child soldiers in the Western Area.[1470] In none of those cases was it required that an accused be found to have planned a "particular" or "concrete" crime.

6627. para. 492: The Appeals Chamber has previously indicated that it does not consider as persuasive authority the Brđanin Trial Judgment's holding that planning is distinguished from other forms of criminal participation by a requirement of "specificity". In Brima et al., the Trial Chamber rejected that holding as an overly "narrow construction of the responsibility for planning," and held that the requirement of a substantial contribution or effect was sufficient to establish the culpable link between the accused and the crimes.[1471] The Trial Chamber's articulation of the law was affirmed on appeal.[1472] Similarly, in Sesay et al., the Appeals Chamber distinguished the Brđanin Trial Judgment on the facts, and noted that it was not determinative to Sesay's planning liability.[1473] In addition, the ICTY Appeals Chamber subsequently rejected the Brđanin Trial Chamber's holding in Kordić and Čerkez.[1474] As the Defence clearly raises the issue now, this Appeals Chamber clarifies that it does not accept the Brđanin Trial Judgment's holding.

6628. para. 493: The Appeals Chamber notes that in Boškoski and Tarčulovski, the appellant made similar submissions as those presented here.[1475] The ICTY Appeals Chamber rejected them, holding that where the accused planned conduct that had the predominant purpose to indiscriminately attack civilians, the accused planned conduct which constituted crimes.[1476] The ICTY Appeals Chamber further held that "the legitimate character of an operation does not exclude an accused's criminal responsibility for planning, instigating and ordering crimes committed in the course of this operation" if the goal is to be achieved by the commission of crimes.[1477] The Appeals Chamber agrees.

6629. para. 494: The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber's articulation of the law[1478] and holds that the actus reus of planning liability is that an accused participated in designing an act or omission[1479] and thereby had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime.[1480] The Appeals Chamber further holds that in order to incur planning liability, an accused need not design the conduct alone,[1481] and the accused need not be the originator of the design or plan.[1482] The Appeals Chamber reaffirms that whether the accused's acts "amount to a substantial contribution to the crime for the purposes of planning liability is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis in light of the evidence as a whole."[1483] The Appeals Chamber further holds that the mens rea of planning liability is that the accused intended, knew or was aware of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that plan.[1484]

(xi) Taylor's Criminal Liability

6630. para. 497: The Trial Chamber convicted Taylor for aiding and abetting the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment, and found proved beyond a reasonable doubt, that were committed between 30 November 1996 and 18 January 2002 in the Districts of Bombali, Kailahun, Kenema, Kono, Port Loko and Freetown and the Western Area.[1485] It also convicted Taylor for planning the commission of crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment, and found proved beyond a reasonable doubt, that were committed in the attacks on Kono and Makeni in December 1998 and in the invasion of and retreat from Freetown, between December 1998 and February 1999, in the Districts of Bombali, Kailahun, Kono, Port Loko and Freetown and the Western Area.[1486]

6631. para. 498: The Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's conclusion that certain crimes were defectively pleaded in the Indictment.[1487] It has affirmed the Trial Chamber's factual and legal findings that the crimes properly charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment were committed.[1488] The Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's factual findings regarding Taylor's acts and conduct during the Indictment Period.[1489] It has also affirmed the Trial Chamber's factual findings regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[1490] Finally, the Appeals Chamber has concluded that the Trial Chamber properly articulated and applied the mens rea and actus reus elements of aiding and abetting and planning liability.[1491]

6632. para. 499: The Parties' remaining challenges to Taylor's individual criminal liability for the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment concern the Trial Chamber's application of the law to the facts found, that is, its ultimate conclusions that the actus reus and mens rea elements of individual criminal liability under Article 6(1) were proved beyond a reasonable doubt and its findings on cumulative convictions. In this section of the Judgment, the Appeals Chamber accordingly considers: (i) the Defence's challenges to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor is guilty of aiding and abetting the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment; (ii) the Defence's challenges to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor is guilty of planning the crimes charged for which he was convicted; (iii) the Defence submission that Taylor's convictions for the crimes of rape (Count 4) and sexual slavery (Count 5) are impermissibly cumulative; and (iv) the Prosecution submission that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to convict Taylor of instigating and/or ordering the crimes charged.

a. Aiding and Abetting Liability - Taylor's Criminal Liability

6633. para. 500: The remaining Defence submissions in relation to Taylor's conviction for aiding and abetting the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment challenge the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusions that the actus reus and mens rea elements of aiding and abetting liability were proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The Defence advances two arguments. First, in Grounds 22-32, it submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability was proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Second, in Grounds 17 and 19, it challenges the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor possessed the requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting liability.

i. Actus Reus - Taylor's Criminal Liability – Aiding and Abetting Liability

6634. para. 501: Having set out the applicable law on individual criminal liability,[1492] the evidence and its findings regarding the commission of the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment,[1493] the evidence and its findings regarding the chapeau requirements under Articles 2-4 of the Statute,[1494] the evidence and its findings regarding Taylor's acts and conduct during the Indictment Period,[1495] the evidence and its findings regarding the Leadership and Command Structure of the RUF/AFRC,[1496] its findings regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy[1497] and the evidence and its findings regarding Taylor's knowledge,[1498] the Trial Chamber applied the law of individual criminal liability to the facts found, in the final section of the Trial Judgment, entitled "Legal Findings on Responsibility".[1499]

6635. para. 502: The Trial Chamber found beyond a reasonable doubt that Taylor's acts and conduct[1500] had a substantial effect on all the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment which it found proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability was thus established.[1501] In keeping with its approach throughout the Trial Judgment to separately address the four forms of assistance, encouragement and moral support that the Prosecution alleged Taylor provided to the RUF/AFRC, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes charged in respect of each of four categories: (i) arms and ammunition; (ii) military personnel; (iii) operational support; and (iv) advice and encouragement.[1502]

6636. para. 507: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber properly directed itself as to the actus reus of aiding and abetting liability at the outset of its analysis.[1518] The Trial Chamber reasoned its analysis as to whether the actus reus was proved in terms of four components:[1519] (i) its findings on the commission of the crimes charged and the relationship between the crimes charged and the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy;[1520] (ii) its findings on Taylor's acts and conduct during the Indictment Period;[1521] (iii) whether Taylor's acts and conduct constituted assistance, encouragement and moral support to the RUF/AFRC in the commission of the crimes;[1522] and (iv) whether the effect of Taylor's acts and conduct on the commission of the crimes charged was substantial.[1523]

6637. para. 508: The Appeals Chamber notes that the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy was central to the Trial Chamber's analysis of the facts and application of the law of aiding and abetting to Taylor's acts and conduct and the crimes charged in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber found that the crimes charged were proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[1524] It also found that the RUF/AFRC directed a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment.[1525] It further found that the crimes charged in the Indictment and the widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population were committed in furtherance of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy. That strategy was characterised by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean population and was inextricably linked to the strategy of the military operations themselves. It entailed a campaign of terror against civilians as a primary modus operandi to achieve military and political goals. The Appeals Chamber has affirmed these findings, and recalls that in accordance with the Statute and customary international law, it is proper for a trier of fact to consider whether, by aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of a strategy to commit crimes, an accused's acts and conduct thereby had a substantial effect on some or all of the crimes committed in furtherance of that strategy and charged in the Indictment.[1526]

6638. para. 509: The Trial Chamber's findings regarding the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy provide relevant context to the commission of the crimes charged, establishing that they were committed by the RUF/AFRC during widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population in the implementation of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy. In assessing whether Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of those crimes, the Trial Chamber found that there was a direct relationship between the crimes charged in the Indictment and the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[1527]

6639. para. 510: In determining Taylor's liability for the crimes, the Trial Chamber assessed cumulatively Taylor's acts and conduct, undertaken personally and through his agents, during the Indictment Period.[1528] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trier of fact is called upon to determine whether the accused"s acts and conduct, not each individual act, had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes charged.[1529]

6640. para. 511: Having considered the crimes charged in the Indictment and Taylor's acts and conduct in their factual context, the Trial Chamber assessed whether Taylor's acts and conduct constituted assistance, encouragement and moral support to the commission of the crimes by the RUF/AFRC.[1530] It found that Taylor's acts and conduct assisted, encouraged and morally supported the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and had an effect on the commission of the crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy.[1531]

6642. Enabling the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy – Actus Reus - Taylor's Criminal Liability - Aiding and Abetting Liability para. 513: The Defence submits that where the quantity of materiel Taylor provided in specific shipments was small or could not be determined, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the provision of arms and ammunition was used in and had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1535] The Appeals Chamber considers that this submission does not address the totality of the Trial Chamber's findings, which demonstrate that throughout the Indictment Period, Taylor supplied or facilitated the supply of a substantial quantity of arms and ammunition to the RUF/AFRC.[1536]

6643. para. 514: In addition to considering the effect of Taylor's acts and conduct in quantitative terms, the Trial Chamber also considered the effect of his acts and conduct in qualitative terms, in light of the specific factual circumstances and the consequences established by the evidence.[1537] It found that Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay would regularly turn to Taylor when the RUF/AFRC had exhausted its supply of arms and ammunition.[1538] The Trial Chamber highlighted in this regard the Magburaka Shipment as one example, which came at a time when the Junta government had depleted its existing sources of supply and was faced with an international arms embargo, and after Bockarie and Koroma had requested material support from Taylor.[1539] Similarly, it found that shipments provided by Taylor were indispensable for the RUF/AFRC military offensives and attacks against the civilian population in the implementation of its Operational Strategy.[1540] It pointed to the Burkina Faso Shipment as a clear example, since it was unprecedented in volume and was critical in the RUF/AFRC's attack on Freetown.[1541] Taylor thus often satisfied a need or request for materiel at a particular time, and the RUF/AFRC heavily and frequently relied on materiel provided by Taylor to implement its Operational Strategy, carry out its widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population and maintain territories.[1542] Conversely, the Trial Chamber found that the sources of supply besides Taylor were insignificant and could not sustain the RUF/AFRC's operations.[1543]

6644. para. 515: The Defence further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that materiel provided by Taylor formed part of an "amalgamate of fungible resources" or part of the overall supply of materiel in 1999-2001 used by the RUF/AFRC in the commission of crimes, arguing that the Trial Chamber could not rely on such findings to conclude that Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1544]

6645. para. 516: The Appeals Chamber opines that these findings demonstrate that the Trial Chamber fully evaluated the whole of the evidence in determining whether Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes. In concluding that materiel provided by Taylor formed part of an amalgamate of fungible resources in the specific context of the RUF/AFRC's attempts to recapture Freetown and commission of crimes in late January/February 1999,[1545] the Trial Chamber was addressing the Defence submission at trial that the capture of the ECOMOG materiel intervened in the causal link between the Burkina Faso Shipment provided by Taylor and the commission of the crimes after the retreat from Freetown.[1546] The Trial Chamber found that the Burkina Faso Shipment, supplied by Taylor, was "causally critical" to the capture of the ECOMOG materiel.[1547] It found that there was thus a causal link between Taylor's acts and conduct and the crimes, whether the specific materiel used in each specific crime was from the Burkina Faso Shipment or the captured ECOMOG materiel.[1548] Similarly, in finding that materiel provided by Taylor formed part of the overall supply of materiel in 1999-2001 used by the RUF/AFRC in the commission of crimes,[1549] the Trial Chamber properly recognised that the RUF/AFRC had additional sources of materiel, some attributable to Taylor and others not, at that time. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber that as a matter of law, an accused need not be the only source of assistance in order for his acts and conduct to have a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes,[1550] and notes that the Trial Chamber took into consideration other sources of assistance in assessing whether Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1551]

6646. para. 517: Whether an accused's acts and conduct have a substantial effect on the crimes is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis in light of the evidence as a whole.[1552] The Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's qualitative and quantitative assessment in light of the whole of its findings, the specific factual circumstances and the consequences established by the evidence. In the Appeals Chamber's view, the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate that Taylor provided materiel to the RUF/AFRC regularly throughout the Indictment Period, in comparison with the irregular and sporadic supplies from other sources, and that his provision of arms and ammunition to the RUF/AFRC was dynamic, responsive and timely, often satisfying a need or request for materiel at a particular time. Those findings further demonstrate that Taylor provided substantial quantities of materiel to the RUF/AFRC over the course of the Indictment Period, compared to minor and insufficient quantities from other sources. They illustrate that the RUF/AFRC, faced with an arms embargo, had a finite supply of materiel to support its operations, and that of that supply, the arms and ammunition provided by Taylor were critical in enabling the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy, in the implementation of which the crimes charged were committed.

ii. Enhancing the Capacity of the RUF/AFRC - Actus Reus - Taylor's Criminal Liability - Aiding and Abetting Liability

6647. para. 518: The Defence submits that the Trial Chamber erred in reasoning that the operational support and military personnel Taylor provided to the RUF/AFRC supported, enhanced and/or sustained the RUF/AFRC's capacity to undertake its Operational Strategy, submitting that the provision of this support cannot reasonably be found to have had a substantial effect on crimes.[1553] The Defence submissions rely on its contention that the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in not requiring that Taylor's acts of assistance, encouragement and moral support were to the physical actor and were used in the commission of the specific crime. As the Appeals Chamber has rejected that submission,[1554] the Defence argument here also fails.

6648. para. 519: The Appeals Chamber notes in this regard that while arms and ammunition may in some circumstances be the means to commit crimes, in other circumstances such materiel may have an effect on the commission of crimes in a different manner. The Trial Chamber recognised that Taylor provided the RUF/AFRC with arms and ammunition in 1999 for the purpose of "keeping security", defending itself from the Kamajors and Sierra Leonean Government forces.[1555] It explicitly recalled that the RUF/AFRC during this period continued to commit crimes in territories under its control, namely the use of child soldiers, sexual slavery and enslavement.[1556] In this factual context, assisting the RUF/AFRC to defend its position could reasonably be found to have supported and sustained the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and thus have had an effect on the commission of crimes in the implementation of that Operational Strategy.

6649. para. 520: The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate that the operational support Taylor provided was extensive, sustained and impacted key RUF/AFRC operations critical to its functioning and its capacity to implement its Operational Strategy. The communications and logistics support Taylor provided was sustained and significant.[1557] It enhanced the capability of the RUF/AFRC leadership to plan, facilitate or order RUF/AFRC military operations during which crimes were committed,[1558] enabled the RUF/AFRC to coordinate regarding arms shipments and diamond transactions critical to its logistics[1559] and assisted the RUF/AFRC to evade attacks by ECOMOG forces.[1560] Similarly, the RUF Guesthouse enhanced the RUF/AFRC's capacity to obtain arms and ammunition from Taylor in exchange for diamonds,[1561] which was critical in enabling the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[1562] The RUF/AFRC's diamond mining activities involved the systematic commission of crimes.[1563] The logistical support Taylor provided – the provision of security escorts, the facilitation of access through checkpoints, and the much needed assistance with transport of arms and ammunition by road and by air – supported and sustained the provision of arms and ammunition by Taylor to the RUF/AFRC, and "played a vital role in the operations of the RUF/AFRC during a period when an international arms embargo was in force."[1564] With respect to the military personnel provided by Taylor, the 170 soldiers participated in RUF/AFRC military offensives during which crimes charged were committed,[1565] boosted the morale of other RUF/AFRC troops[1566] and provided the RUF/AFRC with high-level military expertise.[1567]

6650. para. 521: The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the effect that the sustained operational support and military personnel Taylor provided to the RUF/AFRC had on the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and the commission of the crimes charged, in light of the whole of its findings, the specific factual circumstances and the consequences established by the evidence. The Defence submissions regarding other forms of operational support,[1568] which were relatively minor,[1569] are summarily dismissed for failure to identify an error that would occasion a miscarriage of justice.[1570]

iii. Encouragement and Moral Support - Actus Reus - Taylor's Criminal Liability - Aiding and Abetting Liability

6651. para. 522: The Defence challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment that Taylor encouraged and morally supported the commission of the crimes, arguing that Taylor's acts and conduct did not alter the behaviour of the RUF/AFRC and that the RUF/AFRC would still have launched attacks and committed crimes without Taylor's advice.[1571] This submission fails to demonstrate an error, as it is well-settled that a "substantial effect" is not a "but for" cause or a "condition precedent."[1572] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that "substantial effect" in any respect is properly assessed by resort to hypotheticals as to what would or would not have happened in an alternate world, which cannot be demonstrated by evidence.

6652. para. 523: In assessing whether Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, the Trial Chamber considered its findings that during the Indictment Period, Taylor provided ongoing advice and encouragement to the RUF/AFRC, and that there was ongoing communication and consultation between Taylor and the RUF/AFRC leadership.[1573] It found that Taylor in fact provided advice, and that the RUF/AFRC leadership heeded his advice on a number of instances.[1574] Following the Intervention, Taylor repeatedly advised them to attack, capture and maintain control over Kono District, a diamondiferous area.[1575] They acted in accordance with this advice by repeatedly attacking Kono in 1998, during which they directed widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population and committed crimes charged in the Indictment.[1576] On certain occasions Taylor demonstrably altered the RUF/AFRC's behaviour, including delaying disarmament.[1577] At times the RUF/AFRC leadership followed instructions from Taylor that directly served Taylor's, rather than their, interests.[1578]

6653. para. 524: The Trial Chamber's findings and reasoning also demonstrate the specific factual circumstances and the consequences established by the evidence relevant to the effect of Taylor's acts and conduct of encouragement and moral support in qualitative terms. Taylor held a position of authority as an elder statesman and as President of Liberia, and was accorded deference by the RUF/AFRC.[1579] The RUF/AFRC referred to him as "Pa", "father", "Papay", "godfather", "Chief", or "commander in chief" (CIC), which clearly indicated the respect the RUF/AFRC had for Taylor.[1580] Taylor advised the RUF/AFRC where and how to best implement its Operational Strategy to achieve its goals, including the capture of Kono so that it could obtain more materiel to launch more offensives[1581] and making the attack on Freetown "fearful" so that the RUF/AFRC could force the government into negotiations and achieve its goal of freeing Foday Sankoh.[1582] During the Junta Period, Taylor encouraged the RUF and AFRC to work together,[1583] and immediately after the Intervention, Taylor met Sam Bockarie in Monrovia and said that he would help and provide support.[1584] During the disarmament process following the Lomé Peace Accord, Taylor privately advised Issa Sesay not to disarm and to resist disarmament in Sierra Leone.[1585] In July 2000, Taylor urged Issa Sesay to agree to disarm but not to do it in reality, saying one thing to Sesay in front of the ECOWAS Heads of State and another to him in private.[1586]

6654. para. 525: The Appeals Chamber does not accept the Defence submission that in order to find that Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, the Trial Chamber was required to find that Taylor's acts and conduct altered the behaviour of the RUF/AFRC and exclude the possibility that the RUF/AFRC would still have launched attacks and committed crimes without Taylor's advice. The Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's qualitative and quantitative assessment in light of the whole of its findings, the specific factual circumstances and the consequences established by the evidence.

6655. para. 526: In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor's acts and conduct of assistance, encouragement and moral support had a substantial effect on each and all of the crimes for which he was convicted.

iv. Mens Rea - Taylor's Criminal Liability - Aiding and Abetting Liability

6656. para. 527: The Trial Chamber found that Taylor knew his support to the RUF/AFRC would provide practical assistance, encouragement or moral support to them in the commission of crimes and that he nevertheless provided such support.[1587] It also found that Taylor was aware of the "essential elements" of the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC, including the state of mind of the perpetrators.[1588] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber found beyond a reasonable doubt that Taylor had the requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting liability in respect of the crimes charged in Counts 1- 11 of the Indictment.[1589] In reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the findings described in more detail in the Section of this Judgment entitled "Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State".[1590]

6657. para. 533: The Appeals Chamber recalls that under Article 6(1) of the Statute and customary international law, the mens rea required for aiding and abetting liability is that an accused directly intended, knew or was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts and conduct would assist the commission of the crime. The accused must also be aware of the essential elements of the crime, including the state of mind of the principal offender.[1609]

6658. para. 534: The Appeals Chamber does not accept the Defence contention that the Trial Chamber made different findings as to Taylor's knowledge in August 1997 and after April 1998.[1610] The Trial Chamber separately discussed Taylor's knowledge in August 1997 and his knowledge after April 1998 because Taylor, in his testimony, distinguished his knowledge at these particular points in time. Taylor admitted that he knew of the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC by April 1998,[1611] but denied that he knew of those crimes earlier, in August 1997.[1612] The Trial Chamber's findings are thus appropriately addressed to Taylor's knowledge as of August 1997.[1613] Further, the Trial Chamber explicitly found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and intent to commit crimes "from the clear and consistent information he received after his election."[1614] Finally, the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusion, with explicit reference to the above findings,[1615] was that at all relevant times Taylor "knew that his support to the RUF/AFRC would provide practical assistance, encouragement or moral support to them in the commission of crimes."[1616]

6659. para. 535: As the Trial Chamber found that the RUF/AFRC had an Operational Strategy to systematically commit crimes against the civilian population of Sierra Leone throughout the Indictment Period and that Taylor knew of that Operational Strategy at all relevant times, the Defence contention that before April 1998, Taylor was only aware of a "possibility that assistance might be used in possible crimes" is unsustainable.[1617] In the Appeals Chamber's view, this equally applies to the period following April 1998.

6660. para. 536: On appeal, it is not sufficient for a party to put forward an "alternative" interpretation of the evidence and invite the Appeals Chamber to consider de novo whether such an alternative interpretation is a reasonable one.[1618] The Defence submission that Taylor supported the RUF/AFRC in order to prevent the commission of future crimes by ensuring that the RUF/AFRC was not defeated on the battlefield[1619] is an assertion unsupported by any evidence and is dismissed. Moreover, the findings made and supported by the Trial Chamber regarding exchanges between Taylor and Sam Bockarie, including Taylor's instruction that the attack on Freetown be made "fearful" for the purpose of pressuring the Sierra Leonean government into negotiations for the release of Foday Sankoh,[1620] exclude the "alternative" interpretation put forward by the Defence.[1621]

6661. para. 537: Situations may change and develop over time, and the trier of fact must always determine the accused's mens rea at the relevant time.[1622] The Trial Chamber found, however, that the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy did not change in fact.[1623] It further found that Taylor had knowledge of this Operational Strategy at all relevant times.[1624] Taylor continued to directly and intimately participate in ECOWAS peace efforts to address the situation in Sierra Leone.[1625] The Trial Chamber specifically considered the Defence's contention at trial that Taylor's involvement with the RUF/AFRC was solely for the purposes of peace,[1626] but found that Taylor "was engaged in arms transactions at the same time that he was involved in the peace negotiations in Lomé, publicly promoting peace at the Lomé negotiations, while privately providing arms and ammunition to the RUF."[1627] In addition, it found that after the signing of the Lomé Peace Accord, when the RUF/AFRC leadership was inclined to disarmament and the peace process Taylor encouraged the RUF/AFRC leadership not to disarm and continued to supply them with weapons.[1628]

6662. para. 538: The Trial Chamber had before it significant evidence establishing public knowledge of the crimes committed by the RUF/AFRC, and Taylor's knowledge of those crimes in particular. The Trial Chamber carefully assessed Taylor's testimony as to his knowledge, including his admission that by April 1998 anyone providing support to the RUF/AFRC "would be supporting a group engaged in a campaign of atrocities against the civilian population."[1629] The Trial Chamber recognised that Taylor's admission related to a particular time,[1630] and it specifically considered Taylor's denial that he knew that the RUF/AFRC was committing crimes in Sierra Leone before that time.[1631] It found that, based on the information available to Taylor from his daily security briefings, his direct participation in the ECOWAS Committee of Five, his prior knowledge of the RUF's criminal activities and the international community's reaction to the situation in Sierra Leone, the only reasonable inference was that as early as August 1997 Taylor had the same knowledge of the Operational Strategy as he admitted to having in April 1998.[1632]

6663. para. 539: The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber properly evaluated the evidence of Taylor's knowledge, including his testimony, his public role as President of Liberia and member of the ECOWAS Committee of Five, his relationship with the RUF/AFRC, the reports of ECOWAS and the UN and public reports by the media and non-governmental organisations. The Appeals Chamber further finds that the Trial Chamber carefully assessed this evidence in respect of Taylor's knowledge at the relevant times[1633] and the evolution of Taylor's relationship and involvement with the RUF/AFRC, and carefully considered the Parties' submissions at trial.

6664. para. 540: The Appeals Chamber accordingly affirms the Trial Chamber's finding that while Taylor was physically remote from the crimes, the only reasonable conclusion based on the totality of the evidence was that he knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy. The Appeals Chamber further affirms the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor knew that his support to the RUF/AFRC would assist the commission of crimes in the implementation of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy. The Trial Chamber also reasonably found that, in addition to knowing of the RUF/AFRC's intent to commit crimes, Taylor was aware of the specific range of crimes being committed during the implementation of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and was aware of the essential elements of the crimes. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor possessed the requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting liability.[1634]

b. Planning Liability – Taylor's Criminal Liability

6665. para. 542: The Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's factual findings regarding Taylor's participation in designing the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1635] The Appeals Chamber has also concluded that the Trial Chamber properly articulated and applied the actus reus and mens rea elements of planning liability.[1636]

6666. para. 543: The Defence's remaining challenges to Taylor's conviction for planning crimes address the Trial Chamber's application of the law to the facts found and its ultimate conclusions that the actus reus and mens rea elements of planning liability were proved beyond a reasonable doubt. First, in Grounds 10, 11, 12 and 13, it challenges the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the actus reus of planning liability was proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Second, in Grounds 14 and 15, it challenges the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor possessed the requisite mens rea for planning the crimes under the 11 Counts for which he was convicted. Third, in Ground 11, the Defence challenges Taylor's convictions for crimes committed in Kono and Makeni during the Freetown Invasion.[1637]

i. Actus reus – Planning Liability – Taylor's Criminal Liability

6667. para. 544: The Trial Chamber found beyond a reasonable doubt that Taylor intentionally designed the Bockarie/Taylor Plan for an attack on Freetown and thereby had a substantial effect on the crimes committed during and after the Freetown Invasion between December 1998 and February 1999.[1638] In reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the findings described in more detail earlier in this Judgment.[1639]

6668. para. 545: The Trial Chamber concluded that Taylor and Bockarie intentionally designed a plan for an RUF/AFRC attack on Freetown, the Bockarie/Taylor Plan. This Plan had the "objective of reaching Freetown, releasing Foday Sankoh from prison and regaining power."[1640] It was to be implemented in a "fearful" manner in order to pressure the government of Sierra Leone into negotiations for the release of Sankoh, and "all means" were to be used to get to Freetown.[1641] SAJ Musa had a separate plan to attack Freetown.[1642] His goal was to reinstate the army,[1643] and the Trial Chamber noted that according to Prosecution witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay, as accepted by the Defence, SAJ Musa "ordered his forces to proceed to Freetown without killing, looting or burning, indicating that he did not have a campaign of terror in mind."[1644]

6669. para. 546: The forces under SAJ Musa's command started their attack on Freetown independently of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1645] However, following SAJ Musa's death on 23 December 1998,[1646] Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) took over leadership of the troops, at Benguema outside of Freetown.[1647] Gullit was willing to work together with Sam Bockarie[1648] and he resumed contact with Bockarie.[1649] The troops commanded by Gullit in Freetown were subordinated to and used by Bockarie in furtherance of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1650] Further execution of the Plan was carried out with close coordination between Bockarie and Gullit,[1651] with Gullit in frequent communication with Bockarie[1652] and taking orders from Bockarie.[1653] Bockarie was in frequent and daily contact via radio or satellite phone with Taylor in December 1998 and January 1999 during the Freetown Invasion, either directly or through Benjamin Yeaten.[1654] The Trial Chamber concluded that in these circumstances, the Bockarie/Taylor Plan had a substantial effect on the crimes committed during and after the Freetown Invasion.[1655]

6670. para. 550: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of planning liability is that the accused participated in designing an act or omission and thereby had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime.[1672] In order to incur planning liability, the accused need not design the conduct alone, and the accused need not be the originator of the design or plan.[1673] Whether the accused's acts "amount to a substantial contribution to the crime for the purposes of planning liability is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis in light of the evidence as a whole."[1674]

6672. para. 552: The Trial Chamber convicted Taylor for the crimes under all eleven Counts of the Indictment in the invasion of and retreat from Freetown, between December 1998 and February 1999.[1676] The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Defence that the critical issue to Taylor's conviction for planning the crimes committed in Freetown and the Western Area is whether Sam Bockarie was in fact in control of a concerted and coordinated effort, with Gullit as his subordinate, to implement the Bockarie/Taylor Plan in Freetown.[1677] This issue concerns the relationship between the Bockarie/Taylor Plan and the commission of the crimes and whether this Plan had a substantial effect on the crimes. Accordingly, whether and when Gullit was incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor Plan and used by Bockarie to implement the Plan is of critical importance.[1678] However, the Defence misconstrues the Trial Chamber's factual use of the term "effective control", that is, actual control, for the element of superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute, where that term is used as a term of art. The Defence has merely attempted to build a legal argument out of what is a question of fact.[1679]

6673. para. 553: The Defence challenges to the Trial Chamber's finding that Gullit was incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor Plan and that Sam Bockarie assumed control over Gullit following the resumption of contact on or around 23 December 1998 rely on its assertion that Gullit did not comply with orders from Bockarie at that time.[1680] In finding that Gullit was incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor Plan and that Bockarie exercised control over Gullit, the Trial Chamber, in addition to relying on orders issued and complied with, also relied on the close coordination and frequent communications between Bockarie and Gullit.[1681]

6674. para. 554: Many witnesses testified regarding the resumption of contact between Sam Bockarie and Gullit following SAJ Musa's death, and their close coordination of the Freetown Invasion.[1682] The Trial Chamber considered the evidence of Perry Kamara and Alimamy Bobson

Sesay to be of particular value as to what occurred during the operation since they were the only two witnesses that participated in the attack on Freetown itself.[1683] Witnesses stationed with Bockarie and commanders in other areas of Sierra Leone also testified regarding the resumption of communications between Bockarie and Gullit after the death of SAJ Musa.[1684] The witnesses agreed that communications were regular throughout the Freetown Invasion and concerned the progress of the operation.[1685] The evidence also indicated that aside from Bockarie, Gullit was in communication with Bockarie's commanders, including Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), Superman and Issa Sesay.[1686]

6675. para. 555: The Trial Chamber considered the Defence submission that Gullit had initially defied Sam Bockarie's instructions to wait for reinforcements and only called Bockarie from Freetown because his troops were in trouble.[1687] However, it noted that:

> The evidence of Bobson Sesay and Kamara converge on the two most important aspects: first, both witnesses stated that it was Gullit who initiated the contact with Bockarie— Bobson Sesay testified that this was to seek reinforcements, while Kamara testified that it was to seek advice; second, neither suggested, as the Defence sought to argue, that by moving forward to Freetown without Bockarie's reinforcements, Gullit was rejecting either Bockarie's authority or his offer of assistance. On their evidence, Gullit was receptive to the idea of reinforcements, but military exigencies dictated a more immediate advance into Freetown.[1688]
> The evidence of Dauda Aruna Fornie and Isaac Mongor's evidence on examination-in-chief also support the idea that Gullit did not wait for Bockarie's reinforcements due to those reinforcements being unduly delayed, rather than as a refusal of Bockarie's support. Dauda Aruna Fornie also confirmed that Gullit requested reinforcements from Bockarie before the commencement of the 6 January attack.[1689]

Based on this evidence the Trial Chamber found that "by advancing to Freetown from Waterloo and Benguema without Bockarie's reinforcements, Gullit was not rejecting either Bockarie's authority or his offer of assistance."[1690]

6676. para. 556: The Trial Chamber also considered the Defence contention that coordination between Sam Bockarie and Gullit broke down after Gullit initiated the attack on Freetown.[1691] However, it found that the evidence indicated otherwise, as the radio room in Buedu and the troops in Freetown communicated frequently during the assault on Freetown concerning strategic matters,[1692] and Bockarie assisted the commanders in Freetown by transmitting "448 messages," which had originally been sent by Taylor's subordinates in Monrovia, to the fighters in the capital.[1693] Moreover, it considered the Defence contention that Gullit and Bockarie were merely coordinating their efforts to fight a common enemy, but found that this premise failed to capture the level of coordination that took place between Bockarie and Gullit and the level of control that Bockarie exercised over Gullit.[1694] The Trial Chamber further considered Gullit's compliance with Bockarie's orders.

6677. para. 557: The Appeals Chamber accepts the Trial Chamber's findings that Gullit complied with specific orders from Sam Bockarie in the implementation of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, including Bockarie's repeated orders to use terror tactics against the civilian population of Freetown.[1695] The Appeals Chamber accepts that there was extensive evidence on the record regarding the communications and coordination between Bockarie and Gullit that commenced following SAJ Musa's death, and agrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Gullit was incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor Plan following his initial contact with Sam Bockarie after SAJ Musa's death. The Appeals Chamber further accepts that that there was extensive evidence on the record regarding the orders given by Bockarie to Gullit and Gullit's compliance with these orders, and affirms the Trial Chamber's finding that Bockarie exercised control over Gullit. Notably, Gullit implemented Bockarie's repeated orders, in accordance with Taylor's instructions, to make Freetown "fearful" and use terror tactics against the civilian population of Freetown.[1696]

6678. para. 558: While the Defence further contends that the Trial Chamber could not conclude that Gullit "abandoned" SAJ Musa's plan for the Bockarie/Taylor Plan,[1697] the Trial Chamber distinguished these two plans and reasonably found that SAJ Musa's plan ended with his death.[1698] It noted that it was uncontested by the Defence that SAJ Musa's plan was to take control of Freetown and to do so without using terror or committing crimes against the civilian population.[1699] The Bockarie/Taylor Plan was to be implemented in a "fearful" manner through the commission of crimes and the use of terror tactics in order to achieve its objectives.[1700] Moreover, the Trial Chamber found that SAJ Musa had the objective of reaching Freetown in order to reinstate the army,[1701] while the objective of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan was "to improve the RUF's negotiating position in relation to any future peace talks and the release of Foday Sankoh."[1702] Accordingly, in the Appeals Chamber's view, the Trial Chamber reasonably found that the Bockarie/Taylor Plan was implemented in Freetown.[1703] Furthermore, while the Defence contends that Taylor was held criminally liable on the basis of an evolved plan,[1704] at no point did the Trial Chamber refer to a different, expanded or evolved plan being implemented in Freetown, and it held Taylor criminally liable for the implementation of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan according to its original design.[1705]

6679. para. 559: As to the Defence contention that Taylor was held liable on the basis of updates that he received regarding the Plan's implementation, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber considered those updates as evidence that Sam Bockarie was using Gullit to implement the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, and not as the basis for Taylor's planning conviction. As previously noted, the critical issue to Taylor's conviction for planning the crimes in Freetown is whether Bockarie exercised control over Gullit,[1706] not the updates Taylor received.

6680. para. 560: Finally, the Appeals Chamber has rejected the Defence contention that a finding of substantial effect is precluded by the fact that RUF/AFRC troops would have committed crimes in any event.[1707] The Trial Chamber relied on substantial evidence that Gullit ordered massive atrocities and acts of terror in Freetown in accordance with Sam Bockarie's explicit and repeated orders to do so, which was in accordance with Taylor's instruction to Bockarie to make Freetown "fearful".[1708]

6681. para. 561: In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Taylor participated in designing an act or omission and thereby had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, thus establishing the actus reus of planning liability.

ii. Mens Rea – Planning Liability – Taylor's Criminal Liability

6682. para. 562: The Trial Chamber concluded that, in designing the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, Taylor intended that the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment "be committed" or was aware of the substantial likelihood that RUF/AFRC forces would commit such crimes in executing the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1709] The Trial Chamber found that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and intent to commit crimes.[1710] It further found that by his instruction to make the attack "fearful," which was repeated many times by Sam Bockarie during the course of the Freetown Invasion, and by his instruction to use "all means," Taylor demonstrated his awareness of the substantial likelihood that crimes would be committed during the execution of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.[1711] In reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the findings described in more detail in the Section of this Judgment entitled "Taylor's Acts, Conduct and Mental State."[1712]

6683. para. 564: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the mens rea of planning liability is that the accused directly intended, knew or was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts of planning would have an effect on the commission of the crimes.[1715] An accused may be properly found to have intended certain crimes and been aware of the substantial likelihood that others would be committed.[1716]

6684. para. 565: The Defence submissions do not address the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber or its extensive reasoning regarding Taylor's knowledge.[1717] The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber was reasonable in finding that Taylor knew of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy and intent to commit crimes,[1718] and that the RUF/AFRC was committing all crimes charged in the Indictment.[1719] The Appeals Chamber further concludes that the Trial Chamber was reasonable in finding that by his "make fearful" and "use all means" instructions, Taylor demonstrated his intention that the crimes charged in Counts 1-11 and part of the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy would be committed during the execution of the Plan.[1720]

6685. para. 566: In light of the foregoing the Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's finding that Taylor possessed the requisite mens rea for planning liability.

iii. Taylor's Liability for Planning the Crimes Committed in Kono and Makeni – Planning Liability – Taylor's Criminal Liablity

6686. para. 567: The Trial Chamber convicted Taylor for planning crimes committed under all counts of the Indictment in Kono District and under Count 9 of the Indictment in Bombali District, where Makeni is located.[1721]

6687. para. 569: The Trial Chamber found that in accordance with the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, the RUF/AFRC forces in December 1998 launched military offensives on Kono and Makeni in order to reach Freetown.[1727] The assault on Koidu Town, in Kono District, was launched on 17 December 1998, and the troops moved towards the west after the successful capture of the city.[1728] On 24 December 1998, the RUF/AFRC began its assault on Makeni.[1729]

6688. para. 570: The Defence contended at trial that during the Freetown Invasion no crimes were committed in the attacks on Kono District and Makeni (Bombali District).[1730] The Trial Chamber addressed this contention in its Judgment and found that "[d]uring the course of the implementation of [the Bockarie/Taylor Plan], these forces committed crimes charged in the Indictment."[1731] It specifically recalled its findings that the crimes of enslavement (Count 10) and conscription and use of child soldiers (Count 9) were committed in these locations,[1732] and entered convictions under all Counts in the Indictment for Kono District and Count 9 for Bombali District.[1733]

6689. para. 571: The fair trial requirements of the Statute include the right of the accused to a reasoned opinion by the Trial Chamber under Article 18 of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules.[1734] The reasoned opinion requirement relates to a Trial Chamber's Judgment rather than to each and every submission made at trial.[1735] As a general rule, a Trial Chamber is required to make findings only on those facts which are essential to the determination of guilt in relation to a particular Count.[1736] Having reviewed the trial record, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber only specified crimes committed under Counts 9 and 10 of the Indictment,[1737] and failed to specify or discuss the crimes charged in the Indictment under Counts 1-8 and 11 that it concluded were committed in Kono District during the implementation of the Bockarie/Taylor Plan.

6690. para. 572: The Trial Chamber provided no reasons for entering planning convictions in the Disposition for crimes committed under Counts 1-8 and 11 in Kono District between December 1998 and February 1999, and the Appeals Chamber finds that to that extent, the Disposition for the planning conviction should be modified to exclude Kono District under those Counts.[1738]

6691. para. 573: However, the Trial Chamber did reference its specific findings and provided a reasoned opinion for Taylor's planning convictions under Count 9 for crimes in Makeni and Counts 9 and 10 for crimes in Kono District. The Defence contends that the crimes found to have been committed at these locations were not connected to the Bockarie/Taylor Plan, but the Appeals Chamber rejects the Defence submissions and affirms the Trial Chamber's findings.[1739]

6692. para. 574: In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber grants Defence Ground 11 in part and to that extent, the Disposition for the planning conviction should be modified to exclude Kono District under the relevant Counts. The remaining parts of Defence Ground 11 and the entirety of Defence Grounds 10 and 12-15 are dismissed. The Appeals Chamber will consider any implications of its findings on the sentence.

c. Cumulative Convictions – Taylor's Criminal Liability

6693. para. 575: The Trial Chamber found that it was legally permissible to enter cumulative convictions for the crimes of rape (Count 4) and sexual slavery (Count 5).[1740] It concluded that although both crimes are forms of sexual violence, each crime contains a distinct element not required by the other: first, rape requires non-consensual sexual penetration, while sexual slavery can be committed through a range of sexual acts; and second, sexual slavery requires proof that the perpetrator exercised control or ownership over the victim, while rape does not.[1741]

6694. para. 577: In Sesay et al., the Appeals Chamber held that cumulative convictions are permissible if the statutory provisions concerned contain materially distinct elements; an element of a crime is materially distinct if it requires proof of a fact not required by the other.[1746] The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber that, for the reasons it stated, the offences of rape and sexual slavery each require proof of an element not required by the other.[1747]

d. Alleged Liability for Ordering and Instigating Crimes – Taylor's Criminal Liability

6695. para. 582: With respect to instigation as a form of criminal participation, the Trial Chamber concluded:

> The Trial Chamber, having already found that the Accused is criminally responsible for aiding and abetting the commission of the crimes in Counts 1-11 of the Indictment, does not find that the Accused also instigated those crimes.[1751]

6696. para. 583: With respect to ordering as a form of criminal participation, the Trial Chamber concluded:

> The Trial Chamber has found that while the Accused held a position of authority amongst the RUF and RUF/AFRC, the instructions and guidance which he gave to the RUF and RUF/AFRC were generally of an advisory nature and at times were in fact not followed by the RUF/AFRC leadership. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused cannot be held responsible for ordering the commission of crimes.[1752]

6697. para. 589: The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of ordering liability is that an accused ordered an act or omission that has a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, while the actus reus of instigating liability is that an accused prompted another person to act in a particular way that has a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes.[1775] For both ordering and instigating liability, the mens rea is established if an accused acted with direct intent, knowledge or awareness of a substantial likelihood that his acts and conduct would have an effect on the commission of the crime.[1776] The Trial Chamber properly articulated the elements of these forms of liability.[1777]

6698. para. 590: The Appeals Chamber notes that even if Prosecution Grounds 1 and 2 were accepted, this would have no impact on the existing convictions and Taylor would not be convicted of more crimes than he already has been. Furthermore, the Prosecution submissions rely entirely on the Trial Chamber's findings regarding Taylor's conduct, which the Trial Chamber adjudged culpable. The Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's findings regarding Taylor's culpable conduct and the convictions entered for that conduct.[1778] The Prosecution does not point to any additional conduct that the Trial Chamber did not find culpable and take into account in its Disposition and Sentence. In this regard, the Trial Chamber extensively considered Taylor's authority and leadership role with respect to both his culpable conduct for aiding and abetting and planning[1779] and the appropriate sentence.[1780] The issue presented solely concerns the descriptive characterisation, not gravity, of Taylor's criminal liability for the crimes for which he stands convicted. In Brima et al., the Appeals Chamber held regarding a Prosecution appeal that "no useful purpose will be served by the Appeals Chamber now entering convictions … having regard to the adequate global sentence imposed on each [accused]."[1781]

6699. para. 591: Upholding an accused's fair trial rights, the trier of fact must determine whether the Prosecution has proved an accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt for the crimes charged in the Indictment. If the trier of fact concludes that an accused's guilt has been proved, it must determine an appropriate sentence in light of the totality of the convicted person's culpable conduct.[1782] In the Appeals Chamber's view, these are the trier of fact's essential obligations, which in turn inform the Appeals Chamber in its review of the Trial Chamber's Judgment and Sentence.[1783] The Appeals Chamber further holds that in determining matters of guilt and punishment, the trier of fact and the Appeals Chamber itself must be guided by the interest of justice[1784] and the rights of the accused,[1785] and avoid formulaic analysis[1786] that is not faithful to the whole of the circumstances and the facts of individual cases.[1787]

6700. para. 592: Even if, as the Prosecution submits, the Trial Chamber's findings satisfy the elements of ordering and instigating liability, this is because the elements of these forms of participation overlap with the elements of aiding and abetting and planning liability on the particular facts of this case. All four forms of criminal participation require the same culpable link between the accused's acts and the crime – substantial effect – and Taylor's acts and conduct had a substantial effect on the crimes, including his communicative acts, which ordering and instigating liability involve.[1788] Similarly, the Trial Chamber's finding that Taylor acted with knowledge of the criminal consequences of his acts and conduct[1789] is culpable mens rea for all four forms of liability.[1790]

6701. para. 593: However, in the Appeals Chamber's view ordering and instigating are inadequate characterisations of Taylor's culpable acts and conduct, as those forms of participation in fact fail to fully describe the Trial Chamber's findings. In addition to Taylor's communications with the RUF/AFRC leadership, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor provided arms and ammunition, operational support and military personnel to the RUF/AFRC that were critical in enabling the RUF/AFRC's Operational Strategy.[1791] Similarly, the Trial Chamber found that Taylor and Sam Bockarie planned an attack on Freetown and thereby had a substantial effect on the crimes committed during and after the Freetown Invasion. Both of them identified the targets, goals and modus operandi of the campaign.[1792] Finally, the Prosecution submissions regarding the actus reus of ordering and instigating liability exclude many of the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the sustained encouragement and moral support Taylor provided the RUF/AFRC leadership, including his encouragement to the RUF and AFRC to work together[1793] and his advice to Issa Sesay not to disarm.[1794]

6702. para. 594: The Appeals Chamber accordingly finds that aiding and abetting liability fully captures Taylor's numerous "interventions"[1795] over a sustained period of five years,[1796] the variety of assistance he provided to the RUF/AFRC leadership in the implementation of its Operational Strategy[1797] and the cumulative impact of his culpable acts and conduct[1798] on the "tremendous suffering caused by the commission of the crimes" for which he is guilty.[1799] Planning liability likewise fully captures Taylor's additional culpable acts and conduct for the crimes committed during the Freetown Invasion.[1800] These descriptions of Taylor's culpable acts and conduct fully reflect the Trial Chamber's findings on Taylor's authority and leadership role.[1801]

6703. para. 595: In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate an error occasioning a miscarriage of justice, and dismisses Prosecution Grounds 1 and 2 in their entirety.

6714. At all times relevant to this Indictment, AUGUSTINE GBAO was a senior officer and commander in the RUF and AFRCIRUF forces.[372]

6715. AUGUSTINE GBAO joined the RUF in 1991 in Liberia. Prior to the coup, AUGUSTINE GBAO was Commander of the RUF Internal Defence Unit, in which position he was in command of all RUF Security units.[373]

6716. Between about November 1996 until about mid 1998, AUGUSTINE GBAO was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District. In this position, between about November 1996 and about April 1997, AUGUSTINE GBAO was subordinate only to the RUF Battle Group Commander, the RUF Battle Field Commander and the leader of the RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH. In this position, between about April 1997 and about mid 1998, AUGUSTINE GBAO was subordinate only to the RUF Battle Field Commander, the leader of the RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH, and the leader of the AFRC, JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA.[374]

6717. Between about mid 1998 and about January 2002, AUGUSTINE GBAO was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces, in which position he was in command of all Intelligence and Security units within the AFRC/RUF forces. In this position, AUGUSTINE GBAO was subordinate only to the leader of the RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH, and the leader of the AFRC, JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA.[375]

6718. Between about March 1999 until about January 2002, AUGUSTINE GBAO was also the joint Commander of AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni area, Bombali District. As commander of AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni area, AUGUSTINE GBAO was subordinate only to the RUF Battle Field Commander, the leader ofthe RUF, FODAY SAYBANA SANKOH, and the leader of the AFRC, JOHNNY PAUL KOROMA.[376]

6720. At all times relevant to this Indictment and in relation to all acts and omissions charged herein, ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, through their association with the RUF, acted in concert with CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR aka CHARLES MACARTHUR DAPKPANA TAYLOR.[378]

6721. The RUF, including ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, and the AFRC, including ALEX T AMBA BRIMA, BRIMA BAZZY KAMARA and SANTIGIE BORBOR KANU, shared a common plan, purpose or design (joint criminal enterprise) which was to take any actions necessary to gain and exercise political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas. The natural resources of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamonds, were to be provided to persons outside Sierra Leone in return for assistance in carrying out the joint criminal enterprise.[379]

6722. The joint criminal enterprise included gaining and exercising control over the population of Sierra Leone in order to prevent or minimize resistance to their geographic control, and to use members of the population to provide support to the members of the joint criminal enterprise. The crimes alleged in this Indictment, including unlawful killings, abductions, forced labour, physical and sexual violence, use of child soldiers, looting and burning of civilian structures, were either actions within the joint criminal enterprise or were a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise.[380]

6723. ISSA HASSAN SESAY, MORRIS KALLON and AUGUSTINE GBAO, by their acts or omissions, are individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6.1. of the Statute for the crimes referred to in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute as alleged in this Indictment, which crimes

each of them planned, instigated, ordered, committed or in whose planning, preparation or execution each Accused otherwise aided and abetted, or which crimes were within a joint criminal enterprise in which each Accused participated or were a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise in which each Accused participated.[381]

2. Trial Judgment

The Prosecutor v. Issa Hassan Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Augustine Gbao, SCSL-04-15-T, Judgement, 2 March 2009

(a) Findings and Conclusions

(i) Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6725. para. 244: In order to assess and determine the culpability of each Accused, it is necessary for the Chamber to examine the criminal responsibility of each Accused on all the modes of liability which have been alleged against them in the Indictment, either collectively or individually. In this regard, it is alleged that the Accused are responsible, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, for planning, instigating, ordering, committing or otherwise aiding and abetting the planning, preparation, or execution of the crimes charged in the Indictment.[435] "Committing" would include committing through participation in a joint criminal enterprise.[436] In addition or in the alternative, the Accused are also alleged to be criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, as superiors of members of the RUF.[437]

6726. para. 245: The relevant paragraphs of Article 6 of the Statute provide as follows:

> 1. A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute shall be individually responsible for the crime. [...]
>
> 3. The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was > about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior had failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. […]

6727. para. 246: The Chamber considers that the principle of legality demands that the Court shall apply the law which was binding upon individuals at the time of the acts charged.[438] The application of the law of Sierra Leone to the forms of liability within the jurisdiction of the Special Court is restricted to the crimes envisaged in Article 5 of the Statute and no Accused has been charged with any crime under this Article.[439] The Chamber finds that for the purposes of the crimes envisaged in Articles 2 to 4 of its Statute, the Court has jurisdiction to consider only modes of liability which both (a) are contemplated by its Statute, and (b) existed in customary international law at the time of the alleged offences under consideration.[440] The Chamber further finds that all modes of liability listed in the Indictment are contemplated by the Statute of the Special Court and were recognized as such under customary international law at the time of the acts or omissions alleged in the Indictment.[441]

6728. para. 247: The Chamber is of the opinion that to establish individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing, planning, instigating, ordering or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime over which the Special Court has jurisdiction, or responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Prosecution must prove that the crime in question has been perpetrated by the Accused.[442]

6729. para. 1971: In addition, we endorse the established jurisprudence that an accused may not be convicted under Article 6(1) and Article 6(3) in respect of the same conduct. The ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that:

> [I]t is not appropriate to convict under both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the Statute. Where both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) responsibility are alleged under the same count, and where the legal requirements pertaining to both of these heads of responsibility are met, a Trial Chamber should enter a conviction on the basis of Article 7(1) only, and consider the accused's superior position as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[3695]

6730. para. 1972: The Chamber is of the opinion that it would be inappropriate to hold a superior criminally responsible for ordering, planning, instigating or aiding and abetting the commission of crimes and at the same time reproach the superior for failing to prevent or punish the perpetrators.[3696] The Chamber's position on this issue is fortified by the Prosecution's pleading that superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute is only pleaded "in addition, or alternatively" to the individual responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute.

6731. para. 1973: As responsibility under Article 6(1) subsumes responsibility under Article 6(3) for the purpose of entering a conviction, the Chamber considers that it is neither necessary nor appropriate, in the interests of judicial efficiency, to debate the Accused's liability under both heads of responsibility.[3697] Although the Chamber has made detailed findings on the Accused's command roles within the RUF throughout the Indictment period,[3698] the Chamber will proceed to determine the Accused's superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute only in respect of crimes for which the Accused are not liable under Article 6(1).

a. Committing - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6732. para. 248: The Prosecution charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute with committing the crimes referred to in the Indictment.[443]

6733. para. 249: Consistent with established jurisprudence, the Chamber adopts the definition of "committing" a crime as "physically perpetrating a crime or engendering a culpable omission in violation of criminal law".444 The actus reus for committing a crime consists of the proscribed act of participation, physical or otherwise direct, in a crime provided for in the Statute, through positive acts or culpable omissions, whether individually or jointly with others.[445]

6734. para. 250: The Chamber takes the view that the mens rea requirement for committing a crime is satisfied if the Prosecution proves that the Accused acted with intent to commit the crime, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that the crime would occur as a consequence of his conduct.

b. Committing through participation in JCE - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6735. para. 251: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused committed the crimes in Counts 1 to 14 of the Indictment through participating in a joint criminal enterprise.[446]

6736. para. 252: The Chamber would like to observe that Article 6(1) of the Statute does not make a specific reference to joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber is satisfied that individual criminal responsibility for participation in a joint criminal enterprise to commit a crime over which the Court has jurisdiction is impliedly included in that Article.[447]

6737. para. 253: The Chamber recalls that this mode of liability has been routinely applied in the jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals.[448] In Tadic, the ICTY Appeals Chamber found that, by 1992, joint criminal enterprise was a mode of liability which was "firmly established in customary international law".[449] The Chamber concurs with this position and finds that the concept of criminal responsibility based on participation in a joint criminal enterprise existed under customary international law at the time when the acts charged in the Indictment were alleged to have been committed.

6738. para. 254: The jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals has identified the following three categories of joint criminal enterprise:

> The first category is a "basic" form of joint criminal enterprise. It is represented by cases where all co-perpetrators, acting pursuant to a common purpose, possess the same criminal intention. An example is a plan formulated by the participants in the joint criminal enterprise to kill where, although each of the participants may carry out a different role, each of them has the intent to kill.
>
> The second category is a "systemic" form of joint criminal enterprise. It is a variant of the basic form, characterised by the existence of an organised system of illtreatment. An example is extermination or concentration camps, in which the prisoners are killed or mistreated pursuant to the joint criminal enterprise.
>
> The third category is an "extended" form of joint criminal enterprise. It concerns cases involving a common purpose to commit a crime where one of the perpetrators commits an act which, while outside the common purpose, is nevertheless a natural and foreseeable consequence of the effecting of that common purpose. An example is a common purpose or plan on the part of a group to forcibly remove at gun-point members of one ethnicity from their town, village or region (to effect "ethnic cleansing") with the consequence that, in the course of doing so, one or more of the victims is shot and killed. While murder may not have been explicitly acknowledged to be part of the common purpose, it was nevertheless foreseeable that the forcible removal of civilians at gunpoint might well result in the deaths of one or more of those civilians.[450]

6739. para. 255: This Chamber therefore considers that the three categories of joint criminal enterprise are now settled law under customary international law.

6740. para. 256: Regardless of the category at issue or the charge under consideration, the actus reus of the participant in a joint criminal enterprise is common to each of the three above-mentioned categories and comprises three requirements.[451]

6742. para. 258: Second, the existence "of a common plan, design or purpose which amounts to or involves the commission of a crime provided for in the Statute is required. There is no need for this purpose to have been previously arranged or formulated. It may materialise extemporaneously and be inferred from the facts."[455]

6743. para. 259: The common objective can be conceptualised as "fluid in its criminal means." The Chamber considers that it will be proven that the members of a joint criminal enterprise have accepted an expansion of the criminal means of the common objective when leading members of the joint criminal enterprise are made aware of the new types of crimes committed, take no measures to prevent these crimes and persist in the implementation of the common objective.[456]

6744. para. 260: The Appeals Chamber has clarified that "the requirement that the common plan, design or purpose of a joint criminal enterprise is inherently criminal means that it must either have as its objective a crime within the Statute, or contemplate crimes within the Statute as the means of achieving its objective."[457]

6745. para. 261: Third, the participation of the Accused in the common purpose is required.[458] "This participation need not involve the commission of a specific crime under one of the provisions (for example murder, extermination, torture, rape, etcetera), but may take the form of assistance in, or contribution to, the execution of the common purpose."[459] It must be shown that the plurality of persons acted in concert with each other in the implementation of a common purpose.[460] As to the required extent of the participation, the Prosecution need not demonstrate that the Accused's participation is necessary or substantial, but the Accused must at least have made a significant contribution to the crimes for which he is held responsible.[461]

6746. para. 262: Where the joint criminal enterprise is alleged to include crimes committed over a wide geographical area, the Chamber opines that an Accused may be found criminally responsible for his participation in the enterprise, even if his significant contributions to the enterprise occurred only in a much smaller geographical area, provided that he had knowledge of the wider purpose of the common design.[462] It is also legally possible for an Accused to withdraw from the joint criminal enterprise after which point, he will not bear legal responsibility for the acts of the other members of the group. The identity of the other person or persons making up the plurality may change over the course of the existence of the joint criminal enterprise as participants enter or withdraw from it.[463]

6747. para. 263: The principal perpetrator need not be a member of the joint criminal enterprise, but may be used as a tool by one of the members of the joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber adopts the view of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Brdjanin that "where the principal perpetrator is not shown to belong to the JCE, the trier of fact must further establish that the crime can be imputed to at least one member of the joint criminal enterprise, and that this member – when using the principal perpetrator – acted in accordance with the common plan."[464]

6748. para. 264: The mens rea requirements for liability under the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise, which are pleaded in the Indictment, are different.

6749. para. 265: In the first category of joint criminal enterprise the Accused must intend to commit the crime and intend to participate in a common plan whose object was the commission of the crime.[465] The intent to commit the crime must be shared by all participants in the joint criminal enterprise.[466]

6750. para. 266: The mens rea for the third category of joint criminal enterprise is two-fold: in the first place, the Accused must have had the intention to take part in and contribute to the common purpose. In the second place, responsibility under the third category of joint criminal enterprise for a crime that was committed beyond the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise, but which was "a natural and foreseeable consequence thereof", arises only if the Prosecution proves that the Accused had sufficient knowledge that the additional crime was a natural and foreseeable consequence to him in particular.[467] The Accused must also know that the crime which was not part of the common purpose, but which was nevertheless a natural and foreseeable consequence of it, might be perpetrated by a member of the group (or by a person used by the Accused or another member of the group).[468] The Accused must "willingly take the risk that the crime might occur by joining or continuing to participate in the enterprise."[469] The Chamber can only find that the Accused has the requisite intent "if this is the only reasonable inference on the evidence."[470]

6752. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 19 (p.702): In this regard, let me dispel any misconceptions as to my judicial posturing on these themes. First, I take no issue with the proposition that joint criminal enterprise is a mode of liability "firmly established in customary international law." I, likewise, take no issue with the view that Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Court implicitly or impliedly provides for, or incorporates, the notion of joint criminal enterprise as a mode of liability. In fact, I unreservedly subscribe to that viewpoint as reflected in a previous decision of this Chamber. By the same token, I am in full agreement with the proposition that the doctrine of joint criminal enterprise requires essentially a plurality of offenders.

6753. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 20 (p.702): I do not, however, share the judicial complacency about the seemingly-settled nature of the existing law on the subject in respect of the issues already alluded to. This is patently illusory.[8] As I have had occasion to express elsewhere on another subject, applying incoherent, disparate and unsettled principles of law is fraught with judicial perils which, inevitably, make us judges "victims of the fallacy of slippery precedents."[9]

6754. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 21 (p.703): Being a creature of case-law, unquestionably and inevitably the doctrine of joint criminal enterprise bristles with legal subtleties and technicalities. In its present shape, the law is incomprehensibly opaque and amorphous as reflected by judicial attempts, in one sense, to separate category one and category two of the joint criminal enterprise mode of liability, and, in another sense, to equate them as variations of the same theme. Such attempts are, with all due respect, based on a fallacy. To do so defies logic, there being no affinity between them other than that of being a mode of liability. By force of logic, it cannot be asserted that where there is a shared intent by multiple offenders to engage in conduct proscribed by law there is necessarily always a kindred relationship to a mode of liability whereby multiple offenders having personal knowledge of a system of ill-treatment proscribed by law show an intent to promote the said system. The logical relationship here is characterised more by mutual exclusivity than inclusivity. In effect, apart from sharing the common denominator of mode of liability involving a plurality of offenders, they have nothing else in common.

6755. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 22 (p.703): The other problematic aspect of the doctrine as a form of liability relates to the proscriptive and penological dimensions of the third category. The analytical difficulty here can be stated this way: that there is evidently a lack of clarity as to how expansive is or should be the scope of liability envisaged by the third category of this form of liability; there is, likewise, a lack of clarity as to how foreseeability in the context of such liability is or should be interpreted; moreover there is no articulation of, or precision as to, what specific principles are applicable in determining the impact of this category of liability on, namely, (a) the principle that attribution of criminal responsibility to a person charged with violation of a proscriptive norm can only be predicated upon his or her own individual conduct, and (b) the principle that a person found guilty of criminal wrongdoing can only be penally sanctioned for his individual choice to engage in such conduct.[10]

6756. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 23 (p.703-704): Predicated upon my reasoning in paragraphs 19 to 22, I opine strongly that the present uncritical adoption and application of the doctrine of joint criminal enterprise, in its threefold dimension, unquestionably compounds not only the opaqueness and amorphous character of some of its conceptual elements but also the degree of fluctuation of its doctrinal contours.[11]

c. Planning - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6757. para. 267: The Prosecution charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute with planning the crimes referred to in the Indictment.[471]

6758. para. 268: The Appeals Chamber has confirmed that "planning" a crime "implies that one or several persons contemplate designing the commission of a crime at both the preparatory and execution phases."[472] The actus reus of planning a crime requires that one or more persons design the criminal conduct that constitutes one or more crimes provided for in the Statute and the crime is later perpetrated.[473] It must be demonstrated that the planning was a substantially contributing factor to the criminal conduct.[474] The Chamber is of the opinion that the mens rea requirement for planning an act or omission is satisfied if the Prosecution proves that the Accused acted with an intent that a crime provided for in the Statute be committed or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that the crime would be committed in the execution of that plan.

6759. para. 269: If an Accused is found guilty of having committed a crime, that Accused cannot also be convicted of having planned the same crime.[475] Involvement in the planning may be considered an aggravating factor.[476]

d. Instigating - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6760. para. 270: The Prosecution charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute with instigating the crimes referred to in the Indictment.[477]

6761. para. 271: The Chamber is of the view that "instigating" a crime means urging, encouraging or prompting another person to commit an offence.[478] The actus reus required for instigating a crime is an act or omission, covering both express and implied conduct of the Accused,[479] which is shown to be "a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime."[480] A causal relationship between the instigation and the perpetration of the crime must be demonstrated,[481] although it is not necessary to prove that the crime would not have occurred without the Accused's involvement.[482] To establish the mens rea requirement for instigating a crime, the Prosecution must prove that the Accused intended to provoke or induce the commission of the crime or was aware of the substantial likelihood that the crime would be committed as a result of that instigation.

e. Ordering - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6762. para. 272: The Prosecution charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute with ordering the crimes referred to in the Indictment.[483]

6763. para. 273: The Chamber considers that "ordering" involves a person in a position of authority using that position to compel another to commit an offence.[484] The actus reus of ordering requires that a person who is in a position of authority instructs a person in a subordinate position to commit an offence.[485] It is the Chamber's opinion that no formal superiorsubordinate relationship between the superior and the subordinate is required. It is sufficient that there is proof of some position of authority on the part of the Accused that would compel another to commit a crime in compliance with the Accused's order, command or direction.[486] Such authority can be de jure or de facto and can be reasonably implied.[487] The Chamber is of the view that a "causal link between the act of ordering and the physical perpetration of a crime […] also needs to be demonstrated as part of the actus reus of ordering" but that this "link need not be such as to show that the offence would not have been perpetrated in the absence of the order."[488]

6764. para. 274: The Chamber finds that to establish the mens rea requirement for ordering a crime, the Prosecution must prove that the Accused either intended to bring about the commission of the crime or that the Accused gave an order with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime would likely be committed as a consequence of the execution or implementation of that order, command or direction.[489]

f. Aiding and Abetting - Law on the Modes of Liability charged under Article 6.1.

6765. para. 275: The Chamber notes that the Prosecution charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute with aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes referred to in the Indictment.[490]

6766. para. 276: The Chamber considers that "aiding and abetting" consists of the act of rendering practical or material assistance, encouragement or moral support, which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of a certain crime.[491] Aiding and abetting may also consist of an omission, providing that the basic elements of aiding and abetting as set out below are satisfied.[492]

6767. para. 277: The actus reus of aiding and abetting requires that the Accused perpetrates an act or an omission specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a certain specific crime and that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[493] The provision of material or physical assistance can also constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting. "[P]roof of a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider or abettor and the commission of the crime, or proof that such conduct served as a condition precedent to the commission of the crime, is not required."[494]

6768. para. 278: Further, taking into account the specific wording of Article 6(1) of the Statute that "[a] person who […] aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute shall be individually responsible for the crime", this Chamber is of the opinion that the actus reus of aiding and abetting a crime may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated and at a location geographically removed from the location of the principal crime.[495] If the aiding and abetting occurs after the crime, it must be established that a prior agreement existed between the principal and the person who subsequently aided and abetted in the commission of the crime.[496] The Appeals Chamber has confirmed that acts of aiding and abetting "can be made at a time and place removed from the actual crime."[497] The Chamber reiterates, however, that the act of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.

6769. para. 279: Mere presence at the scene of a crime, without more, will not usually constitute aiding and abetting. There may be situations, however, in which the physical presence at the crime scene of the Accused, combined with his or her position of authority, "allowed the inference that non-interference by the accused actually amounted to tacit approval and encouragement" that could amount to aiding and abetting.[498] The Chamber also notes that, in some circumstances, a superior's failure to punish for past crimes might constitute instigation or aiding and abetting for further crimes.[499]

6770. para. 280: The Chamber recognises that the mens rea of aiding and abetting is the knowledge that the acts performed by the Accused assist the commission of the crime by the principal offender.[500] "Such knowledge may be inferred from all relevant circumstances."[501] The Accused need not share the mens rea of the principal offender, but he must be aware of the principal offender's intention.[502] In the case of specific intent offences, the aider and abettor need not possess the principal offender's intent, but must have knowledge that the principal offender possessed the specific intent required.[503] In other words, "it must be shown that the aider and abettor was aware of the essential elements of the crime which was ultimately committed by the principal."[504] The aider and abettor, however, need not know the precise crime that is intended by the principal offender. If he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed by the principal offender, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, then he has intended to assist or facilitate the commission of that crime, and may be guilty of aiding and abetting.[505]

(ii) Pleading

6771. para. 325: The Appeals Chamber held that where direct participation by an accused is alleged, the Prosecution must provide particulars in the Indictment.[602] Where the Prosecution alleges that an accused has personally done the acts in question, in as far it is possible, the Prosecution should plead in the Indictment:

> The identity of the victim, the places and the approximate date of those acts and the means by which the offence was committed. Where the prosecution is unable to specify any of these matters, it cannot be obliged to perform the impossible. Where the precise date cannot be specified, a reasonable range of dates may be sufficient. Where a precise identification of the victim or victims cannot be specified, a reference to their category or position as a group may be sufficient. Where the prosecution is unable to specify matters such as these, it must make it clear in the indictment that it is unable to do so and that it has provided the best information it can.[603]

6772. para. 326: It is the considered view of the Chamber that where an accused is alleged to be individually responsible for crimes charged in the Indictment but is not alleged to have committed them personally, the standard of specificity to be required in the Indictment is somewhat lower. In such a situation, it is the acts by which an accused is said to have ordered, planned, committed, instigated, or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes charged which are most material. Where the Prosecution is able to provide such particulars, it should put an accused on notice of the acts of others for which he is alleged to be responsible.[604]

6773. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 9 (p.699-700): As to degree of specificity required in respect of allegations pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Court's Statute, it is now settled law that the requirement of specificity is less stringent where it is alleged that an accused bears individual responsibility for the proscribed conduct but where there is no allegation that he committed it personally. It is incumbent on the Prosecution to adhere to the specificity principles by pleading and disclosing the particulars of the material facts underlying allegations of personal commission against the Accused in the Indictment.

a. JCE – Pleading

6774. para. 352: Consonant with the general principles relating to the degree of specificity required in an indictment, described above,[678] the Chamber is of the view that in order to give adequate notice to an accused of his alleged participation in a joint criminal enterprise, an indictment should include the following information:

(i) The identity of those engaged in the joint criminal enterprise, to the extent known and at least by reference to the group to which they belong;[679]

(ii) The time period during which the joint criminal enterprise is alleged to have existed; [680]

(iii) The nature or purpose of the joint criminal enterprise; [681]

(iv) The category of joint criminal enterprise in which the accused is alleged to have participated;[682] and

(v) The role that the Accused is alleged to have played within the joint criminal enterprise. [683]

6775. para. 353: The Chamber considers that the identities of all participants and the continuing existence of the joint criminal enterprise over the entire time period alleged in the Indictment are not elements of the actus reus of the joint criminal enterprise that need to be proven beyond reasonable doubt by the Prosecution; therefore, they are not material facts upon which a conviction of the Accused would rest.[684]

6776. para. 354: The Prosecution must demonstrate, however, that the joint criminal enterprise involved the participation of a plurality of persons.[685] By parity of reasoning, the Chamber holds that the Prosecution must prove that the joint enterprise existed over some period during the timeframe charged in the Indictment, but not that it existed over the entire timeframe charged. Similarly, it is the Chamber's considered opinion that because the common objective of a joint criminal enterprise may be fluid as to its criminal means, the Indictment will be sufficient if that objective encompasses, or is to be accomplished by means of, at least one, but not all, of the crimes specified as being within the applicable category of joint criminal enterprise, or as being a foreseeable consequence of the enterprise.[686] In the Chamber's considered opinion, then, a joint criminal enterprise is divisible as to participants, time and location. It is also divisible as to the crimes charged as being within or the foreseeable consequence of the purpose of the joint enterprise.

6777. para. 355: In its Judgement in the AFRC case, the Appeals Chamber upheld this Chamber's findings in relation to the pleading of the joint criminal enterprise in our pre-trial form of Indictment decisions.[687]

6778. para. 356: The arguments of the Sesay and Gbao Defence, however, principally contend that the Prosecution has altered its theory of the joint criminal enterprise over the course of the trial. The Chamber, therefore, will consider whether the Accused have received adequate and sufficiently clear notice of the Prosecution's theory of joint criminal enterprise over the entirety of the proceedings.

6779. para. 357: The Chamber is of the view that insofar as it is argued that the Prosecution altered its theory of joint criminal enterprise over the course of proceedings, the Kallon Defence could not have been expected to have raised an objection at an earlier point during the proceedings.[688] Therefore, we will consider the merit of the objections of the Kallon Defence in this context, with the burden remaining, at all times, on the Prosecution to demonstrate that Kallon's defence was not materially prejudiced by any of its alleged alterations. Consequently, the Chamber will determine whether, taking into account all communications received over the course of the trial, the three Accused received clear, timely and consistent notice of the timeframe, the participants, the purpose, the category of the joint criminal enterprise and the Counts falling within each category, as well as of the role that Kallon is alleged to have played in the common plan.

6780. para. 358: The Kallon Defence has argued that the Indictment is defective because it does not specify the effective date of the agreement upon which the joint criminal enterprise was based took effect. The precise date of any agreement does not need to be proven in order to establish the liability of an accused under a theory of joint criminal enterprise; therefore, it is not a fact on which the conviction of an accused depends.[689] Moreover, the Chamber recalls that the common plan may arise extemporaneously.[690] Thus, while an accused must have notice of the timeframe over which the joint criminal enterprise is alleged to have existed in order to prepare his defence, the Chamber opines that the date of any initial agreement is not a material fact which must be pleaded in the Indictment. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the Indictment is not defective in this respect.

6781. para. 359: Nevertheless, in the context of the objections by the Sesay and Gbao Defence that the Prosecution's theory changed over the course of the trial to such an extent that the Defence teams were unable to know the case they had to meet, the Chamber will consider whether the Accused received sufficient, clear and consistent notice, over the course of proceedings, of the timeframe during which the joint criminal enterprise allegedly existed.

6782. para. 360: During the trial, the Prosecution alleged that the joint criminal enterprise spanned the entire Indictment period.[691] The Appeals Chamber held in the AFRC case that an identical formulation of the timeframe over which the joint criminal enterprise operated in the AFRC Indictment was pleaded with sufficient specificity.[692] In its Final Trial Brief, however, the Prosecution changed the time at which it alleged the Accused began acting jointly with others to further their common design, arguing that the joint criminal enterprise spanned only the period from 25 May 1997 to January 2000;[693] that is, exactly the same timeframe held by the Appeals Chamber to have been alleged in the AFRC Indictment.[694] The Chamber will consider whether this alteration was permissible and whether it prejudiced the Accused.

6783. para. 361: In this regard, the Chamber does not regard the Prosecution's submission in its Final Trial Brief to amount to an attempt to unilaterally amend the pleading of the Indictment without moving for an amendment. On the contrary, the Chamber understands this narrowing of the timeframe to be a submission regarding the sufficiency of the evidence adduced at trial. Specifically, we consider that the Prosecution has conceded that the evidence does not establish the existence of a joint criminal enterprise before 25 May 1997 or after the end of January 2000. It is the considered view of the Chamber that as the Indictment is divisible as to time, and this restricted period is within the original timeframe pleaded in the Indictment, the Prosecution's concession has not in any way prejudiced the ability of the Accused to prepare their defence. The Chamber, therefore, will consider whether the Prosecution have proven the existence of a joint criminal enterprise spanning the period between 25 May 1997 and the end of January 2000.

6784. para. 362: Having regard to the previous analysis in paragraph 353, the Chamber is of the opinion that the identity of each of the participants in the joint criminal enterprise is not a material fact which must be pleaded in the Indictment; nevertheless, in order to prepare their defence, the Accused are entitled to notice of the identities of the alleged members of the common plan, at least by reference to their category or group. The Kallon Defence objected to the sufficiency of the Indictment in this respect.

6785. para. 363: Paragraphs 34 to 36 of the Indictment allege that the following individuals acted in concert in pursuance of a common plan: Sesay, Kallon, Gbao, Johnny Paul Koroma, Foday Sankoh, Sam Bockarie, Alex Tamba Brima (aka Gullit), Brima Bazzy Kamara (aka Bazzy), Santigie Borbor Kanu (aka Five-Five), Charles Taylor and/or other superiors in the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF forces.[695]

6786. para. 364: The Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise, on the other hand, gave specific date ranges for the participation of these individuals and groups, and named two additional participants, Dennis Mingo and SAJ Musa.[696] In addition, the Prosecution Notice alleges that "[m]embers of the RUF, AFRC and others either participated in the joint criminal enterprise or were used by the leaders of the organised armed groups and forces to implement and achieve the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise."[697]

6787. para. 365: The Kallon Defence argued that paragraphs 34 and 35 of the Indictment are irrelevant to determining the identities of the alleged participants in the common plan because the phrase "acted in concert with others" does not sufficiently plead a joint criminal enterprise.[698] Therefore, the Kallon Defence suggested that the Chamber could consider only paragraph 36. It also contended that, as all members of the RUF and AFRC could not possibly have been members of the alleged joint criminal enterprise, and as paragraph 36 of the Indictment failed to specify the particular members of the RUF and AFRC who were participants,[699] Counsel for Kallon concluded that the only members of the common design sufficiently identified in the Indictment are the six persons specifically named. Therefore, the Kallon Defence submitted that the only joint criminal enterprise properly pleaded as to the identity of the participants, if any, includes Sesay, Kallon, Gbao, Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara and Santigie Borbor Kanu.

6788. para. 366: With regard to paragraph 35 of the Indictment, the Chamber notes that the Appeals Chamber in the AFRC Appeal Judgement opined that paragraph 32 of the AFRC Indictment,[700] which is nearly identical to paragraph 35 of the RUF Indictment, was relevant to determining whether the joint criminal enterprise had been pleaded with the requisite specificity in that case.[701] Accordingly, the Chamber rejects the Kallon Defence argument that paragraph 35 is irrelevant to the present inquiry and finds that the Indictment.

6789. para. 367: The Chamber considers that the Accused had sufficient notice of the identities of the alleged participants in the joint criminal enterprise, even where these participants were not named individually. Given the polymorphous nature of the RUF command structure, the fluidity of the boundaries between different groups within the RUF itself, and between the RUF and AFRC forces during much of the Junta period, the Chamber finds that any further detail as to the membership of the joint criminal enterprise is a matter of evidence;[702] and therefore, is not required to have been pleaded in the Indictment itself.[703]

6790. para. 368: The Chamber finds, however, that the joint criminal enterprise pleaded by the Prosecution requires the joint action of the RUF and AFRC;[704] therefore, despite the divisibility of the joint criminal enterprise, we will not consider whether the evidence demonstrates the existence of a second, independent joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF.

6791. para. 369: Finally, the Chamber concludes that the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise did not create ambiguity with respect to the identity of the participants in the common purpose which prejudiced the ability of the Accused to answer the case against them. The Chamber finds that the addition of the names of SAJ Musa and Dennis Mingo to the list of named participants in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise simply added additional specificity to paragraph 34 of the Indictment by naming two other superiors in the RUF or AFRC whose activities had been notified to the Defence prior to the commencement of the trial.[705] It is, therefore, the view of the Chamber that the Accused were on notice throughout the trial that the Prosecution alleged that all of the individuals in that Notice, as well as other members of the AFRC and RUF, were participants in the joint criminal enterprise between 25 May 1997 and the end of January 2000.

6792. para. 370: The purpose of a joint criminal enterprise is a material fact which must be pleaded in the Indictment.[706] The gravamen of the Sesay and Gbao Defence objections to the Prosecution's pleading of joint criminal enterprise is not that the Indictment itself is defective; rather, they argued that the Prosecution's allegations with respect to the purpose of the common enterprise, the category of joint criminal enterprise, and the Counts which allegedly fell within or which were a foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise, shifted and changed over the course of the trial. The Chamber will consider this objection first as it relates to the allegedly shifting nature or purpose of the common design.

6793. para. 371: Paragraphs 36 to 38 of the Indictment set out the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.[707]

6794. para. 372: The Prosecution Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief,[708] Opening Statement,[709] and Rule 98 Skeleton Response[710] all articulate the purpose of the joint criminal enterprise as a plan to take control of the Republic of Sierra Leone, and particularly the diamond mining activities, by any means, including unlawful means. These unlawful means are detailed in paragraph 37 of the Indictment. The Prosecution Final Trial Brief took a similar position.[711]

6795. para. 373: However, following the AFRC Trial Judgement,[712] the Prosecution in August 2007 filed its Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise in August 2007 that specified a two-fold purpose of the common plan: (1) to conduct a campaign of terror and collective punishments in order to pillage the resources of Sierra Leone, particularly diamonds, and (2) to control forcibly the population.[713] In its final oral arguments, the Prosecution rejected the contention that this Notice impermissibly altered the pleaded purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.[714]

6796. para. 374: The Chamber finds that the formulation of the common purpose in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise differs from that originally pleaded in the Indictment, and from the purpose articulated in the Prosecution's Final Trial Brief. The Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise made the conduct of a campaign of terror and collective punishment one of the explicit purposes of the joint criminal enterprise, rather than the means by which the objective of gaining control of Sierra Leone was to be achieved. The Chamber considers that the Prosecution may not unilaterally attempt to alter a material fact in the Indictment more than half-way through a trial. The right procedure under the Rules is to seek an amendment of the Indictment. Thus, the Chamber finds that it will not consider whether the Accused were participants in a joint criminal enterprise with the purpose as alleged in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise.

6797. para. 375: The Chamber, however, finds that the Indictment adequately put the Accused on notice that the purpose of the alleged joint criminal enterprise was to take control of Sierra Leone through criminal means, including through a campaign of terror and collective punishments.[715] Throughout the trial, the Accused were on notice that they were alleged to have committed the crimes of collective punishment and acts of terrorism through their participation in a joint criminal enterprise. They were also notified of the fact that one of the alleged goals of their armed struggle was to gain control of Sierra Leone, and in particular, of the diamond mining areas. The Chamber does not consider that the ability of the Accused to present their defence was materially prejudiced by the alteration to the purpose of the common plan as alleged in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise. The Chamber therefore dismisses this objection in its entirety.

6798. para. 376: For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber will consider only whether the Prosecution have proven the alleged purpose of the joint criminal enterprise as pleaded in the original Indictment; that is, whether the parties to the common enterprise shared a common plan and design to gain territorial control and political power by conduct constituting crimes within the Statute.[716]

6799. para. 377: All three Accused argued that the Prosecution did not plead adequately the category of joint criminal enterprise in which it alleges the Accused participated. Specifically, the Defence for all Accused argued that they did not have adequate notice that the Prosecution alleged that Sesay, Kallon and Gbao were criminally responsible for the crimes in the Indictment on the basis of their membership in a common enterprise amounting to a system of repression (joint criminal enterprise category 2). The Defence acknowledged in their Final Trial Briefs that the Indictment adequately pleaded the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise.[717]

6800. para. 378: With respect to the category of joint criminal enterprise alleged by the Prosecution, the Indictment itself is ambiguous, stating only that the crimes were either within the joint criminal enterprise or were a foreseeable consequence thereof,[718] suggesting only the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise. The same formulation is repeated in the Prosecution's Opening Statement.[719]

6801. para. 379: The Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief differentiates between the mens rea requirements for all three categories of joint criminal enterprise, without relating the mental elements of this mode of liability to any factual allegations.[720] The Pre-Trial Brief describes the first category of joint criminal enterprise as encompassing "cases where each enterprise member voluntarily participates in one aspect of the common design and intends the resulting crimes."[721] The second category, in the Prosecution's submission, applied to "cases where there exists an organised system to commit the alleged crimes and where the accused actively participates in its enforcement; is aware of its nature; and, intends to further its purpose."[722] The Pre-Trial Brief does not argue that the second category of joint criminal enterprise is subsumed within the first.[723]

6802. para. 380: In the Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution articulated its theory in a manner which the Chamber considers to resemble most closely a pleading of only the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise. The Prosecution stated that each crime charged in the Indictment "resulted from the participation of … [the Accused] … in the common plan"[724] or was "a foreseeable risk of the common plan".[725] There is no mention of any system of forced labour or system of enslavement of civilians. The position on the categories of joint criminal enterprise pleaded in the Prosecution's Skeleton Response to the Accused's Rule 98 Motions is contradictory,[726] but the Response did state explicitly that forced mining and forced farming were examples of the second category of joint criminal enterprise.[727] The Prosecution's oral submissions in the Rule 98 hearing were ambiguous on this point.[728]

6803. para. 381: The Chamber is of the view that the pleading in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise, filed roughly 11 months after the Rule 98 Skeleton Response, is problematic. The Notice stated that "[t]he crimes charged in Counts 1 to 14 were within the joint criminal enterprise. The Accused and other participants intended the commission of the charged crimes."[729] This formulation is consistent with an allegation that the Accused are criminally responsible based on their participation in the first category of joint criminal enterprise. The Notice alleged that certain Counts were, alternatively, "a foreseeable consequence of" the joint criminal enterprise,[730] which is consistent with an allegation that the Accused are criminally responsible based on their participation in the third category of joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber considers it significant that the Notice did not mention a system of forced labour or enslavement.

6804. para. 382: The Prosecution, however, argued in its Final Trial Brief, that the Indictment pleads the basic form of joint criminal enterprise, which encompasses both the first and second categories.[731] In its final oral submissions, the Prosecution also argued that the Indictment properly pleaded all three categories of joint criminal enterprise, with the second category being alleged as a sub-set of the first.[732]

6805. para. 383: While some consider the second category of joint criminal enterprise to be a variant of the first category,[733] it is a variant in which the mental intent element differs. The accused "must have had personal knowledge of the system in question (whether proven by express testimony or a matter of reasonable inference from the accused's position of authority) and the intent to further the concerted system."[734] The Chamber considers that the Prosecution is required to set out its theory of liability clearly at a point in time which is early enough "to enable the accused to know what exactly he is accused of and to enable him to prepare his defence accordingly".[735] Where the second category of joint criminal enterprise is alleged, therefore, the Chamber holds that the Prosecution must clearly identify the Counts which it considers to have been committed in furtherance of the common purpose shared by all participants in the system.[736]

6806. para. 384: The Chamber considers that at no point before the close of the Prosecution's case did the Prosecution clearly articulate its theory of a systemic joint criminal enterprise. Only in its Rule 98 Skeleton Response did the Prosecution state explicitly that it was relying on the second category of joint criminal enterprise in relation to Count 13, enslavement, and this pleading was far from a model of clarity. The Chamber finds it significant that the systemic category of joint criminal enterprise is not alleged in the subsequent Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise. Thus, on the facts of this case, the Chamber opines that such notice of the second category of joint criminal enterprise as may have been given to the Accused by the Prosecution was not sufficient, clear, consistent or timely.

6807. para. 385: We are of the view that because the objections of the Accused relate to the changes in the Prosecution's theory over the course of the trial, the Accused objected on this point in a timely manner.[737] Therefore, the burden lies on the Prosecution to demonstrate that the ability of the Accused to prepare their defence was not materially prejudiced by the late and imprecise notice of its allegation that the Accused participated in a common design amounting to a system of repression.[738] The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not discharged this burden, and finds that it would be unfair to the Accused to consider their liability pursuant to the second category of joint criminal enterprise.[739]

6808. para. 386: The Sesay and Gbao Defence have argued that the Prosecution has changed, impermissibly, the Counts alleged to have been either within, or the foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise. The Accused submitted that these changes have prejudiced their ability to prepare their defence, and that therefore, the Chamber should not consider joint criminal enterprise as a mode of liability.

6809. para. 387: The Indictment,[740] the Prosecution Supplemental Pre-Trial Brief,[741] the Prosecution's Opening Statement,[742] and the Prosecution Rule 98 Skeleton Response[743] alleged that all crimes charged within the Indictment were either "within" the joint criminal enterprise or were "a foreseeable consequence" of the joint criminal enterprise. The Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise changed the Prosecution's position, and alleged that only Counts 1 to 14 were within the joint criminal enterprise and were intended by the Accused and other participants.[744] Alternatively, the Prosecution alleged in this Notice that Counts 1, 2, 12, 13 and 14 were within the joint criminal enterprise and Counts 3 to 11 were foreseeable consequences of the joint criminal enterprise.[745] Although the information in the Prosecution Final Trial Brief does not provide notice of the charges to the Accused, it is relevant here because the Prosecution reverted to its theory and submitted that Counts 1 to 14 were either within the joint criminal enterprise or were the foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise.[746]

6810. para. 388: The Prosecution ought to have set out its case more consistently. Nevertheless, the Indictment adequately put the Accused on notice of the Counts which were alleged to be relevant to each category of joint criminal enterprise, specifying that these crimes included

"controlling the population of Sierra Leone; using members of the population to support the [joint criminal enterprise]; and specifically enumerated crimes such as 'unlawful killings, abductions, forced labour, physical and sexual violence'",[747] the use of child soldiers and the looting and burning of civilian structures,[748] as well as through crimes amounting to acts of terrorism or collective punishments.[749]

6811. para. 389: We are of the opinion that in the circumstances, the changes in the Prosecution Notice Concerning Joint Criminal Enterprise did not alter the Prosecution's theory of the third category of joint criminal enterprise to such an extent that it materially prejudiced the ability of the Accused to make full answer in defence. In addition, the Chamber considers that the Prosecution's communications subsequent to the Indictment served to limit the liability of the Accused by dropping Counts 15 to 18 from the ambit of the joint criminal enterprise. Consequently, the Chamber will consider only whether Counts 1 to 14 were intended by the Accused as participants of the common plan, or, in the alternative, whether these Counts were reasonably foreseeable consequences of the joint criminal enterprise.

6812. para. 390: The Chamber finds that the submission of Counsel for Kallon that the Indictment is defective because it fails to plead the alleged categories of joint criminal enterprise on which the Prosecution is relying in relation to each of the alleged offences, is devoid of merit.[750] Reading the Indictment as a whole, and in particular paragraph 38, incorporated by reference into each of the charges by paragraph 40, pleads the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise as alleged modes of liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the Indictment sufficiently specifies that the first and third categories of joint criminal enterprise are alleged as modes of liability in respect of every offence.[751]

6813. para. 391: The Chamber is of the considered opinion that in relation to the pleading of joint criminal enterprise as a mode of liability, the actual events alleged to form the basis for each Count are matters of evidence, and as such, do not need to be specified in the Indictment.[752] Therefore Kallon's argument that the Indictment does not distinguish between each category of joint criminal enterprise with respect to each offence is dismissed.[753]

6814. para. 392: The Kallon Defence also objects that the Indictment is defective because it does not specifically state that Kallon had the requisite intention for participation in any joint criminal enterprise. The only distinguishing feature of the different categories of joint criminal enterprise is the mens rea required.[754] The Indictment puts Kallon on notice of his alleged liability pursuant to the first and third forms of joint criminal enterprise.[755] The Pre-Trial Brief lists the mens rea requirements for joint criminal enterprise as falling under the committing mode of liability.[756] The Chamber finds that Kallon was put on notice that the Prosecution alleged that he intended the commission of the crimes charged in Counts 1 to 14 in order to further the purpose of the alleged joint criminal enterprise, or that he intended to take part in and contribute to the common purpose, and that the commission of any additional crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 were, to Kallon, a natural and foreseeable consequence to Kallon of the common purpose.[757]

6816. para. 394: The Chamber must also consider whether the changes to the Prosecution's theory of the joint criminal enterprise, taken cumulatively, prevented the Accused from knowing the case they had to answer or materially prejudiced the defence. We are of the opinion that while the Prosecution's presentation of its theory of joint criminal enterprise was less than ideal, the Accused were on notice before and throughout the trial of the material facts underlying the alleged theory of joint criminal enterprise that will be considered by the Chamber. Even taken together, the changes in the Prosecution's theory of the joint enterprise did not amount to such a radical transformation of its case that the Accused were prevented from adequately preparing their defence, nor denied a fair trial.

6817. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 13 (p.701): On the issue of the divisibility or otherwise of a joint criminal enterprise, the preferable view of the law is that (i) the identities of the alleged participants and (ii) the continuing existence of the joint criminal enterprise throughout the whole duration of time pleaded in the Indictment are not ingredients of the actus reus requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt.

6818. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 14 (p.701): Three other key principles governing the divisibility facet of the doctrine are: (i) the principle of collective or multiple participation, (ii) the principle of divisibility of the alleged criminality as between those falling within the scope of the criminal design and those having a nexus with the criminal design only by reason of foreseeability and (iii) principle of divisibility as to participants, time, and location.

6819. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 15 (p.701): With respect to the time frame over which the joint criminal enterprise is alleged to have existed, I comprehend the overriding principle to be that though an Accused is entitled to notice of the duration of time of the existence of the joint criminal enterprise, the time at which the design or plan was formulated is immaterial and not, in law, required to be pleaded.

6820. Separate Concurring Opinion – Justice B.Thompson – para. 16 (p.701): As to the purpose of the joint criminal enterprise, it is trite law that the purpose or object of a joint criminal enterprise is a material fact, and not evidence. Hence, it must be pleaded in the Indictment.

b. Personal commission – Pleading

6821. para. 396: Both the Sesay and the Kallon Defence objected that allegations of personal commission in the Indictment were not pleaded with the required degree of specificity.[759] The Prosecution submitted generally that the Indictment complies with the applicable pleading principles and provided the Accused with sufficient notice of all material facts.[760] The Prosecution also addressed specifically the pleading and disclosure of several allegations of personal commission by Kallon under Article 6(1).[761]

6822. para. 397: The Chamber notes that the Prosecution's duty to provide particulars in the Indictment is at its highest when it alleges that the Accused have personally committed a crime. The Prosecution must fully adhere to the specificity requirements, subject to its ability to provide the relevant particulars.[762]

6823. para. 398: In this case, some witnesses were genuinely unable to provide precise details about the time or exact location of crimes said to have been committed by the Accused personally, or the identities of the victims of these crimes. However, "the Prosecution's obligation to provide particulars in the indictment is at its highest when it seeks to prove that the accused killed or harmed a specific individual."[763] The Chamber reiterates that the Prosecution was obliged to provide the Accused with the best information available in the Indictment.[764]

6824. para. 399: The Indictment does not specify the approximate times of day or locations or identify any of the victims of any of the crimes alleged to have been committed by the Accused personally.[765] The Indictment also fails to plead any other particulars in relation to allegations of personal commission. The Prosecution did not argue that it would have been impracticable for it to have included more detail in the Indictment. The Prosecution simply asserted that the pleading meets the relevant legal standards, or in the alternative, that any defects had been cured.[766] The Chamber is, therefore, not satisfied that the Prosecution provided the best information that it could in the Indictment. As a result, the Chamber finds that the Indictment is defective in form in that it fails to plead the material facts underlying allegations that the Accused personally committed the crimes charged in the Indictment.

6825. para. 400: The Chamber does not accept Kallon's submission that it is impossible to cure a defective indictment that fails to plead sufficiently allegations of an accused's personal commission.[767] Guided by the holding of the Appeals Chamber, we will consider whether the Prosecution has cured each allegation of personal commission by subsequent communications when the Chamber discusses the liability of the Accused for these crimes.[768]

c. Other modes of liability under 6.1 – Pleading

6826. para. 401: The Sesay and Kallon Defence also argued that the Indictment ought to have pleaded allegations under Article 6(1), including the identity and number of victims, perpetrators and subordinates, with greater specificity.[769] The Kallon Defence argued further that Kallon did not receive adequate notice of the following material facts, which it submitted must be pleaded in the Indictment: all legal prerequisites to the application of the offences charged, the purpose of the alleged criminal conduct charged, as well as the proximity of the accused to the relevant events.[770]

6827. para. 402: The Chamber held, in the Sesay Form of Indictment Decision, that taking into consideration all of the circumstances of the conflict in Sierra Leone, and particularly the scale of crimes alleged in the Indictment, it was permissible for the Prosecution to identify victims and perpetrators only by category or group.[771] Given the scale of the crimes committed and the fluidity of the boundaries between different groups and individuals within the RUF and the AFRC, the Chamber considers that the allegations in the Indictment clearly fall within the ambit of the exception to the specificity requirement in international Indictments.[772] We do not find that the Defence has demonstrated the existence of a clear error of reasoning in the Sesay Form of Indictment Decision and we therefore decline to reconsider that decision.

6828. para. 403: The Sesay and Kallon Defence both argued that that the Indictment ought to have distinguished more clearly the different modes of individual responsibility alleged under Article 6(1) in respect of each charge and that they were materially prejudiced by this defect.[773] The Prosecution submits that the Indictment, read as a whole, charges the Accused, in the alternative, with all modes pursuant to Article 6(1) and that the Accused have not been prejudiced by the fact that the Indictment does not plead the different modes of Article 6(1) responsibility separately.[774]

6829. para. 404: The Chamber, in its Sesay Form of Indictment Decision, held that whether the different modes of individual responsibility must be pleaded separately and distinguished as to their underlying material facts depended on the circumstances of each case.[775] The Chamber found that the pleading was valid.[776] The Sesay and Kallon Defence objections request that the Chamber reconsider this Decision.

6830. para. 405: We find that the facts underpinning the charges and the mens rea for each offence are adequately substantiated by the allegations made throughout the entire Indictment.[777] We are also of the considered view that the material facts that must be pleaded in the Indictment are to be determined in relation to the alleged criminal conduct of the Accused, not in relation to the legal characterization of these actions. The Chamber considers that the specific facts and circumstances of this case[778] rendered it impracticable for the Prosecution to plead separately the material facts underlying each specific mode of 6(1) responsibility.[779] We do not find that the Defence has demonstrated the existence of a clear error of reasoning in the Sesay Form of Indictment Decision and we therefore decline to reconsider our decision.

(iii) Pleading – Dissents

a. JCE – Pleading – Dissents

6831. Justice Boutet – para. 5 (p. 689-690): Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

6832. Justice Boutet – para. 6 (p. 690): In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

6833. Justice Boutet – para. 16 (p. 693): In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

6834. Justice Boutet – para. 17 (p. 693-694): In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

6835. Justice Boutet – para. 18 (p.694): I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

(iv) Bo District

a. Crimes committed – Bo District

6836. para. 1974: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, or alternatively Article 6(3) of the Statute, for the crimes committed in Bo District between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997.[3699] The Chamber recalls that the following crimes were committed:

1. Unlawful Killings (Counts 1 and 3 to 5) (…)
2. Pillage (Count 14) (…)
3. Acts of Terrorism (Count 1) (…)

b. Responsibility of the Accused – Bo District

i. Personal commission – Bo District

6837. para. 1976: The Chamber finds that Sesay, Kallon and Gbao did not personally commit any of the crimes in Bo District.

ii. Commission through JCE - Existence of a common plan – Bo District

6838. para. 1977: The Prosecution has alleged that a joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC commenced about 25 May 1997. The members of the joint criminal enterprise are alleged to have been senior leaders of the RUF, including Sesay, Kallon, Gbao, Bockarie and Sankoh;[3700] senior leaders of the AFRC including Johnny Paul Koroma, Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five;[3701] and Charles Taylor.[3702] The goal of the alleged common enterprise was to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, through conduct amounting to crimes within the Statute. [3703]

6839. para. 1978: We recall that, in order to establish the existence of a joint criminal enterprise, there must be a plurality of persons acting in concert in pursuance of a common plan whose purpose is either inherently criminal or which contemplates the realisation of an objective through conduct constituting crimes within the Statute.[3704]

6840. para. 1979: The evidence establishes that as early as 1991 high ranking members of the RUF, including the Accused, and subordinate fighters, had as their objective taking power and control over Sierra Leone. The Chamber finds that following the 25 May 1997 coup, high ranking AFRC members and the RUF leadership agreed to form a joint "government" in order to control the territory of Sierra Leone. The Chamber considers that such an objective in and of itself is not criminal and therefore does not amount to a common purpose within the meaning of the law of joint criminal enterprise pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[3705] However, where the taking of power and control over State territory is intended to be implemented through the commission of crimes within the Statute, this may amount to a common criminal purpose.

6841. para. 1980: The evidence shows that following the establishment of their joint regime, the first acts of the Junta were to suspend the Constitution of Sierra Leone, dissolve the Parliament and eject all political parties, and the Supreme Council assumed the sole authority to make laws and detain persons in the public interest.[3706] The strategy of the Junta was thenceforth to maintain its power over Sierra Leone and to subject the civilian population to AFRC/RUF rule by violent means. The Chamber is satisfied that the means agreed upon to accomplish these goals entailed massive human rights abuses and violence against and mistreatment of the civilian population and enemy forces.[3707] The AFRC/RUF forces cooperated on armed operations in which crimes against civilians were committed.[3708]

6842. para. 1981: In the Chamber's view, the conduct of these operations demonstrates that the Junta intended, through wholly disproportionate means, to suppress all opposition to their regime. The Chamber further finds that the AFRC/RUF alliance intended through the spread of extreme fear and punishment to dominate and subdue the civilian population in order to exercise power and control over captured territory.

6843. para. 1982: The means to terrorise the civilian population included unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and physical violence (Counts 10 to 11). Additional criminal means to achieve the common purpose included the enlistment, conscription and use of Child Soldiers (Count 12) as a mean to enforce the military components of the AFRC/RUF forces in order to assist in specific military operations; forced labour of civilians (Count 13) to perform farming, logistical chores or diamond mining which was necessary for the furtherance of the common purpose. In addition, the practice of pillage (Count 14) was endorsed and ordered or tolerated by senior RUF Commanders in order to serve as compensation to satisfy their fighters,[3709] and thereby furthered the common purpose, as it ensured the willingness of the troops to fight. The punishment of the civilian population for their alleged support of opposing forces was also a means to further the joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber, therefore, finds that the crimes charged under Counts 1 to 14 were within the joint criminal enterprise and intended by the participants to further the common purpose to take power and control over Sierra Leone.

6844. para. 1983: The evidence shows that the crimes contemplated within the joint criminal enterprise in order to maintain power over the territory of Sierra Leone commenced soon after the coup in May 1997. The Junta launched fierce attacks in Districts where its regime had not yet consolidated its power.[3710] In those attacks the criminal means mentioned in the paragraph above were used in order to further the criminal common purpose by consolidating the territorial control of the Junta after the coup.

6845. para. 1984: The Chamber finds that the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise was furthered in Bo District through the following means:

(i) In order to ensure revenues as a vital source of income to the government, the Junta engaged in forced mining activity.[3711] However, the modus operandi entailed the commission of serious violence against the civilian population. Any resistance was met with brutal violence against the civilians. The AFRC and the RUF used the levers of State power in an attempt to destroy any support within the civilian population for the Kamajors.

(ii) In Bo District, in June 1997, also during the Junta period, fighters under Junta control launched an attack on Tikonko in which over 200 civilians were killed and 500 houses torched.[3712] A joint AFRC/RUF attack on Sembehun was also staged in which at least 30 civilian homes were burned.[3713] Gerihun was attacked by AFRC fighters and members of the Junta forces.[3714] These attacks were conducted on the premise that the civilians in these areas were Kamajor collaborators.

6846. para. 1985: The Chamber finds that during the Junta regime, high ranking AFRC and RUF members shared a common plan which was to take any action necessary to gain and exercise political power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas. The Chamber finds that crimes were contemplated by the participants of the joint criminal enterprise to be within the common purpose. The Chamber further finds that joint AFRC/RUF forces targeted civilians in a widespread and systematic attack designed to terrorise the population into submission through collective punishment, unlawful killings, sexual violence and physical violence. In addition, the joint AFRC/RUF forces continued to rely on the forced labour of civilians to generate revenue, used children under the age of 15 years as fighters and generally accepted pillage as a means to gratify the fighters.

iii. Plurality of persons – Commission through JCE – Bo District

6847. para. 1986: Shortly after the AFRC coup was announced, RUF fighters and Commanders, including Sesay and Kallon, as well as Bockarie, Superman, Isaac Mongor, Mike Lamin, and Eldred Collins came from their bases across Sierra Leone to Freetown to join the Junta regime on the invitation of the AFRC and the instructions of Sankoh and Bockarie. In Freetown, senior members of the RUF, including Sesay, Kallon, Superman, Mike Lamin, Gibril Massaquoi and Eldred Collins were members of the AFRC Supreme Council alongside Johnny Paul Koroma, Gullit, Bazzy, Five-Five, Zagalo and others, including SAJ Musa, who served as Vice-Chairman in the absence of Sankoh and as Minister of Mines. Members of both factions participated in meetings of the Council. Gbao remained in Kailahun Town during this time. This arrangement crystallised shortly after 25 May 1997, when Sankoh accepted Johnny Paul Koroma's invitation and instructed the RUF to join the Junta Government.[3715]

6848. para. 1987: In addition to holding positions of responsibility in the Junta Government, and attending and participating in meetings of the AFRC Supreme Council, senior members of the RUF worked with their AFRC counterparts in Freetown and other locations throughout the country. Kallon, who had been based at Northern Jungle, Kangari Hills, was received by former SLA at Teko Barracks in Makeni, Bombali District on 3 June 1997.[3716] Other RUF fighters from Kangari Hills were welcomed by former SLA stationed in nearby Masingbi, Tonkolili District.[3717] RUF fighters from various areas arrived in Kenema District within a week of the coup[3718] and a joint AFRC/RUF administration was established in Kenema Town. RUF fighters joined SLA soldiers stationed at Bo Town immediately after the coup.[3719] By June 1997 Bo District was controlled jointly by AFRC and RUF forces.[3720]

6849. para. 1988: RUF officers were also deployed at Cokerill Barracks, the former SLA headquarters during the Junta period. Despite fighting alongside AFRC forces, however, RUF fighters were not formally integrated into the AFRC military structure.

6850. para. 1989: The Chamber has found that in September 1997 Bockarie left Freetown out of dissatisfaction with the RUF's limited military integration into the AFRC Junta fighting force and out of concern that he might be assassinated.[3721] While this incident strained the relationship between the two factions, we find that it did not impact on the common purpose and the cooperation between the leadership continued. Bockarie took up residence in Kenema Town, where he remained until the ECOMOG Intervention.[3722] From Kenema Town, Bockarie communicated over radio with RUF forces throughout the country[3723] and ensured that the

AFRC/RUF cooperation continued. In Kenema Town the RUF and AFRC worked closely together[3724] and the forced mining activities were jointly conducted and controlled.[3725]

6851. para. 1990: The Chamber finds that the RUF, including in particular Sankoh, Bockarie, Sesay, Kallon, Superman, Eldred Collins, Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor, Gibril Massaquoi and other RUF Commanders began working in concert with the AFRC, including at least Johnny Paul Koroma, Gullit, Bazzy, Five-Five, SAJ Musa, Zagalo, Eddie Kanneh and others to hold power in Sierra Leone on or shortly after the 25 May 1997. The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, further finds that Gbao was also a participant to the joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber is, therefore, satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the alleged joint criminal enterprise involved a plurality of persons. The Chamber is satisfied from the evidence that the three Accused, Justice Boutet dissenting in respect of Gbao, and the other listed individuals were all acting in concert.

6852. para. 1991: While the Chamber is of the view that the participants in a joint criminal enterprise should be identified as precisely as possible,[3726] we recognise that the identity of every member of the joint criminal enterprise need not be ascertained with certainty.[3727]

6853. para. 1992: The Chamber finds that there is insufficient evidence to conclude that between 25 May 1997 and 14 February 1998, mid- and low-level RUF and AFRC Commanders as well as rankand-file fighters were themselves part of an agreement together with the more senior leaders of both movements to take control of the territory of Sierra Leone by means of the commission of crimes specified in the Statute. However, taking into account the entirety of the evidence and in particular the widespread and systematic nature of the crimes committed, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that these individuals were used by said members of the joint criminal enterprise to commit crimes that were either intended by the members to further the common purpose, or were a natural and foreseeable consequence of the implementation of the common purpose.[3728] The Chamber is satisfied that the non-members who committed crimes were sufficiently closely connected to one or more members of the joint criminal enterprise acting in furtherance of the common purpose that such crimes can properly be imputed to all members of the joint criminal enterprise when the other conditions for liability are fulfilled.

iv. Sesay - Participation in the Common Plan – Commission through JCE – Bo District

6854. para. 1993: At the inception of the JCE on or about 25 May 1997, Sesay was a Lieutenant Colonel and BFC, making him effectively the second highest RUF officer in Sierra Leone after

Bockarie. He had trained in the RUF military and political ideology at Camp Naama which qualified him as a Vanguard, a status of respect within the RUF movement.[3729]

6855. para. 1994: We are satisfied that Sesay continued to maintain his very senior position within the RUF following the coup. Sesay, together with Bockarie, approved the appointment of senior RUF Commanders to deputy ministerial positions within the Junta Government[3730] in order to integrate the RUF into the AFRC regime.[3731] He was a member of the AFRC Supreme Council and participated in the meetings of this body throughout most of the period of the Junta regime. In essence, he was one of the most important and influential RUF representatives on the Supreme Council.

6856. para. 1995: It is the Chamber's opinion that Sesay's position of command within the RUF as Lieutenant Colonel and BFC, the prestige he commanded as a Vanguard and his position of power and authority within the Junta Government coupled with his close relationship and proximity to the de facto Leader Bockarie are all considerations which are relevant in determining whether his actions amounted to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.[3732]

6857. para. 1996: The Chamber finds that, given his position of power, authority, and influence, including his role, rank, and close relationship and cooperation with Bockarie, Sesay contributed significantly to the joint criminal enterprise.

6858. para. 1997: Furthermore, the Chamber is satisfied that the government mining in Tongo Field provided an important source of revenue for the Junta Government and that this topic was discussed in AFRC Supreme Council meetings when Sesay was present.[3733] The sheer scale of the enslavement in Kenema District demonstrates that the forced mining was a planned and a systematic policy of the Junta Government devised at the highest level. The Chamber infers from the evidence that Sesay, as a member of the Supreme Council, was involved in the planning and organisation of the forced mining in Kenema District. The Chamber finds that Sesay, along with Bockarie, received diamonds from Tongo Field at the AFRC Secretariat.[3734] Eddie Kanneh, Secretary of State East for the Junta Government, arranged on one occasion for diamonds to be brought to him from Tongo Field so that they could be sold abroad in order to raise funds to purchase arms and ammunition. In addition, Sesay was personally engaged in mining for his personal benefit in Tongo Field.[3735]

6859. para. 1998: The Chamber therefore finds that Sesay made a significant contribution to the criminal means employed by the members of the joint criminal enterprise by his planning of the enslavement of civilian miners and the use of child soldiers to guard mining sites and force the miners to work at Tongo Fields.

6860. para. 1999: In addition, the Chamber finds that in Kenema District, Sesay directly participated and contributed to the common purpose by using his power and authority to compel his subordinates to arrest a suspected Kamajor supporter.[3736] Sesay used the levers of State power in an attempt to destroy civilian support for the Kamajors. In this respect, the Chamber has found that both Bockarie and Sesay used police officers, AFRC and RUF fighters to arrest and detain suspected Kamajor sympathisers and collaborators in Kenema Town. In certain instances, such individuals were detained without charges and seriously mistreated by Sesay.[3737]

6861. para. 2000: Sesay also participated in organising the availability of sufficient fighters for the RUF to allow them to maintain control over the civilian population and the captured territory. On Sesay's orders, from 1997 onwards, captured civilians were taken to Bunumbu for military training.[3738]

6862. para. 2001: It is the Chamber's finding that these criminal acts amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by Sesay who by his personal conduct furthered the common purpose by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government and by aiming to reduce or eliminate the civilian opposition to the Junta regime.

6863. para. 2002: The Chamber further concludes that Sesay intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, particularly the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose and that by this participation he significantly contributed to the commission of acts of terrorism (Count 1), unlawful killings (Count 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14) enumerated above as having been committed in Bo District between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997. The Chamber finds that Sesay shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes.

v. Kallon – Participation in the Common Plan – Commission through JCE – Bo District

6864. para. 2003: The Chamber finds that Kallon also participated and significantly contributed to the JCE in a number of ways.

6865. para. 2004: As a senior RUF official Kallon was one of the few RUF Commanders to be a member of the AFRC Supreme Council, which was a privileged position in the Junta governing body.[3739] Kallon attended AFRC Supreme Council meetings on a fairly regular basis.[3740] The Chamber considers that there is sufficient evidence to conclude that Kallon by his membership in the Supreme Council was involved in decisions or policy-making by the Supreme Council. In addition, Kallon cooperated with the AFRC at Teko Barracks and in Bo District. The Chamber is satisfied that he participated in concerted joint action between the AFRC and RUF. Even though this participation did not directly involve the commission of crimes, the Chamber recalls that it is not necessary for the participation to involve the commission of any crime,[3741] nor is it necessary for the accused to be present at the time a crime was committed.[3742] The determinative issue is whether Kallon's actions assisted or contributed to the common criminal purpose. The Chamber is satisfied that his involvement on the governing body of the Junta contributed to the joint criminal enterprise, as this body was involved in the decision-making processes through which the Junta regime determined how best to secure power and maintain control over the territory over Sierra Leone. The widespread and systematic nature of the crimes, in particular the attacks on Bo and the forced labour in Kenema District, in which the RUF was engaged indicate that such conduct was a deliberate policy of the AFRC/RUF that the Chamber finds must have been initiated by the Supreme Council, of which Kallon was a member.

6866. para. 2005: In addition to Kallon's participation in the Junta Government, we recall that he was also directly involved in the commission of crimes designed to further the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular at the diamond mining areas of Kenema District. Kallon used his bodyguards to force civilians to mine diamonds at Tongo Field, a practice which was prevalent among senior RUF and AFRC Commanders.[3743]

6867. para. 2006: The Chamber has also found that on two occasions, Kallon was present at the mining pits in Tongo Field when SBUs and other rebels shot into the pits, killing unarmed enslaved civilian miners.[3744] The Chamber finds that the killing of those civilians was part of the larger plan to terrorise the civilian population in order to suppress any opposition to the AFRC/RUF regime and that Kallon through his position and direct involvement at the diamond mines transformed this brutal policy into reality. The Chamber holds that Kallon endorsed the enslavement and the killing of civilians in order to control and exploit natural resources vital to the financial survival of the Junta Government.

6868. para. 2007: It is the Chamber's finding that these criminal acts amount to a significant contribution by Kallon which furthered the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by aiming to reduce or eliminate civilian opposition to Junta rule.

6869. para. 2008: The Chamber therefore concludes that Kallon intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, that he actively participated in the furtherance of that common purpose and that his participation significantly contributed to the commission of acts of terrorism (Count 1), unlawful killings (Count 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14) as enumerated above committed in Bo District between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997. The Chamber finds that Kallon shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes.

vi. Gbao – Participation in the Common Plan – Commission through JCE – Bo District

6870. para. 2009: The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting,[3745] finds that Gbao participated and significantly contributed to the joint criminal enterprise in a number of ways.

6871. para. 2010: We recall that Gbao was not a member of the AFRC/RUF Supreme Council and remained in Kailahun during the Junta regime. He was not directly involved or did not directly participate in any of the crimes committed in Bo District. However, the Chamber has found that Gbao was an ideology instructor and that ideology played a significant role in the RUF movement as it ensured not only the fighters' submission and compliance with the orders and instructions of the RUF leadership but also hardened their determination, their resolve and their commitment to fight to ensure the success and achievement of the ideology of the movement. It was in this spirit that the crimes alleged in the Indictment and for which the Accused are charged, were committed. Given this consideration, it is undeniable therefore, that the ideology played a central role in the objectives of the RUF.

6872. para. 2011: In making a determination on the participation of Gbao, the RUF ideology expert and instructor under the rubric of the JCE, the Chamber deems it necessary to address, inter alia, issues relating to the ideology of the RUF and how its content and philosophy impacted on its Commanders and fighters in their operational activities vis-à-vis their relationship with the civilian population.

received the same military and ideological training from the Special Forces and the Vanguards in training camps within the territory of Sierra Leone were designated as Commandos. The Chamber has found that Gbao was responsible for the teaching of the ideology to the new commando recruits.

6874. para. 2013: The Chamber concedes that holding a revolutionary idea or an ideology to change a system as the RUF and Gbao did in this case, does not, in itself, amount to or constitute a crime.[3746] However, we are of the opinion that where the evidence establishes that there is a criminal nexus between such an ideology and the crimes charged and alleged to have been committed, the perpetrators of those crimes should be held criminally accountable under the rubric of a joint criminal enterprise for the crimes so alleged in the Indictment. We recall the Simic Trial Judgement where the accused was held responsible for participating in a joint criminal enterprise for providing the "legal, political and social framework in which the participants of the JCE worked and from which they profited."[3747] We further recall the findings in the Tadic case that "while the defendant's involvement in the criminal acts must form a link in the chain of causation, it was not necessary that this participation be a sine qua non, or that the offence would not have occurred but for his participation."[3748] The Accused person does not need to have been present at the time of the crime.[3749] Therefore, the distance of Gbao to many of the crimes is not a reason for denying his participation under the basic form. What matters is that he intended or that it was foreseeable that he would further the joint criminal enterprise.

6875. para. 2014: In this regard, the relevant factors, amongst others, to be considered are Gbao's commitment to the RUF ideology; his role in propagating and implementing the said ideology as the propelling force behind the conflict; the nexus between the ideology and the joint criminal enterprise; the extent to which the crimes falling within the scope of the joint criminal enterprise were either within or were a natural and foreseeable consequences of the crimes, and how they directly or indirectly emanated from the ideology as the propelling force of the conflict, and the mainstay of the fighting force. In fact, the ideology was the source of a reinforced steadfastness and commitment by the Commanders and their fighters to the RUF in the pursuance of its major and identified goals until when they expected success to be achieved.

6876. para. 2015: Generally, the RUF ideology refers to the rationales, goals of the revolution and the means by which it should be implemented, as well as the military hierarchy, structure and protocols governing the RUF's as a fighting force.[3750] Specifically, the political ideology of the RUF called for revolution through guerrilla warfare. It consisted in the use of weapons to seek total redemption and "to procure arms for a broad-based struggle so that the rotten and selfish government is toppled" and thereafter, to restore the economic well-being and prosperity of the allegedly oppressed and suffering people of Sierra Leone.[3751] In order to achieve this, an important component of the ideology is that "the masses knowing fully well that their needs are not met by government would organise themselves and form a sort of the People's Army."[3752]

6877. para. 2016: It indeed goes without saying and the Chamber so concludes that resorting to arms to secure a total redemption and using them to topple a government which the RUF characterized as corrupt necessarily implies the resolve and determination to shed blood and commit the crimes for which the Accused are indicted.

6878. para. 2017: The Prosecution in these proceedings tendered in evidence, the manuals and documents containing the said ideology in its various components.

6879. para. 2018: This, the Chamber finds, shows that in implementing their objectives, all means geared towards achieving this goal of "to procure arms for a broad based struggle so that the rotten and selfish government is toppled", were, to the Accused and to the perpetrators, as justified as the crimes they committed in that process as alleged in the Indictment. This objective which was propounded in the RUF ideology training manual was finally, and to their satisfaction, achieved by the AFRC coup of the 25 May 1997 to which the RUF hierarchy immediately adhered to and readily participated in the Junta Government.

6880. para. 2019: The Chamber is fortified in drawing this conclusion because by receiving and adhering to this ideology and imparting it to all recruits, the RUF and the Accused knew, ought to know, and are in fact presumed to have known, that the Commanders and the fighters under their control targeted, molested and killed innocent civilians who were not taking part in hostilities.

6881. para. 2020: The Accused, their Commanders and their fighters perpetrated and committed these crimes by characterizing these civilians as collaborators of the "corrupt regime" which they were determined to topple by eroding or destroying through directly targeting and liquidating its innocent civilian power base in the course of the said "broad based struggle".

6882. para. 2021: The Chamber observes here that Exhibits 38, 273, and 367 relating to the RUF ideology contain some ideal, attractive and virtuous norms in that they proscribe and would not tolerate raping, looting not authorised by Commanders,[3753] killings or molestation of "liberated"[3754] civilians by any member of the RUF and that those who committed such violations would be visited with severe penalties including death.

6883. para. 2022: The Chamber, however, finds that those declared norms were only included to boost the domestic and international perception and image of the RUF, and were a mere farce intended to camouflage the planned enormity and gruesomeness of the ruthless brutality that characterized the actions of the RUF Commanders and their subordinates in the operational pursuance of the objectives of their "broad-based" armed struggle ideology. This is what guided and spirited the leadership of the RUF, its Commanders and fighters at the launching of their bloody crusade in Kailahun District in 1991, until the end of the conflict when victory was their hope and expectation.

6884. para. 2023: Arms and ammunition were an ideological pillar of the movement,[3755] as diamond mining was for the economic sustainability and survival of the movement.[3756] Though the stated aim of the RUF revolution may have focused on the will of the people,[3757] the capture and forced conscription of civilians was part of the organisation's way of operating from its earliest days.[3758] The ideology taught that the strength of a revolution relied on manpower; women and men, young and old.[3759] Many of the original Vanguards were forced into fighting for the RUF, including notably, Sesay, Kallon and Gbao.[3760] Often there was no alternative to accepting the RUF ideology.[3761] From its inception, the RUF adopted the strategy of the NPFL requiring that upon capturing a village, every member of that village, including the children, were involuntarily conscripted into the fighting forces.[3762]

6885. para. 2024: It was a tenet of the ideology that those who refused to join the organisation should be considered enemies.[3763] Civilian women were routinely raped during attacks, abducted from villages on the front lines and taken to serve as bush wives or sex slaves for RUF fighters. Civilians were targeted as a matter of course for killing and physical violence by fighters during RUF attacks. In the Chamber's considered view the political ideology of the RUF involved the commission of crimes under the Statute such as those alleged and charged in the Indictment, in pursuance of its revolutionary goals.

6886. para. 2025: The military ideology of the RUF required respect for the chain of command and the maintenance of discipline and order within the ranks.[3764] It also included certain tactical instructions,[3765] gave instructions on the proper comportment of fighters,[3766] and provided directions for peaceful interactions between fighters and civilians.[3767] The Chamber considers that the RUF's military ideology provided a degree of specialisation and organisation, which in turn allowed the RUF to engage in a joint criminal enterprise that utilised the commission of crimes under the Statute in order to take power and control in Sierra Leone, in particular its diamond mining areas.

6887. para. 2026: In the course of the trial the Chamber has heard extensive evidence on the RUF ideology and the part, if any, it played in the conflict culminating in the commission of the crimes that form the bases of the Indictment. In this regard the Chamber is of the view that the launching of the RUF movement was done with an ideology. The ideology consisted inter alia, in "the use of weapons to seek total redemption" and to "procure arms for a broad-based struggle so that the rotten and selfish government is toppled." This ideology was taught to all RUF military trainees.

6888. para. 2027: Indeed, the Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, takes the view that it is the objectives spelt in the ideology that guided and spirited the leadership of the RUF, the Accused Persons, the Commanders and their fighters, and reinforced their commitment to the movement and their steadfastness in combat in the pursuit of achieving the identified ideological goals of the RUF.

6889. para. 2028: Gbao singles himself out, the Chamber finds, Justice Boutet dissenting, as a very knowledgeable and competent Commander in the RUF ideology. He taught it in the RUF military training bases in Sierra Leone. For instance, the Chamber has found that the killing by Bockarie of 64 alleged Kamajors in Kailahun in the presence of Gbao and the killing by Major Rocky in Kono of about 40 innocent civilians who were innocently jubilating and publicly manifesting their support for ECOMOG for coming to save them from the RUF, had a nexus with the RUF ideological objective of toppling the "selfish and corrupt" regime by eliminating all those who supported that regime and who, a fortiori, were considered as enemies to the AFRC/RUF Junta alliance.

6890. para. 2029: In fact, the Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, has further found that the crimes of widespread killings, rape, sexual violence, widespread "short sleeved and long sleeved" and "one love" amputations, extermination and acts of terrorism committed by the Accused and RUF fighters and for which they are charged, were in application and furtherance of the goals stipulated in the ideology of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone. This, the Chamber finds, involved terrorising the civilian population by massively killing innocent civilians, pillaging and burning the houses of those they considered and branded as supporters of the "corrupt government" and enemies to the AFRC/RUF Junta.

6891. para. 2030: It is the Chamber's view, Justice Boutet dissenting, that the objectives stipulated in the RUF ideology remained the same and that they dictated the commission of the acts and crimes that are alleged even after the AFRC coup of the 25 May 2007 and for which the Accused are indicted.

6892. para. 2031: It is therefore, the Chamber's view, Justice Boutet dissenting, and in light of the foregoing, undeniable that the ideology played a key and central role central role in pursuing the objectives of the RUF and that it was a motivating and propelling dynamic behind the commission and perpetration of the several crimes charged in the Indictment and in respect of which the Accused stand indicted.

6893. para. 2032: On the basis of the foregoing, the Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, finds that there is convincing evidence to warrant the inference that without the ideology there would have been no joint criminal enterprise and that the revolution, of which the joint criminal enterprise was a key element, is a product of the ideology. In effect, the revolution was the ideology in action.

6894. para. 2033: Gbao's status, assignment, rank and personal relationship with Sankoh, as well as his knowledge of the RUF's ideology, are all factors that, in the Chamber's considered view, demonstrate that Gbao had considerable prestige and power within the RUF in Kailahun District.

6895. para. 2034: As OSC, Gbao had a supervisory role over the IDU, the MPs, the IO, and the G5. The IO was essentially an internal covert spy unit, the IDU investigated crimes, the MPs punished crimes and the G5 was responsible for the recruitment of civilian slave labour. Although the evidence is insufficient to conclude that Gbao had effective control over these units as OSC, his appointment to this position by Sankoh, his status as a Vanguard and his power to issue recommendations certainly gave him considerable influence over the decisions taken by these bodies.

6897. para. 2036: There is ample evidence that civilians were enslaved and subjected to physical violence while working on RUF government farms.[3772] We are also satisfied that civilian farming in Kailahun District during the Junta period was coordinated by the RUF on a large scale and the produce used by the RUF in their operations[3773] and that Gbao was involved in the planning of the enslavement of civilians for those farms.

6898. para. 2037: Gbao also worked very closely with the G5 in Kailahun Town to manage the large-scale, forced civilian farming that existed in Kailahun between 1996 and 2001, including the period between 25 May 1997 and 14 February 1998. The produce from RUF government farms was collected by the G5 and given to Gbao, who in turn handed it over it to Sesay[3774] for commercialisation, though the RUF appointed business contractors, at mostly the Guinea, and at times, the Liberian border. In 1997 and 1998, Gbao met with civilian Commanders and instructed them about the quantities of produce civilians in their towns were to produce and labour they were to provide in support of the war. Civilians who refused to obey these instructions were severely punished.[3775] Produce was turned over to the G5 or S4 who organised civilians to carry them by foot from smaller centres to Gbao in Kailahun Town.[3776] Civilians were also forced to work on Gbao's personal farm in 1997 and 1998.[3777] Gbao's bodyguard, Korpomeh, kept guard over the civilians.[3778] The food produced on these farms was exclusively for Gbao's use and the civilians were not paid for their labour.

6899. para. 2038: The Chamber is satisfied that there is compelling direct and circumstantial evidence to justify the inference that the ideology of the RUF, in its normative and operational settings, significantly contributed to the commission of the crimes falling within the joint criminal enterprise or were natural and foreseeable consequences of the same.

6900. para. 2039: We are also satisfied that Gbao's role in maintaining order in the fighting force as OSS Overall IDU Commander and his involvement in designing, securing and organising the forced labour of civilians to produce foodstuffs significantly contributed to maintaining the strength and cohesiveness of the RUF fighting force. In addition the Chamber finds that given his position of power and authority in Kailahun District, Gbao's failure to properly investigate allegations made by his ten year-old bodyguard that a civilian woman had "sabotaged" a mission, and his subsequent instruction that the woman should be publicly beaten,[3779] would have had a demonstrative effect, designed to compel the obedience of the civilian population in Kailahun District to RUF authority.

6901. para. 2040: The Chamber finds that Gbao did not share the intent of the principal perpetrators to commit the crimes committed against civilians under Counts 3 to 5 (unlawful killings), and Count 14 (pillage) in Bo District in furtherance of the joint criminal enterprise.

6902. para. 2041: As a staff Commander, Gbao did not have effective control over RUF fighters; his duty in this situation was to ensure that what, in the vocabulary of the ideology, were deemed to be crimes were investigated properly and to verify that arrests or punishments were carried out, and where they were not, to report this matter up the chain of command. Although the Chamber has heard general evidence that Gbao received reports from IDU agents,[3780] the Chamber has heard no credible evidence that would tend to indicate that Gbao actually received reports regarding unlawful killings. There is also insufficient credible evidence to prove that Gbao failed in his duty to ensure that investigations were properly undertaken, or that he failed to report punishments meted out or lack thereof up the chain of command until the time of the Intervention. The Chamber considers that Gbao's ability to exercise his powers effectively in areas where Bockarie ordered the commission of crimes is doubtful.

6903. para. 2042: In light of the whole of the evidence, the Chamber is not satisfied that there is a sufficient basis from which to infer that Gbao shared with the principal perpetrators the requisite intention to commit the crimes charged and proved under Counts 3-5 (unlawful killings) and Count 14 (pillage) in order to further the purposes of the joint criminal enterprise between 25 May 1997 and 19 February 1998.

6904. para. 2043: The Chamber is satisfied, however, that RUF fighters deliberately killed civilians on a massive scale during military attacks from the time of the initial invasion in 1991.[3781] We have found that individual civilians were deliberately and intentionally killed in Bo District and Kenema District as part of a widespread and systematic attack and that massive numbers of civilians were killed in the attack on Tikonko, Bo District.

6905. para. 2044: We note that the RUF ideology prohibited violence against civilians who had accepted the RUF's core beliefs.[3782] The Chamber finds this qualification to the prohibition on violence against civilians to be significant. Moreover, those who did not support the revolution were considered "enemies".[3783] It is our considered view that the RUF ideology divided civilians into two groups: those who supported the RUF, who were to be controlled and used in service of the revolution, and those who did not support the revolution and were, therefore, enemies to be defeated or eliminated by any available means including killing. Neutrality was not an option.

6906. para. 2045: This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the G5, which managed the capture and deployment of civilians in furtherance of the RUF's goals, was considered to be a security agency falling under the purview of the OSC, along with the internal intelligence agencies and the military police. We consider that the existence of a category of potential civilian "enemies of the revolution" created an environment where the commission of crimes against certain groups of civilians was acceptable, and provided a theoretical justification for these abuses.

6907. para. 2046: Given Gbao's role as IDU Commander charged with investigating crimes against civilians, his role as OSC Commander which included overseeing the G5 and MPs, as well as his position as a Vanguard and a senior Commander in the RUF, the Chamber is satisfied that Gbao either knew or had reason to know that the deliberate, widespread killing of civilians occurred during RUF military assaults. Similarly, he knew or had reason to know that suspected Kamajor collaborators would be killed and that pillage took place during AFRC/RUF operations. Despite having knowledge that crimes were being committed by RUF fighters on a large scale, Gbao continued to pursue the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

6908. para. 2047: In respect of Gbao's intent in relation to Count 1 (acts of terrorism), there is evidence that the burning of civilian houses and targeting of traditional civilian authorities was a tactic used by the RUF from 1991 onwards.[3784] However, the Chamber is not satisfied, on this evidence alone, that Gbao intended such acts to occur during the Junta period in furtherance of the joint criminal enterprise. Furthermore, the Prosecution has failed to adduce evidence of acts of terrorism in the parts of Kailahun District that were controlled by the RUF and where Gbao was located. The Junta Government exercised control over most of Sierra Leone, and the RUF forces acted jointly with the AFRC forces in relation to other locations in the country during the period in question. In this context, we find a prior pattern of conduct on the part of the RUF to be insufficient, without more, to demonstrate that it was reasonably foreseeable to Gbao that Bockarie and other members of the joint criminal enterprise would commit crimes with the specific intent of instilling terror in the civilian population.[3785] Accordingly, the Chamber finds that Gbao bears no responsibility for acts of terrorism (Count 1) in Bo District between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997.

6909. para. 2048: The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved under unlawful killings (Count 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14), which he did not intend as a means of achieving the common purpose, might be committed by other members of the joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control.

6910. para. 2049: The majority of the Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, therefore finds that Gbao is criminally responsible for the crimes enumerated above in relation to Bo District and proved under unlawful killings (Count 3 to 5) and pillage (Count 14), to have occurred between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997 as a member of the joint criminal enterprise.

6911. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

6912. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

6913. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[6] It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March

6914. and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

6915. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the

RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

6916. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

6917. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 6, p.690: In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

6918. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 7, p. 690: The majority opinion also stresses Gbao's role as the Overall Security Commander ("OSC") during the Junta period and between the time of the Intervention in mid-February 1998 and the time that the AFRC members of the joint criminal enterprise broke away from the RUF in May 1998. Although I accept that Gbao's de jure position as OSC was important in Kailahun District, it is insufficient in my opinion to conclude that he participated in and therefore made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. No evidence was put forth by the Prosecution to demonstrate that the OSC played any significant role, or that this was a position of such authority so as to allow such proper inferences to be drawn regarding the nature and extent of Gbao's contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.

6919. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

6920. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p .691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

6922. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

6923. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 12, p. 692: In my opinion, there is reasonable doubt as to whether Gbao intended to contribute to a common design between the RUF and the AFRC, which necessarily contemplated the commission of crimes within the Statute in order to achieve power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6924. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

6925. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 14, p. 693: The majority also finds that Gbao made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by organising agricultural production for the RUF in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 until April 1998. In their efforts, the RUF used forced civilian labour, including enslaved civilians to perform multiple agricultural tasks. I find that there is only a limited relationship between the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District and the furtherance of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise during the period of the Junta Government. In my opinion there is insufficient evidence to conclude that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District was directed to achieving the goals of the joint criminal enterprise. This is especially so when compared with the forced mining in Tongo Field, which I agree was done to directly finance and contribute to the joint criminal enterprise.

6926. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p .693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6927. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

6928. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 17, p. 693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

6929. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

(v) Kenema District

a. Crimes commited – Kenema District

6930. para. 2050: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminal responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute and, or in addition, Article 6(3) of the Statute for the crimes committed in Kenema District between 25 May 1997 to 19 February 1998. The Chamber has found that the following crimes were committed:

1. Unlawful Killings (Counts 1 to 5) (…)
2. Physical Violence (Counts 1 to 2 and 11) (…)
3. Enslavement (Counts 1 and 13) (…)

b. Personal commission – Kenema District

i. Sesay – Personal commission – Kenema District

6931. para. 2052: The Chamber recalls that Sesay participated in the beating of TF1-129 in Kenema Town by threatening TF1-129 and firing his gun between TF1-129's legs.[3786] Without diminishing the seriousness of Sesay's conduct, we do not consider this conduct, when taken alone, to be of sufficiently similar gravity to the crimes articulated in Article 2(a) to Article 2(h) of the Statute to constitute commission of an inhumane act. Rather, we have found that Sesay's conduct and the subsequent severe beatings of TF1-129 during his arrest cumulatively amount to an inhumane act as charged in Count 11.[3787] As the evidence does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that Sesay personally committed the beatings that followed, we will determine Sesay's liability for this crime consistently with our findings on joint criminal enterprise.

ii. Kallon and Gbao – Personal commission – Kenema District

6932. para. 2053: The Prosecution has not proven beyond reasonable doubt that Kallon or Gbao personally committed any of the crimes in Kenema District.

c. Commission through JCE – Kenema District

i. Existence of a common plan and Plurality of persons – Commission through JCE – Kenema District 6933. para. 2054: All the crimes alleged to have been committed in Kenema District fall within the time period of the Junta Government and we find that the common plan and the plurality of participants remained the same.

ii. Sesay and Kallon – Participation in the Common Plan – Commission through JCE – Kenema District

6934. para. 2055: It is the Chamber's finding that the acts committed by Sesay and Kallon and described above with respect to Bo District amount to a significant contribution to the furtherance of the common purpose by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by implementing the policy of eliminating civilian opposition to the Junta regime. We find that the above findings in relation to the participation and significant contribution of Sesay and Kallon apply mutatis mutandis to the crimes committed in Kenema District.[3788]

6935. para.2056: The Chamber therefore concludes that Sesay and Kallon intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose and that by their participation, they significantly contributed to the commission of acts of terrorism (Count 1), collective punishments (Count 2), unlawful killings (Count 3 to 5), physical violence (Count 11), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) as enumerated above which were committed in Kenema District between 25 May 1997 and 19 February 1998. The Chamber finds that both Sesay and Kallon shared, with the other participants, in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes.

iii. Gbao – Participation in the Common Plan – Commission through JCE – Kenema District

6937. para. 2058: In addition, and in respect of Count 11[3790] and Count 13 in Kenema District, we recall our finding that the existence of a category of potential civilian "enemies of the revolution" created an environment where the commission of crimes against certain groups of civilians was acceptable, and provided a theoretical justification for these abuses. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that Gbao either knew or had reason to know that the deliberate, widespread physical violence against civilians occurred during RUF military assaults. Similarly, he knew or had reason to know that suspected Kamajor collaborators would be killed or that great suffering or serious physical injury would have been inflicted upon these individuals. We also find that he knew or had reason to know that civilians were enslaved in order to pursue the common purpose. Despite knowing that unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), physical violence (Count 11) and enslavement (Count 13) were being committed by RUF fighters on a large scale, Gbao continued to pursue the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

6938. para. 2059: The Chamber recalls its finding above on Count 1 and finds that this applies mutatis mutandis to Kenema and that Gbao is not responsible for acts of terrorism in Kenema District. For similar reasons, the Chamber finds that it was not reasonably foreseeable to Gbao that Bockarie and other members of the joint criminal enterprise would commit crimes with the specific intent of punishing civilians collectively for acts that they may or may not have committed. Accordingly, it finds that Gbao is not responsible for collective punishments (Count 2) in Kenema District.

6939. para. 2060: The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved under Counts 3 to 5 (unlawful killings), Count 11 (physical violence) and Count 13 (enslavement) which he did not intend as a means of achieving the common purpose, might be committed by other members of the joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control.

6940. para. 2061: The majority of the Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, therefore, finds that Gbao as a member of the joint criminal enterprise is criminally responsible for the crimes enumerated above in relation to Kenema District and proved under Counts 3 to 5 (unlawful killings), Count 11 (physical violence) and Count 13 (enslavement) to have occurred between 1 June 1997 and 30 June 1997.

6941. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

6942. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

6943. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[6] It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March 1999 and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

6944. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the

RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

6945. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

6946. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 6, p. 690: In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

6947. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 7, p. 690: The majority opinion also stresses Gbao's role as the Overall Security Commander ("OSC") during the Junta period and between the time of the Intervention in mid-February 1998 and the time that the AFRC members of the joint criminal enterprise broke away from the RUF in May 1998. Although I accept that Gbao's de jure position as OSC was important in Kailahun District, it is insufficient in my opinion to conclude that he participated in and therefore made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. No evidence was put forth by the Prosecution to demonstrate that the OSC played any significant role, or that this was a position of such authority so as to allow such proper inferences to be drawn regarding the nature and extent of Gbao's contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.

6948. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

6949. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p. 691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

6951. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

6952. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 12, p. 692: In my opinion, there is reasonable doubt as to whether Gbao intended to contribute to a common design between the RUF and the AFRC, which necessarily contemplated the commission of crimes within the Statute in order to achieve power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6953. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

6954. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 14, p. 693: The majority also finds that Gbao made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by organising agricultural production for the RUF in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 until April 1998. In their efforts, the RUF used forced civilian labour, including enslaved civilians to perform multiple agricultural tasks. I find that there is only a limited relationship between the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District and the furtherance of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise during the period of the Junta Government. In my opinion there is insufficient evidence to conclude that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District was directed to achieving the goals of the joint criminal enterprise. This is especially so when compared with the forced mining in Tongo Field, which I agree was done to directly finance and contribute to the joint criminal enterprise.

6955. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p. 693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6956. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

6957. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para.17, p.693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

6958. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

(vi) Kono District

a. Crimes committed – Kono District

6959. para. 2062: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute and, or in addition, Article 6(3) of the Statute for crimes committed in Kono District between about 14 February 1998 and about 30 June 1998.

6960. para. 2063: The Chamber has found that the following crimes were committed during the period from 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998, which period we have found corresponds to the continuation of the AFRC/RUF joint criminal enterprise:

1. Unlawful Killings (Counts 1 to 5) (…)
2. Sexual Violence (Counts 1 and 6 to 9) (…)
3. Physical Violence (Counts 1 to 2 and 10 to 11) (…)
4. Enslavement (Count 13) (…)
5. Pillage (Count 14) (…)
6. Acts of Terrorism and Collective Punishments (Counts 1 to 2) (…)

6961. para. 2065: The Chamber finds that the following crimes were committed by RUF members in Kono District after the joint criminal enterprise ceased to exist sometime in late April 1998:

1. Unlawful Killings (Counts 1 and 4 to 5) (…)
2. Sexual Violence (Counts 1 and 6 to 9) (…)
3. Physical Violence (Counts 1 and 10 to 11) (…)
4. Enslavement (Count 13) (…)

b. Personal commission – Kono District

6962. para. 2066: The Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Sesay, Kallon or Gbao personally committed any of the crimes in Kono District.

c. Commission through JCE – Kono District

i. Continuation of the Common Plan – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

6963. para. 2067: Following the 14 February 1998 ECOMOG Intervention, the status of the AFRC/RUF alliance drastically changed. The Junta was no longer in power and was unable to depend on the government or administrative apparatus. The senior leadership of the RUF and AFRC had to reorganise themselves in order to achieve their common purpose that was now focused on regaining power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone. A new plan to achieve that purpose was contemplated by high-ranking AFRC and RUF leaders. It was contemplated that Kono District and Koidu town were to be attacked in order to operate the insurgency from that strategic area. Kono was of strategic importance due to its diamond mines and in order to secure territory that would open a passage to Kailahun, as Bo and Kenema were under the control of ECOMOG and Kamajor forces.[3792]

6964. para. 2068: The participants to the common purpose remained largely the same as during the Junta period with small modifications as not all members of the Supreme Council were able to join the retreating forces. The participants however included, Bockarie, Johnny Paul Koroma, Sesay, Superman, Kallon, Kamara, Kanu, Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor and other senior officials of the RUF and AFRC such as Gbao, Justice Boutet dissenting.

6965. para. 2069: Despite the new formulation and drastic strategic change, the Chamber finds that the common purpose between leading members of the AFRC and RUF continued to exist. As will be explained in detail below the Chamber finds that it continued to exist until sometime in the end of April 1998. The Chamber finds that the common purpose and the means contemplated within remained the same as they were as there was no fundamental change. The Chamber therefore finds that it was not a new common purpose that was agreed upon by the participants at this stage but a continuation of the common purpose that was in place during the Junta regime.

6966. para. 2070: More specifically, the Chamber considers that the actions of the AFRC and RUF fighters during Operation Pay Yourself in Bombali District, in which fighters were told to loot civilian property in lieu of pay, was a continuation of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. There was a widespread commission by RUF and AFRC fighters of unlawful killings, rapes, sexual slavery, 'forced marriages,' mutilations, enslavement, pillage and the enlistment, conscription and use of child soldiers to participate actively in hostilities during the attack on Kono and in the subsequent period of joint AFRC/RUF control over Kono District. This demonstrates that the common purpose agreed to by the AFRC and RUF leadership continued to contemplate the commission of crimes within the Statute as a means of increasing its exercise of power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6967. para. 2071: As the AFRC and RUF no longer controlled the revenues and resources of Sierra Leone, they could not afford to pay their fighters. We have found that "Operation Pay Yourself" was announced over the BBC by Johnny Paul Koroma and Bockarie and that consequently RUF and AFRC fighters looted civilian property.[3793] We have found that looting became a systemic feature of RUF and AFRC operations from the announcement of "Operation Pay Yourself" until the end of the Indictment period. This widespread and systematic looting of property allowed the RUF and AFRC to maintain their fighting forces and became a key component of the common plan to regain power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6968. para. 2072: The Chamber therefore finds that despite the change of circumstances following the retreat from Freetown after the ECOMOG intervention, the leading members of the AFRC and RUF maintained the common purpose to take power and control over Sierra Leone. The Chamber further finds that the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise established at the time of the coup in May 1997 remained in place from 14 February 1998 onwards, and as will be explained below, until sometime in the end of April 1998.

6969. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

ii. Rift between the AFRC and RUF in April 1998 – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

6970. para. 2073: The Chamber has also found that following the capture and consolidation of the control of Koidu Town a major rift occurred between the AFRC and RUF forces. It resulted from claims by Bockarie and other senior RUF officials that the RUF should take command over the AFRC, as the RUF was more experienced in guerrilla tactics. The dispute culminated in the humiliation of Johnny Paul Koroma, the most senior official and former Chairman of the Junta Government, and the rape of his wife by Sesay in Buedu. In addition, Gullit, the most senior AFRC after Johnny Paul Koroma, was beaten by Bockarie, arrested and diamonds were seized from him. Furthermore, Kallon executed two AFRC fighters and attempted to prevent the AFRC from holding muster parades, thereby openly challenging the AFRC to operate as an independent organisation.[3794] Following this rift, Gullit announced his plan that the AFRC troops would withdraw from Kono District to join SAJ Musa in Koinadugu District.[3795] These events led to the departure of the majority of AFRC fighters from Kono District. Thereafter the AFRC contemplated their own plan to "re-instate the army",[3796] which plan did not involve the RUF. Following departure of AFRC Forces, Gullit refused to accept orders from the RUF and ignored a directive from Superman to return to Kono District.[3797]

6971. para. 2074: Following the last joined operation between the RUF and AFRC attacking ECOMOG at Sewafe Bridge, which took place sometime in late April, the Chamber finds that the common plan between the AFRC and RUF ceased to exist. Each group thereafter had its own individual plan.

6972. para. 2075: The Chamber finds that after this breakaway, and for the remainder of the timeframes pleaded in relation to Kono District in the Indictment, the AFRC and RUF remained in sporadic contact and cooperated occasionally. However, we find that there is insufficient evidence to demonstrate that the senior members of the two groups, including Bockarie, Sesay, Superman, Kallon, Gbao, Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five acted jointly after the breakaway of most AFRC senior Commanders and troops sometime in late April 1998.

6973. para. 2076: The Chamber therefore finds that the common purpose between senior members of the AFRC and RUF that continued to exist after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998, ceased to exist in late April 1998. The Chamber, therefore, holds that at that time no responsibility can be imputed to Sesay, Kallon or Gbao for criminal acts committed by any AFRC fighter under the mode of a joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber recalls its previous finding that the Prosecution only pleaded a joint criminal enterprise between senior members of the AFRC and RUF, but not a joint criminal enterprise between leading members of the RUF ortanisation.

iii. Plurality of persons – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

6974. para. 2077: The Chamber finds that the following members participated in the joint criminal enterprise following the retreat from February 1998 until the common purpose ceased to exist in April 1998: Superman, Isaac Mongor, Mike Lamin, Johnny Paul Koroma, Gullit, Bazzy and Five-Five, and initially SAJ Musa. At this time, Bockarie was in Kenema District,[3798] Kallon was in Bo District[3799] and Gbao was in Kailahun.[3800] Sesay was in Makeni, but met his family and a group of senior RUF and AFRC fighters, including Johnny Paul Koroma, SAJ Musa, FSY Koroma, SO Williams, Superman, Mike Lamin, Peter Vandi and Isaac Mongor at RDF Junction in Port Loko District.[3801]

6975. para. 2078: Shortly after announcing "Operation Pay Yourself," Bockarie fled Kenema Town for Buedu, the RUF headquarters in Kailahun District. Most of the RUF and AFRC forces stationed in Bo and Kenema District retreated to Kailahun District.

6976. para. 2079: The Chamber is satisfied that SAJ Musa did not wish to work with and be subordinated to the RUF, whom he did not respect because they were not professional soldiers.[3802] He left the forces before they proceeded on the Kono attack. SAJ Musa did not communicate with the joint AFRC/RUF forces and did not cooperate with them in any way.[3803] The Chamber, therefore, finds that SAJ Musa withdrew as a participant from the criminal enterprise in February 1998. The Chamber, therefore, holds that no responsibility can be imputed to Sesay, Kallon or Gbao as a result of criminal acts committed by SAJ Musa or fighters under his control after his departure for Koinadugu District in February 1998.

6977. para. 2080: The Chamber is not satisfied that between 14 February 1998 and beginning of May 1998, CO Rocky, Rambo RUF, AFRC Commander Savage and his deputy, Staff Sergeant Alhaji were members of the joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber however finds that they were directly subordinate to and used by members of the joint criminal enterprise to commit crimes that were either intended by the members to further the common design, or which were a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the common purpose.

6978. para. 2081: Based on the foregoing, the Chamber finds that Bockarie, Sesay, Superman, Kallon, Gbao, Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor and other senior RUF leaders worked in concert with senior AFRC members including Gullit, Bazzy, Five-Five, Johnny Paul Koroma and Eddie Kanneh up until some point in April 1998 when Gullit and other senior AFRC Commanders departed for Koinadugu District with the majority of AFRC fighters. (Justice Boutet dissenting as to Gbao's participation in)

6979. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

6980. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

6981. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[6] It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March 1999 and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

6982. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

6983. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

6984. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 6, p. 690: In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

6985. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 7, p. 690: The majority opinion also stresses Gbao's role as the Overall Security Commander ("OSC") during the Junta period and between the time of the Intervention in mid-February 1998 and the time that the AFRC members of the joint criminal enterprise broke away from the RUF in May 1998. Although I accept that Gbao's de jure position as OSC was important in Kailahun District, it is insufficient in my opinion to conclude that he participated in and therefore made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. No evidence was put forth by the Prosecution to demonstrate that the OSC played any significant role, or that this was a position of such authority so as to allow such proper inferences to be drawn regarding the nature and extent of Gbao's contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.

6986. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

6987. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p. 691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

6989. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

6990. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 12, p. 692: In my opinion, there is reasonable doubt as to whether Gbao intended to contribute to a common design between the RUF and the AFRC, which necessarily contemplated the commission of crimes within the Statute in order to achieve power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6991. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

6992. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 14, p. 693: The majority also finds that Gbao made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by organising agricultural production for the RUF in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 until April 1998. In their efforts, the RUF used forced civilian labour, including enslaved civilians to perform multiple agricultural tasks. I find that there is only a limited relationship between the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District and the furtherance of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise during the period of the Junta Government. In my opinion there is insufficient evidence to conclude that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District was directed to achieving the goals of the joint criminal enterprise. This is especially so when compared with the forced mining in Tongo Field, which I agree was done to directly finance and contribute to the joint criminal enterprise.

6993. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p. 693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

6994. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

6995. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 17, p. 693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

6996. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

iv. Sesay – Participation in the Common Plan – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

6997. para. 2082: The Chamber has found that Sesay participated in meetings while in Makeni to plan the Koidu operation. The Chamber has found from the evidence that looting in Makeni and during the journey from Makeni to Koidu Town was systematic and widespread. The Chamber is satisfied that Sesay approved those crimes. We infer from the evidence that Sesay, as one of the highest ranking RUF officers in Makeni at that time, did not take any action to prevent the looting, thereby tacitly approving and encouraging the commission of these crimes.[3804] The Chamber finds that Sesay's presence during Operation Pay Yourself in Makeni and his tacit endorsement of the looting contributed to the overall objective of the common purpose, given his power, authority, rank, position and status as BFC within the RUF and his important membership in the AFRC Supreme Council.

6998. para. 2083: The Chamber found that Sesay was present and moved with the troops during the attack on Koidu Town. Even though he was not actively engaged in this operation, he was still recovering from the injury he had sustained during the attack on Bo Town, the Operation Commander Superman was subordinate to Sesay during the attack.[3805] Furthermore, the Chamber finds that Sesay was actively involved in the overall planning of this operation. Sesay's participation is also demonstrated by his outrage over two retreating fighters and their execution by him, thereby setting an example and pressing the troops to achieve their goal of capturing Koidu, which was essential to the overall objective of the joint criminal enterprise.

6999. para. 2084: After the successful attack on Koidu Town, Sesay organised an integrated AFRC/RUF command structure in Koidu Town. Sesay appointed Superman overall Commander in Kono District and Kallon served as his deputy. At a meeting with Johnny Paul Koroma organised by Sesay prior to his departure from Koidu Town, Koroma instructed the combined AFRC/RUF fighters that they should kill civilians in Koidu Town and burn civilian houses.[3806] Sesay endorsed these instructions and in his own directions to the fighters, told them that Koidu

Town should be made a civilian-free area, meaning that civilians should be killed, and that civilian houses should be burned because the civilians were traitors.[3807] These orders were carried out.

7000. para. 2085: After Sesay's departure from Koidu Town, he was based primarily in Buedu, Kailahun District, which also served as the RUF headquarters where Bockarie was also operating. We conclude that Sesay's continuing assignment as BFC and his close relationship and proximity to Bockarie gave Sesay a great deal of authority during this period. Sesay received regular radio reports from Kono District, including reports of crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters. Sesay also had knowledge of joint AFRC/RUF activities in the District through his bodyguards who were present in the area.

7001. para. 2086: Sesay was also involved in mining activities in Kono District. The RUF mining Commanders reported directly to Sesay. He visited the mines to collect diamonds, signed-off on the mining log-books and transported diamonds to Bockarie and also took them to Liberia.[3808] The Chamber has held that Sesay, Bockarie and other senior RUF and AFRC members had bodyguards who worked as mining Commanders, supervising mining by enslaved civilians. Sesay's bodyguards were also specifically tasked to bring him intelligence reports from the field. The Chamber finds, therefore, that Sesay participated in the forced labour in diamond mines in Kono District between 14 February and May 1998 in order to further the common purpose.

7002. para. 2087: From his base in Kailahun District, Sesay ordered that all civilians be trained and that the SBUs be armed with small firearms.[3809] As a result many civilians from 10 to 25 years of age were trained in Buedu at that time over a two-week-period. [3810] Sesay himself had SBUs under his direct control, some of which were used on the frontlines.[3811]

7003. para. 2088: Bockarie and Sesay ordered the training base to be established at Yengema. Sesay was personally involved in the planning and the creation of the base. The Yengema training base operated until the end of the disarmament process in Sierra Leone.[3812] The training Commander, reported to Bockarie through Sesay,[3813] until Bockarie left the RUF in December 1999; thereafter the training Commander reported to Sesay only.[3814] The training of new recruits was essential to the common purpose of the RUF and AFRC as it ensured the maintenance of the military manpower and the success of operations.

7004. para. 2089: Considering the assignment and position as a senior Commander in the RUF forces and his close personal relationship to the "de facto" Leader Bockarie, the Chamber finds that Sesay significantly contributed to the joint criminal enterprise and that he understood the overall context in which his actions took place. The Chamber is satisfied that Sesay knew that his participation formed part of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998. We are also satisfied that Sesay knew or had reason to know that the victims of the crimes committed in Kono District were not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the commission of the criminal acts.

7005. para. 2090: It is the Chamber's finding that the acts found above to have been committed by Sesay amount to a significant contribution to the furtherance of the common purpose by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by aiming to reduce or eliminate civilian opposition to the Junta rule.

7006. para. 2091: The Chamber therefore concludes that Sesay intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose. By his participation he significantly contributed to the commission of crimes of acts of terrorism (Count 1), collective punishment (Count 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Count 11), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) as enumerated above. These crimes were committed in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and April/May 1998.

7007. para. 2092: The Chamber finds that Sesay shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes. In particular, the Chamber finds that the fact that Sesay endorsed Koroma's instructions to the AFRC/RUF fighters to burn houses and kill civilians in Koidu Town in March 1998 indicates that he shared the same intent as Koroma to commit these crimes in pursuance of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. Further, the fact that Sesay and Bockarie jointly ordered the establishment of the Yengema training base indicates that he shared the same intent as Bockarie to force civilians to engage in military training, in pursuance of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

v. Kallon – Participation in the Common Plan – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

7008. para. 2093: Kallon was a senior Commander, Vanguard and former AFRC Supreme Council member. In his high ranking position he was involved in the planning and execution of the attack against Koidu Town. As discussed, Kallon had an active combat role during the attack. Kallon was also present at the meeting where Johnny Paul Koroma and Sesay gave instructions to the fighters for civilians in Kono to be killed and their homes burned because they were traitors. The Chamber recalls that at that meeting, the creation of an integrated AFRC/RUF command structure for Kono was announced and Kallon was appointed deputy to Superman. Kallon was present in Koidu Town when the AFRC/RUF fighters unlawfully killed civilians and burned their houses in accordance with the instructions given by Sesay and Johnny Paul Koroma. The Chamber finds that Kallon's subsequent conduct in Kono District demonstrates that he agreed to the order issued by Sesay and Johnny Paul Koroma and endorsed their actions. This is demonstrated in particular by the crimes committed and further discussed in paragraphs 2094 to 2101.

7009. para. 2094: The Chamber has found that between April and August 1998, Kallon was able to give orders to troops that were obeyed and he commanded troops within his area of responsibility of laying ambushes.[3815] Kallon was responsible for mounting ambushes against ECOMOG troops along the Makeni-Kono Highway.[3816] The Chamber has found in the joint AFRC/RUF hierarchy in Kono District, that Kallon was an important and influential Commander who enjoyed considerable respect, power, authority and prestige.

7010. para. 2095: The Chamber has found that children under the age of 15 years were widely used in the attack on Koidu Town and during the period of AFRC/RUF joint control over the district.[3817] The Chamber has also found that Kallon had bodyguards who were under the age of 15 years and that he knew the SBUs were used to force the enslaved mining and guard the mining sites. During 1998 and 1999, Kallon brought persons under 15 years of age to be trained by the RUF at Bunumbu.[3818] The Chamber finds that Kallon was therefore engaged in the creation and maintenance of a system of enslavement that was created by the RUF in order to maintain and strengthen their fighting force. The Chamber finds that through these acts Kallon participated and significantly contributed to the common purpose.

7011. para. 2096: The Chamber further finds that Kallon was actively engaged in the abduction for and planning of training of SBUs in Kono District in February/March 1998.[3819]

7012. para. 2097: The Chamber has also found that Kallon, like Sesay and Bockarie, had bodyguards who supervised on his behalf "private" mining by enslaved civilians. Kallon also visited mining sites in Kono District during this period. Likewise, we have found that Kallon received regular communications about the activities of the joint forces in Kono.

7013. para. 2098: We have found that Kallon organised camps for civilians and was a senior Commander authorised to issue passes to civilians. Civilians were forced to move to these camps by rebels and that he was the only person with the authority to issue a pass.[3820]

7014. para. 2099: The Chamber has also held that civilian women were raped by RUF fighters during food-finding missions ordered by Kallon. The Chamber further finds that Kallon endorsed and encouraged this criminal activity that was intended to further the goals of the common purpose. For instance, Kallon participated in a mock vote initiated by CO Rocky over the life of TF1-015. Kallon voted to kill the Witness, but the majority of the fighters, including subordinates of Kallon held that the witness should not be killed.

7015. para. 2100: The Chamber is satisfied that Kallon knew that his participation form part of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population between 14 February 1998 and 30 June 1998. We are also satisfied that Kallon knew or had reason to know that the victims of the crimes committed in Kono District were not taking a direct part in the hostilities at the time of the commission of these acts.

7016. para. 2101: It is the Chamber's finding that the acts found above by Kallon amount to a significant contribution to the furtherance of the common purpose by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by aiming to reduce or eliminate civilian opposition to Junta rule.

7017. para. 2102: The Chamber therefore concludes that Kallon intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose. By his participation he significantly contributed to the commission of crimes of acts of terrorism (Count 1), collective punishment (Count 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Count 11), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) as enumerated above. These crimes were committed in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and April/May 1998.

7018. para. 2103: The Chamber finds that Kallon shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes. In particular, the Chamber finds that the fact that Kallon agreed to and endorsed Koroma's instructions to the AFRC/RUF fighters to burn houses and kill civilians in Koidu Town in March 1998, which was also endorsed by Sesay, indicates that he shared the same intent as Koroma and Sesay to commit these crimes in pursuance of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise

vi. Gbao – Participation in the Common Plan – Existence of a common plan – Commission through JCE – Kono District

7019. para. 2104: The Chamber finds by a majority, Justice Boutet dissenting, that Gbao made a significant contribution to the furtherance of the joint criminal enterprise between 14 February 1998 and April/May 1998 and is responsible for the crimes committed within the joint criminal enterprise in Kono District.

7021. para. 2106: In addition, the Chamber is satisfied that Gbao either knew or had reason to know that the deliberate, widespread sexual violence against civilians occurred during RUF military assaults. Similarly, he knew or had reason to know that sexual violence would have been inflicted upon these individuals.

7022. para. 2107: Given his important role and oversight functions, we infer that Gbao knew that nonconsensual sexual relationships in the context of 'forced marriage' were likely to be committed by the RUF fighters. Based on the totality of the evidence, the Chamber also infers that Gbao knew or had reason to know that the victims of 'forced marriage' did not genuinely consent to the sexual relationship. Given our findings above in relation to the importance of 'forced marriage' to the RUF as both a tactic of war and means of obtaining unpaid logistical support for troops, we find that Gbao knew or had reason to know that sexual violence was intended by members of the joint criminal enterprise in order to further the goals of the joint criminal enterprise.

7023. para. 2108: We also find that he knew or ought to had reason to know that civilians were enslaved in order to pursue the common purpose. Despite knowing that sexual violence was being committed by RUF fighters on a large scale in Kono District, Gbao continued to pursue the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

7024. para. 2109: The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has proven beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao willingly took the risk that the crimes charged and proved under Counts 3 to 5, 6 to 9, 10 and 11, 13 and 14 which he did not intend as a means of achieving the common purpose, might be committed by other members of the joint criminal enterprise or persons under their control.

7026. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

7027. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

7028. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[6] It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March 1999 and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

7029. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

7030. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

7031. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 6, p. 690: In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

7032. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 7, p. 690: The majority opinion also stresses Gbao's role as the Overall Security Commander ("OSC") during the Junta period and between the time of the Intervention in mid-February 1998 and the time that the AFRC members of the joint criminal enterprise broke away from the RUF in May 1998. Although I accept that Gbao's de jure position as OSC was important in Kailahun District, it is insufficient in my opinion to conclude that he participated in and therefore made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. No evidence was put forth by the Prosecution to demonstrate that the OSC played any significant role, or that this was a position of such authority so as to allow such proper inferences to be drawn regarding the nature and extent of Gbao's contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.

7033. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para.8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

7034. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p. 691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

7035. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 10, p. 691: Gbao's presence at the crime scene is not sufficient to infer that he significantly contributed to, or aided and abetted, this horrendous mass execution. It is accepted in the jurisprudence that the actus reus of aiding and abetting requires an act or an omission specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a specific crime. I concur with my colleagues that Gbao's position as a Vanguard and as OSC, as well as his relationship with Sankoh, commanded respect and prestige.

7036. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

7037. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 12, p. 692: In my opinion, there is reasonable doubt as to whether Gbao intended to contribute to a common design between the RUF and the AFRC, which necessarily contemplated the commission of crimes within the Statute in order to achieve power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

7038. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

7040. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p. 693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

7041. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

7042. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 17, p. 693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

7043. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

d. Ordering, Planning, Instigating or Aiding and Abetting – Kono District

i. Sesay – Ordering, Planning, Instigating or Aiding and Abetting – Kono District

7044. para. 2111: The Chamber recalls its Factual Findings on forced mining in Kono District. Following the recapture of Kono by RUF troops subordinate to Sesay in December 1998, the practice of forced mining became widespread and continued until after January 2000.

7045. para. 2112: The Chamber has found that the mining system in Kono District was hierarchically organised, ranging from rebels at the mining sites who worked in "gangs" under gang leaders, to site Commanders such as Officer Med in Tombodu, to the overall Mining Commander who reported to Sesay. The Chamber recalls that evidence was adduced of numerous sites in Kono District where mining was conducted. The Chamber is satisfied that a significant number of RUF rebels were engaged in various roles contributing to the forced mining process, transporting and guarding civilians at the mining sites in order to ensure the forced labour, sorting of the diamonds, completing of the associated paperwork and remitting the diamonds to Commanders including Sesay.

7046. para. 2113: We have found that in December 1998, Bockarie appointed MS Kennedy as the Overall Mining Commander in Kono District. In 2000, it was Sesay who appointed Kennedy's replacement. The Overall Mining Commander reported to Sesay. Throughout 1999 and 2000, Sesay visited Kono District and collected diamonds.[3821] Sesay maintained a house in Koidu Town where he received mining Commanders for this purpose. He also visited the mines and ordered that civilians be captured from other Districts. He arranged for transportation of the captured civilians to the mines.

7047. para. 2114: The Chamber finds that the nature and magnitude of the forced mining in Kono District required extensive planning on an ongoing basis. We find that this is proved by the detailed administrative and archiving records maintained to compute the size, grade, origin and value of the diamonds found. As the illicit sale of diamonds was the RUF's primary means of financing its operations, the mining system in Kono District was designed and supervised at the highest levels. Sesay, as the BFC and subordinate to Bockarie at that time, was actively and intimately involved in the forced mining operations and its processes in Kono District.

7048. para. 2115: We find that Sesay's conduct was a significant contributory factor to the perpetration of enslavement and that he intended the commission of these crimes. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that Sesay, acting in concert with other senior members of the RUF, designed the abduction and enslavement of hundreds of civilians for diamond mining throughout Kono District.

7049. para.2116: For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber finds Sesay liable under Article 6(1) of the Statute for planning the enslavement of hundreds of civilians to work in mines at Tombodu and throughout Kono District between December 1998 and January 2000, as charged in Count 13 of the Indictment.

ii. Kallon – Ordering, Planning, Instigating or Aiding and Abetting – Kono District

7050. para. 2117: The Chamber recalls that Waiyoh, a female Nigerian civilian, was killed on the orders of RUF Commander Rocky in May 1998.

7051. para. 2118: We have found that Kallon who knew that Waiyoh was a Nigerian woman was concerned that she could escape from the civilian camp where she lived and disclose information about the RUF to the ECOMOG forces. Kallon's position required him to monitor and report on the RUF's military operations and there is evidence that Kallon was involved in the oversight of the civilian camps in Koidu. We recall that on one occasion Rocky sent a civilian from the Kaidu camp to Kallon to receive a travel pass as Rocky was unable to authorise his movement.[3822] Although Rocky and Kallon were both RUF Commanders of equal status as Vanguards, we find that Kallon's assignment permitted him to exercise a supervisory role over Rocky's management of the camp at Wendedu.

7052. para. 2119: We recall that Kallon repeatedly questioned Rocky about Waiyoh in terms that made it clear to Rocky that Kallon considered Waiyoh to be an "enemy" of the RUF. We consider that by this conduct Kallon implied that Waiyoh was a threat to be contained or removed. Kallon's subsequent conduct in sending his bodyguards to the camp to further question Rocky about Waiyoh reinforced this message. We note that it was shortly after this visit that Rocky ordered that Waiyoh be killed.

7053. para. 2120: We find that Kallon's conduct prompted Rocky to order her killing, creating a nexus between this conduct and the crime. We are further satisfied that Kallon either intended to instigate the commission of the crime through his repeated inquiries, or at least that he was aware or had reason to know that Rocky would kill Waiyoh to resolve his concerns. The Chamber therefore finds Kallon liable under Article 6(1) of the Statute for instigating the killing of Waiyoh in May 1998 in Wendedu, as charged in Counts 4 and 5 of the Indictment.

iii. Gbao – Ordering, Planning, Instigating or Aiding and Abetting – Kono District

7054. para. 2121: The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao ordered, instigated, planned or otherwise aided and abetted the crimes committed by RUF fighters in Kono District after the dissolution of the AFRC/RUF joint criminal enterprise at the end of April 1998.

(vii) Kailahun District

a. Crimes committed – Kailahun District

7055. para. 2156: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminal responsible pursuant to Article 6(1), or alternatively Article 6(3), of the Statute for crimes committed in Kailahun District between 14 February 1998 and the end of the Indictment period on about 15 September 2000. The Chamber has found that the following crimes were committed by RUF fighters in Kailahun District during this period:

1. Unlawful Killings (Counts 1 to 5) (…)
2. Sexual Violence (Counts 1 and 7 to 9) (…)
3. Enslavement (Count 13) (…)

b. Personal commission – Kailahun District

7056. para. 2157: The Chamber finds that Sesay, Kallon and Gbao did not personally commit any of the crimes in Kailahun District.

c. Commission through JCE – Kailahun District

i. Existence of a common plan and Plurality of persons – Commission through JCE – Kailahun District

7057. para. 2158: The Chamber notes that the RUF maintained military and civil control in Kailahun District, and during the Junta period, the RUF sustained a widespread and systematic pattern of conduct which included conducting military training, such as the enlistment, conscription and use of children under the age of 15 years to participate in active hostilities; using enslaved civilians as labour on RUF "government" farms and in other areas; and, compelling women to remain in sexual slavery or to live in conjugal relationships with RUF fighters from which they were not free to leave.

7058. para. 2159: These widespread and systematic crimes were for the benefit of the RUF and the Junta in furthering their ultimate goal of taking political, economic and territorial control over Sierra Leone. We find it was only through their joint action that the AFRC and RUF were able to control the entire country, because the RUF needed the AFRC to access Kenema and Bo Districts, while the AFRC could not bring Kailahun within the sphere of the Junta Government control without cooperation from the RUF. Thus, RUF activities in Kailahun furthered the ultimate goal of joint political, economical and territorial control.

7059. para. 2160: The Chamber reiterates our finding above that a plurality of persons including the three Accused, Justice Boutet dissenting in respect to Gbao, participated in the joint criminal enterprise.

7060. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

7061. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

7062. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.6 It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March 1999 and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

7063. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

7064. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

7065. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 6, p. 690: In my opinion, however, it would not be in accordance with Gbao's right to a fair trial to centre his liability on a concept of joint criminal enterprise based upon an interpretation of the evidence that was not advanced by the Prosecution as part of their pleadings. I find that Gbao did not receive adequate and sufficient notice of this interpretation at any time. A fundamental right of an accused person, guaranteed by the Statute pursuant to Article 17(4)(a), is the right to know the case against him and to be able to prepare his defence effectively. With the greatest respect for the contrary opinion of the majority, it is my view that Gbao did not have the opportunity to defend himself against the allegation that his commitment to the RUF ideology and his role in propagating that ideology constituted, in the circumstances, a significant contribution by Gbao to the joint criminal enterprise.

7066. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 7, p. 690: The majority opinion also stresses Gbao's role as the Overall Security Commander ("OSC") during the Junta period and between the time of the Intervention in mid-February 1998 and the time that the AFRC members of the joint criminal enterprise broke away from the RUF in May 1998. Although I accept that Gbao's de jure position as OSC was important in Kailahun District, it is insufficient in my opinion to conclude that he participated in and therefore made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. No evidence was put forth by the Prosecution to demonstrate that the OSC played any significant role, or that this was a position of such authority so as to allow such proper inferences to be drawn regarding the nature and extent of Gbao's contribution to the joint criminal enterprise.

7067. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para.8, p.690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

7068. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p. 691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

7070. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

7072. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

7073. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 14, p. 693: The majority also finds that Gbao made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by organising agricultural production for the RUF in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 until April 1998. In their efforts, the RUF used forced civilian labour, including enslaved civilians to perform multiple agricultural tasks. I find that there is only a limited relationship between the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District and the furtherance of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise during the period of the Junta Government. In my opinion there is insufficient evidence to conclude that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District was directed to achieving the goals of the joint criminal enterprise. This is especially so when compared with the forced mining in Tongo Field, which I agree was done to directly finance and contribute to the joint criminal enterprise.

7074. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p. 693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

7075. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

7076. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 17, p. 693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

7077. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

ii. Sesay and Kallon – Participation in the Common plan – Commission through JCE – Kailahun District

7078. para. 2161: The Chamber is satisfied that the particular participation of the Accused, Justice Boutet dissenting in respect to the participation of Gbao, set out above furthered the joint criminal enterprise and significantly contributed to the crimes committed in Kailahun District. Therefore the above findings on the particular participation of the Accused also apply, mutatis mutandis, to the enumerated crimes committed in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 to April 1998.

7079. para. 2162: It is the Chamber's finding that the acts by Sesay and Kallon as found above amount to a significant contribution to the furtherance of the common purpose by securing revenues, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by aiming to reduce or eliminate civilian opposition to Junta rule.

7080. para. 2163: The Chamber therefore concludes that Sesay and Kallon intended to take power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose. By their participation they significantly contributed to the commission of acts of terror (Count 1), collective punishment (Count 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and enslavement (Count 13) as enumerated above which were committed in Kailahun District between 25 May 1997 and April 1998. The Chamber finds that Sesay and Kallon shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes.

iii. Gbao – Participation in the Common plan – Commission through JCE – Kailahun District

7081. para.2164: It is the Chamber's finding, Justice Boutet dissenting, that the acts by Gbao as found above amount to a significant contribution to the furtherance of the common purpose by securing revenue, territory and manpower for the Junta Government, and by aiming to reduce or eliminate civilian opposition to Junta rule.[3859]

7082. para.2165: In respect of Counts 3 to 5, the Chamber is satisfied that the killing of the 64 suspected Kamajors in Kailahun Town was done to ensure, at any cost, the security of RUF territory. In addition, the killing of the Kamajors served to reinforce to civilians in RUF-controlled territory that there was no tolerance or sympathy for Kamajors. As such, it served to further consolidate RUF power over Kailahun District at a time when the joint AFRC/RUF forces were weakened after the fall of Freetown. For these reasons, the Chamber finds that the killing of these 64 individuals was done in furtherance of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

7083. para.2166: The Chamber is satisfied that in relation to the killing of the 64 suspected Kamajors, Gbao intended the death of the Kamajors as a consequence of his failure to halt the executions. We are also satisfied that Gbao intended that this crime be committed in order to strengthen the power and control of the RUF over Kailahun District and the civilian population there, which in turn enhanced the power and capacity of the RUF to pursue the goals of the common purpose.

7084. para. 2167: In respect of the crimes of sexual violence (Counts 7 to 9) and enslavement (Count 13), the Chambers finds that in relation to those crimes in Kailahun District Gbao was directly involved in the planning and maintaining of a system of enslavement. We find that Gbao shared the requisite intent for rape within the context of 'forced marriage' in order to further the goals of the joint criminal enterprise.

7085. para. 2168: The Chamber accordingly concludes that the ruthless killing of civilians, including the execution of 64 suspected Kamajors in Kailahun Town on 19 February 1998, the amputations, rapes, enslavement, 'forced marriages,' forced labour, and atrocious acts of terror perpetrated by the Accused, and other RUF Commanders and fighters, were a logical consequence to the pursuance of the goals prescribed in their ideology, the instruction on which, the Chamber recalls, was imparted particularly by Gbao, who was present during the execution in 1998 of 64 suspected Kamajors in Kailahun Town.

7086. para. 2169: Gbao, the Chamber recalls, had earlier screened these alleged Kamajors in his capacity as the Overall IDU Commander and was present during their subsequent execution, thereby participating in the commission of a crime against humanity under the rubric of the joint criminal enterprise as alleged by the Prosecution.

7087. para. 2170: The Chamber is strengthened in drawing this conclusion by the knowledge that Gbao was a strict adherent to the RUF ideology and gave instruction on its principles to all new recruits to the RUF. Thus the Accused, and in particular Gbao, either knew or had reason to know that the Commanders and the fighters under their command, would molest, maim or kill fleeing, retreating or captured civilians and that they knew or ought to have known that these civilians were not taking part in the hostilities.

7088. para. 2171: The Chamber further finds that the Accused, in maintaining their fidelity to their ideology, either knew or had reason to know that such crimes would be committed against innocent civilians who were designated as collaborators of the regime and as enemies to the AFRC/RUF Junta regime, by the RUF rebels in support of their "broad-based" struggle that the RUF ideology purported.[3860]

7089. para. 2172: The Chamber, Justice Boutet dissenting, therefore concludes that Gbao, intended to take power and control over Sierra Leone, in particular the diamond mining areas, and actively participated in the furtherance of the common purpose and that by this participation he significantly contributed to the commission of acts of terror (Count 1), collective punishment (Count 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9) and enslavement (Count 13) as enumerated above which were committed in Kailahun District between 25 May 1997 and 19 February 1998. The Chamber finds, Justice Boutet dissenting, that Gbao shared with the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise the requisite intent to commit these crimes.

7090. para. 2173: The Chamber has found that the joint criminal enterprise existed only from 25 May 1997 onwards as the Prosecution has only pleaded a joint criminal enterprise between members of the AFRC and RUF organisations for that period of time. The Chamber has found that the joint criminal enterprise ceased to exist in April 1998. However, the Chamber notes that, with the exception of unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), the time period for the crimes committed in Kailahun District runs from 30 November 1996 to September 2000. Given the continuous nature of these crimes, we find it would be impermissible to find the Accused responsible under the mode of joint criminal enterprise and subsequently under another mode of liability for the remainder of the time period in which these crimes were perpetrated. We accordingly will not consider further the Accused's responsibility for these crimes under any other mode of liability, notwithstanding that their commission continued beyond the termination of the joint criminal enterprise.

7091. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 1, p. 688: The Chamber, by a majority, has found that the Accused Gbao, together with Sesay, Kallon and other RUF members, participated in the joint criminal enterprise between the RUF and the AFRC and that his participation was significant during both the Junta period from 25 May 1997 to 14 February 1998 and during the ensuing period of 14 February 1998 until late April 1998 when the AFRC forces then broke away from the RUF. It is my understanding that the majority concluded that the ideology of the RUF propagated, facilitated and was instrumental to the commission of crimes by members of the joint criminal enterprise. In the opinion of the majority, Gbao's significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise is founded on his role as an RUF ideology instructor and his commitment to spreading and implementing that ideology.[1] The majority further suggests that the "ideology was the revolution in action."[2] I respectfully dissent from these findings for the reasons further discussed hereafter.

7092. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 2, p. 688: The Prosecution has particularised Gbao's responsibility and role in the Indictment, by alleging[3] that between November 1996 and until mid-1998 Gbao was a senior RUF Commander in control of the area of Kailahun Town, Kailahun District.[4] In this position, between November 1996 and about April 1997, it is alleged that he was subordinate only to the Battle Group Commander, the Battle Field Commander and Foday Sankoh; and that, between April 1997 and mid-1998, Gbao was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[5]

7093. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 3, p. 688-689: It is further alleged that Gbao was Overall Security Commander in the AFRC/RUF forces between mid-1998 and about January 2002. In this position, it is alleged that Gbao was in command of all Intelligence and Security Units of the AFRC/RUF and subordinate only to Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[6] It is further alleged that Gbao was also the joint Commander of the AFRC/RUF forces in the Makeni Area in Bombali District between about March 1999 and January 2002, and in this capacity he was subordinate only to the Battle Field Commander, Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma.[7] By and large, it is the Prosecution's claim that throughout the periods covered by the Indictment Gbao, together with the other accused and senior members of the AFRC and RUF, was in a position to exercise authority, command and control over all subordinate members of the AFRC and RUF.[8] Through these positions, Gbao would have been a central or important figure in the joint criminal enterprise that the Prosecution alleges to have existed.

7094. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 4, p. 689: I share the view expressed by one of my esteemed colleague Justice Thompson that the Indictment is the "road map"[9] to the case against the Accused; it is designed to show the direction the Prosecution intends to follow when presenting its case and allows an accused person, in this case the Accused Gbao, to know the case that he has to defend against. The allegations against Gbao are that, as OSC and high-ranking member of the RUF, he was in a "command position" and played a "significant" role within the Junta period and the period following May 1998 in order to pursue the objectives of the joint criminal enterprise. I find that the evidence adduced during the trial does not allow for such a conclusion.

7095. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 5, p. 689-690: Over the course of this four year trial, it was never the Prosecution's case that the revolutionary ideology of the RUF advocated the commission of crimes in order to achieve the goal of taking power and control over Sierra Leone, nor did the Prosecution argue that Gbao played a vital role in putting this criminal ideology into practice. In fact, the Gbao Defence submitted that the RUF ideology prohibited criminal behaviour, that Gbao believed strongly in this aspect of the ideology and strove to implement it by preventing and punishing crimes where he was able to do so. I, like my learned colleagues, do not accept this defence. The general conduct of the RUF throughout the Indictment period as we have found it did not portray this principle of its ideology. Quite the opposite, I should state. Moreover, I note that Gbao only was an ideology instructor in 1995, before the jurisdiction of the Special Court.[10] There is lack of evidence to support the conclusion that he was instructing recruits after he assumed his Role as IDU in 1996. In addition, the Prosecution has not proved that the perpetrators of the crimes received ideology training or were instructed by Gbao himself.

7098. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 8, p. 690-691: In my opinion, there is insufficient evidence as to any acts or actions by Gbao in his role as OSC during that period of time that could amount to a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. There is an absence of evidence which could establish that Gbao actually received reports of crimes in Kenema or Bo Districts during the Junta period,[11] or that he had any de facto responsibility for investigating criminal acts outside of Kailahun District during this time. Moreover, there is no evidence that Gbao received any reports or had any responsibility for investigating or punishing crimes committed during the retreat following the Intervention, or in Kono District between 14 February 1998 and the end of April 1998. I find that there is, in fact, a complete absence of evidence that would tend to prove the manner in which the internal security apparatus of the RUF may have interacted with, supported or complemented the internal structures of the AFRC or of the Junta. Given the chaotic nature of the retreat, the breakdown in discipline in the ranks of the RUF and AFRC forces, and the creation of a new, joint AFRC/RUF command structure in Kono District, I am not convinced that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Gbao either participated in and/or made a significant contribution to the achievement of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise through his role as OSC.

7099. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 9, p. 691: The Chamber has heard evidence that Gbao participated in a single Joint Security Board of Investigation, set up in Kailahun Town to investigate 64 suspected Kamajors shortly after the Intervention.[12] I find it significant that the first group of civilians who were suspected of being Kamajors investigated by a JSBI led by Gbao were released. The JSBI investigation into the second group, again led by Gbao, was on-going when Bockarie intervened and ordered that these alleged Kamajors be executed, personally executing three suspects and ordering his bodyguards to execute the remaining detainees.

7100. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 10, p. 691: Gbao's presence at the crime scene is not sufficient to infer that he significantly contributed to, or aided and abetted, this horrendous mass execution. It is accepted in the jurisprudence that the actus reus of aiding and abetting requires an act or an omission specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a specific crime. I concur with my colleagues that Gbao's position as a Vanguard and as OSC, as well as his relationship with Sankoh, commanded respect and prestige.

7101. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 11, p. 692: The jurisprudence requires, however, that this act or omission of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[13] Given the order of Bockarie, the de facto leader of the RUF at that time, it is in my respectful opinion doubtful that the presence of Gbao in a large crowd with many other persons during the killing lent moral support to the fact of obedience of Bockarie's orders by his bodyguards and other RUF fighters. In addition, the court has heard that Gbao was not well respected by Bockarie and his bodyguards as he initiated investigations against them for a rape.[14] Furthermore, given that the specific order was issued by Bockarie, it is difficult to infer that Gbao intended to facilitate the killings, particularly in the absence of any convincing evidence. In addition, the evidence adduced does not prove that the perpetrators of the killing exhibited any awareness that Gbao encouraged them to carry out these killings through his inaction.[15]

7102. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 12, p. 692: In my opinion, there is reasonable doubt as to whether Gbao intended to contribute to a common design between the RUF and the AFRC, which necessarily contemplated the commission of crimes within the Statute in order to achieve power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

7103. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 13, p. 692: According to the evidence, Gbao's actions were and continued to be essentially limited to Kailahun District. There is no evidence to suggest that, at any time during the Junta period and during the Intervention, Gbao was involved with the commission of crimes outside of Kailahun District. We may infer, given the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the Junta period, that their cooperation included Kailahun District, but to what extent is unknown. According to the evidence, I cannot conclude that, during this period, the operations of the OSC extended beyond Kailahun District. Indeed, the evidence shows that while in Kailahun District security organisations continued to operate as before, in other districts, such as Kenema, new joint structures were established in which AFRC and RUF members were integrated. Only in Kailahun District were MPs and civil security acting as the police and exerting investigative functions of criminal incidents.

7104. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 14, p. 693: The majority also finds that Gbao made a significant contribution to the joint criminal enterprise by organising agricultural production for the RUF in Kailahun District from 25 May 1997 until April 1998. In their efforts, the RUF used forced civilian labour, including enslaved civilians to perform multiple agricultural tasks. I find that there is only a limited relationship between the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District and the furtherance of the goals of the joint criminal enterprise during the period of the Junta Government. In my opinion there is insufficient evidence to conclude that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the enslavement of civilians in Kailahun District was directed to achieving the goals of the joint criminal enterprise. This is especially so when compared with the forced mining in Tongo Field, which I agree was done to directly finance and contribute to the joint criminal enterprise.

7105. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 15, p. 693: There is some evidence that the food produced in Kailahun District after the Intervention was used in Kono District. There is also some evidence that civilians were used to carry goods back and forth between Kono District and Kailahun District at this time. In my view, the Chamber has only heard general evidence regarding Gbao's involvement in these activities. Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Gbao's acts were directed to making a significant contribution to the common purpose of taking power and control over the territory of Sierra Leone.

7106. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 16, p. 693: In such a broadly pleaded joint criminal enterprise, it is necessary, in my opinion, to require a close connection between the goals of the common design, as pleaded, and the contribution of each of the Accused. This is even more important when the purpose is such that it is not even reflective of a crime which would fall under the jurisdiction of this Court. If, as it has been found, ideology is the basis on which the purpose is constructed, Gbao cannot per se be deemed to have been involved in the commission of the crimes. Otherwise, respectfully, I find that criminal liability may be attributed expansively and inappropriately.

7107. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 17, p. 693-694: In my view, Gbao should not be liable for the crimes committed by RUF and AFRC fighters in order to take control of the country and its diamond mining areas, over a period of approximately one year and in several areas of the country, simply because he organised forced civilian labour in an area well behind the frontlines and which had long been controlled by the RUF. Given the size and scope of the present case, I am of the opinion that a narrower interpretation of the concept of "significant contribution" should be taken – one which ties the acts of the Accused directly to the furtherance of the common purpose of the RUF and the AFRC; and one where a nexus is established beyond reasonable doubt between the conduct of the Accused and the furtherance of the common purpose.

7108. Dissent – Justice Boutet, para. 18, p. 694: I note, however, that had the Prosecution pleaded a joint criminal enterprise involving only members of the RUF, or had the Prosecution correctly pleaded the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise, my conclusion regarding Gbao's liability under the concept of joint criminal enterprise may have been different.

(viii) Koinadugu District

7109. para. 2174: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminal responsible pursuant to Article 6(1), or alternatively Article 6(3), of the Statute for the crimes of terrorism and collective punishment, (Counts 1 and 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 and 11), conscription, enlistment and use of child soldiers (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) committed in Koinadugu District between 14 February 1998 to 30 September 1998.

7110. para. 2175: The Chamber heard evidence of egregious criminal acts committed in Koinadugu District within the Indictment period. However, the Chamber recalls its finding that the fighters in Koinadugu District were under the command of SAJ Musa, Gullit or Superman, who were not acting in concert with or under the control of any of the Accused.[3861]

7111. para. 2176: In relation to the crimes committed in Koinadugu District the Chamber has found that the crimes in that district were primarily committed by AFRC troops under the command of SAJ Musa[3862] or Gullit. The Chamber has found that no joint criminal enterprise existed from the time Gullit moved out of Kono with the AFRC fighters to join SAJ Musa. The Chamber has found that Gullit and the AFRC fighters left Kono District because of a major dispute between the RUF and the AFRC. SAJ Musa, Gullit and other AFRC fighters contemplated their individual and separate plan that did not involve the RUF. They planned to attack the capital in order to "re-instate" the army. Therefore the Chamber has found that the joint criminal enterprise dissolved in April 1998.

7112. para. 2177: The Chamber has furthermore found that the Accused did not have any effective control over SAJ Musa, Gullit or any of the AFRC fighters that joined Gullit to Koinadugu District. In addition, the Chamber has found that the Accused did not have any effective control over Superman when he defected from the main RUF group in August 1998.

7113. para. 2178: Therefore the Chamber finds that the Accused are not responsible for any of the crimes committed in Koinadugu District between 14 February 1998 to 30 September 1998. The Chamber accordingly finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused are liable under either Article 6(1) or Article 6(3) of the Statute for the crimes committed in Koinadugu District.

7114. para. 2179: The Prosecution alleges that the Accused are individually criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1), or alternatively Article 6(3), of the Statute for the crimes of terrorism and collective punishment (Counts 1 and 2), unlawful killings (Counts 3 to 5), sexual violence (Counts 6 to 9), physical violence (Counts 10 and 11), conscription, enlistment and use of child soldiers (Count 12), enslavement (Count 13) and pillage (Count 14) committed in Bombali District between 1 May 1998 to 30 November 1998.

7115. para. 2180: The Chamber heard evidence of heinous criminal acts committed in Bombali District within the Indictment period. However, the Chamber recalls its finding that the fighters in Bombali District were under the command of SAJ Musa, Gullit or Superman, who were not acting in concert with or under the control of any of the Accused.[3863]
